Treachery often, but licentiouſneſſe more, hath depraved this ſeale of love; and yet, Gregor. Vt nos ad amplexus ſacri amoris accendat, uſque ad turpis amoris noſtri verba ſe inclinat; God ſtoops even to the words of our foule and unchaſt love, that thereby he might raiſe us Idem. to the heavenly love of himſelfe, and his Son. Cavendum, ne machina quæ ponitur ut levet, ipſa aggravet: Take thou heed, that that ladder, or that engine which God hath given to raiſe thee, doe not load thee, oppreſſe thee, caſt thee downe: Take heed leſt thoſe phraſes of love and kiſſes which ſhould raiſe thee to him, do not bury thee in the memo- Idem. ry and contemplation of ſinfull love, and of licentious kiſſes. Palea tegit frumentum; palea jumentorum, frumentum hominum: There is corne under the chaffe; and though the B chaffe and ſtraw be for cattell, there is corne for men too: There is a heavenly love, under theſe ordinary phraſes; the ordinary phraſe belongs to ordinary men; the heavenly love and the ſpirituall kiſſe, to them who affect an union to God, and him whom he ſent, his Son Chriſt Jeſus. S. Paul abhors not good and applicable ſentences, becauſe ſome ſecular Poets had ſaid them before; nor hath the Chriſtian Church abhorred the Temples of the Gentiles, becauſe they were profaned before with idolatrous ſacrifices. I do In Joſ. 6. q. 40. not conceive how that Jeſuit Serarius ſhould conceive any ſuch great joy, as he ſayes he did, when he came to a Church-porch, and ſaw an old ſtatue of Iupiter, and another of Hercules, holding two baſins of holy water; when Iupiter and Hercules were made to doe Chriſtians ſuch ſervices, the Jeſuit is over-joyed. His Iupiter and his Hercules might well enough have been ſpared in the Chriſtian Church, but why ſome ſuch things as have beene abuſed in the Roman Church, may not be preſerved in, or reduced to their C right uſe here, I conceive not; as well as (in a proportion) this outward teſtimony of inward love, though defamed by treachery, though depraved by licentiouſneſſe, is exacted at our hands by God himſelfe, towards his Son, Kiſſe the Son, leſt he be angry.

Propinquitas. For all Ioabs and Iudas treaſon, and carnall lovers licentiouſneſſe, kiſſe thou the Sonne, and be glad that the Sonne hath brought thee, in the Chriſtian Church, within that diſtance, as that thou mayeſt kiſſe him. The neareſt that the Synagogue, or that the Spouſe Cant. 1. 1. of Chriſt not yet married came to, was, Oſculetur me, Let him kiſſe me with the kiſſes of his mouth. It was but a kiſſing of his hand, when he reached them out their ſpirituall food by others; It was a mariage, but a mariage by a proxie; The perſonall mariage, the conſummation of the mariage was in the comming of Chriſt, in eſtabliſhing a reall preſence of himſelfe in the Church. Præcepta Dei oſcula ſunt, ſayes Gregory; In every thing that God ſayes to us, he kiſſes us; Sed per Prophetas & Miniſtros, alieno ore nos oſculatur; He D kiſſed us by another mans mouth, when he ſpoke by the mouth of the Prophets; but now Exod. 6. 12. that he ſpeaks by his owne Son, it is by himſelfe. Even his ſervant Moſes himſelf was of uncircumciſed lips, and with the uncircumciſed there was no mariage. Even his ſer- Eſay 6. 5. vant Eſay was of uncleane lips, and with the uncleane there was no mariage: Even his ſer- Jer. 1. 6. vant Ieremie was oris infantilis, he was a child and could not ſpeake, and with children, in infancie, there is no mariage: But in Chriſt, God hath abundantly performed that ſupply promiſed to Moſes, there, Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy Prophet; Chriſt himſelfe ſhall come and ſpeake to thee, and returne and ſpeak for thee: In Chriſt, the Seraphim hath brought that live coale from the Altar, and touched Eſayes lips, and ſo ſpoken lively, and clearly to our ſoules; In Chriſt, God hath done that which he ſaid to Ieremy, Feare not, I am with thee; for in this Immanuel, God and man, Chriſt Jeſus, God is with us.

In Eſchines mouth, when he repeated them, they ſay, even Demoſthenes Orations E were flat, and taſtleſſe things; Compare the Prophets with the Son, and even the pro- 2 King. 4. 34. miſes of God, in them, are faint and dilute things. Eliſhaes ſtaffe in the hand of Gehazi his ſervant, would not recover the Shunamites dead child; but when Eliſha himſelfe came, and put his mouth upon the childs mouth, that did: In the mouth of Chriſts former ſervants there was a preparation, but effect, and conſummation in his owne mouth. In the Old Teſtament. at firſt, God kiſſed man, and ſo breathed the breath of life, and made him a man; In the New Teſtament Chriſt kiſſed man, he breathed the breath of everlaſting life, the holy Ghoſt, into his Apoſtles, and ſo made the man a bleſſed man. Cant. 8. 6. Love is as ſtrong as death; As in death there is a tranſmigration of the ſoule, ſo in this ſpi-

rituall

A rituall love, and this expreſſing of it, by this kiſſe, there is a transfuſion of the ſoule too: And as we find in Gellius a Poëm of Platoes, where he ſayes, he knew one ſo extremely paſſionate, Vt parùm affuit quin moreretur in oſculo, much more is it true in this heavenly union, expreſſed in this kiſſe, as S. Ambroſe delivers it, Per oſculum adhæret anima Deo, et transfunditur ſpiritus oſculantis, In this kiſſe, where Righteouſneſſe and peace have kiſſed each other, In this perſon, where the Divine and the humane nature have kiſſed each other, In this Chriſtian Church, where Grace and Sacraments, viſible and inviſible meanes of ſalvation, have kiſſed each other, Love is as ſtrong as death; my ſoule is united to my Saviour, now in my life, as in death, and I am already made one ſpirit with him: and whatſoever death can doe, this kiſſe, this union can doe, that is, give me a preſent, an immediate poſſeſſion of the kingdome of heaven: And as the moſt mountainous parts of this kingdome are as well within the kingdome as a garden, ſo in the midſt of the calamities
B and incommodities of this life, I am ſtill in the kingdome of heaven. In the Old Teſtament, it was but a contract, but per verba de futuro, Sponſabo, I will marry thee; but now that Chriſt is come, the Bride-groome is with us for ever, and the children of the Bride-chamber cannot mourne.

Pſal. 85. 10.

Hoſ. 2. 19.
Mat. 9. 15.

Now, by this, we are ſlid into our fourth and laſt branch of our firſt part, The perſwaſion to come to this holy kiſſe, though defamed by treachery, though depraved by licentiouſneſſe, ſince God invites us to it, by ſo many good uſes thereof in his Word. It is an imputation laid upon Nero, That Neque adveniens, neque diſcediens, That whether comming or going he never kiſſed any: And Chriſt himſelfe imputes it to Simon, as a neglect of him, That when he came into his houſe, he did not kiſſe him. This then was in uſe, firſt among kinsfolks; In illa ſimplicitate antiquorum, propinqui propinquos oſculabantur: In thoſe innocent and harmleſſe times, perſons neare in bloud did kiſſe one another:
C And in that right, and not onely as a ſtranger, Iacob kiſſed Rachel, and told her how near of kin he was to her. There is no perſon ſo neare of kin to thee, as Chriſt Jeſus: Chriſt Jeſus thy Father as he created thee, and thy brother as he took thy nature: Thy Father as he provided an inheritance for thee, and thy brother as he divided this inheritance with thee, and as he dyed to give thee poſſeſſion of that inheritance: He that is Nutritius, thy Foſter-father who hath nurſed thee in his houſe, in the Chriſtian Church, and thy Twin-brother, ſo like thee, as that his Father, and thine in him, ſhall not know you from one another, but mingle your conditions ſo, as that he ſhall find thy ſins in him, and his righteouſneſſe in thee; Oſculamini Filium, Kiſſe this Son as thy kinſman.

Exhortatie.

Luke 7. 45.
Auguſt.

Gen. 29. 12.

This kiſſe was alſo in uſe, as Symbolum ſubjectionis, A recognition of ſoveraignty or power; Pharaoh ſayes to Ioſeph, Thou ſhalt be over my houſe, and according to thy word ſhall all my people be ruled; there the Originall is, All my people ſhall kiſſe thy face. This is the D Lord Paramount, the Soveraigne Lord of all, The Lord Jeſus; Ieſus, at whoſe name every knee muſt bow, in heaven, in earth, and in hell; Ieſus, into whoſe hands all power in heaven and in earth is given; Ieſus, who hath opened a way to our Appeal, from all powers upon earth, Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoule; Ieſus, who is the Lion and the Lambe too, powerfull upon others, acceſſible unto thee; Oſculamini Filium, Kiſſe this Son, as he is thy Soveraigne.

Gen. 41. 40.

Phil. 2. 10.
Mat. 28. 18.

Mat. 10. 28.

It was in uſe likewiſe In diſceſſu, friends parting kiſſed; Laban roſe up early in the morning, and kiſſed his ſons and his daughters, and departed: And at Pauls departing, they fell on his neck, and wept, and kiſſed him. When thou departeſt to thy worldly buſineſſes, to thy ſix dayes labour, kiſſe him, take leave of him, and remember that all that while thou art gone upon his errand, and though thou worke for thy family, and for thy poſterity, yet thou workeſt in his vineyard, and doſt his worke.

Gen. 31. 15.
Act. 20. 37.

E They kiſſed too In reditu; Eſau ran to meet his brother, and fell on his neck and kiſſed him. When thou returneſt to his houſe, after thy ſix dayes labour, to celebrate his Sabbath, kiſſe him there, and be able to give him ſome good account, from Sabbath to Sabbath, from week to week, of thy ſtewardſhip, and thou wilt never be bankrupt.

Gen. 33. 4.

They kiſſed in reconciliation; David kiſſed Abſalon. If thou have not diſcharged thy ſtewardſhip well, Reſtore to man who is damnified therein, Confeſſe to God who hath ſuffered in that ſin, Reconcile thy ſelfe to him, and kiſſe him in the Sacrament, in the ſeale of Reconciliation.

2 Sam. 14. 33.

They kiſſed in a religious reverence even of falſe gods; I have, ſayes God, ſeaven thouſand knees that have not bowed unto Baal, and mouths that have not kiſſed him. Let every one of us kisse the true God, in keeping his knees from bowing to a false, his lips from assenting, his hands from subscribing to an Idolatrous worship. And, as they kissed In Symbolum concordia, (which was another use thereof; Salute one another with a holy kisse) upon which custome, Iustin Martyr sayes, Osculum ante Eucharistiam, before the Communion, the Congregation kissed, to testifie their unity in faith in him, to whom they were then Sacramentally to be united, as well as Spiritually, And Tertullian calls it Osculum signaculum Orationis, Because they ended their publique Prayers with that seale of unity and concord,. Let every Congregation kisse him so; at every meeting to seale to him a new band, a new vow that they will never break, in departing from any part of his true worship. And to that purpose kisse his feet, as Mary Magdalen did: Speciosi pedes Euangelizantium; Let his feet, his Ministers, in whom he comes, be acceptable unto you; and love that, upon which himselfe stands, The Ordinance which he hath established for your salvation.

2 King. 19 18.

Rom. 16.16.

Luke 7.38.

Kisse the Son, that is, imbrace him, depend upon him all these wayes; As thy kinsman, As thy Soveraigne, At thy going, At thy comming; At thy Reconciliation, in the truth of religion in thy selfe, in a peaceable unity with the Church, in a reverent estimation of those men, and those meanes, whom he sends. Kisse him, and be not ashamed of kissing him; It is that, which the Spouse desired, I would kisse thee, & not be despised. If thou be despised for loving Christ in his Gospel, remember that when David was thought base, for dancing before the Arke, his way was to be more base. If thou be thought frivolous for thrusting in at Service, in the fore-noone, bee more frivolous, and come againe in the after-noone: Tanto major requies, quanto ab amore Iesu nulla requies; The more thou troublest thy selfe, or art troubled by others for Christ, the more peace thou hast in Christ.

Cant. 8.1.

Gregor.

2 Part.

We descend now to our second Part, from the duty to the danger, from the expressing of love to the impression of feare, Kisse the Son, lest he be angry: And first that anger and love, are not incompatible, that anger consists with love: God is immutable, and God is love, and yet God can be angry. God stops a little upon scorne, in the fourth verse of this Psalme, When the Kings of the earth take counsell against his anointed, he laughs them to scorne, he hath them in derision. But it ends not in a jest; He shall speake to them in his wrath, and vexe them in his sore displeasure; And that is not all; He shall breake them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a Potters vessell.

Lactantius reprehends justly two errors, and proposes a godly middle way in the Doctrine of the anger of God. Some say, sayes he, that onely favour, and gentlenesse can be attributed to God, Quia illæsibilis, He himselfe cannot be hurt, and then why should he be angry? And this is, sayes he, Favorabilis & popularis oratio, It is a popular and an acceptable proposition, God cannot be angry, doe what you will, you cannot anger him, for he is all gentlenesse. Others, sayes Lactantius, take both anger, and gentlenesse from God, and say he is affected neither way: And this is, sayes he well, Constantior error, An error that will better hold together, better consist in it selfe, and be better stood to; for they are inseparable things; whosoever does love the good, does hate the bad: and therefore if there be no anger, there is no love in God; but that cannot be said. And therefore, sayes he, we must not argue thus, Because there is no anger in God, therefore there is no love; for that indeed would follow, if the first were true; But because there is love in God, therefore there is anger: And so he concludes thus, This is Cardo Religionis, This is the hinge upon which all Religion, all the Worship of God turnes and moves, Si nihil præstat colenti non debetur cultus, nec metus si non irascitur non colenti; If God gave me nothing for my love, I should not love him, nor feare him if he were not angry at my displeasing him. It is argument enough against the Epicures, (against whom principally hee argues) Si non curat, non habet potestatem: If God take no care of humane actions, he hath no power; for it is impossible to thinke, that hee hath power, and uses it not; An idle God is as impossible an imagination, as an impotent God, or an ignorant God. Anger, as it is a passion that troubles, and disorders, and discomposes a man, so it is not in God, but anger as it is a sensible discerning of foes from friends, and of things that conduce, or disconduce to his glory, so it is in God. In a word, Hilarie hath expressed it well, Pœna patientis, ira decernentis, Mans suffering is God anger; when God inflicts such punishments, as a King justly incensed would doe, then God is thus angry.

Now

A Now here, our caſe is heavier; It is not this Great, and Almighty, and Majeſticall God, that may be angry, that is like enough; But even the Son, whom we muſt kiſſe, may be angry: It is not a perſon whom we conſider meerly as God, but as man; Nay, not as man neither, but a worme, and no man, and he may be angry, and angry to our ruine. But is it he? Is it the Son, that is intended here? Ask the Romane Tranſlation, and it is not he: There it is, Ne iraſcatur Dominus, Leſt the Lord be angry; But the Record, the Originall will be againſt them: Though it were ſo, The Lord, it might be He, the Sonne, but it is not the Lord, but muſt neceſſarily bee the Sonne; The Son may, the Son will be angry with us. If he could be angry, why did he not ſhew it to the Devill that tempted him, to the Jews that crucified him? God bleſſe us from ſuch an anger, as works upon the Devill, in a deſperate unſenſibleneſſe of any mercy, from any trade in that Sea, which environs the whole world, and makes all that, one Iland, where onely B the Devill can be no Merchant, The bottomeleſſe Sea of his blood; And God bleſſe us from ſuch an anger, as works upon the Jews, in an obduration, and the puniſhment of it, a diſperſion: Are ye ſure David was not angry with Shimei, becauſe he reprieved him for a time? Are ye ſure the Son is not angry now, becauſe ye periſh not yet? Doe you not ſay, A fruit is periſhed, if it be bruiſed in one place? Is not your Religion periſhed, if Locuſts and Eare-wigges have eaten into it, though they have not eaten it up? Is not your Religion periſhed, if irreligion and prophaneneſſe be entred into your manners, into your lives, though Religion have ſome motion in our ordinary meetings, and publique exerciſes here?

Filius.

The Son is Caput, and Corpus, as S. Auguſtine ſayes often, Chriſt, and the Church of Chriſt, are Chriſt; And, Quis enumeret omnia, quibus corpus Chriſti iraſcitur? ſayes the ſame Father; Who can reckon how many wayes, this Chriſt, this body of Chriſt, the C Church, is conſtrained to expreſſe anger? How many Excommunications, how many Cenſures, how many Suſpenſions, how many Irregularities, how many Penances, and Commutations of Penances, is the body of Chriſt, the Church, forced to inflict upon ſinners? And how heavy would theſe be to us, if we did not waigh them with the waights of fleſh in the Shambles, or of Iron in the Shop; if we did not conſider them only in their temporall damage, how little an excommunication took from us of our goods, or worldly ſubſtance, and not how much it ſhut up the ordinary and outward meanes of our ſalvation. When the anger of the Body, the Church, is thus heavy, what is the anger of the Head, of Chriſt himſelfe, who is Judge in his owne cauſe? When an unjuſt judgement was executed upon him, how was the frame of nature ſhaked in Eclipſes, in Earth-quakes, in renting of the Temple, and cleaving the Monuments of the dead: When his pleaſure is to execute a juſt judgement upon a Nation, upon a Church, D upon a Man, in the infatuation of Princes, in the recidivation of the Clergy, in the conſternation of particular conſciences, Quis ſtabit? who ſhall be able to ſtand in that Judgement? Kiſſe the Son leſt he be angry; But when he is angry, he will not kiſſe you, nor be kiſſed by you, but throw you into unquenchable fire, if you be cold, and if you be luke-warme, ſpit you out of his mouth, remove you from the benefit and comfort of his Word.

This is the anger of God, that reaches to all the world; and the anger of the Son, that comes home to us; and all this is removed with this holy and ſpirituall kiſſe: Oſculamini Filium, Kiſſe the Son leſt he be angry, implies this, If ye kiſſe him, he will not bee angry. What this kiſſe is, we have ſeene all the way; It is to hang at his lips, for the Rule of our life, To depend upon his Word for our Religion, and to ſuccour our ſelves, by the promiſes of his Goſpel, in all our calamities, and not to provoke him to farther E judgements, by a perverſe and froward uſe of thoſe judgements which he hath laid upon us: As it is, in this point towards man, it is towards God too; Nihil manſuetudine violentius, There is not ſo violent a thing as gentleneſſe, ſo forcible, ſo powerfull upon man, or upon God. This is ſuch a ſaying, as one would think he that ſaid it, ſhould be ready to retract, by the multiplicity of examples to the contrary every day. Such Rules as this, He that puts up one wrong invites and calls for another, will ſhake Chryſoſtomes Rule ſhrewdly, Nihil manſuetudine violentius, That no battery is ſo ſtrong againſt an enemy, as gentleneſſe. Say, if you will, Nihil melius, There is no better thing then gentleneſſe, and we can make up that with a Comment, that is, nothing better for ſome purpoſes; Say, if you will, Nihil frugalius, There is not a thriftier thing then gentleneſſe, It ſaves charges, to ſuffer, It is a more expenſive thing to revenge then to ſuffer, whether we conſider expenſe of ſoule, or body, or fortune; And, (by the way) that, which we uſe to adde in this account, opinion, reputation, that which we call Honour, is none of the Elements of which man is made; It may be the ayre, that the Bird flies in, It may be the water, that the Fiſh ſwimmes in, but it is none of the Elements that man is made of, for thoſe are onely ſoule, and body, and fortune. Say alſo, if you will, Nihil accommodatius, Nothing conformes us more to our great patterne Chriſt Jeſus, then mildneſſe, then gentleneſſe, for that is our leſſon from him, Diſcite à me, quia mitis, Learne of me, for I am meeke.

Oſculum amovet.

Chryſoſt.

All this Chryſoſtome might ſay; but will he ſay, Nihil violentius, There is not ſo violent, ſo forcible a thing as mildneſſe? That there is no ſuch Bullet, as a Pillow, no ſuch Action, as Paſſion, no ſuch revenge, as ſuffering an injury? Yet, even this is true; Nothing defeats an anger ſo much as patience; nothing reproaches a chiding ſo much as ſilence. Reprehendis iratum? accuſas indignationem? ſayes that Father: Art thou ſorry to ſee a man angry? Cur magis iraſci vis? Why doſt thou adde thy anger to his? Why doſt thou fuell his anger with thine? Quod igni aqua, hoc ira manſuetudo, As water works upon fire, ſo would thy patience upon his anger. S. Ambroſe hath expreſſed it well too, Hæc ſunt arma juſti, ut cedendo vincat; This is the warre of the righteous man, to Eſay 36.21. conquer by yeelding. It was Ezechiahs way; when Rabſhakeh reviled, They held their peace, (where, the very phraſe affords us this note, That ſilence is called holding of our peace, we continue our peace beſt by ſilence) They held their peace, ſayes that text, and anſwered him not a word, for the King had commanded them not to anſwer. Why? S. Hierom tels us why; Ne ad majores blaſphemias provocaret; Leſt the multiplying of cholerique words amongſt men, ſhould have occaſioned more blaſphemies againſt God. And as it is thus with man, with God it is thus too; Nothing ſpends his judgements, and his corrections ſo ſoone, as our patience, nothing kindles them, exaſperates them ſo much, as our frowardneſſe, and murmuring. Kiſſe the Son, and he will not be angry; If he be, kiſſe the rod, and he will be angry no longer; love him leſt hee be, feare him when hee is angry: The preſervative is eaſie, and ſo is the reſtorative too: The Balſamum of this kiſſe is all; To ſuck ſpirituall milke out of the left breaſt, as well as out of the right, To finde mercy in his judgements, reparation in his ruines, feaſts in his Lents, joy in his anger. But yet we have reſerved it for our laſt Conſideration, what will make him angry: what ſins are eſpecially directed upon the ſecond Perſon, the Sonne of God, and then wee have done all.

Sapientia. Though thoſe three Attributes of God, Power, and Wiſdome, and Goodneſſe, be all three in all the three Perſons of the Trinity, (for they are all (as we ſay in the Schoole) Coomnipotentes, they have all a joynt-Almightineſſe, a joynt-Wiſdome, and a joynt-Goodneſſe) yet, becauſe the Father is Principium, The roote of all, Independent, not proceeding from any other, as both the other Perſons do, and Power, and Soveraignty beſt reſembles that Independency, therefore we attribute Power to the Father: And becauſe the Son proceeds Per modum intellectus, (which is the phraſe that paſſes through the Fathers, and the Schoole) That as our underſtanding proceeds from our reaſonable ſoule, ſo the ſecond Perſon, the Son, proceeds from the Father, therefore we attribute Wiſdome to the Son: And then, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is ſaid to proceed Per modum voluntatis, That as our ſoule (as the roote) and our underſtanding, proceeding from that ſoule, produce our will, and the object of our will, is evermore Bonum, that which is good in our apprehenſion, therefore we attribute to the Holy Ghoſt, Goodneſſe. And therefore Da- Pſal 51. vid formes his prayer, in that manner, plurally, Miſerere mei Elohim, Be mercifull unto me all, becauſe in his ſin upon Vriah, (which he laments in that Pſalme) he had tranſgreſſed againſt all the three Perſons, in all their Attributes, againſt the Power, and the Wiſdome, and the Goodneſſe of God.

That then which we conſider principally in the Son, is Wiſdome. And truly thoſe very many things, which are ſpoken of Wiſdome, in the Proverbs of Solomon, do, for the moſt part, hold in Chriſt: Chriſt is, for the moſt part, the Wiſdome of that book. And for that book which is called altogether, The book of Wiſdome, Iſidore ſayes, that a Rabbi of the Jews told him, That that book was heretofore in the Canonicall Scripture, and ſo received by the Jews; till after Chriſts Crucifying, when they obſerved, what evident teſtimonies there were in that book for Chriſt, they removed it from the Canon. This I know,

A know, is not true; but I remember it therefore, becauſe all aſſiſts us, to conſider Wiſdome in Chriſt, as that does alſo, That the greateſt Temple of the Chriſtians in Conſtantinople, was dedicated in that name, Sophia, to Wiſdome; by implication to Chriſt. And in ſome apparitions, where the Son of God is ſaid to have appeared, he cals himſelf by that name, Sapientiam Dei. He is Wiſdome, therefore, becauſe he reveales the Will of the Father to us; and therefore is no man wiſe, but he that knowes the Father in him. Iſidore makes this difference Inter ſapientem & prudentem, that the firſt, The wiſe man, attends the next world, the laſt, The prudent man, but this world: But wiſdome, even heavenly wiſdome, does not exclude that prudence, though the principall, or rather the ordinary object thereof, be this world. And therefore ſins againſt the ſecond Perſon, are ſins againſt Wiſdome, in either extreame, either in affected and groſſe ignorance, or in over-
B refined and ſublimed curioſity.

As we place this Ignorance in Practicall things of this world, ſo it is Stupidity; and as we place it in Doctrinall things, of the next world, ſo Ignorance is Implicite Beliefe: And Curioſity, as we place it upon Practical things, is Craft, and upon Doctrinal things, Subtilty; And this Stupidity and this Implicite faith, and then this Craft, and this Subtilty, are ſins directed againſt the Son, who is true and onely Wiſdome.

Stupiditas.

First then, A ſtupid and negligent paſſage through this world, as though thou wert no part of it, without embarking thy ſelfe in any calling; To croſſe Gods purpoſe ſo much, as that, whereas he produced every thing out of nothing, to be ſomething, thou wilt go ſo far back, towards nothing againe, as to be good for nothing, that when as our Lawes call a Calling, an Addition, thou wilt have no Addition, And when (as S. Auguſtine ſaies) Muſca Soli præferenda, quia vivit, A Fly is a nobler Creature then the Sun, in this re-
C ſpect, becauſe a Fly hath life in it ſelfe, and the Sun hath none, ſo any Artificer is a better part of a State, then any retired or contemplative man that embraces no Calling, Theſe chippings of the world, theſe fragmentary and incoherent men, treſpaſſe againſt the Son, againſt the ſecond Perſon, as he is Wiſdome. And ſo doe they in doctrinall things, that ſwallow any particular religion, upon an implicite faith. When Chriſt declared a very forward knowledge, in the Temple, at twelve yeares, with the Doctors, yet he was there, Audiens & interrogans, He heard what they would ſay, and he moved queſtions, to heare what they could ſay; for, Ejuſdem ſcientiæ eſt, ſcire quid interroges, quidve reſpondeas, It is a teſtimony of as much knowledge to aske a pertinent queſtion, as to give a pertinent anſwer. But never to have beene able to give anſwer, never to have asked queſtion in matter of Religion, this is ſuch an Impliciteneſſe, and indifferency, as tranſgreſſes againſt the Son of God, who is Wiſdome.

Luke 2. 46. Origen.

Curioſitas.

It is ſo too, in the other extreame, Curioſity; And this in Practicall things, is Craft, in D Doctrinall, Subtilty. Craft, is properly and narrowly, To go towards good ends, by ill wayes: And though this be not ſo ill, as when neither ends, nor wayes be good, yet this is ill too. The Civilians uſe to ſay of the Canoniſts, and Caſuiſts, That they conſider nothing but Craſſam æquitatem, fat Equity, downe-right Truths, things obvious and apprehenſible by every naturall man: and to doe but ſo, to be but honeſt men, and no more, they thinke a diminution. To ſtay within the limits of a profeſſion, within the limits of precedents, within the limits of time, is to over-active men contemptible; nothing is wiſdome, till it be exalted to Craft, and got above other men. And ſo it is, with ſome, with many, in Doctrinall things too. To reſt in Poſitive Divinity, and Articles confeſſed by all Churches, To be content with Salvation at laſt, and raiſe no eſtimation, no emulation, no opinion of ſingularity by the way, only to edifie an Auditory, and not to amaze them, onely to bring them to an aſſent, and to a practiſe, and not to an admiration, This is but E home-ſpun Divinity, but Country-learning, but Catechiſticall doctrine. Let me know (ſay theſe high-flying men) what God meant to doe with man, before ever God meant to make man: I care not for that Law that Moſes hath written; That every man can read; That he might have received from God, in one day; Let me know the Cabal, that which paſſed betweene God and him, in all the reſt of the forty dayes. I care not for Gods revealed Will, his Acts of Parliament, his publique Proclamations, Let me know his Cabinet Counſailes, his boſome, his pocket diſpatches. Is there not another kinde of Predeſtination, then that which is revealed in Scriptures, which ſeemes to be onely of thoſe that beleeve in Chriſt? May not a man be ſaved, though he doe not, and may not a man bee damned, though he doe performe thoſe Conditions, which ſeeme to make ſure his ſalvation in the Scriptures? Beloved, our Countreyman Holkot, upon the booke of Wiſdome, ſayes well of this Wiſdome, which we muſt ſeeke in the Booke of God: After he hath magnified it in his harmonious manner, (which was the ſtyle of that time) after he had ſaid, Cujus authore nihil ſublimius, That the Author of the Scripture was the higheſt Author, for that was God, Cujus tenore nihil ſolidius, That the aſſurance of the Scripture was the ſafeſt foundation, for it was a Rock, Cujus valore nihil locupletius, That the riches of the Scripture was the beſt treaſure, for it defrayed us in the next World, After he had purſued his way of Elegancy, and called it Munimentum Majeſtatis, That Majeſty and Soveraignty it ſelfe was eſtabliſhed by the Scriptures, and Fundamentum firmitatis, That all true conſtancy was built upon that, and Complementum poteſtatis, That the exerciſe of all power, was to be directed by that, he reſerves the force of all to the laſt, and contracts all to that, Emolumentum proprietatis, The profit which I have, in appropriating the power and the wiſdome of the Scriptures to my ſelfe: All wiſdome is nothing to me, if it be not mine: and I have title to nothing, that is not conveyed to me, by God, in his Scriptures; and in the wiſdome manifeſted to me there, I reſt. I looke upon Gods Decrees, in the execution of thoſe Decrees, and I try whether I be within that Decree of Election, or no, by examining my ſelfe, whether the marks of the Elect be upon me, or no, and ſo I appropriate the wiſdome of the Scripture to my ſelfe. A ſtupid negligence in the practicall things of this World, To do nothing; and an implicite credulity in doctrinall things, To beleeve all; and ſo alſo, a crafty preventing, and circumventing in the Practicall part; and a ſubtile, and perplexing intricacy, in the Doctrinall part; The firſt on this ſide, The other beyond, do both tranſgreſſe from that Wiſdome of God, which is the Sonne, and, in ſuch a reſpect, are ſins, eſpecially againſt the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity.

SERM. XLII.

Preached at Lincolns Inne upon Trinity-Sunday. 1620.

GEN. 18. 25.

Shall not the Iudge of all the Earth do right?

THeſe words are the entrance into that prayer and expoſtulation, which Abraham made to and with God, in the behalfe of Sodome, and the other Cities. He that is, before Abraham was, Chriſt Jeſus himſelfe, in that prayer, which he hath propoſed to us, hath laid ſuch a foundation, as this is, ſuch a religious inſinuation into him, to whom we make that prayer; Before we aske any thing, we ſay. Our Father, which art in heaven: If he be our Father, A Father when his ſonne asks bread will not give him a ſtone; God hath a fatherly diſpoſition towards us; And if he be our Father in Heaven, If evill fathers know how to give good things unto their children, how much more ſhall your heavenly Father give the Spirit to them that aske him? Shall your Father, which is in heaven, deny you any good thing? ſayes Chriſt there; It is impoſſible: Shall not the Iudge of all the Earth do right? ſayes Abraham here; It is as impoſſible.

Luk. 11. 13.

The hiſtory which occaſioned and induced theſe words, I know you know. The Holy Ghoſt by Moſes hath expreſſed plainly, and your meditations have paraphraſed to your ſelves this hiſtory, That God appeared to Abraham, in the plaine of Mamre, in the perſons of three men; three men ſo glorious, as that Abraham gave them a great reſpect: That Abraham ſpoke to thoſe three, as to one perſon: That he exhibited all offices of humanity and hoſpitality unto them: That after they had executed the firſt part of their Commiſſion, which was to ratifie, and to reduce to a more certainty of time, the promiſe of Iſaac, and conſequently of the Meſſias, though Abraham and Sara were paſt hope in one

A one another; that they imparted to Abraham, upon their departure, the indignation that God had conceived against the sins of Sodome, and consequently the imminent destruction of that City; That this awakened Abrahams compassion, and put him into a zeale, and vehemence; for, all the while, he is said, to have been with him that spoke to him, and yet, now it is said, Abraham drew near, he came up close to God, and he sayes, Peradventure, (I am not sure of it) but peradventure, there may be some righteous in the City, and if there should be so, it should be absolutely unjust to destroy them; but, since it may be so, it is too soone to come to a present execution; Absit à te, sayes Abraham, Be that far from thee; And he repeats it twice; And upon the reason in our text, Shall not the Iudge of all the Earth do right? Ver. 23. 24.

First then, The person who is the Iudge of all the Earth, submits us to a necessity of seeking, who it is that Abraham speaks to; and so, who they were that appeared to him: Divisa.

B whether they were three men, or three Angels, or two Angels, and the third, to whom Abraham especially addressed himselfe, were Christ: Or whether in these three persons, whatsoever they were, there were any intimation, any insinuation given, or any apprehension taken by Abraham, of the three blessed Persons of the glorious Trinity. And then, in the second part, in the expostulation it selfe, we shall see, first, The descent, and easinesse of God, that he vouchsafes to admit an expostulation, an admonition from his servant, He is content that Abraham remember him, of his office: And the Expostulation lyes in this, That he is a Iudge, And shall not a Iudge do right? But more in this, That he is Iudge of all the Earth, and, if he do wrong, there is no Appeal from him, And shall not the Iudge of all the Earth do right? And from thence we shall fall upon this consideration, What was that Right, which Abraham presses upon God here: And we shall finde it twofold: for, first, he thinks it unjust, that God should wrap up just and unjust, righ-

C teous and unrighteous, all in one condemnation, in one destruction, Absit, be this far from God: And then, he hath a farther ayme then that, That God for the righteous sake, should spare the unrighteous, and so forbeare the whole City. And though this Judge of the whole Earth, might have done right, though he had destroyed the most righteous persons amongst them, much more, though he had not spared the unrighteous, for the righteous sake, yet we shall see at last, the abundant measure of Gods overflowing mercy to have declared it selfe so far, as if there had been any righteous, he had spared the whole City. Our parts then are but two: but two such, as are high parts, and yet growing rich, and yet emproving, so far, as that the first is above Man, and the extent of his Reason, The mystery of the Trinity; And the other is above God so, as that it is above all his works, The infinitenes of his Mercy.

To come to the severall branches of these two maine parts, first, in the first, we aske, 1. Part.

D An viri, whether these three that appeared to Abraham, were men or no. Now, be- An viri.
tween Abrahams apprehension, who saw this done, and ours, who know it was done, because we read it here in Moses relation, there is a great difference. Moses who informes us now, what was done then, sayes expresly, Apparuit Dominus, The Lord appeared, and therefore we know they were more then ordinary men; But when Moses tels us how Abraham apprehended it, Ecce tres viri, He lift up his eyes, and he saw three men, he took them to be but men, and therefore exhibited to them all offices of humanity and curtesie: Where we note also, that even by the Saints of God, civill behaviour, and faire language is conveniently exercised: A man does not therefore meane ill, because he speaks well: A man must not therefore be suspected to performe nothing, because he promises much: Such phrases of humilitie, and diminution, and undervaluing of himselfe, as David utters to Saul; such phrases of magnifying, and glorifying the Prince, as

E Daniel uses to the King, perchance no secular story, perchance no moderne Court will afford; Neither shall you finde in those places, more of that which we call Compli- 1 Sam. 25.
ment, then in Abigails accesse to David, in the behalfe of her fooliſh husband, when she comes to intercede for him, and to deprecate his fault. Harshnesse, and morosity in behaviour, rusticity, and coorseneſſe of language, are no arguments in themselves, of a plaine, and a direct meaning, and of a simple heart. Abraham was an hundred yeares old, and that might, in the generall, indispose him; And it was soone after his Circumcision, which also might be a particular disabling; He was sitting still, and so not onely enjoying his bodily ease, but his Meditation, (for his eyes were cast downe) But as soon as he lift up his eyes, and had occasion presented him to doe a curtesie, for all his age, and infirmity, infirmity, and poſſeſſion of reſt, he runs to them, and he bowes himſelfe to them, and ſalutes them, with words not onely of curteſie, but of reverence: Explorat itinera, ſayes S. Ambroſe, he ſearches and inquires into their journey, that he might direct them, or accompany, or accommodate them; Adeſt non quærentibus, He prevents them, and offers before they aske; Rapit prætergreſſuros, when they pretended to goe farther, he forced them, by the irreſiſtible violence of curteſie, to ſtay with him, and he calls them, (or one amongſt them) Dominum, Lord, and profeſſes himſelfe their ſervant. But Abraham did not determine his curteſie in words, and no more: We muſt not think, that becauſe onely man of all creatures can ſpeak, that therefore the onely duty of man is to ſpeake; faire Apparell makes ſome ſhew in a wardrobe, but not halfe ſo good as when it is upon a body: faire language does ever well, but never ſo well as when it apparels a reall curteſie: Abraham entreated them faire, and entertained them well: he ſpoke kindly, and kindly performed all offices of eaſe, and refocillation to theſe way-faring ſtrangers. A B

Now here is our copie, but who writes after this copie? Abraham is pater multitudinis, A father of large poſterity, but he is dead without iſſue, or his race is failed; for, who hath this hoſpitall care of relieving diſtreſſed perſons now? Thou ſeeſt a needy perſon, and thou turneſt away thine eye; but it is the Prince of Darkneſſe that caſts this miſt upon thee; Thou ſtoppeſt thy noſe at his ſores, but they are thine owne incompaſſionate bowels that ſtinke within thee; Thou telleſt him, he troubles thee, and thinkeſt thou haſt chidden him into a ſilence; but he whiſpers ſtill to God, and he ſhall trouble thee worſe at laſt, when he ſhall tell thee, in the mouth of Chriſt Jeſus, I was hungry and ye fed me not: Still thou ſayeſt to the poore, I have not for you, when God knowes, a great part of that which thou haſt, thou haſt for them, if thou wouldſt execute Gods commiſſion, and diſpenſe it accordingly, as God hath made thee his ſteward for the poore. Give really, and give gently; Doe kindly, and ſpeake kindly too, for that is Bread, and Hony. C

An Angeli. Abraham then tooke theſe for men, and offered curteſies proper for men: for though hee called him, to whom hee ſpoke, Dominum, Lord, yet it is not that name of the Lord, which implyes his Divinity, it is not Iehovah, but Adonai; it is the ſame name, and Iohn 20. the ſame word, which his wife Sara, after, gives him. And Mary Magdalen when ſhe was at Chriſts Sepulchre, ſpeaks of Chriſt, and ſpeaks to the Gardiner (as ſhe thought) in one and the ſame word: Tulerunt Dominum, ſhe ſayes of Chriſt, They have taken away my Lord, And to the Gardiner ſhe ſayes, Domine, ſi ſuſtuliſti: for Κύριε, which is the word in both places, was but a name of civill curteſie, and is well enough tranſlated by our men, in that later place, Sir, Sir if you have taken him away, &c. Abraham then, at their firſt appearing, had no evidence that they were other then men; but we have; for
Heb. 13. 2. that place of the Apoſtle, Be not forgetfull to entertaine ſtrangers, for thereby ſome have entertained Angels unawares, hath evermore, by all Expoſitors, had reference to this action of Abrahams; which proves both theſe firſt branches, That he knew it not, and That they were Angels. The Apoſtles principall purpoſe there is, to recommend to us Hoſpitality, but limited to ſuch hoſpitality as might in likelihood, or in poſſibility, be an occaſion of entertaining Angels, that is, of Angelicall men, good and holy men. Hoſpitality is a vertue, more recommended by the Writers in the Primitive Church, then any other vertue: but upon this reaſon, That the poore flock of Chriſt Jeſus, being by perſecution then ſcattered upon the face of the earth, men were neceſſarily to be excited, with much vehemence, to ſuccour and relieve them, and to receive them into their houſes, as they travailed. D

Tertullian ſayes well, That the whole Church of God is one houſhold: He ſayes, every particular Church is Eccleſia Apoſtolica, quia ſoboles Apoſtolicarum, An Apoſtolicall Church, if it be an off-ſpring of the Apoſtolicall Churches: He does not ſay, quia ſoboles Apoſtolica, becauſe that Church is the off-ſpring of the Apoſtolicall Church, as though there were but one ſuch, which muſt be the mother of all: for, ſayes he, Omnes primæ, & omnes Apoſtolicæ, Every Church is a ſupreme Church, and every Church is an Apoſtolicall Church, dum omnes unam probant unitatem, as long as they agree in the unity of that doctrine which the Apoſtles taught, and adhere to the ſupreme head of the whole Church, Chriſt Jeſus. Which S. Cyprian expreſſes more clearly, Epiſcopatus unus eſt, The whole Church is but one Biſhoprick, Cujus, à ſingulis, in ſolidum pars tenetur, Every Biſhop is Biſhop of the whole Church, and no one more then another. The Church then E was,

A was, and ſhould be, as one houſhold; And in this houſhold, ſayes Tertullian there, there was firſt Communicatio pacis, a peaceable diſpoſition, a charitable interpretation of one anothers actions: And then there was Appellatio fraternitatis, ſayes he; That if they did differ in ſome things, yet they eſteemed themſelves ſons of one Father, of God, and by one Mother, the Catholique Church, and did not break the band of Brotherhood, nor ſeparate from one another for every difference in opinion; And laſtly, ſayes he, There was Conteſſeratio Hoſpitalitatis, A warrant for their reception and entertainment in one anothers houſes, whereſoever they travailed. Now, becauſe for the benefit and advantage of this eaſe, and accommodation in travailing, men conterfeited themſelves to be Chriſtians that were not, the Councel of Nice made ſuch proviſion as was poſſible; (though that alſo were deluded after) which was, That there ſhould be litera formata, (as they called them) certaine teſtimoniall letters, ſubſcribed with foure characters, de-
B noting Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt; and thoſe letters ſhould be conteſſeratio hoſpitalitatis, a warrant for their entertainment whereſoever they came. Still there was a care of hoſpitality, but ſuch, as Angels, that is, Angelicall, good and religious men, and truly Chriſtians, might be received.

Beloved, Baptiſme in the name of the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt, is this Conteſſeration; all that are truly baptized are of this houſhold, and ſhould be relieved and received: But certainly, there is a race that have not this Conteſſeration, not theſe teſtimoniall letters, not this outward Baptiſme: Amongſt thoſe herds of vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues, that fill porches, and barnes in the Countrey, a very great part of them was never baptized: people of a promiſcuous generation, and of a miſchievous education; ill brought into the world, and never brought into the Church. No man receives an Angel unawares, for receiving or harbouring any of theſe; neither have theſe any intereſt in the houſhold of God, for they have not their firſt Conteſſeration: And as there
C are ſins which we are not bid to pray for, ſo there are beggers which we are not bid to give to. God appeared by Angels in the Old Teſtament, and he appeares by Angels in the New, in his Meſſengers, in his Miniſters, in his Servants: And that Hoſpitality, and thoſe feaſts which cannot receive ſuch Angels, thoſe Miniſters and Meſſengers of God, where by reaſon of exceſſe and drunkenneſſe, by reaſon of ſcurril and licentious diſcourſe, by reaſon of wanton and unchaſt provocations, by reaſon of execrable and blaſphemous oathes theſe Angels of God cannot be preſent, but they muſt either offend the company by reprehenſion, or prevaricate and betray the cauſe of God by their ſilence, this is not Abrahams hoſpitality, whoſe commendation was, that he received Angels.

Thoſe Angels came, and ſtood before Abraham, but till he liſt up his eyes, and ran forth
D to them, they came not to him: The Angels of the Goſpel come within their diſtance, but if you will not receive them, they can break open no doores, nor ſave you againſt your will: The Angel does, as he that ſends him, Stand at the doore, and knock, if the Revel. 3. 20. doore be opened, he comes in, and ſups with him; What gets he by that? This; He ſups with me too, ſayes Chriſt there; He brings his diſh with him; he feeds his Hoſt, more then his Hoſt him. This is true Hoſpitality, and entertainment of Angels, both when thou feedeſt Chriſt, in his poore members abroad, or when thou feedeſt thine owne ſoule at home, with the company and converſation of true and religious Chriſtians at thy table, for theſe are Angels.

Abraham then, took theſe three for men, and no more, when as they were Angels: An Chriſtus. But were they all Angels, and no more? was not that one, to whom more particularly Abraham addreſſed himſelfe, and called him Lord, The Son of God, Chriſt Jeſus?
E This very many, very learned amongſt the Ancients, did not onely aske by way of Probleme, and diſputation, but affirme Doctrinally, by way of reſolution. Irenæus thought it, and expreſſed it ſo elegantly, as it is almoſt pity, if it be not true; Inſeminatus eſt ubique in Scripturis, Filius Dei, ſayes he: The Son of God is ſowed in every furrow, in every place of the Scripture, you may ſee him grow up; and he gives an example out of this place, Cum Abraham loquens, cum Abraham comeſurus, Chriſt talked with Abraham, and he dined with him. And they will ſay, that whereas it is ſaid in that place to the Hebrewes, That Abraham received Angels, the word Angel muſt not be too preciſely taken: For ſometimes, Angel in the Scriptures, ſignifies leſſe then Angel, (as Iohn, and Malachy are called Angels) and ſometimes Angel ſignifies more then Angel, as Chriſt himſelfe himſelfe is called The Angel of the great Councell, according to the Septuagint: So therefore, they will ſay, That though Chriſt were there, Chriſt himſelfe might be called ſo, An Angel; Or it may be juſtly ſaid by S. Paul, That Abraham did receive Angels, becauſe there were two, that were, without queſtion, Angels. This led Hilary to a direct, and a preſent reſolution, that Abraham ſaw Chriſt, and to exclaime gratulatorily in his behalfe, Quanta fidei vis, ut in indiſcreta aſſiſtentium ſpecie, Chriſtum internoſceret! What a perſpicacy had Abrahams faith, who, where they were all alike, could diſcerne one to be above them all!

Eſay 9.

Make this then the queſtion, whether Chriſt ever appeared to men upon earth, before his Incarnation; and the Scriptures not determining this queſtion at all, if the Fathers ſhall be called to judge it, it will ſtill be a perplexed caſe, for they will be equall in number, and in waight. S. Auguſtine (who is one of them that deny it) ſayes firſt, for the generall, the greateſt worke of all, the promulgation of the Law, was done by Angels alone, without concurrence of the Son; and for this particular, ſayes he, concerning Abraham, they who thinke that Chriſt appeared to Abraham, ground themſelves but upon this reaſon, That Abraham ſpeakes to all, in the ſingular number, as to one perſon; And then, ſayes that Father, they may alſo obſerve, that when this one Perſon, whom they conclude to be Chriſt, was departed from the other two, and that the other two went up to Sodome, there Lot ſpeakes to thoſe two, in the ſingular number, as to one perſon, as Abraham did before. From this argumentation of S. Auguſtines, this may well be raiſed, That when the Scriptures may be interpreted, and Gods actions well underſtood, by an ordinary way, it is never neceſſary, ſeldome ſafe to induce an extraordinary. It was then an ordinary, and familiar way for God, to proceed with thoſe his ſervants by Angels; but by his Son, ſo extraordinary, as that it is not cleare, that ever it was done; and therefore it needs not be ſaid, nor admitted in this place.

Gen 19.18.

In this place, this falls properly to be noted, that even in theſe three glorious Angels of God, there was an eminent difference; One of them ſeemed to Abraham, to bee the principall man in the Commiſſion, and to that one, he addreſſed himſelfe. Amongſt the other Angels, which are the Miniſters in Gods Church, one may have better abilities, better faculties then another, and it is no errour, no weakneſſe in a man to deſire to conferre with one rather then with another, or to heare one rather then another. But Abraham did not ſo apply himſelfe to one of the three, that he neglected the other two: No man muſt be ſo cheriſhed, ſo followed, as that any other be thereby either defrauded of their due maintenance, or diſ-heartened for want of due incouragement. Wee have not the greateſt uſe of the greateſt Starres; but wee have more benefit of the Moone, which is leſſe then they, becauſe ſhe is nearer to us. It is not the depth, nor the wit, nor the eloquence of the Preacher that pierces us, but his neareneſſe; that hee ſpeaks to my conſcience, as though he had been behinde the hangings when I ſinned, and as though he had read the book of the day of Judgement already. Something Abraham ſaw in this Angel above the reſt, which drew him, which Moſes does not expreſſe; Something a man finds in one Preacher above another, which he cannot expreſſe, and he may very lawfully make his ſpirituall benefit of that, ſo that that be no occaſion of neglecting due reſpects to others.

An Trinitas.

This being then thus fixed, that Abraham received them as men, that they were in truth no other then Angels, there remaines, for the ſhutting up of this Part, this Conſideration, whether after Abraham came to the knowledge that they were Angels, he apprehended not an intimation of the three Perſons of the Trinity, by theſe three Angels. Whether Gods appearing to Abraham (which Moſes ſpeaks of in the firſt verſe) were manifeſted to him, when Sarah laughed in her ſelfe, and yet they knew that ſhe laughed; Or whether it were manifeſted, when they imparted their purpoſe, concerning Sodome, (for, in both theſe places, they are called neither men nor Angels, but by that name, The Lord, and that Lord which is Jehovah) whether, I ſay, when Abraham diſcerned them to be ſuch Angels, as God appeared in them, and ſpoke and wrought by them, whether then, as he diſcerned the Divinity, he diſcerned the Trinity in them too, is the queſtion. I know the explicite Doctrine of the Trinity was not eaſie to be apprehended then; as it is not eaſie to be expreſſed now. It is a bold thing in ſervants, to inquire curiouſly into their Maſters Pedigree, whether he be well deſcended, or well allied: It is a bold thing too, to inquire too curiouſly into the eternall generation of Chriſt Jeſus, or the eternall

Ver. 13.
Ver. 17.

A eternall procession of the Holy Ghost. When Gregory Nazianzen was pressed by one, to assigne a difference between those words, Begotten, and Proceeding, Dic tu mihi, sayes he, quid sit Generatio, & ego dicam tibi, quid sit Processio, ut ambo insaniamus: Doe thou tell me, what this Begetting is, and then I will tell thee, what this Proceeding is; and all the world will finde us both mad, for going about to expresse inexpressible things.

And as every manner of phrase in expressing, or every comparison, does not manifest the Trinity; so every place of Scripture, which the Fathers, and later men have applied to that purpose, does not prove the Trinity. And therefore, those men in the Church, who have cryed downe that way of proceeding, to goe about to prove the Trinity, out of the first words of Genesis, Creavit Dii, That because God in the plurall is there joyned to a Verb in the singular, therefore there is a Trinity in Unity; or to prove the Trinity out of this place, that because God, who is but one, appeared to Abraham in three
B Persons, therefore there are three Persons in the God-head; those men, I say, who have cryed downe such manner of arguments, have reason on their side, when these arguments are imployed against the Jews, for, for the most part, the Jews have pertinent, and sufficient answers to those arguments. But yet, betweene them, who make this place, a distinct, and a literall, and a concluding argument, to prove the Trinity, and them who cry out against it, that it hath no relation to the Trinity, our Church hath gone a middle, and a moderate way, when by appointing this Scripture for this day, when we celebrate the Trinity, it declares that to us, who have been baptized, and catechised in the name and faith of the Trinity, it is a refreshing, it is a cherishing, it is an awakening of that former knowledge which we had of the Trinity, to heare that our onely God thus manifested himselfe to Abraham in three Persons.

Luther sayes well upon this text, If there were no other proofe of the Trinity but this,
C I should not believe the Trinity; but yet sayes he, This is Singulare testimonium de articulo Trinitatis, Though it be not a concluding argument, yet it is a great testimony of the Trinity. Fateor, saies he, historico sensu nihil concludi prater hospitalitatem, I confesse, in the literall sense, there is nothing but a recommendation of hospitality, and therefore, to the Jews, I would urge no more out of this place: Sed non sic agendum cum auditoribus, ac cum adversariis, We must not proceed alike with friends and with enemies. There are places of Scriptures for direct proofes, and there are places to exercise our meditation, and devotion in things, for which we need not, nor aske not any new proofe. And for exercise, sayes Luther, Rudi ligno ad formam gladii utimur, We content our selves with a foyle, or with a stick, and we require not a sharpe sword. To cut off the enemies of the Trinity, we have two-edged swords, that is, undeniable arguments: but to exercise our owne devotions, we are content with similitudinary, and comparative reasons. He pursues it farther, D to good use: The story doth not teach us, That Sarah is the Christian Church, and Hagar the Synagogue; But S. Paul proves that, from that story; he proves it from thence, though Gal. 4. 24.
he call it but an Allegory. It is true that S. Augustine sayes, Figura nihil probat, A figure, an Allegory proves nothing; yet, sayes he, addit lucem, & ornat, It makes that which is true in it selfe, more evident and more acceptable.

And therefore it is a lovely and a religious thing, to finde out Vestigia Trinitatis, Impressions of the Trinity, in as many things as we can; and it is a reverent obedience to embrace the wisdome of our Church, in renewing the Trinity to our Contemplation, by the reading of this Scripture, this day, for, even out of this Scripture, Philo Iudæus, (although hee knew not the true Trinity aright) found a threefold manifestation of God to man, in this appearing of God to Abraham: for, as he is called in this Story, Iehova, E he considers him, Fontem Essentiæ, To be the fountaine of all Being; As hee is called Deus, God, he considers him, in the administration of his Creatures, in his providence; As he is called Dominus, Lord, and King, he considers him in the judgement, glorifying, and rejecting according to their merits: So, though hee found not a Trinity of Persons, he found a Trinity of Actions in the Text, Creation, Providence, and Judgement. If he, who knew no Trinity, could finde one, shall not we, who know the true one, meditate the more effectually upon that, by occasion of this story? Let us therefore, with S. Bernard, consider Trinitatem Creatricem, and Trinitatem Creatam, A Creating, and a Created Trinity; A Trinity, which the Trinity in Heaven, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, hath created in our soules, Reason, Memory, and Will; and that we have super-created, added another Trinity, Suggestion, and Consent, and Delight in sin; And that God, after all all this infuſes another Trinity, Faith, Hope, and Charity, by which we returne to our firſt; for ſo far, that Father of Meditation, S. Bernard, carries this conſideration of the Trinity. Since therefore the confeſſion of a Trinity is that which diſtinguiſhes us from Jews, and Turks, and al óther profeſſions, let us diſcerne that beame of the Trinity, which the Church hath ſhewed us, in this text, and with the words of the Church, conclude this part, O holy, bleſſed, and glorious Trinity, three Perſons, and one God, have mercy upon us miſerable ſinners.

2 Part. Expoſtulatio.

We are deſcended now to our ſecond part, what paſt between God and Abraham, after he had thus manifeſted himſelfe unto him; Where we noted firſt, That God admits, even expoſtulation, from his ſervants; almoſt rebukes and chidings from his ſervants. We need not wonder at Iobs humility, that he did not deſpiſe his man, nor his mayd, when they contended with him, for God does not deſpiſe that in us. God would have gone from Iacob when he wreſtled, and Iacob would not let him go, and that prevailed with God. If we have an apprehenſion when we beginne to pray, that God doth not heare us, not regard us, God is content that in the fervor of that prayer, we ſay with David, Evigila Domine, and Surge Domine, Awake O Lord, and Ariſe O Lord; God is content to be told, that he was in bed, and aſleepe, when he ſhould heare us. If we have not a preſent deliverance from our enemies, God is content that we proceed with David, Eripe manum de ſinu, Pluck out thy hand out of thy boſome; God is content to be told, that he is ſlack and dilatory when he ſhould deliver us. If we have not the ſame eſtimation in the world, that the children of this world have, God is content that we ſay with Amos, Pauperem pro calceamentis, that we are ſold for a paire of ſhooes; And with S. Paul, that we are the off-ſcouring of the world: God is content to be told, that he is unthrifty, and prodigall of his ſervants lives, and honours, and fortunes. Now, Offer this to one of your Princes, ſays the Prophet, and ſee whether he will take it. Bring a petition to any earthly Prince, and ſay to him, Evigila, and Surge, would your Majeſty would awake, and reade this petition, and ſo inſimulate him of a former drowſineſſe in his government; ſay unto him, Eripe manum, pull thy hand out of thy boſome, and execute Juſtice, and ſo inſimulate him of a former manacling and ſlumbring of the Lawes; ſay unto him, we are become as old ſhooes, and as off-ſcourings, and ſo inſimulate him of a diminution, and diſ-eſtimation faln upon the Nation by him, what Prince would not (and juſtly) conceive an indignation againſt ſuch a petitioner? which of us that heard him, would not pronounce him to be mad, to eaſe him of a heavier imputation? And yet our long-ſuffering, and our patient God, (muſt we ſay, our humble and obedient God?) endures all this: He endures more; for, when Abraham came to this expoſtulation, Shall not the Iudge of all the earth do right? God had ſaid never a word, of any purpoſe to deſtroy Sodom, but he ſaid only, He would go ſee, whether they had done altogether, according to that cry, which was come up againſt them; and Abraham comes preſently to this vehemency: And might not the Supreme Ordinary, God himſelfe, goe this viſitation? might not the ſupreme Judge, God himſelfe, go this Circuit? But as long as Abraham kept himſelfe upon this foundation, It is impoſſible, that the Iudge of all the earth ſhould not do right, God miſ-interpreted nothing at Abrahams hand, but received even his Expoſtulations, & heard him out, to the ſixt petition.

Amos 2.6.

Index.

Almoſt ſuch an Expoſtulation as this, Moſes uſes towards God; He asks God a reaſon of his anger, Lord, why doth thy wrath waxe hot againſt thy people? He tels him a reaſon, why he ſhould not doe ſo, For thou haſt brought them forth with a great power, and with a mighty hand: And he tels him the inconveniences that might follow, The Egyptians will ſay, He brought them out for miſchiefe, to ſlay them in the mountaine: He imputes even perjury to God himſelfe, and breach of Covenant, to Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, which were Feffees in truſt, betweene God and his people, and he ſayes, Thou ſwar'ſt to them, by thine owne ſelfe, that thou wouldſt not deale thus with them; And therefore he concludes all with that vehemence, Turne from thy fierce wrath, and repent this evill purpoſe againſt them. But we finde a prayer, or expoſtulation, of much more exorbitant vehemence, in the ſtories of the Roman Church, towards the bleſſed Virgin, (towards whom, they uſe to bee more mannerly and reſpective then towards her Son, or his Father) when at a ſiege of Conſtantinople, they came to her ſtatue, with this proteſtation, Looke you to the drowning of our Enemies ſhips, or we will drowne you: Si vis ut imaginem tuam non mergamus in mari, merge illos. The fartheſt that Abraham goes in this place, is, That God is a Iudge, and therefore muſt doe right: for, Far be wickedneſſe from God, and iniquity from the Almighty;

Exod. 32.11.

Iob 32.10.

mighty; ſurely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert judgement. An Uſurer, an Extortioner, an Oppreſſor, a Libeller, a Thiefe, and Adulterer, yea a Traytor, makes ſhift to finde ſome excuſe, ſome flattery to his Conſcience; they ſay to themſelves; the Law is open, and if any be grieved, they may take their remedy, and I muſt endure it, and there is an end. But, ſince nothing holds of this oppreſſor, and manifold malefactor, but the ſentence of the Judge, ſhall not the Judge doe right? how muſt this neceſſarily ſhake the frame of all? An Arbitrator or a Chancellor, that judges by ſubmiſſion of parties, or according to the Dictates of his owne underſtanding, may have ſome excuſe, He did as his Conſcience led him: But ſhall not a Iudge, that hath a certaine Law to judge by, do right? Eſpecially if he be ſuch a Judge, as is Iudge of the whole earth? which is the next ſtep in Abrahams expoſtulation.

Now, as long as there lies a Certiorari from a higher Court, or an Appeale to a higher Court, the caſe is not ſo deſperate, if the Judge doe not right, for there is a future remedy to be hoped: If the whole State be incenſed againſt me, yet I can finde an eſcape to another Country; If all the World perſecute me, yet, if I be an honeſt man, I have a ſupreame Court in my ſelfe, and I am at peace, in being acquitted in mine owne Conſcience. But God is the Judge of all the earth; of this which I tread, and this earth which I carry about me; and when he judges me, my Conſcience turnes on his ſide, and confeſſes his judgement to be right. And therefore S. Pauls argument, ſeconds, and ratifies Abrahams expoſtulation; Is God unrighteous? God forbid; for then, ſayes the Apoſtle, how ſhall God judge the World? The Pope may erre, but then a Councell may rectifie him: The King may erre; but then, God, in whoſe hands the Kings heart is, can rectifie him. But if God, that judges all the earth, judge thee, there is no error to be aſſigned in his judgement, no appeale from God not throughly informed, to God better informed, for hee alwaies knowes all evidence, before it be given. And therefore the larger the juriſdiction, and the higher the Court is, the more carefull ought the Judge to be of wrong judgement; for Abrahams expoſtulation reaches in a meaſure to them, Shall not the Iudge of all (or of a great part of the earth) do right?

Omnem terram.

Rom. 3. 6.

Now what is the wrong, which Abraham diſſwaded, and deprecated here? firſt, Ne juſti cum impiis, That God would not deſtroy the Juſt with the unjuſt, not make both their caſes alike. This is an injuſtice, which never any bloody men upon earth, but thoſe, who exceeded all, in their infamous purpoſes, the Authors, and Actors in the Powder treaſon, did ever deliberately and adviſedly, upon debate whether it ſhould be ſo, or no, reſolve, that all of both Religions ſhould periſh promiſcuouſly in the blowing up of that houſe. Here the Devill would be Gods Ape; and as God had preſented to S. Peter, a ſheete of all ſorts of Creatures, cleane and uncleane, and bad him take his choice, kill and eate; So the Devill would make S. Peter, in his imaginary Succeſſor, or his inſtruments, preſent God a ſacrifice of cleane and uncleane, Catholiques and Heretiques, (in their denomination) and bid him take his choyce: which action, whoſoever forgets ſo, as that he forgets what was intended in it, forgets his Religion, and whoſoever forgets it ſo, as that he forgets what they would doe againe, if they had power, forgets his reaſon. But this is not the way of Gods juſtice; God is a God of harmony, and conſent, and in a muſicall inſtrument, if ſome ſtrings be out of tune, wee doe not preſently breake all the ſtrings, but reduce and tune thoſe, which are out of tune.

Iuſti cum impiis.

As gold whileſt it is in the mine, in the bowels of the earth, is good for nothing, and when it is out, and beaten to the thinneſſe of leaf-gold, it is waſted, and blown away, and quickly comes to nothing; But when it is tempered with ſuch allay, as it may receive a ſtamp and impreſſion, then it is currant and uſefull: So whileſt Gods Juſtice lyes in the bowels of his own decree and purpoſe, and is not executed at all, we take no knowledge that there is any ſuch thing; And when Gods Juſtice is dilated to ſuch an expanſion, as it overflowes all alike, whole Armies with the ſword, whole Cities with the plague, whole Countryes with famine, oftentimes we loſe the conſideration of Gods Juſtice, and fall upon ſome naturall cauſes, becauſe the calamity is faln ſo indifferently upon juſt and unjuſt, as that, we thinke, it could not be the act of God: but when Gods Juſtice is ſo allayd with his wiſedome, as that we ſee he keeps a Goſhen in Ægypt, and ſaves his ſervants in the deſtruction of his enemies, then we come to a rich and profitable uſe of his Juſtice. And therefore Abraham preſſes this, with that vehement word, Chalilah, Abſit: Abraham ſerves a Prohibition upon God, as S. Peter would have done upon Chriſt, when when he was going up to Jeruſalem to ſuffer, Abſit, ſayes he, Thou ſhalt not do this. But the word ſignifies more properly prophanationem, pollutionem : Abraham intends, that God ſhould know, that it would be a prophaning of his holy honour; and an occaſion of having his Name blaſphemed amongſt the Nations, if God ſhould proceed ſo, as to wrap up juſt and unjuſt, righteous and unrighteous, all in one condemnation, and one execution; Abſit, Be this far from thee.

Vt parcat Impiis.

But Abrahams zeale extended farther then this; his deſire and his hope was, That for the righteous ſake, the unrighteous might be ſpared, and reſerved to a time of repentance. This therefore miniſters a provocation to every man, to be as good as he can, not onely for his own ſake, but for others too. This made S. Ambroſe ſay, Quantus murus patriæ, vir bonus? An honeſt and religious man, is a wall to a whole City, a ſea to a whole Iland. When our Saviour Chriſt obſerved, that they would preſſe him with that Proverb, Medice, cura teipſum, Phyſitian, heal thy ſelfe, we ſee there, that himſelfe was not his perſon, but his Country was himſelfe; for that is it that they intend by that Proverb, Heal thy ſelfe, take care of them that are near thee, do that which thou doeſt here in Capernaum, at home; Preach theſe Sermons there; do theſe miracles there: cure thy Country, and that is curing thy ſelfe. Live ſo, that thy example may be a precedent to others; live ſo, that for thy ſake, God may ſpare others; and then, and not till then, thou haſt done thy duty. God ſpares ſometimes, ob commixtionem ſanguinis, for kindreds ſake, and for alliance; and therefore it behoves us to take care of our allyances, and planting our children in religious families. How many judgements do we eſcape, becauſe we are of the ſeed of Abraham, and made partakers of the Covenant, which the Gentils, who are not ſo, are overwhelmed under? God ſpares ſometimes, ob cohabitationem, for good neighbourhood; he will not bring the fire near a good mans houſe: As here, in our Text, he would have done in Sodome, and as he did ſave many, onely becauſe they were in the ſame Ship with S. Paul. And therefore, as in the other Religion, the Jews have ſtreets of their own, and the Stews have ſtreets of their own; ſo let us chooſe to make our dwellings, and our converſation of our own, and not affect the neighbourhood, nor the commerce of them who are of evill communication. Be good then, that thou mayeſt communicate thy goodneſſe to others; and conſort with the good, that thou mayeſt participate of their goodneſſe. Omnis ſapiens ſtulti eſt redemptio, is excellently ſaid by Philo, A wiſe mad is the ſaviour and redeemer of a foole: And, (as the ſame man ſays) though a Phyſitian when he is called, diſcerne that the patient cannot be recovered, yet he will preſcribe ſomething, Ne ob ejus negligentiam periiſſe videatur, leſt the world ſhould think he dyed by his negligence; How incurable, how incorrigible ſoever the world be, be thou a religious honeſt man, leſt ſome childe in thy houſe, or ſome ſervant of thine be damned, which might have been ſaved, if thou hadſt given good example. Gods ordinary way is to ſave man by man; and Abraham thought it not out of Gods way, to ſave man for man, to ſave the unjuſt for the juſt, the unrighteous for the righteous ſake.

Luk. 4. 23.

Act. 27.

Si nolit Deus.

Eccleſ. 9. 2.

But if God do not take this way, if he do wrap up the juſt and the unjuſt in the ſame Judgement, is God therefore unjuſt? God forbid. All things come alike to all, ſayes Solomon; One event to the righteous, and to the wicked, to the cleane, and to the uncleane, to him that ſacrificeth, and to him that ſacrificeth not; as is the good, ſo is the ſinner, and he that ſweareth, as he that feareth an Oath. There is one event of all, ſayes he; but, ſayes he, This is an evill, that it is ſo: But what kinde of evill? An evill of vexation; becauſe the weake are ſometimes ſcandalized that it is ſo, and the glory of God ſeems for a time to be obſcured, when it is ſo, becauſe the good are not diſcerned from the evill. But yet God, who knowes beſt how to repayre his own honour, ſuffers it, nay appoints it to be ſo, that juſt and unjuſt are wrapped up in the ſame Judgement. The Corne is as much beaten in the threſhing, as the ſtraw is; The juſt are as much puniſhed here as the unjuſt. Becauſe God of his infinite goodneſſe, hath elected me from the beginning, therefore muſt he provide that I have another manner of birth, or another manner of death, then the Reprobate have? Muſt he provide, that I be borne into the world, without originall ſin, of a Virgin, as his Son was, or that I go out of the world, by being taken away, as Enoch was, or as Elias? And though we have that one example of ſuch a comming into the world, and a few examples of ſuch a going out of the world, yet we have no example (not in the Son of God himſelfe) of paſſing through this world, without taking part of the miſeries

A ſeries and calamities of the world, common to juſt and unjuſt, to the righteous and unrighteous. If Abraham therefore ſhould have intended onely temporall deſtruction, his argument might have been defective: for Ezekiel, and Daniel, and other juſt men, were carried into Captivity, as well as the unjuſt, and yet God not unrighteous: God does it, and avowes it, and profeſſes that he will do it, and do it juſtly; Occidam in te juſtum & injuſtum, I will cut off the righteous and unrighteous together. There is no man ſo righteous, upon whom God might not juſtly inflict as heavy judgements, in this world, as upon the moſt unrighteous; Though he have wrapped him up in the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt Jeſus himſelfe, for the next world, yet he may juſtly wrap him up in any common calamity falling upon the unrighteous here. But the difference is onely in ſpirituall deſtruction. Abraham might juſtly apprehend a feare, that a ſudden and unprepared death might endanger them for their future ſtate; And therefore he does not pray, that they B might be ſevered from that judgement, becauſe, if they dyed with the unrighteous, they dyed as the unrighteous, if they paſſed the ſame way as they, out of this world, they therefore paſſed into the ſame ſtate as they, in the next world, Abraham could not conclude ſo, but becauſe the beſt men do alwayes need all meanes of making them better, Abraham prayes, that God would not cut them off, by a ſudden deſtruction, from a conſidering, and contemplating the wayes of his proceeding, and ſo a preparing themſelves to a willing and to a thankfull embracing of any way, which they ſhould ſo diſcerne to be his way. The wicked are ſuddenly deſtroyed; and do not ſee what hand is upon them, till that hand bury them in hell; The godly may die as ſuddenly, but yet he ſees and knows it to be the hand of God, and takes hold of that hand, and by it is carried up to heaven.

Ezek. 21. 3.

Now, if God be ſtill juſt; though he puniſh the juſt with the unjuſt, in this life, much Si non parcat, C more may he be ſo, though he do not ſpare the unjuſt for the righteous ſake, which is the principall drift of Abrahams expoſtulation, or deprecation. God can preſerve ſtill, ſo as he did in Ægypt. God hath the ſame Receipts, and the ſame Antidotes which he had, to repell the flames of burning furnaces, to binde or ſtupifie the jawes of hungry Lyons, to blunt the edge of Swords, and overflowing Armyes, as he had heretofore. Chriſt was inviſible to his enemies, when he would ſcape away; And he was impregnable to his enemies, when in his manifeſtation of himſelfe, (I am he) they fell downe before him; And he was invulnerable, and immortall to his enemies, as long as he would be ſo, for if he had not opened himſelfe to their violence, no man could have taken away his ſoule; And where God ſees ſuch deliverances conduce more to his honour then our ſuffering does, he will deliver us ſo in the times of perſecution. So that God hath another way, and he had another anſwer for Abrahams petition; he might have ſaid, There D is no ill conſtruction, no hard concluſion to be made, if I ſhould take away the juſt with the unjuſt, neither is there any neceſſity, that I ſhould ſpare the wicked for the righteous: I can deſtroy Sodome, and yet ſave the righteous; I can deſtroy the righteous, and yet make death an advantage to them; which way ſoever I take, I can do nothing unjuſtly.

John 8. 59. 18. 6.

But yet, though God do not binde himſelfe to ſpare the wicked for the righteous, yet Tamen id facit. he deſcends to do ſo at Abrahams requeſt. The jaw-bone of an Aſſe, in the hand of Samſon, was a devouring ſword. The words of man, in the mouth of a faithfull man, of Abraham, are a Canon againſt God himſelfe, and batter down all his ſevere and heavy purpoſes for Judgements. Yet, this comes not, God knows, out of the weight or force of our words, but out of the eaſineſſe of God. God puts himſelfe into the way of a ſhot, he meets a weak prayer, and is graciouſly pleaſed to be wounded by that: God ſets up a E light, that we direct the ſhot upon him, he enlightens us with a knowledge, how, and when, and what to pray for; yea, God charges, and diſcharges the Canon himſelf upon himſelfe; He fils us with good and religious thoughts, and appoints and leaves the Holy Ghoſt, to diſcharge them upon him, in prayer, for it is the Holy Ghoſt himſelfe that prayes in us. Mauzzim, which is, The God of forces, is not the name of our God, but Dan. 11. 38. of an Idoll; Our God is the God of peace, and of ſweetneſſe; ſpirituall peace, ſpirituall honey to our ſouls; His name is Deus optimus maximus; He is both; He is All Greatneſſe, but he is All Goodneſſe firſt: He comes to ſhew his Greatneſſe at laſt, but yet his Goodneſſe begins his Name, and can never be worne out in his Nature. He made the whole world in ſix dayes, but he was ſeaven in deſtroying one City, Jericho. God threatens Adam, If thou eate that fruit, in that day, Morte morieris, Thou ſhalt dye the death; Here is a double Death interminated in one Day: Now, one of theſe Deaths is ſpirituall Death, and Adam never dyed that Death; And for the other Death, the bodily Death, which might have been executed that day; Adam was reprieved above nine hundred yeares. To lead all to our preſent purpoſe, Gods deſcending to Abrahams petition, to ſpare the wicked for a few juſt, is firſt and principally to advance his mercy, That ſometimes in abundant mercy, he does ſo; but it is alſo to declare, that there is none juſt and righteous. Run to and fro through the ſtreets of Ieruſalem, (ſayes God in the Prophet) and ſeeke in the broad places, If yee can finde a man, if there be any that executeth Judgement, that ſeeketh Truth, and I will pardon it. Where God does not intimate, that he were unjuſt, if he did not ſpare thoſe that were unjuſt, but he declares the generall flood and inundation of unrighteouſneſſe upon Earth, That upon Earth there is not a righteous man to be found. If God had gone no farther in his promiſe to man, then that, if there were one righteous man, he would ſave all, this, in effect, had been nothing, for there was never any man righteous, in that ſenſe and acceptation; He promiſed and ſent one who was abſolutely righteous, and for his ſake hath ſaved us.

Jerem. 5. 1.

Concluſio.

To collect all, and bind up all in one bundle, and bring it home to your own boſomes, remember, That though he appeared in men, it was God that appeared to Abraham; Though men preach, though men remit ſins, though men abſolve, God himſelf ſpeakes, and God works, and God ſeales in thoſe men. Remember that nothing appeared to Abrahams apprehenſion but men, yet Angels were in his preſence; Though we binde you not to a neceſſity of beleeving that every man hath a particular Angel to aſſiſt him, (enjoy your Chriſtian liberty in that, and think in that point ſo as you ſhall find your devotion moſt exalted, by thinking that it is, or is not ſo) yet know, that you do all that you doe, in the preſence of Gods Angels; And though it be in it ſelfe, and ſhould be, ſo to us, a ſtronger bridle, to conſider that we doe all in the preſence of God; (who ſees clearer then they, for he ſees ſecret thoughts, and can ſtrike immediately, which they cannot do, without commiſſion from him) yet ſince the preſence of a Magiſtrate, or a Preacher, or a father, or a husband, keeps men often from ill actions, let this prevaile ſomething with thee, to that purpoſe, That the Angels of God are alwayes preſent, though thou diſcerne them not. Remember, that though Chriſt himſelf were not amongſt the three Angels, yet Abraham apprehended a greater dignity, and gave a greater reſpect to one then to the reſt; but yet without neglecting the reſt too: Apply thy ſelfe to ſuch Miniſters of God, and ſuch Phyſitians of thy ſoule, as thine owne conſcience tels thee doe moſt good upon thee; but yet let no particular affection to one, defraud another in his duties, nor empaire another in his eſtimation. And remember too, That though Gods appearing thus in three perſons, be no irrefragable argument to prove the Trinity againſt the Jews, yet it is a convenient illuſtration of the Trinity to thee that art a Chriſtian: And therefore be not too curious in ſearching reaſons, and demonſtrations of the Trinity, but yet accuſtome thy ſelfe to meditations upon the Trinity, in all occaſions, and finde impreſſions of the Trinity, in the three faculties of thine owne ſoule, Thy Reaſon, thy Will, and thy Memory; and ſeeke a reparation of that thy Trinity, by a new Trinity, by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, by hope of him, and by a charitable delivering him to others, in a holy and exemplar life.

Deſcend thou into thy ſelfe, as Abraham aſcended to God, and admit thine owne expoſtulations, as God did his. Let thine own conſcience tell thee not onely thy open and evident rebellions againſt God, but even the immoralities, and incivilities that thou doſt towards men, in ſcandalizing them, by thy ſins; And the abſurdities that thou committeſt againſt thy ſelfe, in ſinning againſt thine owne reaſon; And the uncleanneſſes, and conſequently the treachery that thou committeſt againſt thine owne body; and thou ſhalt ſee, that thou hadſt been not onely in better peace, but in better ſtate, and better health, and in better reputation, a better friend, and better company, if thou hadſt ſinned leſſe; becauſe ſome of thy ſins have been ſuch as have violated the band of friendſhip; and ſome ſuch as have made thy company and converſation dangerous, either for tentation, or at leaſt for defamation. Tell thy ſelfe that thou art the Judge, as Abraham told God that he was, and that if thou wilt judge thy ſelfe, thou ſhalt ſcape a ſeverer judgement. He told God that he was Judge of all the earth; Judge all that earth that thou art; Judge both thy kingdomes, thy ſoule and thy body; Judge all the Provinces of both kingkingdomes, all the ſenſes of thy body, and all the faculties of thy ſoule, and thou ſhalt leave nothing for the laſt Judgement. Mingle not the juſt and the unjuſt together; God did not ſo; Doe not thinke good and bad all one; Doe not think alike of thy ſins, and of thy good deeds, as though when Gods grace had quickned them, ſtill thy good works were nothing, thy prayers nothing, thine almes nothing in the ſight and acceptation of God: But yet ſpare not the wicked for the juſt, continue not in thy beloved ſin, becauſe thou makeſt God amends ſome other way. And when all is done, as in God towards Abraham, his mercy was above all, ſo after all, Miſerere animæ tuæ, Be mercifull to thine owne ſoule; And when the effectuall Spirit of God hath ſpoken peace and comfort, and ſealed a reconciliation to God, to thy ſoule, reſt in that bleſſed peace, and enter into no ſuch new judgement with thy ſelfe againe, as ſhould overcome thine own Mercy, with new diſtractions, or new ſuſpitions that thy Repentance was not accepted, or God not fully reconciled unto thee. God, becauſe he judges all the earth, cannot doe wrong; If thou judge thy earth and earthly affections ſo, as that thou examine clearly, and judge truly, thou doſt not doe right, if thou extend not Mercy to thy ſelfe; if thou receive not, and apply not cheerfully and confidently to thy ſoul, that pardon and remiſſion of all thy ſins, which the holy Ghoſt, in that bleſſed ſtate, hath given thee commiſſion to pronounce to thine owne ſoul, and to ſeale with his ſeale.

A B C D E

SERM. XLIII.

Preached at S. Dunſtans upon Trinity-Sunday. 1624.

MAT. 3. 17.

And lo, A voyce came from heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleaſed.

IT hath been the cuſtome of the Chriſtian Church to appropriate certaine Scriptures to certaine Dayes, for the celebrating of certaine Myſteries of God, or the commemorating of certaine benefits from God: They who conſider the age of the Chriſtian Church, too high or too low, too ſoone or too late, either in the cradle, as it is exhibited in the Acts of the Apoſtles, or bed-rid in the corruptions of Rome, either before it was come to any growth, when Perſecutions nipped it, or when it was ſo over-growne, as that proſperity and outward ſplendor ſwelled it, They that conſider the Church ſo, will never finde a good meaſure to direct our religious worſhip of God by, for the outward Liturgies, and Ceremonies of the Church. But as ſoon as the Chriſtian Church had a conſtant eſtabliſhment under Chriſtian Emperours, and before the Church had her tympany of worldly proſperity under uſurping Biſhops, in this outward ſervice of God, there were particular Scriptures appropriated to particular dayes. Particular men have not liked this that it ſhould be ſo: And yet that Church which they uſe to take for their patterne, (I meane Geneva) as ſoone as it came to have any convenient eſtabliſhment by the labours of that Reverend man, who did ſo much in the rectifying thereof, admitted this cuſtome of celebrating certaine times, by the reading of certaine Scriptures. So that in the pure times of the Church, without any queſtion, and in the corrupter times of the Church, without any infection, and in the Reformed times of the Church, without any ſuſpition of back-ſliding, this cuſtome hath beene retained, which our Church hath retained; and according to which cuſtome, theſe words have been appropriated to this day, for the celebrating thereof, And lo, A voice came, &c.

Diviſio.

In which words we have pregnant and juſt occaſion to conſider, firſt, the neceſſity of the Doctrine of the Trinity; Secondly, the way and meanes by which we are to receive our knowledge and underſtannding of this myſtery; And thirdly, the meaſure of this knowledge, knowledge, How much we are to know, or to inquire, in that unſearchable myſtery: The Quid, what it is; the Quomodo, How we are to learne it; and the Quantum, How farre we are to ſearch into it, will be our three Parts. We conſider the firſt of theſe, the neceſſity of that knowledge to a Chriſtian, by occaſion of the firſt Particle, in the Text, And; A Particle of Connexion, and Dependance; and we ſee by this Connexion, and Dependance, that this revealing, this manifeſtation of the Trinity, in the text, was made preſently after the Baptiſme of Chriſt; and that intimates, and inferres, That the firſt, and principall duty of him, who hath ingrafted himſelf into the body of the Chriſtian Church, by Baptiſme, is to informe himſelfe of the Trinity, in whoſe name he is Baptized. Secondly, in the meanes, by which this knowledge of the Trinity is to be derived to us, in thoſe words, (Lo, a voyce came from heaven, ſaying) we note the firſt word, to be a word of Correction, and of Direction; Ecce, Behold, leave your blindneſſe, look up, ſhake off your ſtupidity, look one way or other; A Chriſtian muſt not goe on implicitely, inconſiderately, indifferently, he muſt look up, he muſt intend a calling: And then, Ecce againe, Behold, that is, Behold the true way; A Chriſtian muſt not thinke he hath done enough, if he have been ſtudious, and diligent in finding the myſteries of Religion, if he have not ſought them the right way: Firſt, there is an Ecce corrigentis, we are chidden, if we be lazy; And then, there is an Ecce dirigentis, we are guided if we be doubtfull. And from this, we fall into the way it ſelfe; which is, firſt, A voyce, There muſt be ſomething heard; for, take the largeſt Spheare, and compaſſe of all other kinds of proofes, for the myſteries of Religion, which can be propoſed, Take it firſt, at the firſt, and weakeſt kinde of proofe, at the book of creatures, (which is but a faint knowledge of God, in reſpect of that knowledge, with which we muſt know him) And then, continue this firſt way of knowledge, to the laſt, and powerfulleſt proofe of all, which is the power of miracles, not this weake beginning, not this powerfull end, not this Alpha of Creatures, not this Omega of miracles, can imprint in us that knowledge, which is our ſaving knowledge, nor any other meanes then a voyce; for this knowing is beleeving, And, how ſhould they beleeve, except they heare? ſayes the Apoſtle. It muſt be Vox, A voyce, And Vox de cœlis, A voyce from heaven: For, we have have had voces de terra, voyces of men, who have indeed but diminiſhed the dignity of the Doctrine of the Trinity, by going about to prove it by humane reaſon, or to illuſtrate it by weak and low compariſons; And we have had voces de Inferis, voyces from the Devill himſelfe, in the mouthes of many Heretiques, blaſphemouſly impugning this Doctrine; Wee have had voces de profundis, voyces fetched from the depth of the malice of the Devill, Heretiques; And voces de medio, voyces taken from the ordinary ſtrength of Morall men, Philoſophers; But this is vox de Excelſis, onely that voyce that comes from Heaven, belongs to us in this myſtery: And then laſtly, it is vox dicens, a voyce ſaying, ſpeaking, which is proper to man, for nothing ſpeaks but man; It is Gods voyce, but preſented to us in the miniſtery of man; And this is our way; To behold, that is, to depart from our own blindneſſe, and to behold a way, that is ſhewed us; but ſhewed us in the word, and in the word of God, and in that word of God, preached by man. And after all this, we ſhall conſider the meaſure of this knowledge, in thoſe laſt words, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; For, in that word, Meus, My, there is the Perſon of the Father; In the Filius, there is the Perſon of the Son; and in the Hic eſt, This is, there is the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, for that is the action of the Holy Ghoſt, in that word, He is pointed at, who was newly baptized, and upon whom the Holy Ghoſt, in the Dove, was deſcended, and had tarried. But we ſhall take thoſe words in their order, when we come to them.

1 Part. Firſt then, we noted the neceſſity of knowing the Trinity, to be pregnantly intimated in the firſt word, Et, And: This connects it to the former part of the hiſtory, which is Chriſts Baptiſme, and preſently upon that Baptiſme, this manifeſtation of the holy Trinity. Conſider a man, as a Chriſtian, his firſt Element is Baptiſme, and his next is Catechiſme; and in his Catechiſme, the firſt is, to beleeve a Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt. There are in this man, this Chriſtian, Tres nativitates, ſayes S. Gregory, three births; one, Per generationem, ſo we are borne of our naturall mother; one Per regenerationem, ſo we are borne of our ſpirituall Mother, the Church, by Baptiſme; and a third, Per Reſurrectionem, and ſo we are borne of the generall Mother of us all, when the earth ſhall be delivered, not of twins, but of millions, when ſhe ſhall empty her ſelfe of all her children,

A children, in the Reſurrection. And theſe three Nativities our Saviour Chriſt Jeſus had; Of which three, Hodie alter ſalvatoris natalis, ſayes S. Auguſtine, This day is the day of Chriſts ſecond birth, that is, of his Baptiſme. Not that Chriſt needed any Regeneration; but that it was his abundant goodneſſe, to ſanctifie in his perſon, and in his exemplar action, that Element, which ſhould be an inſtrument of our Regeneration in Baptiſme, the water, for ever. Even in Chriſt himſelfe, Honoratior ſecunda, ſayes that Father, The ſecond birth, which he had at his Baptiſme, was the more honourable birth; for, Ab illa ſe, Pater qui putabatur, Ioſeph excuſat, At his firſt birth, Ioſeph, his reputed Father, did not avow him for his Son; In hac ſe, Pater qui non putabatur, inſinuat, At this his ſecond birth, God, who was not known to be his Father before, declares that now: Ibi laborat ſuſpicionibus Mater, quia profeſſioni deerat Pater, There the Mothers honour was
B in queſtion, becauſe Ioſeph could not profeſſe himſelfe the Father of the childe; Hic honoratur genetrix, quia filium Divinitas proteſtatur, Here her honour is repaired, and magnified, becauſe the God-head it ſelfe, proclaimes it ſelfe to be the Father.

If then, Chriſt himſelfe choſe to admit an addition of dignity at his Baptiſme, who had an eternall generation in heaven, and an innocent conception without ſin, upon earth, let not us undervalue that dignity, which is afforded us by Baptiſme, though our children be borne within the Covenant, by being borne of Chriſtian Parents; for the Covenant gives them Ius ad rem, a right to Baptiſme; children of Chriſtian Parents may claime Baptiſme, which aliens to Chriſt cannot doe; but yet they may not leave out Baptiſme: A man may be within a generall pardon, and yet have no benefit by it, if he ſue it not out, if he plead it not; a childe may have right to Baptiſme, and yet be without the benefit of it, if it be neglected.

Chriſt began at Baptiſme; Naturall things he did before; He fled into Ægypt, to C preſerve his life from Herods Perſecution, before: And a miraculous thing he did before; He overcame in diſputation, the Doctors in the Temple, at twelve yeares old; but yet, neither of theſe neither, before his Circumciſion, which was equivalent to Baptiſme, to this purpoſe; but before he accepted, or inſtituted Baptiſme, he did ſome naturall, and ſome miraculous things. But his ordinary work which he came for, his preaching the Goſpel, and thereby raiſing the frame for our ſalvation, in his Church, he began not, but after his Baptiſme: And then, after that, it is expreſly and immediatly recorded, That when he came out of the waters, he prayed; and then, the next thing in the hiſtory is, that he faſted, and upon that, his tentation in the wilderneſſe. I meane no more in this, but this, That no man hath any intereſt in God, to direct a prayer unto him, how devoutly ſoever, no man hath any aſſurance of any effect of his endeavours in a good life, how morally holy ſoever, but in relation to his Baptiſme, in that ſeale of the Covenant,
D by which he is a Chriſtian: Chriſt took this Sacrament, his Baptiſme, before he did any other thing; and he took this, three yeares before the inſtitution of the other Sacrament of his body and blood: So that the Anabaptiſts obtrude a falſe neceſſity upon us, that we may not take the firſt Sacrament, Baptiſme, till we be capable of the other Sacrament too; for, firſt in nature, Priùs naſcimur, quàm paſcimur, we are borne before we are fed; and ſo, in Religion, we are firſt borne into the Church, (which is done by Baptiſme) before we are ready for that other food, which is not indeed milk for babes, but ſolid meat for ſtronger digeſtions.

They that have told us, that the Baptiſme, that Chriſt took of Iohn, was not the ſame Baptiſme, which we Chriſtians take in the Church, ſpeak impertinently; for Iohn was ſent by God to baptize; and there is but one Baptiſme in him. It is true, that S. Auguſtine calls Iohns Baptiſme, Præcurſorium miniſterium, as he was a fore-runner of Chriſt, John 1.6.
E his Baptiſme was a fore-running Baptiſme; It is true, that Iuſtin Martyr calls Iohns Baptiſme, Euangelicæ gratiæ præludium, A Prologue to the grace of the Goſpel; It is true, that more of the Fathers have more phraſes of expreſſing a difference between the Baptiſme of Iohn, and the Baptiſme of Chriſt: But all this is not De eſſentia, but De modo, Not of the ſubſtance of the Sacrament, which is the waſhing of our ſoules in the blood of Chriſt, but the difference was in the relation; Iohn baptized In Chriſtum moriturum, Into Chriſt, who was to dye, and we are baptized In Chriſtum mortuum, Into Chriſt who is already dead for us. Damaſcen expreſſes it fully, Chriſtus baptizatur ſuo Baptiſmo: Chriſt was baptized with his own Baptiſme; It was Iohns Baptiſme, and yet it was Chriſts too. And ſo we are baptized with his Baptiſme, and there neither is, nor was any other; And that Baptiſme is to us, Ianua Eccleſia, as S. Auguſtine cals it, The Doore of the Church, at that we enter, And Inveſtitura Chriſtianiſmi, The inveſting of Chriſtianity, as S. Bernard cals it, There we put on Chriſt Jeſus; And, (as he, whom wee may be bold to match with theſe two floods of ſpirituall eloquence, for his Eloquence, that is Luther expreſſes it) Puerpera regni Cælorum, The Church in Baptiſme, is as a Woman delivered of child, and her child is the Kingdome of Heaven, and that kingdome ſhe delivers into his armes who is truly Baptized. This Sacrament makes us Chriſtians; this denominates us, both Civilly, and Spiritually; there we receive our particular names, which diſtinguiſh us from one another, and there we receive that name, which ſhall diſtinguiſh us from the Nations, in the next World; at Baptiſme wee receive the name of Chriſtians, and there we receive our Chriſtian names. A Acts 11.26. When the Diſciples of Chriſt, in generall, came to be called Chriſtians, wee finde. It was a name given upon great deliberation, Barnabas had Preached there; who was a good Man, and full of the Holy Ghoſt, and of faith, himſelfe. But he went to fetch Paul too, a Man of great gifts, and power in Preaching; and both they continued a yeare Preaching in Antioch, and there, firſt of all, the Diſciples were called Chriſtians: Before they were called Fideles, and Fratres, and Diſcipuli; The Faithfull, and the Brethren, and the Diſciples, and (as S. Chryſoſtome ſayes) De via, Men that were in the way; for, all the World beſides, were beſide him, who was The Way, the Truth, and the Life. But, (by the way) we may wonder, what gave S. Chryſoſtome occaſion of that opinion or that conjecture, ſince in the Eccleſiaſtique Story (I thinke) there is no mention of that name, attributed to the Chriſtians: And in the Acts of the Apoſtles, it is named but once; when Acts 9.2. Saul deſired Letters to Damaſcus, to puniſh them, whom he found to be of That way. Where we may note alſo, the zeale of S. Paul, (though then, in a wrong cauſe) againſt them, who were of That way, that is, That way inclined; And our ſtupidity, who ſtartle not at thoſe men, who are not onely inclined another way, a croſſe way, but labour peſtilently to incline others, and hope confidently to ſee all incline that way againe. Here then at Antioch, they began to be called Chriſtians; not onely out of Cuſtome, but, as it may ſeeme, out of decree. For, if there belong any credit to that Councell, which the Apoſtles are ſaid to have held at Antioch, (of which Councell there was a Copy, whether true or falſe, in Origens Library, within two hundred yeares after Chriſt) one Canon in that Councell is, Vt credentes in Ieſum, quos tunc vocabant Galilæos, vocarentur Chriſtiani, That the followers of Chriſt, who, till then, were called Galileans, ſhould then be called Chriſtians. There, in generall, we were all called Chriſtians; but, in particular, I am called a Chriſtian, becauſe I have put on Chriſt, in Baptiſme. B C Iornus in Act 11.20.

was

Now, in conſidering the infinite treaſure which we receive in Baptiſme, inſinuated before the text, That the Heavens opened, that is, The myſteries of Religion are made acceſſible to us, we may attaine to them; And then, The Holy Ghoſt deſcends, (And he is a Comforter, whileſt we are in Ignorance, and he is a Schoolemaſter to teach us all truths) And he comes as a Dove, that is, Brings peace of conſcience with him, and he reſts upon us as a Dove, that is, Requires ſimplicity, and an humble diſpoſition in us, That not onely as Elias opened and ſhut Heaven, Vt pluviam aut emitteret, aut teneret, That he might poure out or withhold the raine; but (as that Father, S. Chryſoſtome purſues it) Ita apertum, ut ipſe conſcendas, & alios, ſi velles, tecum levares, Heaven is ſo opened to us in baptiſme, as that we our ſelves may enter into it, and by our good life, lead others into it too; As we conſider, I ſay, what we have received in Baptiſme, ſo, if we be not onely Dealbati Chriſtiani, (as S. Auguſtine ſpeaks) White-lim'd Chriſtians, Chriſtians on the out-ſide, we muſt conſider what we are to doe upon all this. We are baptized, In plena & adulta Trinitate, ſayes S. Cyprian, not in a Father without a Son, nor in either, or both, without a Holy Ghoſt, but in the fulneſſe of the Trinity: And this myſtery of the Trinity, is Regula fidei, ſayes S. Hierom, It is the Rule of our faith, this onely regulates our faith, That we beleeve aright of the Trinity; It is Dogma noſtræ Religionis, ſayes S. Baſil, As though there were but this one Article; It is, ſayes he, the foundation, the ſumme, it is all the Chriſtian Religion, to beleeve aright of the Trinity. By this wee are diſtinguiſhed from the Jews, who accept no plurality of Perſons; And by this we are diſtinguiſhed from the Gentiles, who make as many ſeverall perſons, as there are ſeverall powers, and attributes belonging to God. Our Religion, our holy Philoſophy, our learning, as it is rooted in Chriſt, ſo it is not limited, not determined in Chriſt alone; wee are not baptized in his D E

name

A name alone, but our ſtudy muſt be the whole Trinity; for, he that beleeves not in the Holy Ghoſt, as well as in Chriſt, is no Chriſtian: And, as that is true which S. Auguſtine ſayes, Nec laborioſius aliquid quæritur, nec periculoſius alicubi erratur, As there is not ſo ſteepy a place to clamber up, nor ſo ſlippery a place to fall upon, as the doctrine of the Trinity; ſo is that alſo true which he addes, Nec fructuoſius inveniturr, There is not ſo fulfilling, ſo accompliſhing, ſo abundant an Article as that of the Trinity, for it is all Chriſtianity. And therefore let us keepe our ſelves to that way, of the manifeſtation of the Trinity, which is revealed in this text; and that way is our ſecond part.

We muſt neceſſarily paſſe faſter through the branches of this part, then the Dignity of the ſubject, or the fecundity of the words will well admit; but the clearneſſe of the order muſt recompence the ſpeed and diſpatch. Firſt then, in this way here is an Ecce, An awaking, an Alarum, a calling us up, Ecce, Behold. Firſt, an Ecce correctionis, A voyce of B chiding, of rebuking. If thou lye ſtill in thy firſt bed, as thou art meerely a Creature, and thinkeſt with thy ſelfe, that ſince the Lilly labours not, nor ſpins, and yet is gloriouſly cloathed, ſince the Fowles of the Heavens ſow not, nor reape, and yet are plentifully fed, thou mayeſt do ſo, and thou ſhalt bee ſo; Ecce animam, Behold thou haſt an immortall ſoule, which muſt have ſpirituall food, the Bread of life, and a more durable garment, the garment of righteouſneſſe, and cannot be empriſoned and captivated to the compariſon of a Lilly that ſpins not, or of a Bird that ſowes not. If thou thinke thy ſoule ſufficiently fed, and ſufficiently cloathed at firſt, in thy baptiſme, That that Manna, and thoſe cloathes ſhall laſt thee all thy pilgrimage, all thy life, That ſince thou art once Baptized, thou art well enough, Ecce fermentum, take heed of that leaven of the Phariſees, Take heed of them that put their confidence in the very act and character of the Sacrament, and truſt to that: for there is a Confirmation belongs to every mans Baptiſme; not C any ſuch Confirmation as ſhould intimate an impotency, or inſufficiency in the Sacrament, but out of an obligation, that that Sacrament layes upon thee, That thou art bound to live according to that ſtipulation and contract, made in thy behalfe, at thy receiving of that Sacrament; there belongs a Confirmation to that Sacrament, a holy life, to make ſure that ſalvation, ſealed to thee at firſt. So alſo, if thou thinke thy ſelfe ſafe, becauſe thou haſt left that leaven, that is, Traditions of men, and liveſt in a Reformed, and Orthodox Church, yet, Ecce Paradiſum, Behold Paradiſe it ſelfe, even in Paradiſe, the bed of all eaſe, yet there was labour required; ſo is there required diligence, and a laborious holineſſe, in the right Church, and in the true Religion. If thou thinke thou knoweſt all, becauſe thou underſtandeſt all the Articles of faith already, and all the duties of a Chriſtian life already, yet Ecce ſcalam, Behold the life of a Chriſtian is a Iacobs Ladder, and till we come up to God, ſtill there are more ſteps to be made, more way to bee gone. D Briefly, to the moſt learned, to him that knowes moſt, To the moſt ſanctified, to him that lives beſt, here is an Ecce correctionis, there is a farther degree of knowledge, a farther degree of goodneſſe, propoſed to him, then he is yet attained unto.

So it is an Ecce correctionis, an Ecce inſtar ſtimuli, God by calling us up to Behold, rebukes us becauſe wee did not ſo, and provokes us to doe ſo now: It is alſo an Ecce directionis, an Ecce inſtar lucernæ, God by calling us up to Behold, gives us a light whereby wee may doe ſo, and may diſcerne our way: whomſoever God cals, to him hee affords ſo much light, as that, if he proceed not by that light, hee himſelfe hath winked at that light, or blow out that light, or ſuffered that light to waſt, and goe out, by his long negligence. God does not call man with an Ecce, To behold him, and then hide himſelfe from him; he does not bid him looke, and then ſtrike him blinde. We are all borne blinde at firſt; In Baptiſme God gives us that Collyrium, that eye-ſalve, by E which we may ſee, and actually by the power of that medicine, we do all ſee, more then the Gentiles do. But yet, Ecce trabs in oculo, ſayes Chriſt: Behold there is a beame in our eye, that is, Naturall infirmities. But for all this beame, when Chriſt bids us behold, we are able to ſee, by Chriſts light, our owne imperfections; though we have that beame, yet we are able to ſee that we have it. And when this light which Chriſt gives us, (which is his firſt grace) brings us to that, then Chriſt proceeds to that which followes there, Projice trabem, Caſt out the beame that is in thine eye, and ſo we become able by that ſucceeding grace, to overcome our former impediments: If Chriſt bid us behold, he gives us light; if he bid us caſt out the beame, he gives us ſtrength. There is an Ecce motus, caſt upon Zachary, Behold thou ſhalt be dumbe, God puniſhed Zacharies incredulity with dumb-

2 Part.

Ecce Correctionis.

Mat. 7. 4.

Luke 1. 20.

dumbneſſe; But there is never an Ecce cæcus, Behold thou ſhalt be blinde, That God ſhould call man to ſee, and then blow out the candle, or not ſhew him a candle, if he were in utter darkneſſe; for this is an Ecce directionis, an Ecce lucerna, God cals, and he directs, and lightens our paths; never reproach God ſo impiouſly as to ſuſpect, that when he cals, he does not meane that we ſhould come. A

Vox. Well then, with what doth he enlighten thee? Why, Ecce vox, Behold a voyce, ſaying. Now, for this voyce in the Text, by whom it was heard, as alſo by whom the Dove that deſcended was ſeen, is ſometimes diſputed, and with ſome perplexity amongſt the Fathers. Some thinke it was to Chriſt alone, becauſe two of the Euangeliſts, Mark and Luke, record the words in that phraſe, Tu es filius, not as we reade it in our Text, This is, but, Thou art my beloved Sonne: But ſo, there had been no uſe, neither of the Dove, nor of the voyce; for Chriſt himſelfe lacked no teſtimony, that he was that Sonne. Some thinke it was to Chriſt, and Iohn Baptiſt, and not to the company; Becauſe, ſay they, The myſterie of the Trinity was not to be preſented to them, till a farther and maturer preparation; And therefore they obſerve, that the next manifeſtation of Chriſt, and ſo of the Trinity, by a like voyce, was almoſt three years after this, in his Transfiguration, after he had manifeſted this doctrine by a long preaching amongſt them; And yet, even then, it was but to his Apoſtles, and but to a few of them neither, and thoſe few forbidden to publiſh too; and how long? Till his reſurrection; when by that reſurrection he had confirmed them, then it was time to acquaint them with the Doctrine of the Trinity. But for the Doctrine of the Trinity, as myſterious as it is, it is inſinuated and conveyed unto us, even in the firſt verſe of the Bible, in that extraordinary phraſe, Creavit Dii, Gods, Gods in the plurall, created heaven and earth; There is an unity in the action, it is but Creavit, in the ſingular, and yet there is a plurality in the perſons, it is not Deus, God, but Dij, Gods: The Doctrine of the Trinity, is the firſt foundation of our Religion, and no time is too early for our faith, The ſimpleſt may beleeve it; and all time is too early for our reaſon, The wiſeſt cannot underſtand it. And therefore, as Chryſoſtome is well followed in his opinion, ſo he is well worthy to be followed, That both the Dove was ſeen, and the voyce was heard by all the company: for, neither was neceſſary to Chriſt himſelfe; And the voyce was not neceſſary to Iohn Baptiſt, becauſe the ſigne which was to governe him, was the Dove; He that ſent me, ſaid, upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit come down, and tarry ſtill, it is he that baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt. But to the company, both voyce and Dove were neceſſary: for, if the voyce had come alone, they might have thought, that that teſtimony had been given of Iohn, of whom they had, as yet, a far more reverend opinion, then of Chriſt; And therefore, God firſt points out the perſon, and by the Dove declares him to all, which was He, and then, by that voyce declares farther to them all, what He was. This benefit they had by being in that company, they ſaw, and they heard things conducing to their ſalvation; for, though God worke more effectually upon thoſe particular perſons in the Congregation, who, by a good uſe of his former graces, are better diſpoſed then others, yet to the moſt graceleſſe man that is, if he be in the Congregation, God vouchſafes to ſpeake, and would be heard. B C D

Mat. 17.

Via Creaturæ. They that differ in the perſons, who heard it, agree in the Reaſon; All they heard it, in all their opinions, to whom it was neceſſary to heare it; And it is neceſſary to all us, to have this meanes of underſtanding and beleeving, to heare. Therefore God gives to all that ſhall be ſaved, vocem, his voyce. We conſider two other wayes of imprinting the knowledge of God in man; firſt in a darke and weake way, the way of Nature, and the book of Creatures; and ſecondly, in that powerfull way, the way of Miracles. But theſe, and all between theſe, are uneffectuall without the Word. When David ſayes of the Creatures, There is no ſpeech nor language, where their voyce is not heard, (the voyce of the Creature is heard over all) S. Paul commenting upon thoſe words, ſays, They have heard, All the world hath heard; but what? The voyce of the Creature; now that is true, ſo much all the world had heard then, and does heare ſtill: But the hearing that S. Paul intends there, is ſuch a hearing as begets faith, and that the voyce of Creature reaches not to. The voyce of the Creature alone, is but a faint voyce, a low voyce; nor any voyce, till the voyce of the Word inanimate it; for then when the Word of God hath taught us any myſtery of our Religion, then the booke of Creatures illuſtrates, and eſtabliſhes, and cheriſhes that which we have received by faith, in hearing the Word: As a E

Pſal. 19. 3.
Rom. 10. 17.

ſtick

A ſtick bears up, and ſuccours a vine, or any plant, more precious then it ſelfe, but yet gave it not life at firſt, nor gives any nouriſhment to the root now: ſo the aſſiſtance of reaſon, and the voyce of the Creature, in the preaching of Nature, works upon our faith, but the roote, and the life is in the faith it ſelfe; The light of nature gives a glimmering before, and it gives a reflexion after faith, but the meridianall noone is in faith.

Now, if we conſider the other way, the way of power, Miracles, no man may ground his beliefe upon that, which ſeems a Miracle to him. Moſes wrought Miracles, and Pharaohs inſtruments wrought the like: we know, theirs were no true Miracles, and we know Moſes were; but how do we know this? By another voyce, by the Word of God, who cannot lie: for, for thoſe upon whom thoſe Miracles were to worke on both ſides, Moſes, and they too, ſeemed to the beholders, diverſly diſpoſed to do Miracles. One Rule in diſcerning, and judging a Miracle, is, to conſider whether it be done in confirmation of B a neceſſary Truth: otherwiſe it is rather to be ſuſpected for an Illuſion, then accepted for a Miracle. The Rule is intimated in Deuteronomy, where, though a Prophets prophecy do come to paſſe, yet, if his end be, to draw to other gods, he muſt be ſlaine. What Miracles ſoever are pretended, in confirmation of the inventions of Men, are to be neglected. God hath not carried us ſo low for our knowledge, as to Creatures, to Nature, nor ſo high, as to Miracles, but by a middle way, By a voyce.

Via miracu-lorum.

Deut. 13.

But it is Vox de Cœlis, A voyce from heaven. S. Baſil applying (indeed with ſome wreſting and detorting) thoſe words in the 29 Pſalme, verſ. 3. (The voyce of the Lord is upon the waters, the God of glory maketh it to thunder) to this Baptiſme of Chriſt, he ſayes, Vox ſuper aquas Ioannes, The words of Iohn at Chriſts Baptiſme, were this voyce that David intends; And then that manifeſtation which God gave of the Trinity, (whatſoever it were) altogether, that was the Thunder of his Majeſty: ſo this Thunder then, was C vox de Cœlis, A voyce from heaven; And in this voyce the perſon of the Father was manifeſted, as he was in the ſame voyce at his Transfiguration. Since this voyce then is from Heaven, and is the Fathers voyce, we muſt looke for all our knowledge of the Trinity from thence. For, (to ſpeake of one of thoſe perſons, of Chriſt) no man knoweth the Sonne, but the Father; Who then, but he, can make us know him? If any knew it, yet it is an unexpreſſible myſtery, no man could reveale it; Fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven; If any could reveale it to us, yet none could draw us to beleeve it; No man can come to me, except the Father draw him: So that all our voyce of Direction muſt be from thence, De Cœlis, from Heaven.

De Cœlis.

Mat. 11. 27.

Mat. 16. 17.

Iohn 6. 44.

We have had Voces de Inferis, voyces from Hell, in the blaſphemies of Heretiques; That the Trinity was but Cera extenſa, but as a Rolle of Wax ſpread, or a Dough Cake rolled out, and ſo divided unto perſons: That the Trinity was but a neſt of Boxes, a leſſer
D in a greater, and not equall to one another; And then, that the Trinity was not onely three perſons, but three Gods too; So far from the truth, and ſo far from one another have Heretiques gone, in the matter of the Trinity; and Cerinthus ſo far, in that one perſon, in Chriſt, as to ſay, That Jeſus, and Chriſt, were two diſtinct perſons; and that into Jeſus, who, ſayes he, was the ſonne of Ioſeph, Chriſt, who was the Spirit of God, deſcended here at his Baptiſme, and was not in him before, and withdrew himſelfe from him againe, at the time of his Paſſion, and was not in him then; ſo that he was not borne Chriſt, nor ſuffered not being Chriſt; but was onely Chriſt in his preaching, and in his Miracles; and in all the reſt, he was but Jeſus, ſayes Cerinthus.

De Inferis.

We have had Voces de Inferis, de profundis, from the depth of hell, in the malice of Heretiques, And we have had Voces de medio, voyces from amongſt us, Inventions of men, to expreſſe, and to make us underſtand the Trinity, in pictures, and in Compariſons: All
E which (to contract this point) are apt to fall into that abuſe, which we will onely note in one; At firſt, they uſed ordinarily to expreſſe the Trinity in foure letters, which had no ill purpoſe in it at firſt, but was a religious eaſe for their memories, in Catechiſmes: The letters were Π, and Τ, and Α, and Π; The Π was Πατηρ, and the Τ was Τιὸς, and the two laſt belonged to the laſt perſon, for Α was Αγιον, and Π was Πνεῦμα, and ſo there was Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt, as if we ſhould expreſſe it in F, and S, and H, and G. But this came quickly thus far into abuſe, as that they thought, there could belong but three letters, in that picture, to the three perſons; and therefore allowing ſo many to Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt, they tooke the laſt letter P, for Petrus, and ſo made Peter head of the Church, and equall to the Trinity. So that for our knowledge, in this myſteri-

De Medio.

ous

ous doctrine of the Trinity, let us evermore reſt, in voce de cælis, in that voice which came from heaven. A

Dicens. But yet it is Vox dicens, A voice ſaying, ſpeaking, A voice that man is capable of, and may be benefited by. It is not ſuch a voice as that was, (which came from heaven too)

Iohn 12.28. when Chriſt prayed to God to glorifie his name, That the people ſhould ſay, ſome, that it was a Thunder, ſome that it was an Angel that ſpake. They are the ſons of Thunder, and they are the Miniſteriall Angels of the Church, from whom we muſt heare this voice of heaven: Nothing can ſpeak, but man: No voice is underſtood by man, but the voice of man; It is not Vox dicens, That voyce ſayes nothing to me, that ſpeaks not; And therefore howſoever the voice in the Text were miraculouſly formed by God, to give this glory, and dignity to this firſt manifeſtation of the Trinity in the perſon of Chriſt, yet becauſe he hath left it for a permanent Doctrine neceſſary to Salvation, he hath left ordinary means for the conveying of it; that is, The ſame voice from heaven, the ſame word B of God, but ſpeaking in the miniſtery of man. And therefore for our meaſure of this knowledge, (which is our third and laſt Part) we are to ſee, how Chriſtian men, whoſe office it hath been to interpret Scriptures, that is, how the Catholike Church hath underſtood theſe words, Hic eſt Filius, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

3 Part. How we are to receive the knowledge of the Trinity, Athanaſius hath expreſſed as far as we can goe; Whoſoever will be ſaved, hee muſt beleeve it; but the manner of it is not expoſed ſo far as to his beliefe. That queſtion of the Prophet, Quis enarrabit? who ſhall declare this? carries the anſwer with it, Nemo enarrabit, No man ſhall declare it. But a manifeſtation of the Beeing of the Trinity, they have alwayes apprehended in theſe words, Hic eſt Filius, This is my beloved Son. To that purpoſe therefore, we take, firſt, the words to be expreſſed by this Euangeliſt S. Matthew, as the voyce delivered them, rather then as they are expreſſed by S. Marke, and S. Luke; both which have it thus, Tu es, C Thou art my beloved Son, and not Hic eſt, This is; They two being onely carefull of the ſenſe, and not of the words, as it fals out often amongſt the Euangeliſts, who differ oftentimes in recording the words of Chriſt, and of other perſons. But where the ſame voice ſpake the ſame words againe, in the Transfiguration, there all the Euangeliſts expreſſe

2 Pet. 1.17. it ſo, Hic eſt, This is, and not Tu es, Thou art my beloved Son; And ſo it is, where S. Peter makes uſe by application of that hiſtory, it is Hic eſt, and not Tu es. So that this Hic eſt, This man, deſigns him who hath that marke upon him, that the holy Ghoſt was deſcended upon him, and tarried upon him; for ſo far went the ſigne of diſtinction given to Iohn, The holy Ghoſt was to deſcend and tarry: Manet, ſayes S. Hierome, The holy Ghoſt tarryes upon him, becauſe he never departs from him, ſed operatur quando Chriſtus vult, & quomodo vult, The holy Ghoſt works in Chriſt, when Chriſt will, and as Chriſt will; and ſo the holy Ghoſt tarryed not upon any of the Prophets; They ſpoke what hee D would, but he wrought not when they would. S. Gregory objects to himſelfe, that there was a perpetuall reſidence of the holy Ghoſt upon the faithfull, out of thoſe words of Chriſt, The Comforter ſhall abide with you for ever; But as S. Gregory anſwers himſelfe, This is not a plenary abiding, and ſecundùm omnia dona, in a full operation, according to all his gifts, as he tarried upon Chriſt: Neither indeed is that promiſe of Chriſts to particular perſons, but to the whole body of the Church.

Now this reſidence of the holy Ghoſt upon Chriſt, was his unction; properly it was that, by which he was the Meſſias, That he was anointed above his fellowes; And therefore S. Hierome makes account, that Chriſt received his unction, and ſo his office of Meſſias, at this his Baptiſme, and this deſcending of the holy Ghoſt upon him: And he thinks it therefore, becauſe preſently after Baptiſme, he went to preach in the Synagogue, Eſay 61.1. and he took for his Text thoſe words of the Prophet Eſay, The Spirit of the Lord is upon E me, becauſe he hath anointed me, that I ſhould preach the Goſpel to the poore. And when he had read the Text, he began his Sermon thus, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. But we may be bold to ſay, that this is miſtaken by S. Hierome; for the unction of Chriſt by the holy Ghoſt, by which he was anointed, and ſealed into the office of Meſſias, was in the over-ſhadowing of the holy Ghoſt in his conception, in his aſſuming our nature: This Deſcending now at his baptiſme, and this Reſidence, were onely to declare, That there was a holy Ghoſt, and that holy Ghoſt dwelt upon this perſon.

Eſt. It is Hic, This perſon; And it is Hic eſt, This is my Son; It is not onely Fuit, He was my Son, when he was in my boſome, Nor onely Erit, He ſhall be ſo, when he ſhall return to my right hand againe; God does not onely take knowledge of him in Glory; But Eſt, He is ſo now; now in the exinanition of his perſon, now in the evacuation of his Glory, now that he is preparing himſelfe to ſuffer ſcorne, and ſcourges, and thornes, and nailes, in the ignominious death of the Croſſe, now he is the Son of the glorious God; Chriſt is not the leſſe the Son of God for this eclipſe.

to

Hic eſt, This is he, who for all this lowneſſe is ſtill as high as ever he was, and that height is, Eſt Filius, He is the Son. He is not Servus, The Servant of God; or not that onely, for he is that alſo. Behold my ſervant, (ſayes God of him, in the Prophet) I will ſtay upon him, mine elect, in whom my ſoule delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him, and he ſhall bring forth judgement to the Gentiles. But Chriſt is this Servant, and a Son too: And not a Son onely; for ſo we obſerve divers filiations in the Schoole; Filiationem veſtigii, That by which all creatures, even in their very being, are the ſons of God, as Iob cals God Pluviæ patrem, The father of the raine; And ſo there are other filiations, other wayes of being the ſons of God. But Hic eſt, This perſon is, as the force of the Article expreſſes it; and preſſes it, Ille Filius, The Son, That Son, which no ſon elſe is, neither can any elſe declare how he is that which he is. Filius. Eſay 41.1.

This perſon then is ſtill The Son, And Meus Filius, ſayes God, My Son. He is the ſonne of Abraham, and ſo within the Covenant; as well provided by that inheritance, as the ſon of man can be naturally. He is the Son of a Virgin, conceived without generation, and therefore ordained for ſome great uſe. He is the ſon of David, and therefore royally deſcended; But his dignity is in the Filius meus, that God avows him to be his Son; for, Vnto which of the Angels ſaid he at any time, Thou art my ſonne? But to Chriſt he ſayes in the Prophet, I have called thee by thy name: And what is his name? Meus es tu, Thou art mine. Quem à me non ſeparat Deitas, ſayes Leo, non dividit poteſtas, non diſcernit æternitas: Mine ſo, as that mine infiniteneſſe gives me no roome nor ſpace beyond him, hee reaches as far as I, though I be infinite; My Almightineſſe gives me no power above him, he hath as much power as I, though I have all; My eternity gives me no being before him, though I were before all: In mine Omnipotence, in mine Omnipreſence, in mine Omnieſſence, he is equall partner with me, and hath all that is mine, or that is my ſelfe, and ſo he is mine. Meus. Heb. 1.5.

My Son, And My beloved Son; but ſo we are all, who are his ſons, Delicia ejus, ſayes Solomon, His delight, and his contentment is to be with the ſons of men. But here the Article is extraordinarily repeated againe, Ille dilectus, That beloved Son, by whom, thoſe, who were neither beloved, nor Sons, became the beloved Sons of God; For, there is ſo much more added, in the laſt phraſe, In quo complacui, In whom I am well pleaſed. Dilectus. Prov. 8.31.

Now, theſe words are diverſly read. S. Auguſtine ſayes, ſome Copies that he had ſeen, read them thus, Ego hodie genui te, This is my beloved Son, this day have I begotten him: And with ſuch Copies, it ſeemes, both Iuſtin Martyr, and Irenæus met, for they reade theſe words ſo, and interpret them accordingly: But theſe words are miſplaced, and miſ-transferred out of the ſecond Pſalme, where they are. And as they change the words, and in ſtead of In quo complacui, In whom I am well pleaſed, reade, This day have I begotten thee; S. Cyprian addes other words, to the end of theſe, which are, Hunc audite, Heare him: Which words, when theſe words were repeated at the Transfiguration, were ſpoken, but here, at the Baptiſme, they were not, what Copy ſoever miſled S. Cyprian, or whether it were the failing of his own memory. But S. Chryſoſtome gives an expreſſe reaſon, why thoſe words were ſpoken at the Transfiguration, and not here: Becauſe, ſaies he, Here was onely a purpoſe of a Manifeſtation of the Trinity, ſo farre, as to declare their perſons, who they were, and no more: At the Tranſ-figuration, where Moſes and Elias appeared with Chriſt, there God had a purpoſe to preferre the Goſpel above the Law, and the Prophets, and therefore in that place he addes that, Hunc audite, Heare him, who firſt fulfills all the Law, and the Prophets, and then preaches the Goſpel. He was ſo well pleaſed in him, as that he was content to give all them, that received him, power to become the Sons of God, too; as the Apoſtle ſayes, By his grace, he hath made us accepted in his beloved. In quo. Eph. 1.6.

Beloved, That you may be ſo, Come up from your Baptiſme, as it is ſaid that Chriſt did; Riſe, and aſcend to that growth, which your Baptiſme prepared you to: And the heavens ſhall open, as then, even Cataractæ cæli, All the windowes of heaven ſhall open, and and raine downe bleſſings of all kindes, in abundance; And the Holy Ghoſt ſhall deſcend upon you, as a Dove, in his peacefull comming, in your ſimple, and ſincere receiving him; And he ſhall reſt upon you, to effect and accompliſh his purpoſes in you. If he rebuke you, (as Chriſt, when he promiſes the Holy Ghoſt, though he call him a Comforter, ſayes, That he ſhall rebuke the world of divers things) yet he ſhall dwell upon you as a Dove, Qua ſi mordet, oſculando mordet, ſayes S. Auguſtine: If the Dove bite, it bites with kiſſing, if the Holy Ghoſt rebuke, he rebukes with comforting. And ſo baptized, and ſo purſuing the contract of your Baptiſme, and ſo crowned with the reſidence of his bleſſed Spirit, in your holy converſation, hee ſhall breathe a ſoule into your ſoule, by that voyce of eternall life, You are my beloved Sonnes, in whom I am well pleaſed.

John 16.7.

SERM. XLIV.

Preached at S. Dunſtanes upon Trinity-Sunday. 1627.

REV. 4.8.

And the foure Beaſts had each of them ſixe wings about him, and they were full of eyes within; And they reſt not day and night, ſaying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

THeſe words are part of that Scripture, which our Church hath appointed to be read for the Epiſtle of this day. This day, which beſides that it is the Lords day, the Sabbath day, is alſo eſpecially conſecrated to the memory, and honour of the whole Trinity. The Feaſt of the Nativity of Chriſt, Chriſtmas day, which S. Chryſoſtome calls Metropolin omnium feſtorum, The Metropolitane feſtivall of the Church, is intended principally to the honour of the Father, who was glorified in that humiliation of that Son, that day, becauſe in that, was laid the foundation, and firſt ſtone of that houſe and Kingdome, in which God intended to glorifie himſelfe in this world, that is, the Chriſtian Church. The Feaſt of Eaſter is intended principally to the honour of the Son himſelfe, who upon that day, began to lift up his head above all thoſe waters which had ſurrounded him, and to ſhake off the chaines of death, and the grave, and hell, in a glorious Reſurrection. And then, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt was appropriated to the honour of the Holy Ghoſt, who by a perſonall falling upon the Apoſtles, that day, inabled them to propagate this Glory of the Father, and this death, and Reſurrection of the Son, to the ends of the world, to the ends in Extention, to all places, to the ends in Duration, to all times.

Now, as S. Auguſtine ſayes, Nullus eorum extra quemlibet eorum eſt, Every Perſon of the Trinity is ſo in every other perſon, as that you cannot think of a Father, (as a Father) but that there falls a Son into the ſame thought, nor think of a perſon that proceeds from others, but that they, from whom he, whom ye think of, proceeds, falls into the ſame thought, as every perſon is in every perſon; And as theſe three perſons are contracted in their eſſence into one God-head, ſo the Church hath alſo contracted the honour belonging to them, in this kinde of Worſhip, to one day, in which, the Father, and Son, and Holy Ghoſt, as they are ſeverally, in thoſe three ſeverall dayes, might bee celebrated joyntly, and altogether. It was long before the Church did inſtitute a particular Feſtivall, to this purpoſe. For, before, they made account, that that verſe, which was upon ſo many occaſions repeated in the Liturgy, and Church Service, (Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt) had a convenient ſufficiency in it, to keep men in a continuall remembrance of the Trinity. But when by that extreame inundation, and increaſe of Arians, theſe notions of diſtinct Perſons in the Trinity, came to be obliterated, and diſcontinued, the Church began to refreſh her ſelfe, in admitting into A to the formes of Common Prayer, ſome more particular notifications, and remembrances of the Trnity; And at laſt, (though it were very long firſt, for this Feſtivall of this Trinity-Sunday, was not inſtituted above foure hundred yeares ſince) they came to ordaine this day. Which day, our Church, according to that peacefull wiſedome, wherewithall the God of Peace, of Unity, and Concord, had inſpired her, did, in the Reformation, retaine, and continue, out of her generall religious tenderneſſe, and holy loathneſſe, to innovate any thing in thoſe matters which might bee ſafely, and without ſuperſtition continued and entertained. For our Church, in the Reformation, propoſed not that for her end, how ſhee might goe from Rome, but how ſhe might come to the Truth; nor to caſt away all ſuch things as Rome had depraved, but to purge away thoſe depravations, and conſerve the things themſelves, ſo reſtored to their firſt good uſe.

B For this day then, were theſe words appointed by our Church; And therefore we are ſure, that in the notion, and apprehenſion, and conſtruction of our Church, theſe words appertaine to the Trinity. In them therefore we ſhall conſider, firſt what, theſe foure creatures were, which are notified, and deſigned to us, in the names, and figures of foure Beaſts; And then, what theſe foure creatures did; Their Perſons, and their Action will be our two Parts of this Text. In each of which we ſhall have three Branches; In the firſt theſe, firſt, ſimply who they were; And then, their qualification as they are furniſhed with wings, Each of them had ſixe wings; And then laſtly, in that firſt Part, what is intended in their eyes, for, They were full of eyes within; And in theſe three, we ſhall determine that firſt Part, The Perſons. And then in the ſecond, our firſt Branch will be, Their Alacrity, their ingenuity, their free and open profeſſion of their zeale to Gods Service; They did it, ſayes the Text, Dicentes, Saying, Publiſhing, Declaring, without diſguiſes or modifications. And our ſecond Branch, Their Aſſiduity, That which they did, they did inceſſantly, They ceaſed not day nor night, ſayes our Text; No occaſionall emergencies, no loſſe, no trouble interrupted their zeale to Gods ſervice. And then the laſt is, that that which they did, firſt with ſo much ingenuity, and then with ſo much aſſiduity; firſt ſo openly, and then ſo conſtantly, was the celebration of the Trinity, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come; Which is the intire body of the Chriſtan Religion; That they profeſt openly, and conſtantly, all the parts of their Religion, are alſo the three Branches, in which we ſhall determine our ſecond Part, Their Action. Diviſio.

C

D First then, for our firſt Branch, in our firſt Part, the Perſons intended in theſe foure creatures, the Apoſtle ſayes, Whatſoever things are written afore time, are written for our learning; But yet, not ſo for our learning, as that we ſhould think alwaies to learne, or alwaies to have a cleare underſtanding of all that is written; for it is added there, That we, through patience, and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope; Which may well admit this Expoſition, that thoſe things which we underſtand not yet, we may hope that we ſhall, and we muſt have patience till we doe. For there may be many places in Scripture, (eſpecially in Propheticall Scripture) which, perchance, the Church of God her ſelfe, ſhall not underſtand, till thoſe Propheſies be fulfilled, and accompliſhed. In the underſtanding of this place, what, or who theſe foure creatures are, there is ſo much difficulty, ſo much perplexity, as that amongſt the interpretations of very Learned, and very Reverend, and very pertinent Expoſitors, it is eaſie to collect thirty ſeverall opinions, thirty ſeverall ſignifications of theſe foure creatures. 1. Part. Perſons. Rom. 15. 4.

E The multiplicity of theſe Interpretations intimates thus much, that that man that believes the Trinity, can ſcarce turne upon any thing, but it aſſiſts, and advances, and illuſtrates that beliefe; As diverſe from one another as their thirty Expoſitions are, they all agree, that be our foure creatures what they will, that which they doe, is to celebrate the Trinity; He that ſeeks proofe for every myſtery of Religion, ſhall meet with much darkneſſe; but he that beleeves firſt, ſhall finde every thing to illuſtrate his faith. And then, this multiplicity of Interpretations intimates thus much more, That ſince wee cannot give Senſum adæquatum, Any ſuch Interpretation of theſe foure creatures, but that another, as probable as it, may be given, it may be ſufficient, and it is beſt, (as in all caſes of like intricacy) to chooſe ſuch a ſenſe, as may moſt advance the generall purpoſe, and intention of the place; which is, in this place, The celebration of the Trinity.

So therefore we ſhall doe. And conſidering that amongſt theſe manifold Expoſitors, A ſome binde themſelves exactly, rigidly, ſuperciliouſly, yea ſuperſtitiouſly to the number of foure, and that therefore theſe foure Creatures muſt neceſſarily ſignifie ſomething, that is limited in the number of foure, no more, no leſſe, (either the foure Monarchies, or the foure Patriarchs, or the foure Doctors of the Church, or the foure Cardinall Vertues, or the foure Elements, or the foure Quarters of the World, into all which, and many more ſuch, rather Alluſions, then Interpretations, theſe various Expoſitors have ſcattered themſelves) And then conſidering alſo that divers others of theſe Expoſitors out of a juſt obſervation, That nothing is more ordinary in this Book of the Revelation, then by a certaine and finite number, to deſigne and ſignifie an uncertaine and infinite, (for, otherwiſe when we are told, that there were twelve thouſand ſealed of every Tribe, wee ſhould know the certaine number of all the Jews that were ſaved, which certainly is not S. Johns purpoſe in that place; but in the greatneſſe of that number, to declare the largeneſſe of B Gods goodneſſe to that people) conſidering I ſay, that divers of theſe Expoſitors, have extended their interpretation beyond the number of foure, we make accompt that we do beſt, if we do both; if we ſtop upon the number of foure, and yet paſſe on to a greater number too. And ſo wee ſhall well do, if we interpret theſe foure Creatures, to bee firſt and principally the foure Euangeliſts, (and that is the moſt common Interpretation of the Ancients) and then enlarge it to all the Miniſters of the Goſpell, which is (for the moſt part) the Interpretation of the Later men. So then, the action being an open and a continuall profeſſion of the whole Chriſtian Religion, in the celebration of the Trinity, which is the diſtinctive Character of a Chriſtian, the perſons that doe this, are all they that conſtitute the Hierarchy, and order of the Church; All they that execute the Miniſtery, and diſpenſation of the Goſpell; which Goſpel is laid downe, and ſettled and eſtabliſhed radically in the foure Euangeliſts; All they are theſe foure Creatures. And farther C we need not carry this firſt branch, which is the Notification of theſe perſons; for, their Qualification is the larger conſideration.

And before we come to their Qualification, in the text, firſt, as they are ſaid to have ſix wings, and then as they are ſaid to be full of eyes, we look upon them, as they are formed, and deſigned to us, in the verſe immediately before the text; where, the firſt of theſe foure Creatures hath the face of a Lion, the ſecond of a Calfe, or an Oxe, the third of a Man, and the fourth of an Eagle. Now, Quatuor animalia ſunt Eccleſiæ Doctores, ſayes S. Ambroſe; Theſe foure Creatures are the Preachers of the Goſpell; that we had eſtabliſhed afore; But then, we adde with S. Ambroſe, Eandem ſignificationem habet primum animal, quod ſecundum, quod tertium, quod quartum; All theſe foure Creatures make up but one Creature; all their qualities concurre to the Qualification of a Miniſter; every Miniſter of God is to have all, that all foure had; the courage of a Lion, the laboriouſneſſe of an Oxe, the D perſpicuity and cleare ſight of the Eagle, and the humanity, the diſcourſe, the reaſon, the affability, the appliableneſſe of a Man. S. Dionys the Areopagite had the ſame conſideration as S. Ambroſe had, before him. He imprints it, he expreſſes it, and extends it thus; In Leone vis indomabilis; In every Miniſter, I looke for ſuch an invincible courage, as ſhould be of proofe, againſt Perſecution, (which is a great) and againſt Preferment, which is a greater temptation; that neither Feares, nor Hopes ſhake his conſtancy; neither his Chriſtian conſtancy, to ſtagger him, nor his Miniſteriall conſtancy, to ſilence him; For this is Vis indomabilis, the courage required in the Miniſter as he is a Lion. And then ſaies that Father; In Bove vis ſalutaris, In every Miniſter, as he is ſaid to be an Oxe, I looke for labour; that he be not ſo over-growne, nor ſtall-fed, that he be thereby lazie; He muſt labour; And then, as the labour of the Oxe is, his labour muſt be imployed upon uſefull and profitable things, things that conduce to the cleering, not the perplexing of E the underſtanding; and to the collecting, the uniting, the fixing, and not the ſcattering, the diſſolving, the pouring out of a fluid, an unſtable, an irreſolved conſcience; things of edification, not ſpeculation; For this is that Vis ſalutaris, which we require in every Miniſter; that he labour at the Plough, and plough the right ground; that he Preach for the ſaving of ſoules, and not for the ſharpning of wits. And then againe, In Aquila vis ſpeculatrix; As the Miniſter is preſented in the notion and quality of an Eagle, we require both an Open eye, and a Piercing eye; Firſt, that he dare looke upon other mens ſins, and be not faine to winke at their faults, becauſe he is guilty of the ſame himſelfe, and ſo, for feare of a recrimination, incurre a prevarication; And then, that he be not ſo dim-ſighted,

that

A that he muſt be faine to ſee all through other mens ſpectacles, and ſo preach the purpoſes of great men, in a factious popularity, or the fancies of new men, in a Schiſmaticall ſingularity; but, with the Eagle, be able to looke to the Sun; to looke upon the conſtant truth of God in his Scriptures, through his Church; For this is Vis ſpeculatrix, the open and the piercing eye of the Eagle. And then laſtly, In homine vis ratiocinatrix; As the Miniſter is repreſented in the notion and quality of a Man, we require a gentle, a ſupple, an appliable diſpoſition, a reaſoning, a perſwaſive diſpoſition; That he doe not alwaies, preſſe all things with Authority, with Cenſures, with Excommunications; That he put not all points of Religion, alwaies upon that one iſſue, Quicunque vult ſalvus eſſe, If you wil be ſaved, you muſt beleeve this, all this, & Qui non crediderit, damnabitur, If you doubt of this, any of this, you are infallibly, neceſſarily damned; But, that he be alſo content to deſcend to mens reaſon, and to worke upon their underſtanding, and their naturall fa-
B culties, as well as their faith, and to give them ſatisfaction, and reaſon (as far as it may be had) in that which they are to beleeve; that ſo as the Apoſtle, though he had authority to command, yet did Pray them in Chriſts ſtead to be reconciled to God, So the Miniſter of God, though (as he is bound to doe) he doe tell them what they are bound to beleeve, yet he alſo tels them, why they are to beleeve it; for this is Vis ratiocinatrix, The holy gentleneſſe and appliableneſſe, implied in that forme of a Man.

And ſo you have this Man compoſed of his foure Elements; this Creature made of theſe foure Creatures; this Miniſter made of a Lion, an Oxe, an Eagle, and a Man; For, no one of theſe, nor all theſe, but one, will ſerve; the Lion alone, without the Eagle, is not enough; it is not enough to have courage and zeale, without cleare ſight and knowledge; Nor enough to labour, except we apply our ſelves to the capacity of the hearer; All muſt have all, or elſe all is diſordered; Zeale, Labour, Knowledge, Gentleneſſe.

C Now beſides theſe generall qualifications, laid downe as the foundation of the text, in the verſe before it, in the text it ſelfe theſe foure Creatures, being firſt the foure Euangeliſts, and conſequently, or by a juſt and faire accommodation, all the Preachers of the Goſpell, which limit themſelves in the doctrine laid downe in the foure Euangeliſts, have alſo wings added unto them; Wings, firſt for their owne behoofe and benefit, and then, wings for the benefit and behoofe of others. They have wings to raiſe themſelves from the earth; that they doe not entangle themſelves in the buſineſſes of this World; but ſtill to keepe themſelves upon the wing, in a Heavenly converſation, ever remembring that they have another Element, then Sea or Land, as men whom Chriſt Jeſus hath ſet apart, and in ſome meaſure made mediatours betweene him, and other men, as his inſtruments of their ſalvation. And then as for themſelves, ſo have they wings for others too, that D they may be alwaies ready to ſuccour all, in all their ſpirituall neceſſities. For as thoſe words are well underſtood by many of the Ancients, To the Woman were given two wings of an Eagle, that is, to the Church were given able and ſufficient Miniſters, to carry and convey her over the Nations: So are thoſe words which are ſpoken of God himſelf, appliable to his Miniſters, that firſt, The Eagle ſtirreth up her neſt, The Preacher ſtirres and moves, and agitates the holy affections of the Congregation, that they ſlumber not in a ſenſeleſneſſe of that which is ſaid, The Eagle ſtirreth up her neſt, and then as it is added there, She fluttereth over her young; The Preacher makes a holy noiſe in the conſcience of the Congregation, and when hee hath awakened them, by ſtirring the neſt, hee caſts ſome claps of thunder, ſome intimidations, in denouncing the judgements of God, and he flings open the gates of Heaven, that they may heare, and look up, and ſee a man ſent by God, with power to infuſe his feare upon them; So ſhe fluttereth over her young; but then, as it followes there, She ſpreadeth abroad her wings; ſhe over-ſhadowes them, ſhe
E enwraps them, ſhe armes them with her wings, ſo as that no other terror, no other fluttering but that which comes from her, can come upon them; The Preacher doth ſo infuſe the feare of God into his Auditory, that firſt, they ſhall feare nothing but God, and then they ſhall feare God, but ſo, as he is God; And God is Mercy; God is Love; and his Miniſter ſhall ſo ſpread his wings over his people, as to defend them from all inordinate feare, from all ſuſpition and jealouſie, from all diffidence and diſtruſt in the mercie of God; which is farther expreſt in that clauſe, which followes in the ſame place, She taketh them and beareth them upon her wings; when the Miniſter hath awakened his flocke by the ſtirring of the neſt, and put them in this holy feare, by this which the Holy Ghoſt cals a Fluttering; and then provided, by ſpreading his wings, that upon this feare there

Ala.

Revel. 12. 14.

Deut. 32. 11.

follow not a deſperation; then he ſets them upon the top of his beſt wings, and ſhewes them the beſt treaſure that is committed to his Stewardſhip, hee ſhewes them Heaven, and God in Heaven, ſanctifying all their croſſes in this World, inanimating all their worldly bleſſings, rayning downe his blood into their emptineſſe, and his balme into their wounds, making their bed in all their ſickneſſe, and preparing their ſeate, where he ſtands ſoliciting their cauſe, at the right hand of his Father. And ſo the Miniſter hath the wings of an Eagle, that every ſoule in the Congregation may ſee as much as hee ſees, that is, a particular intereſt in all the mercies of God, and the merits of Chriſt. A

So then, theſe Miniſters of God have that double uſe of their Eagles wings; firſt, Vt volent ad eſcam, (as it is in Iob) that they may flie up to receive their own food, their inſtructions at the mouth and word of God; And then, Vt ubi cadaver ſit, ibi ſtatim adſit, (as it is in Iob alſo) where the dead are, they alſo may be; That where any lie, Pro mortuis, (as S. Paul ſpeaks) for dead, as good as dead, ready to die, upon their death-bed, they may be ready to aſſiſt them, and to miniſter ſpirituall Phyſick, opportunely, ſeaſonably, proportionably to their ſpirituall neceſſities; That they may powre out upon ſuch ſick ſoules, that name of Ieſus, which is Oleum effuſum, An oyle, and a balme, alwaies powring, and alwaies ſpreading it ſelfe upon all greene wounds, and upon all old ſores; That they may miniſter to one in his hot and peſtilent preſumptions, an Opiat, of Chriſts Triſtis anima, A remembrance, that even Chriſt himſelf had a ſad ſoule towards his death, and a Quare dereliquiſti, ſome apprehenſion, that God, though his God, had forſaken him. And that therefore, no man, how righteous ſoever, may preſume, or paſſe away without feare and trembling; And then, to miniſter to another, in his Lethargies, and Apoplexies, and damps, and inordinate dejections of ſpirit, Chriſts cordials, and reſtoratives, in his Clarifica me Pater, In an aſſurance, that his Father, though he have laid him downe here, whether in an inglorious fortune, or in a diſconſolate bed of ſickneſſe, will raiſe him, in his time, to everlaſting glory. So theſe Eagles are to have wings, to flie Ad cadaver, to the dead, to thoſe that are ſo dying a bodily death, and alſo, where any lie dead in the practiſe and cuſtome of ſinne, to be induſtrious and earneſt in calling them to life againe, ſo as Chriſt did Lazarus, by calling aloud; Not aloud in the eares of other men, ſo to expoſe a ſinner to ſhame, and confuſion of face, but aloud in his own eares, to put home the judgments of God, thereby to plough and harrow that ſtubborn heart, which will not be kneaded, nor otherwiſe reduced to an uprightneſſe. For theſe uſes, to raiſe themſelves to heavenly contemplations, and to make haſte to them that need their aſſiſtance, the Miniſters of God have wings; wings of great uſe; eſpecially now, when there is Coluber in via, A ſnake in every path, a Seducer in every houſe; When as the Devill is buſie, becauſe he knows his time is ſhort, ſo his inſtruments are buſie, becauſe they thinke their time is beginning againe; therefore the Miniſter of God hath wings. B C D

Sex ala. And then, their wings are numbred in our Text; They have ſix wings. For by the conſent of moſt Expoſitors, thoſe whom S. Iohn preſents in the figure of theſe foure Creatures here, and thoſe whom the Prophet Eſay cals Seraphim, are the ſame perſons; The ſame Office, and the ſame Voice is attributed unto thoſe Seraphim there, as unto theſe foure Creatures here; Thoſe as well as theſe, ſpend their time in celebrating the Trinity, and in crying Holy, Holy, Holy. The Holy Ghoſt ſometimes preſents the Miniſters of the Goſpel, as Seraphim in glory, that they might be knowne to be the Miniſters and diſpenſers of the myſteries and ſecrets of God, and to come A latere, From his Councell, his Cabinet, his Boſome. And then on the other ſide, that you might know, that the diſpenſation of theſe myſteries of your ſalvation, is by the hand and means of men, taken from amongſt your ſelves, and that therefore you are not to looke for Revelations, nor Extaſies, nor Viſions, nor Tranſportations, but to reſt in Gods ordinary meanes, he brings thoſe perſons down againe from that glorious repreſentation, as the Seraphim, to creatures of an inferiour, of an earthly nature. For, though it be by the light, and in the quality and capacity of thoſe glorious Seraphim, that the Miniſter of God receives his commiſſion, and inſtructions, his orders, and his faculties, yet the execution of his commiſſion, and the purſuing of his inſtructions towards you, and in your behalfe, is in that nature, and in that capacity, as they have the courage of the Lyon, the laboriouſneſſe of the Oxe, the perſpicuity of the Eagle, and the affability of Man. E

Eſa. 6. 3.

Theſe winged perſons then, (winged for their own ſakes, and winged for yours) theſe Miniſters of God, (thus deſigned by Eſay, as heavenly Seraphim, to procure them reverence

A rence from you, and by S. Iohn, as earthly Creatures, to teach you, how neere to your ſelves, God hath brought the meanes of your Salvation, in his viſible, and ſenſible, in his appliable, and apprehenſible Ordinances) are, in both places, (that of Eſay, and this in our Text) ſaid to have ſix wings; And ſix, to this uſe, in Eſay, with two they cover their face, with two their feete, and with two they flie. They cover their face; Not all over; for then, neither the Prophet there, nor the Euangeliſt here, could have knowne them to have had theſe likeneſſes, and theſe proportions. The Miniſters of God are not ſo covered, ſo removed from us, as that we have not meanes to know them. We know them by their face; that is, by that declaration which the Church hath given of them to us, in giving them their orders, and their power over us; and we know them by their voyce; that is, by their preaching of ſuch doctrine, as is agreeable to thoſe Articles which we have ſuckt in from our infancy. The Miniſters face is not ſo covered with theſe wings,
B as that the people have no meanes to know him; For his calling is manifeſt, and his doctrine is open to proofe and tryall: But they are ſaid to cover their face, becauſe they dare not looke confidently, they cannot looke fully upon the majeſty of the myſteries of God. The Euangeliſts themſelves, and they that ground their doctrine upon them, (all which together, as we have often ſaid, make up theſe foure perſons, whom Eſay cals Seraphim, and S. Iohn inferiour Creatures) have not ſeene all that belongs to the nature and eſſence of God, not all in the attributes and properties of God, not all in the decrees and purpoſes of God, no, not all in the execution of thoſe purpoſes and decrees; we do not know all that God intends to do; we do not know all that God intends in that which he hath done. Our faces are covered from having ſeene the manner of the eternall generation of the Sonne, or of the eternall proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt, or the manner of the preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament. The Miniſters of God are ſo far o-
C pen-faced towards you, as that you may know them, and try them by due meanes to be ſuch; and ſo far open-faced towards God, as that they have ſeene in him and received from him, all things neceſſary for the ſalvation of your ſoules; But yet, their faces are covered too; ſome things concerning God, they have not ſeene themſelves, nor ſhould goe about to reveale, or teach to you.

And it is not onely their faces that are covered, but their feet too. Their covered faces are eſpecially directed to God; denoting their modeſty in forbearing unrevealed myſteries: Their covered feet are eſpecially directed to you; They ſhould not be curious in ſearching into all Gods actions, nor you in ſearching into all theirs; Their waies, their actions, their lives, their converſations ſhould not be too curiouſly ſearched, too narrowly pryed into, too ſeverely interpreted by private men, as they are but ſuch, becauſe, in ſo doing, the danger and the detriment is thus far likely to fall upon your ſelves, that when D the infirmities of the Miniſter, and your infirmities, that is, their faults, and your uncharitable cenſures of their faults, meet together, that may produce this ill effect, that perſonall matters may be caſt upon the miniſteriall function, and ſo the faults of a Miniſter be imputed to the Miniſtery; and by ſuch a prejudice, and conceit of one mans ill life, you may loſe the taſte and comfort of his, and perchance of others good Doctrine too. All that is covered ſhall be made manifeſt, ſayes Chriſt; You ſhall know all their faults, and you ſhal know them then, when it ſhall moſt confound them, and leaſt indanger you, when it ſhall aggravate their torment, and do you no harme; that is, at the day of Judgement. In the meane time, becauſe it might hurt you to know their faults, God hath covered their feet ſo far, as that he would not have your looking upon their feet, divert you from depending upon their mouths, as long as by his permiſſion they ſit in Moſes chaire, and execute Gods Commiſſion. If they imploy their middle wings, which were ordai-
E ned for them to flie withall, if they do their duties in breaking the bread of life, and diſpenſing the Word and Sacraments, and aſſiſting the ſicke in body, and ſicke in ſoule, though God have, in part, covered their faces, that is, not imparted to them ſuch gifts, or ſuch an open ſight into deep points, as perchance you deſire, yet he hath covered their feet too; he hath for your ſakes removed their faults from your ſurvey, as you are but private men. Take the benefit of their two middle wings, their willingneſſe to aſſiſt you with their labours, and in their other foure wings, be not too curious, too cenſorious, too ſevere, either their face-wings, that is, the depth of their learning, or their feet-wings, that is, the holineſſe of their lives.

They have ſix wings to theſe ſeverall purpoſes; and ſinguli ſenas, ſayes our Text, every Singuli ſenas every one of them hath six wings. For, for the first couple, the face-wings, howsoever some of the Ministers of God have gifts above their fellowes, howsoever they have gained the names of Doctores Seraphici, and Doctores illuminati, (with which titles they abound in the Roman Church) yet their faces are in part covered, they must not think they see all, understand all; The learnedst of all hath defects, even in matter of learning. And for the second couple, the feet-wings, howsoever some may make shift for the reputation of being more pure, more sanctified then their fellowes, yet the best of them all need a covering for their feet too; All their steps, all their actions will not endure examination. But for the last couple, however there may be some intimation given of a great degree of perfection in matter of knowledge, and in matter of manners, (for in those creatures which are mentioned in the first of Ezek. (which also signifie the Ministers of God) there are but foure wings spoken of, so that there are no face-wings, they have an abundant measure of learning and knowledge, And the Cherubim (which may also signifie the same persons) have but two wings, no covering upon face or feet; to denote, that some may be without any remarkable exception in their doctrine, and in their manners too) yet for the last couple, the two middle wings, by which they fly, and addresse themselves to every particular soule that needs their spirituall assistance, the Ministers of God are never in any figure but represented. Better they wanted face-wings, and feet-wings, (discretion to cover either their insufficiency in knowledge, or their infirmity in manners) then that they should want their middle-wings, that is, a disposition to apply themselves to their flock, and to be alwayes ready to distribute the promises of God, and the seals of his promises, the Word and Sacraments, amongst them. And this may be conveniently intended in their wings.

Oculi. Now as they were Alati, they were Oculati in our Text; They have eyes as well as wings; They fly, but they know whither they fly. In the doctrine of Implicite Obedience in the Roman Church, To beleeve as the Church beleeves, or as that Confessor which understands not what the Church beleeves, makes you beleeve the Church beleeves, In their doctrine of that which they call Blind Obedience, that is, to pursue and execute any commandement of any superiour, without any consideration; In both these there are wings enow, but there are no eyes: They fly from hence to Rome, and Roman Jurisdictions, and they fly over hither againe, after Statutes, after Proclamations, after Banishments iterated upon them; So that here are wings enow, but they lack those eyes by which they should discerne betweene Religion and Rebellion, betweene a Traytor and a Martyr. And to take our consideration from them, and reflect upon our selves, They that fly high at matter of mysterie, and leave out matter of edification, They that fly over Sea for plat-formes of discipline, and leave out that Church that bred them, They that fly close to the service of great mens affections and purposes, and doe the work of God coldly, and faintly, They may be Alati, but they are not Oculati, They may fly high, and fly fast, and fly far, and fly close in the wayes of preferment, but they see not their end; Not onely not the end that they shall come to, but not the end that they are put upon; not onely not their owne ends, but not their ends whose instruments they are. Those birds whose eyes are cieled, and sowed up, fly highest; but they are made a prey: God exposes not his servants to such dangers; He gives them wings, that is, meanes to doe their office; but eyes too, that is, discretion and religious wisdome how to doe it.

Pleni. And this is that which they seeme to need most, for their wings are limited, but their eyes are not; Six wings, but full of eies, sayes our Text. They must have eyes in their tongues; They must see, that they apply not blindly and inconsiderately Gods gracious promises to the presumptuous, nor his heavy judgements to the broken hearted. They must have eyes in their eares; They must see that they harken neither to a superstitious sense from Rome, nor to a seditious sense of Scriptures from the Separation. They must have eyes in their hands; They must see that they touch not upon any such benefits or rewards, as might bind them to any other master then to God himselfe. They must have eyes in their eyes, spirituall eyes in their bodily eyes; They must see that they make a charitable construction of such things as they see other men do, and this is that fulnesse of eyes which our Text speaks of.

Intus. But then especially, sayes our Text, They were full of eyes Within: The fulnesse, the abundance of eyes, that is, of providence and discretion in the Ministers of God, was intimated

A mated before: In the 6. verſe it was ſaid, That they were full of eyes before and behind: that is, circumſpect and provident for all that were about them, and committed to them. But all is determined and ſummed up in this, that They were full of eyes within. For as there is no profit at all (none to me, none to God) if I get all the world and loſe mine own ſoul, ſo there is no profit to me, if I win other mens ſoules to God, and loſe mine owne. All my wings ſhall doe me no good, all mine eyes before and behind ſhall doe me no good, if I have no proſpect inward, no eyes within, no care of my particular and perſonall ſafety.

And ſo we have done with our firſt generall part, the Perſons denoted in theſe foure creatures, and the duties of their miniſtery; in which we have therefore inſiſted thus long, that having ſo declared and notified to you our duties, you alſo might be the more willing to heare of your owne duties, as well as ours, and to joyne with us in this Open,
B and Inceſſant, and Totall profeſſion of your Religion, which is the celebration of the Trinity in this acclamation, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which is, which was, and which is to come.

To come therefore now to the ſecond Part, and taking the foure Euangeliſts to be principally intended here, but ſecundarily the Preachers of the Goſpel too, and not onely they, but in a faire extenſion and accommodation the whole Church of God, firſt we noted their Ingenuitie and openneſſe in the profeſſion of their Religion, they did it Dicentes, Saying, declaring, publiſhing, manifeſting their devotion, without any diſguiſe, any modification. 2 Part.

In that ſong of the three Children in the Fornace, O all ye works of the Lord, &c. there is nothing preſented ſpeechleſſe: To every thing that is there, there is given a tongue; Not onely all thoſe creatures which have all a Beeing, but even Privations, Pri-
C vations that have no Beeing, that are nothing in themſelves, (as the Night, and Darkneſſe) are there called upon to bleſſe the Lord, to praiſe him, and magnifie him for ever. But towards the end of that ſong, you may ſee that ſervice drawne into a narrower compaſſe; You may ſee to whom this ſpeech, and declaration doth principally appertaine; For after he had called upon Sun, and Moone, and Earth, and Sea, and Fowles, and Fiſhes, and Plants, and Night, and Darkneſſe, to praiſe the Lord, to bleſſe him, and magnifie him for ever, Then he comes to O ye children of men, Primogeniti Dei, Gods beloved creatures, his eldeſt ſons, and firſt-borne, in his intention; And then, Domus Iſrael, O ye houſe of Iſrael, you whom God hath not onely made men, but Chriſtian men, not onely planted in the World, but in the Church, not onely indued with Reaſon, but inſpired with Religion: And then again, O ye Prieſts of the Lord, O ye Servants of the Lord, thoſe of Gods portion, not onely in the Church, but of the Church, and appointed by him to deale between him
D and other men: And then alſo, O ye ſpirits and ſoules of the righteous, thoſe whom thoſe inſtruments of God had powerfully and effectually wrought upon, upon thoſe eſpecially, thoſe men, thoſe Chriſtian men, thoſe Prieſts, thoſe ſanctified men, upon thoſe he calls to bleſſe the Lord, to praiſe him, and magnifie him for ever. This obligation the holy Ghoſt laies upon us all, that the more God does for us, the more we ſhould declare it to other men; God would have us tell him our ſins; God would have us tell other men his mercies; It was no excuſe for Moſes that he was of uncircumciſed lips; No excuſe for Ieremy, to ſay, O Lord God, behold I cannot ſpeak, for I am a child. Credidi, propterea locutus ſum, is Davids forme of argument, I beleeved, and therefore I ſpake. If thou doſt not love to ſpeak of God, and of his benefits, thou doſt not beleeve in God, nor that thoſe benefits came from him. Dicentes. Exod. 5. 12. Ier. 1. 6.

Remember that when thou waſt a child, and preſented to God in Baptiſme, God
E gave thee a tongue in other mens mouthes, and inabled thee, by them, to eſtabliſh a covenant, a contract between thy ſoule, and him then. And therefore ſince God ſpake to thee, when thou couldſt not heare him, in the faith of the Church; ſince God heard thee when thou couldſt not ſpeak to him, in the mouth of thy ſureties; Since that God that created thee was Verbum, The Word, (for, Dixit, & facta ſunt, God ſpake, and all things were made) Since that God that redeemed thee was Verbum, The Word, (for The Word was made fleſh) Since that God that ſanctified thee is Verbum, The Word, (for therefore S. Baſil calls the holy Ghoſt Verbum Dei, quia interpres Filii, He calls the holy Ghoſt the Word of God, becauſe as the Son is the Word, becauſe he manifeſts the Father unto us, ſo the holy Ghoſt is the Word, becauſe he manifeſts the Son unto us, and enables us to apprehend, apprehend, and apply to our ſelves, the promiſes of God in him) ſince God, in all the three Perſons, is Verbum, The Word to thee, all of them working upon thee, by ſpeaking to thee, Be thou Verbum too, A Word, as God was; A Speaking, and a Doing Word, to his glory, and the edification of others. If the Lord open thy lips, (and except the Lord open them, it were better they were luted with the clay of the grave) let it be to ſhew forth his praiſe, and not in blaſphemous, not in ſcurrile, not in prophane language. If the Lord open thy hand, (and if the Lord open it not, better it were manacled with thy winding ſheet) let it be, as well to diſtribute his bleſſings, as to receive them. Let thy mouth, let thy hand, let all the Organs of thy body, all the faculties of thy ſoule, concurre in the performance of this duty, intimated here, and required of all Gods Saints, Vt dicant, That they ſpeak, utter, declare, publiſh the glory of God. For this is that Ingenuity, that Alacrity, which conſtitutes our firſt Branch. And then the ſecond is the Aſſiduity, the conſtancy, the inceſſantneſſe, They reſt not day nor night. A B

Aſſiduitas.

But have the Saints of God no Vacation? doe they never ceaſe? nay, as the word imports, Requiem non habent, They have no Reſt. Beloved, God himſelfe reſted not, till the ſeventh day; be thou content to ſtay for thy Sabbath, till thou maiſt have an eternall one. If we underſtand this, of reſt meerly, of bodily reſt, the Saints of God are leaſt likely to have it, in this life; For, this life, is (to them eſpecially, above others) a buſineſſe, and a perplext buſineſſe, a warfare, and a bloody warfare, a voyage, and a tempeſtuous voyage. If we underſtand this reſt to be Ceſſation, Intermiſſion, the Saints in heaven have none of that, in this ſervice. It is a labour that never wearies, to ſerve God there. As the Sun is no wearier now, then when he firſt ſet out, ſix thouſand yeares ſince; As that Angel, which God hath given to protect thee, is not weary of his office, for all thy perverſeneſſes, ſo, howſoever God deale with thee, be not thou weary of bearing thy part, in his Quire here in the Militant Church. God will have low voyces, as well as high; God will be glorified De profundis, as well as In excelſis; God will have his tribute of praiſe, out of our adverſity, as well as out of our proſperity. And that is it which is intimated, and eſpecially intended in the phraſe which followes, Day and night. For, it is not onely that thoſe Saints of God who have their Heaven upon earth, doe praiſe him in the night; according to that of S. Ierome, Sanctis ipſe ſomnus, oratio; and that of S. Baſil, Etiam ſomnia Sanctorum preces ſunt; That holy men doe praiſe God, and pray to God in their ſleep, and in their dreames; nor only that which David ſpeaks of, of riſing in the night, and fixing ſtationary houres for prayer; But even in the depth of any ſpirituall night, in the ſhadow of death, in the midnight of afflictions and tribulations, God brings light out of darkneſſe, and gives his Saints occaſion of glorifying him, not only in the dark, (though it be dark) but from the dark, (becauſe it is dark.) This is a way unconceiveable by any, unexpreſſible to any, but thoſe that have felt that manner of Gods proceeding in themſelves, That be the night what night it will, be the oppreſſion of what Extention, or of what Duration it can, all this retards not their zeal to Gods ſervice; Nay, they ſee God better in the dark, then they did in the light; Their tribulation hath brought them to a nearer diſtance to God, and God to a clearer manifeſtation to them. And ſo, to their Ingenuity, that they profeſſe God, and their Religion openly, is added an Aſſiduity, that they do it inceſſantly; And then alſo, an Integrity, a Totality, that they doe not depart with, nor modifie in any Article of their Religion; which is intirely, and totally enwrapt in this acclamation of the Trinity, (which is our third, and laſt Branch in this laſt Part) Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. C D

Trinitas.

For the Trinity it ſelf, it is Lux, but Lux inacceſſibilis; It is light, for a child at Baptiſme profeſſes to ſee it; but then, it is ſo inacceſſible a light, as that if we will make naturall reaſon our Medium, to diſcerne it by, it will fall within that of David, Poſuit tenebras latibulum ſuum, God hath made darkneſſe his ſecret places; God, as God, will be ſeen in the creature; There, in the creature he is light; light acceſſible to our reaſon; but God, in the Trinity, is open to no other light, then the light of faith. To make repreſentations of men, or of other creatures, we finde two wayes; Statuaries have one way, and Painters have another: Statuaries doe it by Subſtraction; They take away, they pare off ſome parts of that ſtone, or that timber, which they work upon, and then that which they leave, becomes like that man, whom they would repreſent: Painters doe it by Addition; Whereas the cloth, or table preſented nothing before, they adde colours, and lights, and ſhadowes, and ſo there ariſes a repreſentation. Sometimes we repreſent God by Subſtraction,

Pſal. 18. 11. E

ction,

A ction, by Negation, by saying, God is that, which is not mortall, not passible, not moveable: Sometimes we present him by Addition; by adding our bodily lineaments to him, and saying, that God hath hands, and feet, and eares, and eyes; and adding our affections, and passions to him, and saying, that God is glad, or sorry, angry, or reconciled, as we are. Some such things may be done towards the representing of God, as God; But towards the expressing of the distinction of the Persons in the Trinity, nothing.

Then when Abraham went up to the great sacrifice of his son, he left his servants, and his Asse below: Though our naturall reason, and humane Arts, serve to carry us to the hill, to the entrance of the mysteries of Religion, yet to possesse us of the hill it selfe, and to come to such a knowledge of the mysteries of Religion, as must save us, we must leave our naturall reason, and humane Arts at the bottome of the hill, and climb up only by the light, and strength of faith. Dimitte me quia luceſcit, sayes that Angel that wrastled with B Iacob; Let me go, for it growes light. If thou think to see me by day-light, sayes that Angel, thou wilt be deceived; If we think to see this mystery of the Trinity, by the light of reason, Dimittemus, we shall lose that hold which we had before, our naturall faculties, our reason will be perplext, and infeebled, and our supernaturall, our faith not strengthened that way. Gen. 22. 5. Gen. 32. 26.

Those testimonies, and proofes of the Trinity, which are in the old Testament, are many, and powerfull in their direct line; But they are truly, for the most part, of that nature, as that they are rather Illustrations, and Confirmations to him that believed the Trinity before, then Arguments of themselves, able to convince him that hath no such Preconception. We that have been catechized, and brought up in the knowledge of the Trinity, finde much strength, and much comfort, in that we finde, in the first line of the Bible, that Bara Elohim, Creavit Dii, Gods created heaven and earth; In this, that there is the name C of God in the plurall, joyned to a Verb of the singular number, we apprehend an intimation of divers persons in one God; We that believe the Trinity before, finde this, in that phrase, and form of speech; The Jews, which believe not the Trinity, find no such thing. So when we finde that plurall phrase, Faciamus hominem, That God sayes, Let us, us in the plurall, make man, we are glad to finde such a plurall manner of expressing God, by the Holy Ghost, as may concurre with that, which we believed before; that is, divers persons in one God. To the same purpose also is that of the Prophet Esay, where God sayes, Whom shall I send, or who shall goe for us? There we discerne a singularity, one God, (Whom shall I send?) and a plurality of persons too, (Who shal go for us?) But what man, that had not been catachized in that Doctrine before, would have conceived an opinion, or established a faith in the Trinity, upon those phrases in Moses, or in Esay, without other evidence? Certainly, it was the Divine purpose of God, to reserve and keep this mystery of the Tri- D nity, unrevealed for a long time, even from those, who were, generally, to have their light, and instruction from his word; They had the Law, and the Prophets, and yet they had no very clear notions of the Trinity. For, this is evident, that in Trismegistus, and in Zoroaster, and in Plato, and some other Authors of that Ayre, there seeme to be clearer, and more literall expressings of the Trinity, then are in all the Prophets of the old Testament. We take the reason to be, that God reserved the full Manifestation of this mystery, for the dignifying, and glorifying of his Gospel. And therefore it is enough that we know, that they of the old Testament, were saved by the same faith in the Trinity, that we are; How God wrought that faith in them, amongst whom he had established no outward meanes for the imprinting of such a faith, let us not too curiously inquire. Let us be content, to receive our light there, where God hath been pleased to give it; that is, in those places of the new Testament, which admit no contradiction, nor disputation. As where Christ saies, E Goe, and teach all Nations, baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And where it is said, There are three that beare witnesse in heaven; The Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one. There are Obumbrations of the Trinity, in Nature, and Illustrations of the Trinity, in the old Testament; but the Declaration, the Manifestation thereof, was reserved for the Gospel. Esay 6. 8. Mat. 28. 19. 1 John 5. 7.

Now, this place, this Text, is in both, It is in the old, and it is in the new Testament; here, and in Esay; And in both places, agreed by all Expositors, to be a confession of the Trinity, in that three-fold repetition, Holy, holy, holy. Where (by the way) you may have use of this note; that in the first place, (in the Prophet Esay) we have a faire intimation, that that use of Subalternation in the service of God, of that, which we have called Antiphones, phones, and Reſponſaries in the Church of God, (when in that ſervice, ſome things are ſaid or ſung by one ſide of the Congregation, and then anſwered by the other, or ſaid by one man, and then anſwered by the whole Congregation) that this manner of ſerving God, hath a pattern from the practiſe of the Triumphant Church. For there, the Seraphim cryed to one another, or (as it is in the Originall) this Seraphim to this, Holy, Holy, Holy; ſo that there was a voice given, and an anſwer made, and a reply returned in this ſervice of God. And as the patterne is in the Triumphant Church for this holy manner of praiſing God, ſo in the practiſe therof, the Militant preſcribes; for it hath been alwaies in uſe. And therefore, that religious vehemence of Damaſcen, (ſpeaking of this kind of ſervice in the Church in his time) may be allowed us, Hymnum dicemus, etſi Dæmones diſrumpantur; How much ſoever it anger the devil, or his deviliſh inſtruments of ſchiſme and ſedition, we wil ſerve God in this manner, with holy cheerefulneſs, with muſique, with Antiphones, with Reſponſaries, of which we have the patterne from the Triumphant, and the practiſe from the Primitive Church. A B

Now as this Totality, and Integrity of their Religion which they profeſſe, firſt, with an Ingenuity (openly) & then, with an Aſſiduity, (inceſſantly) hath (as it were) this dilatation, this extention of God into three Perſons, (which is the character and ſpecification of the Chriſtian Religion; for no Religion, but the Chriſtian, ever inclined to a plurality of Perſons in one God) ſo hath it alſo ſuch a contracting of this infinite Power into that one God, as could not agree with any other Religion then the Chriſtian, in either of thoſe two eſſentiall circumſtances; firſt, that that God ſhould be Omnipotent, and then, that he ſhould be Eternall; The Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

Omnipotens. All the Heathen gods were ever ſubordinate to one another; That which one god could not, or would not do, another would, and could; And this oftentimes, rather to anger another god, then to pleaſe the party. And then there was a Surveyor, a Controller over them all, which none of them could reſiſt, nor intreat, which was their Fatum, their Deſtiny. And ſo, in theſe ſubſidiary gods, theſe occaſional gods, there could be no Omnipotence, no Almightineſſe. Our God is ſo Omnipotent, Almighty ſo, as that his Power hath no limitation but his owne Will. Nihil impoſſibile niſi quod non vult, He can do whatſoever he will do; And he can do more then that; For he could have raiſed ſons to Abraham, out of ſtones in the ſtreet. C

Tertul.

Æternus. And as their gods were not Omnipotent, ſo neither were they Eternall. They knew the hiſtory, the generation, the pedegree of all their gods; They knew where they were born, and where they went to ſchoole, (as Iuſtin Martyr ſayes, that Eſculapius, and Apollo their gods of Phyſick, learnt their Phyſick of Chiron; ſo that the Scholars were gods, and their Maſters none) and they knew where their gods were buried; They knew their Parents, and their Uncles, their Wives and their Children, yea their Baſtards, and their Concubines; ſo far were they from being eternall gods; But if we remit and ſlacken this conſideration of Eternity (which is never to have had beginning) & conſider only Perpetuity (which is never to have end) theſe gods were not capable of a perpetuall Honour, an Honour that ſhould never end. For, we ſee that of thoſe three hundred ſeveral Iupiters, which were worſhiped in the World, before Chriſt came, though the World abound at this day with Idolatry, yet there is not one of thoſe Idols, not one of thoſe three hundred Iupiters celebrated with any ſolemnity, no, not knowne in any obſcure corner of the World. They were mortall before they were Gods; They are dead in their Perſons: and they were mortall when they were Gods; They are dead in their Worſhip. In reſpect of Eternity (which is neceſſary in a God) Perpetuity is but Mobilis Imago (as Plato cals it) a faint and tranſitory ſhadow of Eternity; and Pindarus makes it leſſe; Idolum Æternitatis; Perpetuity is but an Idol compared to eternity; And, an Idol is nothing, ſayes the Apoſtle. Our ſoules have a bleſſed perpetuity, our ſoules ſhall no more ſee an end, then God, that hath no Beginning; and yet our ſoules are very far from being eternal. But thoſe gods are ſo far from being eternall, as that, conſidered as Gods (that is, celebrated with Divine worſhip) they are not perpetual. But God is our God for ever and ever; ever, without beginning; and ever, without end. My dayes are like a ſhadow that fadeth, and I am withered like graſſe; but thou O Lord doſt remaine for ever, and thy remembrance from generation to generation; It is a remaining, and it is a remembrance; which words denote a former being. So that God, our God, and onely he, is eternall. D E

Pſal. 48. 14.
Pſal 102. 11.

To conclude all, with that which muſt be the concluſion of all at laſt, this Eternity of our our God is expreſſed here in a phraſe which deſignes and preſents the laſt Judgement, that is, which was, and is, and is to come. For, though it be Qui fuit, Which was, and Qui eſt, Which is, yet it is not Qui futurus, Which is to be; but Qui venturus, Which is to come; that is, to come to Judgement; as it is in divers other places of this Book, Qui venturus, Which is to come. For, though the laſt judiciary Power, the finall Judgement of the World, be to be executed by Chriſt, as he is the Son of Man, viſibly, apparantly in that nature, yet Chriſt is therein as a Delegate of the Trinity; It is in the vertue and power of that Commiſſion, Data eſt mihi omnis poteſtas; He hath all Power, but that Power that he hath as the Son of man, is given him. For, as the Creation of the World was, ſo the Judgement of the World ſhal be the Act of the whole Trinity. For if we conſider the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, in both his Natures, as he redeemed us, God and Man, ſo it cannot be ſaid of him, that He was; that is, that he was eternally; for there was a time, when that God, was not that man; when that Perſon, Chriſt, was not conſtituted. And therefore this word, in our Text, Which was, (which is alſo true of the reſt) is not appropriated to Chriſt, but intended of the whole Trinity. So that it is the whole Trinity that is to come, To come to Judgement.

And therefore, let us reverently embrace ſuch proviſions, and ſuch aſſiſtances as the Church of God hath ordained, for retaining and celebrating the Trinity, in this particular contemplation, as they are to come to Judgement. And let us at leaſt provide ſo far, to ſtand upright in that Judgement, as not to deny, nor to diſpute the Power, or the Perſons of thoſe Judges. A man may make a pety larceny high treaſon ſo; If being called in queſtion for that leſſer offence, he will deny that there is any ſuch Power, any ſuch Soveraigne, any ſuch King, as can call him in queſtion for it, he may turne his whipping into a quartering. At that laſt Judgement, we ſhall be arraigned for not cloathing, not viſiting, not harbouring the poore; For, our not giving is a taking away; our withholding, is a withdrawing; our keeping to our ſelves, is a ſtealing from them. But yet, all this is but a pety larceny, in reſpect of that high treaſon, of infidelity, of denying or doubting of the diſtinct Perſons of the holy, bleſſed, and glorious Trinity. To beleeve in God, one great, one univerſall, one infinite power, does but diſtinguiſh us from beaſts; For there are no men that do not acknowledge ſuch a Power, or that do not believe in it, if they acknowledge it; Even they that acknowledge the devill to be God, beleeve in the devill. But that which diſtinguiſhes man from man, that which onely makes his Immortality a bleſſing, (for, even Immortality is part of their damnation that are damned, becauſe it were an eaſe, it were a kind of pardon to them to be mortall, to be capable of death, though after millions of generations) is, to conceive aright of the Power of the Father, of the Wiſdome of the Son, of the Goodneſſe of the Holy Ghoſt; Of the Mercie of the Father, of the Merits of the Son, of the Application of the Holy Ghoſt; Of the Creation of the Father, of the Redemption of the Son, of the Sanctification of the Holy Ghoſt. Without this, all notions of God are but confuſed, all worſhip of God is but Idolatry, all confeſſion of God is but Atheiſme; For ſo the Apoſtle argues, When you were without Chriſt, you were without God. Without this, all morall vertues are but diſeaſes; Liberality is but a popular baite, and not a benefit, not an almes; Chaſtity is but a caſtration, and an impotency, not a temperance, not mortification; Active valour is but a fury, whatſoever we do, and paſſive valour is but a ſtupidity, whatſoever we ſuffer. Naturall apprehenſions of God, though thoſe naturall apprehenſions may have much ſubtilty, Voluntary elections of a Religion, though thoſe voluntary elections may have much ſingularity, Morall directions for life, though thoſe morall directions may have much ſeverity, are all frivolous and loſt, if all determine not in Chriſtianity, in the Notion of God, ſo as God hath manifeſted and conveyed himſelf to us; in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghoſt, whom this day we celebrate, in the Ingenuity, and in the Aſſiduity, and in the Totality, recommended in this text, and in this acclamation of the text, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

A

B

SERM. XLV.

PREACHED VPON ALL-SAINTS DAY.

APOC. 7. 2, 3.

And I ſaw another Angel aſcending from the Eaſt, which had the ſeale of the living God, and he cryed with a loud voyce to the foure Angels, to whom power was given to hurt the C Earth, and the Sea, ſaying, Hurt yee not the Earth, neither the Sea, neither the Trees, till we have ſealed the ſervants of our God in their foreheads.

THe ſolemnity and feſtivall with which the ſonnes of the Catholique Church of God celebrate this day, is much miſtaken, even by them who thinke themſelves the onely Catholiques, and celebrate this day, with a devotion, at leaſt near to ſuperſtition in the Church of Rome. For, they take it (for the moſt part) to be a feſtivall inſtituted by the Church, in contemplation of the Saints in heaven onely; and ſo carry and employ all their devotions this day, upon conſideration of thoſe Saints, and invocation of them onely. But the D inſtitution of this day, had this occaſion. The heathen Romans, who could not poſſibly houſe all their gods in ſeverall Temples, they were ſo over-many, according to their Law, Deos frugi colunto, to ſerve God as cheape as they could, made one Temple for them all, which they called Pantheon, To all the Gods. This Temple Boniface the Pope begd of the Emperour Phocas; (And yet, (by the way) this was ſome hundreds of years after the Donation of the Emperour Conſtantine, by which the Biſhops of Rome pretend all that to be theirs; ſurely they could not finde this Patent, this Record, this Donation of Conſtantine, then when Boniface begd this Temple in Rome, this Pantheon of the Emperour) And this Temple, formerly the Temple of all their gods, that Biſhop conſecrated to the honour of all the Martyrs, of all the Saints of that kinde. But after him, another Biſhop of the ſame ſea, enlarged the conſecration, and accompanied it with this feſtivall, which we celebrate to day, in honour of the Trinity, and Angels, and Apo- E ſtles, and Martyrs, and Confeſſors, and Saints, and all the elect children of God. So that it is truly a feſtivall, grounded upon that Article of the Creed, The Communion of Saints, and unites in our devout contemplation, The Head of the Church, God himſelfe, and thoſe two noble conſtitutive parts thereof, The Triumphant, and the Militant. And, accordingly, hath the Church applied this part of Scripture, to be read for the Epiſtle of this day, to ſhew, that All-Saints day hath relation to all Saints, both living and dead; for thoſe ſervants of God, which are here in this text, ſealed in their foreheads, are ſuch (without all queſtion) as receive that Seale here, here in the militant Church. And therefore, as theſe words, ſo this feſtivall, in their intendiment, that applied theſe words to this feſtivall, is alſo of Saints upon Earth.

This day being then the day of the Communion of Saints, and this Scripture being received for the Epiſtle of this univerſall day, that expoſition will beſt befit it, which makes it moſt univerſall. And therefore, with very good authority, ſuch as the expoſitions of this booke of the Revelation can receive, (of which booke, no man will undertake to the Church, that he hath found the certaine, and the literall ſenſe as yet, nor is ſure to do it, till the prophecies of this booke be accompliſhed) (for prophetia ingenium, ut in obſcuro deliteſcat, donec impleatur, It is the nature of prophecy to be ſecret, till it be fulfilled, And therefore Daniel was bid to ſhut up the words, and to ſeale the booke even to the time of the end, that is, to the end of the prophecy) with good authority, I ſay, we take that number of the ſervants of God, which are ſaid to be ſealed in the fourth verſe of this Chapter, which is one hundred forty foure thouſand, and that multitude which none could number, of all Nations, which are mentioned in the ninth verſe, to be intended of one and the ſame company; both theſe expreſſions denote the ſame perſons. In the fourth verſe of the fourteenth Chapter, this number of one hundred forty foure thouſand is applied to Virgins, but is intended of all Gods Saints; for every holy ſoule is a virgin. And then this name of Iſrael, which is mentioned in the fourth verſe of this Chapter, (That there were ſo many ſealed of the houſe of Iſrael) is often in Scriptures applied to ſpirituall Iſraelites, to Beleevers, (for every faithfull ſoule is an Iſraelite) ſo that this number of one hundred forty foure thouſand Virgins, and one hundred forty foure thouſand Iſraelites, which is not a certaine number, but a number expreſſing a numberleſſe multitude, this number, and that numberleſſe multitude ſpoken of after, of all Nations, which none could number, is all one; and both making up the great and glorious body of all Saints, import and preſent thus much in generall, That howſoever God inflict great and heavy calamities in this world, to the ſhaking of the beſt morall and Chriſtianly conſtancies and conſciences, yet all his Saints being eternally knowne by him, ſhall be ſealed by him, that is, ſo aſſured of his aſſiſtance, by a good uſing of thoſe helps which he ſhall afford them, in the Chriſtian Church, intended in this ſealing on the forehead, that thoſe afflictions ſhall never ſeparate them from him, nor fruſtrate his determination, nor diſappoint his gracious purpoſe upon them, all them, this multitude, which no man could number.

Irenæus.

Dan. 12. 4.

Diviſio.

To come then to the words themſelves, we ſee the ſafety, and protection of the Saints of God, and his children, in the perſon and proceeding of our Protector, in that it is in the hands of an Angel, (I ſaw another Angel) And an Angel of that place, that came from the Eaſt; The Eaſt, that is the fountaine of all light and glory, (I ſaw another Angel come from the Eaſt) And as the Word doth naturally ſignifie, (and is ſo rendred in this laſt Tranſlation) Aſcending from the Eaſt, that is, growing and encreaſing in ſtrength; After that we ſhall conſider our aſſurance in the commiſſion and power of this Angel, He had the ſeale of the living God; And then in the execution of this Commiſſion; In which we ſhall ſee firſt, who our enemies were; They were alſo Angels, (This Angel cryed to other Angels) able to do much by nature, becauſe Angels; Then we ſhall ſee their number, they were foure Angels, made ſtronger by joyning (This Angel cryed to theſe foure Angels.) And beſides their malignant nature, and united concord, (two ſhrewd diſadvantages, miſchievous and many) They had a power, a particular, an extraordinary power given them, at that time, to do hurt, (foure Angels, to whom power was given to hurt) And to do generall, univerſall hurt, (power to hurt the Earth, and the Sea.) After all this we ſhall ſee this Protector, againſt theſe enemies, and their Commiſſion, execute his, firſt by declaring and publiſhing it, (He cryed with a loud voyce) And then laſtly, what his Commiſſion was; It was, to ſtay thoſe foure Angels, for all their Commiſſion, from hurting the Earth, and the Sea, and the Trees. But yet, this is not for ever; It is but till the ſervants of God were ſealed in the forehead; that is, till God had afforded them ſuch helpes, as that by a good uſe of them they might ſubſiſt; which, if they did not, for all their ſealing in the forehead, this Angel will deliver them over to the other foure deſtroying Angels. Of which ſealing, that is, conferring of Grace and helps againſt thoſe ſpirituall enemies, there is a pregnant intimation, that it is done by the benefit of the Church, & in the power of the Church, which is no ſingular perſon, in that, upon the ſudden, the perſon and the number is varied in our text; and this Angel, which when he is ſaid to aſcend from the Eaſt, and to cry with a loud voyce, is ſtill a ſingular Angel, one Angel, yet when he comes to the act of ſealing in the forehead, to the diſpenſing of Sacraments, and ſacramentall aſſiſtances, he does that as a plurall perſon, he repreſents more, the whole Church, and therefore

A B C D E

A fore ſayes here, Stay, hurt nothing, Till we, we have ſealed the ſervants of our, our God in their foreheads. And by all theſe ſteps muſt we paſſe through this garden of flowers, this orchard of fruits, this abundant Text.

First then, Man being compaſſed with a cloud of witneſſes of his own infirmities, and the manifold afflictions of this life, (for, Dies diei eructat verbum, Day unto day uttereth the ſame, and night unto night teacheth knowledge, The bells tell him in the night, and fame tels him in the day, that he himſelfe melts and drops away piece-meal in the departing of parents, and wife, and children out of this world, yea he heares daily of a worſe departing, he hears of the defection, and back-ſliding of ſome of his particular acquaintance in matter of religion, or of their ſtifneſſe and obduration in ſome courſe of ſin (which is the worſe conſumption) Dies diei eructat, every day makes him learneder then other in this ſad knowledge, And he knowes withall, Quod cuiquam accidere poteſt, cuivis poteſt, that B any of their caſes may be his caſe too) Man that is compaſſed with ſuch a cloud of ſuch witneſſes, had need of ſome light to ſhew him the right way, and ſome ſtrength to enable him to walk ſafely in it. And this light and ſtrength is here propoſed in the aſſiſtance of an Angel. Which being firſt underſtood of Angels in generall, affords a great meaſure of comfort to us, becauſe the Angels are ſeduli animæ pediſſequæ, faithfull and diligent attendants upon all our ſteps. They doe ſo, they doe attend the ſervice and good of man, becauſe it is illorum optimum, It is the beſt thing that Angels (as Angels) can doe, to doe ſo: For evermore it is beſt for every thing to doe that for which it was ordained and made; and they were made Angels for the ſervice and aſſiſtance of man. Vnum tui & Angeli optimum eſt; Man and Angels have one and the ſame thing in them, which is better then any thing elſe that they have; Nothing hath it but they, and both they have it. Deus nihil ſui optimum habet; unum optimum totus; It is not ſo with God; God hath C nothing in him that is Beſt; but he is altogether one intire Beſt. But Man and Angels have one thing common to them both, which is the beſt thing that naturally either of them hath, that is, Reaſon, underſtanding, knowledge, diſcourſe, conſideration. Angels and Men have grace too, that is infinitely better then their Reaſon; but though Grace be the principall in the nature and dignity thereof, yet it is but acceſſory to an Angel, or to man; Grace is not in their nature at firſt, but infuſed by God, not to make them Angels and Men, but to make them good Angels, and good men. This very reaſon then, which is Illorum optimum, The beſt thing that Angels, as Angels, naturally have, teaches them, that the beſt thing that they can doe, is the performance of that for which they were made. And then howſoever they were made ſpirits for a more glorious uſe, to ſtand in the preſence of God, and to enjoy the fulneſſe of that contemplation, yet he made his ſpirits Angels, for the love which he had to be with the ſons of men. Sufficit illis, et pro D magno habeant, Let this content the Angels, and let them magnifie God for this, Quòd cum ſpiritus ſint conditione, ex gratia facti ſunt Angeli, That whereas by nature they are but ſpirits, (and the devill is ſo) by favour and by office they are made Angels, meſſengers from God to man.

Now as the Angels are not defective in their beſt part, their Reaſon, and therefore do their office in aſſiſting us, ſo alſo let us exalt our beſt part, our Reaſon too, to reverence them with a care of doing ſuch actions onely as might not be unfit for their preſence. Both Angels and we have the Image of God imprinted in us; the Angels have it not in ſummo, though they have it in tuto; They have it not in the higheſt degree, (for ſo Chriſt onely is the Image of the inviſible God) but they have it in a deep impreſſion, ſo as they can neither loſe it, nor deface it. We have this Image of God ſo, as that we cannot loſe it, but we may, and doe deface it; Vri poteſt, non exuri; The Devil hath this Image in him, E and it cannot be burnt out in hell; for it is imprinted in the very naturall faculties of the ſoule. But if we conſider how many waters beat upon us in this world to waſh off this Image, how many ruſty and habituall ſins gnaw upon us, to eat out this Image, how many files paſſe over our ſouls in calamities, and afflictions, in which though God have a purpoſe, Reſculpere imaginem, to re-engrave, to refreſh, to poliſh this Image in us, by thoſe corrections, yet the devill hath a harſh file too, that works a murmuring, a comparing of our ſinnes with other mens ſinnes, and our puniſhments with other mens puniſhments, and at laſt, either a denying of Providence, (That things ſo unequally carried cannot be governed by God) or a wilfull renouncing of it in Deſperation, That his Providence cannot bee reſiſted, and therefore it is all one what wee doe,

Angelus. Pſal. 19. 2.

Bern.

Bern.

Idem.

Bern.

Coloſ. 1. 15.

Bern.

Auguſt.

doe, If wee conſider this, wee had need looke for Aſſiſtants.

Let us therefore looke firſt to that which is beſt in us naturally, that is, Reaſon; For if we loſe that, our Reaſon, our Diſcourſe, our Conſideration, and ſinke into an incapable and barren ſtupidity, there is no footing, no ſubſiſtence for grace. All the vertue of Corne is in the ſeed; but that will not grow in water, but onely in the earth: All the good of man, conſidered ſupernaturally, is in grace; but that will not grow in a waſhy ſoule, in a liquid, in a watery, and diſſolute, and ſcattered man. Grace growes in reaſon; In that man, and in that minde, that conſiders the great treaſure, what it is to have the Image of God in him, naturally; for even that is our earneſt of ſupernaturall perfection. And this Image of God, even in the Angels, being Reaſon, and the beſt act of rectified Reaſon, The doing of that for which they were made, It is that which the Angels are naturally inclined to doe, to be alwayes preſent for the aſſiſtance of man; for therefore they are Angels. And ſince they have a joy at the Converſion of a ſinner, and every thing affects joy, and therefore they indeavour our Converſion, yea, ſince they have an increaſe of their knowledge by being about us, (for, S. Paul ſayes, Eph. 3. 10. That he was made a Preacher of the Goſpel, to the intent that Angels might know, by the Church, the manifold wiſedome of God) And every thing affects knowledge, theſe Saints of God upon earth, intended in our Text, might juſtly promiſe themſelves a ſtrong and a bleſſed comfort, and a happy iſſue in all tribulations, by this Scripture, if there were no more intended in it, but onely the aſſiſtance of Angels; I ſaw an Angel.

Angelus, Chriſtus. But our ſecurity of deliverance is in a ſafer, and a ſtronger hand then this; not in theſe Miniſteriall, and Miſſive Angels onely; but in his that ſends them, yea in his that Col. 1. 16, 17. made them; By whom, and for whom, they, and the Thrones, and Dominions, and Principalities, and Powers, and all things were created, and in whom they conſiſt. For, as the name Mal. 3. 1. of Angel is attributed to Chriſt, Angelus Teſtamenti, The Angel of the Covenant; And many of thoſe miraculous paſſages in the deliverances of Iſrael out of Egypt, which were done by the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity, by Chriſt, in Exodus, are by Moſes there, Acts 7. and in the abridgement of that ſtory, by Stephen after, attributed to Angels, So in this Text, this Angel, which doth ſo much for Gods Saints, is, not inconveniently, by many Expoſitors, taken to be our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe. And will any man doubt of performance of conditions in him? Will any man looke for better ſecurity then him, who puts two, and two ſuch into the band, Chriſt, and Ieſus; An anointed King, able, an actuall Saviour, willing to diſcharge, not his, but our debt? He is a double Perſon, God and Man; He ingages a double pawn, the old, and the new Teſtament, the Law, and the Goſpel; and you may be bold to truſt him, that hath paid ſo well before; ſince you ſee a performance of the Propheſies of the old Teſtament, in the free and glorious preaching of the Goſpel, truſt alſo in a performance of the promiſes of the Goſpel, in timely deliverances in this life, and an infallible, and eternall repoſedneſſe, in the life to come. Hee tooke our nature, that he might know our infirmities experimentally; He brought down a better nature, that he might recover us, reſtore us powerfully, effectually; and that hee might be ſure to accompliſh his work, he brought more to our reparation, then to our firſt building; The God-head wrought as much in our Redemption, as in our Creation, and the Man-hood more; for it began but then. And to take from us all doubt of his power, or of his will in our deliverance, he hath taken the ſureſt way of giving ſatisfaction, He hath payed beforehand; Verè tulit, He hath truly born all our infirmities, He hath, Eſay 53. 4. already; And with his ſtripes are we healed; we that are here now, are healed by his Apoc. 13. 8. ſtripes received ſixteen hundred yeares ſince. Nay, he was Occiſus ab origine, The Lamb ſlaine from the beginning of the world; That day that the frame of the world was fully ſet up in the making of man, That day that the faireſt piece of that frame fell down again, in the fall of Adam, That day that God repaired this ruine again, in the promiſe of a Meſſias, (all which we take ordinarily to have fallen in one day, the ſixt day) that day, in that promiſe, was this Lamb ſlain, and all the debts not only of our fore-fathers, and ours, but of the laſt man, that ſhall be found alive at the laſt day, were then payed, ſo long beforehand.

Angelus Eccleſiæ. This ſecurity then, for our deliverance and protection, we have in this Angel in our Text, (I ſaw an Angel) as this Angel is Chriſt; but yet we have alſo another ſecurity, more immediate, and more appliable to us. As men that lend money in the courſe of the world, have a deſire to have a ſervant in the band with the Maſter, not that they hope for the money from him, but that they know better how to call upon him, and how to take hold of him: ſo beſides this generall aſſiſtance of Angels, and beſides this all-ſufficiency of the Angel of the Covenant, Chriſt Jeſus, we have, for our ſecurity, in this Text, (I ſaw an Angel) the ſervants of Chriſt too; This Angel is the Miniſter of his Word, the Adminiſtrer of his Sacraments, the Mediator betweene Chriſt and Man, He is this Angel, as S. Iohn, ſo often in the Revelation, and the Holy Ghoſt in other places of Scripture, ſtyles them; This Angel is indeed, the whole frame, and Hierarchy of the Chriſtian Church. For though this Angel be called in this text The Angel, in the ſingular, yet, (to make uſe of one note by Anticipation now, though in our diſtribution of the Branches, we reſerved it to the end, becauſe it fits properly our preſent conſideration) though this Angel be named in the ſingular, and ſo may ſeeme to be reſtrained to Chriſt alone, yet, we ſee, the Office, when it comes to execution after, is diffuſed, and there are more in the Commiſſion; for thoſe phraſes, that Wee, Wee may ſeale, the ſervants of Our, Our God, have a plurality in them, a conſent, a harmony, and imply a Congregation, and doe better agree with the Miniſtery of the Church, then with the Perſon of Chriſt alone.

for

So then, to let go none of our aſſiſtants, our ſureties, our ſafety is in the Angel of the Covenant, Chriſt Jeſus, radically, fundamentally, meritoriouſly; It is in the miniſtery of the Angels of heaven inviſibly; but it is in the Church of God, and in the power of his Miniſters there, manifeſtly, ſenſibly, diſcernibly; They ſhould ſeek the Law at the Prieſts mouth, (They ſhould, and therefore they are to blame that do not, but fly to private expoſitions.) But why ſhould they? Quia angelus domini exercituum, (as it follows there) Becauſe the Prieſt is the Angel of the Lord of Hoſts. Yea, the Goſpell which they preach, is above all meſſages, which an Angel can bring of himſelfe; If an Angel from heaven preach otherwiſe unto you, then we have preached, let him be accurſed. The miniſtery of celeſtiall Angels is inferiour to the miniſtery of the Eccleſiaſticall; The Goſpel (which belongs to us) is truly Euangelium, the good Miniſtery of good Angels, the beſt miniſtery of the beſt Angels; for though we compare not with thoſe Angels in nature, we compare with them in office; though our offices tend to the ſame end (to draw you to God) yet they differ in the way; and though the ſervice of thoſe Angels, enlighten your underſtanding, and aſſiſt your belief too, yet in the miniſtery of theſe Angels in the Church, there is a bleſſed fulfilling, and verification of thoſe words, Now is ſalvation nearer, then when we beleeved. You beleeve, becauſe thoſe celeſtiall Angels have wrought inviſibly upon you, and diſperſt your clouds, and removed impediments. You beleeve, becauſe the great Angel Chriſt Jeſus, hath left his hiſtory, his action, and paſſion written for you; and that is a hiſtoricall faith. But yet ſalvation is nearer to you, in having all this applied to you, by them, who are like you, men, and there, where you know how to fetch it, the Church; That as you beleeve by reading the Goſpels at home, that Chriſt died for the world, So you may beleeve, by hearing here, that he dyed for you. This is Gods plenteous Redemption, Quòd linguam meam aſſumſit in opus ſuum; That having ſo great a work to doe, as the ſalvation of ſoules, he would make uſe of my tongue; And being to ſave the world by his word, that I ſhould ſpeak that word. Docendo vos, quod per ſe facilius & ſuavius poſſet, That he calls me up hither, to teach you that which he could teach you better, and ſooner, at home, by his Spirit, Indulgentia ejus eſt, non indigentia, It is the largeneſſe of his mercy towards you, not any narrowneſſe in his power that he needs me. And ſo have you this Angel in our text, in all the acceptations, in which our Expoſitors have delivered him; It is Chriſt, It is the Angels of heaven, It is the Miniſtery of the Goſpel; And this Angell, whoſoever, whatſoever, S. Iohn ſaw come from the Eaſt, (I ſaw an Angel come from the Eaſt) which was our ſecond Branch, and fals next into conſideration.

Mal. 2. 7.

Gal. 1. 8.

Rom. 13. 11.

Bernar.

This addition is intended for a particular addition to our comfort; it is a particular endowment, or inlargement of ſtrength and power in this Angel, that he comes from the Eaſt. If we take it, (to goe the ſame way that we went before) firſt of naturall Angels, even the Weſterne Angels, Qui habuere occaſum, Thoſe Angels which have had their Sun-ſet, their fall, they came from the Eaſt too; Quomodo cecidiſti de cœlo, Lucifer, filius orientis? How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, the Son of the morning? He had his begetting, his Creation in the Eaſt, in the light, and there might have ſtayed, for any neceſſity of falling, that God laid upon him. Take the Angel of the text to be the Angel of the Covenant,

Ab oriente.

Eſay 14. 12.

Covenant Christ Jesus, and his name is The East; he cannot be knowne, he cannot bee
Zech.6.12. said to have any West. Ecce vir, Oriens nomen ejus, (so the vulgat reads that place) Behold the Man, whose name is the East; you can call him nothing else; for so, the other Zachary,
Luke 1.78. the Zachary of the New Testament cals him too, Per viscera misericordiæ, Through the tender bowels of his mercy, Visitavit nos Oriens, The East, the day spring from on high hath visited us; And he was derived à Patre luminum, He came from the East, begotten from Iohn 16.28. all eternity of the Father of lights, I came out from the Father, and came into the world. Take this Angel to be the Preacher of the Gospel, literally, really, the Gospell came out of the East, where Christ lived and dyed; and Typically, figuratively, Paradise, which also figured the place, to which the Gospel is to carry us, Heaven, that also was planted in the East; and therefore S. Basil assignes that for the reason, why in the Church service we turne to the East when we pray, Quia antiquam requirimus patriam, Wee looke towards our ancient country, where the Gospel of our salvation was literally acted, and accomplished, and where Heaven, the end of the Gospel, was represented in Paradise. Every way the Gospel is an Angel of the East.

But this is that which we take to be principally intended in it, That as the East is the fountaine of light, so all our illumination is to be taken from the Gospell. Spread we this a little thinner, and we shall better see through it. If the calamities of the world, or the heavy consideration of thine own sins, have benummed and benighted thy soule in the vale of darkenesse, and in the shadow of death; If thou thinke to wrastle and bustle through these strong stormes, and thick clouds, with a strong hand; If thou thinke thy money, thy bribes shall conjure thee up stronger spirits then those that oppose thee; If thou seek ease in thy calamities, that way to shake and shipwrack thine enemies; In these crosse winds, in these countermines, (to oppresse as thou art oppressed) all this is but a turning to the North, to blow away and scatter these sadnesses, with a false, an illusory, and a sinfull comfort. If thou thinke to ease thy selfe in the contemplation of thine honour, thine offices; thy favour, thy riches, thy health, this is but a turning to the South, the Sun-shine of worldly prosperity. If thou sinke under thy afflictions, and canst not finde nourishment (but poyson) in Gods corrections, nor justice (but cruelty) in his judgements, nor mercy (but slackenesse) in his forbearance till now; If thou suffer thy soule to set in a cloud, a dark cloud of ignorance of Gods providence and proceedings, or in a darker, of diffidence of his performance towards thee, this is a turning to the West, and all these are perverse and awry. But turne to the East, and to the Angel that comes from thence, The Ministery of the Gospel of Christ Jesus in his Church; It is true, thou mayst Basil. find some darke places in the Scriptures; and, Est silentii species obscuritas, To speake darkly and obscurely is a kinde of silence, I were as good not be spoken to, as not be made to understand that which is spoken, yet fixe thy selfe upon this Angel of the East, the preaching of the Word, the Ordinance of God, and thine understanding shall be enlightned, and thy beliefe established, and thy conscience thus far unburthened, that though the sins which thou hast done, cannot be undone, yet neither shalt thou bee undone by them; There, where thou art afraid of them, in judgement, they shall never meet thee; but as in the round frame of the World, the farthest West is East, where the West ends, the East begins, So in thee, (who art a World too) thy West and thy East shall joyne, and when thy Sun, thy soule comes to set in thy death-bed, the Son of Grace shall suck it up into glory.

Angelus Ascendens. Our Angel comes from the East, (a denotation of splendor, and illustration of understanding, and conscience) and there is more, he comes Ascending, (I saw an Angel ascend from the East) that is, still growing more cleare, and more powerfull upon us. Take the 1 Sam.28.13. Angel here of naturall Angels; and then, when the Witch of Endor (though an evill Spirit appeared to her) yet saw him appeare so, Ascending, she attributes that glory to it, I see gods Ascending out of the earth. Take the Angel to be Christ, and then, his Ascension was Bernar. Fœlix clausula totius itinerarii, The glorious shutting up of all his progresse; and though his descending from Heaven to earth, and his descending from earth to hell gave us our title, his Ascending, by which he carried up our flesh to the right hand of his Father, gave us our possession; His Descent, his humiliation gave us Ius ad rem, but his Ascension Ius in re. But as this Angel is the Ministery of the Gospel, God gave it a glorious ascent in Psal.19.6. the Primitive Church, when as this Sun Exultavit ut gigas ad currendam viam, ascended quickly beyond the reach of Heretiques wits, and Persecutors swords, and as glorious an ascent

A ascent in the Reformation, when in no long time, the number of them that had forsaken Rome was as great, as of them that staid with her.

Now to give way to this ascent of this Angel in thy selfe, make the way smooth, and make thy soule souple; finde thou a growth of the Gospel in thy faith, and let us finde it in thy life. It is not in thy power to say to this Angel, as Ioshua said to the Sun, Siste, stand still, It will not stand still; If thou finde it not ascending, it descends; If thy comforts in the Gospel of Christ Jesus grow not, they decay; If thou profit not by the Gospel, thou losest by it; If thou live not by it, (nothing can redeeme thee) thou dyest by it. Wee speake of going up and downe a staire; it is all one staire; of going to, and from the City; it is all one way; of comming in, and going out of a house; it is all one doore: So is there a savour of life unto life, and a savour of death unto death in the Gospel; but it is all one Gospel. If this Angel of the East have appeared unto thee, (the light of the Gospel have shi- Ioſh. 10. 12.

B ned upon thee) and it have not ascended in thee, if it have not made thee wiser and wiser, and better and better too, thou hast stopped that light, vexed, grieved, quenched that Spirit; for the naturall progresse of this Angel of the East is to ascend; the naturall motion and working of the Gospel is, to make thee more and more confident in Gods deliverance, lesse and lesse subject to rely upon the weake helps, and miserable comforts of this world. To this purpose this Angel ascends, that is, proceeds in the manifestation of his Power, and of his readinesse to succour us. Of his Power in this, That he hath the seales of the living God; (I saw an Angel ascending from the East, which had the seale of the living God) which is our next Consideration.

Of the living God. The gods of the Nations are all dead gods; either such Gods as ne- Sigillum Dei viventis.

C ver had life, (stones, and gold and silver) or such gods at best, as were never gods till they were dead; for men that had benefited the world, in any publique and generall invention, or otherwise, were made gods after their deaths; which was a miserable deification, a miserable godhead that grew out of corruption, a miserable eternity that begun at all, but especially that begun in death; and they were not gods till they dyed. But our Angel had the Seale of the living God, that is, Power to give life to others. Now, if we seeke for this seale in the naturall Angels, they have it not; for this Seale is some visible thing whereby we are assisted to salvation, and the Angels have no such. They are made keepers of this seale sometimes, but permanently they have it not. This Seale of comfort was put into an Angels hand, when he was to set a marke upon the foreheads of all them that mourned; He had a visible thing, Inke, to marke them withall. But it was not said to him, Vade & signa omnes Creaturas, Go, and set this marke upon every Creature, as it was to the Minister of the Gospel, Go, and preach to every Creature. If wee seeke this seale in the great Angel, the Angel of the Covenant, Christ Jesus: It is true he hath it, for, Omnis po- Ezek. 9. 4. Marke 16. 15.

D testas data, All power is given unto me, in Heaven, and in earth; and, Omne judicium, The Father hath committed all judgement to the Son; Christ, as the Son of man executes a Judgement, and hath a Power, which he hath not but by gift, by Commission, by vertue of this Seale, from his Father. But, because it is not onely so in him, That he hath the Seale of the living God, but, He is this Seale himselfe, (Hee is the Image of the invisible God; He is the brightnesse of his glory, and the expresse Image of his Person) It is not onely his Commission that is sealed, but his Nature, He himselfe is sealed, (Him hath God the Father sealed) since, I say, naturall Angels though they have sometimes this seale, they have it not alwaies, they have not a Commission from God, to apply his mercies to man, by any ordinary and visible meanes, since the Angel of the Covenant, Christ Jesus hath it, but hath it so, as that he is it too, the third sort of Angels, the Church-Angels, the Mini- Mat. 28. 18. Iohn 5. 22. Colos. 1. 15. Heb. 1. 3. Iohn 6. 27.

E sters of the Gospell, are they, who most properly can be said to have this Seale by a fixed and permanent possession, and a power to apply it to particular men, in all emergent necessities, according to the institution of that living God, whose seale it is.

Now the great power which is given by God, in giving this seale to these Angels, hath a lively representation (such as a shadow can give) in the history of Ioseph. Pharaoh sayes to him, Thou shalt be over my house, and over all the land of Egypt, (steward of the Kings house, and steward of the Kingdome) And at thy word shall all my people be armed, (Constable and Marshall too) and to invest him in all these, and more, Pharaoh gave him his ring, his seale; not his seale onely to those severall patents to himselfe, but the keeping of that seale for the good of others; This temporall seale of Pharoh was a representation of the seale of the living God. But there is a more expresse type of it in Exodus: Gen. 41. 40.

Thou

Exod. 28. 36. Thou ſhalt grave (ſayes God to Moſes) upon a plate of pure gold, as Signets are graved, Holineſſe to the Lord; and it ſhall be upon the forehead of Aaron; What to do? That the people may be accepted of him. There muſt be a holineſſe to the Lord, and that preſented by Aaron the Prieſt to God, that the people may be acceptable to the Lord; So that this ſeale of the living God, in theſe Angels of our text, is, The Sacraments of the New Teſtament, and the Abſolution of ſinnes, by which (when Gods people come to a Holineſſe to the Lord, in a true repentance, and that that holineſſe, that is, that repentance, is made knowne to Aaron, to the Prieſt, and he preſents it to the Lord) that Prieſt, his Miniſter ſeals to them, in thoſe his Ordinances, Gods acceptation of this degree of holineſſe, he ſeals this Reconciliation between God and his people. And a contract of future concurrence, with his ſubſequent grace. This is the power given by God to this aſcending Angel; and we extend that no farther, but haſten to his haſte, his readineſſe to ſuccour us; in which, we propoſed for the firſt conſideration, That this Angel of light manifeſted and diſcovered to us, who our enemies were: (He cryed out to them who were ready to do miſchiefe, with a loud voyce) ſo that we might heare him, and know them. A B

Manifeſtat inimicos.

Though in all Court-caſes it be not good to take knowledge of enemies, (many times that is better forborne) yet in all caſes, it is good to know them. Eſpecially in our caſe in the Text, becauſe our enemies intended here, are of themſelves, Princes of darkneſſe; They can multiply clouds, and diſguiſings, their kingdome is in the darkneſſe, Sagittam in obſcuro, They ſhoot in the darke, (I am wounded with a tentation, as with the plague, and I know not whence the arrow came) Collocavit me in obſcuris, The enemy hath made my dwelling darkneſſe, I have no window that lets in light, but then this Angel of light ſhews me who they are.

Eph. 6. 12. Pſal. 11. 2. Pſal. 143. 3.

Inimici, Angeli.

But then, if we were left to our ſelves, it were but a little advantage to know who our enemies were, when we knew thoſe enemies to be Angels, perſons ſo far above our reſiſtance. For, but that S. Paul mollifies and eaſes it with a milder word, Eſt nobis colluctatio, That we wreſtle with enemies, (that thereby we might ſee our danger is but to take a fall, not a deadly wound, if we look ſeriouſly to our worke; we cannot avoyd falling into ſins of infirmity, but the death of habituall ſin we may: Quare moriemini domus Iſrael? He does not ſay, why would ye fall? but why will ye die, ye houſe of Iſrael?) it were a conſideration inough to make us deſperate of victory, to heare him ſay, that this (though it be but a wreſtling) is not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt principalities, and powers, and ſpirituall wickedneſſes in high places. None of us hath got the victory over fleſh and blood, and yet we have greater enemies then fleſh and blood are. Some diſciplines, ſome mortifications we have againſt fleſh and blood; we have S. Pauls probatum eſt, his medicine, (if we will uſe it) Caſtigo corpus, I keep under my body, and bring it into ſubjection; for that we have ſome aſſiſtance; Even our enemies become our friends; poverty or ſickneſſe will fight for us againſt fleſh and blood, againſt our carnall luſts; but for theſe powers and principalities, I know not where to watch them, how to encounter them. I paſſe my time ſociably and merrily in cheerful converſation, in muſique, in feaſting, in Comedies, in wantonneſſe; and I never heare all this while of any power or principality, my Conſcience ſpies no ſuch enemy in all this. And then alone, between God and me at midnight, ſome beam of his grace ſhines out upon me, and by that light I ſee this Prince of darkneſſe, and then I finde that I have been the ſubject, the ſlave of theſe powers and principalities, when I thought not of them. Well, I ſee them, and I try then to diſpoſſeſſe my ſelfe of them, and I make my recourſe to the powerfulleſt exorciſme that is, I turne to hearty and earneſt prayer to God, and I fix my thoughts ſtrongly (as I thinke) upon him, and before I have perfected one petition, one period of my prayer, a power and principality is got into me againe. Spiritus ſoporis, The ſpirit of ſlumber cloſes mine eyes, and I pray drouſily; Or ſpiritus vertiginis, the ſpirit of deviation, and vaine repetition, and I pray giddily, and circularly, and returne againe and againe to that I have ſaid before, and perceive not that I do ſo; and neſcio cujus ſpiritus ſim, (as our Saviour ſaid, rebuking his Diſciples, who were ſo vehement for the burning of the Samaritans, you know not of what ſpirit you are) I pray, and know not of what ſpirit I am, I conſider not mine own purpoſe in prayer; And by this advantage, this doore of inconſideration, enters ſpiritus erroris, The ſeducing ſpirit, the ſpirit of error, and I pray not onely negligently, but erroniouſly, dangerouſly, for ſuch things as diſconduce to the glory of God, and my true happineſſe, if they were granted. Nay, even the Prophet Hoſea's ſpiritus fornicationum, enters

Eph. 6. 12. 1 Cor. 9. 27. Eſay 29. 10. Eſa. 19. 14. Luk. 9. 55. 1 Tim. 4. 1. Hoſea 4. 12. 5. 4.

A ters into me, The ſpirit of fornication, that is, ſome remembrance of the wantonneſſe of my youth, ſome miſ-interpretation of a word in my prayer, that may beare an ill ſenſe, ſome unclean ſpirit, ſome power or principality hath depraved my prayer, and ſlackned my zeale. And this is my greateſt miſery of all, that when that which fights for me, and fights againſt me too, ſickneſſe, hath laid me upon my laſt bed, then in my weakeſt eſtate, theſe powers and principalities ſhall be in their full practiſe againſt me. And therefore it is one great advancement of thy deliverance, to be brought by this Angel, that is, by the Miniſtery of the Goſpel of Chriſt, to know that thou haſt Angels to thine enemies; And then another is to know their number, and ſo the ſtrength of their confederacy; for, in the verſe before the Text, they are expreſſed to be foure, (I ſaw foure Angels &c.)

B Foure legions of Angels, foure millions, nay, foure Creations of Angels could do no more harme, then is intended in theſe foure; for, (as it is ſaid in the former verſe) They ſtood upon the foure corners of the earth, they beſtrid, they cantoned the whole world. Thou haſt oppoſite Angels enow to batter thee every where, and to cut off and defeat all ſuccours, all ſupplies, that thou canſt procure, or propoſe to thy ſelfe; abſolute enemies to one another will meet and joyne to thy ruine, and even preſumption will induce deſperation. We need not be ſo literall in this, as S. Hierome, (who indeed in that followed Origen) to thinke that there is a particular evill Angel over every ſin; That becauſe we finde that mention of the ſpirit of error, and the ſpirit of ſlumber, and the ſpirit of fornication, we ſhould therefore thinke that Chriſt meant by Mammon, a particular ſpirit of Covetouſneſſe, and that there be ſeverall princes over ſeverall ſins. This needs not; when thou art tempted, never aske that Spirits name; his name is legio, for he is many. Take thy ſelfe at the largeſt, as thou art a world, there are foure Angels at thy foure corners;

C Let thy foure corners be thy worldly profeſſion, thy calling, and another thy bodily refection, thy eating, and drinking, and ſleeping, and a third thy honeſt and allowable recreations, and a fourth thy religious ſervice of God in this place, (which two laſt, that is, recreation, and religion, God hath been pleaſed to joyn together in the Sabbath, in which he intended his own glory in our ſervice of him, and then the reſt of the Creature too) let theſe foure, thy calling, thy ſleeping, thy recreation, thy religion be the foure corners of thy world, and thou ſhalt find an Angel of tentation at every corner; even in thy ſleep, even in this houſe of God thou haſt met them. The Devill is no Recuſant; he will come to Church, and he will lay his ſnares there; When that day comes, that the Sonnes of God preſent themſelves before the Lord, Satan comes alſo among them. Not onely ſo, as S. Auguſtin confeſſes he met him at Church, to carry wanton glances between men and women, but he is here, ſometimes to work a miſ-interpretation in the hearer, ſometimes to work

D an affectation in the ſpeaker, and many times doth more harme by a good Sermon then by a weake, by poſſeſſing the hearers with an admiration of the Preachers gifts, and neglecting Gods Ordinance. And then it is not onely their naturall power, as they are Angels, nor their united power, as they are many, nor their politique power, that in the midſt of that confuſion which is amongſt them, yet they agree together to ruine us, but (as it follows in our text) it is poteſtas data, a particular power, which, beſides their naturall power, God, at this time, put into their hands; (He cryed to the foure Angels, to whom power was given to hurt) All other Angels had it not, nor had theſe foure that power at all times, which, in our diſtribution at firſt we made a particular Conſideration.

It was poteſtas data, a ſpeciall Commiſſion that laid Iob open to Satans malice; It was poteſtas data, a ſpeciall Commiſſion, that laid the herd of ſwine open to the Devils tranſportation: Much more, no doubt, have the particular Saints of God in the aſſiſtances of

E the Chriſtian Church, (for Iob had not that aſſiſtance, being not within the Covenant) and moſt of all hath the Church of God her ſelfe, an ability, in ſome meaſure, to defend it ſelfe againſt many machinations and practiſes of the Devill, if it were not for this Poteſtas data, That God, for his farther glory, in the tryall of his Saints, and his Church, doth enable the Devill to raiſe whole armies of perſecutors, whole ſwarmes of heretiques, to ſting and wound the Church, beyond that ordinary power, which, the Devill in nature hath. That place, Curſe not the King, no, not in thought, for that which hath wings ſhall tell the matter, is ordinarily underſtood of Angels; that Angels ſhall reveale diſloyall thoughts; now, naturally Angels do not underſtand thoughts; but, in ſuch caſes, there is Poteſtas data, a particular power given them to do it; and ſo to evill Angels, for the

Quatuor Angeli.

Mar. 6. 24.

Mar. 5. 9.

Job 1. 6.

Poteſtas data.

Mat. 8. 32.

Eccleſ. 10. 20.

the accompliſhment of Gods purpoſes, there is Poteſtas data, a new power given, a new Commiſſion, ( that is beyond permiſſion ; for, though by Gods permiſſion mine eye ſee, and mine eare heare, yet my hand could not ſee nor heare by Gods permiſſion ; for permiſſion is but the leaving of a thing to the doing of that, which by nature, (if there be no hindrance interpoſed ) it could, and would do.) A

This comfort then, and this hope of deliverance haſt thou here, that this Angel in our text, that is, the Miniſtery of the Goſpel, tels thee, that that rage which the Devill uſes againſt thee now, is but Poteſtas data, a temporary power given him for the preſent ; for, if thy afflictions were altogether from the naturall malice and power of the Devill, inherent in him, that malice would never end, nor thy affliction neither, if God ſhould leave all to him. And therefore though thoſe our afflictions be heavier, which proceed ex poteſtate data, when God exalts that power of the Devill, which naturally he hath, with new Commiſſions, beſides his Permiſſion to uſe his naturall ſtrength, and naturall malice, yet our deliverance is the nearer too, becauſe all theſe acceſſory and occaſionall Commiſſions are for particular ends, and are limited, how far they ſhall extend, how long they ſhall endure. Here, the poteſtas data, the power which was given to theſe Angels was large, it was generall, for, (as it is in the former verſe) it was a power to hold the foure winds of the earth, that the winde ſhould not blow on the earth, nor on the ſea, nor on any tree. What this withholding of the winde ſignifies, and the damnification of that, is our next Conſideration. B

Venti. By the Land, is commonly underſtood all the Inhabitants of the Land ; by the Sea Ilanders, and Sea-faring men, halfe inhabitants of the Sea ; and by the Trees, all thoſe whom Perſecution had driven away, and planted in the wilderneſſe. The hinderance of the uſe of the wind, being taken by our Expoſitors to be a generall impediment of the increaſe of the earth, and of commerce at Sea. But this Book of the Revelation muſt not be ſo literally underſtood, as that the Winds here ſhould ſignifie meerly naturall winds ; there is more in this then ſo ; Thus much more, That this withholding of the winds, is a withholding of the preaching and paſſage of the Goſpel ; which is the heavieſt miſery that can fall upon a Nation, or upon a man, becauſe thereby, by the miſery of not hearing, he loſes all light, and meanes of diſcerning his owne miſery. Now as all the parts, and the ſtyle and phraſe of this Book is figurative and Metaphoricall, ſo is it no unuſuall Metaphor, even in other Bookes of the Scripture too, to call the Miniſters, and Preachers of Gods Word, by the name of winds. Cant. 4. 16. Ariſe O North, and come O South, and blow on my Garden, that the ſpices thereof may flow out, hath alwayes been underſtood to be an invitation, a compellation from Chriſt to his Miniſters, to diſpenſe and convey ſalvation, by his Goſpel, to all Nations. Pſal. 135. 7. And upon thoſe words, Producit ventos, He bringeth winds out of his treaſuries, and Educit nubes, He bringeth clouds from the ends of the earth, Auguſt. Puto Prædicatores & nubes & ventos, ſayes S. Auguſtine, I think that the holy Ghoſt means both by his clouds, and by his winds, the Preachers of his Word, the Miniſters of the Goſpel ; Nubes propter carnem, ventos propter ſpiritum, Clouds becauſe their bodies are ſeen, winds becauſe their working is felt ; Nubes cernuntur, venti ſentiuntur ; as clouds they embrace the whole viſible Church, and are viſible to it ; as winds they pierce into the inviſible Church, the ſoules of the true Saints of God, and work, though inviſibly, upon them. Pſal. 18. 10. So alſo thoſe words, God rode upon a Cherub, and did fly, He did fly upon the wings of the wind, have been well interpreted of Gods being pleaſed to be carryed from Nation to Nation, by the ſervice of his Miniſters. C D

Now this is the nature of this wind, (of the Spirit of God breathing in his Miniſters) John 3. 8. Spirat ubi vult, that it blowes where it liſts ; and this is the malice of theſe evill Angels, that it ſhall not doe ſo. But this Angel, which hath the ſeale of the living God, that is, the Miniſtery of the Goſpel eſtabliſhed by him, ſhall keep the winds at their liberty ; And howſoever waking dreamers think of alterations and tolerations, howſoever men that diſguiſe their expectations with an outward conformity to us, may think the time of declaring themſelves growes on apace ; howſoever the ſlumbring of capitall laws, and reaſon of State may ſuffer ſuch miſtakers to flatter themſelves, yet God hath made this Angel of the Eaſt, this Goſpel of his to aſcend ſo far now, and to take ſo deep root, as that now this one Angel is ſtrong enough for the other foure, that is, The ſincere preaching of the Goſpel, in our ſetled and well diſciplined Church, ſhall prevaile againſt thoſe foure peſtilent oppoſites, Atheiſts, and Papiſts, and Sectaries, and Carnall indifferent men, E men, who all would hinder the blowing of this wind, the effect of this Goſpel. And to this purpoſe our Angel in the Text is ſaid to have cryed with a loud voice, (He cryed with a loud voice to the foure Angels.)

For our ſecurity therefore that this wind ſhall blow ſtill, that this preaching of the Goſpel which we enjoy ſhall be transferred upon our poſterity in the ſame ſincerity, and the ſame integrity, there is required an aſſiduity, and an earneſtneſſe in us, who are in that ſervice now, in which this Angel was then, in our preaching. Clamavit, our Angel cryed, (it was his firſt act, nothing muſt retard our preaching) and voce magna, he cryed with a loud voice; (he gave not over with one calling) What is this crying aloud in our Angel? Vocis modum, audientium neceſſitas definit; The voice muſt be ſo loud, as they, to whom we ſpeak, are quick or thick of hearing. Submiſſa, quæ ad ſuſurrum propriè accedit, damnanda. A whiſpering voice was not the voice of this Angel, nor muſt it be of thoſe Angels that are figured in him; for that is the voice of a Conventicle, not a Church voice. That is a loud voice that is heard by them whom it concernes. So the catechizing of children, though in a familiar manner, is a loud voice, though it be not a Sermon: So writing in defence of our Religion, is a loud voice, though in the meane time a man intermit his preaching: So the ſpeaking by another, when ſickneſſe or other ſervices withhold him that ſhould, and would ſpeak, is a loud voice even from him.

And therefore though there be no evident, no imminent danger of withholding theſe winds, of inhibiting or ſcanting the liberty of the Goſpel; yet becauſe it is wiſhed by too many, and becauſe we can imagine no puniſhment too great for our neglecting the Goſpel, it becomes us, the Miniſters of God, by all theſe loud voices, of catechizing, of preaching, of writing, to cry, and to cry, (though not with vociferations, or ſeditious jealouſies and ſuſpitions of the preſent government) yet to cry ſo loud, ſo aſſiduouſly, ſo earneſtly, as all whom it concernes (and it concernes all) may heare it: Hurt not the earth, withhold not the winds, be you no occaſions, by your neglecting the Goſpel of Chriſt Jeſus, that he ſuffer it to be removed from you; and know withall, that you doe neglect this Goſpel, (how often ſoever you heare it preached) if you doe not practice it. Nor is that a ſufficient practice of hearing, to deſire to heare more, except thy hearing bring thee to leave thy ſinnes; without that, at the laſt day thou ſhalt meet thy Sermons amongſt thy ſinnes; And when Chriſt Jeſus ſhall charge thee with falſe weights and meaſures in thy ſhop all the week, with prevarication in judgement, with extortion in thy practice, and in thine office, he ſhall adde to that, And beſides this, thou waſt at Church twice that Sunday; when he ſhall have told thee, Thou didſt not feed me, thou didſt not clothe me, he ſhall aggravate all with that, Yet thou heardſt two Sermons that Sunday, beſides thine interlineary week Lectures. The means to keep this wind awake, (to continue the liberty of the Goſpel) is this loud voice, (aſſiduous and pertinent preaching) but Sermons unpractiſed are threepiled ſins, and God ſhall turne, as their prayers, ſo their preaching into ſin. For this injunction, this inhibition which this Angel ſerves upon the four Angels, That they ſhould not hurt the world by withholding the winds, that is, not hinder the propagation & paſſage of the Goſpel, was not perpetuall, it was limited with a Donec, Till ſomething were done in the behalfe and favour of the world, and that was, Till the ſervants of God were ſealed in their foreheads, which is our laſt Conſideration.

The ſervants of God being ſealed in their foreheads in the Sacrament of Baptiſme, when they are received into the care of the Church, all thoſe meanes which God hath provided for his ſervants, in his Church, to reſiſt afflictions and tentations, are intended to be conferred upon them in that ſeale; This ſealing of them is a communicating to them all thoſe aſſiſtances of the Chriſtian Church: Then they have a way of prevention of ſin, by hearing; a way to Abſolution, by Confeſſion; a way to Reconciliation, by a worthy receiving the body and bloud of Chriſt Jeſus: And theſe helps of the Chriſtian Church, thus conferred in Baptiſme, keep open ſtill, (if theſe be rightly uſed) that other ſeale, the ſeale of the Spirit; After ye heard the Goſpel, and beleeved, ye were ſealed with the holy ſpirit of promiſe: and ſo alſo, God hath anointed us, and ſealed us, and given us the earneſt of his Spirit in our hearts. So that beſides the ſeal in the forehead, which is an intereſt and title to all the aſſiſtances and benefits of the Church, publique prayer, preaching, Sacraments and ſacramentall helps, there is a ſeale of the Spirit of God, that that Spirit beares witneſſe with my ſpirit, that I performe the conditions paſſed between God and me, under the firſt ſeale, my Baptiſme. But becauſe this ſecond ſeale, (the obſignation and teſti-

Clamavit.

Baſil.

Donec ſignentur.

Epheſ. 1. 13.
2 Cor. 1. 22.

teſtification of the inward Spirit) depends upon the good uſe of the firſt ſeale, (the participation of the helps of the Church, given me in Baptiſme) therefore the Donec in our Text, (Hurt them not till they be ſealed) reaches but to the firſt ſeale, the ſeale of Baptiſme, and in that, of all Gods ordinary graces, ordinarily exhibited in his Ordinances. A

So then; this Angel takes care of us, till he have delivered us over to the ſweet and powerfull helps of that Church, which God hath purchaſed with his blood; when hee hath placed us there, he looks that we ſhould doe ſomething for our ſelves, which, before we were there, and made partakers of Gods graces in his Church by Baptiſme, we could not doe; for in this, this Angels Commiſſion determines, That we be ſealed in the fore-heads, That we be taken from the Common, into Gods incloſures, impayled in his Park, received into his Church, where our ſalvation depends upon the good uſe of thoſe meanes. Uſe therefore thoſe meanes well; and put not God to ſave thee by a miracle, without meanes. Truſt not to an irreſiſtible grace, that at one time or other God will have thee, whether thou wilt or no. Tolle voluntatem, & non eſt infernus; If thou couldſt quench thine owne will, thou hadſt quenched hell; If thou couldſt be content, willing to be in hell, hell were not hell. So, if God ſave a man againſt his will, heaven is not heaven; If he be loath to come thither, ſorry that he ſhall be there, he hath not the joy of heaven, and then heaven is not heaven. Put not God to ſave thee by miracle; God can ſave an Image by miracle; by miracle he can make an Image a man; If man can make God of bread, certainly God can make a man of an Image, and ſo ſave him; but God hath made thee his own Image, and afforded thee meanes of ſalvation: Uſe them. God compels no man. The Maſter of the feaſt invited many; ſolemnly, before hand; they came not: He ſent his ſervants to call in the poore, upon the ſudden; and they came; ſo he receives late commers. And there is a Compelle intrare, He ſends a ſervant to compell ſome to come in. But that was but a ſervants work, The Maſter onely invited; he compelled none. We the ſervants of God, have certaine compulſories, to bring men hither; The denouncing of Gods Judgements, the cenſures of the Church, Excommunications, and the reſt, are compulſories. The State hath compulſories too, in the penall Laws. But all this is but to bring them into the houſe, to Church; Compelle intrare. We can compell them to come to the firſt ſeale, to Baptiſme; we can compell men, to bring their children to that Sacrament; But to ſalvation, onely the Maſter brings; and (in that Parable) the Maſter does onely invite; he compells none: Though his corrections may ſeeme to be compulſories, yet even his corrections are ſweet invitations; His corrections are ſo farre from compelling men to come to heaven, as that they put many men farther out of their way, and worke an obduration, rather then an obſequiouſneſſe.

With thoſe therefore that neglect the meanes, that he hath brought them to, in ſealing them in the fore-head, this Angel hath no more to doe, but gives them over to the power of the foure deſtroying Angels. With thoſe that attend thoſe meanns, he proceeds; and, in their behalfe, his Donec, (Spare them till I have ſealed them) becomes the bleſſed Virgins Donec, ſhe was a Virgin till ſhe had her Child, and a Virgin after too; And it becomes our bleſſed Saviours Donec, He ſits at his Fathers right hand, till his enemies bee made his foot-ſtoole, and after too; So theſe deſtroying Angels, that had no power over them till they were ſealed, ſhall have no power over them after they are ſealed, but they ſhall paſſe from ſeale to ſeale; after that ſeale on the fore-head, Ne erubeſcant Euangelium, (We ſigne him with the ſigne of the Croſſe, in token, that hereafter he ſhall not be aſhamed, to confeſſe the faith of Chriſt Crucified) He ſhall come alſo to thoſe ſeales, which our Saviour recommends to his Spouſe, Set me as a ſeale on thy heart, and as a ſeale on thine arme; S. Ambroſe collects them, and connects them together, Signaculum Chriſti in corde, ut diligamus, in fronte, ut confiteamur, in brachio, ut operemur; God ſeales us in the heart, that we might love him, and in the fore-head, that we might profeſſe it, and in the hand, that we might declare and practiſe it; and then the whole purpoſe of this bleſſed Angel in our Text, is perfected in us, and we our ſelves are made partakers of the ſolemnity of this day, which we celebrate, for we our ſelves enter in the Communion of Saints, by theſe three ſeales, Of Beliefe, Of Profeſſion, Of Works and Practiſe.

Bernar. B

Luke 14.23. C

Mat. 1.25. Pſal. 110.1. D

Rom. 1.16.

Cant. 8.6. E

SERMONS

Preached upon

THE CONVERSION OF S. PAVL.

SERM. XLVI.

Preached at S. Pauls, The Sunday after the Converſion of S. PAUL. 1624.

ACTS 9.4.

And he fell to the earth, and heard a voyce, ſaying, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?

Et us now praiſe famous Men, and our Fathers that begat us, (ſaies the Wiſeman) that is, that aſſiſted our ſecond generation, our ſpirituall Regeneration; Let us praiſe them, commemorate them. The Lord hath wrought great glory by them, through his power from the beginning, ſaies he there, that is, It hath alwaies beene the Lords way to glorifie himſelfe in the converſion of Men, by the miniſtery of Men. For he adds, They were leaders of the people by their counſaile, and by their knowledge and learning meet for the people, wiſe and eloquent men in their inſtructions; and that is, That God who gives theſe gifts for this purpoſe, looks for the employment of theſe gifts, to the edification of others, to his glory. There be of them, that have left a name behinde them. (as it is alſo added in that place) that is, That though God can amply reward his ſervants in the next world, yet he does it ſometimes in this world; and, though not with temporall happineſſes, in their life, yet with honor, and commemorations, and celebrations of them, after they are gone out of this life, they leave a name behind them. And amongſt them, in a high place, ſhines our bleſſed and glorious Apoſtle S. Paul, whoſe Converſion the Church celebrates now, and for the celebration thereof, hath appointed this part of Scripture from whence this text ariſes, to be the Epiſtle of the Day; And he fell to the earth, and heard a voyce, ſaying, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?

Ecclus. 44. 1.

Ver. 2.

Ver. 4.

Ver. 8.

Diviſio.

There are words in the text, that will reach to all the Story of S. Pauls Converſion, embrace all, involve and enwrap all; we muſt contract them; into leſſe then three parts, we cannot well; thoſe will be theſe; firſt, The Perſon, Saul, He, He fell to the earth; and then, his humiliation, his exinanition of himſelfe, his deveſting, putting off of himſelfe, He fell to the earth; and laſtly, his inveſting of Chriſt, his putting on of Chriſt, his riſing againe by the power of a new inanimation, a new ſoule breathed into him from Chriſt, He heard a voyce, ſaying, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Now, a re-diſtributi-on, a ſub-diviſion of theſe parts, into their branches, we ſhall preſent to you anon, more opportunely, as we ſhall come in due order to the handling of the parts themſelves. In the firſt, the branches will be but theſe; Sauls indiſpoſition when Chriſt tooke him in hand, and Chriſts worke upon him; what he found him, what he left him, will determine our firſt part, The perſon.

1. Part. Quid ante.

Firſt then, what he was at that time, the Holy Ghoſt gives evidence enough againſt him, and he gives enough againſt himſelfe. Of that which the Holy Ghoſt gives, you may ſee a great many heavy pieces, a great many appliable circumſtances, if at any time, at home, you do but paraphraſe, and ſpread to your ſelves the former part of this Chapter, to this text. Take a little preparation from me; Adhuc ſpirans, ſaies the firſt verſe, Saul yet breathing threatnings and ſlaughter, Then when he was in the height of his fury, Chriſt laid hold upon him. It was, for the moſt part, Chriſts method of curing. Then Mat. 8. 24. when the Sea was in a tempeſtuous rage, when the waters covered the ſhip, and the ſtorme ſhaked even that which could remove mountaines, the faith of the Diſciples, then Chriſt rebukes the winde, and commands a calme. Then when the Sun was gone out to run his race as a Giant, (as David ſpeaks) then God by the mouth of another, of Ioſhuah, bids the Sun ſtand ſtill. Then when that uncleane ſpirit foam'd, and fum'd, and tore, and rent the poſſeſſed perſons, then Chriſt commanded them to go out. Let the fever alone, ſay our Phyſitians, till ſome fits be paſſed, and then we ſhall ſee farther, and diſcerne better. The note is S. Chryſoſtomes, and he applies it to Chriſts proceeding with Saul; Non expectavit ut fatigatus debacchando manſueſceret, ſayes he, Chriſt ſtaid not till Saul being made drunke with blood, were caſt into a ſlumber, as ſatisfied with the blood of Chriſtians; Sed in media inſania ſuperavit, but in the midſt of his fit, he gave him phyſick, in the midſt of his madneſſe, he reclaimes him. So is it alſo part of the evidence that the Holy Ghoſt gives againſt him, Quod petiit Epiſtolas, that he ſued to the State for a Commiſſion to perſecute Chriſtians. When the State will put men to ſome kinde of neceſſity of concurring to the endamaging or endangering of the cauſe of Chriſt, and will be diſpleaſed with them, if they doe not, men make to themſelves, and to their conſciences ſome faint colour of excuſe: But when they themſelves ſet actions on foote, which are not required at their hands, where is their evaſion? Then when Saul ſued out this Commiſſion, That if he found any of that way, (that is, Chriſtians) (for he had ſo ſcattered them before, that he was not ſure to finde any, They did not appeare in any whole body, dangerous, or ſuſpicious to the State) but, If hee found any, Any man or woman, That he might have the Power of the State, ſo as that he need not feare men, That hee might have the impartiality, and the inflexibility of the State, ſo as that he need not pity women, Then when his glory was to bring them bound to Ieruſalem, that he might magnifie his triumph and greatneſſe in the eye of the world, Then, then ſayes Chriſt, to this tempeſt, Be calme, to this uncleane ſpirit, Come out, to this Sun, in his own eſtimation, Go no farther.

Act. 22. 4. Act. 26. 11. Thus much evidence the Holy Ghoſt gives againſt him; and thus much more himſelfe, I perſecuted this way unto the death; I bound and delivered into priſon, both men and women; And after, more then this, I puniſhed them, and that oft, and, in every Synagogue, and, compelled them to blaſpheme, and, was exceedingly mad againſt them, and perſecuted them even unto ſtrange Cities. What could he ſay more againſt himſelfe? And then, ſayes Chriſt, to this tempeſt, Quieſce, Be ſtill, to this glaring Sunne, Siſte, ſtand ſtill, to this 1 Cor. 15. 2. uncleane ſpirit, Veni foras, come forth. In this ſenſe eſpecially doth S. Paul call himſelfe Abortivum, a perſon borne out of ſeaſon, That whereas Chriſts other Diſciples and Apoſtles, had a breeding under him, and came firſt ad Diſcipulatum, and then ad Apoſtolatum, firſt to be Diſciples, and after to be Apoſtles; S. Paul was borne a man, an Apoſtle, not carved out, as the reſt in time; but a fuſil Apoſtle, an Apoſtle powred out, and caſt in a Mold; As Adam was a perfect man in an inſtant, ſo was S. Paul an Apoſtle, as ſoone as Chriſt tooke him in hand.

Now, Beloved, wilt thou make this perverſe uſe of this proceeding, God is rich in Mercy, Therefore I cannot miſſe Mercy? Wouldeſt thou ſay, and not be thought mad for ſaying ſo, God hath created a Weſt Indies, therefore I cannot want Gold? Wilt thou be ſo ill a Logician to thy ſelfe, and to thine own damnation, as to conclude ſo, God is alwayes the ſame in himſelfe, therefore he muſt be alwayes the ſame to me? So ill a Muſician as to ſay, God is all Concord, therefore He and I can never diſagree? So ill a Hiſtorian as to ſay, God hath called Saul, a Perſecutor, then when he breathed threatnings and ſlaughter, then when he ſued to the State for a Commiſſion to perſecute Chriſt, God hath called a theife, then when he was at the laſt gaſpe; And therefore if he have a minde to me, he will deale ſo with me too, and, if he have no ſuch minde, no man can imprint, or infuſe a new minde in God? God forbid. It is not ſafe concluding out of ſingle Inſtances. It is true, that if a ſoure, and heavy, and ſevere man, will adde to the diſcomforts of a diſconſolate ſoule, and in that ſouls ſadneſſe, and dejection of ſpirit, will heap up examples, that God hath ſtill ſuffered high-minded ſinners to proceed and to periſh in their irreligious wayes, and tell that poore ſoule, (as Iobs company did him) him) It is true, you take God aright, God never pardons ſuch as you, in theſe caſes, theſe ſingular, theſe individuall examples, That God hath done otherwiſe once, have their uſe. One inſtance to the contrary deſtroys any peremptory Rule, no man muſt ſay, God never doth it; He did it to Saul here, He did it to the Theife upon the Croſſe. But to that preſumptuous ſinner, who ſins on, becauſe God ſhewed mercy to One at laſt, we muſt ſay, a miſerable Comforter is that Rule, that affords but one example. Nay, is there one example? The Converſion of Saul a Perſecutor, and of the Theife upon the Croſſe, is become Proverbium peccatorum, The ſinners proverb, and ſerves him, and ſatisfies him in all caſes. But is there any ſuch thing? Such a ſtory there is, and it is as true as Goſpel, it is the truth of Goſpel it ſelfe; But was this a late Repentance? Anſwer S. Cyril, Rogo te frater, Tell me, Beloved, Thou that deferreſt thy Repentance, doeſt thou do it upon confidence of theſe examples? Non in fine, ſed in principio converſus latro; Thou deludeſt thine own ſoule; The Theife was not converted at laſt, but at firſt; As ſoone as God afforded him any Call, he came; And at how many lights haſt thou winked? And to how many Cals haſt thou ſtopped thine eares, that deferreſt thy repentance? Chriſt ſaid to him, Hodie mecum eris, This day thou ſhalt be with me in paradiſe; when thou canſt finde ſuch another day, looke for ſuch another mercy; A day that cleft the grave-ſtones of dead men; A day that cleft the Temple it ſelfe; A day that the Sunne durſt not ſee; A day that ſaw the ſoule of God (may we not ſay ſo, ſince that Man was God too) depart from Man; There ſhall be no more ſuch dayes; and therefore preſume not of that voyce, Hodie, This day thou ſhalt be with me, if thou make thy laſt minute that day, though Chriſt, to magnifie his mercy, and his glory, and to take away all occaſion of abſolute deſperation, did here, under ſo many diſadvantages call, and draw S. Paul to him. Gregor.

But we ſay no more of that, of the danger of ſinning by precedent, and preſuming of mercy by example; we paſſe from our firſt Conſideration, From what, to the other, To what, Chriſt brought this perſecutor, this Saul. He brought him to that remarkable height, as that the Church celebrates the Converſion of no man but this. Many bloody Executioners were converted to Chriſt, even in the act of that bloody Execution; Then when they tooke a delight in tearing the bowels of Chriſtians, they were received into the bowels of Chriſt Jeſus, and became Chriſtians. Men that road to Market, and ſaw an Execution upon the way; Men that opened a window to take ayre, and ſaw an Execution in the ſtreet; The Eccleſiaſticall Story abounds with examples of occaſionall Convertits, and upon ſtrange occaſions; but yet the Church celebrates no Converſion, but this. The Church doth not conſider the Martyrs as borne till they die; till the world ſee how they perſevered to the end, ſhee takes no knowledge of them; Therefore ſhee cals the dayes of their deaths, Natalitia, their birth-dayes; Then ſhe makes account they are borne, when they die. But of S. Paul the Church makes her ſelfe aſſured the firſt minute; and therefore celebrates his Converſion, and none but his. Here was a true Tranſubſtantiation, and a new Sacrament. Theſe few words, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me, are words of Conſecration; After theſe words, Saul was no longer Saul, but he was Chriſt: Vivit in me Chriſtus, ſayes he, It is not I that live, not I that do any thing, but Chriſt in me. It is but a little way that S. Chryſoſtome goes, when he ſpeaks of an inferior Tranſubſtantiation, of a change of affections, and ſayes Agnus ex Lupo, that here is another manner of Lycanthropy, then when a man is made a Wolfe; for here a Wolfe is made a Lambe, Ex lupo Agnus. Ex vepribus racemus, ſayes that Father, A bramble is made a vine; Ex zizaniis frumentum, Cockle and tares become wheat; Ex pirata gubernator, A Pirat becomes a ſafe Pilot; Ex noviſſimo primus, The lees are come to ſwim on the top, and the laſt is growne firſt; and ex abortivo perfectus, He that was borne out of time, hath not onely the perfection, but the excellency of all his lineaments. S. Chryſoſtome goes farther then this, Ex blaſphemo, os Chriſti, & lyra ſpiritus, He that was the mouth of blaſphemy, is become the mouth of Chriſt, He that was the inſtrument of Satan, is now the organ of the Holy Ghoſt. He goes very far, when he ſayes, In Cœlis homo, in terris Angelus, Being yet but upon earth, he is an Angel, and being yet but a man, he is already in Heaven. Yet S. Paul was another manner of Sacrament, and had another manner of Tranſubſtantiation, then all this; As he was made Idem ſpiritus cum Domino, The ſame ſpirit with the Lord, ſo in his very body, he had Stigmata, the very marks of the Lord Jeſus. From ſuch a lowneſſe, rayſed to ſuch a height, as that Origen ſayes, many did beleeve, that S. Paul had been that Holy Ghoſt, which Chriſt had promiſed to the world, after his departing from it. Quid factus Gal. 6. 17.

It

It is but a little way that S.Ierome hath carried his commendation neither, when he cals him Rugitum leonis, The roaring of a Lion, if we conſider in how little a foreſt the roaring of a Lion is determined; but that he calls him Rugitum Leonis noſtri, The roaring of our Lion, of the Lion of the Tribe of Iuda, That as far as Chriſt is heard, S.Paul is heard too; Idem. Quem quoties lego, non verba mihi videor audire, ſed tonitrua, Whereſoever I open S.Pauls Epiſtles, I meet not words, but thunder, and univerſall thunder, thunder that paſſes through all the world. For, Theodor. Ejus excæcatio totius orbis illuminatio, That that was done upon him, wrought upon all the world; he was ſtruck blind, and all the world ſaw the better for that. So univerſall a Prieſt, (ſayes S.Chryſoſtome, who loves to be ſpeaking of S.Paul) as that he ſacrificed, not ſheep and goats, ſed ſeipſum, but himſelfe; and not onely that, ſed totum mundum, He prepared the whole world, as a ſacrifice to God. He built an Arke, that is, eſtabliſhed a Church; and to this day, receives, not eight, but all into that Arke: And whereas in Noahs Ark, Quem corvum recepit, corvum emiſit, If he came in a Raven, he went out a Raven; S.Paul, in his Arke, Ex milvis facit columbas, as himſelf was, ſo he tranſubſtantiates all them, and makes them Doves of Ravens. Nay, ſo over-abſolutely did he ſacrifice himſelfe, and his ſtate in this world, for this world, as that he ſacrificed his reverſion, his future ſtate, the glory and joy of heaven, for his brethren, and choſe rather to be Anathema, ſeparated from Chriſt, then they ſhould. I love thee, ſayes S. Chryſoſtome to Rome, for many excellencies, many greatneſſes; But I love thee ſo well, ſayes he, therefore becauſe S.Paul loved thee ſo well. Qualem roſam Roma Chriſto, (as he purſues this contemplation) What a fragrant roſe ſhall Rome preſent Chriſt with, when he comes to Judgement, in re-delivering to him the body of S.Paul? And though he joyne them both together, Iugati boves Eccleſiæ, That S.Peter and S. Paul were that yoak of oxen that ploughed the whole Church, Though he ſay of both, Quot carceres ſanctificaſtis? How many Priſons have you two conſecrated, and made Priſons Churches? Quot catenas illuſtraſtis? How many fetters and chains of iron have you two changed into chaines of gold? Yet we may obſerve a difference in S. Chryſoſtomes expreſſing of perſons ſo equall to one another, Quid Petro majus? ſayes he, But, Quid Paulo par fuit? What can exceed Peter, or what can equall Paul? Still be all this far from occaſioning any man to preſume upon God, becauſe he afforded ſo abundant mercy to a Perſecuter: but ſtill from this, let every faint ſoule eſtabliſh it ſelfe in a confidence in God; God that would find nothing to except, nothing to quarrell at, in S. Paul, will not lie heavy upon thy ſoule, though thou muſt ſay, as he did, Quorum ego maximus, That thou art a greater ſinner then thou knoweſt any other man to be.

2 Part. We are, in our order propoſed at firſt, devolved now to our ſecond Part; from the perſon, and in that, what he was found, A vehement perſecuter, And then, what he was made, A laborious Apoſtle, To the Manner, to his Humiliation, Cecidit ſuper terram, He fell, and he fell to the ground, and he fell blind, as by the hiſtory, and context appeares. We uſe to call every declination, of any kind, and in any ſubject, a falling; for, for our bodies, we ſay a man is falne ſick, And for his ſtate, falne poore, And for his mind, falne mad, And for his conſcience, falne deſperate; we are borne low, and yet we fall every way lower, ſo univerſall is our falling ſickneſſe. Sin it ſelfe is but a falling; The irremediable ſin of the Angels, The undeterminable ſinne of Adam, is called but ſo, The fall of Adam, The fall of Angels. And therefore the effectuall viſitation of the holy Ghoſt to man, is called a falling too; we are fallen ſo low, as that when the holy Ghoſt is pleaſed to fetch us againe, and to infuſe his grace, he is ſtill ſaid to fall upon us. But the fall which we conſider in the Text, is not a figurative falling, not into a decay of eſtate, nor decay of health, nor a ſpirituall falling into ſin, a decay of grace; but it is a medicinall falling, a falling under Gods hand, but ſuch a falling under his hand, as that he takes not off his hand from him that is falne, but throwes him downe therefore that he may raiſe him. To this poſture he brings Paul, now, when he was to re-inanimate him with his ſpirit; rather, to pre-inanimate him; for, indeed, no man hath a ſoule till he have grace.

Chriſt, who in his humane nature hath received from the Father all Judgement, and power, and dominion over this world, hath received all this, upon that condition that Pſal. 2. 8. he ſhall governe in this manner, Aske of me, and I ſhall give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance, ſayes the Father; How is he to uſe them, when he hath them? Thus, Thou ſhalt breake them with a rod of iron, and daſh them in pieces like a potters veſſell. Now, God meant well to the Nations, in this bruiſing and breaking of them; God intended not an

A an annihilation of the Nations, but a reformarion; for Chriſt askes the Nations for an Inheritance, not for a triumph; therefore it is intended of his way of governing them; and his way is to bruiſe and beat them; that is, firſt to caſt them downe, before he can raiſe them up, firſt to breake them before he can make them in his faſhion. Novit Dominus vulnerare ad amorem; The Lord, and onely the Lord knowes how to wound us, out of love; more then that, how to wound us into love; more then all that, to wound us into love, not onely with him that wounds us, but into love with the wound it ſelfe, with the very affliction that he inflicts upon us; The Lord knowes how to ſtrike us ſo, as that we ſhall lay hold upon that hand that ſtrikes us, and kiſſe that hand that wounds us. Ad vitam interficit, ad exaltationem proſternit, ſayes the ſame Father; No man kills his enemy therefore, that his enemy might have a better life in heaven; that is not his end in killing him: It is Gods end; Therefore he brings us to death, that by that gate B he might lead us into life everlaſting; And he hath not diſcovered, but made that Northerne paſſage, to paſſe by the frozen Sea of calamity, and tribulation, to Paradiſe, to the heavenly Jeruſalem. There are fruits that ripen not, but by froſt; There are natures, (there are ſcarce any other) that diſpoſe not themſelves to God, but by affliction. And as Nature lookes for the ſeaſon for ripening, and does not all before, ſo Grace lookes for the aſſent of the ſoule, and does not perfect the whole worke, till that come. It is Nature that brings the ſeaſon, and it is Grace that brings the aſſent; but till the ſeaſon for the fruit, till the aſſent of the ſoule come, all is not done. Auguſt.

Therefore God begun in this way with Saul, and in this way he led him all his life. Tot pertulit mortes, quot vixit dies, He dyed as many deaths, as he lived dayes; for ſo himſelfe ſayes, Quotidie morior, I die daily; God gave him ſucke in blood, and his owne blood was his daily drink; He catechized him with calamities at firſt, and calamities C were his daily Sermons, and meditations after; and to authorize the hands of others upon him, and to accuſtome him to ſubmit himſelf to the hands of others without murmuring, Chriſt himſelf ſtrikes the firſt blow, and with that, Cecidit, he fell, (which was our firſt conſideration, in his humiliation) and then, Cecidit in terram, He fell to the ground, which is our next. Chryſoſt.

I take no farther occaſion from this Circumſtance, but to arme you with conſolation, how low ſoever God be pleaſed to caſt you, Though it be to the earth, yet he does not ſo much caſt you downe, in doing that, as bring you home. Death is not a baniſhing of you out of this world; but it is a viſitation of your kindred that lie in the earth; neither are any nearer of kin to you, then the earth it ſelfe, and the wormes of the earth. You heap earth upon your ſoules, and encumber them with more and more fleſh, by a ſuperfluous and luxuriant diet; You adde earth to earth in new purchaſes, and meaſure not D by Acres, but by Manors, nor by Manors, but by Shires; And there is a little Quillet, a little Cloſe, worth all theſe, A quiet Grave. And therefore, when thou readeſt, That God makes thy bed in thy ſickneſſe, rejoyce in this, not onely that he makes that bed, where thou doſt lie, but that bed where thou ſhalt lie; That that God, that made the whole earth, is now making thy bed in the earth, a quiet grave, where thou ſhalt ſleep in peace, till the Angels Trumpet wake thee at the Reſurrection, to that Judgement where thy peace ſhall be made before thou commeſt, and writ, and ſealed, in the blood of the Lamb. In terram.

Saul falls to the earth; So farre; But he falls no lower. God brings his ſervants to a great lowneſſe here; but he brings upon no man a perverſe ſenſe, or a diſtruſtfull ſuſpition of falling lower hereafter; His hand ſtrikes us to the earth, by way of humiliation; But it is not his hand, that ſtrikes us into hell, by way of deſperation. Will you tell me, E that you have obſerved and ſtudied Gods way upon you all your life, and out of that can conclude what God meanes to doe with you after this life? That God took away your Parents in your infancy, and left you Orphanes then, That he hath croſſed you in all your labours in your calling, ever ſince, That he hath opened you to diſhonours, and calumnies, and miſ-interpretations, in things well intended by you, That he hath multiplied ſickneſſes upon you, and given you thereby an aſſurance of a miſerable, and a ſhort life, of few, and evill dayes, nay, That he hath ſuffered you to fall into ſins, that you your ſelves have hated, To continue in ſins, that you your ſelves have been weary of, To relapſe into ſins, that you your ſelves have repented; And will you conclude out of this, that God had no good purpoſe upon you, that if ever he had meant to doe you good, he would would never have gone thus farre, in heaping of evills upon you? Upon what doeſt thou ground this? upon thy ſelfe? Becauſe thou ſhouldeſt not deal thus with any man, whom thou mean'ſt well to? How poore, how narrow, how impious a meaſure of God, is this, that he muſt doe, as thou wouldeſt doe, if thou wert God! God hath not made a week without a Sabbath; no tentation, without an iſſue; God inflicts no calamity, no cloud, no eclipſe, without light, to ſee eaſe in it, if the patient will look upon that which God hath done to him, in other caſes, or to that which God hath done to others, at other times. Saul fell to the ground, but he fell no lower; God brings us to humiliation, but not to deſperation. A

Cæcus. He fell; he fell to the ground, And he fell blinde; for ſo it is evident in the ſtory. Chriſt Iohn 9.39. had ſaid to the Phariſees, I came into the world, that they which ſee, might be made blinde; And the Phariſees ask him, Have you been able to doe ſo upon us? Are we blinde? Here Chriſt gives them an example; a reall, a literall, an actuall example; Saul, a Phariſee, is made blinde. He that will fill a veſſell with wine, muſt take out the water; He that will fill a covetous mans hand with gold, muſt take out the ſilver that was there before, ſayes S. Chryſoſtome. Chriſt, who is about to infuſe new light into Saul, withdrawes that light that was in him before; That light, by which Saul thought he ſaw all before, and thought himſelfe a competent Judge, which was the onely true Religion, and that all others
Ier. 51. 17. were to be perſecuted, even to death, that were not of his way. Stultus factus eſt omnis homo à ſcientia, ſayes God in the Prophet, Every man that truſts in his owne wit, is a
1 Cor. 3. 18. foole. But let him become a foole, that he may be wiſe, ſayes the Apoſtle; Let him be ſo, in his own eyes, and God will give him better eyes, better light, better underſtanding. Saul was ſtruck blinde, but it was a blindneſſe contracted from light; It was a light that ſtruck him blinde, as you ſee in his ſtory. This blindneſſe which we ſpeak of, which is a ſober and temperate abſtinence from the immoderate ſtudy, and curious knowledges of this world, this holy ſimplicity of the ſoule, is not a darkneſſe, a dimneſſe, a ſtupidity in the underſtanding, contracted by living in a corner, it is not an idle retiring into a Monaſtery, or into a Village, or a Country ſolitude, it is not a lazy affectation of ignorance; not darkneſſe, but a greater light, muſt make us blinde. B C

The ſight, and the Contemplation of God, and our preſent benefits by him, and our future intereſt in him, muſt make us blinde to the world ſo, as that we look upon no face, no pleaſure, no knowledge, with ſuch an Affection, ſuch an Ambition, ſuch a Devotion, as upon God, and the wayes to him. Saul had ſuch a blindneſſe, as came from light; we muſt affect no other ſimplicity, then ariſes from the knowledge of God, and his Religion. And then, Saul had ſuch a blindneſſe, as that he fell with it. There are birds, that when their eyes are cieled, ſtill ſoare up, and up, till they have ſpent all their ſtrength. Men blinded with the lights of this world, ſoare ſtill into higher places, or higher knowledges, or higher opinions; but the light of heaven humbles us, and layes flat that ſoule, which the leaven of this world had puffed and ſwelled up. That powerfull light felled Saul; but after he was fallen, his owne ſight was reſtored to him againe; Ananias ſaies to him, Brother Saul, receive thy ſight. To thoſe men, who imploy their naturall faculties to the glory of God, and their owne, and others edification, God ſhall afford an exaltation of thoſe naturall faculties; In thoſe, who uſe their learning, or their wealth, or their power, well, God ſhall increaſe that power, and that wealth, and that learning, even in this world. D

3 Part. You have ſeene Sauls ſickneſſe, and the exaltation of the diſeaſe, Then when he breathed threatnings, and ſlaughter, Then when he went in his triumph; And you have ſeen his death, The death of the righteous, His humiliation, He fell to the earth; And there remaines yet his Reſurrection; The Angel of the great Counſell, Chriſt Jeſus, with the Trumpet of his owne mouth, rayſes him, with that, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou mee? E

Vox. Firſt, he affords him a call, A voyce. Saul could not ſee; Therefore he deales not upon him by viſions. He gives a voyce; and a voyce that he might heare; God ſpeaks often, when we doe not heare; He heard it, and heard it ſaying; Not a voyce only, but a diſtinct, and intelligible voyce; and ſaying unto him, that is, appliable to himſelfe; and then, that that the voyce ſaid to him, was, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? We are unequall enemies, Thou ſeeſt I am too hard for thee, Cur tu me? why wilt thou, thou in this weakeneſſe oppoſe me? And then, we might be good friends, Thou ſeeſt I offer parly, I offer treaty,

A treaty, Cur tu me? Why wilt thou oppoſe me, me that declare ſuch a diſpoſition to be reconciled unto thee? In this ſo great a diſadvantage on thy part, why wilt thou ſtirre at all? In this ſo great a peaceableneſſe on my part, why wilt thou ſtirre againſt me? Cur tu me? Why perſecuteſt thou me?

First then, God ſpeakes: For, beloved, we are to conſider God, not as he is in himſelfe, but as he works upon us: The firſt thing that we can conſider in our way to God, is his Word. Our Regeneration is by his Word; that is, by faith, which comes by hearing; The ſeed is the word of God, ſayes Chriſt himſelfe; Even the ſeed of faith. Carry it higher, the Creation was by the word of God; Dixit, & facta ſunt, God ſpoke, and all things were made. Carry it to the higheſt of all, to Eternity, the eternall Generation, the eternall Production, the eternall Proceſſion of the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, was ſo much by the Word, as that he is the Word; Verbum erat, It was that Word, that was B made Fleſh. So that God, who cannot enter into bands to us, hath given us ſecurity enough; He hath given us his Word; His written Word, his Scriptures; His Eſſentiall Word, his Son. Our Principall, and Radicall, and Fundamentall ſecurity, is his Eſſentiall Word, his Son Chriſt Jeſus. But how many millions of generations was this Word in heaven, and never ſpoke? The Word, Chriſt himſelf, hath been as long as God hath been: But the uttering of this Word, ſpeaking hath been but ſince the Creation. Peter ſayes to Chriſt, To whom ſhall we goe? Thou haſt the words of eternall life. It is not onely, Iohn 6.68. Thou art the word of eternall life; (Chriſt is ſo) But thou haſt it; Thou haſt it, where we may come to thee for it; In thy Treaſury, in thine Ordinance, in thy Church; Thou haſt it, to derive it, to convey it upon us. Here then is the firſt ſtep of Sauls cure, and of ours, That there was not onely a word, the Word, Chriſt himſelfe, a Son of God in heaven, but a Voyce, the word uttered, and preached; Chriſt manifeſted in his Ordinance: He heard a voyce.

C He heard it. How often does God ſpeake, and no bódy heares the voyce? He ſpeaks Audivit. in his Canon, in Thunder, and he ſpeaks in our Canon, in the rumour of warres. He ſpeaks in his muſique, in the harmonious promiſes of the Goſpel, and in our muſique, in the temporall bleſſings of peace, and plenty; And we heare a noyſe in his Judgements, and wee heare a ſound in his mercies; but we heare no voyce, we doe not diſcern that this noyſe, or this ſound comes from any certain perſon; we do not feele them to be mercies, nor to be judgements uttered from God, but naturall accidents, caſuall occurrencies, emergent contingencies, which as an Atheiſt might think, would fall out though there were no God, or no commerce, no dealing, no ſpeaking between God and Man. Though Saul came not inſtantly to a perfect diſcerning who ſpoke, yet he ſaw inſtantly, it was a Perſon above nature, and therefore ſpeakes to him in that phraſe of ſubmiſſion, Quis es Domine? Lord who art thou? And after, with trembling and aſtoniſhment, (as the Text ſayes) Domine quid me vis facere? Lord what wilt thou have me to do? Then we are truliеſt ſaid to heat, when we know from whence the voyce comes. Princes are Gods Trumpet, and the Church is Gods Organ, but Chriſt Jeſus is his voyce. When he ſpeaks in the Prince, when he ſpeaks in the Church, there we are bound to heare, and happy if we doe hear. Man hath a natural way to come to God, by the eie, by the creature; So Viſible things Rom 1. ſhew the Inviſible God: But then, God hath ſuper-induced a ſupernaturall way, by the eare. For, though hearing be naturall, yet that faith in God ſhould come by hearing a man preach, is ſupernatural. God ſhut up the naturall way, in Saul, Seeing; He ſtruck him blind; But he opened the ſuper-naturall way, he inabled him to heare, and to heare him. God would have us beholden to grace, and not to nature, and to come for our ſalvation, to his Ordinances, to the preaching of his Word, and not to any other meanes. Though hee E were blinde, even that blindneſſe, as it was a humiliation, and a diverting of his former glaring lights, was a degree of mercy, of preparative mercy; yet there was a voyce, which was another degree; And a voyce that he heard, which was a degree above that; and ſo farre we are gone; And he heard it, ſaying, that is diſtinctly, and intelligibly, which is our next Circumſtance.

He heares him ſaying, that is, He heares him ſo, as that he knowes what he ſayes, ſo, Dicentem. as that he underſtands him; for, he that heares the word, and underſtands it not, is ſubject to that which Chriſt ſayes, That the wicked one comes, and catches away that that was Mat. 13. 19. ſowne. S. Auguſtine puts himſelfe earneſtly upon the contemplation of the Creation, as Confeſſ. l. 11. c. 5. Moſes hath delivered it; he findes it hard to conceive, and he ſayes, Si eſſet ante me Moſes,

If

If Moses who writ this were here, Tenerem eum, & per te obsecrarem, I would hold him fast, and beg of him, for thy sake, O my God, that he would declare this worke of the Creation more plainly unto me. But then, sayes that blessed Father, Si Hebræa voce loqueretur, If Moses should speake Hebrew to mee, mine eares might heare the sound, but my minde would not heare the voyce; I might heare him, but I should not heare what he said. This was that that distinguished betweene S. Paul, and those who were in his company at this time; S. Luke sayes in this Chapter, That they heard the voyce, and Ver. 7. Acts 22. 9. S. Paul relating the story againe, after sayes, They heard not the voyce of him that spoke to me; they heard a confused sound, but they distinguished it not to be the voyce of God, nor discerned Gods purpose in it. In the twelfth of Iohn, there came a voyce from Heaven, Ver. 28. from God himselfe, and the people said, It thundred. So apt is naturall man to ascribe even Gods immediate and miraculous actions to naturall causes; apt to rest and determine in Nature, and leave out God. The Poet chides that weakenesse, (as he cals it) to be afraid of Gods judgements, or to call naturall accidents judgements; Quo morbo mentem concussę? timore Deorum, sayes he; he sayes The Conscience may be over-tender, and that such timerous men, are sick of the feare of God; But it is a blessed disease The feare of God, and the true way to true health. And though there be a morall constancy that becomes a Christian well, not to bee easily shaken with the variations and revolutions of this world, yet it becomes him to establish his constancy in this, That God hath a good purpose in that action, not that God hath no hand in that action; That God will produce good out of it, not that God hath nothing to doe in it. The Magicians themselves were Exod. 6. 16. forced to confesse Digitum Dei, The finger of God, in a small matter. Never thinke it a weakenesse, to call that a judgement of God, which others determine in Nature; Doe so, so far as works to thy edification, who seest that judgement, though not so far, as to argue, and conclude the finall condemnation of that man upon whom that judgement is fallen. Certainely, we were better call twenty naturall accidents judgements of God, then frustrate Gods purpose in any of his powerfull deliverances, by calling it a naturall accident, and suffer the thing to vanish so, and God be left unglorified in it, or his Church unedified by it. Then we heare God, when we understand what he sayes; And therefore, as we are bound to blesse God, that he speakes to us, and heares us speake to him, in a language which wee understand, and not in such a strange language, as that a stranger 1 Cor. 14. 23. who should come in and heare it, would thinke the Congregation mad; So also let us blesse him for that holy tendernesse, to be apt to feele his hand in every accident, and to discerne his presence in every thing that befals us. Saul heard the voyce, saying; He understood what it said, and by that, found that it was directed to him, which is also another step in this last part.

Sibi. This is an impropriation without sacriledge, and an enclosure of a Common without damage, to make God mine owne, to finde that all that God sayes is spoken to me, and all that Christ suffered was suffered for me. And as Saul found this voyce at first, to be directed to him, so ever after he bends his eye the same way, and observes the working of God especially upon himselfe; As at the beginning, so in the way too: particularly there, 1 Cor. 15. By the grace of God I am that I am; and then, His grace was bestowed on me, And not in vaine; and againe, I have laboured more abundantly then all; And after all, still he considers himselfe, and findes himselfe to be the greatest sinner, Quorum ego maximus. It is called a greatnesse of spirit, or constancy, but it is indeed an incorrigible height of pride, when a man will not beleeve that he is meant in a libel, if he be not named in that libel. It is a fearfull obduration, to be Sermon-proofe, or not to take knowledge, that a judgement is denounced against him, because he is not named in the denouncing of that judgement. Is not thy name Simon Magus, if thou buy and sell spirituall things thy selfe? and is not thy servants name Gehazi, if he exact after? Is not thy name Cain, if thou rise up against thy brother? And is not thy name Zacheus, if thou multiply thy wealth by oppression? Is not thy name Dinah, if thou gad abroad, to see who will solicite thee? And is not the name of Putiphars Wife upon thee, if thou stay at home and solicite thy servants? Post-date the whole Bible, and whatsoever thou heareſt spoken of such, as thou art, before, beleeve all that to be spoken but now, and spoken to thee. This was one happinesse here, that Saul found this voyce to be directed to him; And another (which is our last Consideration) is what this voyce said; it said, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

Saul. Here, to make sure of him, God cals him by his name, that hee should not be able to transfer

A transfer the ſummons upon any other, or ſay it was not he. They ſay that our Noctambulones, men that walke in their ſleepe, will wake if they be called by their names. To wake Saul out of this dreame, (for, to thinke to oppoſe Chriſt and his cauſe, is, in the higheſt perſon of the world, of what power or of what counſel ſoever, but a vertiginous dreame, and a giddy vapour) to wake him, he cals him by his name, to let him know he meanes him; and to wake him throughly, he cals him twice, Saul, and Saul againe. The great deſolation which was to fall upon that land, God intimates, God interminates, God intonates with ſuch a vehemency, Terra, terra, terra, Earth, earth, earth heare the word of the Lord. God ſhould be heard at firſt, beleeved at firſt; but ſuch is his abundant goodneſſe, as that he ingeminates, multiplies his warnings; And to this whole land he hath ſaid, Terra, terra, terra, Earth, earth, earth heare the Word of the Lord; Once in an Invaſion, once in a Powder-treaſon, and againe, and againe in peſtilentiall contagions; And

B to every one of us, he hath ſaid oftner then ſo, Duſt, duſt, duſt why doeſt thou lift up thy ſelf againſt thy Maker? Saul, Saul why perſecuteſt thou mee?

Saul, Saul. Ier. 22. 29.

Here Chriſt cals the afflictions of thoſe that are his, in his purpoſe, his afflictions. Chriſt will not abſolutely verifie his owne words, to his owne eaſe; He had ſaid before this, upon the Croſſe, Conſummatum eſt, All is finiſhed; But though all were finiſhed in his Perſon, he hath a daily paſſion in his Saints ſtill. This language which the Apoſtle learnt of Chriſt here, himſelfe practiſed, and ſpake after, Who is weake, and I am not weake? who is offended, and I burne not? Since Chriſt does ſuffer in our ſufferings, be this our conſolation, Till he be weary, we ſhould not be weary, nor faint, nor murmur under our burdens; and this too, That when he is weary, he will deliver us even for his owne ſake; for he, though he cannot ſuffer paine, may ſuffer diſhonour in our ſufferings; therefore attend his leiſure.

Me.

2 Cor. 11. 29.

C We end all in this, Cur tu me? Why doeſt Thou perſecute Me? Why Saul Chriſt? Put it upon a Nation, (what is any Saul, any one man to a Nation?) Put it upon all the Nations of the World, and you ſhall heare God aske with an indignation, Quare fremuerunt Gentes? Why doe the heathen rage, why do the people imagine a vaine thing? why will they doe it? what can they get? He that ſitteth in the Heavens ſhall laugh; The Lord ſhall have them in deriſion. Chriſt came into the Temple and diſputed with the Doctors; but hee did not deſpiſe them, he did not laugh at them. When all the Midianites, and all the Amalekites, and all the Children of the Eaſt, were in a body againſt Iſrael, God did not laugh at them. Gideon his Generall, muſtered two and thirty thouſand againſt them. God would not imploy ſo many in the day of Battaile, yet he did not laugh at them, hee did not whip them out of the field, he made the face of an Army, though it were but three hundred. But when God can chuſe his way, Hee can call in Nation againſt Nation, he D can caſt a dampe upon any Nation, and make them afraid of one another, He can doe an execution upon them by themſelves, (I preſume you remember thoſe ſtories in the Bible, where God did proceed by ſuch wayes) or he can ſit ſtill in a ſcorne, and let them melt away of themſelves; when he can caſt downe Saul to the earth, and never appeare in the cauſe, benight his noone, fruſtrate his purpoſes, evacuate his hopes, annihilate him in the height of his glory, Cur tu me? why will any Saul, any Nation, any World of Sauls perſecute Chriſt, any ſinner tempt him, who is ſo much too hard for him?

Tu me.

Pſal. 2. 1. Ver. 4.

Iudg. 6. 33.

Cur me? Why doeſt thou offer this to me, who being thus much too hard for thee, would yet faine be friends with thee? and therefore came to a parley, to a treaty? for, verba hæc, non tam arguentis, quam defendentis, ſayes S. Chryſoſtome: Theſe are not ſo much offenſive as defenſive words; He would not confound Saul, but he would not betray his own honour. To many Nations God hath never ſpoken; To the Jews he ſpoke,

E but ſuffered them to miſtake him; To ſome whole Chriſtian Churches he ſpeaks, but he lets them ſpeake too; he lets them make their word equall to his; To many of us he hath ſpoken, and chidden, but given over before we are cured; As he ſayes of Iſrael, in a manner, That ſhe is not worth his anger, not worth his puniſhing, A people laden with ſinnes, why ſhould they any more be ſmitten? Why ſhould I go about to recover them? But if God ſpeake to thee ſtill, and ſpeake in a mixt voyce, of Correction, and Conſolation too, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Him that receives ſo little benefit by thee, and yet is ſo loath to loſe thee, Him that can ſo eaſily ſpare thee, and yet makes thy ſoule more precious then his own life, Him that can reſolve thee, ſcatter thee, annihilate thee with a word, and yet afford ſo many words, ſo many houres conferences, ſo many Sermons to reclaime thee, why persecutest Thou Him? Answer this question, with Sauls answer to this question, by another question, Domine quid me vis facere? Lord what wilt thou have me do? Deliver thy selfe over to the will of God, and God shall deliver thee over, as he did Saul to Ananias; provide thee by his Ministery in his Ordinance, means to rectifie thee, in all dejection of spirit, light to cleare thee in all perplexities of conscience, in the wayes of thy pilgrimage, and more and more effectuall seals thereof, at the houre of thy transmigration into his joy, and thine eternall rest.

Eſay 1. 4.

SERM. XLVII.

Preached at S. Pauls, The Sunday after the Conversion of S. PAUL. 27. Ian. 1627.

ACT. 20. 25.

And now, Behold, I know, that all yee among whom I have gone preaching the kingdome of God, shall see my face no more.

WHen S. Chrysostome calls Christmas day, Metropolin omnium festorum, The Metropolitan Holyday, the principall festivall of the Church, he is likely to intend onely those festivalls which were of the Churches later institution, and means not to enwrap the Sabbath in that comparison. As S. Augustine sayes of the Sacrament of Baptisme, that it is Limen Ecclesiæ, The threshold over which we step into the Church; so is Christmas day, Limen festorum, The threshold over which we step into the festivall celebration of some other of Christs actions, and passions, and victorious overcommings of all the Acts of his Passion, such as his Resurrection, and Ascension; for, but for Christmas day, we could celebrate none of these dayes; And so, that day is Limen festorum, The threshold over which we passe to the rest. But the Sabbath is not onely Limen, or Ianua Ecclesiæ, The doore by which we enter into the Church, and into the consideration what the Church hath done, but Limen mundi, The doore by which we enter into the consideration of the World, how, and when the World was made of nothing, at the Creation, without which, we had been so far from knowing that there had been a Church, or that there had been a God, as that we our selves had had no being at all. And therefore, as our very being is before all degrees of well-being, so is the Sabbath, which remembers us of our being, before all other festivalls, that present and refresh to us the memory of our well-being: Especially to us, to whom it is not onely a Sabbath, as the Sabbath is a day of Rest, in respect of the Creation, but Dies Dominicus, The Lords day, in respect of the Redemption of the world, because the consummation of that worke of Redemption, for all that was to be done in this world, which was the Resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Christ Jesus, was accomplished upon that day, which is our Sabbath. But yet, as it did please God, to accompany the Great day, the Sabbath, with other solemne dayes too, The Passeover, and Pentecost, Trumpets, and Tabernacles, and others, and to call those other dayes Sabbaths, as well as the Sabbath it selfe; so, since he is pleased that in the Christian Church, other dayes of Holy Convocations should also be instituted, I make account, that in some measure, I do both offices, both for observing those particular festivalls that fall in the weeke, and also for the making of those particular festivalls to serve the Sabbath, when upon the Sabbath ensuing, or preceding such or such a festivall in the weeke, I take occasion to speake of that festivall, which fell into the compasse of that weeke; for, by this course, that festivall is not pretermitted, nor neglected, the particular festivall is remembred: And then, as God receives honour in the honour of his Saints, so the Sabbath hath an honour, when the festivalls, and commemorations of those Saints, are reserved to waite upon the Sabbath.

Levit. 23.

Hence

A Hence is it, that as elsewhere, I often do so, that is, Celebrate some festivall that fals in the weeke, upon the Sabbath: so, in this place, upon this very day, I have done the like, and returne now, to do so againe, that is, to celebrate the memory of our Apostle S. Paul to day, though there be a day past, since his day was, in the ordinary course, to have been celebrated. The last time that I did so, I did it in handling those words, And he fell to the earth, and heard a voyce, saying, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? which was the very act of his Conversion; A period, and a passage, which the Church celebrates in none but in S. Paul; though many others were strangely converted too, she celebrates none but his. In the words chosen for this day, And now behold I know &c. wee shall reduce to your memories, first, His proceeding in the Church after he was called, (I have gone preaching the kingdome of God among you) And then the ease, the reposednes, the acquiescence that he had in that knowledge, which God by his Spirit had given him,
B of the approach of his dissolution, and departure out of this life; (I know that all you shall see my face no more.) As those things which we see in a glasse, for the most part, must be behinde us, so that that makes our transmigration in death comfortable unto us, must be behinde us, in the testimony of a good Conscience, for things formerly done; Now behold, I know, that all yee, among whom I have gone &c.

In handling of which words, our Method shall be this; Our generall parts, being (as we have already intimated) these two, His way, and his End, His painfull course, and his cheerfull finishing of his course; His laborious battaile, and his victorious triumph: In the first, (I have gone preaching the kingdome of God among you) wee shall see, first, That there is a Transivi, as well as a Requievi acceptable to God; A discharge of a Duty, as well in going from one place to another, as in a perpetuall Residence upon one; Transivi, sayes our Apostle, I have gone among you. But then, in a second consideration, Divisio.
C in that first part, That that makes his going acceptable to God, is, becaus he goes to preach, Transivi prædicans, I have gone preaching; And then lastly in that first part, That that, that makes his Preaching acceptable, is, that he preached the kingdome of God, Transivi prædicans regnum Dei, I have gone amongst you, preaching the kingdome of God. And in these three characters of S. Pauls Ministery, first, Labour and Assiduity, And then, Labour bestowed upon the right means, Preaching; And lastly, Preaching to the right end, to edification, & advancing the kingdome of God, we shall determine our first part.

In our second part, we passe from his Transition, to his Transmigration; from his going up and downe in the world, to his departing out of the world, And now, behold, I know, that yee shall see my face no more. In which, we shall look first, how S. Paul contracted this knowledge, how he knew it; And secondly, that the knowledge of it, did not disquiet him, not disorder him; he takes knowledge of it, with a confidence, and a cheerfulnesse.
D When he sayes, I know it, he seemes to say, I am glad of it, or at least not troubled with it. And lastly, that S. Paul continues here, that way, and method, which he alwayes uses; That is, to proceed by the understanding, to the affections, and so to the conscience of those that hear him, by such means of perswasion, as are most appliable to them, to whom he then speaks; And therefore knowing the power and efficacy of a dying, a departing mans words, he makes that impression in them, Observe, recollect, remember, practise that which I have delivered unto you, for, I know, that all yee shall see my face no more. And so we shall bring up that circle, which was begun in heaven, in our last exercise, upon this occasion, in this place, when Christ fell from thence, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? up into heaven againe, in that Euge bone serve, which Christ hath said since unto him, Well done good and faithfull servant; enter into thy Masters joy. And our Apostle, whom, in our former Exercise, for example of our humiliation, we found faln to the Earth, in this, to E the assistance of our Exaltation, in his, we shall find, and leave, upon the last step of Iacobs ladder, that is, entring into Heaven, by the gate of death.

First then, in our first Part, our first Branch is, That there is a Transivi as acceptable 1 Part.
to God, as a Requievi; That God was served in S. Paul, by applying his labours to many places, as well as if he had resided, and bestowed himselfe intirely upon any one. When Christ manifested himselfe at first unto him, trembling and astonished, he said, Lord what wilt thou have me to doe? Act 9. 6.
And when Christ had told him, That in Damascus, from Ananias, he should receive his Instructions, which were, That he should beare his name before Ver. 15.
the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Israel, After this commission was exhibited by Ananias, and accepted by S. Paul, that Prophetical Scripture laid hold upon him, by way Psal. 19. 6. of acclamation, Exultavit ut gigas ad currendam viam, He rejoyced as a strong man to run a race, He laboured more abundantly then they all, He carried the Gospel from Ierusalem to 1 Cor. 15. 10. Illyricum, That is, as S. Hierome survayes it, à mari rubro ad oceanum, from the Red Sea (a Rom. 15. 19. Sea within land) to the Ocean without, from all within, to all without the Covenant, Gentiles as well as Jews, Deficiente eum prius terra, quàm studio prædicandi, He found an end of the world, but he found no end of his zeale, but preached as long as he found any to preach to. And as he exceeded in Action, so did he in Passion too; He joynes both 2 Cor. 11. 23. together, In labours more abundant, (There was his continuall preaching) In stripes above measure, And then, In prisons more frequent, In deaths often. Who dyes more then once? Yet he dyes often. How often? Death that is every other mans everlasting fast, and fils him his mouth with earth, was S. Pauls Panis quotidianus, His daily bread, I protest, sayes he, by your rejoycing, which I have in Christ, I die daily.

Though therefore we cannot give S. Paul a greater name then an Apostle, (except there be some extraordinary height of Apostleship enwrapped in that which he sayes of Gal. 1. 1. himselfe, Paul an Apostle, not of men, neither by men, but by Iesus Christ, That in that place he glory in a holy exultation, that he was made an Apostle by Jesus Christ, then when Jesus Christ was nothing but Jesus Christ, then when he was glorified in heaven, and not a mortall man upon earth, as he was when he made his other Apostles; And that in his being an Apostle, there entred no such act of men, as did in the election of Matthias to that office, (though Matthias were made after the Ascension as well as he) in whose election those men presented God two names, and God directed that lot upon him, and Acts 1. ult. so Matthias was reckoned amongst the eleven Apostles) Though we need not procure to him, nor imagine for him, any other name then an Apostle, yet S. Paul was otherwise an universall soule to the whole Church, then many of the other Apostles were, and had a larger liberty to communicate himselfe to all places, then any of them had. That is it which S. Chrysostome intends, when he extends S. Pauls dignity, Angelis diversæ Gentes commissæ, To particular Angels particular Nations are committed; sed nullus Angelorum, sayes that Father, No Angel governed his particular Nation better then S. Paul did the whole Church. S. Chrysostome carryes it so high; Isidore modifies it thus; He brings it from the Angels of heaven, to the Angels of the Church, Indeed the Archangels of the Church, the Apostles themselves, And he sayes, Apostolorum quisque regionem natiuu unicam, Every Apostle was designed to some particular and certaine compasse, and did but that, in that, which S. Paul did in the whole world. But S. Chrysostome and Isidore both take their ground for that which they say, from that which S. Paul sayes of himselfe, 2 Cor. 11. 28. Besides these things which are without, that which commeth upon me daily, The care of all the Churches; for, sayes he, who is weak, and I am not weak? That is, who lacks any thing, but I am ready to doe it for him? who suffers any thing, but I have compassion for him? We receive by faire Tradition, and we entertaine with a faire credulity, the other Apostles to have been Bishops, and thereby to have had a more certaine center, to which, naturally, that is, by the nature of their office, they were to encline. Not that nothing may excuse a Bishops absence from his Sea; for naturall things, even naturally, doe depart from those places to which they are naturally designed, and naturally affected, for the conservation of the whole frame and course of nature; for, in such cases, water will ascend, and ayre will descend; which motion is done naturally, though it be a motion from that place, to which they are naturally affected; And so may Bishops from their Cyprian. particular Churches; for, Episcopus in Ecclesia, & Ecclesia in Episcopo, Every Bishop hath a superintendency, and a residence in the whole Church, and the whole Church a residence, and a confidence in him. Therefore it is, that in some Decretall, and some Synodall Letters, Bishops are called Monarchæ, Monarchs, not onely with relation to one Diocesse, but to the whole Church; not onely Regall, but Imperiall Monarchs.

The Church of Rome makes Bishops every day, of Dioceses, to which they know those Bishops can never come; Not onely in the Dominions of Princes of the Reformed Religion, (which are not likely to admit them) but in the Dominions of the Turk himselfe. And into the Councel of Trent, they threw and thrust, they shov'd and shoveld in such Bishops in abundance: They created (that their numbers might carry all) new Titular Bishops of every place, in the Eastern, the Greek Church, where there had ever been Bishops before, though those very places were now no Cities; Not onely not within his Jurisdiction, but not at all, upon the face of the earth. But in better times then these, (though (though times, in which the Church was much afflicted too) S. Cyril of Alexandria mentions six thousand Bishops at once, against Nestorius. Now if the Church had six thousand Bishops at once, certainly all of them had not Dioceſſes to reside upon; sometimes collaterall neceſſities enforce a departing from exact regularity, in matter of government. So it did, when S. Ambroſe was chosen Bishop of Milan in the West, and Nectarius Bishop of Constantinople in the East, when they were both not onely Lay-men, but unbaptized. But yet, though there be divers caſes in which Bishops may justly be excused from residence, (for they are still resident upon the Church of God, if not upon the Church of that City) yet naturally, and regularly an obligation falling upon them, of Residence, the Apoſtles were more bound to certaine limits, by being Bishops, then S. Paul was, of whom it does not appeare that he was ever so. I know some later men have thought S. Paul a Bishop: And they have found some satisfaction in that, That Niger, and Lucius, and Manaen laid their hands upon Barnabas and Paul; and that Impoſition of hands, say they, was a Conſecration; And this reason supplyes them too, That Paul did conſecrate other Bishops, as Timothy of Epheſus, and Titus of Crete. But since Niger, and Lucius, and Manaen that laid their hands upon Paul, were not Bishops themselves, Paul cannot therefore be concluded to be a Bishop, because he laid his hands upon others. Neither hath any of those few Authors, which have imagined him to be a Bishop, ever aſsigned or named any place of which he should be Bishop; So that S. Paul had still another manner of liberty, and universality over the Church, then the reſt had, and therefore still avowes his Tranſivi, his peregrination, I have gone among you.

Acts 13.3.

Tit. 1.5.

So then our bleſsed Saviour having declared this to be his way for the propagation of the Goſpel, that beſides the men that reside constantly upon certaine places, there should be Bishops that should spread farther then to a Pariſh, and Apoſtles farther then to a Dioceſſe, and a Paul farther then to a Nation; As in the first Plantation Christ found this neceſſary, so may it be still convenient, that in some caſes, some persons, at some times, may be admitted to forbeare their service, in some particular place, so they doe not defraud the whole Church of God by that forbearance. For so S. Paul, though he accuſe himselfe, That he robbed other Churches, taking wages of them, and yet served the Corinthians, thinks himselfe excuſable in this, That he did this service in some part of the Church of Christ, though not alwayes to them in particular, from whom he received that recompence.

2 Cor. 11.11.

Now as this condemnes our Browniſts abroad, that have publiſhed their opinion to be, That no particular Church, given to one mans cure, may conſiſt of more persons then may alwayes heare that man, all together, so neither doth this afford any favour to those men, who abſent themselves from their charge, unneceſſarily; and every thing is unneceſſary in a Church-man, that is not done for the farther advancement of the Church of God in generall, and doth prejudice, or defraud a particular Church. Therefore is S. Pauls Tranſivi in this Text, accompanied with a Prædicavi, I have not resided in one place, I have gone among you, but I have gone among you preaching.

Athanaſius in his Epiſtle to Dracontius, who refuſed to be Bishop, sayes, If all men had been of your mind, who should have made you a Chriſtian? who should have been enabled to have miniſtred Sacraments unto you, if there had been no Bishop? But when he saw that he refuſed it therefore, becauſe men when they come to that state, give themselves more liberty then such as laboured in inferiour places did, and Dracontius seemed loath to open himselfe to the danger of that tentation, Athanaſius sayes, Licebit tibi in Epiſcopatu eſurire, ſitire, Feare not, I warrant you, you may be poore enough in a Bishoprick; or if you be rich, no man will hinder you from living soberly in a plentifull fortune; Novimus Epiſcopos jejunantes, sayes he, & Monachos comedentes, I have knowne a Bishop faſt, when a Monke, or an Hermit hath made a good meale; Nec corona pro locis, ſed pro factis redditur, God doth not crowne every man that comes to the place, but him onely that doth the duties of the place, when he is in it. And here one of the Duties that induce our crowne, is Preaching, I have gone among you preaching.

Prædicando.

Howsoever it be in practiſe in the Church of Rome, that Church durſt not appeare to the world, but in that Declaration, Præcipuum Epiſcoporum munus eſt prædicatio, The principall office of the Bishop is to preach. And as there is no Church in Chriſtendome, (nay, let us magnifie God in the fulneſse of an evident truth) not all the Churches of God in Chriſtendome, have more, or more uſefull preaching, then ours hath, from those to whom whom the Cure of Soules belongs: ſo neither were there ever any times, in which more men were preferred for former preaching, nor that continued it more, after their preferments, then in theſe our times. There may bee, there ſhould be a Tranſiverunt, A paſſing from place to place, but ſtill it is as it ſhould bee, Prædicando, A paſſing for Preaching, and a paſſing to Preaching; And then, a Preaching conditioned ſo, as S. Pauls was, I have gone among you, preaching the Kingdome of God. A

Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 5. c. 2.

Regnum Dei. The Kingdome of God, is the Goſpel of God; that Goſpel which the Apoſtle calls the glorious Goſpel of God. A Kingdome conſiſts not of ſlaves; ſlaves that have no will of their owne. The children of the Kingdome have ſo a will of their own, as that no man is damned, but for that, which he would not avoid, nor ſaved againſt his will; So wee preach a Kingdome. A Kingdome acknowledges all their happineſſe from the King; So doe we all the good uſe of all our faculties, will and all from the grace of the King of heaven; ſo we preach a Kingdome. A Kingdome is able to ſubſiſt of it ſelfe, without calling in Forrainers; The Goſpel is ſo too, without calling in Traditions; and ſo we preach a Kingdome. A Kingdome requires, beſides fundamentall ſubſiſtence, grounded eſpecially in offenſive, and defenſive power, a ſupport alſo of honour, and dignity, and outward ſplendor; The Church of God requires alſo, beſides unanimity in fundamentall Doctrines, an equanimity, and a mildneſſe, and a charity, in handling problematicall points, and alſo requires order, and comelineſſe in the outward face, and habit thereof; And ſo we preach a Kingdome. So we preach a Kingdome, as that we baniſh from thence, all imaginary fatality, and all decretory impoſſibility of concurrence, and co-operation to our owne ſalvation, And yet we baniſh all pride, and confidence, that any naturall faculties in us, though quickned by former grace, can lead us to ſalvation, without a continuall ſucceſſion of more and more grace; And ſo we preach a Kingdome; So, as that we baniſh all ſpirituall treaſon, in ſetting up new titles, or making any thing equall to God, or his Word, And we baniſh all ſpirituall felony or robbery, in deſpoyling the Church, either of Diſcipline, or of Poſſeſſions, either of Order, or of Ornaments. Be the Kings Daughter all glorious within; Yet, all her glory is not within; For, Her cloathing is of wrought gold, ſayes that text. Still may ſhe glory in her internall glory, in the ſincerity, and in the integrity of Doctrinall truths, and glory too in her outward comelineſſe, and beauty. So pray we, and ſo preach we the Kingdome of God. And ſo we have done with our firſt Part. B C

Pſal. 45. 13.

2 Part. Our ſecond Part, to which in our order we are now come, is a paſſionate valediction, Now I know, that all you ſhall ſee my face no more; where firſt we inquire how he knew it. But why doe we inquire that? They that heard him did not ſo: They heard it, and beleeved it, and lamented it. When S. Paul preached at Berea, his ſtory ſayes, that he was better beleeved there, then at Theſſalonica; And the reaſon is given, That there were Nobler perſons there; Perſons of better quality, of better natures, and diſpoſitions, and of more ingenuity; and ſo, as it is added, They received the word with all readineſſe of minde. Prejudices, and diſaffections, and under-valuations of the abilities of the Preacher, in the hearer, diſappoint the purpoſe of the Holy Ghoſt, fruſtrate the labours of the man, and injure and defraud the reſt of the Congregation, who would, and would juſtly, like that which is ſaid, if they were not miſ-led, and ſhaked by thoſe hearers: And ſo worke alſo ſuch jealouſies and ſuſpitions, that though his abilities be good, yet his end upon his Auditory, is not their edification, but to work upon them, to other purpoſes. Though we require not an implicite faith in you, that you beleeve, becauſe we ſay it, yet we require a holy Nobleneſſe in you, A religious good nature, a conſcientious ingenuity, that you remember from whom we come, from the King of heaven, and in what quality, as his Ambaſſadors; And ſo be apt to beleeve, that ſince we muſt returne to him that ſent us, and give him a relation of our negotiation, we dare not tranſgreſſe our Commiſſion. The Bereans are praiſed for this, That they ſearched the Scriptures daily, whether thoſe things that Paul ſaid were ſo; But this begun not at a jealouſie, or ſuſpition in them, that they doubted, that that which he ſaid, was not ſo, nor proceeded not to a gladneſſe, or to a deſire, that they might have taken him in a lie, or might have found, that that which he ſaid, was not ſo; But they ſearched the Scriptures, whether thoſe things were ſo, that ſo, having formerly beleeved him when he preached, they might eſtabliſh that beliefe, which they had received, by that, which was the infallible rocke, and foundation of all, The Scriptures; They ſearched; but they ſearched for confirmation, and not upon ſuſpition. D E

Acts 17. 10.

In

In our present case, they to whom S. Paul said this, doe not aske S. Paul how hee knew, that they should see his face no more; they beleeved as we doe, that he had it by revelation from God; and such knowledge is faith. Tricubitalis erat, & cælum attingit, sayes S. Chrysostome; S. Paul was a man of low stature; but foure foot and a halfe high, sayes he; and yet his head reached to the highest heaven, and his eyes saw, and his eares heard the counsels of God. Scarce any Ambassadour can shew so many Letters of his Masters owne hand, as S. Paul could produce Revelations; His King came to him, as often as other Kings write to their Ambassadours. He had his first calling by Revelation; He had his Commission, his Apostle-ship by Revelation; So hee was directed to Jerusalem, And so to Rome; to both by Revelation; and so to Macedonia also. So hee was confirmed, and comforted in the night, by Vision, by Revelation; And so he was assured of the lives of all them, that suffered shipwrack with him at Malta. All his Catechismes in the beginning, all his Dictats in his proceeding, all his incouragements at his departing, were all Revelation.

Acts 9.4. Gal.1.1. Gal.2. Acts 13. Acts 16. Acts 18. Acts 17.

Every good man hath his conversation in heaven, and heaven it self had a conversation in S. Paul; And so, even the book of the Acts of the Apostles, is, as it were, a first Part of the book of Revelation; Revelations to S. Paul, as the other was to S. John. This is the way that Christ promised to take with him, I will shew him, how great things he must suffer for my sake. And this way Christ pursued, At Cæsarea, Agabus a Prophet came from Iudæa to Paul, and took Pauls girdle, and bound his own hands, and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Iews binde the man that owes the girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles. This then was his case in our text, (for, that revelation, by Agabus his Prophesie, of his suffering was after this) he had a revelation that he should never be seen by them more; but when, or how, or where he should dye, he had not had a particular revelation then. He sayes, a little before our text, I goe bound in the Spirit to Ierusalem: That is, so bound by the Spirit, that if I should not goe, I should resist the Spirit; But, sayes he, I know not the things that shall befall me there; not at Jerusalem; much lesse the last, and bittereſt things, which were farther off; the things that should befall him at Rome, where he died. But from the very first, he knew enough of his death, to shake any soule, that were not sustained by the Spirit of God; which is another Branch in this Part, That no revelations, no apprehensions of death removed him from his holy intrepidnesse, and religious constancy.

Acts 9.16. Acts 20.11. Ver.13.

We have a story in an Author of S. Hieromes time, Palladius, that in a Monastery of S. Isidors, every Monk that dyed in that house, was able, and ever did tell all the society, that at such a time he should die. God does extraordinary things, for extraordinary ends; but since we see no such ends, nor use of this, we are at our liberty, to doubt of the thing it selfe. God told Simeon, that he should not die, till he had seen Christ; but he did not tell him, that he should die as soone as he had seen him; But so much as was told him, was enough to make him content to die, when he had seen him, and to come to his Nunc dimittis, to that chearfulnesse, as to sing his owne Requiem. God accustomed S. Paul, no doubt, to such notifications from him, and such apprehensions in himselfe of death, as, because it was not new, it could not be terrible. When S. Paul was able to make that protestation, I protest by your rejoycing, which I have in Christ Iesus our Lord, I die dayly; And againe, I am in prisons oft, and often in deaths, I die often; No Executioner could have told him, you must die to morrow, but he could have said, Alas I died yesterday, and yesterday was twelve-month, and seaven yeare, and every yeare, and month, and weeke, and day, and houre before that. There is nothing so neare Immortality, as to die daily; for not to feele death, is Immortality; and onely hee shall never feele death, that is exercised in the continuall Meditation thereof; Continuall Mortification is Immortality.

Non perterritus.

1 Cor.15.31. 2 Cor.11.23.

As Cordials lose their vertue and become no Cordials, if they be taken every day, so poysons do their venome too; If a man use himselfe to them, in small proportions at first, he may grow to take any quantity: He that takes a dram of Death to day, may take an ounce to morrow, and a pound after; He that begins with that mortification of denying himselfe his delights, (which is a dram of Death) shall be able to suffer the tribulations of this world, (which is a greater measure of death) and then Death it selfe, not onely patiently, but cheerefully; And to such a man, death is not a dissolution, but a redintegration; not a divorce of body and soule, but a sending of both divers wayes, (the

(the ſoule upward to Heaven, the body downeward to the earth) to an indiſſoluble marriage to him, who, for the ſalvation of both, aſſumed both, our Lord and Saviour Chriſt Jeſus. Therefore does S. Paul ſay of himſelfe, If I be offered upon the ſacrifice, and ſervice of your faith, I joy, and rejoyce with you all, that is, It is a juſt occaſion of our common joy, on your part, and on mine too; And therefore does S. Auguſtine ſay in his behalfe, whatſoever can be threatned him, Si poteſt vivere, tolerabile eſt, Whatſoever does not take away life, may be endured; for, if it could not be endured, it would take away life; and, Si non poteſt vivere, ſayes he, If it doe take away life, what ſhall he feele, when hee is dead? He adds the reaſon of all, Opus cum fine, merces ſine fine; Death hath an end, but their reward that dye for Chriſt, and their peace, that dye in Chriſt, hath no end. Therefore was not S. Paul afraid of melancholique apprehenſions, by drawing his death into contemplation, and into diſcourſe; he was not afraid to thinke, nor to talke of his death; But then S. Paul had another end in doing ſo here, (which is our laſt conſideration) To make the deeper impreſſion in them, to whom he preached then, by telling them, that he knew they ſhould ſee his face no more.

Morituros. This that S. Paul ſayes, he ſayes to the Epheſians; but not at Epheſus: He was departed from thence the yeare before: for, upon the newes that Claudius the Emperour, who perſecuted the Chriſtians, was dead, he purpoſed to goe by Jeruſalem to Rome. In that peregrination and viſitation of his, his way fell out after to be by Miletus, a place not far from Epheſus; Ver. 22. He was bound in the Spirit, as he ſayes here, to go to Ieruſalem; and therefore he could not viſit them at Epheſus. A man may have ſuch obligations, even for the ſervice of God upon him, as that it ſhall not be in his power, to doe that ſervice which he may owe, and deſire to pay in ſome particular Church. It was in part S. Pauls Verſ 17. caſe: But yet he did what he could; from Miletus he ſent to Epheſus, to call the Elders of that Church thither; And then he preached this ſhort, but powerfull Sermon. And, as his manner ever was, (though ſtill without prevaricating or forbearing to denounce the judgements of God upon them, in caſes neceſſary) to make thoſe whom he preached or writ to, as benevolent, and well-affected to him as he could, (for he was Omnia omnibus, Made all things to all men) to which purpoſe it is that he ſpeakes, and poures out himſelfe, with ſuch a loving thankfulneſſe to the Galatians, Gal 4.14. Ye received me as an Angel of God, even as Chriſt Ieſus himſelfe; purſuing, I ſay, this manner of a mutuall endearing, and a reciprocall embowelling of himſelfe in the Congregation, and the Congregation in him, (as, certainely, if we conſider all unions, (the naturall union of Parents and children, the matrimoniall union of Husband and Wife) no union is ſo ſpirituall, nor ſo neare to that, by which we are made Idem ſpiritus cum Domino, The ſame Spirit with the Lord, as when a good Paſtor, and a good flock meete, and are united in holy affections to one another) to unite himſelfe to his Epheſians inſeparably, even after his ſeparation, to be ſtill preſent with them, in his everlaſting abſence, and to live with them even after death, to make the deeper impreſſions of all his paſt, and preſent inſtructions, he ſpeaks to them as a dying man, I know you ſhall ſee my face no more.

Why did he ſo? S. Paul did not dye in eleven yeares after this: But he dyed to them, for bodily preſence, now; They were to ſee him no more. As the day of my death is the day of Judgement to me, ſo this day of his departing was the day of his death to them. And for himſelfe, from this time, when he gave this judgement of death upon himſelfe, all the reſt of his life was but a leading far off, to the place of execution. For firſt, very ſoone after this, Agabus gave him notice of manifold afflictions, in that Girdle which we ſpake of before. There he was bound, and empriſoned at Jeruſalem; from thence ſent bound to Cæſarea; practiſed upon to be killed by the way; forced to appeale to Cæſar; upon that Appeale ſent priſoner to Rome; ſhip-wracked upon the way at Malta; Empriſoned under guard, though not cloſe priſoner, two yeares after his comming thither; and, though diſmiſſed, and ſo enabled to viſit ſome Churches, yet laid hold upon againe by Nero, and executed. So that as it was literally true, that the Epheſians never ſaw his face, after this valediction, ſo he may be ſaid to have dyed then, in ſuch a ſenſe, as himſelfe ſayes to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 15. That ſome men were baptized, Pro mortuis, for dead, that is, as good as dead, paſt all hope of recovery. So he dyed then.

Now beloved, who hath ſeene a Father, or a friend, or a neighbour, or a malefactor Luke 16.30. dye, and hath not beene affected with his dying words? Nay Father Abraham, ſayes Dives, that will not ſerve, That they have Moſes and the Prophets; Sermons will not ſerve their

A their turnes; But if one went to them from the Dead, they would repent. And the neareſt to this is, if one ſpeake to them that is going to the dead. If he had beene a minute in Heaven thou wouldſt beleeve him; and wilt thou not beleeve him a minute before? Did not Iacob obſerve the Angels aſcending, as well as deſcending upon that ladder? Truſt a good ſoule going to God, as well as comming from God? And then, as our Caſuiſts ſay, That whatſoever a man is bound to do, In articulo mortis, at the point of death, by way of Confeſſion or otherwiſe, he is bound to doe, when he comes to the Sacrament, or when he undertakes any action of danger, becauſe then he ſhould prepare himſelfe as if he were dying: ſo, when you come to heare us here, who are come from God, heare us with ſuch an affection, as if we were going to God, as if you heard us upon our death-beds. The Pulpit is more then our death-bed; for, we are bound to the ſame truth, and ſincerity here, as if we were upon our death-bed, and then Gods Ordinance is more expreſly executed here, then there. He that mingles falſhood with his laſt dying words,
B deceives the world inexcuſably, becauſe he ſpeakes in the perſon of an honeſt man, but he that mingles falſe informations in his preaching, does ſo much more, becauſe he ſpeaks in the perſon of God himſelfe.

They to whom S. Paul ſpake there, are ſaid all to have wept, and to have fallen on Pauls necke, and to have kiſſed him; But it is added, they ſorrowed moſt of all for thoſe words, That they ſhould ſee his face no more. When any of thoſe men, to whom for their holy calling, and their religious paines in their calling, you owe and pay a reverence, are taken from you by death, or otherwiſe, there is a godly ſorrow due to that, and in a great proportion. In the death of one Eliſha, King Ioaſh apprehended a ruine of all; He wept over his face, and ſaid, O my father, my father, the Charet of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof; He loſt the ſolicitude of a father, he loſt the power and ſtrength of the Kingdome, in the loſſe of one
C ſuch Prophet. But when you have ſo ſorrowed for men, upon whom your devotion hath put, and juſtly put ſuch a valuation, remember that a greater loſſe, then the loſſe of a thouſand ſuch men may fall upon you. Conſider the difference betweene the Candle and the Candleſtick, betweene the Preacher of the Goſpel, and the Goſpel it ſelfe; betweene a religious man, and Religion it ſelfe: The removing of the Candleſtick, and the withdrawing of the Goſpel, and the prophaning of Religion, is infinitely a greater loſſe, then if hundreds of the preſent labourers ſhould be taken away from us. The children of the kingdome may be caſt into outer darkneſſe, and That kingdome may be given to others, that ſhall bring forth the fruits thereof; and, The Lord may come, and come quickly and remove his Candleſtick out of his place; pray we that in our dayes he may not. And truly where God threatens to doe ſo in the Revelation, it is upon a Church, of which God himſelfe gives D good teſtimony, The Church of Epheſus; of her Labours, that is, Preaching; of her Patience, that is, ſuffering; of her Impatience, her not ſuffering the evill, that is, her integrity and impartiality, without connivence or toleration; And of her not fainting, that is, perſeverance; and of her hating the Nicolaitans, that is, ſincerity in the truth; and a holy animoſity againſt all falſe Doctrines: And yet, ſayes he, I have ſomething to ſay againſt thee.

When thou haſt teſtified their aſſiduity in Preaching, their conſtancy in ſuffering, their ſincerity in beleeving, their integrity in profeſſing, their perſeverance in continuing, their zeale in hating of all error in others, when thou thy ſelfe haſt given this evidence in their behalfe, canſt thou Lord Jeſu have any thing to ſay againſt them? what then ſhall we, we that faile in all theſe, look to heare from thee? what was their crime? Becauſe they had left their firſt love; Left the fulneſſe of their former zeale to Gods cauſe. Now, if E our caſe be ſo much worſe then theirs, as that we are not onely guilty of all thoſe ſins, of which Chriſt diſcharges them, and have not onely left our firſt love, but in a manner loſt all our love, all our zeale to his glory, and be come to a lukewarmneſſe in his ſervice, and a generall neglect of the meanes of grace, how juſtly may we feare, not onely that he will come, and come quickly, but that he may poſſibly be upon his way already, to remove our Candleſtick, and withdraw the Goſpel from us? And if it be a ſad thing to you, to heare a Paul, a holy man ſay, You ſhall ſee my face no more, on this ſide the Ite maledicti, Go ye accurſed into hell fire, there cannot be ſo ſad a voyce, as to heare Chriſt Jeſus ſay, You ſhall ſee my face no more. Facies Dei eſt, qua Deus nobis innoteſcit, ſayes S. Auguſtin, That is the face of God to us, by which God manifeſts himſelfe to us. God manifeſts himſelfe to us in the Word, and in the Sacraments. If we ſee not them in their true lines and

1 King. 13. 14.

Mat. 8. 12. 21. 43. Apoc. 2. 5.

Ver. 2.

Ver. 6.

and colours, (the Word and Sacraments sincerely and religiously preached and administred) we doe not see them, but masks upon them; And, if we do not see them, we do not see the face of Christ; And I could as well stand under his Nescio vos, which he said to the negligent Virgins, I know you not, or his Nescivi vos, which he said to those that boast of their works, I never knew you, as under this fearfull thunder from his mouth, You shall see my face no more, I will absolutely withdraw, or I will suffer prophaneness to enter into those meanes of your salvation, Word, and Sacraments, which I have so long continued in their sincerity towards you, and you have so long abused.

Mat. 7. 22.

Blessed God say not so to us yet; yet let the tree grow another yeare, before thou cut it downe; And as thou hast digged about it, by bringing judgements upon our neighbours, so water it with thy former raine, the dew of thy grace, and with thy later raine, the teares of our contrition, that we may still see thy face; here and hereafter; here, in thy kingdome of Grace, hereafter in thy kingdome of Glory, which thou hast purchased for us, with the inestimable price of thine incorruptible blood. Amen.

SERM. XLVIII.

Preached at S. Pauls in the Evening, Upon the day of S. PAULS Conversion. 1628.

ACTS 28. 6.

They changed their minds, and said, That he was a God.

THe scene, where this canonization, this super-canonization, (for, it was not of a Saint, but of a God) was transacted, was the Ile of Malta: The person canonized, and proclaimed for a God, was S. Paul, at that time by shipwrack cast upon that Iland. And having for some yeares heretofore continued that custome in this place, at this time of the year, when the Church celebrates the Conversion of S. Paul, (as it doth this day) to handle some part of his Story, pursuing that custome now, I chose that part, which is knit and wound up in this Text, Then they changed their minds, and said, He is a God. S. Paul found himselfe in danger of being oppressed in judgement, and thereby was put to a necessity of Appealing to Cæsar: By vertue of that Appeale being sent to Rome, by Sea, he was surprized with such stormes, as threatned inevitable ruine; But the Angel of God stood by him, and assured him, that none of those two hundred seaventy six persons, which were in the ship with him, should perish; According to this assurance, though the ship perished, all the passengers were saved, and recovered this land, Malta. Where being courteously received by the Inhabitants, though otherwise Barbarians, S. Paul doing so much for himselfe and for his company, as to gather a bundle of sticks to mend the fire, there flew a Viper from the heat, and fastned on his hand. They thereupon said among themselves, No doubt, this man is a murderer, whom, though he have escaped the Sea, yet Vengeance suffereth not to live. But when he shaked off the Viper into the fire, and received no harme, and they had looked, that he should have swoln, and faln down dead suddenly, after they had looked a great while, and saw no harme come to him, Then (and then enters our Text) They changed their minds, and said, He is a God. Almighty God had bred up S. Paul so; so he had catechized him all the way, with vicissitudes, and revolutions from extreme to extreme. He had taught him how to want, and how to abound; how to beare honour, and dishonour: He permitted an Angel of Satan to buffet him, (so he gave him some sense of Hell) He gave him a Rapture, an Extasie, and in that, an appropinquation, an approximation to himselfe, and so some possession of Heaven in this life. So God proceeded with him here in Malta too; He passed him in their mouths from extreme to extreme; A Viper seises him, and they condemne him for a murderer; He shakes off the Viper, and they change their minds, and say, He is a God.

The

Divisio.

A The first words of our Text carry us necessarily so far back, as to see from what they changed; And their periods are easily seene; Their Terminus à quo, and their Terminus ad quem, were these; first, that he was a Murderer, Then that he was a God. An error in Morality; They censure deeply upon light evidence: An error in Divinity; They transfer the Name and estimation of a God, upon an unknowne Man. Place both the errors in Divinity; (so you may justly do) And then there is an error in Charity, a hasty and inconsiderate condemning; And an error in faith, a superstitious creating of an imaginary God. Now, upon these two generall Considerations will this Exercise consist; first, that it is naturall Logique, an argumentation naturally imprinted in Man, to argue, and conclude thus, Great calamities are inflicted, therefore God is greatly provoked; These men of Malta were but naturall men, but Barbarians, (as S. Luke cals them) and yet they B argue, and conclude so; Here is a judgement executed, therefore here is evidence, that God is displeased. And so far they kept within the limits of humanity and piety too; But when they descended hastily and inconsiderately, to particular, and personall applications, This judgement upon this man is an evidence of his guiltinesse in this offence, then they transgressed the bounds of charity; That becaus̃e a Viper had seised Pauls hand, Paul must needs be a murderer.

And then when we shall have passed thorough those things, which belong to that first Consideration, which consists of these two Propositions, That to conclude so, God strikes, therefore he is angry, is naturall, but hastily to apply this to the condemnation of particular persons, is uncharitable, we shall descend to our second Consideration, to see what they did, when they changed their minds, They said, He is a God. And, as in the former part, we shall have seen, That there is in man a naturall Logique, but that strays into uncharitablenesse; So in this we shall see, That there is in man a naturall Re- C ligion, but that strayes into superstition and idolatry; Naturally man is so far from being devested of the knowledge and sense of God, from thinking that there is no God, as that he is apt to make more Gods then he should, and to worship them for Gods, whom he should not. These men of Malta were but Naturall men, but Barbarians, (sayes S. Luke) yet they were so far from denying God, as that they multiplied Gods, and becaus̃e the Viper did Paul no harme, they change their minds, and say, He is a God.

And from these two generall considerations, and these two branches in each, That there is in man a Naturall Logique, but that strayes into Fallacies; And a Naturall Religion, but that strayes into Idolatry, and Superstition, we shall derive, and deduce unto you, such things as we conceive most to conduce to your edification, from this knot, and summary abridgement of this Story, Then they changed their minds, and said, He is a God.

D First then for the first Proposition of our first part, That this is naturall Logique, an argumentation imprinted in every man, God strikes, therefore God is angry, He, whom they that even hate his name, (our Adversaries of the Roman perswasion) doe yet so far tacitely reverence, as that, though they will not name him, they will transfer, and insert his expositions of Scriptures, into their works, and passe them as their owne, that as Calvin, He, Calvin, collects this proposition from this story, Passim receptum omnibus saeculis, In all ages, and in all places this hath ever been acknowledged by all men, That when God strikes, God is angry, And when God is angry, God strikes; and therefore, sayes he, Quoties occurrit memorabilis aliqua calamitas, simul in mentem veniat, as often as you see any extraordinary calamity, conclude that God hath been extraordinarily provoked, and hasten to those meanes, by which the anger and indignation of God may be appeased againe. So that for this Doctrine, a man needs not be preached unto, a man needs not E be catechized; A man needs not reade the Fathers, nor the Councels, nor the Schoolmen, nor the Eccleſiasticall story, nor Summists, nor Casuists, nor Canonists, no nor the Bible it selfe for this Doctrine; for this Doctrine, That when God strikes he is angry, and when he is angry he strikes, the naturall man hath as full a Library in his bosome, as the Christian.

1. Part.

We, we that are Christians have one Author of ours, that tells us, Vindicta mihi, Revenge is mine, saith the Lord; Moses tells us so; And in that, we have a first and a second Lesson; First, that since Revenge is in Gods hands, it will certainly fall upon the Malefactor, God does not mistake his marke; And then, since Revenge is in his hands, no man must take Revenge out of his hands, or make himselfe his owne Magistrate, or re-

Deut. 32. 35.

venge

venge his owne quarrel. And as we, we that are Chriſtians, have our Author, Moſes, that tells us this, the naturall man hath his ſecular Author, Theocritus, that tels him as much, Reperit Deus nocentes, God alwayes finds out the guilty man. In which, the naturall man hath alſo a firſt, and a ſecond Leſſon too; Firſt, that ſince God finds out the Malefactor, he never ſcapes; And then, ſince God does find him at laſt, God ſought him all the while; Though God ſtrike late, yet he purſued him long before; and many a man feels the ſting in his conſcience, long before he feels the blow in his body. That God finds, and therefore ſeeks, That God overtakes, and therefore purſues, That God overthrows, and therefore reſiſts the wicked, is a Naturall concluſion as well as a Divine.

Deut. 10. 17. The ſame Author of ours, Moſes, tels us, The Lord our God is Lord of lords, and God of gods, and regardeth no mans perſon. The naturall man hath his Author too, that tels him, Semper Virgines Furiæ, The Furies, (they whom they conceive to execute Revenge upon Malefactors) are alwayes Virgins, that is, not to be corrupted by any ſolicitations. That no dignity ſhelters a man from the juſtice of God, is a naturall concluſion, as well Pſal. 55. 23. as a Divine. We have a ſweet Singer of Iſrael that tels us, Non dimidiabit dies, The bloudy and deceitfull man ſhall not live out halfe his dayes: And the naturall man hath his ſweet ſinger too, a learned Poet that tels him, that ſeldome any enormous Malefactor enjoyes ſiccam mortem, (as he calls it) a dry, an un-bloody death. That blood requires blood, is a naturall concluſion, as well as a Divine. Our ſweet Singer tels us againe, That if he fly to the fartheſt ends of the earth, or to the ſea, or to heaven, or to hell, he ſhall find God there; And the naturall man hath his Author, that tels him, Qui fugit, non effugit, He that runs away from God, does not ſcape God. That there is no ſanctuary, no priviledged place againſt which Gods Quo Warranto does not lie, is a naturall concluſion, as well as a divine; Sanguis Abel, is our Proverb, That Abels blood cryes for revenge, And ſanguis Æſopi is the naturall mans Proverb, That Eſops blood cryes for revenge; for Eſops blood was ſhed upon an indignation taken at ſacrifice, as Abels was. S. Pauls Deus Remunerator, That there is a God, and that that God is a juſt rewarder of mens actions, is a naturall concluſion, as well as a Divine.

When God ſpeaks to us, us that are Chriſtians, in the Scriptures, he ſpeaks as in a Primitive, and Originall language; when he ſpeaks to the naturall man, by the light of nature, though ſpeak as in a tranſlation into another language, yet he ſpeaks the ſame thing; Every where he offers us this knowledge, That where he ſtrikes, he is angry, and where he is angry, he does ſtrike. Therefore Calvin might, as he doth, ſafely and piouſly eſtabliſh his Quoties occurrit, As often as you ſee an extraordinary calamity, conclude that God is extraordinarily provoked: And he might as ſafely have eſtabliſhed more then that, That whereſoever God is angry, and in that anger ſtrikes, God ſees ſinne before; No puniſhment from God, where there is no ſin. God may have glory in the condemnation of man; but except that man were a ſinfull man, God could have no glory in

Dan. 9. 23. his condemnation. At the beginning of thy prayer, the commandment went out, ſayes Gabriel to Daniel; But till Daniel prayed, there went out no commandment. At the beginning of the ſinners ſin, God bends his bow, and whets his arrows, and at laſt he ſhoots; But if there were no ſin in me, God had no mark to ſhoot at; for God hates not me, nor any thing that he hath made.

And farther we carry not your conſideration upon this firſt branch of our firſt Part, Naturally man hath this Logique, to conclude, where God ſtrikes, God is angry; when God is angry, he will ſtrike: But God never ſtrikes in ſuch anger, but with relation to ſin. Theſe men of Malta, naturall men, did ſo, and erred not in ſo doing; They erred when they came to particulars, to haſty and inconſiderate applications, for that is uncharitableneſſe, and conſtitutes our ſecond branch of this part.

Charitas. When one of the Conſuls of Rome, Caninius, dyed the ſame day that he was made Conſul, Cicero would needs paſſe a jeſt upon that accident, and ſay, The State had had a vigilant Conſul of Caninius, a watchfull Conſul, becauſe he never ſlept in all his Conſulſhip; for he dyed before he went to bed. But this was juſtly thought a fault in Cicero, for calamities are not the ſubject of jeſts; They are not ſo caſuall things. But yet, though they come from a ſure hand, they are not alwayes evidences of Gods diſpleaſure upon that man upon whom they fall. That was the iſſue between Iob and his friends; They

Iob 4. 7. relied upon that, purſued that which they had laid downe, Remember, who ever periſhed being innocent, or where were the righteous cut off? Iob relyed upon that, purſued that which he

A he had laid downe; If I justifie my selfe, mine owne words shall condemne me; (selfe-justification is a selfe-condemnation) If I say I am perfect, that also shall prove me perverse, sayes Iob. (No man is so far from purity and perfection, as he that thinks himselfe perfect and pure) But yet, sayes he there, Though I were perfect, this is one thing, and therefore I say it, God destroyeth the perfect and the wicked. Gods outward proceeding with a man in this world, is no evidence to another, what he intends him in the next. In no case? In no case, (on this side of Revelation) for the world to come. Till I be a Judge of that mans person and actions, and being his Judge have cleare evidence, and be not misled by rumours from others, by passion, and prejudices in my selfe, I must passe no judgement upon him, in this world, nor say, This fell upon him for this crime. But whatsoever my capacity be, or whatsoever the Evidence, I must suspend my judgement for the world to come. Therefore sayes the Apostle, Iudge nothing before the time: When is the time? Iob 9.20. 1 Cor. 4.5.

B When I am made Judge, and when I have cleare evidence, then is the time to passe my judgement for this world; But for a finall condemnation in the world to come, the Apostle expresses himselfe fully in that place, Iudge nothing before the time, untill the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darknesse, and manifest the counsels of the heart.

It was a wise and a pious counsel that Gamaliel gave that State, Abstinete, forbeare a while, give God sea-roome, give him his latitude, and you may finde, that you mistook at first; for God hath divers ends in inflicting calamities, and he that judges hastily, may soone mistake Gods purpose. It is a remarkeable expressing which the holy Ghost hath put into the mouth of Naomi, Call not me Naomi, sayes she there; Naomi is lovely, and loving, and beloved; But call me Mara, sayes she, Mara is bitternesse: But why so? For, sayes she, The Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me: Bitterly, and very bitterly. But Act 5.33. Ruth 1.19.

C yet so he hath with many that he loves full well. It is true, sayes Naomi, but there is more in my case then so; The Almighty hath afflicted me, and the Lord hath testified against me; Testified, there is my misery; that is, done enough, given evidence enough for others to beleeve, and to ground a judgement upon it, that he hath abandoned me utterly, forsaken me for ever. Yet God meant well to Naomi for all this Testification, and howsoever others might misinterpret Gods proceeding with her.

That Ostracisme which was practised amongst the Athenians, and that Petalisme which was practised amongst the Syracusians, by which Laws, the most eminent, and excellent persons in those States were banished, not for any crime imputed to them, nor for any popular practises set on foot by them, but to conserve a parity, and equality in that State, this Ostracisme, this Petalisme was not without good use in those governments. If God will lay heaviest calamities upon the best men, If God will exercise an Ostracisme, a Petalisme in his state, who shall search into his Arcana imperii, into the secrets of his government? who shall aske a reason of his actions? who shall doubt of a good end in all his waies? Our Saviour Christ hath shut up that way of rash judgement upon such occasions, when he sayes, Suppose ye, that those Galileans whom Herod slew, or those eighteen whom the fall of the Towre of Siloe slew, were greater sinners then the rest? It is not safely, it is not charitably concluded. And therefore he carries their thoughts, as far on the other side, That he that suffered a calamity, was not only not the greatest, but no sinner; for so Christ sayes, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; (speaking of the man that was born blinde.) Not that he, or his Parents had not sinned; but that that calamity was not laid upon him, in contemplation of any sin, but onely for an occasion of the manifestation of Christs Divinity, in the miraculous recovery of that blinde man. Therefore sayes Luther excellently, and elegantly, Non judicandum de cruce, secundùm prædicamentum Quantitatis, sed Relationis; We must not judge of a calamity, by the predicament of Quantity, How great that calamity is, but by the predicament of Relation, to what God referres that calamity, and what he intends in it; For, Deus ultionum Deus, (as S. Hierome reades that place) God is the God of revenge, And, Deus ultionum liberè agit, This God of revenge, revenges at his owne liberty, when, and where, and how it pleases him. Luke 13.2. Iohn 9.3. Psal. 93.1.

D E

And therefore, as we are bound to make good constructions of those corrections that God layes upon us, so are we to make good interpretations of those judgements which he casts upon others. First, for our selves, that which is said in S. Matthew, That at the day of judgement shall appeare in heaven, the signe of the Son of Man, is frequently, ordinarily received by the Fathers, to be intended of the Crosse; That before Christ himselfe Mat. 24.30.

appeare, his ſigne, the Croſſe ſhall appeare in the clouds. Now, this is not literally ſo, in the Text, nor is it neceſſarily deduced, but ordinarily by the Ancients it is ſo accepted, and though the ſigne of the Son of Man, may be ſome other thing, yet of this ſigne, the Croſſe, there may be this good application, That when God affords thee, this manifeſtation of his Croſſe, in the participation of thoſe croſſes and calamities that he ſuffered here, when thou haſt this ſigne of the Son of Man upon thee, conclude to thy ſelfe that the Son of Man Chriſt Jeſus is comming towards thee; and as thou haſt the ſigne; thou ſhalt have the ſubſtance, as thou haſt his Croſſe, thou ſhalt have his Glory. For, this is Phil. 1. 29. that which the Apoſtle intends; Vnto you it is given, (not laid upon you as a puniſhment, but given you as a benefit) not onely to beleeve in Chriſt, but to ſuffer for Chriſt. Where, the Apoſtle ſeemes to make our croſſes a kinde of aſſurance, as well as our faith; for ſo he argues, Not onely to beleeve, but to ſuffer; for, howſoever faith be a full evidence, yet our ſuffering is a new ſeale even upon that faith. And an evident ſeale, a conſpicuous, a Cyprian. glorious ſeale. Quid glorioſius, quam Collegam Chriſti in paſſione factum fuiſſe? What can be more glorious, then to have been made a Collegue, a partner with Chriſt in his ſufferings, and to have fulfilled his ſufferings in my fleſh. For that is the higheſt degree, which we can take in Chriſts ſchoole, as S. Denys the Areopagite expreſſes it, A Deo doctus, non ſolùm divina diſcit, ſed divina patitur, (which we may well tranſlate, or accommodate thus) He that is throughly taught by Chriſt, does not onely beleeve all that Chriſt ſayes, but conformes him to all that Chriſt did, and is ready to ſuffer as Chriſt ſuffered. Truly, if it were poſſible to feare any defect of joy in heaven, all that could fall into my feare would be but this, that in heaven I can no longer expreſſe my love by ſuffering for my God, for my Saviour. A greater joy cannot enter into my heart then this, To ſuffer for him that ſuffered for me. As God ſaw that way proſper in the hands
2 Sam. 14. 30. of Abſalom, he ſent for Ioab, and Ioab came not, he came not when he ſent a ſecond time, but when he ſent Meſſengers to burne up his corne, then Ioab came, and then hee complied with Abſalom, and ſeconded and accompliſhed his deſires: So God cals us in his own outward Ordinances, and, a ſecond time in his temporall bleſſings, and we come not; but we come the ſooner, if he burne our Corne, if he draw us by afflicting us.

Now, as we are able to argue thus in our owne caſes, and in our owne behalfes, as when a vehement calamity lies upon me, I can plead out of Gods precedents, and out of 2 Sam. 5. 4. his method be able to ſay, This will not laſt: David was not ten yeares in baniſhment, but he enjoyed the Kingdome forty: God will recompence my houres of ſorrow, with daies of joy; If the calamity be both vehement and long, yet I can ſay with his bleſſed ſervant Auguſtine, Et cum blandiris pater es, & pater es cum cadis, I feele the hand of a father upon me when thou ſtrokeſt me, and when thou ſtrikeſt me I feele the hand of a father too, Blandiris ne deficiam, cadis ne peream, I know thy meaning when thou ſtrokeſt me, it is, leſt I ſhould faint under thy hand, and I know thy meaning when thou ſtrikeſt me, it is, leſt I ſhould not know thy hand; If the waight, and continuation of this calamity teſtifie againſt me, (as Naomi ſaid) that is, give others occaſion to think, and to ſpeak ill of me, as of a man, for ſome ſecret ſins, forſaken of God, ſtill Nazianzens refuge is my refuge, Hoc mihi commentor, This is my meditation, Si falſa objicit convitiator, non me attingit, If that which mine enemy ſayes of me, be falſe, it concernes not me, hee cannot meane me, It is not I that he ſpeakes of, I am no ſuch man; And then, Si vera dicit, If that which he ſayes be true, it begun not to be true, then when he ſaid it, but was true when I did it; and therefore I muſt blame my ſelfe for doing, not him for ſpeaking it; If I can argue thus in mine owne caſe, and in mine owne behalfe, and not ſuſpect Gods abſence from me, becauſe he laies calamities upon me, let me be alſo as charitable towards another, and not conclude ill, upon ill accidents; for there is nothing ſo ill, out of which, God, and a godly man cannot draw good. When Iohn Hus was at the ſtake to be burnt, his eye fixed upon a poore plaine Country-fellow, whom he obſerved to be buſier then the reſt, and to run oftner, to fetch more and more fagots, to burne him, and he ſaid thereupon no more but this, O ſancta ſimplicitas! O holy ſimplicity! He meant that that man, being then under an invincible ignorance, miſ-led by that zeale, thought he did God ſervice in burning him. But ſuch an interpretation will hardly bee appliable to any of theſe haſty and inconſiderate Judges of other men, that give way to their owne paſſion; for zeale, and uncharitableneſſe are incompatible things; zeale and uncharitableneſſe cannot conſiſt together: and there was evident uncharitableneſſe in theſe

A theſe men of Malta proceeding, when, becauſe the Viper ſeized his hand, they condemned him for a murderer.

It is true, they ſaw a concurrence of circumſtances, and that is alwaies more waighty, then ſingle evidence. They ſaw a man who had been neare drowning; yet he ſcaped that. They ſaw he had gathered a bundle of ſticks, in which the Viper was enwrapped, and yet did him no harme when it was in his hand; He ſcaped that. And then they ſaw that Viper dart it ſelfe out of the fire againe, and of all the company faſten upon that man. What ſhould they think of that man? In Gods Name, what they would, to the advancement of Gods glory. They might juſtly have thought that God was working upon that man, and had ſome great worke to doe upon that man. Wee put no ſtop to zeale; we onely tell you, where zeale determines; where uncharitableneſſe enters, zeale goes out, and paſſion counterfeits that zeale. God ſeeks no glory out of the uncha-
B ritable condemning of another man. And then, in this proceeding of theſe men, wee juſtly note the ſlipperineſſe, the precipitation, the bottomeleſneſſe of uncharitableneſſe, in judgement; they could conſiſt no where, till they charged him with murder, Surely he is a murderer. Many crimes there were, and thoſe capitall, and ſuch as would have induced death, on this ſide of murder, but they ſtopped at none, till they came to the worſt. And truly it is eaſie to bee obſerved, in the wayes of this world, that when men have once conceived an uncharitable opinion againſt another man, they are apt to beleeve from others, apt to imagine in themſelves any kinde of ill, of that man; Sometimes ſo much, and ſo falſly, as makes even that which is true, the leſſe credible. For, when paſſionate men will load a man with all, ſad and equitable men begin to doubt whether any bee true; and a Malefactor ſcapes ſometimes by being overcharged.

C But I move not out of mine owne ſpheare; my ſpheare is your edification, upon this centre, The proceeding of theſe men of Malta with S. Paul; upon them, and upon you I look directly, and I look onely, without any glance, any reflection upon any other object. And therefore having ſaid enough of thoſe two Branches which conſtitute our firſt Part, That to argue out of Gods judgements, his diſpleaſure is naturall, but then that naturall Logique ſhould determine in the zeale of advancing Gods glory, and not ſtray into an uncharitable condemning of particular perſons, becauſe in this uncharitableneſſe there is ſuch a ſlipperineſſe, ſuch a precipitation, ſuch a bottomeleſneſſe, as that theſe haſty cenſurers could ſtop no where till they came to the higheſt charge; having ſaid enough of this, wee paſſe, in our order, to our ſecond Part, to that which they did; when they changed their mindes, They changed their mindes, and ſaid he was a God.

2 Part. In this ſecond part we conſider firſt, the incongruity of depending upon any thing in D this world; for, all will change. Men have conſidered uſefully the incongruity of building the towre of Babel, in this, That to have erected a Towre that ſhould have carried that height that they intended in that, the whole body of the earth, the whole Globe, and ſubſtance thereof would not have ſerved for a baſis, for a foundation to that Towre. If all the timber of all the foreſts in the world, all the quarries of ſtones, all the mines of Lead and Iron had beene laid together, nay if all the earth and ſea had beene petrified, and made one ſtone, all would not have ſerved for a baſis, for a foundation of that Towre; from whence then muſt they have had their materials for all the ſuperedifications? So to eſtabliſh a truſt, a confidence, ſuch an acquieſcence as a man may rely upon, all this world affords not a baſis, a foundation; for every thing in this world is fluid, and tranſitory, and ſandy, and all dependance, all aſſurance built upon this world, is but a building upon ſand; all will change. It is true, that a faire reputation, a good opi-
E nion of men, is, though not a foundation to build upon, yet a faire ſtone in the building, and ſuch a ſtone, as every man is bound to provide himſelfe of. For, for the moſt part, moſt men are ſuch, as moſt men take them to be; Neminem omnes, nemo omnes fefellit; All the world never joyned to deceive one man, nor was ever any one man able to deceive all the world. Contemptu famæ contemnuntur & virtutes, was ſo well ſaid by Tacitus, as it is pity S. Auguſtine ſaid it not, They that neglect the good opinion of others, neglect thoſe vertues that ſhould produce that good opinion. Therefore S. Hierom proteſts to abhor that Paratum de trivio, as he cals it, that vulgar, that ſtreet, that dunghill language, Satis mihi, as long as mine owne conſcience reproaches me of nothing, I care not what all the world ſayes. We muſt care what the world ſayes, and ſtudy that they may ſay well of us. But when they doe, though this be a faire stone in the wall, it is no foundation to build upon, for, They change their minds. A

Populus. Who doe? our text does not tell us who; The story does not tell us, of what quality and condition these men of Malta were, who are here said to have changed their minds. Likeliest they are to have beene of the vulgar, the ordinary, the inferiour sort of people, because they are likeliest to have flocked and gathered together upon this occasion of Pauls shipwrack upon that Iland. And that kinde of people are alwaies justly thought to be most subject to this levity, To change their minds. The greatest Poet layes the greatest levity and change that can be laid, to this kinde of people; that is, In contraria, That they change even from one extreame to another; Scinditur incertum studia in contraria vulgus. Where that Poet does not onely meane, that the people will be of divers opinions from one another; for, for the most part they are not so; for the most part they think, and wish, and love, and hate together; and they doe all by example, as others doe, and upon no other reason, but therefore, because others doe. Neither was that Poet ever bound up by his words, that hee should say In contraria, because a milder, or more modified word would not stand in his verse; but hee said it, because it is really true, The people will change into contrary opinions; And whereas an Angel it selfe cannot passe from East to West, from extreame to extreame, without touching upon the way betweene, the people will passe from extreame to extreame, without any middle opinion; last minutes murderer, is this minutes God, and in an instant, Paul, whom they sent to be judged in hell, is made a judge in heaven. The people will change. B

Prov. 14. 28. In the multitude of people is the Kings honour; And therefore Ioab made that prayer in the behalfe of David, 2 Sam. 24. 3. The Lord thy God adde unto thy people, how many soever they be, a hundred fold. But when David came to number his people with a confidence in their number, God tooke away the ground of that confidence, and lessened their number seventy thousand in three dayes. Therefore C

Psal. 3. 6. as David could say, I will not be afraid of ten thousand men, so he should say, I will not confide in ten thousand men, though multiplied by millions; for they will change, and at such an ebbe, the popular man will lye, as a Whale upon the sands deserted by the tide. We finde in the Roman story, many examples (particularly in Commodus his time, upon Cleander, principall Gentleman of his Chamber) of severe executions upon men that have courted the people, though in a way of charity, and giving them corne in a time of dearth, or upon like occasions. There is danger in getting them, occasioned by jealousie of others, there is difficulty in holding them, by occasion of levity in themselves; There-

Ier. 17. 5. fore we must say with the Prophet, Cursed be the man, that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arme, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For, They, the people, will change their minds.

Principes. But yet there is nothing in our text, that binds us to fixe this levity upon the people D onely. The text does not say, That there was none of the Princes of the People, no Commanders, no Magistrates present at this accident, and partners in this levity. Neither is it likely, but that in such a place as Malta, an Iland, some persons of quality and command resided about the coast, to receive and to give intelligence, and directions upon all emergent occasions of danger, and that some such were present at this accident, and gave their voyce both wayes, in the exclamation, and in the acclamation, That hee was a murderer, and that he was a God. For, They will change their minds; All, High as well as low, will change. A good Statesman Polybius sayes, That the people are naturally as the Sea; naturally smooth, and calme, and still, and even; but then naturally apt to be moved by influences of Superiour bodies; and so the people apt to change by them who have a power over their affections, or a power over their wils. So sayes he, the Sea is apt to be moved by stormes and tempests; and so, the people apt to change with rumors and E windy reports. So, the Sea is moved, So the people are changed, sayes Polybius. But Polybius might have carried his politique consideration higher then the Sea, to the Aire too; and applied it higher then to the people, to greater persons; for the Aire is shaked and transported with vapours and exhalations, as much as the sea with winds and stormes; and great men as much changed with ambitions in themselves, and flatteries from others, as inferiour people with influences, and impressions from them. All change

Mal. 3. 6. their minds; High, as well as low will change. But I am the Lord; I change not. I, and onely I have that immunity, Immutability; And therefore, sayes God there, ye sons of Iacob are not consumed; Therefore, because I, I who cannot change have loved you; for they,

who

A who depend upon their love, who can change, are in a wofull condition. And that involves all; all can, all will, all do change, high and low.

Therefore, It is better to trust in the Lord, then to put confidence in man. What man? Any man. It is better to trust in the Lord, then to put confidence in Princes. Which David thought worth the repeating; for he sayes it againe, Put not your trust in Princes. Not that you may not trust their royall words, and gracious promises to you; not that you may not trust their Counsailes, and executions of those Counsailes, and the distribution of your contributions for those executions; not that you may not trust the managing of affaires of State in their hands, without jealous inquisitions, or suspitious mis-interpretations of their actions. In these you must trust Princes, and those great persons whom Princes trust; But when these great persons are in the balance with God, there they weigh as little, as lesse men. Nay, as David hath ranked and disposed them, lesse; for thus he con-
B veyes that consideration, Surely men of low degree are vanity; that is sure enough; there is little doubt of that; men of low degree can profit us nothing; they cannot pretend or promise to doe us good; But then sayes David there, Men of high degree are a lye; They pretend a power, and a purpose to do us good, and then disappoint us. Many times men cannot, many times men will not; neither can we finde in any but God himselfe, a constant power, and a constant will, upon which we may relie: The men of Malta, of what ranke soever they were, did, all men, low and high, will change their minds.

Neither have these men of Malta (consider them in what quality you will) so much honour afforded them, in the Originall, as our translation hath given them. We say, they changed their minds; the Original says only this, they changed, and no more. Alas, they, we, men of this world, wormes of this dunghil, whether Basilisks or blind wormes, whether Scarabs or Silkworms, whether high or low in the world, have no minds to change. The C Platonique Philosophers did not only acknowledge Animã in homine, a soule in man, but Mentem in anima, a minde in the soul of man. They meant by the minde, the superiour faculties of the soule, and we never come to exercise them. Men and women call one another inconstant, and accuse one another of having changed their minds, when, God knowes, they have but changed the object of their eye, and seene a better white or red. An old man loves not the same sports that he did when he was young, nor a sicke man the same meats that hee did when hee was well: But these men have not changed their mindes; The old man hath changed his fancy, and the sick man his taste; neither his minde.

The Mind implies consideration, deliberation, conclusion upon premisses; and wee never come to that; wee never put the soule home; wee never bend the soule up to her height; we never put her to a tryall what she is able to doe towards discerning a tenta-
D tion, what towards resisting a tentation, what towards repenting a tentation; we never put her to tryall what she is able to doe by her naturall faculties, whether by them shee cannot be as good as a Plato, or a Socrates, who had no more but those naturall faculties; what by vertue of Gods generall grace, which is that providence, in which he inwraps all his creatures, whether by that she cannot know her God, as well as the Oxe knowes his Crib, and the Stork her nest; what by vertue of those particular graces, which God offers her in his private inspirations at home, and in his publique Ordinances here, whether by those she cannot be as good an houre hence, as she is now; and as good a day after, as that day that she receives the Sacrament; we never put the soule home, we never bend the soule up to her height; and the extent of the soule is this minde. When David speaks of the people, he sayes, They imagine a vaine thing; It goes no farther, then
E to the fancy, to the imagination; it never comes so neare the minde, as Consideration, Reflection, Examination, they onely imagine, fancy a vain thing, which is but a waking dreame, for the fancy is the seat, the scene, the theatre of dreames. When David speaks there of greater persons, he carries it farther then so, but yet not to the minde; The Rulers take counsell, sayes David; but not of the minde, not of rectified and religious reason; but, They take counsell together, sayes he; that is, of one another; They sit still and harken what the rest will doe, and they will doe accordingly. Now, this is but a Herding, it is not an Union; This is for the most part, a following of affections, and passions, which are the inferiour servants of the soule, and not of that, which we understand here by the Minde, The deliberate resolutions, and executions of the superiour faculties thereof.

Pſal. 118. 8. Ver. 9. Pſal. 146. 3.

Pſal. 62. 9.

Pſal. 2. 1.

They changed, sayes our Text; not their mindes; there is no evidence, no apparance, A that they exercised any, that they had any; but they changed their passions. Nay, they have not so much honour, as that afforded them, in the Originall; for it is not They changed, but They were changed, passively; Men subject to the transportation of passion, doe nothing of themselves, but are meerely passive; And being possest with a spirit of feare, or a spirit of ambition, as those spirits move them, in a minute their yea is nay, their smile is a frowne, their light is darkenesse, their good is evill, their Murderer is a God. These men of Malta changed, not their mindes, but their passions, and so did not change advisedly, but passionately were changed, and in that distemper, they said,
He is a God.

Deus. In this hasty acclamation of theirs, He is a God, we are come to that which was our principall intention in this part, That as man hath in him a naturall Logique, but that strayes into Fallacies, in uncharitable judgements, so man hath in him a naturall Religi- B on, but that strayes into idolatry, and superstition. The men of Malta were but meere naturall men, and yet were so far from denying God, as that they multiplied Gods to themselves. The soule of man brings with it, into the body, a sense and an acknowledgment of God; neither can all the abuses that the body puts upon the soule, whilest they dwell together, (which are infinite) devest that acknowledgement, or extinguish that sense of God in the soule. And therefore by what severall names soever the old heathen Philosophers called their gods, still they meant all the same God. Chrysippus presented God to the world, in the notion and apprehension of Divina Necessitas, That a certaine divine necessitie which lay upon every thing, that every thing must necessarily be thus and thus done, that that Necessity was God; and this, others have called by another name, Destiny. Zeno presented God to the world, in the notion and apprehension of Di- vina lex; That it was not a constraint, a necessity, but a Divine law, an ordinance, and C settled course for the administration of all things; And this law was Zenoes God; and this, others have called by another name, Nature. The Brachmans, which are the Priests in the East, they present God, in the notion and apprehension of Divina lux, That light is God; in which, they expresse themselves, not to meane the fire, (which some naturall men worshipped for God) nor the Sunne; (which was worshipped by more) but by their light, they meane that light, by which man is enabled to see into the next world; and this we may well call by a better Name, for it is Grace. But still Chrysippus by his Divine Necessity, which is Destiny, and Zeno by his Divine law, which is Nature, and the Brachmans by their Divine light, which is Grace, (though they make the operations of God, God) yet they all intend in those divers names, the same power.

The naturall man knowes God. But then, to the naturall man, who is not onely fi- D nite, and determined in a compasse, but narrow in his compasse, nor onely not bottomlesse, but shallow in his comprehensions, to this naturall, this finite, and narrow, and shallow man, no burden is so insupportable, no consideration so inextricable, no secret so in-scrutable, no conception so incredible, as to conceive One infinite God, that should do all things alone, without any more Gods. That that power that establishes counsails, that things may be carried in a constancy, and yet permits Contingencies, that things shall fall out casually, That the God of Certainty, and the God of Contingency should be all one God, That that God that settles peace, should yet make warres, and in the day of battaile, should be both upon that side that does, and that side that is overcome, That the conquered God, and the victorious God, should be both one God, That that God who is all goodnesse in himselfe, should yet have his hand in every ill action, this the naturall man cannot digest, not comprehend. And therefore the naturall man eases himselfe, and thinkes he eases God, by dividing the burden, and laying his particular neces- E sities upon particular Gods. Hence came those enormous multiplications of Gods; He- siods thirty thousand Gods; and three hundred Iupiters. Hence came it that they brought their children into the world under one God, and then put them to nurse, and then to schoole, and then to occupations and professions under other severall Gods. Hence came their Vagitanus, a God that must take care that children doe not burst with crying; and their Fabulanus, a God that must take care, that children doe not stammer in speaking; Hence came their Statilinus, and their Potinus, a God that must teach them to goe, and a God that must teach them to drinke. So far, as that they came to make Febrem Deam, To erect Temples and Altars to diseases, to age, to death it selfe; and so, all those

A those punishments, which our true God laid upon man for sin, all our infirmities they made Gods. So far is the naturall man from denying God, as that he thus multiplies them.

But yet never did these naturall men, the Gentiles ascribe so much to their Gods, (except some very few of them) as they of the Romane perswasion may seeme to doe to their Saints. For they limited their devotions, and sacrifices, and supplications, in some certaine and determined things, and those, for the most part, in this world; but in the Romane Church, they all aske all of all, for they aske even things pertaining to the next world. And as they make their Saints verier Gods then the Gentils doe theirs, in asking greater things at their hands, so have they more of them. For, if there be not yet more Saints celebrated by Name, then will make up Hesiods thirty thousand, yet they have more, in this respect, that of Hesiods thirty thousand, one Nation worshipped one, B another another thousand; In the Romane Church, all worship all. And howsoever it be for the number, yet, saith one, we may live to see the number of Hesiods thirty thousand equalled, and exceeded; for, if the Jesuits, who have got two of their Order into the Consistory, (they have had two Cardinalls) and two of their Order into heaven, (they have had two Saints Canonized) if they could get one of their Order into the Chayre, one Pope; As we reade of one Generall that knighted his whole Army at once; so such a Pope may Canonize his whole Order, and then Hesiods thirty thousand would be literally fulfilled.

And, that, as we have done, in the multiplication of their gods, so, in their superstition to their created gods, we may also observe a congruity, a conformity, a concurrence between the Heathen and the Romane Religion; As the Heathen cast such an intimidation, such an infatuation, not onely upon the people, but upon the Princes too, as that in the Story of the Ægyptian Kings we finde, that whensoever any of their Priests signified unto any of their Kings, that it was the pleasure of his God, that he should leave that C kingdome, and come up to him, that King did alwayes without any contradiction, any hesitation, kill himselfe; so are they come so neare to this in the Romane Church, as that, though they cannot infatuate such Princes, as they are weary of, to kill themselves, yet when they are weary of Princes, they can infatuate other men, to those assassinats, of which our neighbour kingdome hath felt the blow more then once, and we the offer, and the plotting more then many times.

That that I drive to, in this consideration, is this, That since man is naturally apt to multiply Gods to himselfe, we doe with all Christian diligence shut up our selves in the beliefe and worship of our one and onely God; without admitting any more Mediators, or Intercessors, or Advocates, in any of those Modifications or Distinctions, with D which the later men have painted and disguized the Religion of Rome, to make them the more passable, and without making any one step towards meeting them, in their superstitious errors, but adhere intirely to our onely Advocate, and Mediator, and Intercessor Christ Jesus; for he does no more need an Assistant, in any of those offices, then in his office of Redeemer, or Saviour; and therefore, as they require no fellow-Redeemer, no fellow-Saviour, so neither let us admit any fellow-Advocate, fellow-Mediator, fellow-Intercessor in heaven. For why may not that reason hold all the yeare, which they assigne in the Romane Church, for their forbearance of prayers to any Saint, upon certaine dayes? Upon Good-Friday, and Easter-day, and Whitsunday, say they, we must not pray to any Saint, no not to the blessed Virgin, Quia Christus, & Spiritus Sanctus, sunt tunc temporis, supremi, & unici Advocati. Because upon those dayes, Christ, and the Holy Ghost, are our principall, nay upon those dayes, our onely Advocates. And are E Christ, and the Holy Ghost out of office a weeke after Easter, or after Whitsuntide? Since mans naturally apt to multiply Gods, let us be Christianly diligent, to conclude our selves in One. Garantus in Rubr. Missal. par. 1. Tit. 9. §. 8.

And then, since man is also naturally apt to stray into a superstitious worship of God, let us be Christianly diligent, to preclude all waies, that may lead us into that tentation, or incline us towards superstition. In which, I doe not intend, that we should decline all such things, as had been superstitiously abused, in a superstitious Church; But, in all such things, as being in their own nature indifferent, are, by a just commandment of lawfull authority, become more then indifferent (necessary) to us, though not Necessitate medii, yet Necessitate præcepti, (for, though salvation consist not in Ceremonies, Obedience doth, doth, and ſalvation conſiſts much in Obedience) That in all ſuch things, we alwayes informe our ſelves, of the right uſe of thoſe things in their firſt inſtitution, of their abuſe with which they have been depraved in the Roman Church, and of the good uſe which is made of them in ours. That becauſe pictures have been adored, we do not abhor a picture; Nor ſit at the Sacrament, becauſe Idolatry hath been committed in kneeling. That Church, which they call Lutheran, hath retained more of theſe Ceremonies, then ours hath done; And ours more then that which they call Calviniſt; But both the Lutheran, and ours, without danger, becauſe, in both places, we are diligent to preach to the people the right uſe of theſe indifferent things. For this is a true way of ſhutting out ſuperſtition, Not alwayes to aboliſh the thing it ſelfe, becauſe in the right uſe thereof, the ſpirituall profit, and edification may exceed the danger, but by preaching, and all convenient wayes of inſtruction, to deliver people out of that ignorance, which poſſeſſes people in the Roman captivity. A

Atheiſta. From which naturall inclination of man, we raiſe this, by way of concluſion of all, That ſince man is naturally apt to multiply Gods to himſelfe, and naturally apt to worſhip his Gods ſuperſtitiouſly, ſince there is a proneneſſe to many Gods, and to ſuperſtition, in nature, There cannot be ſo unnaturall a thing, no ſuch Monſter in nature, or againſt nature, as an Atheiſt, that beleeves no God. For, when we, we that are Chriſtians, have reproached this Atheiſt, thus farre, our way, Canſt not thou beleeve one God? ſuch a debility, ſuch a nullity in thy faith, as not to beleeve one God? we require no more, and canſt thou not doe that, not one? when we, we that are Chriſtians, have reproached him ſo farre, The naturall man of whoſe company hee will pretend to be, will reproach him ſo much farther, as to ſay, Canſt not thou beleeve one God? We, we who proceed by the ſame light that thou doeſt, beleeve a thouſand. So that the naturall man is as ready, readier then the Chriſtian, to excommunicate the Atheiſt; For, the Atheiſt that denies all Gods, does much more oppoſe the naturall man, that beleeves a thouſand, then the Chriſtian, that beleeves but one. B C

Poore intricated ſoule! Riddling, perplexed, labyrinthicall ſoule! Thou couldeſt not ſay, that thou beleeveſt not in God, if there were no God; Thou couldeſt not beleeve in God, if there were no God; If there were no God, thou couldeſt not ſpeake, thou couldeſt not thinke, not a word, not a thought, no not againſt God; Thou couldeſt not blaſpheme the Name of God, thou couldeſt not ſweare, if there were no God: For, all thy faculties, how ever depraved, and perverted by thee, are from him; and except thou canſt ſeriouſly beleeve, that thou art nothing, thou canſt not beleeve that there is no God. If I ſhould aske thee at a Tragedy, where thou ſhouldeſt ſee him that had drawne blood, lie welt'ring, and ſurrounded in his owne blood, Is there a God now? If thou couldſt anſwer me, No, Theſe are but Inventions, and Repreſentations of men, and I beleeve a God never the more for this; If I ſhould ask thee at a Sermon, where thou ſhouldeſt heare the Judgements of God formerly denounced, and executed, re-denounced, and applied to preſent occaſions, Is there a God now? If thou couldeſt anſwer me, No, Theſe are but Inventions of State, to couple and regulate Congregations, and keep people in order, and I beleeve a God never the more for this; Bee as confident as thou canſt, in company; for company is the Atheiſts Sanctuary; I reſpit thee not till the day of Judgement, when I may ſee thee upon thy knees, upon thy face, begging of the hills, that they would fall downe and cover thee from the fierce wrath of God, to aske thee then, Is there a God now? I reſpit thee not till the day of thine own death, when thou ſhalt have evidence enough, that there is a God, though no other evidence, but to finde a Devill, and evidence enough, that there is a Heaven, though no other evidence, but to feele Hell; To aske thee then, Is there a God now? I reſpit thee but a few houres, but ſix houres, but till midnight. Wake then; and then darke, and alone, Heare God aske thee then, remember that I asked thee now, Is there a God? and if thou dareſt, ſay No. D E

And then, as there is an univerſall Atheiſt, an Athieſt over all the world, that beleeves no God, ſo is he alſo an Atheiſt, over all the Chriſtian world, that beleeeves not Chriſt. That which the Apoſtle ſayes to the Epheſians, abſque Chriſto, abſque Deo; As long as you were without Chriſt, you were without God, is ſpoken (at leaſt) to all that have heard Chriſt preached; not to beleeve God, ſo, as God hath exhibited, and manifeſted himſelfe,

A selfe, in his Son Christ Jesus, is, in S. Pauls acceptation of that word, Atheisme: and S. Paul, and he that speaks in S. Paul, is too good a Grammarian, too great a Critique for thee to dispute against.

And then, as there is an universall Atheist, he that denies God, And a more particular Atheist, he that denies Christ; so in a narrower, and yet large sense of the word, there is an actuall Atheist, a practicall Atheist, who though he doe pretend to make God, and God in Christ the object of his faith; yet does not make Christ, and Christ in the holy Ghost, that is, Christ working in the Ordinances of his Church, the rule and patterne of his actions, but lives so, as no man can beleeve that he beleeves in God.

This universall Atheist, that beleeves no God, the heavens, and all the powers therein, shall condemne at the last day; The particular Atheist, that beleeves no Christ, the glorious company of the Apostles, that established the Church of Christ, shall condemn
B at that day; And the practicall Atheist, the ungodly liver, the noble army of Martyrs, that did, and suffered so much for Christ, shall then condemne. And condemne him, not onely as the most impious thing, but as the most inhumane; Not onely as the most ungodly, but as the most unnaturall thing: for an Atheist is not onely a Devil in Religion, but a monster in nature; not onely elemented and composed of Heresies in the Church, but of paradoxes, and absurdities in the world; Naturall men, the men of Malta, even Barbarians, though subject to levity and changing their minds, yet make this their first act after their change, to constitute a God, though in another extreme, yet in an evident and absolute averseneſſe from Atheisme; They changed their minds, and said, he was a God. And be this enough for the Explication of the words, and their Application, and Complication to the celebration of the day.

The God of heaven rectifie in us our naturall Logique; That in all his Judgements we C glorifie God, without uncharitable condemning other men. The God of heaven sanctifie to us our naturall Religion, That it be never quenched nor damped in us, never blown out by Atheisme, nor blowne up by an Idolatrous multiplying of false, or a superstitious worship of our true God. The God of heaven preserve us in safety, by the power of the Father; In saving knowledge, by the wisdome of the Son; And in a peacefull unity of affections, by the love and goodnesse of the holy Ghost. Amen.

SERM. XLIX.

D Preached on the Conversion of S. PAUL. 1629.

ACTS 23. 6, 7.

But when Paul perceived that one part were Sadduces, and the other Pharisees, he cryed out in the Councel, Men and Brethren, I am a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee; Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

And when he had so said, there arose a dissention between the Pharisees and the Sadduces, and the multitude was divided.

E WE consider ordinarily in the old Testament, God the Father; And in the Gospels, God the Son; And in this Book, the Acts, and in the Epistles, and the rest, God the Holy Ghost, that is, God in the Government and Administration of his Church, as well in the ordinary Ministery and constant callings therein, as in the extraordinary use of generall Councells; of which, we have the Modell, and Platforme, and precedent in the fifteenth Chapter of this Booke. The Book is noted to have above twenty Sermons of the Apostles; and yet the Book is not called The Sermons, The Preaching of the Apostles, but the Practise, the Acts of the Apostles. Our actions, if they be good, speak louder then our Sermons; Our preaching is our speech, our good life is our eloquence. Preaching celebrates the Sabbath, but a good life makes the whole week a Sabbath, that is, A savor of rest in the nostrils

Gen. 8. Chrysost. Hieron

noſtrils of God, as it is ſaid of Noahs Sacrifice, when he came out of the Ark. The Book is called The Acts of the Apoſtles; But ſayes S. Chryſoſtome, and S. Hierome too, it might be called the Acts of S. Paul, ſo much more is it converſant about him, then all the reſt. In which reſpect, at this time of the yeare, and in theſe dayes, when the Church commemorates the Converſion of S. Paul, I have, for divers yeares ſucceſſively, in this place, determined my ſelfe upon this Book. Once upon the very act of his Converſion, in thoſe words, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Once upon his valediction to his Epheſians at Miletus, in thoſe words, Now I know that all ye ſhall ſee my face no more; And once upon the eſcape from the Vipers teeth, and the viperous tongues of thoſe inconſtant and clamorous beholders, who firſt raſhly cried out, He is a murderer, and then changed their mindes, and ſaid, He is a God. And now, for the ſervice of your devotions, and the advancement of your edification, I have laid my meditations upon this his Stratagem, and juſt avoiding of an unjuſt Judgement, When Paul percived that one part were Sadduces, and the other Phariſees, &c.

Acts 9. 4. Acts 20. 25. Acts 28. 6.

A B

Diviſio.

In handling of which words, becauſe they have occaſioned a Diſputation, and a Probleme, whether this that Paul did, were well done, To raiſe a diſſention amongſt his Judges, we ſhall ſtop firſt upon that Conſideration, That all the actions of holy men, of Apoſtles in the new Teſtament, of Patriarchs in the old, are not to be drawne into example and conſequence for others, no nor alwayes to be excuſed and juſtified in them that did them; All actions of holy men, are not holy; that is firſt. And ſecondly, we ſhall conſider this action of S. Paul, in ſome circumſtances that inveſt it, and in ſome effects that it produced in our Text, as diſſention amongſt his Judges, and ſo a reprieving, or rather a putting off of the triall for that time; and theſe will determine our ſecond Conſideration. And in a third, we ſhall lodge all theſe in our ſelves, and make it our owne caſe, and finde that we have all Sadduces and Phariſees in our own boſomes, (contrary affections in our own hearts) and finde an advantage in putting theſe home-Sadduces, and home-Phariſees, theſe contrary affections in our owne boſomes, in colluctation, and oppoſition againſt one another, that they doe not combine, and unite themſelves to our farther diſadvantage; A Civill warre, is, in this caſe, our way to peace; when one ſinfull affection croſſes another, we ſcape better, then when all joyne, without any reſiſtance. And in theſe three, firſt the Generall, How wee are to eſtimate all actions, And then the Particular, what wee are to thinke of S. Pauls Action, And laſtly, the Indivjduall, How wee are to direct and regulate our owne Actions, wee ſhall determine all.

C

1. Part.

Firſt then, though it be a ſafer way, to ſuſpect an action to be ſin that is not, then to preſume an action to be no ſin, that is ſo, yet that rule holds better in our ſelves, then in other men; for, in judging the actions of other men, our ſuſpition may ſoone ſtray into an uncharitable miſ-interpretation, and wee may ſin in condemning that in another, which was no ſin in him that did it. But, in truth, Tranſilire lineam, To depart from the direct and ſtraight line, is ſin, as well on the right hand, as on the left; And the Devill makes his advantages upon the over-tender, and ſcrupulous conſcience, as well as upon the over-confident, and obdurate; and many men have erred as much, in juſtifying ſome actions of holy men, as in calumniating, or miſ-condemning of others. If we had not evidence in Scripture, that Abraham received that Commandement from God, who could juſtifie Abrahams proceeding with his ſon Iſaac? And therefore who ſhall be afraid to call Noahs Drunkenneſſe, and his undecent lying in his Tent, Or Lots Drunkenneſſe, and his iterated Inceſt with his Daughters, or his inconſiderate offer to proſtitute his Daughters to the Sodomites, Or to call Davids complicated and multiplied ſin, a ſin? When the Church celebrates Samſons death, though he killed himſelf, it is upon a tender & holy ſuppoſition, that he might do this not without ſome inſtinct and inſpiration from the Spirit of God. But howſoever the Church interprets ſuch actions, it is a dangerous and a fallacious way, for any private man to argue ſo, The Spirit of God directed this man in many actions, therefore in all; And dangerous to conclude an action to be good, either becauſe he that did it, had a good purpoſe in doing it, or becauſe ſome good effects proceeded from it. Bonum bene, are the two horſes that muſt carry us to heaven; To do good things, and to doe them well; To propoſe good ends, and to goe by good waies to thoſe good ends. The Mid-wives lie, in the behalfe of the Iſraelites children, was a lie, and a ſin, howſoever God, out of his own goodneſſe, found ſomething in their piety,

D E

to

A to reward. I should not venture to say, as he said, nor to say that hee said well, when Moses said, Dele me, Forgive their sinne, or blot mee out of thy Booke; Nor when S. Paul said, Anathema pro fratribus, I could wish that my selfe were separated from Christ for my Brethren. I would not, I could not without sin, be content that my name should be blotted out of the Booke of Life, or that I should bee separated from Christ, though all the world beside were to be blotted out, and separated, if I staid in. Exod. 32. 32. Rom. 9. 3.

The benefit that we are to make of the errors of holy men, is not that, That man did this, therefore I may doe it: but this, God suffered that holy man to fall, and yet loved that good soule well, God hath not therefore cast me away, though he have suffered me to fall too. Bread is mans best sustenance, yet there may be a dangerous surfet of bread: Charity is the bread that the soule lives by; yet there may be a surfet of charity; I may mis-lead my selfe shrewdly, if I say, surely my Father is a good man, my Master a good man, my Pastor a good man, men that have the testimony of Gods love, by his manifold blessings upon them; and therefore I may be bold to doe whatsoever I see them doe. Be perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven, is perfect, is the example that Christ gives you. Be yee followers of mee, as I am of Christ, is the example that the Apostle gives you. Good Examples are good Assistances; but no Example of man is sufficient to constitute a certaine and constant rule; All the actions of the holiest man are not holy. B Mat. 5. 48. 1 Cor. 11. 1.

Hence appeares the vanity and impertinency of that calumny, with which our adversaries of the Roman perswasion labour to oppresse us, That those points in which we depart from them, cannot be well established, because therein we depart from the Fathers; As though there were no condemnation to them, that pretended a perpetuall adhering to the Fathers, nor salvation to them, who suspected any Father of any mistaking. And they have thought that one thing enough, to discredit, and blast, and annihilate that great and usefull labour, which the Centuriators, the Magdeburgenses tooke in compiling the Ecclesiasticall Story, that in every age as they passe, those Authors have laid out a particular section, a particular Chapter De nævis Patrum, to note the mistakings of the Fathers in every age; This they thinke a criminall and a hainous thing, inough to discredit the whole worke; As though there were ever in any age, any Father, that mistook nothing, or that it were blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, to note such a mistaking. And yet, if those blessed Fathers, now in possession of heaven, be well affected with our celebrating, or ill, with our neglecting their works, certainly they finde much more cause to complaine of our adversaries, then of us. Never any in the Reformation hath spoken so lightly, nay, so heavily; so negligently, nay, so diligently, so studiously in diminution of the Fathers, as they have done. One of the first Jesuits proceeds with modesty and ingenuity, and yet sayes, Qualibet ætas antiquitati detulit, Every age hath been apt to ascribe much to the Ancient Fathers; Hoc autem asserimus, sayes he, Iuniores Doctores perspicaciores, This we must necessarily acknowledge, that our later Men have seen farther then the elder Fathers did. His fellow Jesuit goes farther; Hoc omnes dicunt, sed non probant, sayes he, speaking of one person in the Genealogy of Christ, This the Fathers say, sayes he, and later men too; Catholiques, and Heretiques; All: But none of them prove it; He will not take their words, not the whole Churches, though they all agree. But a Bishop of as much estimation and authority in the Council of Trent, as any, goes much farther; Being pressed with S. Augustins opinion, he sayes, Nec nos tantillum moveat Augustinus, Let it never trouble us, which way S. Augustine goes; Hoc enim illi peculiare, sayes he, ut alium errorem expugnans, alteri ansam præbeat, for this is inseparable from S. Augustine, That out of an earnestnesse to destroy one error, he will establish another. Nor doth that Bishop impute that distemper onely to S. Augustine, but to S. Hierome too; Of him he sayes, In medio positus certamine, ardore feriendi adversarios, premit & socios, S. Hierome laies about him, and rather then misse his enemy, he wounds his friends also. But all that might better be borne then this, Turpiter erraruut Patres, The Fathers fell foully into errors; And this, better then that, Eorum opinio, opinio Hæreticorum, The Fathers differ not from the Heretiques, concurre with the Heretiques. Who in the Reformation hath charged the Fathers so farre? and yet Baronius hath. C D E Salmeron. Maldon. Cornel. Mussus

If they did not oppresse us with this calumny of neglecting, or undervaluing the Fathers, we should not make our recourse to this way of recrimination; for, God knowes, if it be modestly done, and with the reverence, in many respects, due to them, it is no fault fault to say the Fathers fell into some faults. Yet, it is rather our Adversaries observation then ours, That all the Ancient Fathers were Chiliasts, Millenarians, and maintained that error of a thousand yeares temporall happinesse upon this earth, betweene the Resurrection, and our actuall and eternall possession of Heaven; It is their observation rather then ours, That all the Ancient Fathers denied the dead a fruition of the sight of God, till the day of Judgement; It is theirs rather then ours, That all the Greek Fathers, and some of the Latin, assigned Gods foreknowledge of mans works, to be the cause of his predestination. It is their note, That for the first six hundred yeares, the generall opinion, and generall practise of the Church was, To give the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, to Infants newly baptized, as a thing necessary to their salvation. They have noted, That the opinion of the Ancient Fathers was contrary to the present opinion in the Church of Rome, concerning the conception of the blessed Virgin without Originall sin. These notes and imputations arise from their Authors, and not from ours, and they have told it us, rather then we them.

Indeed neither we nor they can dissemble the mistakings of the Fathers. The Fathers themselves would not have them dissembled. Hieron. De me, sayes S. Hierom, ubicunque de meo sensu loquor, arguat me quilibet, For my part, whereseever I deliver but mine owne opinion, every man hath his liberty to correct me. It is true, August. S. Augustine does call Iulian the Pelagian to the Fathers; but it is to vindicate and redeeme the Fathers from those calumnies which Iulian had laid upon them, that they were Multitudo cæcorum, a herd, a swarme of blinde guides, and followers of one another, And that they were Conspiratio perditorum, Damned Conspirators against the truth. To set the Fathers in their true light, and to restore them to their lustre and dignity, and to make Iulian confesse what reverend persons they were, S. Aug. cals him to the consideration of the Fathers, but not to try matters of faith by them alone. For, Lactant. Sapientiam sibi adimit, qui sine judicio majorum inventa probat, That man devests himselfe of all discretion, who, without examination, captivates his understanding to the Fathers.

It is ingenuously said by one of their later Writers, (if hee would but give us leave to say so too) Cajetan. Sequamur Patres, tanquam Duces, non tanquam Dominos, Let us follow the Fathers as Guides, not as Lords over our understandings, as Counsellors, not as Commanders. It is too much to say of any Father that which Nicephor. Chrysost. Nicephorus sayes of S. Chrysostome, In illius perinde atque in Dei verbis quiesco, I am as safe in Chrysostomes words, as in the Word of God; That is too much. It is too much to say of any Father that which Sophron. Leo. Sophronius sayes of Leo, That his Epistles were Divina Scriptura, tanquam ex ore Petri prolata, & fundamentum fidei, That he received the Epistles that Leo writ, as holy writ, as written by S. Peter himselfe, and as the foundation of his faith; that is too much. It is too much to say of S. Peter himselfe that which Chrysolog. Chrysologus sayes, That he is Immobile fundamentum salutis, The immoveable foundation of our salvation, & Mediator noster apud Deum, The Mediator of man to God. Their Jesuit Azorius Azorius gives us a good Caution herein; Hee sayes it is a good and safe way, in all emergent doubts, to governe our selves Per communem opinionem, by the the common opinion, by that, in which most Authors agree; But sayes he, how shall we know which is the common opinion? Since, not onely that is the common opinion in one Age, that is not so in another, (The common opinion was in the Primitive Church, that the blessed Virgin was conceived in Original sin, The common opinion now, is that she was not) But if we consider the same Age, that is the common opinion in one place, in one countrey, which is not so in another place, at the same time; That Jesuit puts his example in the worship of the Crosse of Christ, and sayes, That, at this day, in Germany and in France it is the common opinion, and Catholique Divinity, That λατρεία, Divine worship is not due to the Crosse of Christ; In Italy and in Spain it is the common opinion, and Catholique Divinity, that it is due. Now, how shall hee governe himselfe, that is unlearned, and not able to try, which is the common opinion? Or how shall the learnedest of all governe himselfe if he have occasion to travaile, but to change his Divinity, as often as he changes his Coine, and when he turnes his Dutch Dollers into Pistolets, to go out of Germany, into Spain, turn his Devotion, and his religious worship according to the Clime? To end this Consideration, The holy Patriarchs in the Old Testament, were holy men, though they strald into some sinfull actions; the holy Fathers in the Primitive Church, were holy men, though they straied into some erronious opinions; But neither are the holiest mens actions alwaies holy, nor the soundest Fathers opinions

A opinions alwaies ſound. And therefore the queſtion hath beene not impertinently moved, whether this that S. Paul did here, were juſtifiably done, Who, when he perceived that one part were Sadduces, and the other Phariſees, &c. And ſo wee are come to our ſecond part, from the conſideration of Actions in generall, to this particular action of S. Paul.

2 Part.

In this ſecond part we make three ſteps. Firſt we ſhall conſider, what Councell, what Court this was, before whom S. Paul was convented, (He cryed out in the Councell, ſayes the text) whether they were his competent Judges, and ſo he bound to a cleare, and direct proceeding with them; And ſecondly, what his end and purpoſe was, that he propoſed to himſelfe; which was to divide the Judges, and ſo to put off his tryall to another day; for, when he had ſaid that, (ſayes the text) that that he had to ſay, there aroſe a Diſſention, and the multitude, All, both Judges, and ſpectators, and witneſſes, were divided; And then laſtly, by what way he went to this end; which was by a double proteſtation, B first that, Men and brethren, I am a Phariſee; And then that, Of the hope and Reſurrection of the dead, I am called in queſtion.

Index Competens.

Firſt then, for the competency of his Judges, Whether a man be examined before a competent Judge or no, he may not lye: we can put no caſe, in which it may be lawfull for any man to lye to any man; not to a midnight, nor to a noone thiefe, that breaks my houſe, or aſſaults my perſon, I may not lye. And though many have put names of diſguiſe, as Equivocations, and Reſervations, yet they are all children of the ſame father, the father of lies, the devill, and of the ſame brood of vipers, they are lyes. To an Incompetent Judge, if I be interrogated, I muſt ſpeake truth, if I ſpeake; but to a Competent Judge, I muſt ſpeak: With the Incompetent I may not be falſe, but with the Competent, I may not be ſilent. Certainely, that ſtanding mute at the Bar, which, of late times hath prevailed upon many diſtempered wretches, is, in it ſelfe, ſo particularly a ſin, as that I C ſhould not venture to abſolve any ſuch perſon, nor to adminiſter the Sacrament to him, how earneſtly ſoever he deſired it at his death, how penitently ſoever he confeſſed all his other ſins, except he repented in particular, that ſin, of having ſtood mute and refuſed a juſt triall, and would be then content to ſubmit himſelfe to it, if that favour might poſſibly at that time be afforded him. To an incompetent Judge I muſt not lie, but I may be ſilent, to a competent I muſt anſwer.

Conſider we then the competency of S. Pauls Judges, what this Councel, this Court was. It was that Councel, which is ſo often in the New Teſtament called Συνέδριον, and in our Tranſlation, the Councel. The Jews ſpeake much of their Lex Oralis, their Oral, their Traditionall Law; that is, That Expoſition of the Law, which, ſay they, Moſes received from the mouth of God, without writing, in that forty dayes converſation which he had with God, in the Mount; for, it is not probable, ſay they, that Moſes D ſhould ſpend forty dayes in that, which another man would have done in one or two, that is, in receiving onely that Law which is written: But he received an expoſition too, and delivered that to Ioſhuah, and he to the principal men, and according to that expoſition, they proceeded in Judgement, in this Councel, in this their Synedrion. Which Councell having had the firſt inſtitution thereof, Numb. 11.16. where God ſaid to Moſes, Gather me ſeventy men of the Elders of Iſrael, Officers over the people, and I will take of the Spirit that is upon thee, and put it upon them, and they ſhall beare the burden; that is, I will impart to them that expoſition of the Law, which I have imparted to thee, and by that they ſhall proceed in Judgement, in this Councel, this Synedrion of Seventy, had continued (though with ſome variations) to this time, when S. Paul was now called before them. Of this Councel of Seventy, this Synedrion, our bleſſed Saviour ſpeaks, when he ſayes, He that ſaies Raca, (that is, declares his anger by any opprobrious words of defa- E mation,) ſhall be ſubject to the Councel. Of this Councel he ſpeakes, when he ſayes, for my ſake, they will deliver you up to the Councel; And from this Councel it is, not inconveniently, thought, that thoſe meſſengers were ſent, which were ſent to examine Iohn Baptiſt, whether he were the Meſſias or no; for there it is ſaid, That Prieſts and Levites were ſent; and this Councell, ſayes Ioſephus, at firſt, (and for a long time) conſiſted of ſuch perſons, though, after, a third Order was taken in, that is, ſome principall men of the other Tribes. To this Councel belonged the Conuſance of all cauſes, Eccleſiaſticall and Civill, and of all perſons; no Magiſtrate, no Prophet was exempt from this Court. Before this Councel was Herod himſelfe called, for an execution done by his command, which, though it were done upon a notorious malefactor, yet was done without due proceedings in law, Numb. 11.16.

Mat. 5.22.
Iohn 10.17.

Iohn 1.19.

Ioſeph. l. 14. c. 17.

and therefore Herod called before this Councell for it.

But (by the way) this was not done when Herod was King, as Baronius doth mischievously and seditiously infer and argue, as though this Councel were above the King. Herod at that time, was very far from any imagination of being King; His Father, Antipater, who then was alive, having, at that time, no pretense to the Kingdome. But Herod, though young, was then in a great place of Government, and for a misdemeanor there, was called before this Councel, which had jurisdiction over all but the King. For so, in the Talmud it selfe, the difference is expresly put; Sacerdos magnus judicat & judicatur, The High Priest, the greatest Prelate in the Clergy, may have place in this Councel, and may be called in question by this Councel, Judicat & judicatur; So, Testimonium dicit, & de eo dicitur, He may goe from the Bench, and be a witnesse against any man, and he may be put from the Bench, and any mans witnesse be received against him. But then of the King, it is as expresly said, of this Councel, in that Talmud, Nec judicat, nec judicatur, The King sits in Judgement upon no man, lest his presence should intimidate an accused person, or draw the other Judges from their own opinion to his; Much lesse can the King be judged by any; Nec testimonium dicit, nec de eo dicitur, The King descends not to be a witnes against any man, neither can any man be a witnes against him. It was therefore mischievously, and seditiously, and treacherously, and trayterously, and (in one comprehensive word) Papistically argued by Baronius, That this Councel was above the King.

But above all other persons it was; In some cases, in the whole body of the Councel; for, Matters of Religion, Innovations in poynts of doctrine, Imputations upon great persons in the Church, were not to be judged by any selected Committee, but by the whole Councel, the intire body, the Seaventy; Pecuniary matters, and matters of defamation, might be determined by a Committee of any three; Matters that induced bodily punishments, though it were but flagellation, but a whipping matter, not under a Committee of twenty three. But so were all persons, and all causes distributed, as that that Court, that Councel had conusance of all. So that then S. Paul was before a competent and a proper Judge, and therefore bound to answer; Did he that? That is our next disquisition, and our second Consideration in this part, His end, his purpose in proceeding as he did.

Finis. His End was to dissolve the Councel for the present. He saw a tumultuary proceeding; for, as the Text sayes, he was fain to cry out in the Councel, before he could be heard. Vers. 2. He saw the President of the Councel, Ananias the high Priest, so ill-affected towards him, as that he commanded him extrajudicially to be smitten. He saw a great part of his Judges, and spectators, amongst whom were the witnesses, to be his declared enemies. He saw that if he proceeded to a tryall then, he perished infallibly, irrecoverably, and therefore desired to put off the tryall for that time. He did not deny nor decline the jurisdiction of that Court; He had no eye to any forraigne Prince, nor Prelate: There are amongst us that doe so; that deny that they can be traytors, though they commit treason, because they are subjects to a forraine Bishop, and not to their naturall King; S. Paul did not so. He did not calumniate nor traduce the proceedings of that Court, nor put into the people ill opinions of their superiors, by laying aspersions upon them; There are that doe so; S. Paul did not. But his end and purpose was onely to put off the tryall for that time, till he might be received to a more sober, and calme, and equitable hearing. And this certainly was no ill end, so his way were good. What was that? That is our next, our third and last Consideration in this part.

Via. Pharisæi. His way was by a twofold Protestation; The first this, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee. The Pharisees were a sect amongst the Jews, who are ordinarily conceived to have received their Name from Division, from Separation, from departing from that liberty, which other men did take, to a stricter forme of life. Of which, amongst many others, S. Hierome gives us this evidence, that the Pharisees would fringe their long robes with thornes, that so they might cut, and teare, and mangle their heels and legs as they went, in the sight of the people. Outward mortification and austerity was a specious thing, and of great estimation amongst the Jews: you may see that in John Baptist; who was as much followed, and admired for that, as Christ for his Miracles, though John Baptist did no Miracles. For, extraordinary austerity is a continuall Miracle. As S. Hierome sayes of Chastity, Habet servata pudicitia martyrium suum, Chastity is a continuall Martyrdome; So to surrender a mans selfe to a continuall hunger, and thirst, and cold, and

A and watching, and forbearing all which all others enjoy, a continuall mortification is a continuall Miracle. This made the Phariſees gracious and acceptable to the people: Therefore S. Paul doth not make his Proteſtation here onely ſo, That he had been as touching the Law, a Phariſee, nor as he makes it in this book, After the ſtricteſt ſect of our religion, I lived a Phariſee, that is, heretofore I did, but now, after his Converſion, and after his Apoſtolicall Commiſſion, he makes it, Men and brethren, I am a Phariſee. Phil. 3. 5. Act. 26. 5.

Beloved, there are ſome things in which all Religions agree; The worſhip of God, The holineſſe of life; And therefore, if when I ſtudy this holineſſe of life, and faſt, and pray, and ſubmit my ſelfe to diſcreet, and medicinall mortifications, for the ſubduing of my body, any man will ſay, this is Papiſticall, Papiſts doe this, it is a bleſſed Proteſtation, and no man is the leſſe a Proteſtant, nor the worſe a Proteſtant for making it, Men and brethren, I am a Papiſt, that is, I will faſt and pray as much as any Papiſt, and enB ble my ſelfe for the ſervice of my God, as ſeriouſly, as ſedulouſly, as laboriouſly as any Papiſt. So, if when I ſtartle and am affected at a blaſphemous oath, as at a wound upon my Saviour, if when I avoyd the converſation of thoſe men, that prophane the Lords day, any other will ſay to me, This is Puritanicall, Puritans do this, It is a bleſſed Proteſtation, and no man is the leſſe a Proteſtant, nor the worſe a Proteſtant for making it, Men and Brethren, I am a Puritan, that is, I wil endeavour to be pure, as my Father in heaven is pure, as far as any Puritan.

Now of theſe Phariſees, who were by theſe means ſo popular, the numbers were very great. The Sadduces, who alſo were of an exemplary holineſſe in ſome things, but in many and important things of different opinions, even in matter of Religion, from all other men, were not ſo many in number, but they were men of better quality and place in the State, then, for the moſt part, the Phariſees were. And as they were more potent, C and able to do more miſchiefe, ſo had they more declared themſelves to be bent againſt the Apoſtles, then the Phariſees had done. In the fourth Chapter of this Booke, The Prieſts, and the Sadduces, (no mention of Phariſees) came upon Peter and Iohn, being grieved, that they preached, thorough Ieſus, the reſurrection of the dead. And ſo againe, The high Prieſt roſe up, and all they that were with him, which is (ſayes that Text expreſly) the ſect of the Sadduces, and were filled with indignation. And ſome collect out of a place in Euſebius, that this Ananias, who was high Prieſt at this time, and had declared his ill affection to S. Paul, (as you heard before) was a Sadduce: But, I thinke thoſe words of Euſebius will not beare, at leaſt, not enforce that, not be well applied to this Ananias. Howſoever, S. Paul had juſt cauſe to come to this proteſtation, I am a Phariſee, and in ſo doing he can be obnoxious to nothing; if he be as ſafe in his other proteſtation, all is well, for the hope and reſurrection of the dead, am I called in queſtion; conſider we that. Sadducæi. Ver. 2. Act. 5. 17.

D It is true, that he was not, at this time, called in queſtion, directly and expreſly for the Reſurrection; you may ſee, where he was apprehended, that it was for teaching againſt that people, and againſt that law, and againſt that Temple. So that, he was endited upon pretenſe of ſedition, and prophanation of the Temple. And therefore, when S. Paul ſayes here, I am called in queſtion for preaching the Reſurrection, he means this, If I had not preached the Reſurrection, I ſhould never have been called in queſtion, nor ſhould be, if I would forbeare preaching the Reſurrection; No man perſecutes me, no man appeares againſt me, but onely they that deny the Reſurrection; The Sadduces did deny it; The Phariſees did beleeve it; and therefore this was a likely and a lawfull way to divide them, and to gaine time, with ſuch a purpoſe, (ſo far) as David had, when he prayed, O Lord, divide their tongues. For it is not alwayes unlawfull to ſowe diſcord, and to kindle diſſention amongſt men; for men may agree too well, to ill purpoſes. So have yee then E ſeen, That though it be not ſafe to conclude, S. Paul, or any holy man did this, therefore I may do it, (which was our firſt part) yet in this which S. Paul did here, there was nothing that may not be juſtified in him, and imitated by us, (which was our ſecond part) Remains onely the third, which is the accommodation of this to our preſent times, and the appropriation thereof to our ſelves, and making it our own caſe. Reſurrectio. Act. 23. 28. Pſal. 55. 9.

The world is full of Sadduces, and Phariſees, and the true Church of God arraigned by both. The Sadduces were the greater men, the Phariſees were the greater number; ſo they are ſtill. The Sadduces denied the Reſurrection, and Angels, and Spirits; So they do ſtill. For, thoſe Sadduces, whom we conſider now, in this part, are meere carnall men; men that have not onely no Spirit of God in them, but no ſoule, no ſpirit of their own; 3 Part. Sadducæi.

owne; meere Atheiſts. And this Carnality, this Atheiſme, this Sadduciſme is ſeene in ſome Countries to prevaile moſt upon great perſons, (the Sadduces were great perſons) upon perſons that abound in the poſſeſſions, and offices, and honours of this world; for they that have moſt of this world, for the moſt part, think leaſt of the next. A

Phariſai. Theſe are our preſent Sadduces; and then the Phariſee hath his name from Pharas, which is Diviſion, Separation; But Calvin derives the name (not inconveniently) from Pharaſh, which is Expoſition, Explication. We embrace both extractions, and acceptations of the word, both Separation, and Expoſition; for the Phariſee whom we conſider now, in this part, is he that is ſeparated from us, (there it is Pharas, ſeparation) and ſeparated by following private Expoſitions, (there it is Pharaſh, Expoſition) with a contempt of all Antiquity; and not only an undervaluation, but a deteſtation of all opinions but his owne, and his, whom he hath ſet up for his Idol. And as the Sadduce (our great and worldly man) is all carnall, all body, and beleeves no ſpirit: ſo our Phariſee is ſo ſuper-ſpirituall, as that he beleeves, that is, conſiders no body; He imagines ſuch a Purification, ſuch an Angelification, ſuch a Deification in this life, as though the heavenly Jeruſalem were deſcended already, or that God had given man but that one commandement, Love God above all, and not a ſecond too, Love thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. Our Sadduces will have all body, our Phariſees all ſoule, and God hath made us of both, and given us offices proper to each. B

Duplex Sadducæus. Now of both theſe, the preſent Sadduce, the carnall Atheiſt, and the preſent Phariſee, the Separatiſt, that overvalues himſelf, and bids us ſtand farther off, there are two kinds. For, for the Atheiſt, there is Davids Atheiſt, and S. Pauls Atheiſt; Davids, that aſcribes

Pſal. 14. 2. all to nature, and ſayes in his heart, There is no God; That will call no ſudden death, nor extraordinary puniſhment upon any enormous ſinner, a judgement of God, nor any ſuch deliverance of his ſervants, a miracle from God, but all is Nature, or all is Accident, and would have been ſo, though there had been no God: This is Natures Sadduce, Davids Atheiſt; And then S. Pauls Atheiſt is he, who though he doe beleeve in God, yet doth

Epheſ. 2. 12. not beleeve God in Chriſt; for ſo S. Paul ſayes to the Epheſians, abſque Chriſto, abſque Deo, If ye be without Chriſt, ye are without God. For as it is the ſame abſurdity in nature, to ſay, There is no Sun, and to ſay, This that you call the Sun is not the Sun, this that ſhines out upon you, this that produces your fruits, and diſtinguiſhes your ſeaſons is not the Sun: ſo is it the ſame Atheiſme, in theſe dayes of light, to ſay, There is no God, and to ſay, This Chriſt whom you call the Son of God, is not God, That he in whom God hath manifeſted himſelfe, He whom God hath made Head of the Church, and Judge of the world, is not God. This then is our double Sadduce, Davids Atheiſt that beleeves not God, S. Pauls Atheiſt that beleeves not Chriſt. And as our Sadduce is, ſo is our Phariſee twofold alſo. C

Duplex Phariſæus. There is a Phariſee, that by following private expoſitions, ſeparates himſelfe from our Church, principally for matter of Government and Diſcipline, and imagines a Church that ſhall be defective in nothing, and does not onely think himſelf to be of that Church, but ſometimes to be that Church, for none but himſelfe is of that perſwaſion. And there is a Phariſee that dreames of ſuch an union, ſuch an identification with God in this life, as that he underſtands all things, not by benefit of the ſenſes, and impreſſions in the fancy and imagination, or by diſcourſe and ratiocination, as we poore ſoules doe, but by immediate, and continuall infuſions and inſpirations from God himſelfe; That he loves God, not by participation of his ſucceſſive Grace, more and more, as he receives more and more grace, but by a communication of God himſelfe to him, intirely and irrevocably; That he ſhall be without any need, and above all uſe of Scriptures, and that the Scriptures ſhall be no more to him, then a Catechiſme to our greateſt Doctors; That all that God commands him to doe in this world, is but as an eaſie walk downe a hill; That he can doe all that eaſily, and as much more, as ſhall make God beholden to him, and bring God into his debt, and that he may aſſigne any man to whom God ſhall pay the arrerages due to him, that is, appoint God upon what man he ſhall confer the benefit of his works of Supererogation; For in ſuch Propoſitions as theſe, and in ſuch Paradoxes as theſe, doe the Authors in the Roman Church delight to expreſſe and celebrate their Phariſaicall purity, as we find it frequently, abundantly in them. D E

In a word, ſome of our home-Phariſees will ſay, That there are ſome, who by benefit of a certaine Election, cannot ſin; That the Adulteries and Blaſphemies of the Elect, are not

A not ſins: But the Rome-Phariſee will ſay, that ſome of them are not onely without ſin in themſelves, but that they can ſave others from ſin, or the puniſhment of ſin, by their works of Supererogation; and that they are ſo united, ſo identified with God already, as that they are in poſſeſſion of the beatificall Viſion of God, and ſee him eſſentially, and as he is, in this life: (for, that Ignatius the father of the Jeſuits did ſo, ſome of his Diſciples ſay, it is, at leaſt probable, if not certaine) And that they have done all that they had to doe for their owne ſalvation, long agoe, and ſtay in the world now, onely to gather treaſure for others, and to worke out their ſalvation. So that theſe men are in better ſtate in this life, then the Saints are in heaven; There, the Saints may pray for others, but they cannot merit for others; Theſe men here can merit for other men, and work out the ſalvation of others. Nay, they may be ſaid in ſome reſpect to exceed Chriſt himſelfe; for Chriſt did ſave no man here, but by dying for him; Theſe men ſave other men, with B living well for them, and working out their ſalvation.

Sandæus Theolog. pæt. 1. fo. 76.

Theſe are our double Sadduces, & our double Phariſees; & now, beloved, if we would goe ſo far in S. Pauls way, as to ſet this two-fold Sadduce, Davids Atheiſt, without God, and S. Pauls Atheiſt, without Chriſt, againſt our twofold Phariſee, our home-Catharift, and our Rome-Catharift, If we would ſpend all our wit, and all our time, all our Inke, and our gall, in ſhewing them the deformities and iniquities of one another, by our preaching and writing againſt them, The truth, and the true Church might (as S. Paul did in our Text) ſcape the better. But when we (we that differ in no ſuch points) tear, and wound, and mangle one another with opprobrious contumelies, and odious names of ſub-diviſion in Religion, our Home-Phariſee, and our Rome-Phariſee, maligners of our Diſcipline, and maligners of our Doctrine, gaine upon us, and make their advantages of our contentions, and both the Sadduces, Davids Atheiſt that denies God, and S. Pauls Atheiſt that
C denies Chriſt, joyne in a ſcornfull asking us, Where is now your God? Are not we as well that deny him abſolutely, as you that profeſſe him with wrangling?

Diſſentio.

But ſtop we the floodgates of this conſideration; it would melt us into teares. End we all with this, That we have all, all theſe, Sadduces and Phariſees in our owne boſomes: Sadduces that deny ſpirits; carnall apprehenſions that are apt to ſay, Is your God all Spirit, and hath bodily eyes to ſee ſin? All Spirit, and hath bodily hands to ſtrike for a ſinne? Is your ſoule all ſpirit, and hath a fleſhly heart to feare? All ſpirit, and hath ſenſible ſinews to feele a materiall fire? Was your God, who is all Spirit, wounded when you quarrelled? or did your ſoule, which is all ſpirit, drink when you were drunk? Sins of preſumption, and carnall confidence are our Sadduces; and then our Phariſees are our ſins of ſeparation, of diviſion, of diffidence and diſtruſt in the mercies of our God; when we are apt to ſay, after a ſin, Cares God, who is all Spirit, for my eloquent prayers, or for my paſſionate teares? Is the giving of my goods to the poore,
D or of my body to the fire, any thing to God who is all Spirit? My ſpirit, and nothing but my ſpirit, my ſoule, and nothing but my ſoule, muſt ſatisfie the juſtice, the anger of God, and be ſeparated from him for ever. My Sadduce, my Preſumption ſuggeſts, that there is no ſpirit, no ſoule to ſuffer for ſin; and my Phariſee, my Deſperation ſuggeſts, That my ſoule muſt periſh irremediably, irrecoverably, for every ſinne that my body commits.

Sadducei & Phariſæi interni.

Now if I go S. Pauls way, to put a diſſention between theſe my Sadduces, and my Phariſees, to put a jealouſie between my preſumption & my deſperation, to make my preſumption ſee, that my deſperation lies in wait for her; and to conſider ſeriouſly, that my preſumption will end in deſperation, I may, as S. Paul did in the Text, ſcape the better for that. But if, without farther troubling theſe Sadduces and theſe Phariſees, I be content to E let them agree, and to divide my life between them, ſo as that my preſumption ſhall poſſeſſe all my youth, and deſperation mine age, I have heard my ſentence already, The end of this man will be worſe then his beginning, How much ſoever God be incenſed with me, for my preſumption at firſt, he will be much more inexorable for my deſperation at laſt. And therefore interrupt the preſcription of ſin; break off the correſpondence of ſin; unjoynt the dependency of ſin upon ſin. Bring every ſingle ſin, as ſoon as thou committeſt it, into the preſence of thy God, upon thoſe two legs, Confeſſion, and Deteſtation, and thou ſhalt ſee, that, as, though an intire Iland ſtand firme in the Sea, yet a ſingle clod of earth caſt into the Sea, is quickly waſht into nothing; ſo, howſoever thine habituall, and cuſtomary, and concatenated ſins, ſin enwrapped and complicated in ſin, ſin entrenched and barricadoed in ſin, ſin ſcrewed up, and riveted with ſin, may ſtand out, and wraſtle even with the mercies of God, in the blood of Chriſt Jeſus; yet if thou bring every ſingle ſin into the ſight of God, it will be but as a clod of earth, but as a graine of duſt in the Ocean. Keep thy ſins then from mutuall intelligence; That they doe not ſecond one another, induce occaſion, and then ſupport and diſguiſe one another, and then, neither ſhall the body of ſin ever oppreſſe thee, nor the exhalations, and damps, and vapors of thy ſad ſoule, hang between thee, and the mercies of thy God; But thou ſhalt live in the light and ſerenity of a peaceable conſcience here, and die in a faire poſſibility of a preſent melioration and improvement of that light. All thy life thou ſhalt be preſerved, in an Orientall light, an Eaſterne light, a riſing and a growing light, the light of grace; and at thy death thou ſhalt be ſuper-illuſtrated, with a Meridionall light, a South light, the light of glory. And be this enough for the explication, and application of theſe words, and their complication with the day; for the juſtifying of S. Pauls Stratagem in himſelfe, and the exemplifying, and imitation thereof in us. Amen.

Via Pauli.

That God that is the God of peace, grant us his peace, and one minde towards one another; That God that is the Lord of Hoſts, maintaine in us that warre, which himſelf hath proclaimed, an enmity between the ſeed of the Woman, and the ſeed of the Serpent, between the truth of God, and the inventions of men; That we may fight his battels againſt his enemies without, and fight his battels againſt our enemies within, our own corrupt affections; That we may be victorious here, in our ſelves, and over our ſelves, and triumph with him hereafter, in eternall glory.

SERMONS

Preached upon the

PENITENTIALL PSALMES.

SERMONS

Preached upon the

PENITENTIAL PSALMES.

SERM. L.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Psalmes.

PSAL. 6. 1.

O Lord, Rebuke me not in thine Anger, neither chaſten me in thy hot Diſpleaſure.

GOD imputes but one thing to David, but one ſin; The matter of Vriah the Hittite: nor that neither, but by way of exception, not till he had firſt eſtabliſhed an aſſurance, that David ſtood well with him. Firſt he had ſaid, David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aſide from any thing, that he had commanded him all the dayes of his life: Here was rectitude, He did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord; no obliquity, no departing into by-wayes, upon collaterall reſpects; Here was integrity to Gods ſervice, no ſerving of God and Mammon, Hee turned not from any thing that God commanded him; And here was perpetuity, perſeverance, conſtancy, All the dayes of his life: And then, and not till then, God makes that one, and but that one exception, Except the matter of Vriah the Hittite. When God was reconciled to him, he would not ſo much as name that ſin, that had offended him. 1 King. 15. 5.

And herein is the mercy of God, in the merits of Chriſt, a ſea of mercie, that as the Sea retaines no impreſſion of the Ships that paſſe in it, (for Navies make no path in the Sea) ſo when we put out into the boundleſſe Sea of the blood of Chriſt Jeſus, by which onely wee have reconciliation to God, there remaines no record againſt us; for God hath cancelled that record which he kept, and that which Satan kept God hath nailed to the Croſſe of his Son. That man which hath ſeene me at the ſealing of my Pardon, and the ſeale of my Reconciliation, at the Sacrament, many times ſince, will yet in his paſſion, or in his ill nature, or in his uncharitableneſſe, object to me the ſins of my youth; whereas God himſelfe, if I have repented to day, knowes not the ſins that I did yeſterday. God hath raſed the Record of my ſin, in Heaven; it offends not him, it grieves not his Saints nor Angels there; and he hath raſed the Record in hell; it advances not their intereſt in me there, nor their triumph over me. And yet here, the uncharitable man will know more, and ſee more, and remember more, then my God, or his devill remembers, or knowes, or ſees: He will ſee a path in the Sea; he will ſee my ſin, when it is drowned in the blood of my Saviour. After the Kings pardon, perchance it will beare an action, to call a man by that infamous name, which that crime, which is pardoned, did juſtly caſt upon him before the pardon: After Gods reconciliation to David, he would not name Davids ſin in the particular.

But yet for all this, though God will be no example, of upbraiding or reproaching repented ſinnes, when God hath ſo far expreſt his love, as to bring that ſinner to that repentance, and ſo to mercy, yet, that he may perfect his owne care, he exerciſes that repentant ſinner with ſuch medicinall corrections, as may inable him to ſtand upright for the future. And to that purpoſe, was no man evermore exerciſed then David. David broke broke into anothers family; he built upon anothers ground; he planted in anothers Seminary; and God broke into his family, his ground, his Seminary. In no ſtory, can wee finde ſo much Domeſtick affliction, ſuch rapes, and inceſts, and murders, and rebellions, from their owne children, as in Davids ſtorie. Under the heavy waight and oppreſſion of ſome of thoſe, is David, by all Expoſitors, conceived to have conceived, and uttered this Pſalme. Some take it to have beene occaſioned by ſome of his temporall afflictions; either his perſecution from Saul, or bodily ſickneſſe in himſelfe, of which traditionally the Rabbins ſpeake much, or Abſoloms unnaturall rebellion. Some others, with whom wee finde more reaſon to joyne, finde more reaſon to interpret it, of a ſpirituall affliction; that David, in the apprehenſion, and under the ſenſe of the wrath and indignation of God, came to this vehement exclamation, or deprecation, O Lord rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chaſten me in thy hot diſpleaſure. A

Diviſio. In which words we ſhall conſider, firſt the perſon, upon whom David turned for his ſuccour, and then what ſuccour he ſeeks at his hands. Firſt his word, and then his end; firſt to whom, and then for what he ſupplicates. And in the firſt of theſe, the Perſon, we ſhall make theſe three ſteps; firſt that he makes his firſt acceſſe to God onely, O Lord rebuke me not; doe not thou, and though I will not ſay, I care not, yet I care the leſſe who doe. And ſecondly, that it is to God by Name, not to any univerſall God, in generall notions; ſo naturall men come to God; but to God whom he conſiders in a particular name, in particular notions, and attributes, and manifeſtations of himſelfe; a God whom he knowes, by his former workes done upon him. And then, that name in which hee comes to him here, is the name of Iehovah; his radicall, his fundamentall, his primarie, his eſſentiall name, the name of being, Iehovah. For, he that deliberately, and conſiderately beleeves himſelfe to have his very being from God, beleeves certainely that he hath his well being from him too; He that acknowledges, that it is by Gods providence that he breathes, beleeves that it is by his providence that he eates too. So his acceſſe is to God, and to God by name, that is by particular conſiderations, and then, to God in the name of Iehovah, to that God that hath done all, from his firſt beginning, from his Being. And in theſe three we ſhall determine our firſt part. B C

1. Part. To God. Firſt, in this firſt branch of this part, David comes to God, but without any confidence in himſelfe. Here is Reus ad roſtra ſine patrono, here is the priſoner at the Barre, and no Counſell allowed him. He confeſſes Indictments, faſter then they can be read: If he heare himſelfe indicted, that he looked upon Bathſheba, that he luſted after Bathſheba, he cryes, Alas, I have done that, and more; diſhonored her, and my ſelfe, and our God; and more then that, I have continued the act into a habit; and more then that, I have drowned that ſinne in bloud, leſt it ſhould riſe up to my ſight; and more then all that, I have cauſed the Name of God to be blaſphemed; and leſt his Majeſty, and his greatneſſe ſhould be a terrour to me, I have occaſioned the enemy to undervalue him, and ſpeake deſpightfully of God himſelfe. And when he hath confeſt all, all that he remembers, he muſt come to his Ab occultis meis, Lord cleanſe me from my ſecret ſinnes; for there are ſins, which we have laboured ſo long to hide from the world, that at laſt, they are hidden from our ſelves, from our own memories, our own conſciences. As much as David ſtands in feare of this Judge, he muſt intreat this Judge, to remember his ſinnes; Remember them, O Lord, for els they will not fall into my pardon; but remember them in mercy, and not in anger; for ſo they will not fall into my pardon neither. D

1 Sam. 16. 14. Whatſoever the affliction then was, temporall, or ſpirituall, (we take it rather to be ſpirituall) Davids recourſe is preſently to God. He doth not, as his predeceſſour Saul did, when he was afflicted, ſend for one that was cunning upon the Harp, to divert ſorrow ſo. If his Subjects rebell, he doth not ſay, Let them alone, let them goe on, I ſhall have the juſter cauſe, by their rebellion, of confiſcations upon their Eſtates, of executions upon their perſons, of revocations of their lawes, and cuſtomes, and priviledges, which they carry themſelves ſo high upon. If his ſonne lift up his hand againſt him, he doth not place his hope in that, that that occaſion will cut off his ſonne, and that then the peoples hearts which were bent upon his ſonne, will returne to him againe. David knew he could not retyre himſelfe from God in his bedchamber; Guards and Uſhers could not keepe him out. He knew he could not defend himſelfe from God in his Army; for the Lord of Hoſts is Lord of his Hoſts. If he fled to Sea, to Heaven, to Hell, he was ſure to meet God there; and there thou ſhalt meet him too, if thou fly from God, to the reliefe E

A reliefe of outward comforts, of muſicke, of mirth, of drinke, of cordialls, of Comedies, of converſation. Not that ſuch recreations are unlawfull; the minde hath her phyſick as well as the body; but when thy ſadneſſe proceeds from a ſenſe of thy ſinnes, (which is Gods key to the doore of his mercy, put into thy hand) it is a new, and a greater ſin, to goe about to overcome that holy ſadneſſe, with theſe prophane diverſions; to fly Ad conſolatiunculas creaturulæ (as that elegant man Luther expreſſes it, according to his naturall delight in that elegancy of Diminutives, with which he abounds above all Authors) to the little and contemptible comforts of little and contemptible creatures. And as Luther uſes the phyſick, Iob uſeth the Phyſitian; Luther calls the comforts, Miſerable comforts; and Iob calls them that miniſter them, Oneroſos conſolatores, Miſerable comforters are you all. David could not drowne his adultery in blood; never thinke thou to drowne thine in wine. The Miniſters of God are Sonnes of Thunder, they are falls of B waters, trampling of horſes, and runnings of Chariots; and if theſe voyces of theſe Miniſters, cannot overcome thy muſick, thy ſecurity, yet the Angels trumpet will; That Surgite qui dormitis, Ariſe yee that ſleepe in the duſt, in the duſt of the grave, is a Treble that over-reaches all; That Ite maledicti, Goe yee accurſed into Hell fire, is a Baſe that drowns all. There is no recourſe but to God, no reliefe but in God; and therefore David applied himſelfe to the right method, to make his firſt acceſſe to God.

It is to God onely, and to God by name, and not in generall notions; for it implies a nearer, a more familiar, and more preſentiall knowledge of God, a more cheerfull acquaintance, and a more aſſiduous converſation with God, when we know how to call God by a Name, a Creator, a Redeemer, a Comforter, then when we conſider him onely as a diffuſed power, that ſpreads it ſelfe over all creatures; when we come to him in Affirmatives, and Confeſſions, This thou haſt done for me, then when we come to him
C onely in Negatives, and ſay, That that is God, which is nothing els. God is come nearer to us then to others, when we know his Name. For though it be truly ſaid in the Schoole, that no name can be given to God, Ejus eſſentiam adæquatè repræſentans, No one name can reach to the expreſſing of all that God is; And though Triſmegiſtus doe humbly, and modeſtly, and reverently ſay, Non ſpero, it never fell into my thought, nor into my hope, that the maker and founder of all Majeſty, could be circumſcribed, or impriſoned by any one name, though a name compounded and complicated of many names, as the Rabbins have made one name of God, of all his names in the Scriptures; Though Iacob ſeeme to have been rebuked for asking Gods name, when he wraſtled with him; And ſo alſo the Angel which was to doe a miraculous worke, a worke appertaining onely to God, to give a Childe to the barren, becauſe he repreſented God, and had the perſon of God upon him, would not permit Manoah to enquire after his name, Becauſe, as he D ſayes there, that name was ſecret and wonderfull; And though God himſelfe, to dignifie and authorize that Angel, which he made his Commiſſioner, and the Tutelar and Nationall Guide of his people, ſayes of that Angel, to that people, Feare him, provoke him not, for my Name is in him, and yet did not tell them, what that name was; Yet certainly, we could not ſo much as ſay, God cannot be named, except we could name God by ſome name; we could not ſay, God hath no name, except God had a name; for that very word, God, is his name. God calls upon us often in the Scriptures, To call upon his Name; and in the Scriptures, he hath manifeſted to us divers names, by which we may call upon him. Doeſt thou know what name to call him by, when thou calleſt him to beare falſe witneſſe, to averre a falſhood? Hath God a name to ſweare by? Doeſt thou know what name to call him by, when thou wouldeſt make him thy ſervant, thy inſtrument, thy executioner, to plague others, upon thy bitter curſes and imprecations? Hath E God a name to curſe by? Canſt thou wound his body, exhauſt his bloud, teare off his fleſh, breake his bones, excruciate his ſoule; and all this by his right name? Hath God a name to blaſpheme by? and hath God no name to pray by? is he ſuch a ſtranger to thee? Doſt thou know every faire houſe in thy way, as thou travelleſt, whoſe that is; and doſt thou not know, in whoſe houſe thou ſtandeſt now?

Beloved, to know God by name, and to come to him by name, is to conſider his particular bleſſings to thee; to conſider him in his power, and how he hath protected thee there; and in his wiſedome, and how he hath directed thee there; and in his love, and how he hath affected thee there; and expreſt all, in particular mercies. He is but a darke, but a narrow, a ſhallow, a lazy man in nature, that knows no more, but that there is a heaven,

To God by Name.

Gen. 32. 29.

Judg. 13. 18.

Exod. 23. 20.

heaven, and an earth, and a ſea; He that will be of uſe in this world, comes to know the influences of the heavens, the vertue of the plants, and mines of the earth, the courſe and diviſions of the Sea. To the naturall man, God gives generall notions of himſelfe; a God that ſpreads over all as the heavens; a God that ſuſtaines all as the earth; a God that tranſports, and communicates all to all as the ſea: But to the Chriſtian Church, God applies himſelfe in more particular notions; as a Father, as a Son, as a holy Ghoſt; And to every Chriſtian ſoule, as a Creator, a Redeemer, a Benefactor; that I may ſay, This I was not born to, and yet this I have from my God; this a potent adverſary ſought to evict from me, but this I have recovered by my God; ſickneſſe had enfeebled my body, but I have a convaleſcence; calumnie had defamed my reputation, but I have a reparation; malice in other men, or improvidence in my ſelfe, had ruined my fortune, but I have a redintegration from my God. And then by theſe, which are indeed but Cognomina Dei, his ſir-names, names of diſtinction, names of the exerciſe of ſome particular properties, and attributes of his, to come to the root of all, to my very Being, that my preſent Being in this world, and my eternall Being in the next, is made knowne to me by his name of Iehovah, which is his Eſſentiall name, to which David had recourſe in this exinanition; when his affliction had even annihilated, and brought him to nothing, he fled to Iehovah, the God of all Being, which is the foundation of all his other Attributes, and includes all his other names, and is our next and laſt branch in this firſt Part.

Iehovah. This name then of Iehovah that is here tranſlated Lord, is agreed by all to be the greateſt name by which God hath declared and manifeſted himſelfe to man. This is that name which the Jews falſly, but peremptorily, (for falſhood lives by peremptorineſſe, and feeds and armes it ſelfe with peremptorineſſe) deny ever to have been attributed to the Meſsias, in the Scriptures. This is that name, in the vertue and uſe whereof, thoſe Calumniators of our Saviours miracles doe ſay, that he did his miracles, according to a direction, and ſchedule, for the true and right pronouncing of that name, which Solomon in his time had made, and Chriſt in his time had found, and by which, ſay they, any other man might have done thoſe miracles, if he had had Solomons directions for the right ſounding of this name, Iehovah. This is that name, which out of a ſuperſtitious reverence the Jews alwayes forbore to ſound, or utter, but ever pronounced ſome other name, either Adonai, or Elohim, in the place thereof, whereſoever they found Iehovah. But now their Rabbins will not ſo much as write that name, but ſtill expreſſe it in foure other letters. So that they dare not, not onely not ſound it, not ſay it, but not ſee it.

How this name which we call Iehovah, is truly to be ſounded, becauſe in that language it is expreſt in foure Conſonants onely, without Vowels, is a perplext queſtion; we may well be content to be ignorant therein, ſince our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe, in all thoſe places which he cited out of the Old Teſtament, never ſounded it; he never ſaid, Iehovah. Nor the Apoſtles after him, nor Origen, nor Ierome; all perſons very intelligent in the propriety of language; they never ſounded this name Iehovah. For though in S. Ieromes Expoſition upon the 8. Pſalme, we finde that word Iehovah, in ſome Editions which we have now, yet it is a cleare caſe, that in the old Copies it is not ſo; in Ieroms mouth it was not ſo; from Ieroms hand it came not ſo. Neither doth it appeare to me, that ever the name of Iehovah was ſo pronounced, till ſo late, as in our Fathers time; for I think Petrus Gallatinus was the firſt that ever called it ſo. But howſoever this name be to be ſounded, that which falls in our conſideration at this time, is, That David in his diſtreſſes fled preſently to God, and to God by name, that is, in conſideration and commemoration of his particular bleſſings; and to a God that had that name, the name of Iehovah, the name of Eſſence, and Being, which name carryed a confeſſion, that all our wel-being, and the very firſt being it ſelfe, was, and was to be derived from him.

David therefore comes to God In nomine totali, in nomine integrali; He conſiders God totally, entirely, altogether; Not altogether, that is, confuſedly; but altogether, that is, in ſuch a Name as comprehends all his Attributes, all his Power upon the world, and all his benefits upon him. The Gentiles were not able to conſider God ſo; not ſo entirely, not altogether; but broke God in pieces, and changed God into ſingle money, and made a fragmentarie God of every Power, and Attribute in God, of every bleſſing from God, nay of every malediction, and judgement of God. A clap of thunder made a Iupiter, a tempeſt at ſea made a Neptune, an earthquake made a Pluto; Feare came to be a God, and a Fever came to be a God; Every thing that they were in love with, or afraid of, came to to be canonized, and made a God amongst them. David considered God as a center, into which & from which all lines flowed. Neither as the Gentiles did, nor as some ignorants of the Roman Church do, that there must be a stormie god, S. Nicholas, and a plaguie god, S. Rook, and a sheepshearing god, & a swineherd god, a god for every Parish, a god for every occupation, God forbid. Acknowledg God to be the Author of thy Being; find him so at the spring-head, & then thou shalt easily trace him, by the branches, to all that belongs to thy well-being. The Lord of Hosts, and the God of peace, the God of the mountaines, and the God of the valleyes, the God of noone, and of midnight, of all times, the God of East & West, of all places, the God of Princes, and of Subjects, of all persons, is all one and the same God; and that which we intend, when we say Iehovah, is all Hee.

And therefore hath S. Bernard a patheticall and usefull meditation to this purpose: Every thing in the world, sayes he, can say, Creator meus es tu, Lord thou hast made me; All things that have life, and growth, can say, Pastor meus es tu, Lord thou hast fed me, increast me; All men can say, Redemptor meus es tu, Lord I was sold to death through originall sin, by one Adam, and thou hast redeemed me by another; All that have falne by infirmity, and risen againe by grace, can say, Susceptor meus es tu, Lord I was falne, but thou hast undertaken me, and dost sustaine me; But he that comes to God in the name of Iehovah, he meanes all this, and all other things, in this one Petition, Let me have a Being, and then I am safe, for In him we live, and move, and have our Being. If we solicite God as the Lord of Hosts, that he would deliver us from our enemies, perchance he may see it fitter for us to be delivered to our enemies: If we solicite him as Proprietarie of all the world, as the beasts upon a thousand mountaines are his, as all the gold and silver in the earth is his, perchance he sees that poverty is fitter for us: If we solicite him for health, or long life, he gives life, but he kills too, he heales, but he wounds too; and we may be ignorant which of these, life or death, sickness or health, is for our advantage. But solicite him as Iehovah, for a Being, that Being which flowes from his purpose, that Being which he knowes fittest for us, and then we follow his owne Instructions, Fiat voluntas tua, thy will be done upon us, and we are safe.

Now that which Iehovah was to David, Iesus is to us. Man in generall hath relation to God, as he is Iehovah, Being; We have relation to Christ, as he is Iesus, our Salvation; Salvation is our Being, Iesus is our Iehovah. And therfore as David delights himself with that name Iehovah, for he repeats it eight or nine times in this one short Psalm, and though he ask things of a diverse nature at Gods hands, though he suffer afflictions, of a diverse nature, from Gods hands, yet still he retains that one name, he speaks to God in no other name in all this Psalm but in the name of Iehovah: So in the New Testament, he which may be compared with David, becaus he was under great sins, and yet in great favour with God, S. Paul, he delights himself with that name of Iesus so much, as that S. Ierome says, Quē superfluè diligebat, extraordinariè nominavit, As he loved him excessively, so he named him superabundantly. It is the name that cost God most, and therefore he loves it best; it cost him his life to be a Iesus, a Saviour. The name of Christ, which is Anointed, he had by office; he was anointed as King, as Priest, as Prophet. All those names which he had in Isaiah, The Counsellor, The Wonderfull, The Prince of Peace, and the name of Iehovah it self, which the Jews deny ever to be given to him, and is evidently given to him in that place, Christ had by nature; But his name of Iesus, a Saviour, he had by purchase, & that purchase cost him his bloud. And therefore, as Iacob preferred his name of Israel, before his former name of Iacob, becaus he had that name upon his wrastling with God, and it cost him a lameness; so is the name of Iesus so precious to him who bought it so dearly, that not only every knee bows at the name of Iesus here, but Jesus himself, and the whole Trinity, bow down towards us, to give us all those things which we ask in that name. For even of a devout use of that very name, do some of the Fathers interpret that, Oleū effusum Nomen tuū, That the name of Iesus should be spread as an ointment, breathed as perfume, diffused as a soul over all the petitions of our prayers; As the Church concludes for the most part, all her Collects so, Grant this O Lord, for our Lord and Saviour Christ Iesus sake. And so much does S. Paul abound in the use of this name, as that he repeats it thrice, in the superscription of one of his Letters, the title of one of his Epistles, his first to Timothy. And with the same devotion, S. August. sayes, even of the name, Melius est mihi non esse, quā sine Iesu esse, I were better have no being, then be without Jesus; Melius est non vivere, quam vivere sine vita, I were better have no life, then any life without him. For as David

Iesus.

Esay 9.

Gen. 32 28.

vid could finde no beeing without Iehovah, a Chriſtian findes no life without Ieſus. Both theſe names imply that which is in this Text, in our Tranſlation, The Lord, Dominus; to whom only, and intirely we appertaine; his we are. And therefore whether we take Dominus, to be Do minas, to threaten, to afflict us, or to be Do manus, to ſuccour, and relieve us, (as ſome have pleaſed themſelves with thoſe obvious derivations) as David did ſtill, we muſt make our recourſe to him, from whom, as he is Iehovah, Beeing, or being our wel-beeing, our eternall beeing, our Creation, Preſervation, and Salvation is derived; all is from him. A

2 Part. Now when he hath his acceſſe to the Lord, to this Lord, the Lord that hath all, and gives all, and is all, the firſt part of Davids prayer, and all his prayer which falls into our Text, is but Deprecatory; he does but pray that God would forbeare him. He pretends no error, he enterpriſes no Reverſing of Judgement; no at firſt, he dares not ſue for pardon; he onely deſires a Reprieve, a reſpit of execution, and that not abſolutely neither; but he would not be executed in hot blood; Ne in ira, ne in furore, not in Gods anger, not in his hot diſpleaſure. B

Deprecation. Firſt then, Deprecari, is not Refragari, to Deprecate, is not to Contend againſt a Judge, nor to defend ones ſelfe againſt an Officer, but it is onely in the quality, and in the humility of a Petitioner, and Suppliant, to begge a forbearance. The Martyrs in the Primitive Church would not doe that. Nihil de cauſa ſua deprecatur, qui nihil de conditione ſua miratur, ſayes Tertullian; and in that he deſcribes a patience of Steele, and an invincible temper. He meanes that the Chriſtians in thoſe times of Perſecution, did never intreat the Judge for favour, becauſe it was not ſtrange to them, to ſee themſelves, whoſe converſation was in heaven, deſpiſed, and contemned, and condemned upon earth: Nihil mirantur de conditione, They wondred not at their miſery, they thought it a part of their Profeſſion, a part of the Chriſtian Religion, to ſuffer, and therefore, Nihil depreſati de cauſa, They never ſolicited the Judge for favour. They had learnt by experience of daily tribulation, the Apoſtles Leſſon, Think it not ſtrange, when temations and tribulations fall; That is, make that your daily bread, and you ſhall never ſterve, uſe your ſelves to ſuffering, at leaſt to the expectation, the contemplation of ſuffering, acquaint your ſelves with that, accuſtome your ſelves to that before it come, and it will not be a ſtranger to you when it comes. Tertullians Method may be right, and it may work that effect in very great afflictions; a man may be ſo uſed to them, as that he will not deſcend to any low deprecation, or ſute to be delivered of them. But Davids affliction was ſpirituall; and howſoever, as a naturall man, nay, as a devout and religious man, (for even in rectified men there are affections of a middle nature, that participate of nature, and of grace too, and in which the Spirit of God moves, and naturall affections move too; for nature and grace doe not ſo deſtroy one another, as that we ſhould con lude, Hee hath ſtrong naturall affections, therefore he hath no grace) David I ſay, that might juſtly wonder at his own condition, and think it ſtrange, that he that put his truſt ſo intirely in God, ſhould ſo intirely be delivered over to ſuch afflictions, might alſo juſtly deprecate, and boldly ſay, Ne facias, O Lord deale not thus with thy ſervant. C D

Our Saviour Chriſts Tranſeat calix, Let this cup paſſe from me, was a deprecation in his owne behalfe; And his Pater dimitte illis, Father, forgive them, they know not what they doe, was a deprecation in the behalfe of his enemies; And ſo was Stephens, Ne ſtatuas illis, O Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge, A deprecation in the behalfe of his Executioners. And theſe Deprecations for others, for our ſelves, are propoſed for our imitation. But for Moſes his Deleme, Pardon this people, or blot my name out of thy Booke, and for S. Pauls Anathema, rather then his brethren ſhould not be ſaved, let himſelfe be condemned, for ſuch Deprecations for others, as were upon the matter, Imprecations upon themſelves, thoſe may not well be drawne into conſequence, or practiſe; for in Moſes and S. Paul themſelves, there was, if not an irregularity, and an inordinateneſſe, at leaſt an inconſideration, not to be imitated by us now, not to be excuſed in them then; but for the Prayer that is meerly deprecatory, though ſome have thought it leſſe lawfull then the poſtulatory prayer, becauſe when God is come to the act of afflicting us, he hath then revealed, and declared, and manifeſted his will to be ſuch, and againſt the revealed and manifeſted will of God we may not pray, yet becauſe his afflictions are not peremptory, but we have ever day to ſhew cauſe, why that affliction ſhould be taken off, and becauſe all his judgements are conditionall, and the condition of every particular judge- E

ment

A ment is not alwaies revealed to us, and this is alwaies revealed to us, Miſerationes ejus ſuper omnia opera ejus, That his mercy is above all his judgements, therefore we may come to that Deprecation, that God will make his hand lighter upon us, and his corrections eaſier unto us.

As the Saints in heaven have their Vſquequo, How long Lord, holy and true, before thou begin to execute judgement? So the Saints on earth have their Vſquequo, How long Lord, before thou take off the execution of this judgement upon us? For, our Deprecatory prayers, are not Mandatory, they are not Directory, they appoint not God his waies, nor his times; but as our Poſtulatory prayers are, they alſo are ſubmitted to the will of God, and have all in them, that ingredient, that herb of grace, which Chriſt put into his owne prayer, that Veruntamen, Yet not my will, but thy will be fulfilled; And they have that ingredient, which Chriſt put into our prayer, Fiat voluntas, Thy will be done in
B earth as it is in heaven; In heaven there is no reſiſting of his will; yet in heaven there is a ſoliciting, a haſtning, an accelerating of the judgement, and the glory of the Reſurrection; So though we reſiſt not his corrections here upon earth, we may humbly preſent to God, the ſenſe which we have of his diſpleaſure; for this ſenſe, and apprehenſion of his corrections, is one of the principall reaſons, why he ſends them; he corrects us therefore, that we might be ſenſible of his corrections; that when we, being humbled under his hand, have ſaid with his Prophet, I will beare the wrath of the Lord, becauſe I Micah 7.9.
have ſinned againſt him, He may be pleaſed to ſay to his Correcting Angell, as he did to his Deſtroying Angell, This is enough, and ſo burne his rod now, as he put up his ſword then.

For though David doe, well for himſelfe, and well for our example, deprecate the anger of God, expreſt in thoſe Judgements, yet we ſee he ſpends but one verſe of the C Pſalme in that Deprecation. In all the reſt he leaves God wholly to his pleaſure, how farre he will extend, or aggravate that Judgement; and he turns wholly upon the Poſtulatory part, That God would have mercy upon him, and ſave him, and deliver his ſoule. And in that one verſe, hee does not deprecate all afflictions, all corrections. David knowes what moves God to correct us; It is not onely our ilneſſe that moves him; for he corrects us when we are not ill in his ſight, but made good by his pardon: But his goodneſſe, as well as our ilneſſe, moves him to correct us; If he were not good, not only good in himſelfe, but good to us, he would let us alone, and never correct us. But,
Ideo eos qui errant corripis, quia bonus & ſuavis es Domine, as the Vulgate reades that Wiſd. 12.1.
place, The Lord corrects us, not onely as he is good, but as he is gentle; he were more cruell, more unmercifull, if he did alwayes ſhew mercy; That David intends, when he ſayes, Propitius fuiſti, Thou waſt a Mercifull God, becauſe thou didſt puniſh all their D inventions.

So then, our firſt worke is to conſider, that that in the Prophet, is a promiſe, and hath Ier. 30.11.
the nature of a mercy, I will correct thee in meaſure; where the promiſe does not fall only upon the meaſure, but upon the correction it ſelfe; and then, ſince this is a promiſe, a mercy, a part of our daily bread, we may pray as the ſame Prophet directs us, O Lord Pſal. 10.24.
correct me, but with judgement, not in thine anger; Where alſo the petition ſeems to fall, not onely upon the meaſure, but upon the correction it ſelfe; and then, when I have found ſome correction fit to be prayed for and afforded me by God upon my praier, if that correction at any time grow heavy, or weariſome unto me, I muſt relieve my ſelf upon that conſideration, Whether God have ſmitten me, as he ſmote them that ſmote me, Whether it be Eſay 27.7.
not another manner of execution, which God hath laid upon mine enemies then that which he hath laid upon me, in having ſuffered them to be ſmitten with the ſpirit of ſin-
E full glory, and triumph in their ſin, and my miſery, and with excecation, and obdurateneſſe, with impenitence, and inſenſibleneſſe of their owne caſe. Or at leaſt, let me conſider, as it is in the ſame place, Whether I be ſlain according to the ſlaughter of them that were ſlaine by me; That is, whether my oppreſſion, my extortion, my prevarication have not brought other men to more miſery, then God hath yet brought me unto. And if we conſider this, as no doubt David did, and finde that correction is one loafe of our daily bread, and finde in our heavieſt corrections, that God hath been heavier upon our enemies, then upon us, and we heavier upon others, then God upon us too, we ſhall be content with any Rebuke, and any Chaſtiſement, ſo it be not in anger, and in hot diſpleaſure, which are the words that remaine to be conſidered.

Now theſe two phraſes, Argui in furore, and Corripi in ira, which we tranſlate, To rebuke in anger, and to chaſten in hot diſpleaſure, are by ſome thought, to ſignifie one and the ſame thing, that David intends the ſame thing, and though in divers words, yet words of one and the ſame ſignification. But with reverence to thoſe men, (for ſome of them are men to whom much reverence is due) they doe not well agree with one another, nor very conſtantly with themſelves. S. Ierome ſayes, Furor & ira maxime unum ſunt, That this anger, and hot diſpleaſure, are meerly, abſolutely, intirely, one and the ſame thing, and yet he ſayes, that this Anger is executed in this world, and this hot Diſpleaſure reſerved for the world to come. And this makes a great difference; no waight of Gods whole hand here, can be ſo heavy, as any finger of his in hell; the higheſt exaltation of Gods anger in this world, can have no proportion to the leaſt ſpark of that in hell; nor a furnace ſeaven times heat here, to the embers there. So alſo S. Auguſtine thinks, that theſe two words, to Rebuke, and to Chaſten, doe not differ at all; or if they doe, that the latter is the leſſer. But this is not likely to be Davids method, firſt to make a praier for the greater, and that being granted, to make a ſecond praier for the leſſer, included in that which was askt, and granted before. A later man in the Roman Church, allowes the words to differ, and the later to be the heavier, but then he refers both to the next life; that to Rebuke in anger, ſhould be intended of Purgatorie, and of a ſhort continuance there, and to be Chaſtened in hot diſpleaſure, ſhould be intended of hell, and of everlaſting condemnation there. And ſo David muſt make his firſt petition, Rebuke me not in thine anger, to this purpoſe, Let me paſſe at my death immediately to Heaven, without touching at any fire, and his ſecond petition, Chaſten me not in thy hot diſpleaſure to this purpoſe, If I muſt touch at any fire, let it be but Purgatory, and not Hell.

Ayguanus.

But by the nature, and propriety, and the uſe of all theſe words in the Scriptures, it appeares, that the words are of a different ſignification, which S. Ierome it ſeemes did not thinke; and that the laſt is the heavieſt, which S. Auguſtine it ſeemes did not thinke; and then, that they are to be referred to this life, which Ayguanus did not think. For the words themſelves, all our three Tranſlations retaine the two firſt words, to Rebuke and to Chaſten; neither that which we call the Biſhops Bible, nor that which we call the Geneva Bible, and that which wee may call the Kings, depart from thoſe two firſt words. But then for the other two, Anger and Hot diſpleaſure, in them all three Tranſlations differ. The firſt cals them Indignation and Diſpleaſure, the ſecond Anger and Wrath, and the laſt Anger and Hot diſpleaſure.

Rebuke.

To begin with the firſt, to be Rebuked was but to be chidden, but to be Chaſtened, was to be beaten; and yet David was heartily afraid of the firſt, of the leaſt of them, when it was to be done in anger: This word that is here to Rebuke, Iacach, is for the moſt part, to Reprove, to Convince by way of argument, and diſputation. So it is in Eſay, Come now, and let us reaſon together, ſaies God. The naturall man is confident in his Reaſon, in his Philoſophy; and yet God is content to joyne in that iſſue, If he doe not make it appeare, even to your reaſon, that he is God, Chuſe whom ye will ſerve, as Ioſhuah ſpeakes; If he doe not make it appeare, that he is a good God, change him for any other God that your reaſon can preſent to be better. In Micah, the word hath ſomewhat more vehemence; The Lord hath a quarrell againſt his people, and he will plead with Iſrael. This is more then a Diſputation; it is a Suite. God can maintaine his poſſeſſion other waies; without Suite; but he will recover us, by matter of Record, openly, and in the face of the County; he will put us to a ſhame, and to an acknowledgement, of having diſloially deveſted our Allegeance. Yea, the word hath ſometimes ſomewhat more ſharpneſſe then this; for in the book of Proverbs, it comes to Correction, The Lord correcteth him whom he loveth, even as the father doth the child, in whom he delighteth. Though it be a fatherly correction, yet it is a correction; and that is more then the Reaſoning or Diſputing, more then the Suing or Impleading.

Eſay 1.18.

Micah 6.2.

Now though all this, Diſputing, Impleading, Correcting, in S. Auguſtines interpretation, amount but to an Inſtruction, and an Amendment, yet ſaies he of David, In ira emendari non vult, erudiri non vult, He is loath to fall into Gods hands, loath to come into Gods fingers at all, when God is angry; he would not be diſputed withall, not Impleaded, not Corrected, no, not Inſtructed, not Amended by God in his Anger. The Anger of God is ſuch a Pedagogie, ſuch a Catechiſme, ſuch a way of teaching, as the Law was. Lex pædagogus; the Law is a Schoolmaſter, ſaies the Apoſtle; but Litera occidit, the

A the Law is ſuch a Schoolemaſter, as brings not a rod, but a ſword. Gods Anger ſhould inſtruct us, but if we uſe it not aright, it hardens us. And therefore, Kiſſe the Son leſt he be angry, ſayes David, And what is the danger if he be? that which followes, Leſt yee periſh in the way; Though his Anger be one of his wayes, yet it is ſuch a way, as you may eaſily ſtumble in; and, as you would certainely periſh without that way, ſo you may eaſily periſh in that way. For when a ſinner conſiders himſelf to be under the Anger of God, naturally he conceives ſuch a horror, as puts him farther off. As ſoone as Adam heard the voice of God, and in an accent of Anger, or as he tuned it in his guilty conſcience, to an accent of Anger, (for as a malicious man will turne a Sermon to a Satyre, and a Panegyricke to a Libel, ſo a deſpairing ſoule will ſet Gods comfortableſt words, to a ſad tune, and force a Va even in Gods Euge, and find Anger, and everlaſting Anger in every Acceſſe, in every Action of God) when Adam heard God but walking in the Garden, B but the noiſe of his going, and approaching towards him, (for God had then ſaid nothing to him, not ſo much as called him) Adam fled from his preſence and hid himſelfe amongſt the trees. When the guilty man was but ſpoken to, and ſpoken to mildly, by the Maſter of the Marriage feaſt, Amice quomodo intraſti? Friend how came you in? we ſee he was preſently ſpeechleſſe, and being ſo, not able to ſpeake, to come to any confeſſion, any excuſe, he fell farther and farther into diſpleaſure, till he was bound hand and foote, and caſt irrecoverably away. For Si repente interroget, quis reſpondebit ei? If God ſurprize a Conſcience with a ſudden queſtion, if God deprehend a man in the Act of his ſin, and while he accompliſhes and conſummates that ſin, ſay to his ſoul, Why doſt thou this, upon which mine anger hangs? there God ſpeaks to that ſinner, but he confounds him with the queſtion; It is not a leading Intergatorie, it gives him no light to anſwer, till Gods anger be out of his contemplation, he cannot ſo much as ſay Domine vim patior, reſponde pro me, O Lord I am oppreſſed, doe thou anſwer for me; do thou ſay to thy C ſelfe for me, My Spirit ſhall not alwaies ſtrive with man, becauſe he is but fleſh. If the Lord come in anger, if he ſpeake in Anger, if he doe but looke in Anger, a ſinner periſhes; Aſpexit & diſſolvit Gentes; He did but looke, and he diſſolved, he melted the Nations; he powred them out as water upon the duſt, and he blew them away as duſt into the Sea, The everlaſting mountaines were broken, and the ancient hils did bow.

Pſal. 2.

Iob 9. 12.

Eſay 38. 14.

Gen 6. 3.

Hab. 3. 6.

It is not then the diſputing, not the impleading, not the correcting, which this word Iacach imports, that David declines, or deprecates here, but that Anger, which might change the nature of all, and make all the Phyſick poiſon, all that was intended for our mollifying, to advance our obduration. For when there was no anger in the caſe, David is a forward Scholar, to hearken to Gods Reaſoning, and Diſputing, and a tractable Client, and eaſie Defendant, to anſwer to Gods Suite, and Impleading, and an obſequi- D ous Patient, to take any Phyſick at his hands, if there were no Anger in the cup. Vre renes & cor meum, ſaies David, he provokes God with all thoſe emphaticall words, Iudge me, Prove me, Trie me, Examine me, and more, Vre renes, bring not onely a candle to ſearch, but even fire, to melt me; But upon what confidence all this? For thy loving kindneſſe is ever before mine eyes. If Gods Anger, and not his loving kindneſſe had beene before his eyes, it had beene a fearfull apparition, and a dangerous iſſue to have gone upon. So alſo he ſurrenders himſelfe entirely to God in another Pſalme, Trie me O God, and know my heart; prove me, and know my thoughts, and conſider, if there be any way of wickedneſſe in me. But how concludes he? And lead me in the right way for ever. As long as I have God by the hand, and feele his loving care of me, I can admit any waight of his hand; any fornace of his heating. Let God mould me, and then melt me againe, let God make mee, and then breake me againe, as long as he eſtabliſhes and maintaines a rectified aſſurance E in my ſoule, that at laſt he meanes to make me a Veſſell of honour, to his Glory, howſoever he Rebuke or Chaſtiſe me, yet he will not Rebuke me in Anger, much leſſe Chaſten me in hot Diſpleaſure, which is the laſt, and the heavieſt thing, that David deprecates in this Prayer.

Pſal. 26. 1.

Pſal. 139. 23.

Both theſe words, which we tranſlate to Chaſten, and Hot diſpleaſure, are words of a heavie, and of a vehement ſignification. They extend both, to expreſſe the eternity of Gods indignation, even to the binding of the ſoule and bodie in eternall chaines of darkneſſe. For the firſt, Iaſar, ſignifies oftentimes in the Scriptures, Vincire, to binde, often with ropes, often with chaines; to fetter, or manacle, or pinion men, that are to be executed; ſo that it imports a ſlaverie, a bondage all the way, and a deſtruction at laſt. And

1 Reg. 12. 11. ſo the word is uſed by Rehoboam, My Father chaſtiſed you with whips, but I will chaſtiſe you with Scorpions. And then, the other word, Camath, doth not onely ſignifie Hot diſpleaſure, but that effect of Gods hot diſpleaſure, which is intended by the Prophet Eſay, Eſay 42. ult. Therefore hath he powred forth his fierce wrath, and the ſtrength of battel, and that ſet him on fire round about, and he knew it not, and it burnt him up, and he conſidered it not; Theſe be the fearfully conditions of Gods hot diſpleaſure, to be in a fornace, and not to feele it; to be in a habit of ſin, and not know what leads us into temptation; to be burnt to aſhes, and ſo not onely without all moiſture, all holy teares, but, as aſhes, without any poſſibility, that any good thing can grow in us. And yet this word, Camath, hath a heavier ſignification then this; for it ſignifies Poiſon it ſelfe, Deſtruction it ſelfe, for ſo is it twice taken in one verſe, Pſal. 58. 4. Their poiſon is like the poiſon of a Serpent; ſo that this Hot diſpleaſure, is that poiſon of the ſoule, obduration here, and that extention of this obduration, a finall impenitence in this life, and an infinite impenitibleneſſe in the next; to dye without any actuall penitence here, and live without all poſſibility of future penitence for ever hereafter. B

David therefore foreſees, that if God Rebuke in anger, it will come to a Chaſtening in 1 Sam. 2. 25. hot diſpleaſure. For what ſhould ſtop him? For, If a man ſinne againſt the Lord, who will plead for him? ſayes Eli; Plead thou my cauſe, ſayes David; It is onely the Lord, that can be of counſell with him, and plead for him; and that Lord, is both the Judge, and angry too. So Davids prayer hath this force, Rebuke me not in anger, for though I were able to ſtand under that, yet thou wilt alſo Chaſten mee in thine hot diſpleaſure, and that no ſoule can beare; for as long as Gods anger laſts, ſo long he is going on towards our utter deſtruction. In that State, (it is not a State) in that Exinanition, in that annihilation of the ſoule, (it is not an annihilation, the ſoule is not ſo happy as to come to nothing) but in that miſery, which can no more receive a name, then an end, all Gods corrections are C borne with grudging, with murmuring, with comparing our righteouſneſſe with others righteouſneſſe; In Iobs impatience, Job 7. 20. Quare poſuiſti me contrarium tibi? Why haſt thou ſet me up as a marke againſt thee, O Thou preſerver of men? Thou that preſerveſt other men, haſt Lam. 3. 12. bent thy bow, and made me a mark for thine arrowes, ſayes the Lamentation: In that ſtate we cannot cry to him, that he might anſwer us; If we doe cry, and he anſwer, we cannot heare; if we doe heare, we cannot beleeve that it is he. Job 9. 16. Cum invocantem exaudierit, ſayes Iob, If I cry, and he anſwer, yet I doe not beleeve that he heard my voyce. We had rather periſh utterly, then ſtay his leiſure in recovering us. Ver. 23. Si flagellat, occidat ſemel, ſayes Iob in the Vulgat, If God have a minde to deſtroy me, let him doe it at one blow; Et non de pœnis rideat, Let him not ſport himſelfe with my miſery. Whatſoever come after, we would be content to be out of this world, ſo we might but change our torment, whether it be a temporall calamity that oppreſſes our ſtate or body, or a ſpirituall burthen, a perplexity D that ſinks our underſtanding, or a guiltineſſe that depreſſes our conſcience. Vt in inferno Job 14. 13. protegas, as Iob alſo ſpeaks, O that thou wouldeſt hide me, In inferno, In the grave, ſayes the afflicted ſoule, but in Inferno, In hell it ſelfe, ſayes the diſpairing ſoule, rather then keepe me in this torment, in this world!

This is the miſerable condition, or danger, that David abhors, and deprecates in this Text, To be rebuked in anger, without any purpoſe in God to amend him; and to be chaſtned in his hot diſpleaſure; ſo, as that we can finde no intereſt in the gracious promiſes of the Goſpel, no conditions, no power of revocation in the ſevere threatnings of the Law; no difference between thoſe torments which have attached us here, and the everlaſting torments of Hell it ſelfe. That we have loſt all our joy in this life, and all our hope of the next; That we would faine die, though it were by our own hands, and though that death doe but unlock us a doore, to paſſe from one Hell into another. This is Ira tua Domine, E & furor tuus, Thy anger, O Lord, and, Thy hot diſpleaſure. For as long as it is but Ira patris, the anger of my Father, which hath diſ-inherited me, Gold is thine, and ſilver is thine, and thou canſt provide me. As long as it is but Ira Regis, ſome miſ-information to the King, ſome miſ-apprehenſion in the King, Cor Regis in manu tua, The Kings heart is in thy hand, and thou canſt rectifie it againe. As long as it is but Furor febris, The rage and diſtemper of a peſtilent Fever, or Furor furoris, The rage of madneſſe it ſelfe, thou wilt conſider me, and accept me, and reckon with me according to thoſe better times, before thoſe diſtempers overtooke me, and overthrew me. But when it comes to be Ira tua, furor tuus, Thy anger, and, Thy diſpleaſure, as David did, ſo let every Chriſtian finde comfort,

A fort, if he be able to ſay faithfully this Verſe, this Text, O Lord, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chaſten me in thy hot diſpleaſure; for as long as he can pray againſt it, he is not yet ſo fallen under it, but that he hath yet his part in all Gods bleſſings, which we ſhed upon the Congregation in our Sermons, and which we ſeale to every ſoule in the Sacrament of Reconciliation.

SERM. LI.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

B

PSAL. 6. 2, 3.

Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am weake; O Lord, heale me, for my bones are vexed: My ſoule is alſo ſore vexed; But thou, O Lord, how long?

THis whole Pſalme is prayer; And the whole prayer is either Deprecatory, as in the firſt verſe, or Poſtulatory. Something David would have forborne, and ſomething done. And in that Poſtulatory part of Davids prayer, which goes through ſix verſes of this Pſalme, we conſider the Petitions, and the Inducements; What David asks, And why: of both which, C there are ſome mingled, in theſe two verſes, which conſtitute our Text. And therefore, in them, we ſhall neceſſarily take knowledge of ſome of the Petitions, and ſome of the Reaſons. For, in the Prayer, there are five petitions; Firſt, Miſerere, Have mercy upon me, Thinke of me, looke graciouſly towards me, prevent me with thy mercy; And then Sana me, O Lord, heale me, Thou didſt create me in health, but my parents begot me in ſickneſſe, and I have complicated other ſickneſſes with that, Actuall with Originall ſin, O Lord, heale me, give me phyſick for them; And thirdly, Convertere, Returne, O Lord, Thou didſt viſit me in nature, returne in grace, Thou didſt viſit me in Baptiſme, returne in the other Sacrament, Thou doeſt viſit me now, returne at the houre of my death; And, in a fourth petition, Eripe, O Lord, deliver my ſoule, Every bleſſing of thine becauſe a ſnare unto me, and thy benefits I make occaſions of ſinne, In all converſation, and even in my ſolitude, I admit ſuch tentations from others, or I produce ſuch tentations in my D ſelfe, as that, whenſoever thou art pleaſed to returne to me, thou findeſt me at the brinke of ſome ſinne, and therefore Eripe me, O Lord, take hold of me, and deliver me; And laſtly, Salvum me fac, O Lord, ſave me, Manifeſt thy good purpoſe upon me ſo, that I may never be ſhaken, or never overthrown in the faithfull hope of that ſalvation, which thou haſt preordained for me. Theſe are the five petitions of the Prayer, and two of the five, The Miſerere, Have mercy upon me, and the Sana, O Lord, heale me, are in theſe two verſes. And then, the Reaſons of the prayer, ariſing partly out of himſelfe, and partly out of God; and ſome being mixt, and growing out of both roots together, ſome of the Reaſons of the firſt nature, that is, of thoſe that ariſe out of himſelfe, are alſo in this Text.

Therefore in this Text, we ſhall conſider, firſt the extent of thoſe two petitions that are in it, Quid miſerere, what David intends by this prayer, Have mercy upon me, And then, Quid ſana me, what he intends by that, O Lord, heale me. And ſecondly, we ſhall E conſider the ſtrength of thoſe Reaſons, which are in our text, Quia infirmus, why God ſhould be moved to mercy with that, Becauſe David was weake, And then Quia turbata oſſa, why, Becauſe his bones were vexed; And againe, Quia turbata anima valde, Becauſe his ſoule was ſore vexed. And in a third Conſideration, we ſhall alſo ſee, that for all our petitions, for mercy, and for ſpirituall health, and for all our Reaſons, weakneſſe, vexation of bones, And ſore vexation of the ſoule it ſelfe, God doth not alwayes come to a ſpeedy remedy, but puts us to our Vſquequò, But thou, O Lord, how long? How long wilt thou delay? And then laſtly, That how long ſoever that be, yet we are ſtill to attend his time, ſtill to rely upon him; which is intimated in this, That David changes not his Maſter, but ſtill applies himſelfe to the Lord; with that Name, that he begun with in the the firſt verſe, he proceeds; and thrice in theſe few words he calls upon him by this name of Eſſence, Iehova, O Lord have mercy upon me, O Lord heale me, O Lord how long wilt thou delay? He is not weary of attending the Lord, he is not inclinable to turn upon any other then the Lord; Have mercy upon me O Lord, &c. A

1 Part. Quid miſereri.

Firſt then in our firſt part, that part of Davids poſtulatory prayer in this Text, Have mercy upon me, This mercy that David begs here, is not that mercy of God which is above all his works; for thoſe works which follow it, are above it; To heale him, in this Text, To returne to him, To deliver his ſoule, To ſave him, in the next verſes, are greater works then this, which he calls here in that generall name of Mercy. For this word Chanan uſed in this place, is not Dele iniquitates, Have mercy upon me ſo, as to blot out all mine iniquities; It is not Dimitte debita, Have mercy upon me ſo, as to forgive all my ſins; but it is onely Des mihi gratiam, Lord ſhed ſome drops of grace upon me, or as Tremellius hath it, Gratioſus ſis mihi, Be a gracious Lord unto me. For this word is uſed, where Noah B

Gen. 6. 8. is ſaid to have found grace in the eyes of the Lord; which grace was, that God had provided for his bodily preſervation in the Arke. And this word is uſed, not onely of God

Pſal. 102. 14. towards men, but alſo of men towards God; when they expreſſe their zeale towards Gods houſe, and the compaſſion, and holy indignation which they had of the ruines thereof, they expreſſe it in this word, Thy ſervants delight in the ſtones of Sion, & miſerti ſunt pulveris ejus, They had mercy, they had compaſſion upon the duſt and rubbiſh thereof. So that here this Miſerere mei, which is the firſt grone of a ſick ſoule, the firſt glance of the ſoule directed towards God, imports onely this, Lord turne thy countenance towards me, Lord bring me to a ſenſe that thou art turned towards me, Lord bring me within ſuch a diſtance, as my ſoule may feele warmth and comfort in the riſing of that Sunne; Miſerere mei, Look graciouſly upon me.

Gen. 24. 63. At the firſt meeting of Iſaac and Rebecca, he was gone out to meditate in the fields, and C ſhe came riding that way, with his fathers man, who was imployed in making that mariage; and when upon asking ſhe knew that it was he who was to be her husband, ſhe tooke a vaile and covered her face, ſayes that ſtory. What freedome, and nearneſſe ſoever they were to come to after, yet there was a modeſty, and a baſhfulneſſe, and a reſervedneſſe required before; and her firſt kindneſſe ſhould be but to be ſeen. A man would be glad of a good countenance from her that ſhall be his, before he aske her whether ſhee will be his or no; A man would be glad of a good countenance from his Prince, before he intend to preſſe him with any particular ſuit: And a ſinner may be come to this Miſerere mei Domine, to deſire that the Lord would think upon him, that the Lord would look graciouſly towards him, that the Lord would refreſh him with the beams of his favour, before he have digeſted his devotion into a formall prayer, or entred into a particular conſideration, what his neceſſities are. D

1 Tim. 2. 1. Bern. De 4. modis orandi. Upon thoſe words of the Apoſtle, I exhort you that ſupplications, and prayers, and Interceſsions, and giving of thanks be made for all men, S. Bernard makes certaine gradations, and ſteps, and aſcenſions of the ſoule in prayer, and intimates thus much, That by the grace of Gods Spirit inanimating and quickning him, (without which grace he can have no motion at all) a ſinner may come Ad ſupplicationes, which is S. Pauls firſt ſtep, To ſupplications, which are à ſuppliciis, That out of a ſenſe of ſome Judgement, ſome puniſhment, he may make his recourſe to God; And then, by a farther growth in that grace, he may come Ad orationes, which are Oris rationes, The particular expreſſing of his neceſſities, with his mouth; and a faithfull aſſurance of obtaining them, in his prayer; And after, he may come farther, Ad Interceſsiones, to an Interceſſion, to ſuch an intereſt in Gods favour, as that he durſt put himſelfe betwixt God and other men, as Abraham in the behalfe of Sodome, to intercede for them, with a holy confidence that God E would doe good to them, for his ſake; And to a farther ſtep then theſe, which the Apoſtle may intend in that laſt, Ad gratiarum actiones, to a continuall Thankſgiving, That by reaſon of Gods benefits multiplyed upon him, he finde nothing to aske, but his Thankſgivings, and his acknowledgements, for former bleſſings, poſſeſſe and fill all his prayers; Though he be growne up to this ſtrength of devotion, To Supplications, to Prayers, to Interceſſions, to Thankſgivings, yet, ſayes S. Bernard, at firſt, when he comes firſt to deprehend himſelfe in a particular ſin, or in a courſe of ſin, he comes Verecundo affectu, Baſhfully, ſhamefaſtly, tremblingly; he knows not what to aske, he dares ask no particular thing at Gods hand; But though he be not come yet, to particular requeſts, for pardon of paſt ſins, nor for ſtrength againſt future, not to a particular conſideration of the waight of his ſins, nor to a compariſon betwixt his ſin, and the mercy of God, yet he comes to a Miſerere mei Domine, To a ſudden ejaculation, O Lord be mercifull unto me, how dare I doe this in the ſight of my God?

for

It is much ſuch an affection as is ſometimes in a Felon taken in the manner, or in a condemned perſon brought to execution: One deſires the Juſtice to be good to him, and yet he ſees not how he can Baile him; the other deſires the Sherife to be good to him, and yet he knowes he muſt doe his Office. A ſinner deſires God to have mercy upon him, and yet he hath not deſcended to particular conſiderations requiſite in that buſineſſe. But yet this ſpirituall Malefactor is in better caſe, then the temporall are; They deſire them to be good to them, who can doe them no good; but God is ſtill able, and ſtill ready to reprieve them, and to put off the execution of his Judgements, which execution were to take them out of this world under the guiltineſſe, and condemnation of unrepented ſins. And therefore, as S. Baſil ſayes, In ſcala, prima aſcenſio eſt ab humo, He that makes but one ſtep up a ſtaire, though he be not got much nearer to the top of the houſe, yet he is got from the ground, and delivered from the foulneſſe, and dampneſſe of that; ſo in this firſt ſtep of prayer, Miſerere mei, O Lord be mercifull unto me, though a man be not eſtabliſhed in heaven, yet he is ſtept from the world, and the miſerable comforters thereof; He that committeth ſin, is of the Devill: Yea, he is of him, in a direct line, and in the neareſt degree; he is the Off-ſpring, the ſon of the Devill; Ex patre veſtro eſtis, ſayes Chriſt, You are of your father the Devill.

Baſil.

1 Iohn 3.8.

Iohn 8.44.

Now, Qui ſe à maligni patris affinitate ſubmoverit, He that withdraws himſelf from ſuch a Fathers houſe, though he be not preſently come to meanes to live of himſelf, Quam feliciter patre ſuo orbatus! How bleſſed, how happy an Orphan is he become! How much better ſhall he finde it, to be fatherleſſe in reſpect of ſuch a father, then maſterleſſe in reſpect of ſuch a Lord, as he turnes towards in this firſt ejaculation, and generall application of the ſoule, Miſerere mei, Have mercy upon me, O Lord, ſo much mercy, as to looke graciouſly towards me! And therefore, as it was, by infinite degrees, a greater work, to make earth of nothing, then to make the beſt creatures of earth; So in the regeneration of a ſinner, when he is to be made up a new creature, his firſt beginning, his firſt application of himſelfe to God, is the hardeſt matter. But though he come not preſently to looke God fully in the face, nor conceive not preſently an aſſurance of an eſtabliſhed reconciliation, a fulneſſe of pardon, a cancelling of all former debts, in an inſtant, Though hee dare not come to touch God, and lay hold of himſelfe, by receiving his Body and Blood in the Sacrament, yet the Euangeliſt calls thee to a contemplation of much comfort to thy ſoule, in certaine preparatory acceſſes, and approaches. Behold, ſayes he; that is, Look up, and conſider thy patterne: Behold, a woman diſeaſed came behinde Chriſt, and touched the hem of his garment; for ſhe ſaid in her ſelf, If I may but touch the hem of his garment onely, I ſhall be whole. She knew there was vertue to come out of his Body, and ſhe came as neare that, as ſhe durſt: ſhe had a deſire to ſpeake; but ſhe went no farther, but to ſpeak to her ſelfe; ſhe ſaid to her ſelfe, ſayes that Goſpel, if I may but touch, &c. But Chriſt Jeſus ſupplied all, performed all on his part, abundantly. Preſently he turned about, ſayes the Text: And this was not a tranſitory glance, but a full ſight, and exhibiting of himſelfe to the fruition of her eye, that ſhe might ſee him. He ſaw her, ſayes S. Matthew: Her; he did not direct himſelfe upon others, and leave out her; And then, hee ſpake to her, to overcome her baſhfulneſſe; he called her Daughter, to overcome her diffidence; He bids her be of comfort, for ſhe had met a more powerfull Phyſitian, then thoſe, upon whom ſhe had ſpent her time, and her eſtate; one that could cure her; one that would; one that had already; for ſo he ſayes preſently, Thy faith hath made thee whole. From how little a ſpark, how great a fire? From how little a beginning, how great a proceeding? She deſired but the hem of his garment, and had all him.

Baſil.

Mat. 9 20.

Beloved in him, his power, and his goodneſſe ended not in her; All that were ſick were brought, that they might but touch the hem of his garment, and as many as touched it, were made whole. It was farre from a perfect faith, that made them whole; To have a deſire to touch his garment, ſeemes not, was not much: Neither was that deſire that was, alwayes in themſelves, but in them that brought them. But yet, come thou ſo farre: Come, or be content to be brought, to be brought by example, to be brought by a ſtatute,

Mat. 14 36.

tute, to be brought by curioſity, come any way to touch the hem of his garment, yea the hem of his ſervant, of Aarons garment, and thou ſhalt participate of the ſweet ointment, which flowes from the head to the hem of the garment. Come to the houſe of God, his Church; Joyne with the Congregation of the Saints; Love the body, and love the garments too, that is, The Order, the Diſcipline, the Decency, the Unity of the Church; Love even the hem of the garment, that that almoſt touches the ground; that is, Such Ceremonies, as had a good uſe in their firſt inſtitution, for raiſing devotion, and are freed and purged from that ſuperſtition, which, as a ruſt, was growne upon them, though they may ſeeme to touch the earth, that is, to have been induced by earthly men, and not immediate inſtitutions from God, yet love that hem of that garment, thoſe outward aſſiſtances of devotion in the Church. A

Bring with thee a diſpoſition to incorporate thy ſelfe with Gods people here; and though thou beeſt not yet come to a particular conſideration of thy ſins, and of the remedies, Though that ſpirit that poſſeſſes thee, that ſin that governes thee, lie ſtill a while, and ſleepe under all the thunders, which wee denounce from this place, ſo that for a while thou beeſt not moved nor affected with all that is ſaid, yet Appropinquas, & neſcis, (as S. Auguſtine ſaid, when he came onely out of curioſity to heare S. Ambroſe preach at Milan) Thou doeſt come nearer and nearer to God, though thou diſcerne it not, and at one time or other, this bleſſed exorciſme, this holy Charme, this Ordinance of God, the word of God in the mouth of his ſervant, ſhall provoke and awaken that ſpirit of ſecurity in thee, and thou ſhalt feele him begin to ſtorme, and at firſt that ſpirit, thy B

1 Kings 18. ſpirit, will ſay to the ſpirit of the Preacher, Tune qui conturbas? Art thou he that troubleſt Iſrael? (as Ahab ſaid to Eliah) Art thou he that troubleſt the peace of my conſcience, and the ſecurity of my wayes? And, when the Spirit of God ſhall ſearch farther and farther, even ad occulta, to thy ſecreteſt ſins, and touch upon them, and that that ſpirit of diſobe- C

1 King 21.20. dience, when he feeles this powerfull Exorciſme, ſhall ſay in thee, and cry as Ahab alſo did, Inveniſti me? Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy? God ſhall anſwer, Inveni te, I have found thee, and found that thou hadſt ſold thy ſelfe to worke wickedneſſe in the ſight of the Lord, And ſo ſhall bring thee to a more particular conſideration of thine eſtate, and from

Pſal. 102.13. thy having joyned with the Church, in a Dominus miſtrebitur Sion, In an aſſurance, and acknowledgement, that the Lord will ariſe, and have mercy upon Sion, that is, of his whole

Pſal 67.1. Catholique Church, And then come to a Dominus miſereatur noſtri, God be mercifull unto us, and bleſſe us, and cauſe his face to ſhine upon us, upon us that are met here, according to his Ordinance, and in confidence of his promiſe, upon this Congregation, of which thou makeſt thy ſelfe a part, thou wilt alſo come to this of David here, Domine miſerere mei, Have mercy upon me, me in particular, and thou ſhalt heare God anſwer thee, Miſerans miſerebor tibi, With great mercy will I have mercy upon thee; upon thee; For, with D him is plentifull Redemption; Mercy for his whole Church, mercy for this whole Congregation, mercy for every particular ſoule, that makes her ſelfe a part of the Congregation. Accuſtome thy ſelfe therefore to a generall devotion, to a generall application, to generall ejaculations towards God, upon every occaſion, and then, as a wedge of gold, that comes to be coyned into particular pieces of currant money, the Lord ſhall ſtamp his Image upon all thy devotions, and bring thee to particular confeſſions of thy ſins, and to particular prayers, for thy particular neceſſities. And this we may well conceive and admit, to be the nature of Davids firſt prayer, Miſerere mei, Have mercy upon me; And then, the reaſon, upon which this firſt petition is grounded, (for ſo it will be fitteſt to handle the parts, firſt the prayer, and then the reaſon) is, Quia infirmus, Have mercy upon me, for I am weak.

Quia. Firſt then, how imperfect, how weak ſoever our prayers be, yet ſtill if it be a prayer, E it hath a Quia, a Reaſon, upon which it is grounded. It hath in it, ſome implied, ſome interpretative conſideration of our ſelves, how it becomes us to aske that, which wee doe aske at Gods hand, and it hath ſome implied, and interpretative conſideration of God, how it conduces to Gods glory to grant it: for, that prayer is very farre from faith, which is not made ſo much as with reaſon; with a conſideration of ſome poſſibility, and ſome conveniency in it. Every man that ſayes Lord, Lord, enters not into heaven; Every Lord, Lord, that is ſaid, enters not into heaven, but vaniſhes in the ayre. A prayer muſt be with a ſerious purpoſe to pray; for elſe, thoſe faſhionall and cuſtomary prayers, are but falſe fires without ſhot, they batter not heaven; It is but an Interjection, that ſlips in;

It

A It is but a Parentheſis, that might be left out, whatſoever is uttered in the manner of a prayer, if it have not a Quia, a Reaſon, a ground for it. And therefore, when our Saviour Chriſt gave us that forme of prayer, which includes all, he gave us in it a forme of the reaſon too, Quia tuum, For thine is the Kingdome, &c. It were not a prayer, to ſay Adveniat Regnum, Thy Kingdome come, if it were not grounded upon that faithfull aſſurance, that God hath a Kingdome here; Nor to ſay Sanctificetur nomen, Hallowed be thy name, If he deſired not to be glorified by us; Nor to aske daily bread, nor forgiveneſſe of ſins, but for the Quia poteſtas, Becauſe he hath all theſe in his power. We conſider this firſt acceſſe to God, Miſerere mei, Have mercy upon me, to be but a kind of imperfect prayer, but the firſt ſtep; but it were none at all, if it had no reaſon, and therefore it hath this, Quia infirmus, Becauſe I am weake.

This reaſon of our own weakneſſe is a good motive for mercy, if in a deſire of farther ſtrength we come to that of Lazarus ſiſters, to Chriſt, Ecce, quem amas, infirmatur, Behold Lord, that ſoule that thou loveſt, and haſt dyed for, is weak, and languiſhes. Chriſt anſwered then, Non eſt infirmitas ad mortem, This weakneſſe is not unto death, but that the Son of God might be glorified. He will ſay ſo to thee too; if thou preſent thy weakneſſe with a deſire of ſtrength from him, he will ſay, Quare morieмini, domus Iſrael? why will ye die of this diſeaſe? Gratia mea ſufficit; you may recover for all this; you may repent, you may abſtaine from this ſin, you may take this ſpirituall phyſick, the Word, the Sacraments, if you will; Tantummodo robuſtus eſto, (as God ſayes to Ioſhuah) Only be valiant, and fight againſt it, and thou ſhalt finde ſtrength grow in the uſe thereof. But for the moſt part, De infirmitate blandimur, ſayes S. Bernard, we flatter our ſelves with an opinion of weakneſſe; & ut liberiùs peccemus, libenter infirmamur, we are glad of this naturall and corrupt weakneſſe, that we may impute all our licentiouſneſſe to our weakneſſe, and naturall infirmity. But did that excuſe Adam, (ſayes that Father) Quòd per uxorem tanquam per carnis infirmitatem peccavit, That he took his occaſion of ſinning from his weaker part, from his wife? Quia infirmus, That thou art weak of thy ſelfe, is a juſt motive to induce God to bring thee to himſelfe; Qui verè portavit languores tuos, who hath ſurely borne all thine infirmities; But to leave him againe when he hath brought thee, to refuſe ſo light and eaſie yoake as his is, not to make uſe of that ſtrength which he by his grace offers thee, this is not the affection of the Spouſe, Languor amantis, when the perſon languiſhes for the love of Chriſt, but it is Languor amoris, when the love of Chriſt languiſhes in that perſon. And therefore if you be come ſo far with David, as to this Miſerere quia infirmus, that an apprehenſion of your owne weakneſſe have brought you to him, in a prayer for mercy, and more ſtrength, goe forward with him ſtill, to his next Petition, Sana me, O Lord heale me, for God is always ready to build upon his owne foundations, and accompliſh his owne beginnings.

Quia infirmus. Iohn 11.3.

De gradibus humilitatis.

Eſay 53.4.

Acceptus in gratiam, hilariter veni ad poſtulationes: When thou art eſtabliſhed in favour, thou maiſt make any ſuit; when thou art poſſeſt of God by one prayer, thou mayſt offer more. This is an encouragement which that Father S. Bernard gives, in obſerving the diverſe degrees of praying, That though ſervandæ humilitatis gratia, divina pietas ordinavit, To make his humility the more profitable to him, God imprints in an humble and penitent ſinner, this apprehenſion, Vt quanto plus profecit, eo minus ſe reputet profeciſſe, That the more he is in Gods favour, the more he feares he is not ſo, or the more he fears to loſe that favour, becauſe it is a part, and a ſymptome of the working of the grace of God, to make him ſee his owne unworthineſſe, the more manifeſtly, the more ſenſibly, yet, it is a religious inſinuation, and a circumvention that God loves, when a ſinner huſbands his graces ſo well, as to grow rich under him, and to make his thanks for one E bleſſing, a reaſon, and an occaſion of another; ſo to gather upon God by a rolling Trench, and by a winding ſtaire, as Abraham gained upon God, in the behalfe of Sodome; for this is an act of the wiſedome of the Serpent, which our Saviour recommends unto us, in ſuch a Serpentine line, (as the Artiſts call it) to get up to God, and get into God by ſuch degrees, as David does here, from his Miſerere, to a Sana, from a gracious looke, to a perfect recovery; from the act of the Levite that looked upon the wounded man, to the act of the Samaritane that undertooke his cure; from deſiring God to viſit him as a friend, (as Abraham was called the friend of God) to ſtudy him as a Phyſitian. Becauſe the Prophet Eſay makes a Proclamation in Chriſts name, Ho, every one that thirſteth, &c. And becauſe the ſame Prophet ſayes of him, Verè portavit, He hath truly born upon

Sana.

Luke 10.

Iames 2.23.

Eſay 55.1.

Eſay 53.4.

upon himſelfe (and therefore taken away from us) all our diſeaſes, Tertullian ſayes elegantly, that Eſay preſents Chriſt, Prædicatorem, & Medicatorem, as a Preacher, and as a Phyſitian; Indeed he is a Phyſitian both wayes; in his Word, and in his Power, and therefore in that notion onely, as a Phyſitian, David preſents him here. A

Now Phyſitians ſay, That man hath in his Conſtitution, in his Complexion, a naturall vertue, which they call Balſamum ſuum, his owne Balſamum, by which, any wound which a man could receive in his body, would cure it ſelfe, if it could be kept cleane from the anoiances of the aire, and all extrinſique encumbrances. Something that hath ſome proportion and analogy to this Balſamum of the body, there is in the ſoule of man too: Cant. 1. 12. The ſoule hath Nardum ſuam, her Spikenard, as the Spouſe ſayes, Nardus mea dedit odorem ſuum, ſhe had a ſpikenard, a perfume, a fragrancy, a ſweet ſavour in her ſelfe. For, Baſil: Virtutes germaniùs attingunt animam, quàm corpus ſanitas, Vertuous inclinations, and a diſpoſition to morall goodneſſe, is more naturall to the ſoule of man, and nearer of kin to B the ſoule of man, then health is to the body. And then, if we conſider bodily health, Nulla oratio, nulla doctrina formula nos docet morbum odiiſſe, ſayes that Father: There needs no Art, there needs no outward Eloquence, to perſwade a man to be loath to be ſick: Ita in anima ineſt naturalis, & citra doctrinam mali evitatio, ſayes he; So the ſoule hath a naturall and untaught hatred, and deteſtation of that which is evill. The Church at thy Baptiſme doth not require Sureties at thy hands, for this: Thy Sureties undertake to the Church in thy behalfe, That thou ſhalt forſake the fleſh, the world, and the devill, That thou ſhalt beleeve all the Articles of our Religion, That thou ſhalt keepe all the Commandements of God; But for this knowledge and deteſtation of evill, they are not put to undertake them then, neither doth the Church Catechize thee, in that after: for, the ſumme of all thoſe duties which concerne the deteſtation of evill, conſiſts in that unwritten law of thy conſcience which thou knoweſt naturally. Scis quod boni proximo faciendum, ſayes that Father, Naturally thou knoweſt what good thou art bound to doe to C another man; Idem enim eſt, quod ab aliis tute tibi fieri velis; for, it is but asking thy ſelfe, What thou wouldeſt that that other man ſhould do unto thee: Non ignoras quid ſit ipſum malum, Thou canſt not be ignorant, what evill thou ſhouldeſt abſtaine from offering to another, Eſt enim quod ab alio fieri nolis, It is but the ſame, which thou thinkeſt another ſhould not put upon thee. So that the ſoule of man hath in it Balſamum ſuum, Nardum ſuam, A medicinall Balſamum, a fragrant Spikenard in her ſelfe, a naturall diſpoſition to Morall goodneſſe, as the body hath to health. But therein lyes the ſouls diſadvantage, that whereas the cauſes that hinder the cure of a bodily wound, are extrinſique offences of the Ayre, and putrefaction from thence, the cauſes in the wounds of the ſoule, are intrinſique, ſo as no other man can apply phyſick to them; Nay, they are hereditary, and there was no time early inough for our ſelves to apply any thing by way of prevention, D for the wounds were as ſoone as we were, and ſooner; Here was a new ſoule, but an old ſore; a yong childe, but an inveterate diſeaſe. As S. Auguſtin cannot conceive any interim, any diſtance, between the creating of the ſoule, and the infuſing of the ſoule into the body, but eaſes himſelfe upon that, Creando infundit, and infundendo creat, The Creation is the Infuſion, and the Infuſion is the Creation, ſo we cannot conceive any Interim, any diſtance, betweene the infuſing and the ſickning, betweene the comming and the ſinning of the ſoule. So that there was no meanes of prevention; I could not ſo much as wiſh, that I might be no ſinner, for I could not wiſh that I might be no Child. Neither is there any meanes of ſeparation now; our concupiſcencies dwell in us, and preſcribe in us, and will gnaw upon us, as wormes, till they deliver our bodies to the wormes of the grave, and our conſciences to the worme that never dyes.

From the dangerous effects then of this ſickneſſe, David deſires to be healed, and by E God himſelfe, Sana me Domine, O Lord heale me; for that phyſick that Man gives, is all but drugs of the earth; Morall and Civill counſailes, rather to cover then recover, rather to diſguiſe then to avoid: They put a clove in the mouth, but they do not mend the lungs. Eſay 38. 11. To cover his nakedneſſe Adam tooke but fig-leaves; but to recover Ezechias, God tooke figs themſelves. Man deales upon leaves, that cover, and ſhadow, God upon fruitfull and effectuall meanes, that cure, and nouriſh. 2 King 20. 7. And then, God tooke a lumpe of figs; God is liberall of his graces, and gives not over a cure, at one dreſſing: And they were dry figs too, ſayes that ſtory; you muſt not looke for figs from the Tree, for immediate Revelations, for private inſpirations from God; but the medicinall preaching of the Word,

A Word, medicinall Sacraments, medicinall Abſolution, are ſuch dry figs as God hath preſerved in his Church for all our diſeaſes. S. Paul had a ſtrong deſire, and he expreſſed it in often prayer to God, to have this peccant humour, this malignity cleane purged out, to have that Stimulus carnis, that concupiſcence abſolutely taken away. God would not do ſo; but yet he applied his effectuall phyſick, ſufficient Grace.

This then is the ſoules Panacea, The Pharmacum Catholicum, the Medicina omnimorbia, The phyſick that cures all, the ſufficient Grace, the ſeaſonable mercy of God, in the merits of Chriſt Jeſus, and in the love of the Holy Ghoſt. This is the phyſick; but then, there are ever Vehicula medicinæ, certaine ſyrups, and liquors, to convey the phyſick; water, and wine in the Sacraments; And certaine Phyſitians to ordaine and preſcribe, The Miniſters of the Word and Sacraments; The Father ſends, The Son makes, The Holy Ghoſt brings, The Miniſter laies on the plaiſter. For, Medicinæ ars à Deo data, ut Baſil.
B inde rationem animæ curandæ diſceremus, Gods purpoſe in giving us the ſcience of bodily health, was not determined in the body: but his large and gracious purpoſe was, by that reſtitution of the body, to raiſe us to the conſideration of ſpirituall health. When Chriſt had ſaid to him, who was brought ſick of the palſie, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, and Marke 2. that the Scribes and Phariſees were ſcandalized with that, as though he, being but man, had uſurped upon the power of God, Chriſt proves to them, by an actuall reſtoring of his bodily health, that he could reſtore his ſoule too, in the forgiveneſſe of ſins: He asks them there, Whether is it eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, or to ſay, Ariſe, take up thy bed, and walke. Chriſtus facit ſanitatem corporalem argumentum ſpiritualis; Chriſt did not Bernar. determine his doctrine in the declaration of a miraculous power exerciſed upon his body, but by that, eſtabliſhed their beliefe of his ſpirituall power, in doing that, which in their opinion was the greater worke. Purſue therefore his method of Curing; And if
C God have reſtored thee in any ſickneſſe, by ſuch meanes, as he of his goodneſſe hath imprinted in naturall herbs, and Simples, thinke not that that was done onely or ſimply for thy bodies ſake, but that, as it is as eaſie for God to ſay, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, as Take up thy bed and walke, ſo it is as eaſie for thee, to have ſpirituall phyſick, as bodily; becauſe, as God hath planted all thoſe medicinall Simples in the open fields, for all, though ſome do tread them under their feet, ſo hath God depoſited and prepared ſpirituall helps for all, though all do not make benefit of thoſe helps which are offered. It is true, that God ſayes of his Church, Hortus concluſus ſoror mea, My ſiſter, my Spouſe is a Cant. 4. 12. Garden encloſed, as a ſpring ſhut in, and a fountaine ſealed up; But therein is our advantage, who, by being enwrapped in the Covenant, as the ſeed of the faithfull, as the children of Chriſtian Parents, are borne if not within this walled Garden, yet with a key in our hand to open the doore, that is, with a right and title, to the Sacrament of Baptiſme. The D Church is a Garden walled in, for their better defence and ſecurity that are in it; but not walled in to keepe any out, who, either by being borne within the Covenant, inherit a right to it, or by accepting the grace which is offered them, acquire, and profeſſe a deſire to enter thereinto. For, as it is a Garden, full of Spikenard, and of Incenſe, and of all ſpices, (as the Text ſayes there) ſo that they who are in this Garden, in the Church, are in poſſeſſion of all theſe bleſſed meanes of ſpirituall health; So are theſe ſpices, and Incenſe, and Spikenard, of a diffuſive and ſpreading nature, and breathe even over the wals of the Garden: Oleum effuſum nomen ejus; The name of Chriſt is unction, Oyntment; but it is Cant. 1. 3. an Oyntment powred out, an Oyntment that communicates the fragrancy thereof, to perſons at a good diſtance; And, as it is ſaid there, Chriſt cals up the North and the South 4. 16. to blow upon his Garden, he raiſes up men to tranſport and propagate theſe meanes of ſalvation to all Nations, ſo that, in every Nation, they that feare him are acceptable to him;
E not that that feare of God in generall, as one univerſall power, is ſufficient in it ſelfe, to bring any man to God immediately, but that God directs the Spikenard, and Incenſe of this Garden upon that man, and ſeconds his former feare of God, with a love of God, and brings him to a knowledg, and to a deſire, and to a poſſeſſion, and fruition of our more aſſured meanes of ſalvation. When he does ſo, this is his method, as in reſtoring bodily health, he ſaid, Surge, Tolle, Ambula, Ariſe, Take up thy bed, and Walke: So to every ſick ſoule, whoſe cure he undertakes, he ſayes ſo too, Surge, Tolle, Ambula. Our beds are our naturall affections; Theſe he does not bid us caſt away, nor burne, nor deſtroy; ſince Chriſt vouchſafed Induere hominem, wee muſt not Exuere hominem; Since Chriſt inveſted the nature of man, and became man, we muſt not pretend to deveſt it, and become Angels, or flatter our ſelves in the merit of Mortifications, not enjoyned, or of a retirednesse, and departing out of the world, in the world, by the withdrawing of our ſelves from the offices of mutuall ſociety, or an extinguiſhing of naturall affections. But, Surge, ſayes our Saviour, Ariſe from this bed, ſleepe not lazily in an over-indulgency to theſe affections; but, Ambula, walke ſincerely in thy Calling, and thou ſhalt heare thy Saviour ſay, Non eſt infirmitas hæc ad mortem, Theſe affections, nay, theſe concupiſcencies ſhall not deſtroy thee. A

David then doth not pray for ſuch an exact and exquiſite ſtate of health, as that he ſhould have no infirmity; Phyſitians for our bodies tell us, that there is no ſuch ſtate; The beſt degree of health is but Neutralitas; He is well (that is, as well as Man can be) that is not dangerouſly ſick; for, abſolutely well no man can be. Spirituall Phyſitians will tell you ſo too; He that ſayes you have no ſinne, or that God ſees not your ſinne, if you be of the Elect, deceives you. It is not for an Innocency that David prayes; but it is againſt deadly diſeaſes, and againſt violent accidents of thoſe diſeaſes. He doth not beg, he cannot hope for an abſolute peace: Nature hath put a warre upon us; True happineſſe, and apparant happineſſe fight againſt one another: ſin hath put a war upon us; The fleſh and the Spirit fight againſt one another: Chriſt Jeſus himſelfe came to put a war upon us; The zeale of his glory, and the courſe of this world, fight againſt one another. It is not againſt all warre; nay, it is not againſt all victory that David prayes; He cannot hope that he ſhould be overcome by no Tentations; but againſt ſuch a war, and ſuch a victory, as ſhould bring him to ſervility, and bondage to ſinne, That ſin entring by Conqueſt upon him, ſhould governe as a tyran over him, againſt ſuch a ſickneſſe as ſhould induce a conſumption, it is that he directs this prayer, Sana me Domine, Not, Lord make me impeccable, but Lord make me penitent, and then heale me. And he comes not to take phyſick upon wantonneſſe; but becauſe the diſeaſe is violent, becauſe the accidents are vehement; ſo vehement, ſo violent, as that it hath pierced Ad oſſa, and Ad animam, My bones are vexed, and my ſoule is ſore troubled, Therefore heale me; which is the Reaſon upon which he grounds this ſecond petition, Heale me, becauſe my bones are vexed &c. B C

Oſſa. We muſt neceſſarily inſiſt a little upon theſe termes, The Bones, The Soule, The Trouble, or Vexation. Firſt, Oſſa, Bones, We know in the naturall and ordinary acceptation, what they are; They are theſe Beames, and Timbers, and Rafters of theſe Tabernacles, theſe Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, theſe bodies of ours. But Immanebimus nativa ſignificationi? ſayes S. Baſil, Shall we dwell upon the native and naturall ſignification of theſe Bones? Et intelligentia paſſim obvia contenti erimus? Shall we who have our converſation in heaven, finde no more in theſe Bones, then an earthly, a worldly, a naturall man would doe? By S. Baſils example, we may boldly proceed farther: Membra etiam animæ ſunt, ſayes he: The ſoule hath her limbs as well as the body. Surdi audite, cæci aſpicite, ſayes God in Eſay; If their ſoules had not eares and eyes, the blinde could not ſee, the deafe could not heare, and yet God cals upon the deafe and blinde, to heare and ſee. As S. Paul ſayes to the Epheſians, The eyes of your underſtanding being enlightned; ſo David ſayes, Dentes peccatorum contriviſti, Thou haſt broken the teeth; That is, the pride and the power, the venom and malignity of the wicked: Membra etiam animæ ſunt, The ſoule hath her Bones too; and here Davids Bones were the ſtrongeſt powers and faculties of his ſoule, and the beſt actions and operations of thoſe faculties, and yet they were ſhaken. For this hereditary ſickneſſe, Originall ſinne, prevayles ſo far upon us, that upon our good dayes we have ſome grudgings of that Fever; Even in our beſt actions, we have ſome of the leaven of that ſinne. So that if we goe about to comfort our ſelves, with ſome diſpoſitions to Gods glory, which we finde in our ſelves, with ſome ſparks of love to his precepts, and his commandements, with ſome good ſtrength of faith, with ſome meaſure of good works, yea, with having ſomething for the Name, and glory of Chriſt Jeſus: yet if we conſider what humane and corrupt affections have been mingled in all theſe, Conturbabuntur oſſa, our Bones will be troubled, even thoſe that appeared to be ſtrong works, and likely to hold out, will need a reparation, an exclamation, Sana me Domine, O Lord heale theſe too, or els theſe are as weake as the worſt: Oſſa non dolent; The Bones themſelves have no ſenſe, they feele no paine. We need not ſay, That thoſe good works themſelves, which we doe, have in their nature, the nature of ſinne; That every good worke conſidered alone, and in the ſubſtance of the act it ſelfe is ſinne; D E

Eſay 42.

Pſal. 3. 7.

But

A But membrana dolent; Those little membrans, those filmes, those thin skins, that cover, and that line some bones, are very sensible of paine, and of any vexation. Though in the nature of the worke it selfe, the worke be not sinne, yet in those circumstances that inveſt, and involve the worke, in those things which we mingle with the worke, whether desire of glory towards men, or opinion of merit towards God; Whensoever those bones, those best actions come to the examination of a tender and a diligent Conscience, Si ossa non dolent, membranæ dolent, If the worke be not sinfull, the circumstances are, and howsoever they may be conceived to be strong, as they are Ossa, Bones, works, in a morall consideration, good, yet, as they are Ossa mea, sayes David, as they are My bones, such good works as taste of my ill corruptions, so long they are vexed, and troubled, and cannot stand upright, nor appeare with any confidence in the sight of God.

Thus far then first David needed this sanation, this health that he prayes for, that his Anima.

B best actions were corrupt; But the corruption went farther, to the very roote and fountaine of those actions, Ad ipsam animam, His very soule was sore vexed. It is true, that as this word Anima, the soule, is sometimes taken in the Scriptures, this may seeme to goe no farther then the former, no more that his soule was vexed, then that his bones were so: for, Anima, in many places, is but Animalis Homo, The soule signifies but the naturall man: And so opponitur spiritui, The soule is not onely said to be a diverse thing, but a contrary thing to the Spirit. When the Apostle sayes to the Thessalonians, Now the very God of peace sanctifie you throughout, that your whole spirit, and soule, and body, may be kept blamelesse unto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. And where the same Apostle sayes to the Hebrews, The word of God divideth asunder the soule and the spirit; here is a difference put between corrupt nature, and the working of the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost in man: for here, the soule is taken for Animalis homo, The naturall man, and the Spirit is taken

C for the Spirit of God. But besides this, these two words, Soule and Spirit, are sometimes used by the Fathers, in a sense diverse from one another, and as different things, and yet still as parts of one and the same man; Man is said by them, not onely to have a body, and a soule, but to have a soule, and a spirit; not as Spirit is the Spirit of God, and so an extrinsecall thing, but as Spirit is a constitutive part of the naturall man. So, in particular, amongst many, Gregory Nyssen takes the Body to be spoken De nutribili, The flesh and bloud of man, And the soule De sensibili, The operation of the senses, And the Spirit De Intellectuali, The Intellectuall, the reasonable faculties of man; That in the body, Man is conformed to Plants that have no sense, In the soule, to Beasts, that have no reason, In the spirit, to Angels. But so, The Spirit is but the same thing with that, which now we doe ordinarily account the soule to be; for we make account, that the Image of God is imprinted in the soule, and that gives him his conformity to Angels: But divers others

D of the Ancients have taken Soule and Spirit, for different things, even in the Intellectuall part of man, somewhat obscurely, I confesse, and, as some venture to say, unnecessarily, if not dangerously. It troubled S. Hierome sometimes, how to understand the word Spirit in man: but he takes the easiest way, he dispatches himselfe of it, as fast as he could, that is, to speake of it onely as it was used in the Scriptures: Famosa quæstio, sayes he, sed brevi sermone tractanda; It is a question often disputed, but may be shortly determined, Idem spiritus hic, ac in iis verbis, Nolite extinguere spiritum; When we heare of the Spirit in a Man, in Scriptures, we must understand it of the gifts of the Spirit; for so, fully to the same purpose, sayes S. Chrysostome, Spiritus est charisma spiritus, The Spirit is the working of the Spirit, The gifts of the Spirit: and so when we heare, The Spirit was vexed, The Spirit was quenched, still it is to be understood, The gifts of the Spirit. And so, as they

E restraine the signification of Spirit, to those gifts onely, (though the word do indeed, in many places, require a larger extension) so do many restraine this word in our text, The Soule, onely Ad sensum, to the sensitive faculties of the soule, that is, onely to the paine and anguish that his body suffered; But so far, at least, David had gone, in that which he said before, My bones are vexed.

Now, Ingravescit morbus, The disease festers beyond the bone, even into the marrow it selfe. His Bones were those best actions that he had produced, and he saw in that Contemplation, that for all that he had done, he was still, at best, but an unprofitable servant, if not a rebellious enemy; But then, when he considers his whole soule, and all that ever it can do, he sees all the rest will be no better; The poyson, he sees, is in the fountaine, the Canker in the roote, the rancor, the venom in the soule it selfe. Corpus in-

1 Thes. 5. 23.

Heb. 4. 12.

Ad Hedibiam. q. 11. Epist. 150

ſtrumentum, anima ars ipſa, ſayes S. Baſil: The body, and the ſenſes are but the tooles, and inſtruments, that the ſoule works with. But the ſoule is the art, the ſcience that directs thoſe Inſtruments; The faculties of the ſoule are the boughs that produce the fruits; and the operations, and particular acts of thoſe faculties are the fruits, but the ſoule is the roote of all. And David ſees, that this art, this ſcience, this ſoule can direct him, or eſtabliſh him in no good way; That not onely the fruits, his particular acts, nor onely the boughs, and armes, his ſeverall faculties, but the roote it ſelfe, the ſoule it ſelfe, was infected. His bones are ſhaken, he dares not ſtand upon the good he hath done, his ſoule is ſo too, he cannot hope for any good he ſhall do: He hath no merit for the paſt, he hath no free-will for the future; that is his caſe. A

Turbata. This troubles his bones, this troubles his ſoule, this vexes them both; for, the word is all one, in both places, as our laſt Tranſlators have obſerved, and rendred it aright; not vexed in one place, and troubled in the other, as our former Tranſlators had it; But in both places it is Bahal, and Bahal imports a vehemence, both in the intenſneſſe of it, and in the ſuddenneſſe, and inevitableneſſe of it: And therefore it ſignifies often, Præcipitantiam, A headlong downfall and irrecoverableneſſe; And often, Evaneſcentiam, an utter vaniſhing away, and annihilation. David, (whom we alwayes conſider in the Pſalmes, not onely to ſpeake literally of thoſe miſeries which were actually upon himſelfe, but prophetically too, of ſuch meaſures, and exaltations of thoſe miſeries, as would certainly fall upon them, as did not ſeeke their ſanation, their recovery from the God of all health) looking into all his actions, (they are the fruits) and into all his faculties, (they are the boughs) and into the root of all, the ſoule it ſelfe, conſidering what he had done, what he could do, he ſees that as yet he had done no good, he ſees he ſhould never be able to doe any; His bones are troubled, He hath no comfort in that which is growne up, and paſt, And his ſoule is ſore troubled, (for to the trouble of the ſoule, there is added in the Text, that particle, Valde, It is a ſore trouble that falls upon the ſoule, A troubled ſpirit who can beare?) becauſe he hath no hope in the future; He was no ſurer for that which was to come, then for that which was paſt; But he, (that is, all, conſidered in that caſe which he propoſes) he comes (as the word ſignifies) ad præcipitantiam, That all his ſtrength can ſcarce keepe him from precipitation into deſpaire, And he comes (as the word ſignifies too) ad Evaneſcentiam, to an evaporating, and a vaniſhing of his ſoule, that is, even to a renouncing, and a deteſtation of his immortality, and to a willingneſſe, to a deſire, that he might die the death of other Creatures, which periſh altogether, and goe out as a Candle. This is the trouble, the ſore trouble of his ſoule, who is brought to an apprehenſion of Gods indignation for not performing Conditions required at his hands, and of his inability to performe them, and is not come to the contemplation of his mercy, in ſupply thereof. B C D

There is Turbatio Timoris, A trouble out of feare of danger in this world, Herods trouble; When the Magi brought word of another King, Herod was troubled, and all Ieruſalem with him. There is Turbatio confuſionis, The Mariners trouble in a tempeſt; Their ſoule melteth for trouble, ſayes David. There is Turbatio occupationis; Martha's trouble; Martha thou art troubled about many things, ſayes Chriſt. There is Turbatio admirationis, The bleſſed Virgins trouble, When ſhe ſaw the Angel, ſhe was troubled at his ſaying. To contract this, There is Turbatio compaſſionis, Chriſts own trouble, When he ſaw Mary weepe for her brother Lazarus, he groaned in the ſpirit, and was troubled in himſelfe. But in all theſe troubles, Herods feare, The Mariners irreſolution, Martha's multiplicity of buſineſſe, The bleſſed Virgins ſudden amazement, Our Saviours compaſſionate ſorrow, as they are in us, worldly troubles, ſo the world adminiſters ſome means to extenuate, and alleviate theſe troubles; for, feares are overcome, and ſtormes are appeaſed, and buſineſſes are ended, and wonders are underſtood, and ſorrows weare out; But in this trouble of the bones, and the ſoule, in ſo deepe and ſenſible impreſſions of the anger of God, looking at once upon the pravity, the obliquity, the malignity of all that I have done, of all that I ſhall doe, Man hath but one ſtep between that ſtate, and deſpaire, to ſtop upon, to turne to the Author of all temporall, and all ſpirituall health, the Lord of life, with Davids prayer, Cor mundum crea, Create a cleane heart within me; Begin with me againe, as thou begunſt with Adam, in innocency; and ſee, if I ſhall husband and governe that innocency better then Adam did; for, for this heart which I have from him, I have it in corruption; and, who can bring a cleane thing out of uncleanneſſe? Therefore Davids prayer goes farther E

Mat. 2. 3.
Pſal. 107. 27.
Luk. 10. 41.
Luk. 1. 29.
John 11. 33.
Pſal. 51. 10.
Job 4.

A farther in the ſame place, Renew a conſtant ſpirit in me; Preſent cleanneſſe cannot be had from my ſelfe; but if I have that from God, mine owne cloathes will make me foule againe, and therefore doe not onely create a cleane ſpirit, but renew a ſpirit of conſtancy and perſeverance. Therefore I have alſo another Prayer in the ſame Pſalme, Spiritu principali confirma me, Suſtaine me, uphold me with thy free ſpirit, thy large, thy munificent ſpirit: for thy ordinary graces will not defray me, nor carry me through this valley of tentations, not thy ſingle money, but thy Talents; not as thou art thine owne Almoner, but thine owne Treaſurer; It is not the dew, but thy former and later raine that muſt water, though it be thy hand that hath planted; Not any of the Rivers, though of Paradiſe, but the Ocean it ſelfe, that muſt bring me to thy Jeruſalem. Create a clean heart; Thou didſt ſo in Adam, and in him I defiled it. Renew that heart; Thou didſt ſo in Baptiſme; And thy upholding me with thy conſtant ſpirit, is thy affording me
B means, which are conſtant, in thy Church; But thy confirming me with thy principall ſpirit, is thy making of thoſe meanes, inſtituted in thy Church, effectuall upon me, by the ſpirit of Application, the ſpirit of Appropriation, by which the merits of the Son, depoſited in the Church, are delivered over unto me. Pſal. 51. 12.

This then is the force of Davids reaſon in this Petition, Oſſa implentur vitiis, as one of Iobs friends ſpeaks, My bones are full of the ſins of my youth, That is, my beſt actions, now in mine age, have ſome taſte, ſome tincture from the habit, or ſome ſinfull memory of the acts of ſin in my youth; Adhæret os meum carni, as David alſo ſpeaks, My bones cleave to my fleſh, my beſt actions taſte of my worſt; And My skin cleaves to my bones, as Ieremy laments, That is, My beſt actions call for a skin, for ſomething to cover them: And Therefore, not Therefore becauſe I have brought my ſelfe into this ſtate, but becauſe by thy grace I have power to bring this my ſtate into thy ſight, by this humble confeſſion,
C Sana me Domine, O Lord heale me; Thou that art my Meſſias, be my Moſes, and carry theſe bones of thy Ioſeph out of Egypt; Deliver me, in this conſideration of mine actions, from the terror of a ſelf-accuſing, and a jealous, and ſuſpicious conſcience: Bury my bones beſide the bones of the man of God; Beſide the bones of the Son of God: Look upon my bones as they are coffind, and ſhrowded in that ſheet, the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt Jeſus. Accedant oſſa ad oſſa, as in Ezekiels viſion, Let our bones come together, bone to bone, mine to his, and looke upon them uno intuitu, all together, and there ſhall come ſinews, and fleſh, and skin upon them, and breathe upon them, and in Him, in Chriſt Jeſus, I ſhall live; My bones being laid by his, though but griſtles in themſelves, my actions being conſidered in his, though imperfect in themſelves, ſhall bear me up in the ſight of God. And this may be the purpoſe of this prayer, this ſanation, grounded upon this reaſon, O Lord heale me, for my bones are vexed, &c. But yet David muſt, and doth ſtop D upon this ſtep, he ſtayes Gods leiſure, and is put to his Vſquequo? But thou, O Lord, how long?

David had cryed Miſerere, he had begged of God to look towards him, and conſider him; He had revealed to him his weak and troubleſome eſtate, and he had entreated reliefe; but yet God gave not that reliefe preſently, nor ſeemed to have heard his prayer, nor to have accepted his reaſons. David comes to ſome degrees of expoſtulation with God; but he dares not proceed far; it is but uſquequo Domine? which if we conſider it in the Originall, and ſo alſo in our laſt Tranſlation, requires a ſerious conſideration. For it is not there as it is in the firſt Tranſlation, How long wilt thou delay? David charges God with no delay: But it is onely, Et tu Domine, uſquequo? But thou O Lord, how long? And there he ends in a holy abruptneſſe, as though he had taken himſelfe in a fault, to enterpriſe any expoſtulation with God. He doth not ſay, How long ere thou heare me? If E thou heare me, how long ere thou regard me? If thou regard me, how long ere thou heale me? How long ſhall my bones, how long ſhall my ſoule be troubled? He ſayes not ſo; but leaving all to his leiſure, he corrects his paſſion, he breaks off his expoſtulation. As long as I have that commiſſion from God, Dic animæ tuæ, Salus tua ſum, Say unto thy ſoule, I am thy ſalvation, my ſoule ſhall keep ſilence unto God, of whom commeth my ſalvation: Silence from murmuring, how long ſoever he be in recovering me; not ſilence from prayer, that he would come; for that is our laſt Conſideration; David propoſed his Deſire, Miſerere, and Sana, Looke towards me, and Heale me, that was our firſt; And then his Reaſons, Oſſa, Anima, My bones, my ſoule is troubled, that was our ſecond; And then he grew ſenſible of Gods abſence, for all that, which was our third Propoſition;

Iob 20. 11.

Pſal. 102. 5.

Lam. 4. 8.

Exod. 13. 19.

2 King. 13. 31.

Ezek. 37. 7.

Vſquequo.

Pſal. 35. 3.

poſition; for yet, for all this, he continues patient, and ſolicites the ſame God in the ſame name, The Lord, But thou O Lord, how long? A

Domine. Need we then any other example of ſuch a patience then God himſelfe, who ſtayes ſo long in expectation of our converſion? But we have Davids example too, who having Ver. 1. firſt made his Deprecation, That God would not reprove him in anger, having prayed God to forbeare him, he is alſo well content to forbeare God, for thoſe other things which he asks, till it be his pleaſure to give them. But yet he neither gives over praying, nor doth he encline to pray to any body elſe, but ſtill Domine miſerere, Have mercy upon me O Lord, and Domine ſana, O Lord heale mee: Induſtry in a lawfull calling, favour of great perſons, a thankfull acknowledgement of the miniſtery and protection of Angels, and of the prayers of the Saints in heaven for us, all theſe concur to our aſſiſtance; But the root of all, all temporall, all ſpirituall bleſſings, is he, to whom David leads us here, Dominus, The Lord; Lord, as he is Proprietary of all creatures; He made All, and therefore is Lord of All; as he is Iehovah, which is the name of Eſſence, of Being, as all things have all their being from him, their very being, and their well-being, their Creation, and their Conſervation; And in that Name of Recognition and acknowledgement, that all that can be had, is to be asked of him, and him onely, Him, as he is Iehovah, The Lord, Acts 4.12. does David ſolicite him here; for, as there is no other Name under heaven, given among ſt men, whereby we muſt be ſaved, but the Name of Ieſus Chriſt; So is there no other Name above in heaven propoſed to men, whereby they ſhould receive theſe bleſſings, but the Name of Iehovah; for Iehovah is the name of the whole Trinity, and there are no more, no Queen-mother in heaven, no Counſaylors in heaven in Commiſſion with the Trinity. B

In this Name therefore David purſues his Prayer: for, from a River, from a Ciſterne, a man may take more water at once, then he can from the firſt ſpring and fountaine head; But he cannot take the water ſo ſincerely, ſo purely, ſo intemerately from the channell as from the fountaine head. Princes and great perſons may rayſe their Dependants faſter then God does his; But ſudden riches come like a land-water, and bring much foulneſſe with them. We are Gods vineyard; The vineyard of the Lord of Hoſts, is the houſe of Iſrael, and the men of Iudah are his pleaſant plant, ſayes the Prophet. And God delights to ſee his plants proſper, and grow up ſeaſonably. More then once Chriſt makes that profeſſion, That he goes downe into the Garden of Nuts, to ſee the fruits of the valley, And to ſee whether the Vine flouriſhed, and whether the Pomegranet budded; And he goes up early into the vineyard, to ſee whether the tender grape appeared. He had a pleaſure in the growth and ſucceſſive encreaſe of his plants, and did not looke they ſhould come haſtily to their height and maturity. If worldly bleſſings, by a good induſtry, grow up in us, it is naturall; But if they fall upon us, Pluit laqueos, God rains downe ſpringes and ſnares, occaſions of ſinne in thoſe abundances, and Pluit grandinem, He will raine downe Hailſtones; Hailſtones as big as Talents, as in the Revelation; as big as Milſtones; He will make our riches occaſions of rayſing enemies, and make thoſe enemies Grindſtones to grinde our fortunes to powder. Make not too much haſte to be rich: Even in ſpirituall riches, in ſpirituall health make not too much haſte. Pray for it; for there is no other way to get it. Pray to the Lord for it: For, Saints and Angels have but enough for themſelves. Make haſte to begin to have theſe ſpirituall graces; To deſire them, is to begin to have them: But make not too much haſte in the way; Doe not thinke thy ſelfe purer then thou art, becauſe thou ſeeſt another doe ſome ſuch ſins, as thou haſt forborne. C

Eſay 5.7.

Cant. 6.10. Cant. 7.12.

Pſal 11.6. Exod. 9.23. Rev. 16.21. D

Beloved, at laſt, when Chriſt Jeſus comes with his ſcales, thou ſhalt not be waighed with that man, but every man ſhall be waighed with God: Be pure as your Father in heaven is pure, is the waight that muſt try us all; and then, the pureſt of us all, that truſts to his owne purity, muſt heare that fearfull Mene Tekel Vpharſin, Thou art waighed, Thou art found too light, Thou art divided, ſeparated from the face of God, becauſe thou haſt not taken the purity of that Son upon thee, who not onely in himſelfe, but thoſe alſo who are in him, in him are pure, as his, and their Father in heaven is pure. Neither make ſo much haſte to this ſpirituall riches, and health, as to think thy ſelf whole before thou art: Neither murmure, nor deſpaire of thy recovery, if thou beeſt not whole ſo ſoone as thou deſiredſt. If thou wraſtle with tentations, and canſt not overcome them, If thou purpoſe to pray earneſtly, and finde thy minde preſently ſtrayed from that purpoſe, If thou intend a good courſe, and meet with ſtops in the way, If thou ſeeke peace E

of

A of conſcience, and ſcruples out of zeale interrupt that, yet diſcomfort not thy ſelfe. God ſtaid ſeaven daies at the firſt worke in the Creation, before he came to make thee; yet all this while he thought for thee. Thy Regeneration, to make thee a new creature, is a greater worke then that, and it cannot be done in an inſtant. God hath purpoſed a building in thee; he hath ſat down, and conſidered, that he hath ſufficient to accompliſh that building, as it is in the Goſpel, and therefore leave him to his leiſure. Luke 14.28.

When thou haſt begun with David, with a Domine ne arguas, O Lord rebuke me not, and followed that, with a Domine miſerere, O Lord looke graciouſly towards me, and purſued that, with a Domine ſana me, O Lord heale me, If thou finde a Domine uſquequo? Any degree of wearineſſe of attending the Lords leiſure, ariſing in thee, ſuppreſſe it, overcome it, with more and more petitions, and that which God did by way of Commandement, in the firſt Creation, doe thou by way of prayer, in this thy ſecond Creation;
B First he ſaid, Fiat lux, Let there be light: Pray thou, that he would enlighten thy darkneſſe. God was ſatisfied with that light for three daies, and then he ſaid, Fiant luminaria, Let there be great lights; Bleſſe God for his preſent light, but yet pray that hee will inlarge that light which he hath given thee; And turne all thoſe his Commandments into prayers, till thou come to his Faciamus hominem, Let us make man according to our own Image; Pray that he will reſtore his Image in thee, and conforme thee to him, who is the Image of the inviſible God, our Lord and Saviour Chriſt Jeſus. He did his greateſt worke upon thee, before time was, thine Election; And he hath reſerved the conſummation of that worke, till time ſhall be no more, thy Glorification: And as for thy Vocation he hath taken his own time. (He did not call thee into the world in the time of the Primitive Church, nor, perchance, call thee effectually, though in the Church, in the dayes of thy youth) So ſtay his time for thy Sanctification, and, if the day-ſpring from Coloſſ. 1.15.
C on high have viſited thee, but this morning, If thou beeſt come to a fiat lux but now, that now God have kindled ſome light in thee, hee may come this day ſeaven-night to a fiant luminaria, to multiply this light by a more powerfull meanes. If not ſo ſoone, yet ſtill remember, that it was God that made the Sun ſtand ſtill to Joſhuah, as well as to run his race as a Giant to David; And God was as much glorified in the ſtanding ſtill of the Sun, as in the motion thereof; And ſhall be ſo in thy Sanctification, though it ſeeme to ſtand at a ſtay for a time, when his time ſhall be to perfect it, in a meaſure acceptable to thee. Nothing is acceptable to him, but that which is ſeaſonable; nor ſeaſonable, except it come in the time proper to it: And, as S. Auguſtine ſayes, Natura rei eſt, quam indidit Deus, That is the nature of every thing, which God hath imprinted in it, So that is the time for every thing, which God hath appointed for it. Pray, and Stay, are two bleſſed Monoſyllables; To aſcend to God, To attend Gods deſcent to us, is the D Motion, and the Reſt of a Chriſtian; And as all Motion is for Reſt, ſo let all the Motions of our ſoule in our prayers to God be, that our wills may reſt in his, and that all that pleaſes him, may pleaſe us, therefore becauſe it pleaſes him; for therefore, becauſe it pleaſes him, it becomes good for us, and then, when it pleaſes him, it becomes ſeaſonable unto us, and expedient for us.

13 Octr 1861. The reſt ſeems to be parabolic pleonaſm.

SERM. LII.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Psalmes.

PSAL. 6. 4, 5.

Returne, O Lord; Deliver my ſoule; O Lord ſave me, for thy mercies ſake.
For in Death there is no Remembrance of thee; and in the Grave, who ſhall give thee thanks?

THe whole Pſalme is Prayer; and Prayer is our whole ſervice to God. Earneſt Prayer hath the nature of Importunity; Wee preſſe, wee importune God in Prayer; Yet that puts not God to a morofity, to a frowardneſſe; God flings not away from that; God ſuffers that importunity, and more. Prayer hath the nature of Impudency; Wee threaten God in Prayer; as Gregor: Nazi: adventures to expreſſe it; He ſaies, his Siſter, in the vehemence of her Prayer, would threaten God, Et honeſta quadam impudentia, egit impudentem; She came, ſaies he, to a religious impudency with God, and to threaten him, that ſhe would never depart from his Altar, till ſhe had her Petition granted; And God ſuffers this Impudency, and more. Prayer hath the nature of Violence; In the publique Prayers of the Congregation, we beſiege God, ſaies Tertul: and we take God Priſoner, and bring God to our Conditions; and God is glad to be ſtraitned by us in that ſiege. This Prophet here executes before, what the Apoſtle counſailes after, Pray inceſſantly; Even in his ſinging he prayes; And as S. Baſil ſaies, Etiam ſomnia juſtorum preces ſunt, A Good mans dreames are Prayers, he prayes, and not ſleepily, in his ſleepe, ſo Davids Songs are Prayers. Now in this his beſieging of God, he brings up his works from a far off, cloſer; He begins in this Pſalme, at a deprecatory Prayer; He asks nothing, but that God would doe nothing, that he would forbeare him; Rebuke me not, Correct me not. Now, it coſts the King leſſe, to give a Pardon, then to give a Penſion; and leſſe to give a Reprieve, then to give a Pardon; and leſſe to Connive, not to call in Queſtion, then either Reprieve, Pardon or Penſion; To forbeare, is not much. But then, as the Mathematician ſaid, That he could make an Engin, a Screw, that ſhould move the whole frame of the World, if he could have a place aſſigned him, to fix that Engin, that Screw upon, that ſo it might worke upon the World: ſo Prayer, when one Petition hath taken hold upon God, works upon God, moves God, prevailes with God, entirely for all. David then having got this ground, this footing in God, he brings his works cloſer; he comes from the Deprecatory, to a Poſtulatory Prayer; not onely that God would doe nothing againſt him, but that he would doe ſomething for him. God hath ſuffered man to ſee Arcana imperii, The ſecrets of his State, how he governs; He governs by Precedent; by precedents of his Predeceſſors, he cannot; He hath none; by precedents of other Gods, he cannot; There are none; And yet he proceeds by precedents; by his owne Precedents; He does as he did before; Habenti dat, To him that hath received, hee gives more, and is willing to bee wrought, and prevailed upon, and preſt with his owne example. And, as though his doing good, were but to learne how to do good better, ſtill he writes after his owne copy; And Nulla dies ſine linea, He writes ſomething to us, that is, hee doth ſomething for us, every day. And then, that which is not often ſeene, in other Maſters, his Copies are better then the Originals; his later mercies larger then his former: And in this Poſtulatory Prayer, larger then the Deprecatory, enters our Text, Returne O Lord; Deliver my ſoule; O ſave me, &c.

Diviſio. David, who every where remembers God of his Covenant, as he was the God of Abraham, remembers alſo, how Abraham proceeded with God, in the behalfe of Sodom; And he remembers, that when Abraham had gained upon God, and brought him from a greater, to a leſſe number of righteous men, for whoſe ſakes God would have ſpared

that

A that City, yet Abraham gave over asking, before God gave over granting; And so Sodom was lost. A little more of S. Augustines Importunity, of Nazi: Impudence, of Tertul: violence in Prayer, would have done well in Abraham; If Abraham had come to a lesse price, to lesse then ten, God knowes what God would have done; for God went not away, saies the text there, till he had left communing with Abraham; that is, till Abraham had no more to say to him. In memory and contemplation of that, David gives not over in this text, till he come to the uttermost of all, as far as man can aske, as far as God can give; He begins at first, with a Revertere Domine, Returne O Lord, and higher then that, no man can begin; no man can begin at a Veni Domine; no man can pray to God, to come, till God be come into him; Quid peto, ut venias in me, saies S. August: Qui non essem, si non esses in me? How should I pray, that God would come into me, who not onely could not have the Spirit of praying, but not the Spirit of being, not life it selfe, if
B God were not in me already? But then, this prayer is, that when God had been with him, and for his sins, or his coldnesse, and slacknesse in prayer, was departed aside from him, yet he would vouchsafe to returne to him againe, and restore to him that light of his countenance which he had before, Revertere Domine, O Lord returne. And then he passes to his second petition, Eripe animam, Deliver my soule; That when God in his returne saw those many and strong snares which entangled him, those many and deepe tentations and tribulations which surrounded him, God, being in his mercy thus Returned, and in his Providence seing this danger, would not now stand neutrall, betweene them, and see him, and these tentations fight it out, but fight on his side and deliver him; Eripe animam, Deliver my soule. And then, by these two petitions, hee makes way for the third and last, which is the perfection and consummation of all, as far as he can carry a Prayer or a Desire, Salvum me fac, O Lord save me; that is,
C Imprint in me a strong hope of Salvation in this life, and invest me in an irremoveable possession, in the life to come. Lord I acknowledge that thou hast visited me heretofore, and for my sins hast absented thy selfe, O Lord returne; Lord, now thou art returned, and seest me unable to stand in these tentations and tribulations, Deliver thou my soule; Lord thou hast delivered me againe and againe, and againe and againe I fall back to my former danger, and therefore, O Lord save me, place me where I may be safe; safe in a constant hope, that the Saviour of the World intended that salvation to me; And these three Petitions constitute our first part in Davids postulatory Prayer.

And then the second part, which is also within the words of this text, and consists of those reasons, by which David inclines God to grant his three Petitions, which are two, first, Propter misericordiam tuam, Do this O Lord, for thine own mercy sake, And then, Quia non in morte, Doe it O Lord, for thine owne honours sake, Because in death there is no
D remembrance of thee, that second part will be the subject of another exercise, for, that which belongs to the three Petitions, will imploy the time allowed for this.

First then, the first step in this Prayer, Revertere, O Lord return, implies first a former pre- Revertere.
sence, and then a present absence, and also a confidence for the future; Whosoever saies, O Lord returne, sayes all this, Lord thou wast here, Lord thou art departed hence, but yet, Lord thou maiest returne hither againe. God was with us all, before we were any thing at all; And ever since our making, hath beene with us, in his generall providence; And so, we cannot say, O Lord Returne, because, so, he was never gone from us. But as God made the earth, and the fruits thereof, before he made the Sun, whose force was to work upon that earth, and upon the naturall fruits of that earth, but before he made Paradise, which was to have the Tree of Life, and the Tree of Knowledge, he made the Sun to doe those offices, of shining upon it, and returning daily to it: So God makes this earth graces. And therefore we muſt returne to this Returning, in ſome more particular conſiderations. A
E of ours, that is our selves, by naturall wayes, and sustaines us by generall providence, before any Son of particular grace be seene to shine upon us. But before man can be a Paradise, possest of the Tree of life, and of Knowledge, this Sun is made and produced, the particular graces of God rise to him, and worke upon him, and awaken, and solicite, and exalt those naturall faculties which were in him; This Son fils him, and fits him, compasses him, and disposes him, and does all the offices of the Sun, seasonably, opportunely, maturely, for the nourishing of his soule, according to the severall necessities thereof. And this is Gods returning to us, in a generall apprehension; After he hath made us, and blest us in our nature, and by his naturall meanes, he returnes to make us againe, to make us better, first by his first preventing grace, and then by a succession of his particular graces.

There are beſide others, three ſignifications in the Scripture, of this word Shubah, which is here tranſlated, to Returne, appliable to our preſent purpoſe. The firſt is the naturall and native, the primary and radicall ſignification of the word. And ſo, Shubah, To Returne, is Redire ad locum ſuum, To returne to that place, to which a thing is naturally affected; So heavy things returne to the Center, and light things returne to the Expanſion; So Mans breath departeth, ſayes David, Et redit in terram ſuam, He returnes into his Earth; That earth, which is ſo much his, as that it is he himſelfe; Of earth he was, and therefore to earth he returnes. But can God returne in ſuch a ſenſe as this? Can we finde an Vbi for God? A place that is his place? Yes; And an Earth which is his earth; Surely the vineyard of the Lord of Hoſts, is the houſe of Iſrael, and the men of Iudah are his pleaſant plant. So the Church, which is his Vineyard, is his Vbi, his place, his Center, to which he is naturally affected. And when he calls us hither, and meets us here, upon his Sabbaths, and ſheds the promiſes of his Goſpel upon the Congregation in his Ordinance, he returnes to us here, as in his Vbi, as in his own place. And as he hath a place of his owne here, ſo he hath an Earth of his owne in this place. Our fleſh is Earth, and God hath inveſted our fleſh, and in that fleſh of ours, which ſuffered death for us, he returnes to us in this place, as often as he maketh us partakers of his fleſh, and his bloud, in the bleſſed Sacrament. So then, though in my dayes of ſinne, God have abſented himſelfe from me, (for God is abſent when I doe not diſcerne his preſence) yet if to day I can heare his voyce, as God is returned to day to this place, as to his Vbi, as to his own place; ſo in his entring into me, in his fleſh and bloud, he returnes to me as to his Earth, that Earth which he hath made his by aſſuming my nature, I am become his Vbi, his place; Delitiæ ejus, His delight is to be with the ſonnes of men, and ſo with me; and ſo in the Church, in the Sermon, in the Sacrament he returnes to us, in the firſt ſignification of this word Shubah, as to that place to which he is naturally affected and diſpoſed.

Pſal. 146. 4. Eſay 5. B C

In a ſecond ſignification, this word is referred, not to the place of God, not to the perſon of God, but (if we may ſo ſpeake) to the Paſſion of God, to the Anger of God; And ſo, the Returning of God, that is, of Gods Anger, is the allaying, the becalming, the departing of his Anger; and ſo when God returnes, God ſtayes; his Anger is returned from us, but God is ſtill with us. The wrath of the Lord was kindled, ſayes the Prophet Eſay; and He ſmote his people, ſo that the mountaines trembled, and their carkaſſes were torne in the midſt of the ſtreets. Here is the tempeſt, here is the viſitation, here is Gods comming to them; He comes, but in anger, and we heare of no returne; nay, we heare the contrary, Et non redibat furor, For all this, his wrath, his fury did not returne, that is, did not depart from them; for, as God never comes in this manner, till our multiplied ſinnes call him, and importune him, ſo God never returnes in this ſenſe, in withdrawing his anger and judgements from us, till both our words and our works, our prayers and our amendment of life, joyne in a Revertere Domine, O Lord Returne, withdraw this judgement from us, for it hath effected thy purpoſe upon us. And ſo the Originall, which expreſſes neither ſignification of the word, for it is neither Returne to me, nor Returne from me, but plainely and onely Returne, leaves the ſenſe indifferent; Lord, thou haſt withdrawne thy ſelfe from me, therefore in mercy returne to me, or elſe, Lord, thy Judgements are heavy upon me, and therefore returne, withdraw theſe Judgements from me; which ſhewes the ductileneſſe, the appliableneſſe of Gods mercy, that yeelds almoſt to any forme of words, any words ſeeme to fit it.

Eſay 5. 25. D

But then, the comfort of Gods returning to us, comes neareſt us, in the third ſignification of this word Shubah; not ſo much in Gods returning to us, nor in his anger returning from us, as in our returning to him, Turne us againe, O Lord, ſayes David, Et ſalvi erimus, and we ſhall be ſaved; There goes no more to ſalvation, but ſuch a Turning. So that this Returning of the Lord, is an Operative, an Effectuall returning, that turnes our hearts, and eyes, and hands, and feet to the wayes of God, and produces in us Repentance, and Obedience. For theſe be the two legges, which our converſion to God ſtands upon; For ſo Moſes uſes this very word, Returne unto the Lord and heare his voyce; There is no returning, without hearing, nor hearing without beleeving, nor beleeving, to be beleeved, without doing; Returning is all theſe. Therefore where Chriſt ſaies, That if thoſe works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, Tyre and Sidon would have repented in ſack-

Pſal. 80. 3. E

Deut. 30. 2.

Mat. 11. 21.

cloth

A cloth and aſhes; In the Syriack Tranſlation of S. Matthew, we have this very word Shubah, They would have Returned in ſack-cloth and aſhes. So that the word which David receives from the Holy Ghoſt in this Text, being onely Returned, and no more, applies it ſelfe to all three ſenſes, Returne thy ſelfe, that is, Bring backe thy Mercy; Returne thy Wrath, that is, Call backe thy Judgements, or Returne us to thee, that is, make thy meanes, and offers of grace, in thine Ordinance, powerfull, and effectuall upon us.

Now when the Lord comes to us, by any way, though he come in corrections, in chaſtiſements, not to turne to him, is an irreverent, and unreſpective negligence. If a Purſevant, if a Serjeant come to thee from the King, in any Court of Juſtice, though hee come to put thee in trouble, to call thee to an account, yet thou receiveſt him, thou entertaineſt him, thou paieſt him fees. If any Meſſenger of the Lord come to attach thee, whether ſickneſſe in thy body, by thine own diſorder, decay in thy eſtate, by the op-
B preſſion of others, or terrour in thy Conſcience, by the preaching of his Miniſters, turne thou to the Lord, in the laſt ſenſe of the word, and his mercy ſhall returne to thee, and his anger ſhall returne from thee, and thou ſhalt have fulneſſe of Conſolation in all the three ſignifications of the word. If a Worme be trodden upon, it turnes againe; We may thinke, that is done in anger, and to revenge; But we know not; The Worme hath no ſting, and it may ſeeme as well to embrace, and licke his foote that treads upon him. When God treads upon thee, in any calamity, ſpirituall or temporall, if thou turne with murmuring, this is the turning of a Serpent, to ſting God, to blaſpheme him; This is a turning upon him, not a turning to him; But if thou turne like a Worme, then thou turneſt humbly to kiſſe the rod, to licke and embrace his foot that treads upon thee, that is, to love his Miniſters, which denounce his judgements upon thy ſinnes, yea, to love them, from whom thou receiveſt defamation in thy credit, or detriment in thy ſtate.

C We ſee how it was imputed to Aſa, when God trod upon him, that is, diſeaſed him in his feete, and exalted his diſeaſe into extremity, Yet in his diſeaſe he ſought not to the Lord, but to the Phyſitians. He turned a by-way; at leaſt, though a right way, too ſoone, to the Phyſitian before the Lord. This is that, that exaſperated God ſo vehemently, Becauſe the people turneth not to him that ſmiteth them; neither do they ſeeke the Lord of Hoſts; when the Lord of Hoſts lies with a heavy Army upon them. Therefore, ſayes the Prophet there, The Lord will cut off from Iſrael, head and tayle, branch and ruſh in one day. God is not ſo vehement, when they neglected him in their proſperity, as when, though he afflicted them, yet they turned not to him. Meaſure God by earthly Princes; (for we may meaſure the world by a Barly corne) If the King come to thy houſe, thou wilt profeſſe to take it for an honour, and thou wilt entertaine him; and yet his comming cannot be without removes, and troubles, and charges to thee. So when God comes to thee,
D in his word, or in his actions, in a Sermon, or in a ſickneſſe, though his comming diſlodge thee, remove thee, put thee to ſome inconvenience, in leaving thy bed of ſinne, where thou didſt ſleepe ſecurely before, yet here is the progreſſe of the Holy Ghoſt, intended to thy ſoule, that firſt he comes thus to thee, and then if thou turne to him, he returnes to thee, and ſettles himſelfe, and dwels in thee.

2 Chro. 16. 12.

Eſay. 9. 13.

This is too lovely a Proſpect, to depart ſo ſoone from; therefore looke we by S. Auguſtines glaſſe, upon Gods comming and returning to man. God hath imprinted his Image in our ſoules; and God comes, ſayes that Father, Vt videat imaginem; Where I have given my Picture, I would ſee how it is reſpected: God comes to ſee in what caſe his Image is in us; If we ſhut doores, if we draw Curtaines between him and his Image, that is, cover our ſoules, and diſguiſe and palliate our ſinnes, he goes away, and returnes in none of thoſe former ſenſes. But if we lay them open, by our free confeſſions, he re-
E turnes againe; that ſo, in how ill caſe ſoever he finde his Image, he may waſh it over with our teares, and renew it with his own bloud, and, Vt reſculpat imaginem, that he may refreſh and re-engrave his Image in us againe, and put it in a richer and ſafer Tablet. And as the Angel which came to Abraham at the promiſe and conception of Iſaac, gave Abraham a farther aſſurance of his Returne at Iſaacs birth, I will certainly returne unto thee, and thy wife ſhall have a Sonne; So the Lord, which was with thee in the firſt conception of any good purpoſe, Returnes to thee againe, to give thee a quickning of that bleſſed childe of his, and againe, and againe, to bring it forth, and to bring it up, to accompliſh and perfect thoſe good intentions, which his Spirit, by over-ſhadowing thy ſoule, hath formerly begotten in it. So then, he comes in Nature, and he returnes in Grace;

Gen. 18. 10.

Grace; He comes in preventing, and returnes in ſubſequent graces; He comes in thine underſtanding, and returnes in thy will; He comes in rectifying thine actions, and returns in eſtabliſhing habits; He comes to thee in zeale, and returnes in diſcretion; He comes to thee in fervour, and returnes in perſeverance; He comes to thee in thy peregrination, all the way, and he returns in thy tranſmigration, at thy laſt gaſpe. So God comes, and ſo God returnes. A

Yet I am loath to depart my ſelfe, loath to diſmiſſe you from this ayre of Paradiſe, of Gods comming, and returning to us. Therefore we conſider againe, that as God came long agoe, ſix thouſand years agoe, in nature, when we were created in Adam, and then in nature returned to us, in the generation of our Parents: ſo our Saviour Chriſt Jeſus came to us long agoe, ſixteene hundred yeares agoe, in grace, and yet in grace returnes to us, as often as he aſſembles us, in theſe holy Convocations. He came to us then, as the Wiſemen came to him, with treaſure, and gifts, and gold, and incenſe, and myrrhe; As having an ambition upon the ſoules of men, he came with that abundant treaſure to purchaſe us. And as to them who live upon the Kings Penſion, it is ſome comfort to heare that the Exchequer is full, that the Kings moneyes are come in: ſo is it to us, to know that there is enough in Gods hands, paid by his Son, for the diſcharge of all our debts; He gave enough for us all at that comming; But it is his returning to us, that applyes to us, and derives upon us in particular, the benefit of this generall ſatisfaction. When he returns to us in the diſpenſation and diſtribution of his graces, in his Word and Sacraments; When he calls upon us to come to the receipt; When the greater the ſumme is, the gladder he is of our comming, that where ſinne abounds, grace might abound too; When we can purſue this Prayer, Revertere Domine, Returne O Lord in grace, in more and more grace, and when we are in poſſeſſion of a good meaſure of that grace, we can pray againe, Revertere Domine, Returne O Lord in glory, Come Lord Jeſus, come quickly; When we are ſo rectified by his Ordinances here, that in a ſincerity of ſoule, we are not onely contented, but deſirous to depart from hence, then have we religiouſly followed our example, that man according to Gods heart, David, in this prayer of his. If Chriſt have not beene thus fully in thine heart, before, this is his comming; entertaine him now: If he have been there, and gone againe, this is his returning; bleſſe him for that: And meet him, and love him, and embrace him, as often as he offers himſelfe to thy ſoule, in theſe his Ordinances: Wiſh every day a Sunday, and every meale a Sacrament, and every diſcourſe a Homily, and he ſhall ſhine upon thee in all dark wayes, and rectifie thee in all ragged wayes, and direct thee in all croſſe wayes, and ſtop thee in all doubtfull wayes, and returne to thee in every corner, and relieve thee in every danger, and arme thee even againſt himſelfe, by advancing thy worke, in which thou beſiegeſt him, that is, this Prayer, and enabling thee to prevaile upon him, as in this firſt Petition, Revertere Domine, O Lord returne, ſo in that which followes next, Eripe animam, Deliver my ſoule. B C D

Eripe animã. In this Prayer, we may either conſider David in that affection which S. Paul had when he deſired to be delivered ab angelo Satanæ, from the meſſenger of Satan that buffeted him, that ſo that Stimulus carnis which he ſpeaks of, that vexation, and provocation of the fleſh, might have been utterly removed from him, whereby he might have paſt his life in Gods ſervice in a religious calme, without any ſtorme, or oppoſition, or contradiction ariſing in his fleſh: Or we may conſider it as a Prayer agreeable to that Petition in our Lords Prayer, Libera nos à malo, Deliver us from evill; which is not from being attempted by evill, but by being ſwallowed up by it. Eripe me, may be, Deliver me from rebellions, or Deliver me in rebellions; Either that they come not, or that they overcome not. E

In that prayer of S. Paul, that God would remove Angelum Satanæ, and take away Stimulum carnis, firſt, S. Paul is not eaſily underſtood, and then, it may be, not ſafely imitated. It is hard to know what S. Paul means in his Prayer, and it may be dangerous to pray as he prayed. For the actions of no man, how holy ſoever, till we come to Chriſt himſelfe, lay ſuch an obligation upon us, as that we muſt neceſſarily doe as they did. Nay the actions of Chriſt himſelfe lay not that obligation upon us, to faſt as he faſted; no nor to pray as he prayed. A man is not bound in an Affliction, or Perſecution, at leaſt at all times, to that Prayer, Si poſſibile, or Tranſeat calix, If it be poſſible let this cup paſſe; But if God vouchſafe him a holy conſtancy, to goe through with his Martyrdome,

A tyrdome, he may proceed in it without any such Deprecation to God, or Petition to the Judge.

But first, before we consider whether he might be imitated, if we understood him, we find it hard to understand him. S. Augustines free confession, Se nescire quid sit angelus Satanæ, That he never understood what S. Paul meant by that Messenger of Satan, is more ingenuous then their interpretation, who, I know not upon what Tradition, referre it to an extreame paine in the head, that S. Paul should have, as Theophylact sayes; or refer it Ad morbum Iliacum, which Aquinas speaks of; or to the Gout, or pains in the Stomach, as Nazianzen, and Basil interpret it. Oecumenius understands this Angel, this Messenger of Satan, to be those Heretiques, which were his Adversaries, in his preaching of the Gospel; according to that signification of the word Satan, in which Solomon uses it to Hiram, Non est mihi Satan, I have no Adversary. 1 King. 5. 4.

B Others, even amongst the Fathers, understand it particularly, and literally, of that concupiscence, and those lusts of the flesh, which even the most sanctified men may have some sense of, and some attempts by. Others understand it generally of all calamities, spirituall, and temporall, incident to us in this life. But Cajetan goes farthest, who reads it not as we do, Angelum Satanæ, but Angelum Satanam; not that Angel which comes from Satan, but that Angel that is Satan himselfe. So that he conceives it to be a prayer against all tentations and tribulations here, and hereafter, which the Devill or the Devils Instruments can frame against us.

Now, if we think we understand it aright, in understanding it so generally, then enters our second doubt, whether we may imitate S. Paul in so generall a prayer. We dispute in the Schoole, whether, if it were in his power to doe it, man might lawfully destroy any intire species of creatures in the world, though offensive, and venemous, as Vipers, or Scorpions. For every species being a link of Gods great chaine, and a limb of C his great creature, the whole world, it seemes not to be put into our power, to break his chaine, and take out a link, to maime his great creature, and cut off a limb, by destroying any intire species, if we could. So neither does it seeme conduceable to Gods purposes in us, (which is the rule of all our prayers) to pray utterly against all tentations, as vehemently as against sins. God should lose by it, and we should lose by it, if we had no tentations; for God is glorified in those victories, which we, by his grace, gaine over the Devill. Nescit Diabolus, quanta bona de illo fiunt, etiam cum sævit; Little knowes the Devill, how much good he does us, when he tempts us; for by that we are excited to have our present recourse to that God, whom in our former security, we neglected, who gives us the issue with the tentation. August. Ego novi quid apposuerim, I know what infirmities I have submitted thee to, and what I have laid and applied to thee. Ego novi unde ægrotes, ego novi unde saneris; I know thy sicknesse, and I know thy phylick. Idem.

D Sufficit tibi gratia mea; Whatsoever the disease be, my grace shall be sufficient to cure it. For whether we understand that, as S. Chrysostome does, De gratia miraculorum, That it is sufficient for any mans assurance, in any tentation, or tribulation, to consider Gods miraculous deliverances of other men, in the like cases; or whether we understand it according to the generall voyce of the Interpreters, that is, Be content that there remaine in thy flesh, Matter and Subject for me to produce glory from thy weaknesse, and Matter and Subject for thee to exercise thy faith and allegeance to me, still these words will carry an argument against the expedience of absolute praying against all tentations; for still, this Gratia mea sufficit, will import this, amount to this, I have as many Antidotes, as the Devill hath poisons, I have as much mercy as the Devill hath malice; There must be Scorpions in the world; but the Scorpion shall cure the Scorpion; there must be tentations; but tentations shall adde to mine, and to thy glory, and,

E Eripiam, I will deliver thee.

This word is in the Originall, Chalatz; which signifies Eripere in such a sense, as our language does not fully reach in any one word. So there is some defectivenesse, some slacknesse in this word of our Translation, Delivering. For it is such a Delivering, as is a sudden catching hold, and snatching at the soule of a man, then, when it is at the brink, and edge of a sin. So that if thy facility, and that which thou wilt make shift to call Good Nature, or Good Manners, have put thee into the hands of that subtile woman, that Solomon speaks of, That is come forth to meet thee, and seek thy face; If thou have followed her, As an Oxe goeth to the slaughter, and as a foole to the correction of the stocks; Even then, when the Axe is over thy head, then when thou hast approacht so neare to Prov. 7. 10. 15.

 destruction,

deſtruction, then is the ſeaſon of this prayer, Eripe me Domine, Catch hold of me now O Lord, and Deliver my ſoule. When Ioſeph had reſiſted the tentations of his Maſters Wife, and reſiſted them the onely ſafe way, not onely not to yeeld, but as the Text ſayes, not to come in her company, and yet ſhe had found her opportunity when there was none in the houſe but they, he came to an inward Eripe me Domine, O Lord take hold of me now, and ſhe caught, and God caught; She caught his garment, and God his ſoule; She delivered him, and God delivered him; She to Priſon, and God from thence. If thy curioſity, or thy confidence in thine owne ſpirituall ſtrength, carry thee into the houſe of Rimmon, to Idolatry, to a Maſſe, truſt not thou to Naamans requeſt, Ignoſcat Dominus ſervo in hac re, That God will pardon thee, as often as thou doeſt ſo, but ſince thou haſt done ſo now, now come to this Eripe animam, O Lord deliver my ſoule now, from taking harme now, and hereafter, from expoſing my ſelfe to the like harme. For this is the purpoſe of Davids prayer in this ſignification of this word, that howſoever infirmity, or company, or curioſity, or confidence, bring us within the diſtance, and danger, within the Spheare, and Latitude of a tentation, that though we be not lodged in Sodome, yet we are in the Suburbs, though we be not impailed in a ſin, yet we are within the purlues, (which is not ſafely done; no more then it is in a State, to truſt alwaies to a Defenſive Warre) yet when we are ingaged, and enthralled in ſuch a tentation, then, though God be not delighted with our danger, yet then is God moſt delighted to help us, when we are in danger; and then, he comes not only to deliver us from that imminent, and particular danger, according to that ſignification of this word, but according to that Interpretation of this word, which the Septuagint have given it, in the Prophet Eſay, Iacobitæ, Pinguefaciet; He ſhall proceed in his worke, and make fat thy ſoule; That is, Deliver thee now, and preſerve, and eſtabliſh thee after, to the fulfilling of all, that belongs to the laſt Petition of this prayer, Salvum me fac, O Lord ſave me; Though he have been abſent, he ſhall Returne; and being Returned, ſhall not ſtand ſtill, nor ſtand Neutrall, but deliver thee; and having delivered thee, ſhall not determine his love in that one act of mercy, but ſhall Save thee, that is, Imprint in thee a holy confidence, that his ſalvation is thine.

Gen. 39. 10.

2 Kings 5.

Eſay 58. 11.

Salvum me fac. Eſay 19. 20.

So then, in that manner is Gods Deliverance expreſt, They ſhall cry unto him, (till wee cry, he takes no knowledge at all) and then he ſends to them, (there is his returning upon their cry) and then, He ſhall deliver them, ſayes that Prophet; and ſo, the two former Petitions of this prayer are anſwered; but the Conſummation, and Eſtabliſhment of all, is in the third, which followes in the ſame place, He ſhall ſend them a Saviour, and a great one. But who is that? what Saviour? Doubtleſſe he that is proclaimed by God, in the ſame Prophet, Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Behold thy ſalvation commeth. For, that word which that Prophet uſes there, and this word, in which David preſents this laſt Petition here, is in both places, Iaſhang, and Iaſhang is the very word, from which the name of Ieſus is derived; ſo that David deſires here, that ſalvation which Eſay proclaimed there, ſalvation in the Saviour of the world, Chriſt Jeſus, and an intereſt in the aſſurance of his merits.

Eſay 62. 11.

We finde this name of Saviour attributed to other men in the Scriptures, then to Chriſt. In particular diſtreſſes, when God raiſed up men, to deliver his people ſometimes, thoſe men were ſo called, Saviours. And ſo S. Ierome interprets thoſe words of the Prophet, Aſcendent ſalvatores, Saviours ſhall come up, on Mount Sion, of Prophets, and Preachers, and ſuch other Inſtruments, as God ſhould raiſe for the ſalvation of ſoules. Thoſe, whom in other places, he calls Angels of the Church, here he calls by that higher name, Saviours. But ſuch a Saviour as is proclaimed to the ends of the world, to all the world, a Saviour in the Mountaines, in the height of preſumptuous ſins, and a Saviour in the vallies, in the dejection of inordinate melancholy too, A Saviour of the Eaſt, of riſing, and growing men, and a Saviour of the Weſt, of withering, declining, languiſhing fortunes too, A Saviour in the ſtate of nature, by having infuſed the knowledge of himſelfe, into ſome men then, before the light, and help of the Law was afforded to the world, A Saviour in the ſtate of the Law, by having made to ſome men then, even Types Accompliſhments, and Propheſies Hiſtories, And, as himſelf Cals things that are not, as though they were, So he made thoſe men ſee things that were not, as though they were, (for ſo Abraham ſaw his day and rejoyced) A Saviour in the ſtate of the Goſpel, and ſo, as that he ſaves ſome there, for the fundamentall Goſpels ſake, that is, for ſtanding faſt in the fundamentall

Obad. 1, 21.

A mentall Articles thereof, though they may have been darkned with ſome ignorances, or may have ſtrayed into ſome errors, in ſome Circumſtantiall points, A Saviour of all the world, of all the conditions in the world, of all times through the world, of all places of the world, ſuch a Saviour is no man called, but Chriſt Jeſus only. For when it is ſaid that Pharaoh called Ioſeph, Salvatorem mundi, A Saviour of the world, (beſides, that if it were ſo, that which is called all the world, can be referred but to that part of the world which was then under Pharaoh; as when it is ſaid, that Auguſtus taxed the world, that is intended De orbe Romano, ſo much of the world, as was under the Romanes) there is a manifeſt error in that Tranſlation, which cals Ioſeph ſo, for that name which was given to Ioſeph there, in that language in which it was given, doth truly ſignifie Revelatorem Secretorum, and no more, a Revealer, a Diſcoverer, a Decypherer of ſecret and myſterious things; according to the occaſion, upon which that name was then given, which was the De- Gen. 41. 45.

B cyphering, the Interpreting of Pharaohs Dreame.

Be this then thus eſtabliſht, that David for our example conſiders, and referres all ſalvation, to ſalvation in Chriſt. As he does alſo where he ſayes after, Notum fecit ſalutare tuum, The Lord hath made known his ſalvation. Quid eſt ſalutare tuum? ſaies S. Baſil; What is the Lords ſalvation? And he makes a ſafe anſwer out Simeons mouth, Mine eyes have ſeene thy ſalvation, when he had ſeen Chriſt Ieſus. This then is he, which is not only Salvator populi ſui, The Saviour of his people, the Jews, to whom he hath betrothed himſelfe, In Pacto ſalis, A Covenant of ſalt, an everlaſting Covenant: Nor onely Salvator corporis ſui, The Saviour of his own body, as the Apoſtle calls him; of that body which he hath gathered from the Gentiles, in the Chriſtian Church: Nor only Salvator mundi, A Saviour of the world, ſo, as that which he did, and ſuffered, was ſufficient in it ſelfe, and was accepted by the Father, for the ſalvation of the world; but, as Tertullian, Pſal. 98. 2. Luke 2.

C for the moſt part reads the word, he was Salutificator; not only a Saviour, becauſe God made him an inſtrument of ſalvation, as though he had no intereſt in our ſalvation, till in his fleſh he died for us; but he is Salutificator, ſo the Author of this ſalvation, as that from all eternity, he was at the making of the Decree, as well as in the fulneſſe of time he was at the executing thereof. In the work of our ſalvation, if we conſider the merit, Chriſt was ſole and alone, no Father, no Holy Ghoſt trod the Wine-preſſe with him; And if in the work of our ſalvation we conſider the mercy, there, though Chriſt were not ſole, and alone, (for that mercy in the Decree was the joynt-act of the whole Trinity) yet even in that, Chriſt was equall to the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt. So he is Salutificator, the very Author of this ſalvation, as that when it came to the act, he, and not they, died for us; and when it was in Councell, he, as well as they, and as ſoone as they, decreed it for us.

As therefore the Church of God ſcarce preſents any petition, any prayer to God, but

D it is ſubſcribed by Chriſt; the Name of Chriſt, is for the moſt part the end, and the ſeale of all our Collects; all our prayers in the Liturgy, (though they be but for temporall things, for Plenty, or Peace, or Faire-weather) are ſhut up ſo, Grant this O Lord, for our Lord and Saviour Chriſt Ieſus ſake: So David for our example, drives all his petitions in this Text, to this Concluſion, Salvum me fac, O Lord ſave me; that is, apply that ſalvation, Chriſt Jeſus to me. Now beloved, you may know, that your ſelves have a part in thoſe means, which God uſes to that purpoſe, your ſelves are inſtruments, though not cauſes of your own ſalvation. Salvus factus es pro nihilo, non de nihilo tamen; Thou bringeſt nothing for thy ſalvation, yet ſomething to thy ſalvation; nothing worth it, but yet ſomthing with it; Thy new Creation, by which thou art a new creature, that is, thy Regeneration, is wrought as the firſt Creation was wrought. God made heaven and earth of nothing; but hee produced the other creatures, out of that matter, which he had made. Thou hadſt Bernard.

E nothing to doe in the firſt work of thy Regeneration; Thou couldſt not ſo much as wiſh it; But in all the reſt, thou art a fellow-worker with God; becauſe, before that, there are ſeeds of former grace ſhed in thee. And therefore when thou commeſt to this laſt Petition, Salvum me fac, O Lord ſave me, remember ſtill, that thou haſt ſomething to doe, as well as to ſay; that ſo thou maiſt have a comfortable anſwer in thy ſoule, to the whole prayer, Returne O Lord, Deliver my ſoule, and Save me. And ſo we have done with our firſt Part, which was the Prayer it ſelfe; and the ſecond, which is the Reaſons of the Prayer, we muſt reſerve for a ſecond exerciſe.

A

SERM. LIII.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 6. 4, 5.

Returne, O Lord; Deliver my ſoule; O Lord ſave me, for thy mercie ſake. B
For in Death there is no Remembrance of thee; and in the Grave, who ſhall give thee thanks?

WEE come now to the Reaſons of theſe Petitions, in Davids Prayer; For, as every Prayer muſt bee made with faith, (I muſt beleeve that God will grant my Prayer, if it conduce to his glory, and my good to doe ſo, that is the limit of my faith) ſo I muſt have reaſon to ground a likelyhood, and a faire probability that that particular which I pray for, doth conduce to his glory and my good, and that therefore God is likely to grant it. Davids firſt Reaſon here is grounded on God himſelfe, Propter miſericordiam, Doe it for thy mercy ſake; and in his ſecond Reaſon, though David himſelfe, and all men with him, ſeeme to have a part, yet at laſt we ſhall ſee, the Reaſon it ſelfe to determine wholly and entirely in God too, and in his glory, Quoniam non in morte, Do it O Lord, For in Death there is no remembrance of thee, &c. C

Propter miſericordiam. Pſal. 40. 11.

In ſome other places, David comes to God with two reaſons, and both grounded meerely in God; Miſericordia, & veritas, Let thy Mercy and thy Truth alwaies preſerve me. In this place he puts himſelfe wholly upon his mercy, for mercy is all, or at leaſt, the foundation that ſuſtaines all, or the wall that imbraces all. That mercy, which the word of this text, Caſad imports, is Benignitas in non promeritum; Mercy is a good diſpoſition towards him, who hath deſerved nothing of himſelfe; For, where there is merit, there is no mercy. Nay, it imports more then ſo, For mercy, as mercy, preſumes not onely no merit in man, but it takes knowledge of no promiſe in God, properly; For that is the difference betweene Mercy and Truth, that by Mercy at firſt, God would make promiſes to man, in generall; and then by Truth, he would performe thoſe promiſes: but Mercy goeth firſt; and there David begins and grounds his Prayer, at Mercy; Mercy that can have no pre-mover, no pre-relation, but begins in it ſelfe. For if we conſider the mercy of God to mankinde ſubſequently, I meane, after the Death of Chriſt, ſo it cannot bee properly called mercy. Mercy thus conſidered, hath a ground; And God thus conſidered, hath received a plentifull, and an abundant ſatisfaction in the merits of Chriſt Jeſus; And that which hath a ground in man, that which hath a ſatisfaction from man, (Chriſt was truly Man) fals not properly, preciſely, rigidly, under the name of mercy. But conſider God in his firſt diſpoſition to man, after his fall, That he would vouchſafe to ſtudy our Recovery, and that he would turne upon no other way, but the ſhedding of the blood of his owne and innocent and glorious Son, Quid eſt homo, aut filius hominis? What was man, or all mankinde, that God ſhould be mindfull of him ſo, or ſo mercifull to him? When God promiſes that he will be mercifull and gracious to me, if I doe his Will, when in ſome meaſure I doe that Will of his, God begins not then to be mercifull; but his mercy was awake and at worke before, when he excited me, by that promiſe, to doe his Will. And after, in my performance of thoſe duties, his Spirit ſeales to me a declaration, that his Truth is exerciſed upon mee now, as his mercy was before. Still, his Truth is in the effect, in the fruit, in the execution, but the Decree, and the Roote is onely Mercy. D E

God is pleaſed alſo when we come to him with other Reaſons; When we remember him of his Covenant; When we remember him of his holy ſervants, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob; yea when we remember him of our owne innocencie, in that particular, for which which wee may be then unjuſtly purſued; God was glad to heare of a Righteouſneſſe, and of an Innocencie, and of cleane and pure hands in David, when hee was unjuſtly purſued by Saul. But the roote of all is in this, Propter miſericordiam, Doe it for thy mercie ſake. For when we ſpeake of Gods Covenant, it may be miſtaken, who is, and who is not within that Covenant; What know I? Of Nations, and of Churches, which have received the outward profeſſion of Chriſt, we may be able to ſay, They are within the Covenant, generally taken; But when we come to particular men in the Congregation, there I may call a Hypocrite, a Saint, and thinke an excomunicate ſoule, to be within the Covenant; I may miſtake the Covenant, and I may miſtake Gods ſervants, who did, and who did not dye in his favour, What know I? We ſee at Executions, when men pretend to dye cheerefully for the glory of God, halfe the company will call them Traitors, and halfe Martyrs. So if we ſpeake of our owne innocency, we may have a pride in that, or ſome other vicious and defective reſpect (as uncharitableneſſe towards our malicious Perſecutors, or laying ſeditious aſperſions upon the juſtice of the State) that may make us guilty towards God, though wee be truly innocent to the World, in that particular. But let mee make my recourſe to the mercy of God, and there can bee no errour, no miſtaking.

And therefore if that, and nothing but that be my ground, God will Returne to me, God will Deliver my ſoule, God will Save me, For his mercy ſake; that is, becauſe his mercy is engaged in it. And if God were to ſell me this Returning, this Delivering, this Saving, and all that I pray for; what could I offer God for that, ſo great as his owne mercy, in which I offer him the Innocencie, the Obedience, the Blood of his onely Son. If I buy of the Kings land, I muſt pay for it in the Kings money; I have no Myne, nor Mint of mine owne; If I would have any thing from God, I muſt give him that which is his owne for it, that is, his mercy; And this is to give God his mercy, To give God thanks for his mercy, To give all to his mercy, And to acknowledge, that if my works be acceptable to him, nay if my very faith be acceptable to him, it is not becauſe my works, no nor my faith hath any proportion of equivalencie in it, or is worth the leaſt flaſh of joy, or the leaſt ſpangle of glory in Heaven, in it ſelfe, but becauſe God in his mercy, onely of his mercy, meerely for the glory of his mercy, hath paſt ſuch a Covenant, Crede, & fac hoc, Beleeve this, and doe this, and thou ſhalt live, not for thy deed ſake, nor nor for thy faith ſake, but for my mercy ſake. And farther we carry not this firſt reaſon of the Prayer, ariſing onely from God.

There remaines in theſe words another Reaſon, in which David himſelfe, and all men ſeeme to have part, Quia non in morte, For in death there is no remembrance of thee, &c. Upon occaſion of which words, becauſe they ſeeme to imply a lothneſſe in David to dye, it may well be inquired, why Death ſeemed ſo terrible to the good and godly men of thoſe times, as that evermore we ſee them complaine of ſhortneſſe of life, and of the neereneſſe of death. Certainely the rule is true, in naturall, and in civill, and in divine things, as long as wee are in this World, Nolle meliorem, eſt corruptio prima habitudinis, That man is not well, who deſires not to be better; It is but our corruption here, that makes us loth to haſten to our incorruption there. And beſides, many of the Ancients, and all the later Caſuiſts of the other ſide, and amongſt our owne men, Peter Martyr, and Calvin, aſſigne certaine caſes, in which it hath Rationem boni, The nature of Good, and therefore is to be embraced, to wiſh our diſſolution and departure out of this World; and yet, many good and godly men have declared this lothneſſe to dye. Beloved, waigh Life and Death one againſt another, and the balance will be even; Throw the glory of God into either balance, and that turnes the ſcale. S. Paul could not tell which to wiſh, Life, or Death; There the balance was even; Then comes in the glory of God, the addition of his ſoule to that Quire, that ſpend all their time, eternity it ſelfe, only in glorifying God, and that turnes the ſcale, and then, he comes to his Cupio diſſolvi, To deſire to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt. But then, he puts in more of the ſame waight in the other ſcale, he ſees that it advances Gods glory more, for him to ſtay, and labour in the building of Gods Kingdome here, and ſo adde more ſoules then his owne to that ſtate, then only to enjoy that Kingdome in himſelf, and that turnes the ſcale againe, and ſo he is content to live.

In morte.

Picus Heptapl. l. 7. proem.

Theſe Saints of God then when they deprecate death, and complain of the approaches of death, they are, at that time, in a charitable extaſie, abſtracted and withdrawne from the conſideration of that particular happineſſe, which they, in themſelves, might haye in heaven; and they are tranſported and ſwallowed up with this ſorrow, that the Church here, and Gods kingdome upon earth, ſhould lack thoſe meanes of advancement, or aſſiſtance, which God, by their ſervice, was pleaſed to afford to his Church. Whether they were good Kings, good Prieſts, or good Prophets, the Church loſt by their death; and Eſay 38. 18. therefore they deprecated that death, and defired to live. The grave cannot praiſe thee, death cannot celebrate thee; But the living, the living, he ſhall praiſe thee, as I doe this day, ſayes Hezekias; He was affected with an apprehenſion of a future barrenneſſe after his death, and a want of propagation of Gods truth; I ſhall not ſee the Lord, even the Lord, ſayes he. He had aſſurance, that he ſhould ſee the Lord in Heaven, when by death he was come thither; But, ſayes he, I ſhall not ſee him in the land of the living; Well, even in the land of the living, even in the land of life it ſelfe, he was to ſee him, if by death he were to ſee him in Heaven; But this is the loſſe that he laments, this is the miſery that he deplores with ſo much holy paſſion, I ſhall behold man no more, with the Inhabitants of the world; Howſoever, I ſhall enjoy God my ſelfe, yet I ſhall be no longer a meanes, an inſtrument of the propagation of Gods truth amongſt others; And, till we come to that joy, which the heart cannot conceive, it is, I thinke, the greateſt joy that the ſoule of man is capable of in this life, (eſpecially where a man hath been any occaſion of ſinne to others) to aſſiſt the ſalvation of others. And even that conſideration, that he ſhall be able to doe Gods cauſe no more good here, may make a good man loath to die. Quid faciet magno nomini tuo? ſayes Ioſhuah in his prayer to God; if the Canaanites come in, and Joſ. 7. 9. deſtroy us, and blaſpheme thee, What wilt thou do unto thy mighty Name? What wilt thou doe unto thy glorious Church, ſaid the Saints of God in thoſe Deprecations, if thou take thoſe men out of the world, whom thou hadſt choſen, enabled, qualified for the edification, ſuſtentation, propagation of that Church. In a word, David conſiders not here, what men doe, or doe not in the next world; but he conſiders onely, that in this world he was bound to propagate Gods Truth, and that that he could not doe, if God tooke him away by death.

Conſider then this horrour, and deteſtation, and deprecation of death, in thoſe Saints of the old Teſtament, with relation to their particular, and then it muſt be, Quia promiſſiones obſcuræ, Becauſe Moſes had conveyed to thoſe men, all Gods future bleſſings, all the joy and glory of Heaven, onely in the types of earthly things, and ſaid little of the ſtate of the ſoule after this life. And therefore the promiſes belonging to the godly after this life, were not ſo cleere then, not ſo well manifeſted to them, not ſo well fixt in them, as that they could, in contemplation of them, ſtep eaſily, or deliver themſelves confidently into the jawes of death; he that is not fully ſatisfied of the next world, makes ſhift to be content with this; and he that cannot reach, or does not feele that, will be glad to keepe his hold upon this. Conſider their horrour, and deteſtation, and deprecation of death, not with relation to themſelves, but to Gods Church, and then it will be, Quia operarii pauci, Becauſe God had a great harveſt in hand, and few labourers in it, they were loath to be taken from the worke.

And theſe Reaſons might, at leaſt, by way of excuſe and extenuation, in thoſe times of darkneſſe, prevaile ſomewhat in their behalfe; They ſaw not whither they went, and therefore were loath to goe; and they were loath to goe, becauſe they ſaw not how Gods Church would ſubſiſt, when they were gone. But in theſe times of ours, when Almighty God hath given an abundant remedy to both theſe, their excuſes will not be appliable to us. We have a full cleerneſſe of the ſtate of the ſoule after this life, not onely above thoſe of the old Law, but above thoſe of the Primitive Chriſtian Church, which, in ſome hundreds of yeares, came not to a cleere underſtanding in that point, whether the ſoule were immortall by nature, or but by preſervation, whether the ſoule could not die, or onely ſhould not die. Or (becauſe that perchance may be without any conſtant cleerneſſe yet) that was not cleere to them, (which concernes our caſe neerer) whether the ſoule came to a preſent fruition of the ſight of God after death or no. But God having afforded us cleerneſſe in that, and then bleſt our times with an eſtabliſhed Church, and plenty of able work-men for the preſent, and plenty of Schooles, and competency of endowments in Univerſities, for the eſtabliſhing of our hopes, and aſſurances for the future, ſince we have both the promiſe of Heaven after, and the promiſe that the gates of Hell ſhall not prevaile againſt the Church here; Since we can neither ſay, Promiſſio-

nes

A nes obſcuræ, That Heaven hangs in a Cloud, nor ſay, Operarii pauci, That dangers hang over the Church, it is much more inexcuſable in us now, then it was in any of them then, to be loath to die, or to be too paſſionate in that reaſon of the deprecation, Quia non in morte, Becauſe in death there is no remembrance of thee &c.

Which words, being taken literally, may fill our meditation, and exalt our devotion thus; If in death there be no remembrance of God, if this remembrance periſh in death, certainly it decayes in the neerneſſe to death; If there be a poſſeſſion in death, there is an approach in age; And therefore, Remember now thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth. Eccleſ. 12. 1.
There are ſpirituall Lethargies, that make a man forget his name; forget that he was a Chriſtian, and what belongs to that duty. God knows what forgetfulneſſe may poſſeſſe thee upon thy death-bed, and freeze thee there; God knows what rage, what diſtemper, what madneſſe may ſcatter thee then; And though in ſuch caſes, God reckon
B with his ſervants, according to that diſpoſition which they uſe to have towards him before, and not according to thoſe declinations from him, which they ſhew in ſuch diſtempered ſickneſſes, yet Gods mercy towards them can worke but ſo, that he returnes to thoſe times, when thoſe men did remember him before. But if God can finde no ſuch time, that they never remembred him, then he ſeales their former negligence with a preſent Lethargy; they neglected God all their lives, and now in death there is no remembrance of him, nor there is no remembrance in him; God ſhall forget him eternally; and when he thinkes he is come to his Conſummatum eſt, The bell tolls, and will ring out, and there is an end of all in death, by death he comes but to his Secula Seculorum, to the beginning of that miſery, which ſhall never end.

This then which we have ſpoken, ariſes out of that ſenſe of theſe words, which ſeems the moſt literall; that is, of a naturall death. But as it is well noted by divers Expoſitors upon this Pſalme, this whole Pfalme is intended of a ſpirituall agonie, and combat
C of David, wraſtling with the apprehenſion of hell, and of the indignation of God, even in this world, whilſt he was alive here. And therefore S. Auguſtine upon the laſt words of this verſe, in that Tranſlation which he followed, In inferno quis confitebitur tibi? Not, In the grave, but In hell, who ſhall confeſſe unto thee? puts himſelfe upon this, In Inferno Dives confeſſus Domino, & oravit pro fratribus, In hell Dives did confeſſe the name of the Lord, and prayed there for his brethren in the world. And therefore he underſtands not theſe words of a literall, and naturall, a bodily death, a departing out of this world; but he calls Peccatum Mortem, and then, Cæcitatem animæ Infernum; He makes the eaſineſſe of ſinning to be Death, and then, blindneſſe, and obduration, and remorſleſneſſe, and impenitence, to be this Hell. And ſo alſo doth S. Ierome underſtand all that paſſionate deploring of Hezekias, (which ſeems literally to be ſpoken of naturall death) of this
D ſpirituall death, of the habit of ſin, and that he conſidered, and lamented eſpecially his danger of that death, of a departing from God in this world, rather then of a departing out of this world. And truely many pieces and paſſages of Hezekias his lamentation there, will fall naturally enough into that ſpirituall interpretation; though perchance all will not, though S. Ierome with a holy purpoſe drive them, and draw them that way. But whether that of Hezekias be of naturall, or of a ſpirituall death, we have another Author ancienter then S. Auguſtine, and S. Ierome, and ſo much eſteemed by S. Ierome, as that he tranſlated ſome of his Works, which is Didymus of Alexandria, who ſayes, it is Impia opinio, not an inconvenient, or unnaturall, but an impious and irreligious opinion, to underſtand this verſe of naturall death; becauſe, ſayes he, The dead doe much more remember God then the living doe. And he makes uſe of that place, Deus non confunditur, God is not aſhamed to be called the God of the dead, for he hath prepared them a City. Heb. 11. 16. And E therefore reading theſe words of our Text, according to that Tranſlation which prevailed in the Eaſterne Church, which was the Septuagint, he argues thus, he collects thus, that all that David ſayes here, is onely this, Non eſt in morte qui memor eſt Dei, Not that he that is dead remembers not God, but that he that remembers God, is not dead; not in an irreparable, and irrecoverable ſtate of death; not under ſuch a burthen of ſin as devaſtates and exterminates the conſcience, and evacuates the whole power and work of grace, but that if he can remember God, confeſſe God, though he be falne under the hand of a ſpirituall death, by ſome ſin, yet he ſhall have his reſurrection in this life; for, Non eſt in morte, ſayes Didymus, He that remembers God, is not dead, in a perpetuall death.

And

And then this reaſon of Davids Prayer here, (Doe this and this, for in death there is no remembrance of thee) will have this force, That God would returne to him in his effectuall grace, That God would deliver his ſoule in dangerous tentations, That God would ſave him in applying to him, and imprinting in him a ſober, but yet confident aſſurance that the ſalvation of Chriſt Jeſus belongs to him; Becauſe if God did not return to him, but ſuffer him to wither in a long abſence, If God did not deliver him, by taking hold of him when he was ready to fall into ſuch ſins as his ſociableneſſe, his confidence, his inconſideration, his infirmity, his curioſity brought him to the brinke of, If God did not ſave him, by a faithfull aſſurance of ſalvation after a ſin committed and reſented, This abſence, this ſlipperineſſe, this pretermitting, might bring him to ſuch a deadly, and ſuch a helliſh ſtate in this world, as that In death, that is, In that death, he ſhould have no remembrance of God, In hell, In the grave, that is, In that hell, In that grave, he ſhould not confeſſe, nor praiſe God at all. There was his danger, he ſhould forget God utterly, and God forget him eternally, if God ſuffered him to proceed ſo far in ſin, that is, Death, and ſo far in an obduration and remorſleſneſſe, in ſin, that is, Hell, The Death and the Hell of this world, to which thoſe Fathers refer this Text. A B

In this lamentable ſtate, we will onely note the force, and the emphaſis of this Tui, and Tibi, in this verſe; no remembrance of Thee, no praiſe to Thee; For this is not ſpoken of God in generall, but of that God, to which David directs the laſt and principall part of his Prayer, which is, To ſave him; It is to God, as God is Jeſus, a Saviour; and the wretchedneſſe of this ſtate is, that God ſhall not be remembred in that notion, as he is Ieſus, a Saviour. No man is ſo ſwallowed up in the death of ſin, nor in the grave of impenitence, No man ſo dead, and buried in the cuſtome or ſenſeleſneſſe of ſin, but that he remembers a God, he confeſſes a God; If an Atheiſt ſweare the contrary, beleeve him not; His inward terrors, his midnight ſtartlings remember him of that, and bring him to confeſſions of that. But here is the depth, and deſperateneſſe of this death, and this grave, habituall ſin, and impenitence in ſin, that he cannot remember, he cannot confeſſe that God which ſhould ſave him, Chriſt Jeſus his Redeemer; he ſhall come, he ſhall not chuſe but come to remember a God that ſhall damne him, but not a ſaving God, a Ieſus. C

Beloved in the bowels of that Jeſus, not onely the riches, and honours, and pleaſures of this world, and the favour of Princes, are, as Iob ſpeaks, Oneroſi conſolatores, Miſerable comforters are they all, all this world, but even of God himſelfe (be it ſpoken with piety and reverence, and far from miſconſtruction) we may ſay, Oneroſa conſolatio, It is but a miſerable comfort which we can have in God himſelfe, It is but a faint remembrance which we retaine of God himſelfe, It is but a lame confeſſion which we make to God himſelfe, Si non Tui, Si non Tibi, If we remember not Thee, If we confeſſe not Thee, our onely Lord and Saviour Chriſt Ieſus. It is not halfe our worke to be godly men, to confeſſe a God in generall; we muſt be Chriſtians too; to confeſſe God ſo, as God hath manifeſted himſelfe to us. I, to whom God hath manifeſted himſelfe in the Chriſtian Church, am as much an Atheiſt, if I deny Chriſt, as if I deny God; And I deny Chriſt, as much, if I deny him in the truth of his Worſhip, in my Religion, as if I denyed him in his Perſon. And therefore, Si non Tui, Si non Tibi, If I doe not remember Thee, If I doe not profeſſe Thee in thy Truth, I am falne into this Death, and buried in this Grave which David deprecates in this Text, For in death there is no remembrance of thee, &c. D

SERM.

SERM. LIV.

Preached to the KING at White-hall, upon the occaſion of the Faſt, April 5. 1628.

PSAL. 6. 6, 7.

I am weary with my groaning; All the night make I my bed to ſwim, I water my couch with my teares.
Mine eye is conſumed becauſe of griefe; It waxeth old, becauſe of all mine enemies.

THis is Davids humiliation, and comming after his repentance and reconciliation, Davids penance: And yet here is no Faſt; It is true; No Faſt named; David had had experience, that as the wiſeſt actions of Kings, (of Kings as Kings over Subjects) ſo the devouteſt actions of Kings, (of Kings, as humble Subjects to the King of Kings, the God of Heaven) had been miſinterpreted. Of ſighing, and groaning, and weeping, and languiſhing, (as in this Text) David ſpeaks often, very, very often in the Pſalmes; and they let him ſigh, and groane, and weepe, and languiſh; they neglect his Paſſion, and are not affected with that; but that is all; they afflict him no farther: But when he comes to faſting, they deride him, they reproach him; Cares God whether you eat, or faſt? But thrice in all the Pſalmes does David ſpeake of his faſting, and in all three places, it was miſ-interpreted, and reproachfully miſ-interpreted; I humbled my ſoule with faſting, and my prayer returned into mine own boſome; He did this (as he ſayes there) for others, that needed it, and they would not thanke him for it, but reproached him. When I wept, and chaſtned my ſoule with faſting, that was to my reproach. So alſo my bones are weake through faſting, and I became a reproach unto them. And therefore no wonder that David does not ſo often mention and publiſh his faſting, as his other mortifications; No wonder that in all his ſeaven penetentiall Pſalmes, (which are the Churches Tropicks for mortification and humiliation,) there is no mention of his faſting. But for his practiſe, (though he ſpeak not ſo much of it in the Pſalmes) in his hiſtory where others, not himſelfe, ſpeake of him, we know that when he mourned, and prayed for his ſick childe, he faſted too. And we doubt not, but that, when he was thus wearied, (I am weary with my groaning; All the night make I my bed to ſwim, I water my Couch with my teares; Mine eye is conſumed becauſe of griefe; It waxeth old becauſe of all mine enemies) he faſted too; He faſted oftner, then he tells us of it. As S. Hierome ſayes, Ieiunium non perfecta virtus, ſed caterarum virtutum fundamentum, If we muſt not call faſting (as faſting is but a bodily abſtinence) a religious act, an act of Gods worſhip, yet it is a Baſis, and a foundation, upon which other religious acts, and acts of Gods worſhip are the better advanced. It is ſo at all times; but it is ſo eſpecially when it is enjoyned by Soveraigne authority, and upon manifeſt occaſion, as now to us. Semper virtutis Cibus Ieiunium fuit, It is elegantly, and uſefully ſaid: At all times, Religion feeds upon faſting, and feaſts upon faſting, and grows the ſtronger for faſting. But, Quod pium eſt agere non indictum, impium eſt negligere pradicatum, It is a godly thing to faſt uncommanded, but to neglect it being commanded, is an ungodly, an impious, a refractary perverſneſſe, ſayes the ſame Father. But then another carries it to a higher expreſſion, Deſperationis genus eſt, tunc manducare, cum abſtinere debeas, Not to faſt when the times require it, and when Authority enjoynes it, or not to beleeve, that God will be affected and moved with that faſting, and be the better enclined for it, is deſperationis genus, a deſpairing of the State, a deſpairing of the Church, a deſpairing of the grace of God to both, or of his mercy upon both. And truly there cannot be a more diſloyall affection then that, deſperare rem publicam, to foreſpeak great Councels, to bewitch great actions, to deſpaire of good ends in things well intended: And in our diſtreſſes,

Pſal. 35. 13.
Pſal. 69. 10.
Pſal. 109. 24.
2 Sam. 2. 15.
Hieron.
Leo.
Idem.
Maximus de jejunio Ninevitarum.

ſes, where can we hope, but in God? and how ſhall we have acceſſe to God, but in humiliation? We doubt not therefore but that this act of humiliation, his faſting was ſpread over Davids other acts in this Text, and that as a ſinner in his private perſon, and as a King in his publique and exemplar office, he faſted alſo, (though he ſayes not ſo) when he ſaid he was wearied, I am weary with my groaning; all the night make I my bed to ſwim, I water my couch with my teares; mine eye is conſumed becauſe of griefe; It waxeth old becauſe of all mine enemies. A

But though this faſting, and theſe other penall acts of humiliation, be the body that carries, and declares, yet the ſoule that inanimates, and quickens all, is prayer; and therefore this whole Pſalme is a prayer; And the prayer is partly Deprecatory, In ſome things David deſires that God would forbeare him, as v. 1. Correct me not, for if thou correct me, others will trample upon me; Rebuke me not, for if thou rebuke me, others will calumniate me; And partly Poſtulatory, that ſome things God would give him, as Health, and Deliverance, and that which is all, Salvation, in the other verſes. Both parts of the prayer are (as all prayer muſt be) grounded upon reaſons; and the reaſons are from divers rootes; ſome from the conſideration of himſelfe, and they argue his humiliation; ſome from the contemplation of God, and they teſtifie his devotion, and preſent recourſe to him; ſome from both together, God, and himſelfe joyntly, which is an acknowledgement, that God works not alone in heaven, nor man lives not alone upon earth, but there is a Converſation, and a Correſpondence, and a Commerce betweene God and Man, and Conditions, and Contracts, and Covenants, and Stipulations betweene them, and ſo a mutuall intereſt in one another. From God himſelfe alone, David raiſes a reaſon, v. 4. Propter miſericordiam, O ſave me for thy mercies ſake; for of the mercy of God, there is no precedent, there is no concurrent reaſon, there is no reaſon of the mercy of God, but the mercy of God: from God, and himſelf together, he raiſes a reaſon, v. 5. Quia non in morte, For in death there is no remembrance of thee; Deſtroy me not, for if I die, Quid facies magno nomini tuo? (as Ioſhuah ſpeaks) what will become of thy glory? of that glory which thou ſhouldeſt receive from my ſervice in this world, if thou take me out of this world? But then, as he begun in reaſons ariſing from himſelf, and out of the ſenſe of his owne humiliation under the hand of God, (for ſo hee does) v. 2. Quia infirmus, Have mercy upon me, becauſe I am weake, and cannot ſubſiſt without that mercy. And Quia turbata oſſa, his bones were vexed; Habet anima oſſa ſua, ſayes S. Baſil, The ſoule hath bones as well as the body; The bones of the ſoule are the ſtrongeſt faculties, and beſt operations of the ſoule, and his beſt, and ſtrongeſt actions, were but queſtionable actions, diſputable, and ſuſpitious actions; And Turbata anima, all his faculties, even in their very roote, his very ſoul, was ſore vexed, v. 3. As, I ſay, hee began with reaſons of that kinde, ariſing from himſelfe, ſo he returnes and ends with the ſame humiliation, in the reaſons ariſing from himſelfe too, Quia laboravi in gemitu, I am weary with my groaning, all the night make I my bed to ſwimme, &c. B C D

John 20. 28. As our Saviour Chriſt entred into the houſe to his Diſciples, Ianuis clauſis, when the doores were ſhut: ſo God enters into us too, Ianuis clauſis, when our eyes have not opened their doores, in any reall penitent teares, when our mouthes have not opened their doores, in any verball prayers; God ſees, and he heares the inclinations of the heart. John 11. S. Bernard notes well upon thoſe words of Chriſt, at the raiſing of Lazarus, Father I thank thee, that thou haſt heard me, That at that time, when Chriſt gave thanks to God, for having heard him, he had ſaid nothing to his Father; but God had heard his heart. Since God does ſo even to us, he will much more heare us, as David, when we make outward declarations too, becauſe that outward declaration conduces more to his glory, in the edification of his ſervants, therefore David comes to that declaratory proteſtation, Quia laboravi in gemitu, I am weary with my groaning, &c. E

Diviſio. In which words, we ſhall conſider, Quid factum, and Quid faciendum, What David did, and what we are to doe: for David, after he had thrown himſelfe upon the mercy of God, after he had confeſſed, and prayed, and done the ſpirituall parts of repentance, he afflicts his body beſides; And ſo ought we likewiſe to doe, if we will be partakers of Davids example. And therefore we may doe well to conſider Quid faciendum, How this Example of David bindes us, how theſe groanings and waterings of his bed with teares, and other Mortifications aſſumed after repentance, and reconciliation to God, lay an obligation upon us.

But

A But this is our part, Quid faciendum, what is to be done by us; First, Quid factum, what David did; and truly he did much: first gemuit, he came to groane, to sigh, to outward declarations of inward heavinesse. And Laboravit in gemitu, He laboured, he travelled in that passion, and (as the word imports, and as our later Translation hath it) he was wearied, tired with it; so farre, that (as it is in the first Translation) he fainted, he languished with it. First he sighed, and sighed so; and groaned, and groaned so; passionately, vehemently, and then openly, exemplarily; and he was not ashamed of it, for he came to weeping, though he knew it would be thought childish: And that in that abundance, Natare feci, and Liquefeci lectum, He watred his bed, dissolved his bed, made his bed to swimme, surrounded his bed with teares; And more, he macerated his bed with that brine: And then he continued this affliction; It was not a sudden passion, a flash of remorse; but he continued it, till his eye was consumed by reason of that anguish, and despite, and indignation; as our diverse Translations vary the expressing thereof; so long, as
B night and day lasted, so long, as that he was waxen old under it; and when this great affliction should have brought him safely into harbour, that he might have rested securely at last, his enemies that triumphed over him, gave him new occasions of miserie, his eyes were consumed, and waxed old because of his enemies; that is, because he was still amongst enemies that triumphed over him.

Be pleased to take another Edition, another Impression of these particulars; A naturall mans Morall constancy will hold out against outward declarations of griefe; yet David came to that, he groaned: A groane, a sigh may breake out, and the heart be at the more ease for that; But Laboravit, they grew upon him, and the more he groaned, and the more he sighed, the more he had an inclination, and not onely that, but cause to doe so, for he found that his sorrow was to be sorrowed for, and his repentance to be re-
C pented, there were such imperfections in all. Therefore he suffered thus till he was wearied, till he fainted with groaning, and sighing. And then this winde does not blow over the raine, he weeps; and weeps the more violently, and the more continually, extreames that seldome meet, violence, and lasting, but in his case they did. All this, all night, and all this, all this while, not amongst friends to pity him, and condole with him, but amongst enemies to affront him, and deride him: So that here are all the ingredients, all the elements of misery; Sorrow of heart, that admits no disguise, but flowes into outward declarations; and such declarations as create no compassion, but triumph in the enemy. I am weary with my groaning, &c.

To proceed then to the particulars in our first Part, Quid factum, What David did, 1 Part. Gemit.
first Gemit, He comes to sigh, to groane, to an outward declaration of a sense of Gods Lament.
D indignation upon him, till he had perfected his repentance. She sighed, and turned back-ward, was Jerusalems misery. To sigh, and turne backward, to repent, and relapse, is a wofull Condition: But to sigh, and turne forward, to turne upon God, and to pursue this sorrow for our sins, then, in such sighes, The Spirit of man returnes to God that gave it; Eccles. 12. 7.
As God breathed into man, so man breathes unto the nostrils of God a savour of rest, as it is said of Noah, an acceptable sacrifice, when he sighes for his sins. This sighing, this groaning, expressed in this word, Anach, Gemitus, is Vox Turturis. Turtur gemit; It is that voyce, that sound which the Turtle gives; And we learne by Authors of Naturall Plin. li. 18. c. 28.
Story, and by experience, Turturis gemitus indicium veris, The voyce of the Turtle is an evidence of the Spring; When a sinner comes to this voyce, to this sighing, there is a Spring of grace begun in him; Then Vox Turturis audita in terra nostra, sayes Christ to Can. 2. 12.
his Spouse, The voyce of the Turtle is heard in our Land; And so he sayes to thy soule, This E voyce of the Turtle, these sighs of thy penitent soul, are heard in terra nostra, in our Land, in the Kingdome of heaven.

And when he heares this voyce of this Turtle, these sighs of thy soule, then he puts thy name also into that List, which he gave to his Messenger, (in which Commission this very word of our Text, Anach, is used) Signabis signum super frontibus virorum Ezek. 9. 4.
suspirantium & gementium, Upon all their fore-heads, that sigh and groane, imprint my mark; Which is ordinarily conceived by the Ancients to have been the letter Tau; of which though Calvin assigne a usefull, and a convenient reason, that they were marked with this letter Tau, which is the last letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, in signe, that though they were in estimation of the world, the most abject, and the out-casts thereof, yet God set his mark upon them, with a purpose to raise them; yet S. Hierome, and the An- Hieron.
cients

cients for the moſt part aſſigne that for the reaſon, why they were marked with that letter, becauſe that letter had the forme of the Croſſe; Not for any ſuch uſe, or power, as the Roman Church hath aſcribed to that ſign, but as in the Perſecutions of the Primitive Church, the Martyrs at the ſtake, when a cry was raiſed, that they dyed for Treaſon, for Rebellion, for Sedition, and could not be heard, for the clamour, to cleare themſelves, uſed then in the ſight of all, who, though they could not heare them, could ſee them, to ſigne themſelves with the Croſſe, not to drive away devils, or to ſtrengthen themſelves againſt tentations by that ſigne, but by that ſigne to declare the cauſe of their death to be the profeſſion of the Chriſtian Religion, and not Treaſon, not Sedition. And as we in our Baptiſme have that Croſſe imprinted upon us, not as a part of the Sacrament, or any piece of that armour, which we put on of ſpirituall ſtrength, but as a proteſtation, whoſe Souldiers wee became: ſo God imprinted upon them, that ſighed, and mourned, that Tau, that letter, which had the forme of the Croſſe, that it might be an evidence, that all their croſſes ſhall be ſwallowed in his Croſſe, their ſighs in his ſighs, and their agonies in his. And therefore, Beloved, theſe ſighs are too ſpirituall a ſubſtance, to be beſtowed upon worldly matters; All the love, all the ambitions, all the loſſes of this world, are not worth a ſigh; If they were, yet thou haſt none to ſpare, for all thy ſighs are due to thy ſins; beſtow them there.

Laboravit. Gemit, he ſighs, he groanes; And then, Laboravit in gemitu, he laboured, he travailed, he grew weary, he fainted with ſighing. Not to be curious, we meet with a threefold Labour in Scriptures. Firſt there is Labor communis, the Labour which no man may avoid; Iob 5.7. Man is borne unto travaile, as the ſparks fly upward; Where wee may note in the Compariſon, that it is not a dejection, a diminution, a depreſſing downward, but a flying upward, the true exaltation of a Man, that he labours duly in a lawfull calling; and this is Labor communis; Secondly there is Labor impii, The labour of the wicked, for, They have taught their tongues to ſpeake lyes, ſayes David, and take great paines to deale wickedly; 15.20. As it is alſo in Iob, The wicked man travaileth with paine all his dayes, And (as our former Tranſlation had it) he is continually as one travailing with Child; Indeed the labour is greater, to doe ill, then well; to get hell, then Heaven; Heaven might be had with leſſe paines, then men doe beſtow upon hell; and this is Labor impiorum. And laſtly, there is Labor juſtorum, The labour of the Righteous, which is, To riſe early, to lie downe late, and to eate the bread of ſorrow; for, though in that place, this ſeemes to be ſaid to bee Pſal. 127.2. done in vaine, It is in vaine to riſe early, in vaine to lye downe late, in vaine to eate the bread of ſorrow, yet it is with the ſame exception, which is there ſpecified, that is, Except the Lord build, it is in vaine to labour, Except the Lord keepe the City, it is in vaine to watch; So except the Lord give reſt to his beloved, it is in vaine to riſe early: In vaine to travaile, except God give a bleſſing. But when the Lord hath given thee reſt, in the remiſſion of thy ſins, then comes this Labor juſtorum, the labour that a righteous man is bound to, that as God hath given him a good nights reſt, ſo he gives God a good dayes worke, as God hath given him reſt and peace of conſcience, for that which is paſt, ſo hee take ſome paines for that which is to come, for ſuch was Davids caſe, and Davids care, and Davids labour.

Ephrem, an ancient Deacon, and Expoſitor in the Chriſtian Church, takes this labour of David, Laboravi in gemitu, to have beene in gemitu, but in comprimendo gemitu, that he laboured to conceale his penance and mortification, from the ſight and knowledge of others; Beloved, this concealing of thoſe things, which we put our ſelves to in the waies of godlineſſe, hath alwaies a good uſe, when it is done, to avoid oſtentation, and vaine glory, and praiſe of men; And it hath otherwiſe, ſometimes a good uſe, to conceale our tribulations and miſeries from others, becauſe the wicked often take occaſion, from the calamities and preſſures of the godly, to inſult and triumph over them, and to diſhonour and blaſpheme their God, and to ſay, Where is now your God? and therefore it may ſometimes concerne us to labour to hide our miſeries, to ſwallow our owne ſpittle, as Iob ſpeaks, and to ſpunge up our teares in our braines, and to eate, and ſmother our ſighs in our own boſomes. But this was not Davids caſe now; But as he had opened himſelfe to God, he opened himſelfe to the world too; and as he ſayes in another place, Come and I will tell you, what God hath done for my ſoule, So here he ſayes, Come, and I will tell you, what I have done againſt my God. So he ſighed, and ſo he groaned; he laboured, he was affected bitterly with it himſelfe; And he declared it, he made it exemplar, and catechiſti-call,

call, that his dejection in himſelfe, might be an exaltation to others; And then hee was not aſhamed of it, but as he ſaid of his dancing before the Arke, If this be to be vile, I will be more vile, So here, if this paſſion be weakneſſe, I will yet be more weake; for this winde brought raine, Theſe ſighs brought teares, All the night make I my bed to ſwim, &c.

The concupiſcencies of man, are naturally dry powder, combuſtible eaſily, eaſily apt to take fire; but teares dampe them, and give them a little more leaſure, and us intermiſſion and conſideration. David had laboured hard; firſt Ad ruborem, as Phyſitians adviſe, to a redneſſe, to a bluſhing, to a ſhame of his ſin; And now Ad ſudorem, he had laboured to a ſweat: for Lacryma ſudor animæ mœrentis, Teares are the ſweat of a labouring ſoule, and that ſoule that labours as David did, will ſweat, as David did, in the teares of contrition; Till then, till teares breake out, and find a vent in outward declaration, wee pant and ſtruggle in miſerable convulſions, and diſtortions, and diſtractions, and earthquakes, and irreſolutions of the ſoule; I can beleeve, that God will have mercy upon me, if I repent, but I cannot beleeve that is repentance, if I cannot weepe, or come to outward declarations. This is the laborious irreſolution of the ſoule; But Lacryma diluvium, & evehunt animam, Theſe teares carry up our ſoule, as the flood carried up the Arke, higher then any hils; whether hils of power, and ſo above the oppreſſion of potent adverſaries, or hils of our owne pride, and ambition; True holy teares carry us above all. And therefore, when the Angel rebuked the people, for not deſtroying Idolatry, They wept, ſayes the text, there was their preſent remedy; and they called the name of the place Bochim, Teares, that there might be a permanent teſtimony of that expreſſing of their repentance; that that way they went to God, and in that way God received them; and that their Children might ſay to one another, Where did God ſhew that great mercy to our Fathers? Here; here, in Bochim, that is, Here in teares. And ſo when at Samuels motions, and increpation, the people would teſtifie their repentance, They drew water, ſayes the ſtory, and poured it out before the Lord, and faſted, and ſaid, We have ſinned againſt the Lord. They poured water, Vt eſſet ſymbolum lacrymarum, That that might be a type, and figure, in what proportion of teares, they deſired to expreſſe their repentance. For, ſuch an effuſion of teares, David may be well thought to intend, when he ſayes, Effundite coram Deo animam veſtram, Poure out your ſoules before God, poure them out in ſuch an effuſion, in a continuall, and a contrite weeping. Still the Prophets cry out upon Idols and Idolaters, Vlulate Sculptilia; Howle ye Idols, and Howle ye Idolaters; He hath no hope of their weeping. And ſo the devil, and the damned are ſaid to howle, but not to weepe; or when they are ſaid to weepe, it is with a gnaſhing of teeth, which is a voyce of Indignation, even towards God, and not of humiliation under his hand: So alſo ſayes the Prophet of an impenitent ſinner, Indurata ſuper petram facies, They have made their faces harder then ſtone; wherein? Thou haſt ſtricken them, but they have not wept; not ſorrowed. Out of a ſtone water cannot be drawne, but by miracle, though it be twice ſtricken; as Moſes ſtroke the Rock twice, yet the water came by the miraculous power of God, and not by Moſes ſecond ſtroke. Though God ſtrike this ſinner twice, thrice, he will not weepe: though inward terrors ſtrike his conſcience, and outward diſeaſes ſtrike his body, and calamities and ruine ſtrike his eſtate, yet he will not confeſſe by one teare, that theſe are judgements of God, but naturall accidents; or if judgements, that they proceeded not from his ſin, but from ſome decree in God, or ſome purpoſe in God, to glorifie himſelfe, by thus afflicting him, and that if he had beene better, he ſhould have fared never the better, for Gods purpoſe muſt ſtand. Therefore ſayes God of ſuch in that place, Surely they are poore, that was plaine enough, and they are fooliſh too, ſayes God there: And God gives the reaſon of it, for they know not the judgements of God; They know not his judgements to be judgements; They aſcribe all calamities to other cauſes, and ſo they turne upon other wayes, and other plots, and other miſerable comforters. But attribute all to the Lord; never ſay of any thing, This fals upon me, but of all, This is laid upon me by the hand of God, and thou wilt come to him in teares. Raine water is better then River water; The water of Heaven, teares for offending thy God, are better then teares for worldly loſſes; But yet come to teares of any kinde, and whatſoever occaſion thy teares, Deus abſterget omnem lacrymam, there is the largeneſſe of his bounty, He will wipe all teares from thine eyes; But thou muſt have teares firſt: firſt thou muſt come to this weeping, or elſe God cannot come to this wiping; God hath not that errand to thee, to wipe teares from thine

Lacryma.

Hilar:

Nazian.

Iudg. 2. 5.

1 Sam. 7. 6.

Nah. Oziel.

Ier. 5. 3.

Numb. 20. 11.

Eſay 25. 8.

thine eyes, if there be none there; If thou doe nothing for thy ſelfe, God finds nothing to doe for thee. A

Nocte. David wept thus, thus vehemently, and he wept thus, thus continually; In the Night, Pſal. 42. 3. ſayes our Text; Not that he wept not in the day: He ſayes of himſelfe, My teares have been my meate, both day and night, where though he name no faſt, you ſee his diet, how Lament. 1. 2. that was attenuated. And ſo when it is ſaid of Jeruſalem, Shee weepeth continually in the night, it is not that ſhe put off her weeping till night, but that ſhe continued her dayes weeping to the night, and in the night: Plorando plorabit, ſayes the Originall in that place; ſhee does weepe already, and ſhee will weepe ſtill; ſhee puts it not off dilatorily, (I will weepe, but not yet) nor ſhee puts it not over eaſily, ſuddenly, (I have wept, and I needs Joel 1. 23. no more) but as God promiſes to his children, the firſt and later raine, ſo muſt his children give to him againe both raines, teares of the day, and teares of the night, by waſhing the ſinnes of the day in the evening, and the ſinnes of the night in the morning. But B this was an addition to Davids affliction in this night weeping, that whereas the night was made for man to reſt in, David could not make that uſe of the night. When he had Pſal. 4. ult. propoſed ſo great a part of his happineſſe to conſiſt in this, That he would lay him downe and ſleepe in peace; we ſee in the next Pſalme but one, he that thought to ſleepe out the night, come to weepe out the night. When the Saints of God have that ſecurity, which S. Hierome ſpeaks of, Vt ſanctis ipſe ſomnus ſit oratio, They ſleepe ſecurely, for their very ſleepe is a glorifying of God, who giveth his beloved ſleepe, yet David could have none
Euſeb. of this. But why not he? Noctem letiferam nocte compenſat; Firſt, for the place, the ſinne came in at thoſe windowes, at his eyes, and came in, in fire, in luſt, And it muſt goe out at thoſe windowes too, and goe out in water, in the water of repentant teares; And then, for the time, as the night defiled his ſoule, ſo the ſinne muſt be expiated, and the ſoule waſhed in the night too. C

And this may be ſome Embleme, ſome uſefull intimation, how haſtily Repentance follows ſinne; Davids ſinne is placed, but in the beginning of the night, in the Evening, (In the evening he roſe, and walked upon the Teraſe, and ſaw Bathſheba) and in the next part of time, in the night, he falls a weeping: no more between the ſweetneſſe of ſinne, and the bitterneſſe of repentance, then between evening, and night; no morning to either of them, till the Sunne of grace ariſe, and ſhine out, and proceed to a Meridionall height, and make the repentance upon circumſtance, to be a repentance upon the ſubſtance, and bring it to be a repentance for the ſinne it ſelfe, which at firſt was but a repentance upon ſome calamity, that that ſinne induced.

Omni nocte. He wept then, and wept in the night; in a time, when he could neither receive reſt in himſelfe, which all men had, nor receive praiſe from others, which all men affect. And he wept Omni nocte; which is not onely Omnibus noctibus, ſometime every night, but it D is Tota nocte, cleane through the night; And he wept in that abundance, as hath put the Holy Ghoſt to that Hyperbole in Davids pen to expreſſe it, Liquefecit ſtratum, natare fecit ſtratum, it drowned his bed, ſurrounded his bed, it diſſolved, it macerated, it melted Hieron. his bed with that brine. Well; Qui rigat ſtratum, he that waſhes his bed ſo with repentant teares, Non poteſt in cogitationem ejus libidinum pompa ſubrepere: Tentations take hold of us ſometimes after our teares, after our repentance, but ſeldome or never in the act of our repentance, and in the very ſhedding of our teares; At leaſt Libidinum pompa, The victory, the triumph of luſt breaks not in upon us, in a bed, ſo diſſolved, ſo ſurrounded, ſo macerated with ſuch teares. Thy bed is a figure of thy grave; Such as thy grave receives thee at death, it ſhall deliver thee up to Judgement at laſt; Such as thy bed receives thee at night, it ſhall deliver thee in the morning: If thou ſleepe without calling thy ſelfe to an account, thou wilt wake ſo, and walke ſo, and proceed ſo, without ever E calling thy ſelfe to an account, till Chriſt Jeſus call thee in the Clouds. It is not intended, that thou ſhouldeſt afflict thy ſelfe ſo grievouſly, as ſome over-doing Penitents, to put chips, and ſhels, and ſplints, and flints, and nayles, and rowels of ſpurres in thy bed, to wound and macerate thy body ſo. The inventions of men, are not intended here; But here is a precept of God, implied in this precedent and practiſe of David, That as long as the ſenſe of a former ſinne, or the inclination to a future oppreſſes thee, thou muſt not cloſe thine eyes, thou muſt not take thy reſt, till, as God married thy body and ſoule together in the Creation, and ſhall at laſt crowne thy body and ſoule together in the Reſurrection, ſo they may alſo reſt together here, that as thy body reſts in thy bed, thy ſoule

A ſoule may reſt in the peace of thy Conſcience, and that thou never ſay to thy head, Reſt upon this pillow, till thou canſt ſay to thy ſoule, Reſt in this repentance, in this peace.

Now as this ſorrow of Davids continued day and night, (in the day for the better edification of men, and in the night for his better capitulation with God) ſo there is a farther continuation thereof without any wearineſſe, expreſſed in the next clauſe, Turbatus à furore oculus meus, as the Vulgat reads it, and Mine eye is dimmed, for deſpight or indignation, as our former, or as this laſt Tranſlation hath it, Mine eye is conſumed becauſe of griefe; and to ſpeake neereſt to the Originall, Eroſus eſt oculus, Mine eye is eaten out with Indignation. A word or two ſhall be inough of each of theſe words, theſe three Termes, What the eye, which is the ſubject, what this conſuming, or dimming, which is the effect, and what this Griefe, or Indignation, which is the affection, imports and offers to our application. Firſt, Oculus, the Eye, is ordinarily taken in the Scriptures, Pro aſpectu, for the B whole face, the looks, the countenance, the ayre of a man; and this ayre, and looks, and countenance, declares the whole habitude, and conſtitution of the man; As he looks, ſo he is: So that the Eye here, is the whole perſon; and ſo this griefe had wrought upon the whole frame and conſtitution of David, and decayed that; though he place it in the eye, yet it had growne over all the body. Since thou waſt not able to ſay to thy ſinne, The ſinne ſhall come to mine eyes, but no farther, I will looke, but not luſt, I will ſee, but not covet, thou muſt not ſay, My repentance ſhall come to mine eyes, and no farther, I will ſhed a few teares, and no more; but (with this Prophet David, and with the Apoſtle S. Paul) thou muſt beat downe thy body to that particular purpoſe, and in that proportion, as thou findeſt the rebellions thereof to require: Thou couldeſt not ſtop the ſin at thine eyes; ſtop not thy repentance there neither, but purſue it in wholeſome mortification, through all thoſe parts, in which the ſinne hath advanced his dominion over thee; and C that is our uſe of the firſt word, the Eye, the whole frame.

Oculus.

For the ſecond word, which in our Tranſlations, is, in one dimmed, in the other conſumed, and in the Vulgat troubled, a great Maſter in the Originall, renders it well, elegantly, and naturally out of the Originall, Verminavit, Tineavit, which is ſuch a deformitie, as wormes make in wood, or in books; If Davids ſorrow for his ſinnes brought him to this deformitie, what ſorrow doe they owe to their ſinnes, who being come to a deformitie by their own licentiouſneſſe, and intemperance, diſguiſe all that by unnaturall helpes, to the drawing in of others, and the continuation of their former ſinnes? The ſinne it ſelfe was the Devils act in thee; But in the deformity and debility, though it follow upon the ſinne, God hath a hand; And they that ſmother and ſuppreſſe theſe by paintings, and pamperings, unnaturall helps to unlawfull ends, doe not deliver themſelves of the plague, but they hide the marks, and infect others, and wraſtle againſt Gods notifi- D cations of their former ſinnes.

Turbatus. Reuchlin.

And then the laſt of theſe three words, which is here rendred Griefe, does properly ſignifie, Indignation, and Anger: And therefore S. Auguſtine upon this place, puts himſelfe to that queſtion, If Davids conſtitution be ſhaken, if his complexion and countenance be decayed, and withered, Præ indignatione, for Indignation, for Anger, from whom proceeds this Indignation, and this Anger? ſayes that bleſſed Father. If it proceede from God, ſayes he, it is well that he is but Turbatus, and not Extinctus, that he is but troubled, and not diſtracted, but ſhaken, and not overthrowne; but overthrowne, and not ground to powder, not trodden as flat as durt in the ſtreets, as the Prophet ſpeaks. For David himſelfe had told us but a few Pſalmes before, That when the Sonne is angry, (and when we ſpeake of the Sonne, we intend a perſon more ſenſible, and ſo more compaſſionate of our miſeries, then when we ſpeake of God, of God conſidered E in the height of his Majeſty) and but a little angry, (which amounts not to this provocation of God, which David had falne into here) we may periſh; and periſh in the way; periſh in a halfe repentance, before we perfect our Reconciliation: In the way ſo, before we come to our end; or in the way, in theſe outward actions of repentance, if they be hypocritically, or occaſionally, or faſhionally, or perfunctorily performed, and not with a right heart towards God. Though this be the way, we may periſh in the way.

Indignatio.

Pſal. 2. ult.

Now Aquinas places this fury (as the Vulgat calls it, this indignation) in Abſolom, and not in David; He takes Davids ſorrow to riſe out of his ſons rebellion, and furious proſecution thereof; That David was thus vehemently affected for the fault of another: And truly it is a holy tenderneſſe, and an exemplar diſpoſition to be ſo ſenſible, and compaſſionate for the ſins of other men; Though Abſolom could not have hurt David, David would have grieved for his unnaturall attempt to doe it. So in Aquinas ſenſe, it is Excandeſcentia pro inimicis, a ſorrow for his enemies; Not for his owne danger from them, but for their ſin in themſelves; But Gregory Nyſſen takes it, de excandeſcentia in inimicos, for an indignation againſt his enemies: And that David ſpeaks this by way of confeſſion, and accuſation of himſelfe, as of a fault, that he was too ſoone tranſported to an impatience, and indignation againſt them, though enemies; And taking that ſenſe, we ſee, how quickly even the Saints of God put themſelves beyond the hability of making that Petition ſincerely, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſſe againſt us; How hard it is even for a good man to forgive an enemy; And how hard it is, Nihil in peccatore odiſſe niſi peccatum, to ſever the ſin from the ſinner, and to hate the fault, and not the man. A Hug.

But leaving Thomas and Gregory, Aquinas and Nyſſen to that Expoſition, in which (I think) they are ſingularly ſingular, either that this ſorrow in David was a charitable and compaſſionate ſenſe of others faults, which is Aquinas way, or that it was a confeſſion of uncharitableneſſe in himſelf towards others, which is Gregories way, the whole ſtream (for the moſt part) of ancient Expoſitors divide themſelves into theſe two channels; Either that this indignation conceived by David, which withered and decayed him, was a holy ſcorn and indignation againſt his owne ſins, that ſuch wretched things as thoſe ſhould ſeparate him from his God, and from his inheritance, according to that chaine of Affections which the Apoſtle makes, That godly ſorrow brings a ſinner to a care; He is no longer careleſſe, negligent of his wayes; and that care to a clearing of himſelfe, not to cleare himſelfe by way of excuſe, or diſguiſe, but to cleare himſelfe by way of phyſick, by humble confeſſion; and then that clearing brings him to an indignation, to a kind of holy ſcorne, and wonder, how that tentation could worke ſo; Such an affection as we conceive to have been in the Spouſe, when ſhe ſaid, Lavi pedes, I have waſhed my feet, how ſhall I defile them? I have emptied my ſoul by Confeſſion, is it poſſible I ſhould charge it with new tranſgreſſions? Or elſe they place this affection, this indignation in God; And then they ſay, it was an apprehenſion of the anger of God, to be expreſſed upon him in the day of Judgement; And againſt this Vermination, (as the Originall denotes) againſt this gnawing of the worme, that may bore through, and ſink the ſtrongeſt veſſell that ſailes in the ſeas of this world, there is no other varniſh, no other liniment, no other medicament, no other pitch nor roſin againſt this worme, but the bloud of Chriſt Jeſus: And therefore whenſoever this worme, this apprehenſion of Gods future indignation, reſerved for the Judgement, bites upon thee, be ſure to preſent to it the bloud of thy Saviour: Never conſider the judgement of God for ſin alone, but in the company of the mercies of Chriſt. It is but the hiſſing of the Serpent, and the whiſpering of Satan, when he ſurpriſes thee in a melancholy midnight of dejection of ſpirit, and layes thy ſins before thee then; Looke not upon thy ſins ſo inſeparably, that thou canſt not ſee Chriſt too: Come not to a confeſſion to God, without conſideration of the promiſes of his Goſpel; Even the ſenſe and remorſe of ſin is a dangerous conſideration, but when the cup of ſalvation ſtands by me, to keep me from fainting. David himſelfe could not get off when he would; but (as he complaines there, which is the laſt act of his ſorrow to be conſidered in this, which is all his part, and all our firſt part) Inveteravit, He waxed old becauſe of all his enemies. B C D

2 Cor. 7.

Inveteravit.

The difference is not of much importance, whether it be Inveteravi, or Inveteravit; in the firſt, or in the third perſon. Whether Davids eyes, or David himſelfe be thus decayed, and waxen old, imports little. But yet that which Bellarmine collects, upon this difference, imports much. For, becauſe the Vulgat Edition, and the Septuagint, (ſuch a Septuagint as we have now) reade this in the firſt perſon of David himſelfe, Inveteravi, and the Hebrew hath it in the third, Inveteravit, Bellarmine will needs think, that the Hebrew, the Originall, is falſified and corrupted; ſtill in advancement of that dangerous Poſition of theirs, That their Tranſlation is to be preferred before the Originall; and that is an unſufferable tyrannie, and an Idolatrous ſervility. The Tranſlation is a reverend Tranſlation; A Tranſlation to which the Church of God owes much; but gold will make an Idol as well as wood, and to make any Tranſlation equall, or better then the Originall, is an Idolatrous ſervility. It is true, that that which is ſaid here in the third perſon, implyes the firſt; And it is David, that after his ſighing, and fainting with that, E

After

A After his weeping, and diſſolving with that, After his conſuming, and withering with that, foreſees no reſcue, no eſcape, Inveteravit, he waxes old amongſt his enemies. Who were his enemies, and what was this age that he ſpeaks of? It is of beſt uſe to purſue the ſpirituall ſenſe of this Pſalme, and ſo his enemies were his ſins; And David found that he had not got the victory over any one enemy, any one ſin; Anothers bloud did not extinguiſh the luſtfull heat of his owne, nor the murther of the husband, the adultery with the wife: Change of ſin is not an overcomming of ſin; He that paſſes from ſin to ſin, without repentance, (which was Davids caſe for a time) ſtill leaves an enemy behind him; and though he have no preſent aſſault from his former enemie, no tentation to any act of his former ſin, yet he is ſtill in the midſt of his enemies; under condemnation of his paſt, as well as of his preſent ſins; as unworthy a receiver of the Sacrament, for the ſins of his youth done forty yeares agoe, if thoſe ſins were never repented, though ſo long B B diſcontinued, as for his ambition, or covetouſneſſe, or indevotion of this preſent day. Theſe are his enemies; and then this is the age that growes upon him, the age that David complaines of, I am waxen old; that is, growne into habits of theſe ſins. There is an old age of our naturall condition, We ſhall waxe old as doth a garment; David would not Pſal. 102.26.
complaine of that which all men deſire; To wiſh to be old, and then grudge to be old, when we are come to it, cannot conſiſt with morall conſtancy. There is an old age expreſſed in that phraſe, The old man, which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, which is that naturall corruption and diſpoſition to ſin, caſt upon us by Adam; But that old man was crucified Rom. 6.6.
in Chriſt, ſayes the Apoſtle; and was not ſo onely from that time when Chriſt was actually crucified, one thouſand ſix hundred yeares agoe, but from that time that a ſecond Adam was promiſed to the firſt, in Paradiſe; And ſo that Lambe ſlaine from the beginning of the world, from the beginning delivered all them, to whom the means ordained C C by God, (as Circumciſion to them, Baptiſme to us) were afforded; and in that reſpect, David was not under that old age, but was become a new creature. Nor as the Law was called the old Law, which is another age alſo; for to them who underſtood that Law aright, the New Law, the Goſpel, was enwrapped in the Old; And ſo David as well as we, might be ſaid to ſerve God in the newneſſe of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſſe of the Letter; Rom. 7.6.
ſo that this was not the age that oppreſt him.

The Age that oppreſſes the ſinner, is that when he is growne old in ſin, he is growne weak in ſtrength, and become leſſe able to overcome that ſin then, then he was at beginning. Blindneſſe contracted by Age, doth not deliver him from objects of tentations; He ſees them, though he be blind; Deafneſſe doth not deliver him from diſcourſes of tentation; he heares them, though he be deafe: Nor lameneſſe doth not deliver him from purſuit of tentation; for in his owne memory he ſees, and heares, and purſues all we would let them goe, they would goe; and whether we will or no, they leave us for the ability of practiſe; But Theſaurizamus, we treaſure them up in our memories, and Rom. 2.5.
D D his former ſinfull pleaſures, and every night, every houre ſins over all the ſins of many yeares that are paſſed. That which waxeth old, is ready to vaniſh, ſayes the Apoſtle: If Heb. 8.13.
we treaſure up the wrath of God with them, againſt the day of wrath; And whereas one calling of our ſins to our memories by way of confeſſion, would doe us good, and ſerve our turnes, this often calling them in a ſinfull delight, in the memory of them, exceeds the ſin it ſelfe, when it was committed, becauſe it is more unnaturall now, then it Ezek. 23.19.
was then, and fruſtrates the pardon of that ſin, when it was repented. To end this branch, and this part, So humble was this holy Prophet, and ſo apprehenſive of his own debility, and ſo far from an imaginary infallibility of falling no more, as that after all his agonies, and exerciſes, and mortifications, and prayer, and ſighs, and weeping, ſtill he finds him-
E E ſelfe in the midſt of enemies, and of his old enemies; for not onely tentations to new ſins, but even the memory of old, though formerly repented, ariſe againſt us, ariſe in us, and ruine us. And ſo we paſſe from theſe pieces which conſtitute our firſt Part, Quid factum, what David upon the ſenſe of his caſe did, to the other, Quid faciendum, what by his example we are to doe, and what is required of us, after we have repented, and God hath remitted the ſin.

Out of this paſſage here in this Pſalme, and out of that hiſtory, where Nathan 2 Part.
ſayes to David, The Lord hath put away thy ſin, and yet ſayes after, The child that is borne 2 Sam. 12.13.
to thee ſhall ſurely dye, and out of that ſtory, where David repents earneſtly his ſin, committed in the numbring of his people, and ſayes; Now, now that I have repented, Now 2 Sam. 24.10.

I beſeech thee O Lord, take away the iniquity of thy ſervant, for I have done very fooliſhly, yet David was to indure one of thoſe three Calamities, of Famine, Warre, or Peſtilence; And out of ſome other ſuch places as theſe, ſome men have imagined a Doctrine, that after our repentance, and after God hath thereupon pardoned our ſin, yet he leaves the puniſhment belonging to that ſin unpardoned; though not all the puniſhment, not the eternall, yet ſay they, there belongs a temporary puniſhment too, and that God does not pardon, but exacts, and exacts in the nature of a puniſhment, and more, by way of ſatiſfaction to his Juſtice. A

Now, Stipendium peccati mors eſt, There is the puniſhment for ſin, The reward of ſin is death. If there remaine no death, there remaines no puniſhment: For the reward of ſin is death, And death complicated in it ſelfe, death wrapped in death; and what is ſo intricate, ſo intangling as death? Who ever got out of a winding ſheet? It is death aggravated by it ſelfe, death waighed downe by death: And what is ſo heavy as death? Who ever threw off his grave ſtone? It is death multiplied by it ſelfe; And what is ſo infinite as death? Who ever told over the dayes of death? It is Morte morieris, A Double death, Eternall, and Temporary. Temporall, and Spirituall death. Now, the Temporary, the Naturall death, God never takes away from us, he never pardons that puniſhment, becauſe he never takes away that ſin that occaſioned it, which is Originall ſin; To what Sanctification ſoever a man comes, Originall ſin lives to his laſt breath. B

Heb 9.27. And therefore, Statutum eſt, That Decree ſtands, Semel mori, that every man muſt dye once; but for any Bis mori, for twice dying, for eternall death upon any man, as man, if God conſider him not as an impotent ſinner, there is no ſuch invariable Decree; for, that death being alſo the puniſhment for actuall ſin, if he take away the cauſe, the ſin, he takes away that effect, that death alſo; for this death it ſelfe, eternall death, we all agree that it is taken away with the ſin; And then for other calamities in this life, which we call Morticulas, Little deaths, the children, the iſſue, the off-ſpring, the propagation of death, if we would ſpeak properly, no Affliction, no Judgement of God in this life, hath in it exactly the nature of a puniſhment; not onely not the nature of ſatisfaction, but not the nature of a puniſhment. We call not Coyn, baſe Coyne, till the Allay be more then the pure Metall: Gods Judgements are not puniſhments, except there be more anger then love, more Juſtice then Mercy in them; and that is never; for Miſerationes ejus ſuper omnia opera, His mercies are above all his works: In his firſt work, in the Creation, his Spirit, the Holy Ghoſt, moved upon the face of the waters; and ſtill upon the face of all our waters, (as waters are emblemes of tribulation in all the Scriptures) his Spirit, the Spirit of comfort, moves too; and as the waters produced the firſt creatures in the Creation, ſo tribulations offer us the firſt comforts; ſooner then proſperity does. God executes no judgement upon man in this life, but in mercy; either in mercy to that perſon, in his ſenſe thereof, if he be ſenſible, or at leaſt in mercy to his Church, in the example thereof, if he be not: There is no perſon to whom we can ſay, that Gods Corrections are Puniſhments, any otherwiſe then Medicinall, and ſuch, as he may receive amendment by, that receives them; Neither does it become us in any caſe, to ſay God layes this upon him, becauſe he is ſo ill, but becauſe he may be better. C D

But here our conſideration is onely upon the godly, and ſuch as by repentance ſtand upright in his favour; and even in them, our Adverſaries ſay, that after the remiſſion of their ſins, there remaines a puniſhment, and a puniſhment by way of Satisfaction, to be borne for that ſin, which is remitted. But ſince they themſelves tell us, that in Baptiſme God proceeds otherwiſe, and pardons there all ſin, and all puniſhment of ſinne, which ſhould be inflicted in the next world, (for children newly baptized, doe not ſuffer any thing in Purgatory) And that this holds not onely in Baptiſmo fluminis, in the Sacrament of Baptiſme, but in Baptiſmo ſanguinis, in the Baptiſme of blood too; (for in Martyrdome, as S. Auguſtine ſayes, Injuriam facit Martyri, He wrongs a Martyr that praies for a Martyr, as though he were not already in Heaven; ſo he ſuſpects a Martyr, that thinkes that Martyr goes to Purgatory) And ſince they ſay, that he can doe ſo in the other Sacrament too, and in Repentance, which they call, and juſtly, Secundam poſt naufragium tabulam, That whereas Baptiſme hath once delivered us from ſhipwrack, in Originall ſin, this Repentance delivers us after Baptiſme, from actuall ſinne; Since God can pardon, without reſerving any puniſhment, ſince God does ſo in Baptiſme and Martyrdome, ſince out of Baptiſme or Martyrdome, it appeares often, that De facto, he hath done ſo, E

(for

(for he enjoyned no penance to the man ſicke of the Palſie, when he ſaid, Son be of good comfort, thy ſins are forgiven thee, Sins, and puniſhments too. He intimated no ſuch after reckoning to her, of whom he ſaid, Many ſins are forgiven her, Sins, and puniſhments too. He left no ſuch future Satisfaction in that Parable upon the Publican, that departed to his houſe juſtified; Juſtified from ſins, and puniſhments too. And when he declared Zachens to be the ſon of Abraham, and ſaid, This day is Salvation come into thy houſe; He did not charge this bleſſed inheritance with any ſuch encumbrance, that he ſhould ſtill be ſubject to old debts, to make ſatisfaction by bodily afflictions for former ſins; ſince God can doe this, and does ſo in Baptiſme, and Martyrdome, and hath done this very often, out of Baptiſme, or Martyrdome, in Repentance, we had need of clearer evidence then they have offered to produce yet, that God does otherwiſe at any time; that at any time he pardons the ſin, and retaines the puniſhment, by way of ſatisfaction. If their Market ſhould faile, that no man would buy Indulgences (as of late yeares it was brought low, when they vented ten Indulgencies in America for one in Europe; If the fire of Purgatory were quenched, or ſlackned, that men would not be ſo prodigall to buy out Fathers or friends ſoules, from thence; If commutation of penance, were ſo moderated amongſt them, that thoſe penances, and ſatisfactions, which they make ſo neceſſary, were not commuted to money, and brought them in no profit, they would not be perhaps ſo vehement in maintenance of this Doctrine.

Mat 9.
Luke 17.
Luke 18.
Luke 19.

To leave ſuch imaginations with their Authors; We ſee David did enjoyne himſelf penance, and impoſe upon himſelfe heavy afflictions after he had asked, and no doubt, received aſſurance of the mercy of God, in the remiſſion of his ſins. Why did he ſo? S. Auguſtine obſerves out of the words of this Text, that becauſe ſome of Davids afflictions are expreſſed in the Preter tenſe, as things already paſt, and ſome in the Future, as things to come, (for it is Laboravi, I have mourned, and it is Natare faciam, I will waſh my bed with teares) ſo that ſomething David confeſſes he had done, and ſomething he profeſſes that he will doe, therefore David hath a ſpeciall regard to his future ſtate, and he proceeds with God, not onely by that way of holy worſhip, by way of confeſſion, what he had done, but by another religious worſhip of God too, by way of vow, what he would doe. David underſtood his own conſcience well, and was willing to husband it, to manure, and cultivate it well; He knew what ploughing, what harrowing, what weeding, and watring, and pruning it needed, and ſo perhaps might be truſted with himſelfe, and hee his owne ſpirituall Phyſitian. This is not every ones caſe. Thoſe that are not ſo perfect in the knowledge of their owne eſtate, (as it is certaine the moſt are not) the Church ever tooke into her care; and therefore it is true, that in the Primitive Church, there were heavy penitentiall Canons, and there were publique penances enjoyned to ſinners: Either Ad explorationem, when the Church had cauſe to be jealous, and to ſuſpect the hearty repentance of the party; They made this triall of their obedience, to ſubmit them to that heavy penance; Or elſe Ad edificationem, to ſatisfie the Church which was ſcandalized by their ſins before; Or Ad Exercitationem, to keepe them in continuall practiſe, the better to reſiſt future tentations, and relapſes; for to them this penance was an Unction, as to one that was to wraſtle with himſelfe, and as the buckling on of an Armour upon one that was to fight Gods Battells, in his owne bowells.

If from ſome of the Fathers, there have falne ſometimes, ſome phraſes which may have ſeemed to ſome, to attribute ſomething more to mans works, to his after-afflictions, and poſt-penances, ſome power of ſatisfaction to the Juſtice of God, Bellarmine himſelfe hath given us one good Caution, That we muſt be very wary in underſtanding thoſe phraſes; for he findes it very inconvenient, to accept all that the Fathers have ſaid, in their manner of expreſſing themſelves in that point. We will adde thus much more, for the better underſtanding of repentance in the roote, and the fruits of repentance, that there is ſuch an indiſſoluble knot, ſuch an individuall marriage between thoſe parts of repentance, which we call Partes conſtitutivas, Eſſentiall parts of repentance, and thoſe parts, which we call Conſecutivas, which doe infallibly concurre, or immediately follow upon repentance, theſe two are ſo inſeparable; There is not onely ſuch a contiguity, but ſuch a continuity in them, not onely ſuch a vicinity, but ſuch an identity, betweene repentance, and the fruits of repentance, that many reverend perſons, in their Expoſitions, and Meditations have preſented, and named one for the other, and have called thoſe thoſe ſubſequent, and ſubſidiary things, by the name of Repentance it ſelfe. Hence it comes, that whereas repentance is onely Converſio, a turning, and this converſion, this turning hath onely Terminum à quo, Something to turne from, and that is ſin, and Terminum ad quem, Something to turne to, and that is God, Thoſe things which are indeed but helps to hold us in that ſtation, and in that poſture when we are turned from ſin upon God, they have called by the names of Repentance it ſelfe, as parts of it; And ſo theſe bodily afflictions, which we ſpeak of, being indeed to be imbraced for that uſe, to maintaine us in that good diſpoſition, to which our repentance hath brought us, have ſometimes been called parts of repentance, even by godly, and learned Expoſitors; and by occaſion of that eaſineſſe in them, in calling theſe things thus, in after-times, ſalvation it ſelfe, which God gives upon repentance, hath been attributed to theſe poſt-penances, and after-afflictions, which becauſe they doe alwaies accompany repentance, have ſometimes been called repentance. A

The meaning of ancient and later men too therein, hath beene to impoſe a neceſſity of taking theſe medicinall Phyſicks, theſe after-afflictions, for that uſe of holding us in that ſtate, to which we are brought; but their meaning hath ever beene too, to exclude ſatisfaction, properly ſo termed. Pœnitentia eſt, mala præterita plangere, This is repentance ſayes that Father, to lament and bewaile our former ſins; But, this is not all that he requires, but he addes, Plangenda iterum non committere, This belongs to repentance too, not to returne to thoſe ſins, which we have bewailed. For, Repentance is Vindicta ſemper puniens, quod dolet ſe commiſiſſe, ſayes another alſo; a man truly penitent is a daily executioner upon himſelfe, and puniſhes after, the ſins which he hath committed before. Here we ſee that both theſe bleſſed Fathers, S. Auguſtine, and S. Ambroſe, attribute theſe after-afflictions, and poſt-penances to Repentance, and call them by that name, Repentance. But yet, not to leave theſe bleſſed Fathers, under the danger of miſ-interpretation, and ill application of words well intended, We conſider the ſame Fathers in other places too; Lacrymas Petri lego, ſatisfactionem non lego, I read of Peters teares, not of his ſatisfaction. So if theſe poſt-penances had the nature of puniſhments, yet theſe puniſhments had not the nature of ſatisfaction. But Calamitates ante remiſſionem ſunt ſupplicia, poſt remiſſionem exercitationes, ſayes the other of thoſe Fathers: Till God be pacified by our Repentance, his corrections have more of the nature of puniſhments, becauſe conſidered ſo, we are in the ſtate of enemies, and he may juſtly puniſh; But after God hath remitted the ſin, the after-afflictions are but from a Phyſitian, not from an executioner, and intended to keepe us in our ſtation, and not to throw us lower; So that they are neither properly ſatisfactions, nor puniſhments. For, for ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God, Nec ſi te excories, ſatisfacere poſſis, If thou flea thy ſelfe with haire-cloathes, and whips, it is nothing towards ſatisfaction of that infinite Majeſty, which thou haſt violated, and wounded by thy ſin; And then for the other, that is, puniſhment after remiſſion, Ubi miſericordia, pœnæ locus non eſt, They are incompatible things, If God have reſerved a diſpoſition and purpoſe to puniſh, he hath not pardoned. B C D

Ambroſ. Auguſt. Ambroſe. Auguſt. Origen. Chryſoſt.

So that howſoever ſomething ſaid by them, may ſeeme to make theſe after-afflictions to be neceſſary to repentance, and, in a large ſenſe, parts of repentance, yet neither did they put that value upon mans act, That man ſhould be able to ſatisfie God, nor that deluſion upon Gods act, That God ſhould pretend to pardon, and yet puniſh. Wee are not diſpoſed to wrangle about words, and names; The Schoole may admit that exerciſe, but not the Pulpit. If upon admittance, that theſe after-afflictions might be called puniſhments, they had not inferred a ſatisfaction, and thereupon ſuper-induced a ſatisfaction after this life, and ſo a Purgatory, and ſo Indulgencies, and carried their Babel ſo many ſtories high, We to advance the doctrine of a neceſſity of theſe diſciplines, and mortifications, even after God hath ſealed to our conſciences the remiſſion of our ſin, would not abhor, nor decline the name, we would not be afraid to call them Penances, nor Puniſhments, nor Satisfactions; for when S. Chryſoſtome in his time, had no occaſion to be afraid of ſuch a miſ-interpretation, he was not afraid to call them ſo; Non remiſit ſupplicium, ſayes he; God hath not forgiven the puniſhment; And imponit pœnam, God exacts a puniſhment at thy hands: But yet, though S. Chryſoſtome ſuſpected no ſuch miſ-interpretations, the Holy Ghoſt who foreſaw that they would come, prevents all dangerous miſ-conſtructions, and directs S. Chryſoſtomes pen, thus, God does all this, ſayes he, Non exigens ſupplicium de peccatis, ſed corrigens ad futurum; whatſoever I have ſaid of puniſh- E

Chryſoſt.

ments,

A ments; it is not, that in that punishment, God hath any relation to the former, but to the future sin, not to our lapse, but to our relapse, not to that which he hath seene, but to that which he foresees would fall upon us, if he did not, if we did not prevent it with these medicinall assistances: And, as long as it is but so, call them what ye will, yet here is no foundation laid, no materials, no stone brought to the building of the Roman Satisfaction, or Purgatory, or Indulgencies.

How soever therefore you exclude dangerous names, doe not upon colour of that, exclude necessary things: How soever you have delivered your selves to the mercy of God, and he hath delivered a seale of his mercy to you, inwardly in his Spirit, outwardly in his Sacrament, yet there are Amara sagitta ex dulci manu Dei, (as Nazianzen calls afflictions after repentance) Sharp arrowes out of the sweet hand of God; Corrections, by which God intends to establish us in that spirituall health, to which our repentance, by his B grace, hath brought us: Remember still, that this which David did for the present, and that which he promised he would doe for the future, both together made up the reason of his prayer to God, by which he desired God in the former verses, to returne to him, to deliver his soule, and to save him; He had had no reason, no ground of his prayer, though he had done something already, if he had not proposed to himselfe something more to be done: There is a preparation before, and there is a preservation after required at our hands, if wee studie a perfect recovery, and cure of our soules. And as S. Gregory notes well, there is a great deale of force in Davids Possessive, in his word of appropriation, Meus, lectus meus, and Oculus meus, It is his bed that he washed, and they are his eyes that washed it: He bore the affliction himselfe, and trusted not to that which others had suffered by way of Supererogation. Sometimes, when the children of great persons offend at Schoole, another person is whipped for them, and that affects them, and works C upon a good nature; but if that person should take Physick for them in a sickenesse, it would doe them no good: Gods corrections upon others, may worke by way of example upon thee; but because thou art sick for physicke, take it thy selfe. Trust not to the treasure of the Church; neither the imaginary treasure of the Church of Rome, which pretends an inexhaustible mine of the works of other men, to distribute and bestow; No, nor to the true treasure of the true Church, that is, Absolution, upon Confession, and Repentance; No, trust not to the merits of Christ himselfe, in their application to thee, without a Lectus tuus, and an Oculus tuus, except thou remember thy sins in thy bed, and poure out thy teares from thine eyes, and fulfill the sufferings of Christ in thy selfe. Nothing can be added to Christs merits; that is true: but something must be added to thee; a disposition in thee, for the application of that which is his: Not, that thou canst begin this disposition in thy selfe, till God offer it, but that thou maist D resist it, now it is offered, and reject it againe, after it is received. Trust not in others, not in the Church, nor in Christ himselfe, so, as to doe nothing for thy selfe; Nor trust not in that, which thou doest for thy selfe, so, as at any time to thinke, thou hast done enough and needest do no more: But when thou hast past the signet, that thou hast found the signature of Gods hand and seale, in a manifestation, that the marks of his Grace are upon thee, when thou hast past his privy Seale, That his Spirit beares witnesse with thy spirit, that thy repentance hath beene accepted by him, When thou hast past the great Seale, in the holy and blessed Sacrament publiquely administred, doe not suspect the goodnesse of God, as though all were not done that were necessary for thy salvation, if thou wert to have thy transmigration out of this world this houre; but yet, as long as thou continuest in the vale of tentations, continue in the vale of teares too; and though thou have the seale of Reconciliation, plead that seale to the Church, (which is Gods E Tribunall, and judgement seat upon earth) in a holy life, and works of example to others, and looke daylie, looke hourely upon the Ita quod of that pardon, upon the Covenants and Conditions, with which it is given, That if by neglecting those medicinall helps, those auxiliary forces, those subsidies of the kingdome of Heaven, those after-afflictions, (chuse whether you will call them by the name of Penance, or no) you relapse into former sins, your present repentance, and your present seale of that Repentance, the Sacrament, shall rise up against you at the last day, and to that sentence (you did not feed, you did not cloathe, you did not harbour me in the poore) shall this be added, as the aggravation of all, you did Repent, and you did receive the Seale, but you did not pursue that repentance, nor performe the conditions required at your hands.

Nazian.

Gregor.

But

But we are here met, by Gods gracious goodneſſe, in a better diſpoſition; with a ſincere repentance of all our former ſinnes, and with a deliberate purpoſe, as thoſe Iſraelites made their powring out of water, a teſtimony of diſſolving themſelves into holy teares, to make this faſt from bodily ſuſtenance, an inchoation of a ſpirituall faſt, in abſtinence from all that may exaſperate our God againſt us; That ſo, though not for that, yet thereby our prayers may be the more acceptable to our glorious God, in our gracious Saviour, To him that ſits upon the throne, and to the Lambe, firſt, that as he is the King of Kings, he will eſtabliſh, and proſper that Crowne, which he hath ſet upon the head of his Anointed over us here, and hereafter Crowne that Crowne with another Crowne, a better Crowne, a Crowne of immarceſcible glory in the Kingdome of Heaven, and in the meane time, make him his Bulwarke, and his Rampart, againſt all thoſe powers, which ſeeke to multiply Miters, or Crownes, to the diſquiet and prejudice of Chriſtendome: And then, That as he is the Lord of Lords, he will inſpire them, to whom he hath given Lordſhip over others in this world, with a due conſideration, that they alſo have a Lord over them, even in this world; and that he, and they, and we have one Lord over us all, in the other world: That as he is the Biſhop and high Prieſt over our Souls, he vouchſafe to continue in our Biſhops, a holy will, and a competent power to ſuper-intend faithfully over his Church, that they for their parts, when they depart from hence, may deliver it back into his hands, in the ſame forme, and frame, in which his bleſſed Spirit delivered it into their hands, in their predeceſſors, in the Primitive inſtitution thereof: That as he is the Angel of the great Counſayle, he vouchſafe to direct the great Counſayle of this Kingdome, to conſider ſtill, that as he works in this world, by meanes, So it concernes his glory, that they expedite the ſupply of ſuch meanes as may doe his worke, and may carry home the teſtimony of good Conſciences now, and in their poſterity have the thanks of poſterity, for their behaviour in this Parliament: That as he is the God of peace, he will reſtore peace to Chriſtendome; That as he is the Lord of Hoſts, he will fight our battayls, who have no other end in our warres, but his peace; and that after this faſt, which in the bodily and ghoſtly part too, we performe to day, and vow and promiſe for our whole lives, he will bring us to the Marriage Supper of the Lambe, in that Kingdome which our Saviour Chriſt Jeſus hath purchaſed for us, with the ineſtimable price of his incorruptible bloud. Amen.

SERM. LV.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 6. 8, 9, 10.

Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquitie; for the Lord hath heard the voyce of my weeping. The Lord hath heard my ſupplication; the Lord will receive my prayer. Let all mine enemies be aſhamed and ſore vexed: let them returne and be aſhamed ſuddenly.

THis is Davids profligation and diſcomfiture of his enemies; this is an act of true honour, a true victory, a true triumph, to keepe the field, to make good one ſtation, and yet put the enemy to flight. A man may perchance be ſafe in a Retrait, but the honour, the victory, the triumph lies in enforcing the enemy to fly. To that is David come here, to ſuch a thankfull ſenſe of a victory; in which we ſhall firſt conſider Davids thankfulneſſe, that is, his manner of declaring Gods mercy, and his ſecurity in that mercy; which manner is, that he durſt come to an open defiance, and proteſtation, and hoſtility, without modifications, or diſguiſes, Depart from me all yee workers of iniquity. And then, ſecondly, we ſhall ſee his reaſon, upon which he grounded this confidence, and this ſpirituall exultation, which was a pregnant reaſon, a reaſon that produced another reaſon; The Lord hath heard my ſupplication, the Lord will heare my prayer; upon no premiſes doth any concluſion follow, ſo

A so Logically, so sincerely, so powerfully, so imperiously, so undeniably, as upon this, The Lord hath, and therefore the Lord will. But then what was this prayer? that wee may know, whether it were a prayer to be drawne into practise, and imitation, or no. It is not argument enough, that it was so, because God heard it then; for we are not bound, nay, we are not allowed to pray all such prayers, as good men have prayed, and as God hath heard. But here the prayer was this, Let all mine enemies be ashamed, and sore vexed, let them returne, and be ashamed suddenly. But this is a malediction, an imprecation of mischiefe upon others; and will good men pray so? or will God heare that? Because that is an holy probleme, and an usefull intergatory, we shall make it a third part, or a conclusion rather, to enquire into the nature, and into the avowableness, and exemplarineſſe of this, in which David seemes to have been transported with some passion.

Diviſio.

B So that our parts will be three, the building it selfe, Davids thankesgiving in his exultation, and declaration, Depart from mee all yee workers of iniquitie; and then the foundation of this building, For God hath heard, and therefore God will heare; and lastly, the prospect of this building, David contemplates and lookes over againe the prayer that he had made, and in a cleare understanding, and in a rectified Conscience, he finds that he may persist in that prayer, and he doth so: Let all mine enemies be ashamed, and sore vexed, let them returne, and be ashamed suddenly.

1. Part.

First then we consider Davids thankfulnesse: But why is it so long before David leads us to that consideration? Why hath he deferred so primary a duty, to so late a place, to so low a roome, to the end of the Psalme? The Psalme hath a Deprecatory part, that God would forbeare him, and a Postulatory part, that God would heare him, and grant some things to him, and a Gratulatory part, a sacrifice of thankesgiving. Now the Deprecatory part is placed in the first place, Vers. 1. For if it were not so, if we should not first C ground that, That God should not rebuke us in his anger, nor chasten us in his hot displeasure, but leave our selves open to his indignation, and his judgements, wee could not live to come to a second petition; our sinnes, and judgements due to our sinnes, require our first consideration; therefore David begins with the deprecatory prayer, That first Gods anger may be removed: but then, that deprecatory prayer, wherein he desired God to forbeare him, spends but one verse of the Psalme; David would not insist upon that long: When I have penitently confest my sinnes, I may say with Iob, My flesh is not brasse, nor my bones stones, that I can beare the wrath of the Lord; but yet I must say with Iob too, If the Lord kill me, yet will I trust in him. God hath not asked me, What shall I doe for thee, but of himselfe he hath done more, then I could have proposed to my selfe in a wish, or to him in a prayer. Nor will I aske God, Quousque, how long shall my foes increase? how long wilt thou fight on their side against me? but surrender my selfe entirely, in an adveniat regnum, and a fiat voluntas, thy kingdome come, and thy will be done. D David makes it his first worke, to stay Gods anger in a deprecatory prayer, but he stayes not upon that long, he will not prescribe his Physitian, what he shall prescribe to him, but leaves God to his own medicines, and to his own methode. But then the Postulatory prayer, what he begs of God, employes six verses: as well to shew us, that our necessities are many; as also that if God doe not answer us, at the beginning of our prayer, our duty is still to pursue that way, to continue in prayer. And then the third part of the Psalme, which is the Gratulatory part, his giving of thanks, is, shall we say deferred, or rather reserved to the end of the Psalme, and exercises onely those three verses which are our Text. Not that the duty of thankesgiving is lesse then that of prayer; for if we could compare them, it is rather greater; because it contributes more to Gods glory, to acknowledge by thanks, that God hath given, then to acknowledge by prayer, that E God can give. But therefore might David be later and shorter here, in expressing that duty of thanks, first, because being reserved to the end, and close of the Psalme, it leaves the best impression in the memory. And therefore it is easie to observe, that in all Metricall compositions, of which kinde the booke of Psalmes is, the force of the whole piece, is for the most part left to the shutting up; the whole frame of the Poem is a beating out of a piece of gold, but the last clause is as the impression of the stamp, and that is it that makes it currant. And then also, because out of his abundant manner of expressing his thankfulnesse to God, in every other place thereof, his whole booke of Psalmes is called, Sepher tehillim, a booke of praise and thankesgiving, he might reserve his thanks here to the last place; And lastly, because naturall and morall men are better acquainted ted with the duty of gratitude, of thankeſgiving, before they come to the Scriptures, then they are with the other duty of repentance, which belongs to Prayer; for in all Solomons bookes, you ſhall not finde halfe ſo much of the duty of thankfulneſſe, as you ſhall in Seneca and in Plutarch. No book of Ethicks, of morall doctrine, is come to us, wherein there is not, almoſt in every leafe, ſome deteſtation, ſome Anathema againſt ingratitude; but of repentance, not a word amongſt them all. And therefore in that dutie of prayer, which preſumes repentance, (for he muſt ſtand Rectus in curia that will pray) David hath inſiſted longeſt; and becauſe he would enter, and eſtabliſh a man, upon a confidence in God, he begins with a deprecation of his anger; for but upon that ground, no man can ſtand; and becauſe he would diſmiſſe him with that which concerns him moſt, he chooſeth to end in a Thankſgiving.

Gratiæ actæ. Therefore at laſt he comes to his thanks. Now this is ſo poore a duty, if we proportion it to the infiniteneſſe of Gods love unto us, our thanks, as we may juſtly call it nothing at all. But Amor Dei affectus, non contractus, The love of God is not a contract, a bargaine, he looks for nothing againe, and yet he looks for thanks, for that is nothing, becauſe there is nothing done in it, it is but ſpeaking; Gratias dicere, eſt gratias agere, To utter our thanks to God, is all our performance of thankfulneſſe. It is not ſo amongſt us; Vix, aut nunquam apud nos purum, & merum beneficium; Every man that gives, gives out of deſigne, and as it conduces to his ends: Donat in hamo, There is a hook in every benefit, that ſticks in his jawes that takes that benefit, and drawes him whither the Benefactor will. God looks for nothing, nothing to be done in the way of exact recompence, but yet, as he that makes a Clock, beſtowes all that labour upon the ſeverall wheeles, that thereby the Bell might give a ſound, and that thereby the hand might give knowledge to others how the time paſſes; ſo this is the principall part of that thankfulneſſe, which God requires from us, that we make open declarations of his mercies, to the winning and confirming of others.

Bernar. Auguſt. Philo Iudæ. Martial.

Diſcedite. This David does in this noble and ingenuous publication, and proteſtation, I have ſtrength enough, and company enough, power enough, and pleaſure enough, joy enough, and treaſure enough, honour enough, and recompence enough in my God alone, in him I ſhall ſurely have all which all you can pretend to give, and therefore Diſcedite à me, Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity; Here is then firſt, a valediction, a parting with his old company, but it is a valediction, with a malediction, with an imprecation of Gods Juſtice, upon their contempts and injuries. There was in the mouth of Chriſt, ſometimes, ſuch a Diſcede, ſuch an Abito, as that farewell was a welcome; as when he ſaid to the Ruler, Abito, Goe thy way, thy ſon liveth; And when he ſaid to the woman, Goe in peace, thy faith hath ſaved thee. This going was a ſtaying with him ſtill; Here the Abite, and Venite was all one. He that goes about his worldly buſineſſe, and goes about them in Gods name, in the feare and favour of God, remaines in Gods preſence ſtill. When the Angels of God are ſent to viſit his children, in the middeſt of Sodome, or where they lie, and languiſh in ſordid and naſty corners, and in the loathſomeneſſe of corrupt and infectious diſeaſes, or where they faint in miſerable dungeons, this Commiſſion, this Diſcedite, goe to that Sodome, to that Spittle, to that Dungeon, puts not thoſe Angels out of the preſence of God. No deſcent into hell, of what kinde ſoever you conceive that deſcent into hell to have been, put the Son of God out of heaven, by deſcending into hell; no Diſcede, no Leave, no Commandement that God gives us, to doe the works of our calling here, excludes us from him; but as the Saints of God ſhall follow the Lamb, whereſoever he goes in heaven, ſo the Lamb of God ſhall follow his Saints, whereſoever they goe upon earth, if they walk ſincerely. Chriſt uſes not then as yet, as long as we are in this world, this Diſcede of David, to bid any man, any ſinner to depart from him: But there ſhall come a time, when Chriſt ſhall take Davids Diſcede, the words of this Text into his mouth, with as much and more bitterneſſe then David does here, Neſcivi vos, I never knew yee, and therefore Depart from me yee workers of iniquity.

John 4.46. Luke 7.50.

Servi ſui. So have you his Proteſtation, his Proclamation, They muſt avoid; but who? Who be theſe that David diſmiſſes here? Take them to be thoſe of his owne houſe, his Servants, and Officers in neare places, whoſe ſervice he had uſed to ill purpoſes, (as Davids Perſon, and Rank, and Hiſtory directs us upon that Conſideration) and we ſhall finde all ſuch perſons, wrapt up in this danger, that they dare not diſcharge themſelves, they dare not

A not displace, nor disgrace those men, to whom by such imployments, they have given that advantage over themselves, as that it is not safe to them, to offend such a servant. Naturâ nec hostem habet, nec amicum rex, sayes a wise Statesman; In nature, (that is, in the nature of greatnesse, and, as great) great persons consider no man to be so much a friend, nor to be so much an enemy, but that they will fall out with that friend, and be reconciled to that enemy, to serve their own turne, sayes that Statesman. But yet when great Persons trust servants with such secret actions, as may bring them into contempt at home, or danger abroad, by those vices, if they should be published, they cannot come when they would, to this Discedite, Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity. Polybius.

We have this evidently, and unavoidably, we cannot but see it, and say it, in this example which is before us, even in King David. He had imployed Ioab in such services, as that he stood in feare of him, and indured at his hands that behaviour, and that lan-

B guage, Thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants that have saved thy life, and thy sons, and daughters, and wives, and concubines, thou regardest neither thy Princes, nor servants; but come out, and speak comfortably unto them, for I sweare by the Lord, except thou doe come out, there will not tarry one man with thee this night. David indured all this, for he knew that Ioab had that letter in his Cabbinet, which he writ to him for the murther of Vriah, and he never came to this Discedite, to remove Ioab from him in his life, but gave it in Commandement to his Son, Let not Ioabs hoary head goe downe to the grave in peace: Here is the misery of David, he cannot discharge himselfe of that servant when he will, and here the misery of that servant, that at one time or other he will; and he is a short liv'd man, whose ruine a jealous Prince studies. Because the Text invited us, commanded, and constrained us to do so, we put this example in a Court, but we need not dazle our selves with that height; every man in his own house may finde it, that to those

C servants, which have served him in ill actions, he dares not say, Discedite, Depart from me ye workers of iniquity. 2 Sam. 19. 1 Kings 2.

Thus then it is; if those whom David dismisses here, were his owne servants, it was an expressing of his thankfulnesse to God, and a duty that lay upon him, to deliver himselfe of such servants. But other Expositors take these men, to be men of another sort, men that came to triumph over him in his misery, men that Persecuted him whom God had smitten, and added to the sorrow of him whom God had wounded, as himselfe complaines; men that pretended to visit him, yet when they came, They spoke lies, their hearts gathered iniquity to themselves, and when they went abroad they told it; Men that said to one another, When shall he dye, and his name perish? Here also was a Declaration of the powerfulnesse of Gods Spirit in him, that he could triumph over the Triumpher, and exorcise those evill spirits, and command them away, whose comming was to dishonour God, in D his dishonour; and to argue and conclude out of his ruine, that either his God was a weake God, or a cruell God, that he could not, or would not deliver his servants from destruction. Tentatores. Psal. 69. 26. Psal. 41. 7. Ver. 6.

That David could command them away, whose errand was to blaspheme God, and whose staying in a longer conversation, might have given him occasion of new sins, either in distrusting Gods mercy towards himselfe, or in murmuring at Gods patience towards them, or perchance in being uncharitably offended with them, and expressing it with some bitternesse, but that in respect of himselfe, and not of Gods glory only, this Discedite, Depart from me all such men as do sin in your selves, and may make me sin too, was an act of an heavenly courage, and a thankfull testimony of Gods gracious visiting his soule, inabling him so resolutely to teare himselfe from such persons, as might lead him into tentation.

E Neither is this separation of David, and this company, partiall; he does not banish those that incline him to one sin, a sin that perchance he is a weary of, or growne unable to proceed in, and retained them that concurre with him in some fresh sin, to which he hath a new appetite. David doth not banish them that suckt his Subjects blood, or their money, and retained them that solicite, and corrupt their wives, and daughters; he doth not displace them, who served the vices of his predecessor, and supply those places with instruments of new vices of his owne, but it is Discedite omnes, Depart all yee workers of iniquity. Now beloved, when God begins so high as in Kings, he makes this duty the easier to thee; to banish from thee, All the workers of iniquity. It is not a Discede, that will serve to banish one, and retaine the rest, Nor a Discedite, to banish the Omnes.

reſt, and retaine one, but Diſcedite omnes, Depart all, for that ſinne ſtaies in ſtate, that ſtaies alone, and hath the venome, and the malignity of all the reſt contracted in it. It is nothing for a ſick man that hath loſt his taſte, to ſay, Diſcedat gula, Depart voluptuouſneſſe; nothing in a conſumption to ſay, Diſcedat luxuria, Depart wantonneſſe; nothing for a Client in Forma pauperis, to ſay, Diſcedat corruptio, I will not bribe; but Diſcedant omnes, Depart all, and all together ye workers of iniquity. A

Operantes. But yet Davids generall diſcharge had, and ours muſt have, a reſtriction, a limitation; it is not (as S. Ierom notes upon this place) Omnes qui operati, but Omnes operantes, not all that have wrought iniquity, but all that continue in doing ſo ſtill. David was not inexorable towards thoſe that had offended; what an example ſhould he have given God againſt himſelfe, if he had beene ſo? wee muſt not deſpiſe, nor defame men, becauſe they have committed ſome ſin. When the mercie of God hath wrought upon their ſin in the remiſſion thereof, that leproſie of Naaman cleaves to us, their ſinne is but transferred to us, if we will not forgive that which God hath forgiven, for it is but Omnes operantes, all they that continue in their evill wayes. All theſe muſt depart: how far? B

Rom. 16. 17. firſt, they muſt be avoided, Declinate, ſaith S. Paul, I beſeech you brethren, marke them diligently which cauſe diviſion and offences, and avoid them. And this corrects our deſire in running after ſuch men, as come with their owne inventions, Schiſmaticall Separatiſts, Declinate, avoid them; if hee be no ſuch, but amongſt our ſelves, a brother, but yet a

1 Cor. 5. 11. worker of iniquity, If any one that is called a brother, be a Fornicator, or covetous, with ſuch a one eate not. If we cannot ſtarve him out, wee muſt thruſt him out; Put away from among you, that wicked man. No converſation at all is allowed to us, with ſuch a man,

2 Iohn 1. 10. as is obſtinate in his ſin, and incorrigible; no not to bid him God ſpeed, For he that biddeth him God ſpeed, is partaker of his evill deeds. In this divorce, both the generality, and the

Mat. 5. 28. diſtance is beſt expreſt by Chriſt himſelfe, If thine eye, thine hand, thy foote offend thee, amputandi & projiciendi, with what anguiſh or remorſe ſoever it be done, they muſt bee cut off, and being cut off, caſt away; it is a divorce and no ſuper-induction, it is a ſeparating, and no redintegration. Though thou couldeſt be content to goe to Heaven with both eyes, (thy ſelfe, and thy companion) yet better to goe into Heaven with one, thy ſelfe alone, then to endanger thy ſelfe to be left out for thy companions ſake. C

Diſcedite. To conclude this firſt part, David does not ſay, Diſcedam, but Diſcedite, he does not ſay, that he will depart from them, but he commands them to depart from him. Wee muſt not thinke to depart from the offices of ſociety, and duties of a calling, and hide our ſelves in Monaſteries, or in retired lives, for feare of tentations; but when a tentation attempts us, to come with that authority, and that powerfull exorciſme of Nazianzen, Fuge, recede, ne te cruce Chriſti, ad quam omnia contremiſcunt, feriam, Depart from me, leſt the Croſſe of Chriſt, in my hand, overthrow you. For a ſober life, and a Chriſtian mortification, and diſcreet diſcipline, are croſſes derived from the Croſſe of Chriſt Jeſus, and animated by it, and may be alwaies in a readineſſe to croſſe ſuch tentations. In the former deſcriptions of the manner of our behaviour towards workers of iniquity, there is one Declinate, one word that implies a withdrawing of our ſelves; for that muſt be done, not out of the world, but out of that ill ayre, we muſt not put our ſelves in danger, nor in diſtance of a tentation; but all the other words, are words of a more active vehemence, Amputate, and Projicite; it is Diſcedite, and not Diſcedam, a driving away, and not a running away. D

2 Part. Wee proceed now in our ſecond part, to the reaſons of Davids confidence, and his openneſſe, and his publique declaration; why David was content to be rid of all his company; and it was, becauſe he had better; he ſayes, The Lord had heard him; and firſt, He had heard, vocem fletus, the voice of his weeping. Here is an admirable readineſſe in God, E that heares a voyce in that, which hath none. They have deſcribed God by ſaying he is all eye, an univerſall eye, that pierceth into every darke corner; but in darke corners, there is ſomething for him to ſee; but he is all eare too, and heares even the ſilent, and ſpeechleſſe man, and heares that in that man, that makes no ſound, his teares. When

Eſay 38. Hezekias wept, he was turned to the wall, (perchance, becauſe he would not be ſeene) and yet God bad the Prophet Eſay tell him, Vidi lacrymam; though the text ſay, Hezekias wept ſore, yet Vidit lacrymam, God ſaw every ſingle teare, his firſt teare, and was affected with that. But yet this is more ſtrange; God heard his teares. And therefore the

Gregor. weeping of a penitent ſinner, is not improperly called, Legatio lacrymarum, An embaſſage of

A of teares; To Embaſſadours belongs an audience, and to theſe Embaſſages God gives a gracious audience; Abyſſus abyſſum invocat, One depth cals upon another; And ſo doth one kinde of teares call upon one another. Teares of ſorrow call upon teares of joy, and all call upon God, and bring him to that ready hearing which is implied in the words of this text, Shamang; a word of that largeneſſe in the Scriptures, that ſometimes in the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, it ſignifies hearing, Shamang, is audit, God gives eare to our teares; ſometimes it is beleeving, Shamang, is Credit, God gives faith, and credit to our teares; ſometimes it is Affecting, Shamang, is Miſeretur, God hath mercy upon us for our teares; ſometimes it is Effecting, Shamang, is Reſpondet, God anſwers the petition of our teares; and ſometimes it is Publication, Shamang, is Divulgat, God declares and manifeſts to others, by his bleſſings upon us, the pleaſure that he takes in our holy and repentant teares. And therefore Lacryma fœnus, ſayes S. Baſil, Teares are that uſury, B by which the joyes of Heaven are multiplied unto us; the preventing Grace, and the free mercy of God, is our ſtock, and principall; but the Acts of obedience, and mortification, faſting, and praying, and weeping, are Fœnus, (ſayes that bleſſed Father) the intereſt, and the increaſe of our holy joy. Pſal. 43. 7.

That which we intend in all this, is, that when our heart is well diſpoſed toward God, God ſees our prayers, as they are comming in the way, before they have any voyce, in our words. When Chriſt came to Lazarus houſe, before Mary had asked any thing at his hands, as ſoone as ſhe had wept, Chriſt was affected, He groaned in the ſpirit, he was troubled, and he wept too; and he proceeded to the rayſing of Lazarus, before ſhee asked him; her eyes were his glaſſe, and he ſaw her deſire in her tears. There is a kind of ſimplicity in teares, which God harkens to, and beleeves. We know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought. Quid? neſcimus orationem dominicam? Can we not ſay the Lords Prayer, ſayes C S. Auguſtin? Yes, we can ſay that; but Neſcimus tribulationem prodeſſe, ſayes he, we doe not know the benefit, that is to be made of tribulation, and tentation, Et petimus liberari ab omni malo, we pray to be delivered from all evill, and we meane all tribulation, and all tentation, as though all they were alwaies evill; but in that there may be much error: The ſons of Zebedee prayed, but ambitiouſly, and were not heard; S. Paul prayed for the taking away of the provocation of the fleſh, but inconſiderately, and miſt; the Apoſtles made a requeſt, for fire againſt the Samaritans, but uncharitably, and were reproved. But when Iehoſaphat was come to that perplexity by the Moabites, that he knew not what to doe, nor what to ſay, Hoc ſolum reſidui habemus, ſayes he, ut oculos noſtros dirigamus ad te, This we can doe, and we need doe no more, wee can turne our eyes to thee. Now whether he directed thoſe eyes in looking to him, or in weeping to him, God heares the voyce of our looks, God heares the voyce of our teares, ſometimes better D then the voyce of our words; for it is the Spirit it ſelfe that makes interceſsion for us, Gemitibus inenarrabilibus, In thoſe groanes, and ſo in thoſe teares, which we cannot utter; Ineloquacibus, as Tertullian reads that place, devout, and ſimple teares, which cannot ſpeak, ſpeake aloud in the eares of God; nay, teares which we cannot utter; not onely not utter the force of the teares, but not utter the very teares themſelves. As God ſees the water in the ſpring in the veines of the earth, before it bubble upon the face of the earth; ſo God ſees teares in the heart of a man, before they blubber his face; God heares the teares of that ſorrowfull ſoule, which for ſorrow cannot ſhed teares. Mat. 20. 22. 2 Cor. 12. 8. 2 Chro. 20. 12. Rom. 8. 26.

From this caſting up of the eyes, and powring out the ſorrow of the heart at the eyes, at leaſt, opening God a window, through which he may ſee a wet heart through a dry eye; from theſe overtures of repentance, which are as thoſe unperfect ſounds of words, which Parents delight in, in their Children, before they ſpeake plaine, a penitent ſinner E comes to a verball, and a more expreſſe prayer. To theſe prayers, theſe vocall and verball prayers from David, God had given eare, and from this hearing of thoſe prayers was David come to this thankfull confidence, The Lord hath heard, the Lord will heare. Now, Beloved, this prayer which David ſpeaks of here, which our firſt tranſlation calls a Petition, is very properly rendred in our ſecond tranſlation, a Supplication; for Supplications were à Suppliciis; Supplications amongſt the Gentiles were ſuch ſacrifices, as were made to the gods, out of confiſcations, out of the goods of thoſe men, upon whom the State had inflicted any pecuniary or capitall puniſhment. Supplicationes, à Suppliciis; and therefore this prayer which David made to God, when his hand was upon him, in that heavy correction, and calamitie, which occaſioned this Pſalme, is truly and proper- Supplicatio.

ly called a Supplication, that is, a Prayer, or Petition, that proceeds from ſuffering. A

And if God have heard his ſupplication, if God have regarded him then, when he was in his diſpleaſure, if God have turned to him, when he was turned from him, and ſtroakt him with the ſame hand that ſtruck him, God will much more perfect his own worke, and grant his prayer after; if God would endure to looke upon him in his deformitie, he will delight to looke upon him then, when he hath ſhed the light and the lovelineſſe of his owne countenance upon him: It is the Apoſtles argument, as well as Davids,

Rom. 5. 10. If when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God, by the death of his Sonne, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life. When David found, that God had heard his Supplications, the voyce of his ſuffering, of his puniſhment, he was ſure he would heare his Prayer, the voyce of his thankfulneſſe too.

Oratio. And this was Davids ſecond reaſon, for his alacrity, and confidence, that God would never be weary of hearing, he had heard him, and he would heare him ſtill, he had heard B the Supplication, and he would heare his Prayer; for this word, which ſignifies Prayer here, is derived from Palal, which ſignifies properly Separare: As his Supplication was acceptable, which proceeded à Supplicio, from a ſenſe of his afflictions; ſo this Prayer, which came Poſt ſeparationem, after he had ſeparated, and divorced himſelfe from his former company, after his Diſcedite, his diſcharging of all the workers of iniquitie, muſt neceſſarily be better accepted at Gods hand. He that heares a Suppliant, that is, a man in miſery, and does ſome ſmall matter for the preſent eaſe of that man, and proceeds no farther, Ipſum quod dedit, perit, That which he gave is loſt, it is drowned by that floud of miſery that overflows and ſurrounds that wretched man, he is not the better to morrow for to dayes almes, Et vitam producit ad miſeriam, that very almes prolongs his miſerable life ſtill; without to dayes almes, he ſhould not have had a to morrow to be miſerable in. Now, Chriſt onely is the Samaritane which perfected his cure upon the wounded man: C

Luk. 10. 33. He ſaw him, ſayes the text, ſo did the reſt that paſſed by him; but, He had compaſſion on him; ſo he might, and yet actually have done him no good; but, He went to him; ſo he might too, and then out of a delicateneſſe or faſtidiouſneſſe, have gone from him againe; but (to contract) he bound up his wounds, he powred in oyle and wine, he put him upon his own beaſt, he brought him to an Inne, made proviſion for him, gave the Hoſt money before-hand, gave him charge to have a care of him, and (which is the perfection of all, the greateſt teſtimony of our Samaritans love to us) he promiſed to come againe, and at that comming, he does not ſay, He will pay, but He will recompence, which is a more abundant expreſſing of his bountie. Chriſt loves not but in the way of marriage; if he

Hoſea 2. 19. begin to love thee, he tells thee, Sponſabo te mihi, I will marry thee unto me, and Sponſabo in æternum, I will marry thee for ever. For it is a marriage that prevents all miſtakings, and excludes all impediments, I will marry thee in righteouſneſſe, and in judgement, and in D loving kindneſſe, and in mercies, and in faithfulneſſe; many, and great aſſurances. And as it is added, Seminabo te mihi, which is a ſtrange expreſſing of Gods love to us, I will ſow thee unto me in the earth; when I have taken thee into my husbandry, thou ſhalt increaſe, and multiply, Seminabo te, and all that thou doeſt produce, ſhall be directed upon me, Seminabo te mihi, I will ſowe thee to my ſelfe: therefore thy ſoule may be bold to joyne with David in that thankfull confidence, He hath heard my ſupplication, and therefore He will heare my prayer; He lookt upon me in the duſt of the earth, much more will he doe ſo, having now laid me upon Carpets; he lookt upon me in my ſores, ſores of mine enemies malice, and ſores of mine own ſinnes, much more will he doe ſo now, when he hath imprinted in me the wounds of his own Sonne; for thoſe that were ſo many wounds upon him, are ſo many ſtarres upon me; He lookt upon me, may David ſay, when I followed the Ewes great with young, much more will he doe ſo now, now when by his E directions, I lead out his people, great with enterprizes, and victories againſt his enemies. Firſt David comes to that holy nobleneſſe, he dares caſt off ill inſtruments, and is not afraid of conſpiracy; he dares divorce himſelfe from dangerous company, and is not afraid of melancholy; he dares love God, and is not afraid of that jealouſie, that he is too religious to be imployed, too tender conſcienced to be put upon buſineſſe; he dares reprehend them that are under his charge, and is not afraid of a recrimination; he dares obſerve a Sabbath, he dares ſtartle at a blaſphemy, he dares forbeare countenancing a prophane or a ſcurrill jeſt with his praiſe, he dares be an honeſt man; which holy confidence conſtituted our firſt part, Depart from mee all yee workers of iniquity; And then he grounds

A grounds this confidence upon an undeceivable Rocke, upon Gods ſeale, God hath heard me, therefore God will heare mee. And when God heares, God ſpeaks too, and when God ſpeaks, God does too, and therefore I may ſafely proceede as I doe, which was our ſecond Conſideration. And then the third, which remains, is, that upon this, he returnes to the conſideration, what that was, that he had done; he had either imprecated, or denounced, at leaſt, heavy judgements upon his enemies; and he finds it avowable, and juſtifiable to have done ſo; and therefore perſiſts in it, Let all mine enemies be aſhamed, and ſore vexed; let them returne, and be aſhamed ſuddenly.

All cleane beaſts had both theſe marks, they divided the hoofe, and they chewed the cud: All good reſolutions, which paſſe our prayer, muſt have theſe two marks too, they muſt divide the hoofe, they muſt make a double impreſſion, they muſt be directed upon Gods glory, and upon our good, and they muſt paſſe a rumination, a chawing of the cud, B a ſecond examination, whether that prayer were ſo conditioned or no. We pray ſometimes out of ſudden and indigeſted apprehenſions; we pray ſometimes out of cuſtome, and communion with others; we pray ſometimes out of a preſent ſenſe of paine, or imminent danger; and this prayer may divide the hoofe; It may looke towards Gods glory, and towards our good; but it does not chew the cud too; that is, if I have not conſidered, not examined, whether it doe ſo or no, it is not a prayer that God will call a ſacrifice. You ſee Chriſt brought his own Prayer, Si poſſibile, If it be poſſible &c. through ſuch a rumination, Veruntamen, yet not my will &c. As many a man ſweares, and if he be ſurprized, and askt, what did you ſay, he does not remember his owne oath, not what he ſwore; ſo many a man prayes, and does not remember his own prayer. As a Clock gives a warning before it ſtrikes, and then there remains a ſound, and a tingling of the bell after it hath ſtricken: ſo a precedent meditation, and a ſubſequent rumination, make the C prayer a prayer; I muſt think before, what I will aske, and conſider againe, what I have askt; and upon this dividing the hoofe, and chewing the cud, David avowes to his own conſcience his whole action, even to this conſummation thereof, Let mine enemies be aſhamed &c. 3 Part.

Now theſe words, whether we conſider the naturall ſignification of the words, or the authority of thoſe men, who have been Expoſitors upon them, may be underſtood either way, either to be Imprecatoria, words of Imprecation, that David in the Spirit of anguiſh wiſhes that theſe things might fall upon his enemies, or els Prædictoria, words of Prediction, that David in the ſpirit of Prophecy pronounces that theſe things ſhall fall upon them. Imprecatoria

If they be Imprecatoria, words ſpoken out of his wiſh, and deſire, then they have in them the nature of a curſe: And becauſe Lyra takes them to be ſo, a curſe, he referres D the words Ad Dæmones, To the Devill: That herein David ſeconds Gods malediction upon the Serpent, and curſes the Devill, as the occaſioner and firſt mover of all theſe calamities; and ſayes of them, Let all our enemies be aſhamed, and ſore vexed &c. Others referre theſe words to the firſt Chriſtian times, and the perſecutions then, and ſo to be a malediction, a curſe upon the Jewes, and upon the Romans, who perſecuted the Primitive Church then, Let them be aſhamed &c. And then Gregory Nyſſen referres theſe words to more domeſticall and intrinſicke enemies, to Davids owne concupiſcences, and the rebellions of his owne luſts, Let thoſe enemies be aſhamed &c. For all thoſe who underſtand theſe words to be a curſe, a malediction, are loath to admit that David did curſe his enemies, meerly out of a reſpect of thoſe calamities which they had inflicted upon him. And that is a ſafe ground; no man may curſe another, in contemplation of himſelfe onely, if onely himſelfe be concerned in the caſe. And when it concernes the glo- E ry of God, our imprecations, our maledictions upon the perſons, muſt not have their principall relation, as to Gods enemies, but as to Gods glory; our end muſt be, that God may have his glory, not that they may have their puniſhment. And therefore how vehement ſoever David ſeeme in this Imprecation, and though he be more vehement in another place, Let them be confounded, and troubled for ever, yea, let them be put to ſhame, and periſh, yet that periſhing is but a periſhing of their purpoſes, let their plots periſh, let their malignity againſt thy Church be fruſtrated; for ſo he expreſſes himſelfe in the verſe immediately before, Fill their faces with ſhame; but why? and how? That they may ſeeke thy Name, O Lord; that was Davids end, even in the curſe; David wiſhes them no ill, but for their good; no worſe to Gods enemies, but that they might become his friends. Pſal. 83. 17.

The rule is good, which out of his moderation S. Auguſtine gives, that in all Inquiſitions, and Executions in matters of Religion, (when it is meerly for Religion without ſedition) Sint qui pœniteant, Let the men remaine alive, or elſe how can they repent? So in all Imprecations, in all hard wiſhes, even upon Gods enemies, Sint qui convertantur, Let the men remaine, that they may be capable of converſion; wiſh them not ſo ill, as that God can ſhew no mercy to them; for ſo the ill wiſh falls upon God himſelfe, if it preclude his way of mercy upon that ill man. In no caſe muſt the curſe be directed upon the perſon; for when in the next Pſalme to this, David ſeemes paſſionate, when hee asks that of God there, which he deſires God to forbear in the beginning of this Pſalme, when his Ne arguas in ira, O Lord rebuke me not in thine anger, is turned to a Surge Domine in ira, Ariſe O Lord in thine anger; S. Auguſtine begins to wonder, Quid? illum, quem perfectum dicimus, ad iram provocat Deum? Would David provoke God, who is all ſweetneſſe, and mildneſſe, to anger againſt any man? No, not againſt any man; but Diaboli poſſeſſio peccator, Every ſinner is a ſlave to his beloved ſin; and therefore, Miſericors orat, adverſus eum, quicunque orat, How bitterly ſoever I curſe that ſin, yet I pray for that ſinner. David would have God angry with the Tyran, not with the Slave that is oppreſſed; with the ſin, not with the ſoule that is inthralled to it. And ſo, as the words may be a curſe, a malediction in Davids mouth, we may take them into our mouth too, and ſay, Let thoſe enemies be aſhamed, &c.

Prædictoria.

If this then were an Imprecation, a malediction, yet it was Medicinall, and had Rationem boni, a charitable tincture, and nature in it; he wiſhed the men no harm, as men. But it is rather Prædictorium, a Propheticall vehemence, that if they will take no knowledge of Gods declaring himſelfe in the protection of his ſervants, if they would not conſider that God had heard, and would heare, had reſcued, and would reſcue his children, but would continue their oppoſition againſt him, heavy judgements would certainly fall upon them; Their puniſhment ſhould be certaine, but the effect ſhould be uncertaine; for God only knowes, whether his correction ſhall work upon his enemies, to their mollifying, or to their obduration. Thoſe bitter, and waighty imprecations which David hath heaped together againſt Iudas, ſeeme to be direct imprecations; and yet S. Peter himſelfe calls them Propheſies; Oportet impleri Scripturam; They were done, ſayes he, that the Scripture might be fulfilled; Not that David in his owne heart did wiſh all that upon Iudas; but only ſo, as fore-ſeeing in the Spirit of Propheſying, that thoſe things ſhould fall upon him, he concurred with the purpoſe of God therein, and ſo farre as he ſaw it to be the will of God, he made it his will, and his wiſh. And ſo have all thoſe judgements, which we denounce upon ſinners, the nature of Propheſies in them; when we reade in the Church, that Commination, Curſed is the Idolater, This may fall upon ſome of our owne kindred; and Curſed is he that curſeth Father or Mother, This may fall upon ſome of our owne children; and Curſed is he that perverteth judgement, This may fall upon ſome powerfull Perſons, that we may have a dependance upon; and upon theſe we doe not wiſh that Gods vengeance ſhould fall; yet we Propheſie, and denounce juſtly, that upon ſuch, ſuch vengeances will fall; and then, all Propheſies of that kinde are alwaies conditionall; they are conditionall, if we conſider any Decree in God; they muſt be conditionall in all our denunciations; if you repent, they ſhall not fall upon you, if not, Oportet impleri Scripturam, The Scripture muſt be fulfilled; We doe not wiſh them, we do but Propheſie them; no, nor we doe not propheſie them; but the Scriptures have prepropheſied them before; they will fall upon you, as upon Iudas, in condemnation, and perchance, as upon Iudas, in deſperation too.

Pſal. 109.
Acts 1. 16.

Mollior ſenſus.

Davids purpoſe then being in theſe words to work to their amendment, and not their finall deſtruction, we may eaſily and uſefully diſcerne in the particular words, a milder ſenſe then the words ſeeme at firſt to preſent. And firſt give me leave by the way, only in paſſing, by occaſion of thoſe words which are here rendred, Convertentur, & Erubeſcent, and which in the Originall are Iaſhabu, and Ieboſhu, which have a muſicall, and harmonious ſound, and agnomination in them, let me note thus much, even in that, that the Holy Ghoſt in penning the Scriptures delights himſelf, not only with a propriety, but with a delicacy, and harmony, and melody of language; with height of Metaphors, and other figures, which may work greater impreſſions upon the Readers, and not with barbarous, or triviall, or market, or homely language: It is true, that when the Grecians, and the Romanes, and S. Auguſtine himſelfe, undervalued and deſpiſed the Scriptures, becauſe

A cause of the poore and beggerly phrase, that they seemed to be written in, the Christians could say little against it, but turned still upon the other safer way, wee consider the matter, and not the phrase, because for the most part, they had read the Scriptures only in Translations, which could not maintaine the Majesty, nor preserve the elegancies of the Originall.

Their case was somewhat like ours, at the beginning of the Reformation; when, because most of those men who laboured in that Reformation, came out of the Romane Church, and there had never read the body of the Fathers at large; but only such ragges and fragments of those Fathers, as were patcht together in their Decretals, and Decretals, and other such Common placers, for their purpose, and to serve their turne, therefore they were loath at first to come to that issue, to try controversies by the Fathers. But as soone as our men that imbraced the Reformation, had had time to reade the Fathers, B they were ready enough to joyne with the Adversary in that issue: and still we protest, that we accept that evidence, the testimony of the Fathers, and refuse nothing, which the Fathers unanimly delivered, for matter of faith; and howsoever at the beginning some men were a little ombrageous, and startling at the name of the Fathers, yet since the Fathers have been well studied, for more then threescore yeares, we have behaved our selves with more reverence towards the Fathers, and more confidence in the Fathers, then they of the Romane perswasion have done, and been lesse apt to suspect or quarrell their Books, or to reprove their Doctrines, then our Adversaries have been. So, howsoever the Christians at first were fain to sink a little under that imputation, that their Scriptures have no Majesty, no eloquence, because these embellishments could not appeare in Translations, nor they then read Originalls, yet now, that a perfect knowledge of those languages hath brought us to see the beauty and the glory of those Books, we are able C to reply to them, that there are not in all the world so eloquent Books as the Scriptures; and that nothing is more demonstrable, then that if we would take all those Figures, and Tropes, which are collected out of secular Poets, and Orators, we may give higher, and livelier examples, of every one of those Figures, out of the Scriptures, then out of all the Greek and Latine Poets, and Orators; and they mistake it much, that thinke, that the Holy Ghost hath rather chosen a low, and barbarous, and homely style, then an eloquent, and powerfull manner of expressing himselfe.

To returne and to cast a glance upon these words in Davids prediction, upon his ene- Erubescent.
mies, what hardnesse is in the first, Erubescent, Let them be ashamed: for the word imports no more, our last Translation sayes no more, neither did our first Translators intend any more, by their word, Confounded; for that is, confounded with shame in themselves. This is Virga disciplinæ, sayes S. Bernard; as long as we are ashamed of sin, we D are not growne up, and hardned in it; we are under correction; the correction of a remorse. As soone as Adam came to be ashamed of his nakednesse, he presently thought of some remedy; if one should come and tell thee, that he looked through the doore, that he stood in a window over against thine, and saw thee doe such or such a sin, this would put thee to a shame, and thou wouldest not doe that sin, till thou wert sure he could not see thee. O, if thou wouldest not sin, till thou couldst think that God saw thee not, this shame had wrought well upon thee. There are complexions that cannot blush; there growes a blackenesse, a sootinesse upon the soule, by custome in sin, which overcomes all blushing, all tendernesse. White alone is paleness, and God loves not a pale soule, a soule possest with a horror, affrighted with a diffidence, and distrusting his mercy. Rednesse alone is anger, and vehemency, and distemper, and God loves not such a red soule, a soule that sweats in sin, that quarrels for sin, that revenges in sin. But that E whitenesse that preserves it selfe, not onely from being died all over in any foule colour, from contracting the name of any habituall sin, and so to be called such or such a sinner, but from taking any spot, from comming within distance of a tentation, or of a suspition, is that whitenesse, which God meanes, when he sayes, Thou art all faire my Love, and Cant. 4. 7.
there is no spot in thee. Indifferent looking, equall and easie conversation, appliableness to wanton discourses, and notions, and motions, are the Devils single money, and many pieces of these make up an Adultery. As light a thing as a Spangle is, a Spangle is silver; and Leafe-gold, that is blowne away, is gold; and sand that hath no strength, no coherence, yet knits the building; so doe approaches to sin, become sin, and fixe sin. To avoid these spots, is that whitenesse that God loves in the soule. But there is a rednesse that God loves too; which is this Erubeſcence that we ſpeak of, an aptneſſe in the ſoule to bluſh, when any of theſe ſpots doe fall upon it. A

that

God is the univerſall Confeſſor, the generall Penitentiary of all the world, and all dye in the guilt of their ſin, that goe not to Confeſſion to him. And there are ſins of ſuch waight to the ſoule, and ſuch intangling, and perplexity to the conſcience, in ſome circumſtances of the ſin, as that certainly a ſoule may receive much eaſe in ſuch caſes, by confeſſing it ſelfe to man. In this holy ſhamefaſtneſſe, which we intend in this outward bluſhing of the face, the ſoule goes to confeſſion too. And it is one of the principall arguments againſt Confeſſions by Letter, (which ſome went about to ſet up in the Romane Church) that that took away one of the greateſt evidences, and teſtimonies of their repentance, which is this Erubeſcence, this bluſhing, this ſhame after ſin; if they ſhould not be put to ſpeak it face to face, but to write it, that would remove the ſhame, which is a part of the repentance. But that ſoule that goes not to confeſſion to it ſelfe, that hath B not an internall bluſhing after a ſin committed, is a pale ſoule, even in the paleneſſe of death, and ſenſleſneſſe, and a red ſoule, red in the defiance of God. And that whiteneſſe, to avoid approaches to ſin, and that redneſſe, to bluſh upon a ſin, which does attempt us, is the complexion of the ſoule, which God loves, and which the Holy Ghoſt teſtifies, when he ſayes, My Beloved is white and ruddy. And when theſe men that David ſpeaks of here, had loſt that whiteneſſe, their innocency, for David to wiſh that they might come to a redneſſe, a ſhame, a bluſhing, a remorſe, a ſenſe of ſin, may have been no ſuch great malediction, or imprecation in the mouth of David, but that a man may wiſh it to his beſt friend, which ſhould be his own ſoule, and ſay, Erubeſcam, not let mine enemies, but let me be aſhamed with ſuch a ſhame.

Cant. 5. 10.

Conturbentur. Ver. 2. & 3.

In the ſecond word, Let them be ſore vexed, he wiſhes his enemies no worſe then himſelfe had been: For he had uſed the ſame word of himſelfe before, Oſſa turbata, My bones are vexed, and Anima turbata, My ſoule is vexed; and conſidering, that David had found this vexation to be his way to God, it was no malicious imprecation, to wiſh that enemy the ſame Phyſick that he had taken, who was more ſick of the ſame diſeaſe then he was. For this is like a troubled Sea after a tempeſt; the danger is paſt, but yet the billow is great ſtill: The danger was in the calme, in the ſecurity, or in the tempeſt, by miſ-interpreting Gods corrections to our obduration, and to a remorſeleſſe ſtupefaction; but when a man is come to this holy vexation, to be troubled, to be ſhaken with a ſenſe of the indignation of God, the ſtorme is paſt, and the indignation of God is blowne over. That ſoule is in a faire and neare way, of being reſtored to a calmneſſe, and to repoſed ſecurity of conſcience, that is come to this holy vexation. C

In a flat Map, there goes no more, to make Weſt Eaſt, though they be diſtant in an extremity, but to paſte that flat Map upon a round body, and then Weſt and Eaſt are all one. In a flat ſoule, in a dejected conſcience, in a troubled ſpirit, there goes no more to the making of that trouble, peace, then to apply that trouble to the body of the Merits, to the body of the Goſpel of Chriſt Jeſus, and conforme thee to him, and thy Weſt is Eaſt, thy Trouble of ſpirit is Tranquillity of ſpirit. The name of Chriſt is Oriens, The Eaſt; And yet Lucifer himſelfe is called Filius Orientis, The Son of the Eaſt. If thou beeſt fallen by Lucifer, fallen to Lucifer, and not fallen as Lucifer, to a ſenſleſneſſe of thy fall, and an impenitibleneſſe therein, but to a troubled ſpirit, ſtill thy Proſpect is the Eaſt, ſtill thy Climate is heaven, ſtill thy Haven is Jeruſalem; for, in our loweſt dejection of all, even in the duſt of the grave, we are ſo compoſed, ſo layed down, as that we look to the Eaſt; If I could beleeve that Trajan, or Tecla, could look Eaſt-ward, that is, towards Chriſt, in hell, I could beleeve with them of Rome, that Trajan and Tecla were redeemed by prayer out of hell. God had accepted ſacrifices before; but no ſacrifice is called Odor quietis, It is not ſaid, That God ſmelt a ſavor of reſt, in any ſacrifice, but that which Noah offered, after hee had beene variouſly toſſed and tumbled, in the long hulling of the Arke upon the waters. A troubleſome ſpirit, and a quiet ſpirit, are farre aſunder; But a troubled ſpirit, and a quiet ſpirit, are neare neighbours. And therefore David meanes them no great harme, when hee ſayes, Let them be troubled; For, Let the winde be as high as it will, ſo I ſayle before the winde, Let the trouble of my ſoule be as great as it will, ſo it direct me upon God, and I have calme enough. D

Zach. 6. 12. Eſay 14. 12.

Gen. 8. 21. E

Convertantur. And this peace, this calme is implyed in the next word, Convertantur, which is not, Let them be overthrowne, but Let them returne, let them be forced to returne; hé prayes, that

A that God would do ſomething to croſſe their purpoſes; becauſe as they are againſt God, ſo they are againſt their owne ſoules. In that way where they are, he ſees there is no remedy; and therefore he deſires that they might be Turned into another way; What is that way? This. Turne us O Lord, and we ſhall be turned; That is, turned the right way; Towards God. And as there was a promiſe from God, to heare his people, not onely when they came to him in the Temple, but when they turned towards that Temple, in what diſtance ſoever they were, ſo it is alwaies accompanied with a bleſsing, occaſionally to turne towards God; But this prayer, Turne us, that we may be turned, is, that we may be, that is, remaine turned, that we may continue fixed in that poſture. Lots Wife turned her ſelfe, and remained an everlaſting monument of Gods anger; God ſo turne us alwaies into right wayes, as that we be not able to turne our ſelves out of them. For God hath Viam rectam, & bonam, as himſelfe ſpeakes in the Prophet, A right way, and then a good
B way, which yet is not the right way, that is, not the way which God of himſelfe would go. For his right way is, that we ſhould ſtill keepe in his way; His good way is, to beat us into his right way againe, by his medicinall corrections, when we put our ſelves out of his right way. And that, and that onely David wiſhes, and we wiſh, That you may Turne, and Be turned, ſtand in that holy poſture, all the yeare, all the yeares of your lives, That your Chriſtmas may be as holy as your Eaſter, even your Recreations as innocent as your Devotions, and every roome in the houſe as free free from prophaneneſſe as the Sanctuary. And this he ends as he begun, with another Erubeſcant, Let them be aſhamed, and that Valde velociter, Suddenly: for David ſaw, that if a ſinner came not to a ſhame of ſin quickly, he would quickly come to a ſhameleſneſſe, to an impudence, to a ſearedneſſe, to an obduration in it.

Now beloved, this is the worſt curſe that comes out of a holy mans mouth, even to-
C wards his enemie, that God would correct him to his amendment. And this is the worſt harme that we meane to you, when we denounce the judgements of God againſt ſin and ſinners, Vt erubeſcatis, that we might ſee blood in your faces, the blood of your Saviour working in that ſhame for ſin. That that queſtion of the Prophet might not confound you, Were they aſhamed when they committed abomination? nay, they were not aſhamed; Erubeſcere neſciebãt, they were never uſed to ſhame, they knew not how to be aſhamed. Therefore, ſayes he, they ſhall fall among ſt them that fall, they ſhall do as the world does, ſin as their neighbours ſin, and fall as they fall, irrepentantly here, and hereafter irrecoverably. And then, Vt conturbati ſitis, that you may be troubled in your hearts, and not cry Peace, Peace, where there is no peace, and flatter your ſelves, becauſe you are in a true Religion, and in the right way; for a Child may drowne in a Font, and a Man may be poyſoned in the Sacrament, much more periſh, though in a true Church. And alſo Vt revertamini, that
D you may returne againe to the Lord, returne to that ſtate of pureneſſe, which God gave you in Baptiſme, to that ſtate, which God gave you the laſt time you received his body and blood ſo as became you. And then laſtly, Vt erubeſcatis velociter, that you may come to the beginning of this, and to all this quickly, and not to defer it, becauſe God defers the judgement. For to end this with S. Auguſtines words, upon this word Velociter, Quandocunq; venit, celerrimè venit, quod deſperatur eſſe venturum: How late ſoever it come, that comes quickly, if it come at all, which we beleeved would never come. How long ſoever it be, before that judgement come, yet it comes quickly, if it come before thou looke for it, or be ready for it. Whoſoever labours to ſleepe out the thought of that day, His damnation ſleepeth not, ſayes the Apoſtle. It is not onely, that his damnation is not dead, that there ſhall never be any ſuch day, but that it is no day aſleepe: every midnight ſhall be a day of judgement to him, and keepe him awake; and when conſternation, and laſſitude
E lend him, or conterfait to him a ſleep, as S. Baſil ſayes of the righteous, Etiam ſomnia juſtorum preces ſunt, That even their Dreames are prayers, ſo this incorrigible ſinners Dreames ſhall be, not onely preſages of his future, but acts of his preſent condemnation.

Ier. 6. 15.

16 March 1262 - A very good Sermon.

SERM.

SERM. LVI.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 32. 1, 2.

Bleſſed is he whoſe trangreßion is forgiven, whoſe ſinne is covered; Bleſſed is the man, unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquitie, and in whoſe ſpirit there is no guile.

THis that I have read to you, can ſcarce be called all the Text; I propoſed for the Text, the firſt and ſecond verſes, and there belongs more to the firſt, then I have delivered in it; for, in all thoſe Tranſlators, and Expoſitors, who apply themſelves exactly to the Originall, to the Hebrew, the Title of the Pſalme, is part of the firſt verſe of the Pſalme. S. Auguſtine gives ſomewhat a ſtrange reaſon, why the Booke of Enoch, cited by S. Iude in his Epiſtle, and ſome other ſuch ancient Books, as that, were never received into the body of Canonicall Scriptures, Vt in Authoritate apud nos non eſſent, nimia fecit eorum Antiquitas, The Church ſuſpected them, becauſe they were too Ancient, ſayes S. Auguſtine. But that reaſon alone, is ſo far from being enough to exclude any thing from being part of the Scriptures, as that we make it juſtly an argument, for the receiving the Titles of the Pſalmes into the Body of Canonicall Scriptures, that they are as ancient as the Pſalmes themſelves. So then the Title of this Pſalme enters into our Text, as a part of the firſt verſe. And the Title is Davidis Erudiens; where we need not inſert (as our Tranſlators in all languages and Editions have conceived a neceſſity to do) any word, for the cleering of the Text, more then is in the Text it ſelfe, (And therefore Tremellius hath inſerted that word, An Ode of David, we, A Pſalme of David, others, others) for the words themſelves yeeld a perfect ſenſe in themſelves, Le David Maſchil, is Davidis Erudiens, that is, Davidis Eruditio, Davids Inſtitution, Davids Catechiſme; And ſo our Text, which is the firſt and ſecond verſe, taking in all the firſt verſe, in all accounts, is now Davids Catechiſme; Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſsion is forgiven &c.

Diviſio. In theſe words, our parts ſhall be theſe; firſt, That ſo great a Maſter as David, proceeded by way of Catechiſme, of inſtruction in fundamentall things, and Doctrines of edification. Secondly, That the foundation of this Building, the firſt leſſon in this Art, the firſt letter in this Alphabet, is Bleſſedneſſe; for, Primus actus voluntatis eſt Amor; Man is not man, till he have produced ſome acts of the faculties of that ſoule, that makes him man; till he underſtand ſomething, and will ſomething, Till he know, and till he would have ſomething, he is no man; Now, The firſt Act of the will is love; and no man can love any thing, but in the likeneſſe, and in the notion of Happineſſe, of Bleſſedneſſe, or of ſome degree thereof; and therefore David propoſes that for the foundation of his Catechiſme, Bleſſedneſſe; The Catechiſme of David, Bleſſed is the Man. But then, in a third Conſideration, we lay hold upon S. Auguſtins Aphoriſme, Amare niſi nota non poſſumus, We cannot truly love any thing, but that we know; And therefore David being to proceede Catechiſtically, and for Inſtruction, propoſes this Bleſſedneſſe, which as it is in Heaven, and reſerved for our poſſeſſion there, is in-intelligible, (as Tertullian ſpeaks) unconceivable, he purpoſes it in ſuch notions, and by ſuch lights, as may enable us to ſee it, and know it in this life. And thoſe lights are in this Text, Three; for, The forgiveneſſe of Tranſgreſsions, And then, The Covering of ſinnes, And laſtly, The not imputing of Iniquity, which three David propoſes here, are not a threefold repeating of one and the ſame thing; But this Bleſſedneſſe conſiſting in our Reconciliation to God, (for we were created in a ſtate of friendſhip with God, our rebellion put us into a ſtate of hoſtility, and now we need a Reconciliation, becauſe we are not able to maintaine a war againſt God, no, nor againſt any other enemy of man, without God) this Bleſſedneſſe David doth not deliver us all at once, in three expreſſings of the ſame thing, but he gives us one light thereof,

A thereof, in the knowledge that there is a Forgiving of Tranſgreſſions, another, in the Covering of ſinnes, and a third, in the not Imputing of Iniquity. But then, (that which will conſtiture a fourth Conſideration) when God hath preſented himſelfe, and offered his peace, in all theſe, there is alſo ſomething to be done on our part; for though the Forgiving of Tranſgreſſion, The Covering of ſinne, The not Imputing of Iniquity, proceed onely from God, yet God affords theſe to none but him, In whoſe ſpirit there is no guile. And ſo you have all that belongs to the Maſter, and his manner of teaching, David Catechiſing; And all that belongs to the Doctrine and the Catechiſme, Bleſſedneſſe, That is Reconciliation to God, notified in thoſe three acts of his mercy; And all that belongs to the Diſciple, that is to be Catechized, A docile, an humble, a ſincere heart, In whoſe ſpirit there is no guile; And to theſe particulars, in their order thus propoſed, we ſhall now paſſe.

B That then which conſtitutes our firſt part, is this, That David, then whom this world never had a greater Maſter for the next, amongſt the ſonnes of men, delivers himſelfe, by way of Catechiſing, of fundamentall and eaſie teaching. As we ſay juſtly, and confidently, That of all Rhetoricall and Poeticall figures, that fall into any Art, we are able to produce higher ſtraines, and livelier examples, out of the Scriptures, then out of all the Orators, and Poets in the world, yet we reade not, we preach not the Scriptures for that uſe, to magnifie their Eloquence; So in Davids Pſalmes we finde abundant impreſſions, and teſtimonies of his knowledge in all arts, and all kinds of learning, but that is not it which he propoſes to us. Davids laſt words are, and in that Davids holy glory was placed, That he was not onely the ſweet Pſalmiſt, That he had an harmonious, a melodious, a charming, a powerfull way of entring into the ſoule, and working upon the affections of men, but he was the ſweet Pſalmiſt of Iſrael, He employed his faculties for C the conveying of the God of Iſrael, into the Iſrael of God; The ſpirit of the Lord ſpake by me, and his word was in my tongue; Not the ſpirit of Rhetorique, nor the ſpirit of Poetry, nor the ſpirit of Mathematiques, and Demonſtration, But, The ſpirit of the Lord, the Rock of Iſrael ſpake by me, ſayes he; He boaſts not that he had delivered himſelfe in ſtrong, or deepe, or myſterious Arts, that was not his Rock; but his Rock was the Rock of Iſrael, His way was to eſtabliſh the Church of God upon fundamentall Doctrines. Moſes was learned in all the wiſedome of the Egyptians, ſayes Stephen. Likely to be ſo, becauſe being adopted by the Kings daughter, he had an extraordinary education; And likely alſo, becauſe he brought ſo good naturall faculties, for his Maſters to worke upon, Vt Reminiſci potiùs videretur, quàm diſcere, That whatſoever any Maſter propoſed unto him, he rather ſeemed to remember it then, then to learne it but then; And yet in Moſes books, we meet no great teſtimonies, or deepe impreſſions of theſe learnings in Moſes: D He had (as S. Ambroſe notes well) more occaſions to ſpeak of Naturall philoſophy, in the Creation of the world, and of the more ſecret, and reſerved, and remote corners of Nature, in thoſe counterfeitings of Miracles in Pharaohs Court, then he hath laid hold of. So Nebuchadnezzar appointed his Officers, that they ſhould furniſh his Court, with ſome young Gentlemen, of good bloud and families of the Jews; And (as it is added there) well favoured youths, in whom there was no blemiſh, ſkilfull in all wiſedome, and cunning in knowledge, and underſtanding ſcience; And then farther, To be taught the tongue, and the learning of the Chaldeans. And Daniel was one of theſe, and, no doubt, a great Proficient in all theſe; and yet Daniel ſeemes not to make any great ſhew of theſe learnings in his writings. S. Paul was in a higher Pedagogy, and another manner of Univerſity then all this; Caught up into the third heavens, into Paradiſe, as he ſayes; and there he learnt much; but (as he ſayes too) ſuch things as it was not lawfull to utter; That is, E It fell not within the lawes of preaching to publiſh them. So that not onely ſome learning in humanity, (as in Moſes and Daniels caſe) but ſome points of Divinity, (as in S. Pauls caſe) may be unfit to be preached. Not that a Divine ſhould be ignorant of either; either ornaments of humane, or myſteries of divine knowledge. For, ſayes S. Auguſtine, Every man that comes from Egypt, muſt bring ſome of the Egyptians goods with him. Quanto auro exivit ſuffarcinatus Cyprianus, ſayes he, How much of the Egyptian gold and goods brought Cyprian, and Lactantius, and Optatus, and Hilary out of Egypt? That is, what a treaſure of learning, gathered when they were of the Gentils, brought they from thence, to the advancing of Chriſtianity, when they applied themſelves to it? S. Auguſtine confeſſes, that the reading of Cicero's Hortenſius, Mutavit affectum meum, began in him

1. Part. Catechiſmus

2 Sam. 23. 1.

Ver. 2.

Ver. 3.

Act. 7. 22.

Exod. 2. 10.

Philo.

Dan. 1. 4.

2 Cor. 12. 2.

L. 3. c. 4.

him a Converſion from the world, Et ad teipſum, Domine, mutavit preces meas, That booke, ſayes he, converted me to more fervent prayers to thee, my God; Et ſurgere jam cæperam ut ad te redirem, By that help I roſe, and came towards thee. And ſo Iuſtin Martyr had his Initiation, and beginning of his Converſion, from reading ſome paſſages in Plato. S. Baſil expreſſes it well; They that will dye a perfect colour, dip it in ſome leſſe perfect colour before. To be a good Divine, requires humane knowledge; and ſo does it of all the Myſteries of Divinity too; becauſe, as there are Devils that will not be caſt out but by Faſting and Prayer, ſo there are humours that undervalue men, that lacke theſe helps. But our Congregations are not made of ſuch perſons; not of meere naturall men, that muſt be converted out of Ariſtotle, and by Cicero's words, nor of Arians that require new proofes for the Trinity, nor Pelagians that muſt be preſſed with new diſcoveries of Gods Predeſtination; but perſons imbracing, with a thankfull acquieſcence therein, Doctrines neceſſary for the ſalvation of their ſoules in the world to come, and the exaltation of their Devotion in this. This way David calls his, a Catechiſme. And let not the greateſt Doctor think it unworthy of him to Catechize thus, nor the learnedeſt hearer to be thus catechized; Chriſt enwraps the greateſt Doctors in his Perſon, and in his practiſe, when he ſayes, Sinite parvulos, Suffer little children to come unto me; and we do not ſuffer them to come unto us, if when they come, we doe not ſpeak to their underſtanding, and to their edification, for that is but an abſent preſence, when they heare, and profit not; And Chriſt enwraps the learnedeſt hearers, in the perſons of his owne Diſciples, when he ſayes, Except yee become as theſe little children, yee cannot enter into the Kingdome of heaven; Except you nouriſh your ſelves with Catechiſticall, and Fundamentall Doctrines, you are not in a wholeſome diet. Now in this Catechiſme, the firſt ſtone that David layes, (and that that ſupports all) the firſt object that David preſents, (and that that directs to all) is Bleſſedneſſe; Davids Catechiſme; Bleſſed is the man.

2 Part. Beatitudo.

Philoſophers could never bring us to the knowledge, what this Summum bonum, this Happineſſe, this Bleſſedneſſe was. For they conſidered only ſome particular fruits thereof; and it is much eaſier, how high ſoever a tree be, to come to a taſte of ſome of the fruits, then to digge to the root of that tree: They ſatisfied themſelves with a little taſte of Health, and Pleaſure, and Riches, and Honour, and never conſidered that all theſe muſt have their root in heaven, and muſt have a relation to Chriſt Jeſus, who is the root of all. And as theſe Philoſophers could never tell us, what this bleſſedneſſe was, ſo Divines themſelves, and thoſe who are beſt exerciſed in the language of the Holy Ghoſt, the Originall tongue of this Text, cannot give us a cleare Grammaticall underſtanding, of this firſt word, in which David expreſſes this Bleſſedneſſe, Aſhrei, which is here Tranſlated Bleſſed. They cannot tell, whether it be an Adverb, (And then it is Bene viro, Well is it for that man, A pathetique, a vehement acclamation, Happily, Bleſſedly is that man provided for) Or whether it be a Plurall Noune, (and then it is Beatitudines, ſuch a Bleſſedneſſe as includes many, all bleſſednesſes in it) And one of theſe two it muſt neceſſarily be in the Rules of their Conſtruction; That either David enters with an Admiration, O how happily is that man provided for! Or with a Proteſtation, That there is no particular Bleſſedneſſe, which that man wants, that hath this, This Reconciliation to God.

Euſebius obſerves out of Plato, that he enjoyned the Poets, and the Writers in his State, to deſcribe no man to be happy, but the good men; none to be miſerable, but the wicked. And his Scholar Ariſtotle enters into his Book of Ethiques, and Morall Doctrine, with that Contemplation firſt of all, That every man hath naturally a diſpoſition to affect, and deſire happineſſe. David who is elder then they, begins his Book of Pſalmes ſo; The firſt word of the firſt Pſalme, is the firſt word of this Text, Bleſſed is the man. He comprehends all that belongs to mans knowledge, and all that belongs to mans practiſe, in thoſe two, firſt in underſtanding true Bleſſedneſſe, and then, in praiſing God for it: Davids Alpha is Beatus vir, O the Bleſſedneſſe of righteous men! And Davids Omega is Laudate Dominum, O that men would therefore bleſſe the Lord! And therefore, as he begins this Book with Gods bleſſing of man, ſo he ends it with mans praiſing of God: For, where the laſt ſtroak upon this Pſaltery, the laſt verſe of the laſt Pſalme, is, Let every thing that hath breath praiſe the Lord, Yet he addes one note more to us in particular, Praiſe ye the Lord; and there is the end of all. And ſo alſo our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe, himſelfe, in his owne preaching, obſerved that Method; He begun his great Sermon in the Mount with that, Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, Bleſſed are they that mourne, Bleſſed are the pure in heart; Bleſſedneſſe alone was an abundant recompence for all. And ſo the ſubject of Iohn Baptiſts Commiſſion before, and of his Diſciples Commiſſion after, was ſtill the ſame, to preach this Bleſſedneſſe, That the Kingdome of God, that is, Reconciliation to God in his Viſible Church, was at hand, was forthwith to be eſtabliſhed amongſt them. Mat. 5. 3. 3. 2. 10. 7.

Though then the Conſummation of this Bleſſedneſſe be that Viſio Dei, That ſight of God, which in our glorified ſtate we ſhall have in heaven, yet, becauſe there is an inchoation thereof in this world, which is that which we call Reconciliation, it behooves us to conſider the diſpoſition requiſite for that. It is a lamentable perverſeneſſe in us, that we are ſo contentiouſly buſie, in inquiring into the Nature, and Eſſence, and Attributes of God, things which are reſerved to our end, when we ſhall know at once, and without ſtudy, all that, of which all our lives ſtudy can teach us nothing; And that here, where we are upon the way, we are ſo negligent and lazy, in inquiring of things, which belong to the way. Thoſe things we learne in no Schoole ſo well as in adverſity. As the body of man, and conſequently health, is beſt underſtood, and beſt advanced by Diſſections, and Anatomies, when the hand and knife of the Surgeon hath paſſed upon every part of the body, and laid it open: ſo when the hand and ſword of God hath pierced our ſoul, we are brought to a better knowledge of our ſelves, then any degree of proſperity would have raiſed us to.

All creatures were brought to Adam, and, becauſe he underſtood the natures of all thoſe creatures, he gave them names accordingly. In that he gave no name to himſelfe, it may be by ſome perhaps argued, that he underſtood himſelfe leſſe then he did other creatures. If Adam be our example, in the time and Schoole of nature, how hard a thing the knowledge of our ſelves is, till we feele the direction of adverſity, David is alſo another example in the time of the Law, who firſt ſaid in his proſperity, He ſhould never be moved; But, When, ſayes he, thou hideſt thy face from me, I was troubled, and then I cryed unto thee O Lord, and I prayed unto my God; Then; but not till then. The ſame Art, the ſame Grammar laſts ſtill; and Peter is an example of the ſame Rule, in the time of grace, who was at firſt ſo confident, as to come to that, Si omnes ſcandalizati, if all forſook him, Si mori oportuit, If he muſt die with him, or dye for him, he was ready, and yet without any terror from an armed Magiſtrate, without any ſurprizall of a ſubtile Examiner, upon the queſtion of a poore Maid he denied his Maſter: But then, the bitterneſſe of his ſoule taught him another temper, and moderation; when Chriſt asked him after, Amas me? Loveſt thou me? not to pronounce upon an infallible confidence, I have loved, and I doe, and I will doe till death, but, Domine tu ſcis, Lord thou knoweſt that I love thee; My love to thee is but the effect of thy love to me, and therefore Lord continue thine, that mine may continue. No ſtudy is ſo neceſſary as to know our ſelves; no Schoole-maſter is ſo diligent, ſo vigilant, ſo aſſiduous, as Adverſity: And the end of knowing our ſelves, is to know how we are diſpoſed for that which is our end, that is this Bleſſedneſſe; which, though it be well collected and ſummed by S. Auguſtine, Beatus qui habet quicquid vult, & nihil mali vult, He onely is bleſſed, that deſires nothing but that which is good for him, and hath all that, we muſt purſue, in thoſe particulars, which here, in Davids Catechiſme, conſtitute this Bleſſedneſſe, and conſtitute our third Part, and are delivered in three Branches, firſt, The forgiving of our tranſgreſſions, And then, The covering of our ſinnes, And thirdly, The not imputing of our iniquities. Pſal. 30. 6.

Firſt then, that in this third Part, we may ſee in the firſt Branch, the firſt notification of this Bleſſedneſſe, we conſider the two termes, in which it is expreſſed, what this is, which is tranſlated Tranſgreſſion, and then what this Forgiving imports. The Originall word is Paſhang, and that ſignifies ſin in all extenſions, The higheſt, the deepeſt, the waightieſt ſin; It is a malicious, and a forcible oppoſition to God: It is when this Herod, and this Pilat (this Body, and this ſoule of ours) are made friends and agreed, that they may concurre to the Crucifying of Chriſt. When not onely the members of our bodies, but the faculties of our ſoul, our will and underſtanding are bent upon ſin: when we doe not only ſin ſtrongly, and hungerly, and thirſtily, (which appertain to the body) but we ſin rationally, we finde reaſons, (and thoſe reaſons, even in Gods long patience) 3 Part. Tranſgreſſion.

why we ſhould ſin: We ſin wittily, we invent new ſins, and we thinke it an ignorant, a dull, and an unſociable thing, not to ſin; yea we ſin wiſely, and make our ſin, our way to preferment. Then is this word uſed by the Holy Ghoſt, when hé expreſſes both the vehemence, and the waight, and the largeneſſe, and the continuance, all extenſions, all dimenſions of the ſins of Damaſcus; Amos 1.3. Thus ſaith the Lord, for three tranſgreſſions of Damaſcus, and for foure, I will not turne to it, becauſe they have threſhed Gilead with threſhing inſtruments of Iron; So then, we conſider ſin here, not as a ſtaine, ſuch as Originall ſin may be, nor as a wound, ſuch as every actuall ſin may be, but as a burden, a complication, a packing up of many ſins, in an habituall practiſe thereof. This is that waight that ſunke the whole world under water, in the firſt floud, and ſhall preſſe downe the fire it ſelfe, to conſume it a ſecond time. It is a waight that ſtupifies and benums him that beares it, ſo, as that the ſinner feeles not the oppreſſion of his owne ſins; Auguſt. Et quid miſerius miſero non miſerante ſeipſum? What miſery can be greater, then when a miſerable man hath not ſenſe to commiſerate his owne miſery? Our firſt errors are out of Levity, and S. Auguſtin hath taught us a proper ballaſt and waight for that, Amor Dei pondus animæ, The love of God would carry us evenly, and ſteadily, if we would embarke that: But as in great tradings, they come to ballaſt with Merchandiſe, ballaſt and fraight is al one; ſo in this habituall ſinner, all is ſin, plots and preparations before the act, gladneſſe and glory in the act, ſometimes diſguiſes, ſometimes juſtifications after the act, make up one body, one fraight of ſin. So then Tranſgreſſion in this place, in the naturall ſignification of the word, is a waight, a burden, and carrying it, as the word requires, to the greateſt extenſion, it is the ſin of the whole World; And that ſinne is forgiven; which is the ſecond Terme.

Forgiven. The Prophet does not ſay here, Bleſſed is that man that hath no tranſgreſſion, for that were to ſay, Bleſſed is that man that is no man. All people, all Nations, did ever in Nature acknowledge not onely a guiltineſſe of ſin, but ſome meanes of reconciliation to their Gods in the Remiſſion of ſins: for they had all ſome formall, and Ceremoniall Sacrifices, and Expiations, and Luſtrations, by which they thought their ſins to be purged, and waſhed away. Whoſoever acknowledges a God, acknowledges a Remiſſion of ſins, and whoſoever acknowledges a Remiſſion of ſins, acknowledges a God. And therefore in this firſt place, David does not mention God at all; he does not ſay, Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion the Lord hath forgiven; for he preſumes it to be an impoſſible tentation to take hold of any man, that there can be any Remiſſion of ſin, from any other perſon, or by any other meanes, then from and by God himſelfe; and therefore Remiſſion of ſins includes an Act of God; But what kinde of Act, is more particularly deſigned in the Originall word, which is Naſa, then our word, forgiving, reaches to; for the word does not onely ſignifie Auferre, but ferre; not onely to take away ſin, by way of pardon, but to take the ſin upon himſelfe, and ſo to beare the ſin, and the puniſhment of the ſin, in his owne perſon. And ſo Chriſt is the Lambe of God, Qui tollit, not onely that takes away, but that takes upon himſelfe, the ſins of the world. Eſay 53.4. Tulit, portavit, Surely he hath borne our griefes, and carried our ſorrowes; Thoſe griefes, thoſe ſorrowes which we ſhould, he hath borne, and carried in his owne perſon. So that, as it is all one, never to have come in debt, and to have diſcharged the debt; So the whole world, all mankinde, conſidered in Chriſt, is as innocent as if Adam had never ſinned. And ſo this is the firſt beame of Bleſſedneſſe that ſhines upon my ſoule, That I beleeve that the juſtice of God is fully ſatiſfied in the death of Chriſt, and that there is enough given, and accepted in the treaſure of his blood, for the Remiſſion of all Tranſgreſſions. And then the ſecond beame of this Bleſſedneſſe, is in The covering of ſins.

Sinne. Now to benefit our ſelves by this part of Davids Catechiſme, we muſt (as we did before) conſider the two termes, of which this part of this Bleſſedneſſe conſiſts, ſin, and covering. Sin in this place is not ſo heavy a word, as Tranſgreſſion was in the former; for that was ſin in all extenſions, ſinne in all formes, all ſin of all men, of all times, of all places, the ſin of all the world upon the ſhoulders of the Saviour of the world. In this place, (the word is Catah, and by the derivation thereof from Nata, which is to Decline, to ſtep aſide, or to be withdrawne, and Kut, which is filum, a thread, or a line) that which we call ſin here, ſignifies Tranſilire lineam, To depart, or by any tentation to be withdrawne from the direct duties, and the exact ſtraightneſſe which is required of us in this world, for the attaining of the next: So that the word imports ſins of infirmity, ſuch ſins as

A as doe fall upon Gods beſt ſervants, ſuch ſins as rather induce a confeſſion of our weakneſſe, and an acknowledgement of our continuall need of pardon for ſome thing paſſed, and ſtrength againſt future invaſions, then that induce any devaſtation, or obduration of the conſcience, which, Tranſgreſſion, in the former branch implied. For ſo this word, Catah, hath that ſignification (as in many other places) there, where it is ſaid, That there were ſeven hundred left-handed Benjamits, which would ſling ſtones at a haires breadth, and not faile; that is, not miſſe the marke a haires breadth. And therefore when this word Catah, ſin, is uſed in Scripture, to expreſſe any weighty, hainous, enormous ſin, it hath an addition, Peccatum magnum peccaverunt, ſayes Moſes, when the people were become Idolaters, Theſe people have ſinned a great ſin; otherwiſe it ſignifies ſuch ſin, as deſtroyes not the foundation, ſuch as in the nature thereof, does not wholly extinguiſh Grace, nor grieve the Spirit of God in us. And ſuch ſinnes God covers, ſaies David here. Now

Iudg 20.16.

Exod.32.31.

B what is his way of covering theſe ſins?

As Sin in this notion, is not ſo deepe a wound upon God, as Tranſgreſſion in the other, ſo Covering here extends not ſo far, as Forgiving did there. There forgiving was a taking away of ſin, by taking that way, That Chriſt ſhould beare all our ſins, it was a ſuffering, a dying, it was a penall part, and a part of Gods juſtice, executed upon his one and onely Son; here it is a part of Gods mercy, in ſpreading, and applying the merits and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, upon all them, whom God by the Holy Ghoſt hath gathered in the profeſſion of Chriſt, and ſo called to the apprehending and embracing of this mantle, this garment, this covering, the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt in the Chriſtian Chriſt; In which Church, and by his viſible Ordinances therein, the Word, and Sacraments, God covers, hides, conceales, even from the inquiſition of his owne juſtice, thoſe ſmaller ſins, which his ſervants commit, and does not turne them out of his ſervice, for thoſe ſins. So the

Covering.

C word (the word is Caſah, which we tranſlate Covering) is uſed, A wiſe man concealeth knowledge; that is, Does not pretend to know ſo much as indeed he does: So, our mercifull God, when he ſees us under this mantle, this covering, Chriſt ſpread upon his Church, conceales his knowledge of our ſins, and ſuffers them not to reflect upon our conſciences, in a conſternation thereof. So then, as the Forgiving was Auferre ferendo, a taking away of ſin, by taking all ſin upon his owne perſon, So this Covering is Tegere attingendo, To cover ſin, by comming to it, by applying himſelfe to our ſinfull conſciences, in the meanes inſtituted by him in his Church: for they have in that language another word, Sacac, which ſignifies Tegere obumbrando, To cover by overſhadowing, by refreſhing. This is Tegere obumbrando, To cover by ſhadowing, when I defend mine eye from the offence of the Sun, by interpoſing my hand betweene the Sun and mine eye, at this diſtance, a far off: But Tegere attingendo, is when thus I lay my hand upon mine eye,

Prov.12.23.

D and cover it cloſe, by that touching. In the knowledge that Chriſt hath taken all the ſins of all the world upon himſelfe, that there is enough done for the ſalvation of all mankinde, I have a ſhadowing, a refreſhing; But becauſe I can have no teſtimony, that this generall redemption belongs to me, who am ſtill a ſinner, except there paſſe ſome act betweene God and me, ſome ſeale, ſome inveſtiture, ſome acquittance of my debts, my ſins, therefore this ſecond beame of Davids Bleſſedneſſe, in this his Catechiſme, ſhines upon me in this, That God hath not onely ſowed and planted herbs, and Simples in the world, medicinall for all diſeaſes of the world, but God hath gathered, and prepared thoſe Simples, and preſented them, ſo prepared, to me, for my recovery from my diſeaſe: God hath not onely received a full ſatisfaction for all ſinne in Chriſt, but Chriſt, in his Ordinances in his Church, offers me an application of all that for my ſelfe, and covers my ſin, from the eye of his Father, not onely obumbrando, as hee hath ſpread himſelfe as a

E Cloud refreſhing the whole World, in the value of the ſatisfaction, but Attingendo, by comming to me, by ſpreading himſelf upon me, as the Prophet did upon the dead Child, Mouth to mouth, Hand to hand; In the mouth of his Miniſter, he ſpeaks to me; In the hand of the Miniſter, he delivers himſelfe to me; and ſo by theſe viſible acts, and ſeales of my Reconciliation, Tegit attingendo, He covers me by touching me; He touches my conſcience, with a ſenſe and remorſe of my ſins, in his Word; and he touches my ſoule, with a faith of having received him, and all the benefit of his Death, in the Sacrament. And ſo he covers ſin; that is, keepes our ſins of infirmity, and all ſuch ſins, as do not in their nature quench the light of his grace, from comming into his Fathers preſence, or calling for vengeance there. Forgiving of tranſgreſſions is the generall ſatisfaction for all the world, and reſtoring the world to a poſſibility of ſalvation in the Death of Chriſt; Covering of ſin, is the benefit of diſcharging and eaſing the conſcience, by thoſe bleſſed helps which God hath afforded to thoſe, whom he hath gathered in the boſome, and quickned in the wombe of the Chriſtian Church. And this is the ſecond beame of Bleſſedneſs, caſt out by David here; and then the third is, The not imputing of iniquity, Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity.

Impute. In this alſo, (as in the two former we did) we conſider this Imputing, and then this Iniquity, in the roote and Originall ſignification of the two words. When in this place the Lord is ſaid, not to impute ſinne, it is meant, That the Lord ſhall not ſuffer me to impute ſinne to my ſelfe. The word is Caſhab, and Caſhab imports ſuch a thinking, ſuch a ſurmiſing, as may be ſubject to error, and miſtaking. To that purpoſe we finde the word,

1 Sam. 1. 12. where Hannah was praying, and Eli the Prieſt, who ſaw her lips move, and heard no prayer come from her, thought ſhe had been drunke, Imputed drunkenneſſe unto her, and ſaid, How long wilt thou be drunke? put away thy wine: So that this Imputing, is ſuch an Imputing of ours as may be erronious, that is, an Imputing from our ſelves, in a diffidence, and jealouſie, and ſuſpition of Gods goodneſſe towards us. To which purpoſe, we conſider alſo, that this word, which we tranſlate here Iniquity, Gnavah, is oftentimes in the Scripture uſed for puniſhment, as well as for ſinne: and ſo indifferently for both, as that if we will compare Tranſlation with Tranſlation, and Expoſition with Expoſition,

Gen. 4. 13. it will be hard for us to ſay, whether Cain ſaid, Mine iniquity is greater then can be pardoned. or, My puniſhment is greater then I can beare; and our laſt Tranſlation, which ſeems to have been moſt carefull of the Originall, takes it rather ſo, My puniſhment, in the Text, and lays the other, My ſinne, aſide in the Margin. So then, this Imputing, being an Imputing which ariſes from our ſelves, and ſo may be accompanied with error, and miſtaking, that we Impute that to our ſelves, which God doth not impute, And this miſ-imputing of Gods anger to our ſelves, ariſing out of his puniſhments, and his corrections inflicted upon us, That becauſe we have croſſes in the world, we cannot beleeve, that we ſtand well in the ſight of God, or that the forgiving of Tranſgreſſions, or Covering of ſinnes appertains unto us, we juſtly conceive, that this not Imputing of Iniquity, is that Serenitas Conſcientiæ, That brightneſſe, that clearneſſe, that peace, and tranquillity, that calme and ſerenity, that acquieſcence, and ſecurity of the Conſcience, in which I am delivered from all ſcruples, and all timorouſneſſe, that my Tranſgreſſions are not forgiven, or my ſins not covered. In the firſt Act, we conſider God the Father to have wrought; He propoſed, he decreed, he accepted too a ſacrifice for all mankind in the death of Chriſt. In the ſecond, The Covering of ſinnes, we conſider God the Sonne to worke, Incubare Eccleſiæ, He ſits upon his Church, as a Hen upon her Eggs, He covers all our ſinnes, whom he hath gathered into that body, with ſpreading himſelfe and his merits upon us all there. In this third, The not Imputing of Iniquity, we conſider God the Holy Ghoſt to worke, and, as the Spirit of Conſolation, to blow away all ſcruples, all diffidences, and to eſtabliſh an aſſurance in the Conſcience. The Lord imputes not, that is, the Spirit of the Lord, The Lord the Spirit, The Holy Ghoſt, ſuffers not me to impute to my ſelfe thoſe ſinnes, which I have truly repented. The over-tenderneſſe of a bruiſed and a faint conſcience may impute ſinne to it ſelfe, when it is diſcharged; And a ſeared and obdurate Conſcience may impute none, when it abounds; If the Holy Ghoſt work, he rectifies both; and, if God doe inflict puniſhments, (according to the ſignification of this word Gnavah) after our Repentance, and the ſeals of our Reconciliation, yet he ſuffers us not to impute thoſe ſinnes to our ſelves, or to repute thoſe corrections, puniſhments, as though he had not forgiven them, or, as though he came to an execution after a pardon, but that they are laid upon us medicinally, and by way of prevention, and precaution againſt his future diſpleaſure. This is that Pax Conſcientiæ, The peace of Conſcience, when there is not one ſword drawne: This is that Serenitas Conſcientiæ, The Meridionall brightneſſe of the Conſcience, when there is not one Cloud in our ſky. I ſhall not hope, that Originall ſin ſhall not be imputed, but feare, that Actuall ſin may: not hope that my dumbe ſins ſhall not, but my crying ſins may; not hope that my apparant ſins, which have therefore induced in me a particular ſenſe of them, ſhall not, but my ſecret ſins, ſins that I am not able to returne and repreſent to mine owne memory, may: for this Non Imputabit, hath no limitation; God ſhall ſuffer the Conſcience thus rectified, to terrifie it ſelfe with nothing; which is alſo farther extended in the Originall,

where

A where it is not Non Imputat, but Non Imputabit; Though after all this we doe fall into the ſame, or other ſins, yet we ſhall know our way, and evermore have our Conſolation in this, That as God hath forgiven our tranſgreſſion, in taking the ſins of all mankinde upon himſelfe, for he hath redeemed us, and left out Angels, And as he hath covered our ſin, that is, provided us the Word, and Sacraments, and caſt off the Jews, and left out the Heathen, So he will never Impute mine Iniquity, never ſuffer it to terrifie my Conſcience; Not now, when his Judgements, denounced by his Miniſter, call me to him here; Nor hereafter, when the laſt bell ſhall call me to him, into the grave; Not at laſt, when the Angels Trumpets ſhall call me to him, from the duſt, in the Reſurrection. But that, as all mankinde hath a Bleſſedneſſe, in Chriſts taking our ſins, (which was the firſt Article in this Catechiſme) And all the Chriſtian Church a Bleſſedneſſe, in covering our ſins, (which was the ſecond) So I may finde this Bleſſedneſſe, in this worke of
B the Holy Ghoſt, not to Impute, that is, not to ſuſpect, that God imputes any repented ſin unto me, or reſerves any thing to lay to my charge at the laſt day, which I have prayed may be, and therefore hoped hath been forgiven before. But then, after theſe three parts, which we have now, in our Order propoſed at firſt, paſſed through, That David applies himſelfe to us, in the moſt convenient way, by the way of Catechiſme, and inſtruction in fundamentall things; And then, that he lays for his foundation of all Beatitude, Bleſſedneſſe, Happineſſe, which cannot be had, in the conſummation, and perfection thereof, but in the next world; But yet, in the third place, gives us an inchoation, an earneſt, an evidence of this future and conſummate Bleſſedneſſe, in bringing us faithfully to beleeve, That Chriſt dyed ſufficiently for all the world, That Chriſt offers the application of all this, to all the Chriſtian Church, That the Holy Ghoſt ſeals an aſſurance thereof, to every particular Conſcience well rectified; After all this done thus largely C on Gods part, there remains ſomething to be done on ours, that may make all this effectuall upon us, Vt non ſit dolus in ſpiritu, That there be no guile in our ſpirit, which is our fourth part, and Concluſion of all.

Of all theſe fruits of this Bleſſedneſſe, there is no other root but the goodneſſe of God himſelfe; but yet they grow in no other ground, then in that man, In cujus ſpiritu non eſt dolus. The Comment and interpretation of S. Paul, hath made the ſenſe and meaning of this place cleare: To him that worketh, the reward is of debt, but to him that beleeveth, and worketh not, his faith is counted for righteouſneſſe, Even as David deſcribeth the bleſſedneſſe of Man, ſayes the Apoſtle there, and ſo proceeds with the very words of this Text. Doth the Apoſtle then, in this Text, exclude the Co-operation of Man? Differs this propoſition, That the man in whom God imprints theſe beames of Bleſſedneſſe, muſt be without guile in his ſpirit, from thoſe other propoſitions, Si vis ingredi, If thou wilt enter
D into life, keepe the Commandements; And, Maledictus qui non, Curſed is he that performes not all? Grows not the Bleſſedneſſe of this Text, from the ſame roote, as the Bleſſedneſſe in the 119. Pſal. ver. 1. Bleſſed are they, who walke in the way of the Lord? Or doth Saint Paul take David to ſpeake of any other Bleſſedneſſe in our Text, then himſelfe ſpeaks of, If through the Spirit yee mortifie the deeds of the body, yee ſhall live? Doth S. Paul require nothing, nothing out of this Text, to be done by man? Surely he does; And theſe propoſitions are truly all one, Tantùm credideris, Onely beleeve, and you ſhall be ſaved; And, Fac hoc & vives, Doe this, and you ſhall be ſaved; As it is truly all one purpoſe, to ſay, If you live you may walke, and to ſay, If you ſtretch out your legges, you may walke. To ſay, Eat of this Tree, and you ſhall recover, and to ſay, Eat of this fruit, and you ſhall recover, is all one; To attribute an action to the next Cauſe, or to the Cauſe of that Cauſe, is, to this purpoſe, all one. And therefore, as God gave a Reformation to E his Church, in proſpering that Doctrine, That Juſtification was by faith onely: ſo God give an unity to his Church, in this Doctrine, That no man is juſtified, that works not; for, without works, how much ſoever he magnifie his faith, there is Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile in his ſpirit.

As then the Prophet Davids principall purpoſe in this Text, is, according to the Interpretation of S. Paul, to derive all the Bleſſedneſſe of man from God: ſo is it alſo to put ſome conditions in man, comprehended in this, That there be no guile in his ſpirit. For, in this repentant ſinner, that ſhall be partaker of theſe degrees of Bleſſedneſſe, of this Forgiving, of this Covering, of this Not Imputing, there is required Integra pœnitentia, A perfect, and intire repentance; And to the making up of that, howſoever the words and

4. Part. Dolus.

Rom. 4. 5.

Mat. 19. 17.

Rom. 8. 13.

termes may have been miſ-uſed, and defamed, we acknowledge, that there belongs a Contrition, a Confeſſion, and a Satisfaction; And all theſe (howſoever our Adverſaries ſlander us, with a Doctrine of eaſe, and a Religion of liberty) we require with more exactneſſe, and ſeverity, then they doe. For, for Contrition, we doe not, we dare not ſay, as ſome of them, That Attrition is ſufficient; that it is ſufficient to have ſuch a ſorrow for ſin, as a naturall ſenſe, and fear of torment doth imprint in us, without any motion of the feare of God: We know no meaſure of ſorrow great enough for the violating of the infinite Majeſty of God, by our tranſgreſſion. And then for Confeſſion, we deny not a neceſſity to confeſſe to man; There may be many caſes of ſcruple, of perplexity, where it were an expoſing our ſelves to farther occaſions of ſin, not to confeſſe to man; And in Confeſſion, we require a particular deteſtation of that ſin which we confeſſe, which they require not. And laſtly, for Satisfaction, we imbrace that Rule, Condigna ſatisfactio malè facta corrigere, Our beſt Satisfaction is, to be better in the amendment of our lives: And diſpoſitions to particular ſins, we correct in our bodies by Diſcipline, and Mortifications; And we teach, that no man hath done truly that part of Repentance, which he is bound to doe, if he have not given Satisfaction, that is, Reſtitution, to every perſon damnified by him. If that which we teach, for this intireneſſe of Repentance, be practiſed, in Contrition, and Confeſſion, and Satisfaction, they cannot calumniate our Doctrine, nor our practiſe herein; And if it be not practiſed, there is Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile in their ſpirit, that pretend to any part of this Bleſſedneſſe, Forgiving, or Covering, or Not imputing, without this. For, he that is ſorry for ſin, onely in Contemplation of hell, and not of the joyes of heaven, that would not give over his ſin, though there were no hell, rather then he would loſe heaven, (which is that which ſome of them call Attrition) He that confeſſes his ſin, but hath no purpoſe to leave it, He that does leave the ſin, but being growne rich by that ſin, retaines, and enjoyes thoſe riches, this man is not intire in his Repentanne, but there is guile in his ſpirit.

Bernard. A B C

Prov. 18. 9. He that is ſlothfull in his work, is brother to him that is a great waſter; He that makes half-repentances, makes none. Men run out of their eſtates, as well by a negligence, and a not taking account of their Officers, as by their own prodigality: Our ſalvation is as much indangered, if we call not our conſcience to an examination, as if we repent not thoſe ſins, which offer themſelves to our knowledge, and memory. And therefore David places the conſummation of his victory in that, I have purſued mine enemies, and overtaken them, neither did I turne againe, till they were conſumed: We require a purſuing of the enemy, a ſearch for the ſin, and not to ſtay till an Officer, that is, a ſickneſſe, or any other calamity light upon that ſin, and ſo bring it before us; We require an overtaking of the enemy, That we be not weary, in the ſearch of our conſciences; And we require a conſuming of the enemy, not a weakning only; a diſlodging, a diſpoſſeſſing of the ſin, and the profit of the ſin; All the profit, and all the pleaſure of all the body of ſin; for he that is ſorry with a godly ſorrow, he that confeſſes with a deliberate deteſtation, he that ſatisfies with a full reſtitution for all his ſins but one, Dolus in ſpiritu, There is guile in his ſpirit, & he is in no better caſe, then if at Sea he ſhould ſtop all leaks but one, and periſh by that.

Pſal. 18. 37. D

Bernar. Si vis ſalvi, ſolve omnes catenas; If thou wilt be diſcharged, cancel all thy Bonds; one chain till that be broke, holds as faſt as ten. And therfore ſuffer your conſideration to turn back a little upon this object, that there may be Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile in the ſpirit, in our pretence to all thoſe parts of Bleſſedneſſe, which David recommends to us in this Catechiſme, In the Forgiveneſſe of tranſgreſſions, In the Covering of ſin, In the Not imputing of iniquity.

Forgiving. First then, in this Forgiving of tranſgreſſions, which is our Saviour Chriſts taking away the ſins of the world, by taking them, in the puniſhment due to them, upon himſelfe, there is Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile in that mans ſpirit, that will ſo farre abridge the great Volumes of the mercy of God, ſo farre contract his generall propoſitions, as to reſtrain this ſalvation, not only in the effect, but in Gods own purpoſe, to a few, a very few ſoules. When Subjects complaine of any Prince, that he is too mercifull, there is Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile and deceit in this complaint; They doe but think him too mercifull to other mens faults; for, where they need his mercy for their own, they never think him too mercifull. And which of us doe not need God for all ſins? If we did not in our ſelves, yet it were a new ſin in us, not to deſire that God ſhould be as mercifull to every other ſinner, as to our ſelves. As in heaven, the joy of every ſoule ſhall be my joy, ſo the mercy of God to every ſoule here, is a mercy to my ſoule; By the extenſion of his mercies E

A mercies to others, I argue the application of his mercy to my ſelfe. This contracting, and abridging of the mercy of God, will end in deſpaire of our ſelves, that that mercy reaches not to us, or if we become confident, perchance preſumptuous of our ſelves, we ſhall deſpaire in the behalfe of other men, and think they can receive no mercy: And when men come to allow an impoſſibility of ſalvation in any, they will come to aſſigne that impoſſibility, nay to aſſigne thoſe men, and pronounce, for this, and this ſin, This man cannot be ſaved. There is a ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; and to make us afraid of all approaches towards that ſin, Chriſt hath told us, that that ſin is irremiſſible, unpardonable; But ſince that ſin includes impenitibleneſſe in the way, and actuall impenitence in the end, we can never pronounce, This is that ſin, or This is that ſinner. God is his Father that can ſay, Our Father which art in heaven, And his God that can ſay, I beleeve in God; And there is Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile in his ſpirit, the craft of the Serpent, (eyB ther the poyſon of the Serpent, in a ſelf-deſpaire, or the ſting of the Serpent, in an uncharitable prejudging, and precondemning of others) when a man comes to ſuſpect Gods good purpoſes, or contract Gods generall propoſitions; for, this forgiving of tranſgreſſions, is Chriſts taking away the ſins of all the world, by taking all the ſins of all men upon himſelfe. And this Guile, this Deceit may alſo be in the ſecond, in the Covering of ſins, which is the particular application of this generall mercy, by his Ordinances in his Church.

He then that without Guile will have benefit by this Covering, muſt Diſcover. Qui tegi vult peccata, detegat, is S. Auguſtines way: He that will have his ſins covered, let him uncover them; He that would not have them known, let him confeſſe them; He that would have them forgotten, let him remember them; He that would bury them, let him rake them up. There is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed, and hid, that ſhall Mat. 10. 26. C not be knowne. It is not thy ſending away a ſervant, thy locking a doore, thy blowing out a candle, no not though thou blow out, and extinguiſh the ſpirit, as much as thou canſt, that hides a ſin from God; but ſince thou thinkeſt that thou haſt hid it, by the ſecret carriage thereof, thou muſt reveale it by Confeſſion. If thou wilt not, God will ſhew thee that he needed not thy Confeſſion; He will take knowledge of it, to thy condemnation, and he will publiſh it to the knowledge of all the world, to thy confuſion. Tu feciſti abſconditè, ſayes God to David, by Nathan, Thou didſt it ſecretly, but I will doe this thing before all Iſrael, and before the Sun. Certainly it affects, and ſtings many men more, that God hath brought to light their particular ſins and offences, for which he does puniſh them, then all the puniſhments that he inflicts upon them; for then, they cannot lay their ruine upon fortune, upon viciſſitudes, and revolutions, and changes of Court, upon diſaffections of Princes, upon ſupplantations of Rivalls and Concurrents; but D God cleares all the world beſide; Perditio tua ex te, God declares that the puniſhment is his Act, and the Cauſe, my ſin. This is Gods way; and this he expreſſes vehemently againſt Jeruſalem, Behold, I will gather all thy Lovers, with whom thou haſt taken pleaſure, Ezek. 16. 37. and all them that thou haſt loved, with all them that thou haſt hated, and I will diſcover thy nakedneſſe to all them. Thoſe who loved us for pretended vertues, ſhall ſee how much they were deceived in us; Thoſe that hated us, becauſe they were able to looke into us, and to diſcerne our actions, ſhall then ſay Triumphantly, and publiquely to all, Did not we tell you what would become of this man? It was never likely to be better with him. I will ſtrip her naked, and ſet her as in the day that ſhe was borne; Howſoever thou wert co- Hoſ. 2. 3. vered with the Covenant, and taken into the Viſible Church, howſoever thou wert clothed, by having put on Chriſt in Baptiſme, yet, If thou ſin againſt me, (ſayes God) and hide it from me, I am againſt thee, and I will ſhew the Nations thy nakedneſſe, and the King- Nahum 3. 5. E domes thy ſhame.

To come to the covering of thy ſins without guile, firſt cover them not from thy ſelf, ſo, as that thou canſt not ſee yeſter-daies ſin, for to daies ſin; nor the ſins of thy youth, for thy preſent ſins: Cover not thy extortions with magnifique buildings, and ſumptuous furniture; Dung not the fields that thou haſt purchaſed with the bodies of thoſe miſerable wretches, whom thou haſt oppreſſed, neither ſtraw thine alleys and walks with the duſt of Gods Saints, whom thy hard dealing hath ground to powder. There is but one good way of covering ſins from our ſelves, Si bona facta malis ſuperponamus, If we come Gregor. to a habit of good actions, contrary to thoſe evils, which we had accuſtomed our ſelves to, and cover our ſins ſo; not that we forget the old, but that we ſee no new.

There

There is a good covering of ſins from our ſelves, by ſuch new habits, and there is a good covering of them from other men; for, he that ſins publiquely, ſcandalouſly, avowedly, that teaches and encourages others to ſin; That declares his ſin as Sodom, and hides it not, As in a mirror, in a looking glaſſe, that is compaſſed and ſet about with a hundred leſſer glaſſes, a man ſhall ſee his deformities in a hundred places at once, ſo hee that hath ſinned thus ſhall feele his torments in himſelfe, and in all thoſe, whom the not covering of his ſins hath occaſioned to commit the ſame ſins. Cover thy ſins then from thy ſelfe, ſo it be not by obduration; cover them from others, ſo it be not by hypocriſie; But from God cover them not at all; He that covereth his ſin, ſhall not proſper; but who ſo confeſſeth and forſaketh them, ſhall have mercy; Even in confeſſing, without forſaking, there is Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile and deceit in that ſpirit. Noluit agnoſcere, maluit ignoſcere, S. Auguſtine makes the caſe of a cuſtomary ſinner; He was ready to pardon himſelfe alwaies without any confeſſion; But God ſhall invert it to his ſubverſion, Maluit agnoſcere, noluit ignoſcere, God ſhall manifeſt his ſin, and not pardon it.

Eſay 3.9.

Prov.28.13.

Sin hath that pride, that it is not content with one garment; Adam covered firſt with fig-leaves, then with whole trees, He hid himſelfe amongſt the trees: Then hee covered his ſin, with the woman; ſhe provoked him: And then with Gods action, Quam tu dediſti, The Woman whom thou gaveſt me; And this was Adams wardrobe. David covers his firſt ſin of uncleanneſſe with ſoft ſtuffe, with deceit, with falſhood, with ſoft perſwaſions to Vriah, to go in to his Wife; Then he covers it with rich ſtuffe, with ſcarlet, with the blood of Vriah, and of the army of the Lord of Hoſts; And then he covers it with ſtrong and durable ſtuffe, with an impenitence, and with an inſenſibleneſſe, a yeare together; too long for a King, too long for any man, to weare ſuch a garment: And this was Davids wardrobe. But beloved, ſin is a ſerpent, and he that covers ſin, does but keepe it warme, that it may ſting the more fiercely, and diſperſe the venome and malignity thereof the more effectually. Adam had patched up an apron to cover him; God tooke none of thoſe leaves; God wrought not upon his beginnings, but he covered him all over with durable skins. God ſaw that Davids ſeverall coverings did rather load him, then cover the ſin, and therefore Tranſtulit, He tooke all away, ſin, and covering: for the coverings were as great ſins, as the radicall ſin, that was to be covered, was; yea greater; as the armes and boughs of a tree, are greater then the roote. Now to this extenſion, and growth, and largeneſſe of ſin, no leſſer covering ſerves then God in his Church. It was the prayer againſt them, who hindered the building of the Temple, Cover not their iniquity, neither let their ſin be put out in thy preſence. Our prayer is, Peccata noſtra non videat, ut nos videat, Lord looke not upon our ſins, that thou maiſt looke upon us. And ſince amongſt our ſelves, it is the effect of Love, to cover Multitudinem peccatorum, The multitude of ſins, yea to cover Vniverſa delicta, Love covereth all ſins, much more ſhall God, who is Love it ſelfe, cover our ſins ſo, as he covered the Egyptians, in a red Sea, in the application of his blood, by viſible meanes in his Church. That therefore thou mayeſt be capable of this covering, Commit thy wayes unto the Lord; that is, ſhow unto him, by way of confeſſion, what wrong wayes thou haſt gone, and inquire of him by prayer, what wayes thou art to go, and (as it is in the ſame Pſalme) He ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſſe as the light, and thy judgement as the noone day; And ſo there ſhall be no guile found in thy ſpirit, which might hinder this covering of thy ſin, which is, the application of Chriſts merits, in the Ordinances of his Church, nor the Not imputing of thine iniquity, which is our laſt conſideration, and the concluſion of all.

Nehem.4.5.

Auguſt.

1 Pet.4.8.

Prov.10.12.

Pſal.37.6.

Imputing.

This not imputing, is that ſerenity and acquieſcence, which a rectified conſcience enjoyes, when the Spirit of God beares witneſſe with my ſpirit, that, thus reconciled to my God, I am now guilty of nothing. S. Bernard defines the Conſcience thus, Inſeparabilis gloria, vel confuſio uniuſcujuſque, pro qualitate depoſiti: It is that inſeparable glory, or that inſeparable confuſion which every ſoule hath, according to that which is depoſited, and laid up in it. Now what is depoſited, and laid up in it? Naturally, hereditarily, patrimonially, Con-reatus, ſayes that Father, from our firſt Parents, a fellow-guiltineſſe of their ſin; and they have left us ſons and heires of the wrath and indignation of God, and that is the treaſure they have laid up for us. Againſt this, God hath provided Baptiſme; and Baptiſme waſhes away that ſin; for as we doe nothing to our ſelves in Baptiſme, but are therein meerely paſſive, ſo neither did we any thing our ſelves in Originall ſin, but therein are meerely paſſive too; and ſo the remedy, Baptiſme, is proportioned to the diſeaſe,

Originall

A Originall ſin. But originall ſin being thus waſhed away, we make a new ſtocke, we take in a new depoſitum, a new treaſure, Actuall and habituall ſins, and therein much being done by our ſelves, againſt God, into the remedy, there muſt enter ſomething to be done by our ſelves, and ſomething by God; And therefore we bring water to his wine, true teares of repentance to his true blood in the Sacrament, and ſo receive the ſeales of our reconciliation, and having done that, we may boldly ſay unto God, Doe not condemne me: ſhew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me. When we have ſaid as he doth, I have ſinned, what ſhall I doe to thee? And have done that that he hath ordained, we may ſay alſo as he doth, O thou preſerver of men, why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion, and take away mine iniquity? Why doeſt thou ſuffer me to faint and pant under this ſad apprehenſion, that all is not yet well betweene my ſoule and thee? We are far from encouraging any man to antidate his pardon; to preſume his pardon to be paſſed before it is: But when it is truly B paſſed the ſeales of Reconciliation, there is Dolus in ſpiritu, Guile and deceit in that ſpirit, nay it is the ſpirit of falſhood and deceit it ſelfe, that will not ſuffer us to injoy that pardon, which God hath ſealed to us, but ſtill maintaine jealouſies, and ſuſpition, between God and us. My heart is not opener to God, then the bowels of his mercy are to me; And to accuſe my ſelfe of ſin, after God hath pardoned me, were as great a contempt of God, as to preſume of that pardon, before he had granted it; and ſo much a greater, as it is directed againſt his greateſt attribute, his Mercy. Si apud Deum deponas injuriam, ipſe ultor erit, Lay all the injuries that thou ſuffereſt, at Gods feet, and hee will revenge them; Si damnum, ipſe reſtituet; Lay all thy loſſes there, and he will repaire them; Si dolorem, ipſe medicus; Lay downe all thy diſeaſes there, and he ſhall heale thee; Si mortem, ipſe reſuſcitator, Dye in his armes, and he ſhall breath a new life into thee; Add wee to Tertullian: Si peccata, ipſe ſepeliet, lay thy ſins in his wounds, and he ſhall bury them ſo C deepe, that onely they ſhall never have reſurrection: The Sun ſhall ſet, and have a to morrows reſurrection; Herbs ſhall have a winter death, and a ſprings reſurrection; Thy body ſhall have a long winters night, and then a reſurrection; Onely thy ſins buried in the wounds of thy Saviour, ſhall never have reſurrection; And therefore take heed of that deceit in the ſpirit, of that ſpirit of deceit, that makes thee impute ſins to thy ſelfe, when God imputes them not; But rejoyce in Gods generall forgiving of Tranſgreſſions, That Chriſt hath dyed for all, multiply thy joy in the covering of thy ſin, That Chriſt hath inſtituted a Church, in which that generall pardon is made thine in particular, And exalt thy joy, in the not imputing of iniquity, in that ſerenity, that tranquillity, that God ſhall receive thee, at thy laſt houre, in thy laſt Bath, the ſweat of death, as lovingly, as acceptably, as innocently, as he received thee, from thy firſt Bath, the laver of Regeneration, the font in Baptiſme. Amen.

D

SERM. LVII.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 32. 3, 4.

When I kept ſilence, my bones waxed old, through my roaring all the day long.
E For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me; my moyſture is turned into the drought of Summer. Selah.

ALL wayes of teaching, are Rule and Example: And though ordinarily the Rule be firſt placed, yet the Rule it ſelfe is made of Examples: And when a Rule would be of hard digeſtion to weake underſtandings, Example concocts it, and makes it eaſie: for, Example in matter of Doctrine, is as Aſſimilation in matter of Nouriſhment; The Example makes that that is propoſed for our learning and farther inſtruction, like ſomething which we knew before, as Aſſimilation makes that meat, which we have received, and digeſted, like thoſe parts, which Iob 10.2. 7.20.

Tertul.

which are in our bodies before. David was the ſweet ſinger of Iſrael; ſhall we ſay, Gods Precentor? His ſonne Solomon was the powerfull Preacher of Iſrael; ſhall we ſay, Gods Chaplain? Both of them, excellent, abundantly, ſuper-abundantly excellent in both thoſe wayes of Teaching; Poet, and Preacher, proceed in theſe wayes in both, Rule, and Example, the body and ſoule of Inſtruction. So this Pſalme is qualified in the Title thereof, A Pſalme of David giving Inſtruction. And having given his Inſtruction the firſt way, by Rule, in the two former verſes, That Bleſſednesſe conſiſted in the Remiſsion of ſinnes, but that this Remiſsion of ſinnes was imparted to none, Cui dolus in ſpiritu, In whoſe ſpirit there was any deceit, he proceeds in this Text, to the other fundamentall, and conſtitutive element of Inſtruction, Example; And by Example he ſhews, how far they are from that Bleſſednesſe, that conſiſts in the Remiſsion of ſinnes, that proceed with any deceit in their ſpirit. And that way of Inſtruction, by Example, ſhall be our firſt Conſideration; And our ſecond, That he propoſes himſelfe for the Example, I kept ſilence, ſayes he, and ſo My Bones waxed old, &c. And then, in a third part, we ſhall ſee, how far this holy Ingenuity goes, what he confeſſes of himſelfe: And that third part will ſubdivide it ſelfe, and flow out into many branches. Firſt, That it was he himſelfe that was In doloſo ſpiritu, In whoſe ſpirit there was deceit, Quia tacuit, becauſe he held his tongue, becauſe he diſguiſed his ſinnes, becauſe he did not confeſſe them. And yet, in the midſt of this ſilence of his, God brought him Ad rugitum, to voyces of Roaring, of Exclamation, to a ſenſe of paine, and a ſenſe of ſhame; ſo far he had a voyce, but ſtill he was in ſilence, for any matter of repentance. Secondly, he confeſſes the effect of this his ſilence, and this his Roaring, Inveteraverunt Oſſa, My Bones waxed old, and, my moiſture is turned into the drought of Summer. And then thirdly, he confeſſes the reaſon from whence this inveteration in his bones, and this incineration in his body proceeded, Quia aggravata manus, becauſe the hand of God lay heavy upon him, heavy in the preſent waight, and heavy in the long continuation thereof, day and night.. And laſtly, all this he ſeals with that Selah, which you finde at the end of the verſe, which is a kinde of Affidavit, of earneſt aſſeveration, and re-affirming the ſame thing, a kinde of Amen, and ratification to that which was ſaid; Selah, truly, verily, thus it was with me, when I kept ſilence, and deceitfully ſmothered my ſinnes, the hand of God lay heavy upon me, and as truly, as verily it will be no better with any man, that ſuffers himſelfe to continue in that caſe.

1 Part. Exemplum.

Firſt then, for the aſſiſtance, and the power, that example hath in Inſtruction, we ſee Chriſts Method, Quid ab initio, how was it from the beginning; Doe as hath been done before. We ſee Gods method to Moſes, for the Tabernacle, Looke that thou make every thing, after thy patterne, which was ſhewed thee in the Mount; And for the Creation it ſelfe, we know Gods method too; for though there were no world, that was elder brother to this world before, yet God in his owne minde and purpoſe had produced, and lodged certaine Idea's, and formes, and patterns of every piece of this world, and made them according to thoſe pre-conceived formes, and Idea's. When we conſider the wayes of Inſtruction, as they are beſt purſued in the Scriptures, ſo are there no Books in the world, that doe ſo abound with this comparative and exemplary way of teaching, as the Scriptures doe; No Books, in which that word of Reference to other things, that Sicut is ſo often repeated, Doe this, and doe that, Sicut, ſo, as you ſee ſuch and ſuch things in Nature doe; And Sicut, ſo as you finde ſuch and ſuch men, in ſtory, to have done. So David deals with God himſelfe, he propoſes him an Example; I aske no more favour at thy hands, for thy Church now, then thou haſt afforded them heretofore, Doe but unto theſe men now, Sicut Midianitis, as unto the Midianites, Sicut Siſera, as unto Siſera, as unto Iabin: Make their Nobles Sicut Oreb, like Oreb and like Zeb, and all their Princes Sicut Zeba, as Zeba and as Zalmana. For, theſe had been Examples of Gods juſtice: And to be made Examples of Gods anger, is the ſame thing, as to be a Malediction, a Curſe. For, in that law of Jealouſie, that bitter potion which the ſuſpected woman was to take, was accompanied with this imprecation, The Lord make thee a Curſe among the people; So we reade it; But S. Hierome, In Exemplum, The Lord make thee an Example among the people; that is, deale with thee ſo, as poſterity may be afraid, when it ſhall be ſaid of any of them, Lord deale with this woman ſo, as thou didſt with that Adultereſſe. And ſo the prayer of the people is upon Booz, Vt ſit in Exemplum, (as S. Hierom alſo reads that place) The Lord make thee an Example of vertue in Ephrata, and in Bethlem; that is, that Gods

Exod. 24. 40.

Pſal. 83. 3.

Num. 5. 26.

Ruth 4. 11.

people

A people might propose him to themselves, conforme themselves to him, and walke as he did. As on the other side, the anger of God is threatned so, God shall make thee Exemplum & stuporem, An Example and a Consternation; And Exemplum & derisum, An example and a scorne; That posterity, whensoever they should be threatned with Gods Judgements, they might presently returne to such Examples, and conclude, if our sins be to their Example, our Judgements will follow their Example too, a judgement accompanied with a consternation, a consternation aggravated with a scorne, we shall be a prey to our enemies, an astonishment to our selves, a contempt to all the world; We doe according to their Example, and according to their Example we shall suffer, is not a Conclusion of any Sorbon, nor a decision of any Rota, but the Logique of the universall Universitie, Heaven it selfe. And so when the Prophet would be excused from undertaking the office of a Prophet, he sayes, Adam exemplum meum ab adolescentiâ, Adam B hath been the example, that I have proposed to my selfe from my youth; As Adam did, so in the sweat of my browes, I also have eat my bread; I have kept Cattle; I have followed a Country life, and not made my selfe fit for the office and function of a Prophet, Adam hath been my Example from my youth. And when Solomon did not propose a Man, he proposed something els for his Example, an example he would have; He looked upon the ill husbands land, and he saw it over-growne, Et exemplo didici disciplinam, By that example I learnt to be wiser. Enter into the Armory, search the body and bowells of Story, for an answer to the question in Iob, Quis periit, Who ever perished being Innocent, or where were the righteous cut off? There is not one example; no where; never. Answer but that out of Records, Quis restitit, Who hath hardned himselfe against the Lord, and prospered? Or that, Quis contradicet, If he cut off, who can hinder him? There is no Example; No man, by no meanes. So, if thou be tempted with over-valuing C thine owne purity, finde an Example to answer that, Quis mundum, Who can bring a cleane thing out of uncleannesse? Or that, Who can say, I have made my heart cleane, I am pure from sinne? There is no Example; No man ever did it; No man can say it. If thou be tempted to worship God in an Image, be able to answer God something to that, To whom will yee liken God, or what likenesse will yee compare unto him? There can be no example, no patterne to make God by: for, that were to make God a Copy, and the other, by which he were made, the Originall. If thou have a tentation to withdraw thy selfe from the Discipline of that Church, in which God hath given thee thy Baptisme, finde an Example, to satisfie thy Conscience, and Gods people, in what age, in what place, there was any such Church instituted, or any such Discipline practised, as thou hast fancied to thy selfe. Beleeve nothing for which thou hast not a Rule; Doe nothing for which thou hast not an Example; for there is not a more dangerous D distemper in either Beliefe or Practise, then singularity; for there onely may we justly call for Miracles, if men will present to us, and binde us to things that were never beleeved, never done before. David therefore, in this Psalme, his Psalme of Instruction, (as himselfe calls it) doth both; He lays downe the Rule, he establishes it by Example, and that was our first Consideration, and we have done with that.

Our second is, That he goes not far for his Example; He labors not to shew his reading, but his feeling; not his learning, but his compunction; his Conscience is his Library, and his Example is himselfe, and he does not unclaspe great Volumes, but unbutton his owne breast, and from thence he takes it. Men that give Rules of Civill wisedome, and wise Conversation amongst men, use to say, that a wise man must never speak much of himselfe; It will argue, say they, a narrow understanding, that he knows little besides his own actions, or els that he overvalues his own actions, if he bring them E much into Discourse. But the wise men that seeke Christ, (for there were such wise men in the world once) Statesmen in the kingdome of heaven, they goe upon other grounds, and, whereSoever they may finde them, they seeke such Examples, as may conduce most to the glory of God: And when they make themselves Examples, they doe not rather choose themselves then others, but yet they doe not spare, nor forbeare themselves more then other men. David proposes his owne Example, to his owne shame, but to Gods glory. For, David was one of those persons, Qui non potuit solus perire, He could not sin alone, his sin authorized sin in others: Princes and Prelates, are Doctrinall men, in this sense and acceptation, that the subject makes the Princes life his Doctrine; he learns his Catechisme by the eye, he does what he sees done, and frames to himselfe Rules

Ezek. 5. 15. Jer. 48. 39.

Zech. 13. 5.

Pro. 24. 32.

Job 4. 7.

Job 9. 4. Job 11. 10.

Job 14. 27. Pro. 20. 9.

Esay 40. 18.

2 Part. Exemplum ipse.

Bernar.

Rules out of his Superiors Example. Therefore, for their Doctrine, David propoſes truly his own Example, and without diſguiſing, tells that of himſelfe, which no man elſe could have told. Chriſt who could doe nothing but well, propoſes himſelfe for an example of humility, I have given you an example; Whom? what? That you ſhould doe as I have done. So S. Paul inſtructs Titus, In all things ſhew a patterne of good works; But whom? for Titus might have ſhewed them many patternes; but Shew thy ſelfe a patterne, ſayes the Apoſtle; and not onely of aſſiduous, and laborious preaching, but of good works. And this is that, for which he recommends Timothy to the Church, Hee works the work of the Lord, And, not without a patterne, nor without that patterne, which S. Paul had given him in himſelfe, He works ſo, as I alſo doe. S. Paul, who had propoſed Chriſt to himſelfe to follow, might propoſe himſelfe to others, and wiſh as he does, I would all men were even as my ſelfe. For, though that Apoſtle, by denying it in his owne practiſe, ſeeme to condemne it in all others, To preach our ſelves, (We preach not our ſelves, but Chriſt Ieſus the Lord) yet to preach out of our owne hiſtory, ſo farre, as to declare to the Congregation, to what manifold ſins we had formerly abandoned our ſelves, how powerfully the Lord was pleaſed to reclaime us, how vigilantly he hath vouchſafed to preſerve us from relapſing, to preach our ſelves thus, to call up the Congregation, to heare what God hath done for my ſoule, is a bleſſed preaching of my ſelfe. And therefore Solomon does not ſpeak of himſelfe ſo much, nor ſo much propoſe and exhibit himſelfe to the Church, in any Book, as in that which he calls the Preacher, Eccleſiaſtes: In that Book, he hides none of his owne ſins; none of thoſe practiſes, which he had formerly uſed to hide his ſins: He confeſſes things there, which none knew but himſelfe, nor durſt, nor ſhould have publiſhed them of him, the King, if they had knowne them. So Solomon preaches himſelf to good purpoſe, and poures out his owne ſoule in that Book. Which is one of the reaſons which our Interpreters aſſigne, why Solomon cals himſelfe by this name, Eccleſiaſtes, Coheleth, which is a word of the Fœminine gender, and not Concionator, but Concionatrix, a Shee-preacher, becauſe it is Anima Concionatrix, It is his ſoule that preaches, he poures out his owne ſoule to the Congregation, in letting them know, how long the Lord let him run on in vanities, and vexation of ſpirit, and how powerfully and effectually he reclaimed him at laſt: For, from this Book, the Preacher, the ſhe-Preacher, the ſoule-Preacher, Solomon preaching himſelfe, rather her ſelfe, the Church raiſes convenient arguments (and the beſt that are raiſed) for the proofe of the ſalvation of Solomon, of which divers doubted. And though Solomon in this Book ſpeak divers things, not as his owne opinion, but in the ſenſe of worldly men, yet, as we have a note upon Plato's Dialogues, that though he doe ſo too, yet whatſoever Plato ſayes in the name and perſon of Socrates, that Plato alwayes meanes for his owne opinion, ſo whatſoever Solomon ſayes in the name of the Preacher, (the Preacher ſayes this, or ſayes that) that is evermore Solomons own ſaying. When the Preacher preaches himſelfe, his owne ſins, and his owne ſenſe of Gods Mercies, or Judgements upon him, as that is intended moſt for the glory of God, ſo it ſhould be applied moſt by the hearer, for his own edification; for, he were a very ill natured man, that ſhould think the worſe of a Preacher, becauſe he confeſſes himſelfe to be worſe then he knew him to be, before he confeſſed it. Therefore David thought it not enough, to have ſaid to his Confeſſor, to Nathan in private, Peccavi, I have ſinned; but here, before the face of the whole Church of God, even to the end of the world, (for ſo long theſe Records are to laſt) he propoſes himſelfe, for an Exemplary ſinner, for a ſinfull Example, and for a ſubject of Gods Indignation, whilſt he remained ſo, When I kept ſilence, and yet roared, Thy hand lay heavy upon me, and my moyſture was turned into the drought of Summer. And ſo we are come to our third Part, He teaches by Example; He propoſes himſelfe for the Example; and of himſelfe he confeſſes thoſe particulars, which conſtitute our Text.

3 Part. Three things he confeſſes in this Example. Firſt, that it was he himſelfe that was in doloſo ſpiritu, that had deceit in his ſpirit, Quia tacuit, becauſe he held his tongue, he diſguiſed his ſins, he did not confeſſe them; And yet, in the midſt of this ſilence of his, God brought him Ad Rugitum, to voyces of Roaring, of Exclamation, To a ſenſe of paine, or ſhame, or loſſe; ſo farre he had a voyce; But ſtill he was in ſilence, for any matter of repentance. Secondly, he confeſſes a lamentable effect of this ſilence, and this roaring, Inveteraverunt oſſa, His bones were conſumed, waxen old, and his moiſture dried up; and then he takes knowledge of the cauſe of all this calamity, the waight of Gods heavy

John 3.15. Titus 2.7. 1 Cor.16.10. 7.7. 2 Cor.4.5. Lorin. Proleg. C.5.

A heavy hand upon him. And to this Confeſſion he ſets to that ſeale, which is intended in the laſt word, Selah.

Silentium.

First then, David confeſſes his ſilence; therefore it was a fault: And he confeſſes it, as an inſtance, as an example of his being In doloſo ſpiritu, That there was deceit in his ſpirit; as long as he was ſilent, he thought to delude God, to deceive God; and this was the greateſt fault. If I be afraid of Gods power, becauſe I conſider that he can deſtroy a ſinner, yet I have his will for my Buckler; I remember, that he would not the death of a ſinner. If I be afraid that his will may be otherwiſe bent, (for what can I tell, whether it may not be his will to glorifie himſelfe in ſurprizing me in my ſins?) I have his Word for my Buckler, Miſerationes ejus ſuper omnia opera ejus, God does nothing, but that his Mercy is ſupereminent in that work, whatſoever; But if I think to ſcape his knowledge, by hiding my ſins from him, by my ſilence, I am In doloſo ſpiritu, if

B I think to deceive God, I deceive my ſelfe, and there is no truth in me.

Chriſti.

Prov. 26. 4. 5.

When we are to deale with fooles, we muſt, or we muſt not anſwer, as they may receive profit, or inconvenience by our anſwer, or our ſilence. Anſwer not a foole, according to his fooliſhneſſe, leſt thou be like him: But yet, in the next verſe, Anſwer a foole according to his fooliſhneſſe, leſt he be wiſe in his own conceit. But anſwer God alwaies. Though he ſpeak in the fooliſhneſſe of preaching, as himſelfe calls it, yet he ſpeaks wiſedome, that is, Peace to thy ſoule. We are ſure that there is a good ſilence; for we have a Rule for it from Chriſt, whoſe Actions are more then Examples, for his Actions are Rules. His patience wrought ſo that he would not ſpeak, his afflictions wrought ſo that he could not. He was brought as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, and he was dumb; There he would not ſpeake; My ſtrength is dried up like a potſheard, and my tongue cleaveth to my jawes, and thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death, ſayes David in the Perſon of Chriſt, and here he Eſay 53. Pſal. 22. 15.

C could not ſpeak.

Reverentia.

Hab. 2. ult.

Here is a good ſilence in our Rule: So is there alſo in Examples derived from that Rule. There is Silentium reverentiæ, A ſilence of reverence, for reſpect of the preſence; The Lord is in his holy Temple, let all the world keep ſilence before him. When the Lord is working in his Temple, in his Ordinances, and Inſtitutions, let not the wiſdome of all the world diſpute why God inſtituted thoſe Ordinances, the fooliſhneſſe of preaching, or the ſimplicity of Sacraments in his Church. Let not the wiſedome of private men diſpute, why thoſe whom God hath accepted as the repreſentation of the Church, thoſe of whom Chriſt ſayes, Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell the Church, have ordained theſe, or theſe Ceremonies for Decency, and Uniformity, and advancing of Gods glory, and mens Devotion in the Church; Let all the earth be ſilent, In Sacramentis, The whole Church may change no Sacraments, nor Articles of faith, and let particular men be ſilent In Sacra-

D mentalibus, in thoſe things which the Church hath ordained, for the better conveying, and imprinting, and advancing of thoſe fundamentall myſteries; for this ſilence of reverence which is an acquieſcence in thoſe things which God hath ordained, immediately, as Sacraments, or Miniſterially, as other Rituall things in the Church, David would not have complained of, nor repented.

Subjectionis.

1 Cor. 14. 34. 1 Tim. 2. 11.

And to this may well be referred Silentium ſubjectionis, That ſilence which is a recognition, a teſtimony of ſubjection. Let the women keep ſilence in the Church, for they ought to be ſubject: And, Let the women learne in ſilence, with all ſubjection. As farre as any juſt Commandement, either expreſly, or tacitly reaches, in injoyning ſilence, we are bound to be ſilent: In Morall ſeales of ſecrets, not to diſcover thoſe things which others upon confidence, or for our counſell, have truſted us withall; In charitable ſeales, not to diſcover thoſe ſins of others, which are come to our particular knowledge, but not by a

E judiciall way; In religious ſeales, not to diſcover thoſe things which are delivered us in Confeſſion, except in caſes excepted in that Canon; In ſecrets delivered under theſe ſeales, of Nature, of Law, of Eccleſiaſticall Canons, we are bound to be ſilent, for this is Silentium ſubjectionis, An evidence of our ſubjection to Superiours. But ſince God hath made man with that diſtinctive property, that he can ſpeak, and no other creature; ſince God made the firſt man able to ſpeak, as ſoone as he was in the world; ſince in the order of the Nazarites inſtituted in the old Teſtament, though they forbore wine, and outward care of their comelineſſe, in cutting their haire, and otherwiſe, yet they bound not themſelves to any ſilence; ſince in the other ſects, which grew up amongſt the Jews, Phariſees, and Sadduces, and Eſſeans, amongſt all their ſuperfluous, and ſuperſtitious auſterities, there was no inhibition of ſpeaking, and Communication; ſince in the twi- A Luk.1.20. light between the Old and New Teſtament, that dumbneſſe which was caſt upon Zacharie, was inflicted for a puniſhment upon him, becauſe hee beleeved not that, that the Angel had ſaid unto him, we may be bold to ſay, That if not that ſilence, which is enjoyned in the Romane Church, yet that ſilence which is practiſed amongſt them, for the concealing of Treaſons, and thoſe ſilences which are impoſed upon ſome of their Orders, That the Carthuſians may never ſpeake but upon Thurſdays, others upon other times, they are not ſilentia ſubjectionis, ſilences impoſed by a juſt authority, but they are in Doloſo ſpiritu, there is Deceit in their ſpirit; if not in every one of them, who execute the commandement, not in every poore Carthuſian, yet in them who impoſed it, who by ſuch an obedience in impertinent things, infatuate them, and accuſtome them to a blind and implicite obedience in matters of more dangerous conſequence. Silence of reverence, ſilence of ſubjection meet in this, and in this they determine, That we hold our B tongues from queſtioning any thing ordained by God, and from defaming any thing done by that power, which is eſtabliſhed by his Ordinance. And this ſilence fals not under Davids complaint, nor confeſſion.

Bonum. We have not long to ſtay upon this ſilence, which we call the Good ſilence, becauſe it is not the ſilence of our Text; This onely we ſay, That there is a ſilence which is abſolutely good, alwayes good, and there is another occaſionally good, ſometimes good, and ſometimes not ſo; and that is ſilentium Boni, or à Bono, An abſtinence from ſpeaking, or from doing ſome things, which of themſelves, if no circumſtance changed their nature, were good and requiſite. Silentium bonum, that ſilence that is abſolutely, and al-
Bernard. wayes good, is a quiet contentment in all that God ſends, Ne, unde debueras eſſe dives, fias pauper, leſt when God meant to make thee rich, and have indeed made thee rich, thou make thy ſelfe poore, by thinking thy ſelfe poore, and miſinterpreting Gods doing: C
That thou have not præcordia fatui, as the ſame Father ſpeaks, The bowels of an empty man, whining, and crying bowels; Sicut rota currus, fœnum portans & murmurans, As a Cart that hath a full and plentifull load, and ſqueaks and whines the more for that abundance. Neither murmure that thou haſt minus de Bonis, not Goods enough, nor mimis de Malis, Afflictions too many, but reckon how much more good God hath ſhewed thee, Lament.3.28. then thou haſt deſerved, and how much leſſe ill. Sit alone, and keep ſilence, becauſe thou haſt borne it, becauſe the Lord hath laid affliction upon thee; Thine eaſe is within two ver-Auguſt. ſes, For the Lord will not forſake thee for ever. If thou murmure, and ſay, Quid feci, Lord what have I done to thee, that thou ſhouldſt deale thus with me? thou ſhalt heare the juſtice of God anſwer thee, Verum dicis, nihil feciſti, Thou haſt done nothing, and that is fault enough; Nothing for me, nothing for my ſake, but all for reſpect of thy ſelfe, in D thine owne wayes, and to thine owne ends.

A Bono. The other good ſilence is not alwayes Good, but occaſionally, and circumſtantially ſo; It is a forbearing to ſpeake Truth, which may bee good then, when our ſpeaking of Pſal.39.2. Truth can doe no good, and may doe harme. I will keepe my mouth bridled whilſt the wicked is in my ſight; I was dumbe, and ſpake nothing, I kept ſilence even from good, and my ſorrow was more ſtirred. Though it were a vexation to him, though he had a ſenſe, and a remorſe, that this was ſome degree of prevarication, to abandon the defence of Gods honour at any time, yet his religious diſcretion made it appeare to him, that this preſent abſtinence would, in the end, conduce more to Gods glory. It was the Wiſe Eccluſ.8.10. mans rule, Kindle not the coales of ſinners, when thou rebukeſt them, leſt thou beeſt burnt in the fiery flames of their ſinnes. Poyſon works apace upon cholerike complexions; And Phyſitians may catch the plague by going about to cure it. An over-vehement, and unſeaſonable reprehender of a ſinne may contract that, or a greater ſin himſelfe. I may E reprehend a Blaſphemer, in ſuch a maner, and at ſuch a time, as I could not chooſe but ſuſpect, that he would multiply blaſphemies upon my reprehenſion; and, though that take off none of his fault, yet it addes to mine, and now God hath two in the Bond; He ſhall anſwer, and I too, for theſe later blaſphemies. The Wiſe man gave us the Rule, Kindle not coales, and a good King gave us the example, when Rabſhakeh had blaſphemed againſt God and the King; Let not Hezekias deceive you, ſaying, The Lord will deliver us, Then they kept ſilence, and anſwered him not a word, ſayes that Text; for, (as it is added) The Kings commandement was, ſaying, Anſwere him not a word. There is a religious abſtinence, in not anſwering our Adverſaries, though their libels, and increpations, and contumelies

A tumelies tend to the diſhonour of God. S. Ambroſe obſerved good degrees in this Diſcretion. Hee notes in David, that, ſiluit à bonis, Though it troubled him, hee could hold his peace, when his reply might exaſperate others: He notes in Iob, (as hee reads that place, according to the Septuagint) Ecce, video opprobrium, Behold, I laugh at their reproaches; That he could take pleaſure in the goodnes of his conſcience, for all their calumnies. He notes in S. Paul a higher degree then that; Maledicimur, & Benedicimus, That hee when he was reviled could bleſſe them that reviled him. Religious diſcretion allowes us to diſguiſe our Anger, and ſmother our ſorrow, when either our anger would exaſperate, or our ſorrow encourage the Adverſary, to a more vehement oppoſing of God, and his Church, and his Children.

Ambroſe.

Iob 19.7.

1 Cor. 4.12.

But all this is rather true, in private perſons, then in thoſe whom God hath ſent to doe his Meſſages to his people. When I ſhall ſay to the wicked, (ſayes God to the Prophet) B Thou ſhalt ſurely die, and thou, The Prophet, giveſt him not warning, nor ſpeakeſt to admoniſh that he may live, the ſame wicked man ſhall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thy hands. And, if every ſingle ſinfull act, and word, and thought of mine, need the whole blood of Chriſt Jeſus to expiate that, what blood, and what ſeas of that blood ſhall I need, when the blood of a whole Pariſh ſhall be required at my hand, becauſe I forbore to ſpeak plainely of their ſinnes, and Gods judgement? It is true, which S. Bernard ſaies, Diſcretio mater, & conſummatrix virtutum, Diſcretion is the mother, and diſcretion is the nurſe of every vertue, but yet, in this commandement which is laid upon us, for the reproofe of ſinne, Hac omnis ſit noſtra Diſcretio, ſayes hee, ut in hoc nulla ſit nobis Diſcretio; Let this be all our Diſcretion, as Diſcretion is wiſdome, that we uſe no Diſcretion, as Diſcretion is Acceptation of perſons. Hac omnis ſapientia, ut in hac parte nulla nobis ſit, Let this be all our wiſdome, to proceed in this way, this fooliſhneſſe of Preaching, in ſeaſon, C and out of ſeaſon. In Gods name, let us fall within that danger, if we muſt needs, that if the poore man ſpeak, they ſay, What fellow is this? We are fellowes in this ſervice, to Gods Angels, to the Sonne of God Chriſt Jeſus, who is your High Prieſt, and wee fellow-workmen with him, in your ſalvation: And, as long as we can ſcape that Imputation, Some man holdeth his tongue, becauſe he hath not to anſwer, That either we know not what to ſay to a doubtfull conſcience, for our ignorance, or are afraid to reprehend a ſinne, becauſe wee are guilty of that ſinne our ſelves; how farre States, and Commonwealths may be ſilent in connivencies, and forbearances, is not our buſineſſe now; but for us, the miniſters of God, Va nobis, ſi non evangelizemus, Woe be unto us, if we doe not preach the Goſpel, and we have no Goſpel put into our hands, nor into our mouths, but a conditionall Goſpel, and therefore we doe not preach the Goſpel, except wee preach the Judgements belonging to the breach of thoſe conditions: A ſilence in that, in us, D would fall under this complaint, and confeſſion, Becauſe I was ſilent, theſe calamities fell upon me.

Miniſtri.

Ezek. 3.18.

Bernar.

Eccluſ. 13.13.

Eccluſ. 20.6.]

It becomes not us, to thinke the worſt of David, that hee was fallen into the deepeſt degree of this ſilence, and negligence of his duty to God: But it becomes us well to conſider, that if David, a man according to Gods heart, had ſome degrees of this ill ſilence, it is eaſie for us, to have many. For, for the firſt degree, wee have it, and ſcarce diſcerne that we have it: for our firſt ſilence is but an Omiſſion, a not doing of our religious duties, or an unthankfulnes for Gods particular benefits. When Moſes ſayes to his people, The Lord ſhall fight for you, & vos tacebitis, And you ſhall hold your peace, there Moſes meanes, you ſhall not need to ſpeake, the Lord will doe it for his owne glory, you may be ſilent. There it was a future thing; But the Lord hath fought many battels for us: He hath fought for our Church againſt Superſtition, for our land againſt Invaſion, for this E City againſt Infection, for every ſoule here againſt Preſumption, or elſe againſt Deſperation, Dominus pugnavit, & nos ſilemus; The Lord hath fought for us, and we never thank him. A ſilence before, a not praying, hath not alwayes a fault in it, becauſe we are often ignorant of our owne neceſſities, and ignorant of the dangers that hang over us; but a ſilence after a benefit evidently received, a dumbe Ingratitude is inexcuſable.

Silentium malum.

Exod. 14.14.

There is another ill ſilence, and an unnaturall one, for it is a loud ſilence; It is a bragging of our good works; It is the Phariſees ſilence, when by boaſting of his faſtings, and of his almes, he forgot, he ſilenced his ſinnes. This is the devils beſt Merchant: By this Man, the devill gets all; for, his ill deeds were his before; and now, by this boaſting of them, his good works become his too. To contract this, If we have overcome this inconſideration, if we have undertaken ſome examination of our conſcience, yet one ſurvey is not enough; Delicta quis intelligit? Who can underſtand his error? How many circumſtances in ſin vary the very nature of the ſin? And then, of how many coats, and ſhels, and ſuper-edifications doth that ſin, which we thinke a ſingle ſin, conſiſt? When we have paſſed many ſcrutinies, many inquiſitions of the conſcience, yet there is never roome for a ſilence; we can never get beyond the neceſſity of that Petition, Ab occultis, Lord cleanſe me from my ſecret ſins; we ſhall ever be guilty of ſins, which we ſhall forget, not onely becauſe they are ſo little, but becauſe they are ſo great; That which ſhould be compunction, will be conſternation; and the anguiſh, which, out of a naturall tenderneſſe of conſcience, we ſhall have at the firſt entring into thoſe ſins, will make us diſpute on the ſins ſide, and, for ſome preſent eaſe, and to give our heavy ſoule breath, we will finde excuſes for them; and at laſt ſlide and weare into a cuſtomary practiſe of them: and though wee cannot be ignorant that we doe them, yet wee ſhall be ignorant that they are ſins; but rather make them things indifferent, or recreations neceſſary to maintaine a cheerefulneſſe, and ſo to ſin on, for feare of diſpairing in our ſins, and we ſhall never be able to ſhut our mouths againſt that Petition, Ab occultis; for, though the ſin be manifeſt, the various circumſtances that aggravate the ſin, will be ſecret.

Phariſei.

Pſal. 19. 12. A

Silentium Davidis.

And properly this was Davids ſilence: He confeſſes his ſilence to have been Ex doloſo ſpiritu, Out of a ſpirit, in which was deceit; And David did not hope, directly, and determinately to deceive God; But by endeavouring to hide his ſin from other men, and from his owne conſcience, he buried it deeper and deeper, but ſtill under more and more ſins. He ſilences his Adultery, but he ſmothers it, he buries it under a turfe of hypocriſie, of diſſimulation with Vriah, that he might have gone home, and covered his ſin. He ſilences this hypocriſie; but that muſt have a larger turfe to cover it; he buries it under the whole body of Vriah, treacherouſly murdered; He ſilences that murder, but no turfe was large enough to cover that, but the defeat of the whole army, and after all, the blaſpheming of the name and power of the Lord of Hoſts, in the ruine of the army. That ſin, which, if he would have carried it upward towards God, in Confeſſion, would have vaniſhed away, and evaporated, by ſilencing, by ſuppreſſing, by burying multiplied, as Corne buried in the earth, multiplies into many Eares. And, though he might (perchance for his farther puniſhment) overcome the remembrance of the firſt ſin, he might have forgot the Adultery, and feele no paine of that, yet ſtill being put to a new, and new ſin, ſtill the laſt ſin that he did to cover the reſt, could not chuſe but appeare to his conſcience, and call upon him for another ſin to cover that; Howſoever hee might forget laſt yeares ſins, yet yeſterdayes ſin, or laſt nights ſin will hardly be forgotten yet. And therefore, Tollite vobiſcum verba, ſayes the Prophet, O Iſrael returne unto the Lord; But how? Take unto you words, and turne unto the Lord. Take unto you your words, words of Confeſſion; Take unto you his word, the words of his gracious promiſes; breake your ſilence when God breaks his, in the motions of his Spirit, and God ſhall breake off his purpoſe of inflicting calamities upon you.

B

C

Hoſ. 14. 2. D

Rugitus.

In the meane time, when David was not come ſo far, but continued ſilent, ſilent from Confeſſion, God ſuffers not David to enjoy the benefit of his ſilence; though he continue his ſilence towards God, yet God mingles Rugitum cum ſilentio, for all his ſilence, he comes to a voyce of roaring and howling, when I was ſilent, my roaring conſumed me; ſo that here was a great noyſe, but no muſique. Now Theodoret calls this Rugitum compunctionis; That it was the inchoation of his repentance, which began diffidently, and with fearefull vociferations; And ſo ſome of our later men underſtand it; That becauſe David had continued long in his ſin, when the Ice brake, it brake with the greater noyſe; when he returned to ſpeake to God, he ſpake with the more vehemence. And truly the word Shaag, Rugiit, though it ſignifie properly the voyce of a Lyon, yet David uſes this word Roaring, not onely of himſelfe, but of himſelfe as he was a type of Chriſt: for this very word is in the beginning of that Pſalme, which Chriſt repeated upon the Croſſe, or, at leaſt begun it, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me, and why art thou ſo far from the voyce of my Roaring? So that, Roaring, may admit a good ſenſe, and does not alwayes imply a diſtemper, and inordinateneſſe; for, in Chriſt it could not; But does it not in our Text? In our former Tranſlation it might ſtand in a good ſenſe, where the two actions are diſtinguiſhed in time, thus, When I held my tongue, or when I roared, whether I kept or broke ſilence, all was one, no more eaſe in one, then the other. But with the Theodor.

Bellarm.

Pſal. 22. 1. E

A the Originall, and with our later Tranſlation, it cannot be ſo, which is, When I held my tongue, through my roaring, this and this fell upon me: They were concomitant actions, actions intermixt, and at the ſame time when he was ſilent, he roared too; and therefore that that he calls Roaring, is not a voyce of Repentance; for if hee had beene come to that, then hee had broke his former ſilence, for that Silence was a not Confeſſing, a not Repenting.

This is then that miſerable condition which is expreſſed in Davids caſe, (though God delivered David from any deadly effect of it) that he had occaſion of Roaring, of howling, (as the Scripture ſpeaks often) though he kept ſilence: That he was at never the more eaſe, for all his ſins: The eaſes that he laid hold on, were new ſins in themſelves, and yet they did not eaſe him of his other ſins; he kept ſilence, and yet was put to exclamations. And how many examples can we preſent to our ſelves, in our owne memory, where perſons
B which have given themſelves all liberty to forge writings, to ſuborne witneſſes, to forſweare themſelves, to oppreſſe, to murder others, to make their wayes eaſier to their ends, and yet have, for all this, though the hand of Juſtice have not fallen upon them, ſeene their whole eſtates conſume and moulder away? When men out of their ill-grounded plots, and perverſe wiſdome, thinke themſelves ſafe in the ſilence and ſecrecy of their ſins, God overtakes them, and confounds them, with thoſe two fearefull blowes, thoſe two Thunderbolts, He brings them to Exclamations, to Vociferations, upon Fortune, upon Friends, upon Servants, upon Rivals, and Competitors, he brings them to a Roaring for their ruine, Never man was thus dealt withall as I am, never ſuch a conſpiracy as againſt me.

And this they do, All day, ſayes David here, Through my roaring all day. It was long ſo with David; A day as long as two of their dayes, that have dayes of ſix months; al- Tota die.
C moſt a yeare was David in this darke, dead ſilence, before he ſaw day, or returned to ſpeaking. With thoſe that continue their ſilence all day, the roaring continues all day too; All their lives, they have new occaſions of lamentations, and yet all this reduces them not, but they are benighted, they end their life with fearefull voyces of deſperation, in a Roaring, but ſtill in a ſilence of their ſins, and tranſgreſſions. And this is that that falls firſt under his Confeſſion, Roaring with Silence, paine, and ſhame, and loſſe, but all without Confeſſion, or ſenſe of ſin. And then, that which falls next under his acknowledgement, is the vehement working, the lamentable effect of this Silence and Roaring, Inveteration of Bones, incineration of his whole ſubſtance, My Bones are waxen old, and my moyſture is turned into the drought of Summer.

Both theſe phraſes, in which David expreſſes his owne, and prophecies of other ſuch Humidum literale.
D ſinners miſery, have a literall, and a ſpirituall, a naturall, and a morall ſenſe. For firſt, this affliction of this ſilenced and impenitent ſinner though it proceed not from the ſenſe of his ſinne, though it brought him not yet to a confeſſion, but to a roaring, that is, an impatient repining and murmuring, yet it had ſo wrought upon his body, and whole conſtitution, as that it drunke up his naturall, and vitall moyſture; Spiritus triſtis exſiccarat, as Solomon ſpeaks, A broken ſpirit had dryed him up; His dayes were conſumed like ſmoake, and his bones were burnt like a hearth; and that Marrow and fatneſſe, in which, hee ſayes, he had ſuch ſatisfaction, at other times, was exhauſted. This is the miſery of this impenitent ſinner, he is beggered, but in the Devils ſervice, he is lamed, but in the Devils wars; his moyſture, his blood is dryed up, but with licentiouſneſſe, with his overwatchings, either to deceive, or to oppreſſe others; for, as the proverbe is true, Plures gula quàm gladius, The Throate cuts more throates then the ſword does, and eating ſtarves more men then faſting does, becauſe waſtfulneſſe induces penury at laſt, ſo if all our E Hoſpitals were well ſurveyed, it would be found, that the Devill ſends more to Hoſpitals then God does, and the Stewes more then the wars.

Thus his bodily moyſture was waſted, literally the ſinner is ſooner infirmed, ſooner Humidum morale.
deformed, then another man; But there is an Humidum radicale of the ſoule too: A tenderneſſe, and a diſpoſition to bewayle his ſins, with remorſefull teares. When Peter had denied his Maſter, and heard the Cocke crow, he did not ſtay to make recantations, he did not ſtay to ſatisfie them, to whom he had denied Chriſt, but hee looked into himſelfe firſt, Flevit amarè, ſayes the Holy Ghoſt, He wept bitterly; His ſoule was not withered, his moyſture was not dryed up like ſummer, as long as he could weepe. The learned Horace.
Poet hath given ſome character, ſome expreſſion of the deſperate and irremediable ſtate of the reprobate, when he calls Plutonem illacrymabilem; There is the marke of his incorrigibleneſſe, and ſo of his irrecoverableneſſe, That he cannot weepe. A ſinfull man, an obdurate man, a ſtony heart may weepe: Marble, and the hardeſt ſorts of ſtones weepe moſt, they have the moſt moyſture, the moſt drops upon them: But this comes not out of them, not from within them; Extrinſecall occaſions, paine, and ſhame, and want, may bring a ſinner to ſorrow enough, but it is not a ſorrow for his ſins; All this while the miſerable ſinner weeps not, but the miſerable man, All this while, though he have winter in his eyes, his ſoule is turned into the drought of ſummer. God deſtroyed the firſt world, and all fleſh with water: Teares for the want, or for the loſſe of friends, or of temporall bleſſings, doe but deſtroy us. But God begun the new world, the Chriſtian Church, with water too, with the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Purſue his Example; begin thy Regeneration with teares; If thou have frozen eyes, thou haſt a frozen heart too; If the fires of the Holy Ghoſt cannot thaw thee, in his promiſes, the fire of hell will doe it much leſſe, which is a fire of obduration, not of liquefaction, and does not melt a ſoule, to poure it out into a new and better form, but hardens it, nails it, confirmes it in the old.

Mat. 24. 20. Chriſt bids you take heed, that your flight be not in winter; That your tranſmigration out of this world be not in cold dayes of Indevotion, nor in ſhort dayes of a late repentance. Take heed too, that your flight be not in ſuch a ſummer as this; That your tranſmigration out of this world be not in ſuch a drought of ſummer, as David ſpeaks of here, that the ſoule have loſt her Humidum radicale, all her tenderneſſe, or all expreſſing of that tenderneſſe in the ſenſe of her tranſgreſſions. So did David ſee himſelfe, ſo did he more fore-ſee in others, that ſhould farther incurre Gods diſpleaſure, then he (by Gods goodneſſe) had done, this exſiccation, this incineration of body and ſoule; ſinne burnes and turnes body and ſoule to a Cinder, but not ſuch a Cinder, but that they can, and ſhall both burne againe, and againe, and for ever.

Oſſa Naturalia. Deut. 29. 5. And the dangerous effect of this ſilence and roaring, David expreſſes in another phraſe too, Inveteraverunt oſſa, That his bones were waxen old, and conſumed; for ſo that word Balah ſignifies, Your Clothes are not waxed old upon you, nor your ſhooes waxed old upon your feet. In the Conſuming of theſe Bones, (as our former Tranſlation hath it) the vehemence of the Affliction is preſented, and in the waxing old, the continuance. Here the Rule fayls, Si longa levis, ſi gravis brevis, Calamities that laſt long, are light, and if they be heavy, they are ſhort; both wayes there is ſome intimation of ſome eaſe. But God ſuffers not this ſinner to injoy that eaſe; God will lay inough upon his body, to kill another in a weeke, and yet he ſhall pant many yeares under it. As the way of his Bleſſing is, Levit. 26. Apprehendet tritura vindemiam, Your vintage ſhall reach to your threſhing, and your threſhing to your ſowing; So in an impenitent ſinner, his fever ſhall reach to a frenzy, his frenzy to a conſumption, his conſumption to a penury, and his penury to a wearying and tyring out of all that are about him, and all the ſins of his youth ſhall meet in the anguiſh of his body.

Oſſa Spiritualia. But that is not all; Etiam anima membra ſunt, ſayes S. Baſil, The ſoule hath her Bones too; And thoſe are our beſt actions; Thoſe, which if they had been well done, might have been called Good works, and might have met us in heaven; But when a man continues his beloved ſinne, when he is in doloſo ſpiritu, and deals with God in falſe meaſures, and falſe waights, makes deceitfull Confeſſions to God, his good works ſhall doe him no good, his Bones are conſumed, not able to beare him upright in the ſight of God. This David ſees in himſelfe, and foreſees in others, and he ſees the true reaſon of all this, Quia aggravata manus, Becauſe the hand of God lyes heavy upon him, which is another branch of his Confeſſion.

Aggravata manus. Chaſt. 2. 6. Gregor. It was the ſafety of the Spouſe, That his left hand was under her head, and that his right hand embraced her: And it might well be her ſafety; for, Per lævam vita præſens, per dextram æterna deſignatur, ſayes S. Gregory, His left hand denotes this, and his right the other life: Our happineſſe in this, our aſſurance of the next, conſiſts in this, that we are in the hands of God. But here in our Text, Gods hand was heavy upon him; and that is an action of puſhing away, and keeping downe. And then when we ſee the great power, and the great indignation of God upon the Egyptians, is expreſſed but ſo, Digitus Dei, the finger of God is in it, how heavy an affliction muſt this of David be eſteemed, Quando aggravata manus, when his whole hand was, and was heavy upon him? Here then is one leſſon for all men, and another peculiar to the children of God. This appertains to all,

That

A That when they are in ſilentio, in a ſeared and ſtupid forgetting of their ſinnes, or in Doloſo ſpiritu, in half-Confeſſions, half-abjurations, half-deteſtations of their ſinnes; The hand of God will grow heavy upon them. Tell you your children of it, (ſayes the Prophet) and let your children tell their children, and let their children tell another generation, (for this belongs to all) That which is left of the Palmer worme, the Graſhopper ſhall eat, and that that he leaves, the Canker worme ſhall eat, and the reſidue of the Canker worme, the Caterpiller. The hand of God ſhall grow heavy upon a ſilent ſinner, in his body, in his health; and if he conceive a comfort, that for all his ſickneſſe, he is rich, and therefore cannot fayle of helpe and attendance, there comes another worme, and devours that, faithleſneſſe in perſons truſted by him, oppreſſions in perſons that have truſted him, facility in undertaking for others, corrupt Judges, heavy adverſaries, tempeſts and Pirats at Sea, unſeaſonable or ill Markets at land, coſtly and expenſive ambitions at Court, one
B worme or other ſhall devoure his riches, that he eaſed himſelfe upon. If he take up another Comfort, that though health and wealth decay, though he be poore and weake, yet he hath learning, and philoſophy, and morall conſtancy, and he can content himſelfe with himſelfe, he can make his ſtudy a Court, and a few Books ſhall ſupply to him the ſociety and the converſation of many friends, there is another worme to devoure this too, the hand of divine Juſtice ſhall grow heavy upon him, in a ſenſe of an unprofitable retiredneſſe, in a diſconſolate melancholy, and at laſt, in a ſtupidity, tending to deſperation.

This belongs to all, to all Non-confitents, That thinke not of confeſſing their ſinnes at all, To all Semi-confitents, that confeſſe them to halfs, without purpoſe of amendment, Aggravabitur manus, The hand of God will grow heavy upon them every way, and ſtop every iſſue, every poſterne, every ſaly, every means of eſcape. But that which
C is peculiar to the Children of God, is, That when the hand of God is upon them, they ſhall know it to be the hand of God, and take hold even of that oppreſſing hand, and not let it goe, till they have received a Bleſſing from it, that is, rayſed themſelves even by that heavy and oppreſſing hand of his, even in that affliction. That when God ſhall fill their faces with ſhame, yet they ſhall ſeeke his face; yea, when God ſhall kill him, yet he will truſt in God, and ſeeke him; And (as the Prophet carries it farther) Cum ingreditur putredo, when Rottenneſſe enters into their Bones, yet they ſhall reſt even in that day of trouble, of diſſolution, of putrefaction. God ſhall call upon them, as he did upon Judah, Tritura mea, & filius areæ, O my threſhing place, and the ſonne of my floore, Thou whom I have beaten and bruiſed with my flayls, when I have threſhed, and winnowed, and ſifted thee by theſe afflictions, and by this heavy hand, ſtill thou ſhalt fix thy faithfull eyes in heaven, and ſee a roome reſerved there for thee, amongſt thoſe, which come out of great
D tribulations, and have made their long robes white in the bloud of the Lambe; who ſhall therefore dwell in the midſt of them, and governe them, and lead them to the lively fountains of waters, and wipe away all teares from their eyes. Even upon his own Children, his hand ſhall grow heavy, but that heavineſſe, that waight ſhall awake them, and that hand ſhall guide them, to, and in the wayes of peace and reconciliation.

Pſal. 82.
Pſal. 77.
Habak. 3. 16.
Eſay 21. 10.
Apoc. 7. 14. 17.

And this both day and night, as our Text ſayes, That is, both in the day of their proſperity, and the night of their adverſitie. Even in proſperity, the childe of God ſhall feele the hand of God grow heavy upon him: He ſhall finde a guiltineſſe of not having employed thoſe temporall benefits to their right uſe; He ſhall finde the Pluit laqueos, a ſhowre of ſnares to have been powred downe upon him; occaſions of ſinne; occaſions of falling into ſinnes himſelfe; occaſions of drawing others, and of buying thoſe ſoules
E with his money, which Chriſt Jeſus had a pre-emption of, and had bought them before with his bloud: He ſhall finde the hand of God in adverſity, and love it, becauſe it ſhall deliver him; He ſhall finde his hand in proſperity, and be afraid of it, becauſe that proſperity hath before, and may againe lead him into tentations.

Die ac nocte.
Pſal. 11. 6.

To end all; all this, the Holy Ghoſt by the pen of David, ſeales with the laſt word of this Text, Selah. A word of uncertain ſenſe, and ſignification; for the Jews themſelves do not know exactly, and certainly what it ſignifies; but deriving this Selah, from Selal, which ſignifies Attollere, To lift up, they think it to be but a Muſicall note, for the raiſing of the voyce, at that part of the Pſalme, where that word is uſed; as, indeed the word is never uſed in the Bible, but in the Pſalmes, and twice in one Chapter, in the Prophet Habakkuk, which is a Muſicall, a Metricall Chapter. In the Latine Tranſlation, and Selah.

Hab. 3. 3. & 9.

and in the Arabique Tranſlation of the Pſalmes it is cleane left out, becauſe they were not ſure how to tranſlate it aright. But, to ſpeak upon the beſt grounds in the Grammar of that language, and upon beſt Authority too, the word ſignifies a Vehement, a Patheticall, a Hyperbolicall aſſeveration, and atteſtation, and ratification of ſomething ſaid before. Such, in a proportion, as our Saviours Amen, Amen is, Verily, verily I ſay unto you; Such, as S. Pauls fidelis Sermo, with which he ſeales ſo many truths, is, This is a faithfull ſaying; Such, as that Apoſtles Coram Domino is, with which he ratifies many things, Before the Lord I ſpeak it; and ſuch, as Moſes his Vivo ego, and Vivit Dominus, As I live ſaith the Lord, and As the Lord liveth. And therefore, though God be in all his words, Yea, and Amen, no word of his can periſh in it ſelfe, nor ſhould periſh in us, that is, paſſe without obſervation, yet, in ſetting this ſeale of Selah to this Doctrine, he hath teſtified his will that he would have all theſe things the better underſtood, and the deeplier imprinted, That if a man conceale and ſmother his ſins, Selah, Aſſuredly, God will open that mans mouth, and it ſhall not ſhew forth his praiſe, but God will bring him, Ad rugitum, to fearfull exclamations out of the ſenſe of the affliction, if not of the ſin; Selah, Aſſuredly, God wil ſhiver his bones, ſhake his beſt actions, and diſcover their impurity; Selah, aſſuredly, God will ſuffer to be dried up all his moyſture, all poſſibility of repentant teares, and all intereſt in the blood of Chriſt Jeſus; Selah, Aſſuredly, Gods hand ſhall be heavy upon him, and he ſhall not diſcerne it to be his hand, but ſhall attribute all to falſe cauſes, and ſo place all his comfort in falſe remedies; Hee ſhall leave out God all day, and God ſhall leave out him all night, all his everlaſting night, in which he ſhall never ſee day more. Selah, Aſſuredly, Verily, Amen, Fidelis Sermo, This is a faithfull, an infallible Truth, Coram Domino, Before the Lotd, Vivit Dominus, as the Lord liveth, as Moſes, as Chriſt, as S. Paul teſtifie their, David teſtifies his Doctrine, All between God and man is conditionall, and where man will not be bound, God will not be bound neither; If man inveſt a habit and purpoſe of ſinning, God will ſtudy a judgement againſt
1 Sam 3.11. that man, and doe that, even in Iſrael, which ſhall make all our eares to tingle, and all our hearts to ake; Till that man repent, God will not, and when he does, God will repent too; For, though God be not Man, that he can repent, yet that God, who for Mans ſake became Man, for our ſakes, and his owne glory, will ſo farre become Man againe, as upon Mans true repentance, to repent the Judgements intended againſt that Man.

6 April 1862 - Rather a heavy sermon.

SERM. LVIII.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 32. 5.

I acknowledged my ſin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I ſaid, I will confeſſe my tranſgreſſions unto the Lord, and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin.

THis is the Sacrament of Confeſſion; So we may call it in a ſafe meaning; That is, The myſtery of Confeſſion: for true Confeſſion is a myſterious
2 Theſſ. 2.7. Art. As there is a Myſtery of iniquity, ſo there is a Myſtery of the Kingdome of heaven. And the myſtery of the Kingdome of heaven is this, That
Mat. 22.1. no man comes thither, but in a ſort as he is a notorious ſinner. One myſtery of iniquity is, that in this world, though I multiply ſins, yet the Judge cannot puniſh me, if I can hide them from other men, though he know them; but if I confeſſe them, he can, he will, he muſt. The myſtery of the Kingdome of heaven, is, That onely the Declaring, the Publiſhing, the Notifying, and Confeſſing of my ſins, poſſeſſes me of the Kingdome of heaven; There is a caſe, in which the notoriety of my ſins does harme; when my open ſinning, or my publiſhing of my ſin, by way of glory in that ſin, caſts a ſcandall upon others, and leads them into tentation; for ſo, my ſin becomes theirs,

A theirs, becauſe they ſin my ſin by example, And their ſin becomes mine, becauſe I gave the example, and we aggravate one anothers ſin, and both ſin both. But there is a publication of ſin, that both alleviates, nay annihilates my ſin, and makes him that hates ſin, Almighty God, love me the better, for knowing me to be ſuch a ſinner, then if I had not told him of it. Therefore doe we ſpeak of the myſtery of Confeſſion; for it is not delivered in one Rule, nor practiſed in one Act.

Diviſio. In this Confeſſion of Davids, (I acknowledged my ſin unto thee, &c.) We ſhall ſee more then ſo; for, though our two Parts be but the two Acts, Davids Act, and Gods Act, Confeſſion and Abſolution, yet is there more then one ſingle action to be conſidered in each of them. For firſt, in the firſt, there is a reflected Act, that David doth upon himſelfe, before he come to his Confeſſion to God; Something David had done, before he came to ſay, I will confeſſe, As he did confeſſe, before God forgave the iniquity of his ſin.

B Now that which he did in himſelfe, and which preceded his Confeſſion to God, was the Notum feci, I acknowledged my ſin; which was not his bringing it to the knowledge of God by way of Confeſſion, for, (as you ſee by the Method of the Holy Ghoſt, in the frame of the Text) it preceded his purpoſe of confeſſing, but it was the taking knowledge of his ſin in himſelfe, It was his firſt quickning, and inanimation, that grace gave his ſoul, as the ſoule gives the child in the Mothers womb. And then in Davids act upon himſelfe, followes the Non operui, I have not hid mine iniquity, none of mine iniquities from mine owne ſight: I have diſplayed to my ſelfe, anatomized mine own conſcience, left no corner unſearched, I am come to a perfect underſtanding of mine own caſe, Non operui, This is Davids act upon himſelfe, the recalling, and recollecting of his ſins, in his own memory. And then finding the number, the waight, and ſo, the oppreſſion of thoſe ſins there, he conſiders where he may diſcharge himſelfe of them; And Dixi,

C ſayes David, which is a word that implies both Deliberation, and Reſolution, and Execution too; I thought what was beſt to doe, and I reſolved upon this, and I did it; Dixi Confitebor, That I would make a true, a full, a hearty Confeſſion to God of all thoſe ſins; for ſuch we ſee the Elements and the Extent of his Confeſſion to be; He will confeſſe Peccata, Tranſgreſſions, Sins; Neither by an over-tenderneſſe, and diffidence, and ſcrupuloſity, to call things ſins, that are not ſo, nor by indulgent flattering, and ſparing of himſelf, to forbear thoſe things which are truly ſo; He will confeſſe Peccata, Sins, and Peccata ſua, His ſins; Firſt, Sua, that is, A ſe perpetrata, He will acknowledge them to have proceeded, and to have been committed by himſelf, he will not impute them to any other cauſe, leaſt of all to God; And then, Sua, non aliena, he will confeſſe ſins that are his own ſins, and not meddle with the ſins of other men, that appertain not to him. This is the ſubject of his Confeſſion, Sins, & His ſins, and then, Peccata ſua Domino, His ſins unto the Lord, D both in that conſideration, That all ſins are committed againſt the Lord, and in that alſo, That Confeſſion of all ſins is to be made unto the Lord; And laſtly, all this, (as S. Hierome reads this text, and ſo alſo did our former Tranſlation) Adverſum ſe, Againſt himſelf, that is, without any hope of reliefe, or reparation in himſelf. He begins to think of his own ſinfull ſtate, and he proceeds to a particular inquiſition upon his conſcience, There is his preparation, Then he conſiders, and thereupon reſolves, and thereupon proceeds to confeſſe things that are truly ſins, And then all them as his own, without imputing them to others, If they be his own, without medling with others, And theſe to the Lord, againſt whom all ſin is committed, and to whom all Confeſſion is to be directed; And all this ſtill againſt himſelf, without any hope from himſelf. All this is in Davids action, preparatorily in himſelf, and then declaratorily towards God, and doe but make up our firſt Part.

In the other, which is Gods Act towards David, the Abſolution, the Remiſſion, the E Forgiveneſſe, we ſhall conſider firſt the fulneſſe; for, it is both of the ſin, and the puniſhment of the ſin, for the word imports both, and our two Tranſlations have expreſſed it between them, for that which one Tranſlation calls the Iniquity of the ſin, the other calls The puniſhment; And then we ſhall conſider the ſeaſonableneſſe, the ſpeed, the acceleration of Gods mercy, in the Abſolution, for in David it is but Actus inchoatus, and Actus conſummatus in God, David did but ſay, I will confeſſe, and God forgave the iniquity, and the puniſhment of his ſin. Now as this Diſtribution is Paraphraſe enough upon the text, ſo a little larger Paraphraſe upon every piece of the Paraphraſe, will be as much as will fall into this exerciſe. For, as you ſee, he branches are many, and full of fruit, and I can but ſhake them, and leave every one to gather his own portion, to apply thoſe notes, which may moſt advance his edification.

First

1 Part. Notum feci.

Firſt then in this myſtery of Confeſſion, we conſider Davids reflected act, his preparatory act, preceding his confeſſion to God, and tranſacted in himſelfe, of which the firſt motion is, the Notum feci, I acknowledged in my ſelfe, I came to a feeling in my ſelfe, what my ſinfull condition was. This is our quickning in our regeneration, and ſecond birth; and til this come, a ſinner lies as the Chaos in the beginning of the Creation, before the Spirit of God had moved upon the face of the waters, Dark, and voyd, and without forme; He lies, as we may conceive, out of the Authors of Naturall Story, the ſlime and mud of the River Nilus to lie, before the Sun-beames ſtrike upon it; which after, by the heat of thoſe beames, produces ſeverall ſhapes, and formes of creatures. So till this firſt beame of grace, which we conſider here, ſtrike upon the ſoule of a ſinner, he lies in the mud and ſlime, in the dregs and lees, and tartar of his ſinne. Hee cannot ſo much as wiſh, that that Sunne would ſhine upon him, he doth not ſo much as know, that there is ſuch a Sunne, that hath that influence, and impreſſion; But if this firſt beame of Grace enlighten him to himſelfe, reflect him upon himſelfe, notum facit, (as the Text ſayes) if it acquaint him with himſelfe, then, as the creatures in the Creation, then, as the new creatures at Nilus, his ſins begin to take their formes, and their ſpecifications, and they appeare to him in their particular true ſhapes, and that which hee hath in a generall name, called Pleaſure or Wantonneſſe, now cals it ſelfe in his conſcience, a direct Adultery, a direct Inceſt; and that which he hath called Frugality, and providence for family and poſterity, tells him plainly, My name is Oppreſſion, and I am the ſpirit of covetouſneſſe. Many times men fall into company, and accompany others to houſes of riot and uncleanneſſe, and doe not ſo much as know their ſinfull companions names; nay they doe not ſo much as know the names of the ſins that they commit, nor thoſe circumſtances in thoſe ſinnes, which vary the very name and nature of the ſin.

Gregor.

But then, Oculos, quos culpa claudit, pœna aperit, Thoſe eyes, which ſinne ſhut, this firſt beame of Grace opens, when it comes, and works effectually upon us; Till this ſeaſon of grace, this ſinner is blind to the Sunne, and deafe to Thunder. A wild Aſſe, that is uſed to the wilderneſſe, and ſnuffeth up wind at her pleaſure, in her occaſion who can turne her away? An habituall ſinner, that doth not ſtumble, but tumble, as a mighty ſtone downe a hill, in the wayes of his ſin, in his occaſion, who can turne him? in his rage of ſin, what law can withhold him? But ſayes the Prophet there, of that wild Aſſe, All they that ſeeke her, will not weary themſelves; Friends, Magiſtrates, Preachers, doe but weary themſelves, and loſe their labour, in endeavouring to reclaime that ſinner; But in her Month they ſhall finde her, ſayes the Prophet; That is, ſay our Expoſitors, when ſhe is great and unweildy. Some ſuch Moneth, God of his goodneſſe brings upon this ſinner; Some ſickneſſe, ſome judgement ſtops him, and then we find him; God by his Ordinance, executed by us, brings him to this Notum feci, into company with himſelfe, into an acquaintance and converſation with himſelfe, and hee ſees his ſinnes looke with other faces, and he heares his ſins ſpeake with other voyces, and hee findes them to call one another by other names: And when hee is thus come to that conſideration, Lord! how have I miſtaken my ſelfe, Am I, that thought my ſelfe, and paſſed with others, for a ſociable, a pleaſurable man, and good company; am I a leprous Adulterer, is that my name? Am I, that thought my ſelfe a frugall man, and a good husband; I, whom fathers would recommend to their children, and ſay, Marke how hee ſpares, how hee growes up, how he gathers, am I an oppreſſing Extortioner, is that my name? Bleſſed be thy name, O Lord, that haſt brought me to this notum feci, to know mine own name, mine owne miſerable condition; he will alſo ſay, may that bleſſing of thine enlarge it ſelfe farther, that as I am come to this notum feci, to know that I miſtooke my ſelfe all this while, ſo I may proceed to the non operui, to a perfit ſifting of my conſcience, in all corners: which is Davids ſecond motion in his act of preparation, and our next conſideration, I acknowledged my ſin, and I hid none, diſguiſed none, non operui.

Ier. 2. 24.

Non operui.

Sometimes the Magiſtrate is informed of an abuſe, and yet proceeds to no farther ſearch, nor inquiſition. This word implies a ſifting of the conſcience. He doth not onely take knowledge of his ſins, then when they diſcover themſelves; of his riot and voluptuouſneſſe, then when he burnes in a fever occaſioned by his ſurfets; nor of his licentiouſneſſe, then when he is under the anguiſh and ſmart of corroſives; nor of his waſtfulneſſe and pride, then when hee is laid in priſon for debt: Hee doth not ſeeke his ſinnes in his Belly, nor in his Bones, nor in his Purſe, but in his Conſcience, and he unfolds that, rips up

A up that, and enters into the privateſt, and moſt remote corners thereof. And there is much more in this negative circumſtance, non operui, I hid nothing, then in the former acknowledgement, notum feci, I tooke knowledge of my ſinnes. When they ſent to ſift Iohn Baptiſt, whether he were The Chriſt, becauſe he was willing to give them all ſatisfaction, hee expreſſed himſelfe ſo, Hee confeſſed, and denied not, and ſaid, I am not the Chriſt. So when Ioſhuah preſſed Achan, to confeſſe his treſpaſſe, he preſſes him with this negative addition, Shew mee what thou haſt done, and hide it not; that is, diſguiſe nothing that belongs to it. For, the better to imprint a confidence, and to remove all ſuſpition, Men to to their Maſters, Wives to their Husbands, will confeſſe ſomething, but yet operiunt, they hide more. Thoſe words, In multitudine virtutis tuæ, Through the greatneſſe of thy power, thine enemies ſhall ſubmit, S. Ierome, and the Septuagint before, and Tremellius after, and all that binde themſelves to the Hebrew letter, reade it thus, Mentientur tibi inimici tui, when thy power is ſhewed upon them, when thy hand lies upon them, thine enemies will lie unto thee, They will counterfait a confeſſion, they will acknowledge ſome ſins, but yet operiunt, they hide, they cover others. Saul in the defeat of the Amalekites reſerved ſome of the fatteſt of the ſpoile, and being deprehended, and reprehended, hee ſaid hee intended it for ſacrifice: Many times, men in great place, abuſe their owne ſoules with that imagination, or palliation, That they doe God good ſervice in ſome ſinne, and that they ſhould more hurt the cauſe of God, if they ſhould proceed earneſtly to the puniſhment of thoſe that oppoſe it, then if they let them alone, and ſo leave lawes unexecuted, and Gods truth endangered. But Davids iſſue was, non iniquitas, non operui, I left none iniquity unſearched, I hid none.

Iohn 1. 20. Ioſh. 7. 19. Pſal. 66. 3. 1 Sam. 15.

But any thing ſerves us for a cover of ſin, even from a Net, that every man ſees thorow, to ſuch a cloud of darkeneſſe, as none but the prince of darkeneſſe, that caſt that cloud upon us, can ſee us in it, nor we ſee our ſelves. That wee ſhould hide leſſer ſinnes with greater, is not ſo ſtrange; That in an Adultery, wee ſhould forget the circumſtances in it, and the practiſes to come to it. But we hide greater ſins with leſſer, with a manifold, and multiplied throng and cloud of leſſer ſins, all comes to an indifferency, and ſo wee ſee not great ſins. Eaſines of converſation in a woman, ſeemes no great harme; Adorning themſelves to pleaſe thoſe with whom they converſe, is not much more; To heare them, whom they are thus willing to pleaſe, praiſe them, and magnifie their perfections, is little more then that; To allow them to ſue, and ſolicit for the poſſeſſion of that which they have ſo much praiſed, is not much more neither; Nor will it ſeeme much at laſt, to give them poſſeſſion of that they ſue for; nay it will ſeeme a kinde of injuſtice to deny it them. We hide leſſer ſinnes with greater, greater with leſſer; Nay we hide the devill with God, wee hide all the weeks ſins with a Sabbaths ſolemnity: And as in the Romane Church, they poyſoned God, (when they had made their Bread-god, they poyſoned the Emperour with that bread) ſo this is a Poſſeſſing of God, a making the devill to enter into God, when we hide our ſins with an outward ſanctity, and call God to witneſſe and teſtifie to the Congregation, that we are ſaints, when we are devils; for this is a ſuborning of God, and a drawing of God himſelfe into a perjury. We hide our ſinnes in his houſe, by hypocriſie, all our lives, and we hide them at our deaths, perchance with an Hoſpitall. And truely wee had need doe ſo, when we have impoveriſhed God, in his children, by our extorſions, and wounded him, and lam'd him, in them, by our oppreſſions, wee had need provide God an Hoſpitall. As men that rob houſes thruſt in a child at the window, and he opens greater doores for them, ſo leſſer ſins make way for greater. De minimis non curat Lex, The law is faine to paſſe over ſmall faults; but De minimis curat lux, That light of grace, by which a ſinner diſpoſes himſelfe to confeſſion, muſt diſcover every ſinne, and hide none, ſuffer none to hide it ſelfe, nor lie hidden under others. When God ſpeaks ſo much of Behemoth, and Leviathan, the great land and ſea-oppreſſors, he calls us to the conſideration of the inſupportableneſſe of great ſinnes; but in the plaines of Egypt by haile, and locuſts, and lice, little and contemptible things, hee calls us to the conſideration of theſe vermine of the ſoule, leſſer and unconſidered ſins. David had not accompliſhed his work upon himſelfe, his reflected, his preparatory Act, till he had made both thoſe ſteps, notum feci, non operui, firſt I tooke knowledge of my ſinfull condition, and then I proceeded to a particular inquiſition of my Conſcience, I tooke knowledge of my ſinne, and mine iniquity I have not hid, and then he was fit to thinke of an acceſſe to God, by confeſſion, Dixi confitebor, &c.

Iob 40. & 41.

This

Dixi meditando.

Baſil.

Pſal. 14. 1.

1 King. 5. 5.

Pſal. 39. 1.

Dan. 2. 3.

Dixi ſtatuendo.

Luke 15. 12.

Cajetan.

Ambroſe.

Confitebor.

Origen.

Ioſh. 7. 19.

This word, Dixi, Amar, I ſaid, is a word that implies firſt meditation, deliberation, conſidering, and then upon ſuch meditation, a reſolution too, and execution after all. When it is ſaid of God, dixit, and dixit, God ſaid this, and ſaid that, in the firſt Creation, Cave ne cogites ſtrepitum, Doe not thinke that God uttered any ſound; His ſpeaking was inward, his ſpeaking was thinking. So David uſes this word in the perſon of another, Dixit inſipiens, The foole hath ſaid, that is, In corde, ſaid in his heart, that is, thought that there is no God. There ſpeaking is thinking; and ſpeaking is reſolving too. So Davids ſon Solomon uſes the word, Behold I purpoſe to build a houſe unto the Lord, where the word is, I ſay, I will doe it, Speaking is determining; and ſpeaking is executing too, Dixi cuſtodiam, I ſaid I will take heed to my wayes, that is, I will proceed and goe forward in the paths of God. And ſuch a premeditation, ſuch a preconſideration, doe all our approaches, and acceſſes to God, and all our acts in his ſervice require. God is the Rocke of our ſalvation; God is no Occaſionall God, no Accidentall God; neither will God be ſerved by Occaſion, nor by Accident, but by a conſtant Devotion. Our communication with God muſt not be in Interjections; that come in by chance; nor our Devotions made up of Parentheſes, that might be left out. They erre equally, that make a God of Neceſſity, and that make a God of Contingency: They that with the Manichees, make an ill God, a God that forces men to doe all the ill that they doe, And they that with the Epicures, make an idle God, an indifferent God, that cares not what is done; God is not Deſtiny; Then there could be no reward, nor puniſhment: but God is not Fortune neither, for then there were no Providence. If God have given reaſon onely to Man, it were ſtrange that Man ſhould exerciſe that reaſon, in all his Morall and Civill actions, and onely do the acts of Gods worſhip caſually; To go to Court, to Weſtminſter, to the Exchange, for ends, and to come to Church, by chance, or for company, or for ſome collaterall reſpects, that have no relation to God, Not to thinke of our Confeſſion, till the Prieſt have called upon us, to ſay after him, We have erred and ſtraied from thy wayes like loſt ſheepe, To come for Abſolution, as Nebuchadnezzar came to Daniel, for the interpretation of his Dreame, who did not onely not underſtand his Dreame, but not remember it, Somnium ejus fugit ab eo, He did not onely not know what his Dreame meant, but hee did not know what his Dreame was, Not to conſider the nature of Confeſſion, and Abſolution, not to conſider the nature of the ſins we ſhould confeſſe, and be abſolved of, is a ſtupidity againſt Davids practiſe here; Dixit, He ſaid, he meditated, he conſidered, Gods ſervice is no extemporall thing. But then Dixit, He reſolved too, for ſo the word ſignifies, Conſideration, but Reſolution upon it; And then, that he Reſolved, he Executed.

This is not only Davids dixit in corde, where ſpeaking is thinking, nor only Solomons dixi ædificabo, I reſolved how I might build, but it is alſo the Prodigals Dixi revertar, I ſaid I will go to my Father, A reſolving and executing of that Reſolution for that, that execution crownes all. How many thinke to come hither, when they wake, and are not ready when the houre comes? And even this mornings omiſſion is an abridgement, or an eſſay of their whole lives, They thinke to repent every day, and are not ready when the bell tolls. It is well ſaid of Gods ſpeaking, in the Creation, It was Dictio practica, diffinitiva, Imperativa, It was an Actuall ſpeaking, a Definitive, an Imperative ſpeaking; And, Dicto abſolvit negotium, His ſaying he would doe it, that is, his meaning to doe it, was the very doing of it. Our Religious duties require meditations, for God is no extemporall God; Thoſe produce determinations, for God muſt not be held in ſuſpence; And they flow into executions, for God is not an illuſible God, to be carried with promiſes, or purpoſes onely; And all thoſe linkes of this religious Chaine, Conſideration, Reſolution, Execution, Thought, Word, and Practiſe, are made out of this golden word, Amar, Dixi, I ſaid I will doe it. And then, Dixi confitebor, I confidered, that my beſt way was to confeſſe, and I reſolved to doe ſo, and I did it; Dixi confitebor.

It is but a homely Metaphor, but it is a wholeſome, and a uſefull one, Confeſſio vomitus, Confeſſion works as a vomit; It ſhakes the frame, and it breakes the bed of ſin; and it is an eaſe to the ſpirituall ſtomach, to the conſcience, to be thereby disburdened. It is an eaſe to the ſinner, to the patient; but that that makes it abſolutely neceſſary, is that it is a glory to God; for in all my ſpirituall actions, Apprecations, or Deprecations, whether I pray for benefits, or againſt calamities, ſtill my Alpha, and Omega, my firſt and laſt motive, muſt be the glory of God. Therefore Ioſhuah ſayes to Achan, My Son, give I pray thee, glory unto the Lord God of Iſrael, and make Confeſſion unto him. Now, the glory of of God ariſes not out of the Confeſſing; but becauſe every true Confeſſing is accompanied with a deteſtation of the ſin, as it hath ſeparated me from God, and a ſenſe of my re-union, and redintegration with God, in the abjuration of my former ſins, (for, to tell my ſin by way of a good tale, or by boaſting in it, though it be a revealing, a manifeſting, is not a Confeſſion) in every true confeſſion God hath glory, becauſe he hath a ſtraid ſoule, re-united to his Kingdome. And to advance this Glory, David confeſſes Peccata, ſins; which is our next Conſideration, I ſaid, I will confeſſe my ſins unto the Lord.

Peccata vera.

Firſt he reſents his ſtate, All is not well; Then he examines himſelfe, Thus and thus it ſtands with me; Then he conſiders, then he reſolves, then he executes, He confeſſes, (ſo far we are gone) and now he confeſſes ſins. For, the Phariſees, (though he pretended a Confeſſion) was rather an exprobration, how much God had beene beholden to him, for his Sabbaths, for his Almes, for his Tithes, for his Faſting. David confeſſes ſins; firſt, ſuch things as were truly ſins. For, as the element of Ayre, that lyes betweene the Water, and the Fire, is ſometimes condenſed into water, ſometimes rarified into fire: So lyes the conſcience of man betweene two operations of the Devill; ſometimes he rarifies it, evaporates it, that it apprehends nothing, feeles nothing to be ſin, ſometimes he condenſes it, that every thing falls and ſticks upon it, in the nature, and takes the waight of ſin, and he miſ-interprets the indifferent actions of others, and of his owne, and deſtroyes all uſe of Chriſtian liberty, all converſation, all recreation, and out of a falſe feare, of being undutifull to God, is unjuſt to all the world, and to his owne ſoule, and conſequently to God himſelfe, who, of all notions, would not be received in the notion of a Cruell, or Tyrannicall God. In an obdurate conſcience that feeles no ſin, the Devill glories moſt, but in the over-tender conſcience he practiſes moſt; That is his triumphant, but this is his militant Church; That is his Sabbath, but this is his ſix dayes labour; In the obdurate he hath induced a ſecurity, in the ſcrupulous and over-tender he is working for deſperation. There are few things in the Scriptures, which the Holy Ghoſt hath expreſt in ſo many names, as Sin; Sin, Wickedneſſe, Iniquity, Tranſgreſſions, Offences, Many, many more; And all this, that thereby we might reflect upon our ſelves often, and ſee if our particular actions fell not under ſome of thoſe names; But then, leſt this ſhould over-intimidate us, there are as many names given by the Holy Ghoſt, to the Law of God; Law, Statutes, Ordinances, Covenants, Teſtimony, Precept, and all the reſt, of which there is ſome one at leaſt, repeated in every verſe of the hundred and nineteenth Pſalme; that thereby we might ſtill have a Rule to meaſure, and try our actions by, whether they be ſins or no. For, as the Apoſtle ſayes, He had not knowne ſinne, if he had not knowne the Law; So there had beene no ſin, if there had beene no Law. And therefore that ſoule that feeles it ſelfe oppreſſed under the burden of a Vow, muſt have recourſe to the Law of God, and ſee whether that Vow fall under the Rule of that Law; For as an over-tender conſcience may call things ſins, that are not, and ſo be afraid of things that never were, ſo may it alſo of things that were, but are not now; of ſuch ſins as were truly ſins, and fearfull ſins, but are now dead, dead by a true repentance, and buried in the Sea of the blood of Chriſt Jeſus, and ſealed up in that Monument, under the ſeale of Reconciliation, the bleſſed Sacrament, and yet riſe ſometimes in this tender conſcience, in a ſuſpition and jealouſie, that God hath not truly, not fully forgiven them. And as a Ghoſt, which we thinke we ſee, afrights us more then an army that we doe ſee: So theſe apparitions of ſins, of things that are not againſt any Law of God, and ſo are not ſins, or ſins that are dead in a true repentance, and ſo have no being at all, by the Devils practiſe worke dangerouſly upon a diſtempered conſcience; for, as God hath given the Soule an Imagination, and a Fancy, as well as an Underſtanding, So the Devill imprints in the conſcience, a falſe Imagination, as well as a fearefull ſenſe of true ſin. David confeſſes ſins, ſins that were truly ſins.

Omnia.

But the more ordinary danger is, in our not calling thoſe things which are truly ſins, by that name. For, as ſometimes when the Baptiſme of a Child is deferred for State, the Child dyes unbaptized: So the ſinner defers the Baptiſme of his ſin, in his teares, and in the blood of his Saviour, offered in the bleſſed Sacrament, till he dye nameleſſe, nameleſſe in the booke of Life. It is a Character, that one of the ancienteſt Poets gives of a well-bred, and well-governed Gentleman, That he would not tell ſuch lyes as were like truths, not probable lyes; nor ſuch truths as were like lyes, not wonderfull, not incredible truths; It is the conſtancy of a rectified Chriſtian, not to call his indifferent actions ſins, for that is to ſlander God, as a cruell God; nor to call ſins indifferent actions, for that is to undervalue God, as a negligent God. God doth not keepe the Conſcience of man upon the wrack, in a continuall torture and ſtretching; But God doth not ſtupifie the conſcience with an Opiate, in an inſenſibleneſſe of any ſin. The law of God is the balance, and the Criterium; By that try thine actions, and then confeſſe. David did ſo; Peccata, he confeſſed ſinnes; nothing, that was not ſo, as ſuch; neither omitted he any thing, that was ſo. And then they were Peccata ſua, His ſins, I ſaid, I will confeſſe my ſins unto the Lord.

Sua. First, Sua, His ſinnes, that is, à ſe perpetrata, ſins which he confeſſes to have been of his voluntary committing; He might, and did not avoyd them. When Adam ſaid, by way of alienation, and transferring his fault, The woman whom thou gaveſt me; And the woman

Gen. 3. 12. ſaid, The Serpent deceived me; God tooke this, by way of Information to finde out the Principall, but not by way of extenuation, or alleviation of their faults; Every Adam eats with as much ſweat of his browes, and every Eve brings forth her Children with as much paine in her travaile, as if there had been no Serpent in the caſe. If a man ſin againſt God, who ſhall plead for him? If a man lay his ſins upon the Serpent, upon the Devill, it is no plea, but if he lay them upon God, it is blaſphemy. Iob finds ſome ground of a pious Expoſtulation with God, in that, My fleſh is not braſſe, nor my ſtrength ſtones; And ſuch as I am, thou haſt made me; why then doeſt thou ſet me up as a marke to ſhoot at? But Iob never hopes for eaſe, in any ſuch allegation; Thou haſt made my ſoule a Ciſterne, and then powred tentations into it; Thou haſt enfeebled it with denying it thy Grace, and then put a giant, a neceſſitie of ſinning upon it. My ſins are mine own; The Sun is no cauſe of the ſhadow my body caſts, nor God of the ſins I commit. David confeſſes his ſinnes, that is, he confeſſes them to be His; And then he confeſſes His, He meddles not with thoſe that are other mens.

Non aliena. The Magiſtrate and the Miniſter are bound to conſider the ſins of others; for, their ſins become Quodammodo noſtra, in ſome ſort ours, if we doe not reprove, if the Magiſtrate doe not correct thoſe ſins. All men are bound to confeſſe, and lament the ſins of the people. It was then when Daniel was in that exerciſe of his Devotion, Confeſſing his

Dan. 9. 20. ſinne, and the ſinne of his people, that he received that comfort from the Angel Gabriel; And yet, even then, the firſt thing that fell under his Confeſſion, was his own ſin, My ſin, And then, The ſinne of my people. When Ioſephs brethren came to a ſenſe of that ſin, in having ſold him, none of them transfers the ſin from himſelfe, neither doth any of

Gen. 42. 21. them diſcharge any of the reſt of that ſin: They all take all; They ſaid to one another, ſayes that Text, we, all we, are verily guilty, and therefore is this diſtreſſe come upon us, upon us all; Nationall calamities are induced by generall ſins, and where they fall, we cannot ſo charge the Laity, as to free the Clergy, nor ſo charge the people, as to free the Magiſtrate. But as great ſummes are rayſed by little perſonall Contributions; ſo a little true ſorrow from every ſoule, would make a great ſacrifice to God, and a few teares from every eye, a deeper and a ſafer Sea, about this Iland, then that that doth wall it. Let us therefore never ſay, that it is Aliena ambitio, The immoderate ambition of a pretending Monarch, that endangers us, That it is Aliena perfidia, The falſhood of perfidious neighbours that hath diſappointed us, That it is Aliena fortuna, The growth of others who have ſhot up under our ſhelter, that may overtop us; They are Peccata noſtra, our own pride, our own wantonneſſe, our own drunkenneſſe, that makes God ſhut and cloſe his hand towards us, withdraw his former bleſſings from us, and then ſtrike us with that ſhut, and cloſed, and heavy hand, and multiply calamities upon us. What a Parliament meets at this houre in this Kingdome? How many ſuch Committees as this? how many ſuch Congregations ſtand, as we doe here, in the preſence of God, at this houre? And what a Subſidy ſhould this State receive, and what a ſacrifice ſhould God receive, if every particular man would but depart with his own beloved ſin? We diſpute what is our own, as though we would but know what to give. Alas, our ſins are our own, let us give them. Our ſins are our own; that we confeſſe; And we confeſſe them, according to Davids Method, Domino, to the Lord; I will confeſſe my ſinnes to the Lord.

Domino peccavi. After he had deliberated, and reſolved upon his courſe, what he would doe, he never ſtayed upon the perſon, to whom; His way being Confeſſion, he ſtayed not long in ſeeking his ghoſtly Father, his Confeſſor, Confitebor Domino. And firſt, Peccata Domino, That his ſins were ſins againſt the Lord. For, as every ſin is a violation of a Law, ſo every

A very violation of a Law reflects upon the Law-maker. It is the ſame offence to coyne a penny, and a piece; The ſame to counterfait the ſeale of a Subpœna, as of a Pardon. The ſecond Table was writ by the hand of God, as well as the firſt; And the Majeſty of God, as he is the Law-giver, is wounded in an adultery, and a theft, as well as in an Idolatry, or a blaſphemy. It is not inough to conſider the deformity and the foulneſſe of an Action ſo, as that an honeſt man would not have done it; but ſo as it violates a law of God, and his Majeſty in that law. The ſhame of men, is one bridle, that is caſt upon us. It is a morall obduration, and in the ſuburbs, next doore to a ſpirituall obduration, to be Voyce-proofe, Cenſure-proofe, not to be afraid, nor aſhamed, what the world ſayes. He that relyes upon his Plaudo domi, Though the world hiſſe, I give my ſelfe a Plaudite at home, I have him at my Table, and her in my bed, whom I would have, and I care not for rumor; he that reſts in ſuch a Plaudite, prepares for a Tragedy, a Tragedy in the B Amphitheater, the double Theater, this world, and the next too. Even the ſhame of the world ſhould be one one bridle, but the ſtrongeſt is the other, Peccata Domino, To conſider that every ſin is a violation of the Majeſty of God.

And then Confitebor Domino, ſayes David, I will confeſſe my ſinnes to the Lord; ſinnes are not confeſſed, if they be not confeſſed to him; and if they be confeſſed to him, in caſe of neceſſitie it will ſuffice, though they be confeſſed to no other. Indeed, a confeſſion is directed upon God, though it be made to his Miniſter: If God had appointed his Angels, or his Saints to abſolve me, as he hath his Miniſters, I would confeſſe to them. Ioſhuah tooke not the juriſdiction out of Gods hands, when he ſaid to Achan, Give glory unto the God of Iſrael, in making thy confeſſion to him; And tell me now, what thou haſt done, and hide it not from me. The law of the Leper, is, That he ſhall be brought unto the Prieſt; Men come not willingly to this manifeſtation of themſelves; nor are they to be brought C in chains, as they doe in the Roman Church, by a neceſſitie of an exact enumeration of all their ſins: But to be led with that ſweetneſſe, with which our Church proceeds, in appointing ſicke perſons, if they feele their conſciences troubled with any weighty matter, to make a ſpeciall confeſſion, and to receive abſolution at the hands of the Prieſt; And then to be remembred, that every comming to the Communion, is as ſerious a thing as our tranſmigration out of this world, and we ſhould doe as much here, for the ſettling of our Conſcience, as upon our death-bed; And to be remembred alſo, that none of all the Reformed Churches have forbidden Confeſſion, though ſome practiſe it leſſe then others. If I ſubmit a cauſe to the Arbitrement of any man, to end it, ſecundùm voluntatem, ſayes the Law, How he will, yet ſtill Arbitrium eſt arbitrium boni viri, his will muſt be regulated by the rules of common honeſty, and generall equity. So when we lead men to this holy eaſe of diſcharging their heavy ſpirits, by ſuch private Confeſſi- D ons, yet this is ſtill limited by the law of God, ſo far as God hath inſtituted this power by his Goſpel, in his Church, and far from inducing amongſt us, that torture of the Conſcience, that uſurpation of Gods power, that ſpying into the counſails of Princes, & ſupplanting of their purpoſes, with which the Church of Rome hath been deeply charged.

And this uſefull and un-miſ-interpretable Confeſſion, which we ſpeake of, is the more recommended to us, in that with which David ſhuts up his Act, (as out of S. Hierome, and out of our former tranſlation, we intimated unto you) that he doth all this Adverſum ſe, I will confeſſe my ſinnes unto the Lord, againſt my ſelfe; The more I finde Confeſſion, or any religious practiſe, to be againſt my ſelfe, and repugnant to mine owne nature, the farther I will goe in it. For, ſtill the Adverſum me, is Cum Deo; The more I ſay againſt my ſelfe, the more I vilifie my ſelfe, the more I glorifie my God. As S. Chryſoſtome ſayes, every man is Spontaneus Satan, a Satan to himſelfe, as Satan is a Tempter, e- E very man can tempt himſelfe; ſo I will be Spontaneus Satan, as Satan is an Accuſer, an Adverſary, I will accuſe my ſelfe. I conſider often that paſſionate humiliation of S. Peter, Exi à me Domine, He fell at Ieſus knees, ſaying, Depart from me for I am a ſinfull man, O Lord; And I am often ready to ſay ſo, and more; Depart from me, O Lord, for I am ſinfull inough to infect thee; As I may perſecute thee in thy Children, ſo I may infect thee in thine Ordinances; Depart, in withdrawing thy word from me, for I am corrupt inough to make even thy ſaving Goſpel, the ſavor of death unto death; Depart, in withholding thy Sacrament, for I am leprous inough to taint thy fleſh, and to make the balme of thy blood, poyſon to my ſoule; Depart, in withdrawing the protection of thine Angels from me, for I am vicious inough to imprint corruption and rebellion into their nature. And if I be too foule for God himſelfe to come neare me, for his Ordinances to worke upon me, I am no companion for my ſelfe, I muſt not be alone with my ſelfe; for I am as apt to take, as to give infection; I am a reciprocall plague; paſſively and actively contagious; I breath corruption, and breath it upon my ſelfe; and I am the Babylon that I muſt goe out of, or I periſh. I am not onely under Iacobs Non dignus, Not worthy the leaſt of all thy mercies; nor onely under the Centurions Non dignus, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldeſt come under my roofe, That thy Spirit ſhould ever ſpeake to my ſpirit, (which was the forme of words, in which every Communicant received the Sacrament, in the Primitive Church, Lord I am not worthy that thou ſhouldeſt enter under my roofe;) Nor onely under the Prodigals Non dignus, Not worthy to be called thy ſonne; neither in the filiation of Adoption, for I have deſerved to be diſ-inherited; nor in the filiation of Creation, for I have deſerved to be annihilated; But Non dignus procumbere, I am not worthy to ſtoop down, to fall down, to kneele before thee, in thy Miniſter, the Almoner of thy Mercy, the Treaſurer of thine Abſolutions. So farre doe I confeſſe Adverſum me, againſt my ſelfe, as that I confeſſe, I am not worthy to confeſſe, nor to be admitted to any acceſſe, any approach to thee, much leſſe to an act, ſo neare Reconciliation to thee, as an accuſation of my ſelfe, or ſo neare thy acquitting, as a ſelf-condemning. Be this the iſſue in all Controverſies, whenſoever any new opinions diſtract us, Be that ſtill thought beſt, that is moſt Adverſum nos, moſt againſt our ſelves, That that moſt layes flat the nature of man, ſo it take it not quite away, and blaſt all vertuous indeavours; That that moſt exalts the Grace and Glory of God, be that the Truth; And ſo have you the whole myſtery of Davids Confeſſion, in both his Acts; preparatory, in reſenting his ſinfull condition in generall, and ſurvaying his conſcience in particular; And then his Deliberation, his Reſolution, his Execution, his Confeſſion; Confeſſion of true ſins, and of them onely, and of all them, of his ſins, and all this to the Lord, and all that againſt himſelfe. That which was propoſed for the ſecond Part, muſt fall into the compaſſe of a Concluſion, and a ſhort one, that is Gods Act, Thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin.

Domino confitebor. Joſh. 7. 19. Levit. 14. 2.

Adverſum me. Luk. 5. 8.

Gen. 32. 10. Mat. 8. 8. Luke 15. 21. Mark 1. 7. 1 John 1. 9. Rev. 3. 20.

2 Part. This is a wide doore, and would let out Armies of Inſtructions to you; but we will ſhut up this doore, with theſe two leaves thereof, The fulneſſe of Gods Mercy, He forgives the ſin and the puniſhment; And the ſeaſonableneſſe, the acceleration of his mercy, in this expreſſion in our text, that Davids is but Actus inchoatus, He ſayes he will confeſſe, And Gods is Actus conſummatus, Thou forgaveſt, Thou hadſt already forgiven the iniquity, and puniſhment of my ſin. Theſe will be the two leaves of this doore; and let the hand that ſhuts them be this And, this Particle of Connection which we have in the text, I ſaid, And thou didſt. For though this Remiſſion of ſin be not preſented here as an effect upon that cauſe of Davids Confeſſion, (It is not delivered in a Quia, and an Ergo, Becauſe David did this, God did that; for mans wil leads not the will of God, as a cauſe, who does all his acts of mercy for his mercies ſake) yet though it be not an effect, as from a cauſe, yet it is at leaſt as a conſequent from an occaſion, ſo aſſured, ſo infallible, as let any man confeſſe as David did, and he ſhall be ſure to be forgiven as David was. For though this forgiveneſſe be a flower of mercy, yet the roote growes in the Juſtice of God; If wee acknowledge our ſin, he is faithfull and juſt to forgive us our ſin; It growes out of his faithfulneſſe, as he hath vouchſafed to binde himſelfe by a promiſe, And out of his Juſtice, as he hath received a full ſatisfaction for all our ſins. So that this Hand, this And, in our Text, is as a ligament, as a ſinew, to connect and knit together that glorious body of Gods preventing grace, and his ſubſequent grace; if our Confeſſion come between and tie the knot, God, that moved us to that act, will perfect all.

Plenitudo. Here enters the fulneſſe of his mercy, at one leafe of this doore; well expreſſed at our doore, in that Ecce ſto, & pulſo, Behold, I ſtand at the doore and knock; for, firſt he comes; here is no mention of our calling of him before; He comes of himſelfe; And then he ſuffers not us to be ignorant of his comming, he comes ſo, as that he manifeſts himſelf, Ecce, Behold; And then he expects not that we ſhould wake with that light, and look out of our ſelves, but he knocks, ſolicits us, at leaſt, with ſome noyſe at our doores, ſome calamities upon our neighbours; And againe he appeares not, like a lightning that paſſes away as ſoon as it is ſeene, that no man can reade by it, nor work by it, nor light a candle, nor kindle a coale by it, but he ſtands at the doore, and expects us; all day; not only with a patience, but with a hunger to effect his purpoſe upon us, he would come in, and ſup with us, Accept our diet, our poore endeavours; And then, would have us

A us ſup with him, (as it is there added) would feaſt us with his abundant Graces, which he brings even home to our doores; But thoſe he does not give us at the doore; not till we have let him in, by the good uſe of his former grace; And as he offers this fulneſſe of his mercy, by theſe meanes before, ſo by way of Pardon, and Remiſſion, if we have been defective in opening the doore upon his ſtanding and knocking, this fulneſſe is fully expreſſed in this word of this Text, as our two Tranſlations, (neither departing from the naturall ſignification of the word) have rendred it.

The word is the ſame here, in Davids ſweetneſſe, as in Cains bitterneſſe, Gnavon; and we cannot tell, whether Cain ſpeake there of a puniſhment too great to be borne, or of a ſin too great to be pardoned; Nor which David meanes here; It fills up the meaſure of Gods mercy, if we take him to meane both. God, upon Confeſſion, forgives the puniſhment of the ſin; So that the juſt terror of Hell, and the imaginary terror of Purga- B tory, for the next World, is taken away; and for this World, what calamities and tribulations ſoever fall upon us, after theſe Confeſſions, and Remiſſions, they have not the nature of puniſhments, but they are Fatherly Corrections, and Medicinall aſſiſtances, againſt relapſes, and have their maine relation and proſpect upon the future.

Pœna. Gen 4.13.

For not onely the ſin it ſelfe, but the iniquitie of the ſin, is ſaid to be forgiven; God keeps nothing in his minde againſt the laſt day; But whatſoever is worſt in the ſin, the venome, The malignity of the ſin, The violation of his Law, The affrontings of his Majeſty reſiding in that Law, though it have been a winking at his light, a reſiſting of his light, the ill nature, the malignity, the iniquity of the ſin is forgiven. Onely this remaines, That God extinguiſhes not the right of a third Perſon, nor pardons a Murder ſo, as that he barres another from his Appeale: Not that his pardon is not full, upon a full Confeſſion, but that the Confeſſion is no more full, if it bee not accompanied with Sa- C tisfaction, that is, Reſtitution of all unjuſtly gotten, then if the Confeſſion lacked Contrition, and true ſorrow. Otherwiſe the iniquity of the ſin, and the puniſhment of the ſin, are both fully pardoned. And ſo we have ſhut one leafe of this doore, The fulneſſe; The other is the ſpeed, and acceleration of his mercy, and that leafe we will clap to, in a word.

Iniquitas.

This is expreſſed in this, David is but at his Dixit, and God at his Remiſit; David was but Saying, nay, but Thinking, and God was Doing, nay Perfecting his work. To the Lepers that cryed out for mercy, Chriſt ſaid, Go, ſhew your ſelves to the Prieſt; So he put them into the way; and they went, ſayes the text; and as they went, they were healed upon the way. No man comes into the way, but by the illumination, and direction of God, Chriſt put them into the way. The way is the Church; no man is cured out of the way; no man that ſeparates himſelfe from the Church; nor in the way neither, except he goe; If he live negligently, and truſt onely upon the outward profeſſion; nor D though he goe, except he goe according to Chriſt bidding; except he conforme himſelf to that worſhip of God, and to thoſe means of ſanctification, which God hath inſtituted in his Church, without ſingularities of his owne, or Traditions of other mens inventing, and impoſing. This, this ſubmitting, and conforming our ſelves to God, ſo as God hath commanded us, the purpoſing of this, and the endeavouring of this, is our Dixit in the Text, our ſaying that we will doe it, and upon this Dixit, this purpoſing, this endeavouring, inſtantly, immediately, infallibly follows the Remiſit, God will, God does, God hath forgiven, the iniquity, and the puniſhment of the ſin.

Promptitudo Luke 17.11.

Therefore to end all, Poure out thy heart like water before the face of the Lord. No liquor comes ſo clearly, ſo abſolutely from the veſſel, not oyle, not milk, not wine, not hony, as that it leaves no taſte behind; ſo may ſweet ſins; and therefore poure out, ſaies the Prophet, not the liquor, but the heart it ſelfe, and take a new heart of Gods making; for E thy former heart was never ſo of Gods making, as that Adam had not a hand in it; and his Image was in it, in Originall ſin, as well as Gods in the Creation. As liquors poured out leave a taſte and a ſmell behinde them, unperfected Confeſſions (And who perfects his Confeſſion?) leave ill gottten goods ſticking upon thine heire, and they leave a taſte, and a delight to thinke, and ſpeake of former ſins, ſticking upon thy ſelfe; But poure out thy heart like water; All ill impreſſions in the very roote. And for the accompliſhment of this great Myſtery of Godlineſſe by Confeſſion, fixe thy Meditations upon thoſe words, and in the ſtrength of them, come now, (or when thou ſhalt bee better ſtrengthened by the Meditation of them) to the Table of the Lord, The Lord looketh upon men, And, if any ſay, I have ſinned, and perverted that that which was right, and it profited me not, he will deliver his ſoule from going down into the pit, and his life ſhall ſee light; and it is added, Loe all theſe things worketh God twice and thrice. Here is a fulneſſe of conſolation, firſt plenary, and here is a preſent forgiveneſſe; If man, if any man ſay, I have ſinned, God doth, God forgives; and here is more then that, an iteration, if thou fall upon infirmity againe, God will on penitence more carefully performed, forgive againe. This hee will doe twice, or thrice ſayes the Hebrew, our Tranſlation might boldly ſay, as it doth, This God will doe often. But yet if God finde dolum in ſpiritu, an over-confidence in this, God cannot be mocked; And therefore take heed of truſting upon it too often, but eſpecially of truſting upon it too late. And whatſoever the Holy Ghoſt may meane by the twice or thrice, be ſure to doe it once, doe it now, and receive thy Saviour there, and ſo as he offers himſelfe unto thee in theſe his Ordinances this day, once, and twice, and thrice, that is, in prayer, in preaching, in the Sacrament. For this is thy trinity upon earth, that muſt bring thee to the Trinity in heaven: To which Trinity, &c.

Lam.cap.3.19.

Job 33.27.

SERM. LIX.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 32. 6.

For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, in a time when thou mayeſt be found; ſurely in the floods of great waters they ſhall not come nigh unto him.

Diviſio.

YOu would not bee weary of reading a long conveiance, in which the land were given to your ſelves; nor of a long Will, in which the body of the ſtate were bequeathed to you. Be not weary, if at any time your patience be exerciſed ſome minutes beyond the threeſcore, ſometime beyond the houre in theſe exerciſes, for we exhibit the conveiance, in which the land, the land of Promiſe is made yours, and the Teſtament, in which even the Teſtator himſelfe is bequeathed to you. But Legacies muſt be demanded, and oftentimes ſued for; and in this text you are directed how to come by it, by prayer, (For this ſhall every one, &c.) And you are encouraged in the ſuit by the value of that you are to recover, by the effect of prayer, Surely in the floods of great waters they ſhall not come nigh to him: and theſe two, the way and the end, the manner and the matter, prayer and the benefit thereof, will be our two parts. And in the firſt of theſe, The duty of prayer, though wee be elſewhere commanded To pray continually, yet for all that continuall diſpoſition, we have here certaine limitations, or rather indeed preparations, leſt that which we call Prayer ſhould not be ſo, and theſe are foure: For firſt, it is but omnis ſanctus, every godly man ſhall pray, for the prayer of the wicked turns to ſinne; And then the object of prayer, to whom it muſt be directed, is limited, it is but ad te, unto thee hee ſhall pray, beyond him wee cannot goe, and he that prayes ſhort of him, to any on this ſide of God, falls ſhort in his prayer; And in a third conſideration, the ſubject, the matter of his prayer is limited too, It is but propter hoc, for this ſhall hee pray, that is, for that which hath beene formerly expreſſed, not whatſoever our deſires, or our anguiſh, and vexation, and impatience preſents or ſuggeſts to us; And laſtly, the time is limited too, In tempore opportuno, In a time when thou mayeſt be found. In theſe foure, we ſhall determine that firſt part, the duty; and in the ſecond the reward, the benefit, which is deliverance, (Surely in the floods of great waters they ſhall not come nigh him) wee ſhall ſee firſt, that the world is diluvium aquarum, a deluge of water floods that threaten all; But yet though worldly calamities bee of that ſpreading, and diffuſive, and overflowing nature, non approximabit, there are places that it cannot come to, rocks that it cannot ſhake, hills that it cannot overflow; God hath ſo erected the godly man, that hee is a non ultra, a banke to this ſea; It ſhall not come neere him; and this David eſtabliſhes with that ſeale of infallibility, Surely, Surely in the floods of 1 Theſſ. 5. 17.

A of great waters they ſhall not come nigh him. And theſe be the ſteps by which we ſhall leade you to the greateſt happineſſe, that is, deliverance from all afflictions, and that by the nobleſt meanes, and the faireſt way, that is, familiar converſation with God by prayer.

Into our firſt part, The duty of prayer, wee ſhall make our entry with this conſideration, That our religious Duties, in their precepts, are for the moſt part accompanied with reaſons to induce us to the performance thereof: Hoc fac & vives; Doe this, ſayes God; doe it, becauſe I command it, at leaſt doe it, becauſe if thou do it, thou ſhalt live for ever. And ſo, Bee not forgetfull to entertaine ſtrangers, for thereby ſome have entertained Angels unawares; Here the reaſon of the precept is example; others have proſpered that way, therefore walke thou in it. God illuſtrates his precepts, comments upon his owne Text much by examples. Firſt, to raiſe us to the beſt height, God makes himſelfe our example, Sicut Pater, Be holy as your Father in heaven is holy: Then, becauſe we cannot B reach to that, he makes men like our ſelves (at leaſt, ſuch as we ſhould be) our example, Sicut Elias, Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as wee are, and hee prayed that it might not raine, and it rained not, and that it might, and it did. If wee be not able to conforme our ſelves to the ſingularity of one particular and tranſcendent man, hee ſends us to the whole body of good men, his ſervants, Sicut Prophetæ, Take, my brethren, the Prophets, for an example of long patience. And becauſe he knowes our inclination, to be a declination, and that we caſt thoſe lookes, which hee made upward towards him, downward towards the creature, he ſends us to creatures of an ignobler nature, Vade ad formicam, Goe to the Ant, doe as ſhee doth, be as induſtrious in thy buſineſſe, as ſhe is in hers. And then, as in inclining us to good, ſo alſo for avoiding of ſinfull courſes, he leades us by example too, Non ſicut quidam eorum, Bee not idolaters as ſome of them, nor fornicators, nor tempters of Chriſt, nor murmurers, as ſome of them. And as that Apoſtle begins that cata- C logue there, ſo, Theſe are examples to us, ſo hee ends it thus alſo, Theſe things came unto them for examples: God ſuffers the wicked to proceed in their ſin, and he powres downe his judgements upon them for their ſins, not onely for their puniſhment, but therefore, that they might be examples to us. Now if God raiſe a glory to himſelfe in the deſtruction of the wicked, if he make the wicked in their ruine, even Miniſters in his Church, that is, edifiers, and inſtructers of others, by their owne ruine, if their ruine bee a ſenſible Catechiſme, and a viſible Sermon for the edifying of others, how much more doth it conduce to his glory, that the righteouſneſſe, and holy converſation of his Miniſters, and Prophets ſhould bee a lanterne to the feet of his people? This is all that David promiſes in thankfulneſſe for that mercy which he asks of God, This is that that hee asks; Reſtore me to the joy of thy ſalvation, Et confirma me ſpiritu principali, Eſtabliſh mee with thy free ſpirit, Spiritu munifico, ſayes S. Hierom, with thy liberall, thy bountifull Spirit; This is D much that David asks; and what will David doe for God? This; I will teach thy wayes unto the wicked, and ſinners ſhall be converted unto thee. And this is that which S. Paul apprehended to have moved God, to uſe his ſervice in the Church; For this cauſe was I received to mercy, that Ieſus Chriſt ſhould firſt ſhew unto me all long ſuffering; but that was not all; But as it followes there, Vnto the example of them, which ſhall in time to come beleeve in him unto eternall life. It is an unexpreſſible comfort to have beene Gods inſtrument, for the converſion of others, by the power of Preaching, or by a holy and exemplar life in any calling. And with this comfort David proceeds in the recommendation of this duty of Prayer, Day and night I have felt thy hand upon me, I have acknowledged my ſinne unto thee, and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin; thus it ſtood with me, and by my example, For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, in a time when thou maieſt be found.

Firſt then, the perſon that hath any acceſſe allowed him, any title to pray, is he that is E Godly, holy. Now, Omnis Sanctus, eſt omnis Baptiſmate ſanctificatus: Thoſe are the holy ones whom God will heare, who are of the houſhold of the faithfull, of the Communion of Saints, matriculated, engraffed, enrolled in the Church, by that initiatory Sacrament of Baptiſme; for, the houſe of God, into which we enter by Baptiſme, is the houſe of Prayer; And, as out of the Arke, whoſoever ſwam beſt, was not ſaved by his ſwimming, no more is any morall man, out of the Church, by his praying: He that ſwomme in the flood, ſwomme but into more and more water; he that prayes out of the Church, prayes but into more and more ſin, becauſe he doth not eſtabliſh his prayer in that, Grant this for our Lord and Saviour Chriſt Jeſus ſake. It is true then, that theſe holy ones, whoſe prayer is acceptable, are thoſe of the Chriſtian Church; Onely they; but is it all they?

1 Part.

Heb. 13. 2.

Iam. 5. 17.

ver. 10.

1 Cor. 10.

ver. 6. ver. 11.

Pſal. 51. 2.

1 Tim. 1. 16.

ver. 4.

ver. 5.

Omnis ſanctus. Hierom.

they? are all their prayers acceptable? There is a ſecond concoction neceſſary too: Not onely to have beene ſanctified by the Church in Baptiſme, but a ſanctification in a worthy receiving of the other Sacrament too; A life that pleads the firſt ſeale, Baptiſme, and claimes the other ſeale, The body and blood of Chriſt Jeſus: We know the Wiſe mans counſaile, concerning propitiation, Be not without feare. Though thou have received the propitiatory Sacrament of Baptiſme, be afraid that thou haſt not all. Will the milke that thou ſuckedſt from a wholeſome Nurſe, keepe thee alive now? Or canſt thou dine upon laſt yeares meat to day? Hee that hath that firſt holineſſe, The holineſſe of the Covenant, the holineſſe of Baptiſme, let him pray for more. For Omnis Sanctus, is Quantumcumque Sanctus, How holy ſoever he be, that holineſſe will not defray him all the way, but that holineſſe is a faire letter of credit, and a bill of exchange for more. When canſt thou thinke thy ſelfe holy enough? when thou haſt waſhed thy ſelfe in ſnow water? In penitent teares? (as the beſt purity of this life is expreſſed) why, even then, Abominabuntur te veſtimenta tua, Thine owne cloathes ſhall make thee abominable. Is all well, when thou thinkeſt all well? why, All the wayes of a man are cleane in his owne eyes, but the Lord weigheth the ſpirit. If thine owne ſpirit, thine owne conſcience accuſe thee of nothing, nothing unrepented, is all well? why, I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby juſtified. It is God onely that is Surveyor of thy holineſſe, And, Behold, he found no ſtedfaſtneſſe in his Servants, and laid folly upon his Angels; how much more in them, that dwell in houſes of clay, whoſe foundation is in the duſt? Sordet in conſpectu aterni Iudicis, When that eternall Judge comes to value our tranſitory, or imaginary, our hollow, and ruſty, and rotten holineſſe, Sordet quod in intentione fulget operantis, Even that which had a good luſtre, a good ſpeciouſneſſe, not onely in the eyes of men that ſaw it, who might be deceived by my hypocriſie, but in the purpoſe of him that did it, becomes baſe, more allay then pure metall, more corruption then devotion.

Though Iacob, when he fled from his Father in law, Laban, were free enough himſelfe, from the theft of Labans Idols, yet it was dangerouſly pronounced of him, With whomſoever thou findeſt thy gods, let him not live: For, his owne Wife, Rachel had ſtollen them: And Caro conjux; Thy Wife, thy fleſh, thy weaker part, may inſinuate much ſin into thine actions, even when thy ſpirit is at ſtrongeſt, and thou in thy beſt confidence. Onely thus theſe two caſes may differ; Rachel was able to cover thoſe ſtollen Idols from her Fathers finding, with that excuſe, The cuſtome of Women is come upon me; But thou ſhalt not be able to cover thy ſtollen ſins, with ſaying, The infirmity of man is come upon me, I do but as other men do; Though thou have that degree towards ſanctification, that thou ſin not out of preſumption, but out of infirmity, though thou mayeſt in a modified ſenſe fall within Davids word, Omnis ſanctus, A holy man, yet every holy and godly man muſt pray, that even thoſe infirmities may be removed too. Qui ſanctificatur, ſanctificetur adhuc: He that is holy, let him be holy ſtill; not onely ſo holy ſtill, but ſtill more and more holy. For, beloved, As in the firmament, of thoſe ſtars which are reduced into Conſtellations, and into a certainty of ſhapes, of figures, and images, we obſerve ſome to be of one greatneſſe, ſome of another, wee obſerve divers magnitudes in all them, but to all thoſe other Stars, which are not reduced into thoſe formes, and figures, we allow no magnitude at all, no proportion at all, no name, no conſideration: So for thoſe bleſſed ſoules which are collected into their eternall dwelling in Heaven, which have their immoveable poſſeſſion, poſition at the right hand of God, as one Star differs from another in glory, ſo do theſe Saints which are in Heaven; But whilſt men are upon this earth, though they be ſtars, (Saints of God) though they be in the firmament, eſtabliſhed in the true Church of God, yet they have no magnitude, no proportion, no certainty, no holineſſe in themſelves, nor in any thing formerly done by God in their behalfe, and declared to us; but their preſent degrees of godlineſſe give them but that qualification, that they may pray acceptably for more; He muſt be ſo godly before he pray, and his prayer muſt be for more godlineſſe; and all directed to the right object of prayer, To God, Vnto Thee ſhall every one that is godly pray, which is our next, the ſecond of our foure Conſiderations in this firſt part.

Ad Te, To God, becauſe he can heare; And then Ade, to God, becauſe he can give. Certainely it were a ſtrange diſtemper, a ſtrange ſingularity, a ſtrange circularity, in a man that dwelt at Windſor, to fetch all his water at London Bridge: So is it in him, that lives in Gods preſence, (as he does, that lives religiouſly in his Church) to goe for all Eccluſ. 5. 5.

Iob 9. 30.

Prov. 16. 2.

1 Cor. 4. 4. Iob 4. 18.

Gregor.

Gen. 31. 31.

Auguſt.

Apoc 22. 11.

Ad Te.

A all his neceſſities, by Invocation to Saints. David was willing to bee our example for Prayer, but he gives no example of ſcattering our prayers upon any other then God. Chriſt Jeſus was willing to give us a Rule for Prayer: but if hee had intended that his Rule ſhould have beene deflected and declined to Saints, he would have taught us to ſay, Frater noſter qui es in Cœlis, and not only Pater noſter; to pray to our Brethren which are there too, and not onely to our Father which is in Heaven. If any man have taſted at Court, what it is to be ever welcome to the King himſelfe, and what it is to ſpeake to another to ſpeake for him, he will bleſſe that happineſſe, of having an immediate acceſſe to God himſelfe in his prayers. They that come ſo low downe the ſtreame, as wee ſaid before, to London Bridge, they will go lower, and lower, to Graveſend too; They that come to Saints, they will come to the Images, and Reliques of Saints too; They come to a brackiſh water, betweene ſalt and freſh, and they come at laſt, to be ſwallowed up
B in that ſea which hath no limit, no bottome, that is, to direct all their devotions to ſuch Saints, as have no certainty, not onely not in their ability, we know not what thoſe Saints can doe, but not in their hiſtory, we know not that ſuch as they pray to, are Saints; nay, we know not whether they ever were at all. So that this may be Idolatry, in the ſtricteſt acceptation of the word, Idol; Idolum nihil eſt; let that be true, which they ſay, and in their ſenſe, Our Images are not Idols, for an Idol is nothing, repreſents nothing, but our Images are the Images of Men that once were upon the earth. But that is not throughout true; for they worſhip Images of thoſe who never were; Chriſtophers, and other ſymbolicall, and emblematicall Saints, which never lived here, but were, and are yet nothing. But let them be true Saints, how will they make it appeare to us, that thoſe Saints can heare us? What ſurety can we have of it? Let us rather pray to him, who we are ſure can heare, that is firſt, and then ſure he can give that we pray for, that is next.

C The prayer here, is forgiveneſſe of ſins; And can Saints give that? The Hoſannaes, and the Allelujahs, and the Gloria in Excelſis, Glory in heaven, peace upon earth, good will amongſt men, theſe are good and cheerfull Notes, in which the Quire of heaven are exerciſed; Cherubims and Seraphims, Prophets and Apoſtles, Saints and Angels, bleſſe God and benefit men by theſe: But the Remittuntur peccata, Thy ſinnes are forgiven thee, is too high a note for any creature in earth or heaven, to reach to, except where it is ſet by Gods own hand, as it is by his Commiſſion to his Miniſter, in his Church, and there onely, in the abſolution given by his Ordinance to every penitent ſinner. We ſee that phraſe, Dimittuntur peccata, Thy ſinnes are forgiven thee, was a ſuſpicious word, even in the mouth of Chriſt himſelfe, amongſt the Scribes that would not beleeve his Divinity; when Chriſt ſaid to him that had the Palſie, My ſonne be of good cheare, thy ſinnes are forgiven thee; the Scribes cryed out, he blaſphemed: It ſtrikes any man, to heare of forgive-
D neſſe of ſins, from any but God. It was not a harder thing to ſay, Fiat lux, then to ſay, Dimittuntur peccata: Not harder to bring light out of darkneſſe by Creation, then to bring a cleane thing out of uncleanneſſe by Converſion; for, who can doe that? And therefore when the King of Aram ſent Naaman to the King of Iſrael, to take order for the curing of his bodily Leproſie, the King of Iſrael rent his Clothes, and ſaid, Am I a God, to kill and to give life? The power even of temporall life and death, is proper to God; for, as Witches thinke ſometimes that they kill, when they doe not, and are therefore as culpable, as if they did; So a tyrannous perſecutor, ſo a paſſionate Judge, ſo a perjured witneſſe, ſo a revengefull quarreller, thinks he takes away the life of his enemy, and is guilty of that murder in the eye of God, though the blow be truly from God, whoſe judgements are ever juſt, though not ever declared. Let them never ſay, that they aske not theſe things, temporall or ſpirituall, at the hands of thoſe Saints; for, expreſly, literal-
E ly, as the words ſtand, and ſound, they do aske even thoſe very things; and if the Church have any other meaning in thoſe prayers, the miſchiefe is, that they never teach the people, by Preaching, what that their reſerved meaning is, but leave them to the very letter of the prayer, to aske thoſe things, which, if they could heare, yet the Saints could not give. And when the prayer is made aright, directed to God himſelfe, yet here in our Text it is limited, Propter hoc, For this, this that was ſpoken of before, every one that is godly ſhall pray unto thee. Now what is this This? for that is our third Conſideration.

Qui dant.

Iob 14.

2 King. 5. 7.

Si à quo petenda, ſed non quæ petenda petis, If thou come to the right Market, but buy unwholeſome hearbs there, If thou come to the Apothecaries ſhop, and aske for nothing but poyſons, If thou come to God in thy prayer, and aske onely temporall bleſſings, which which are bleſſings onely in their uſe, and may be, and are ordinarily ſnares and encumbrances, then is this direction of Davids, Propter hoc, for this ſhall he pray, tranſgreſſed. For, This, as appeares in the words immediately before the Text, is, The forgiveneſſe of the puniſhment, and of the iniquity of our ſinne; which is ſo inexpreſſible a comfort, to that ſoule that hath wraſtled with the indignation of God, and is now refreſhed and releaſed, as whoſoever ſhould goe about to deſcribe it, ſhould diminiſh it; He hath it not that thinks he can utter it. It is a bleſſed comfort to find my ſoule in that ſtate, as when I laſt received the Sacrament with a good conſcience: If I enjoy that peace now, that is, the peace of a religious, and of a wiſe conſcience; for there is a wiſedome of the conſcience, not to run into infinite ſcruples and doubts, but Imponere finem litibus, to levy a fine in bar of all ſcruples, and diffidences, and to reſt in the peace and aſſuredneſſe of remiſſion of ſinnes, after due means for the obtaining thereof; and therefore if I be as well now, as when I received, this is a bleſſed degree of bleſſedneſſe. But yet there is one cloud in this caſe, Ab occultis, my ſecret ſins, which even mine own narroweſt inquiſition extends not to. If I conſider my ſelfe to be as well as I was at my Baptiſme, when I brought no actuall ſin, and had the hand of Chriſt to waſh away the foulneſſe of Originall ſin, can I pray for a better ſtate then that? Even in that there was a cloud too, and a cloud that hath thunder and lightning in it, that Fomes peccati, that fuell and thoſe embers of ſin, that are but raked up, and not trod out, and doe breake forth upon every tentation that is preſented, and if they be not effectually oppoſed, ſhall aggravate my condemnation, more then if I had never been baptized. But David conceives ſuch a forgiveneſſe here, as carries up the ſoule to the contemplation of that ſtate, which it had before the fall of Adam. It is not this preſent ſin of a cold delivering, and a drowſie hearing of the meſſages of God; It is not my yeſterdayes ſin, nor my ſins ſince my laſt repentance, that are forgiven me, but my ſin committed ſix thouſand yeares before I was borne, my ſin in Adam, before any promiſe, nay, before any apprehenſion of any need of a Meſſias; I am ſo reſtored, that now by the application of the merits of my Redeemer, I am as well as I ſhould have been, though there had never been any uſe of a Redeemer, no occaſion given by me in Adam, of the incarnation and paſſion of Chriſt Jeſus. The comfort of being preſented to God as innocent as Adam, then when God breathed a ſoule into him, yea as innocent as Chriſt Jeſus himſelfe, when he breathed out his ſoule to God; oh how bleſſed is that ſoule that enjoyes it, and how bold that tongue that goes about to expreſſe it! This is the bleſſedneſſe which the godly attaine to by prayer, but not by every ſudden Lord, Lord, or every occaſionall holy interjection, but by ſerious prayer, inveſted, as with the former, ſo with that other circumſtance that remains, In tempore opportuno, In a time when thou mayeſt be found.

Propter hoc. Auguſt.

In tempore. This time is not thoſe Horæ ſtativæ, Horæ canonicæ, thoſe fixed houres in the Romane Church, where men are bound to certaine prayers at certaine houres. Not that it is inconvenient for men to binde themſelves to certaine fixed times of prayer in their private Exerciſes; and though not by ſuch a vow, as that it ſhall be an impiety, yet by ſo ſolemne a purpoſe, as that it ſhall be a levity to breake it. I have known the greateſt Chriſtian Prince, (in Style and Title) even at the Audience of an Ambaſſador, at the ſound of a Bell, kneele downe in our preſence and pray; and God forbid, he ſhould be blamed for doing ſo; But to place a merit in obſerving thoſe times, as they doe, is not a right underſtanding of this time of finding. Nor is it thoſe tranſitory and interlocutory prayers, which out of cuſtome and faſhion we make, and ſtill proceed in our ſin; when we pretend to ſpeake to God, but like Comedians upon a ſtage, turne over our ſhoulder, and whiſper to the Devill. When you ſtretch out your hands, I will hide mine eyes; when you make many prayers, I will not heare; for your hands are full of blood. And if they be full of blood, they can take in no more; If they be full of the blood of oppreſſion, they can lay no hold upon the blood of propitiation. Irriſor eſt, non pœnitens, qui adhuc agit quod pœnitet, He mocks God, that repents and ſins over thoſe ſins every night, that every day he repents. The Apoſtle ſayes ſo too, He makes a mock of the Sonne of God, and crucifies him againe. This onely is true Repentance, Plangere & plangenda non committere, To bewayle our ſins, and forbeare the ſins we have bewayled. Neither alone will ſerve; which deludes many. Many thinke they doe enough if they repent, and yet proceed in their ſin; and many thinke they doe enough, if they forbeare their ſin now, though they never repent that which is paſt; both are illuſory, both deceitfull diſtempers. Lacæſit Iudicem, qui poſtpoſita

Eſay 1. 15.

Iſidor.

Ambro.

Auguſt.

A poſita ſatisfactione quærit præmiis honorari, He doth but provoke and exaſperate the Judge, that ſolicites him for heaven, before he hath appeaſed his anger by repentance for former ſins; for this is to call for coſts before he be diſcharged.

Theſe then are not the times of finding God; But what are? Generally it is Manifeſtatio Euangelii, The time of the Goſpel is the time of finding God; now when God hath vouchſafed Induere hominem, to put on us in his Incarnation, and enabled us Induere Deum, to put on him in the Sacraments; to ſtay with us here upon Earth, and to carry us up with him in his Aſcenſion to Heaven; when he is made one body with us, and hath made us one Spirit with him, how can we doubt of a fit time to finde him? Chriſts time was alwayes; for even under the law, God ſayes, I have heard thee in an accepted time, and in the day of Salvation have I ſuccoured thee; But this doth the Holy Ghoſt apply to the time of the Goſpel, Behold now the accepted time, behold now the day of ſalvation.

Goſpel. Auguſt. Eſay 49. 8. 2 Cor. 2. 6.

B The time then of the Goſpel is the time of finding; But now, all times are not alike. Calamities are a good time. When I found trouble, and ſorrow, then I called upon the name of the Lord, ſaying, I beſeech thee O Lord, deliver my ſoule. This is a good time, but it is ſomewhat a darke time; the withdrawing of Gods countenance from us; The Egyptians when they deprehended their danger, ſaid, We will fly from the face of Iſrael; But whither? The Sea returned, and the Egyptians fled againſt it, and periſhed. We may be benighted, benummed by calamities, and they may as well deject us as raiſe us. Ioab purſued Abner hotly, vehemently; Abner asks, What, Vſque ad internecionem, Shall the ſword devoure for ever? Ioab anſwered, (as the Vulgat reads thoſe words) Vivit dominus, ſi locutus fuiſſes mane, As the Lord liveth, if thou hadſt ſpoken in the morning, in the morning every man had departed. If we turne to the Lord in the morning, in the beginning of an affliction, the Lord turnes his fierce wrath from us; but if we ſtand out long, and Calamitie. Pſal. 116. 4. Exod. 14. 25. 2 Sam. 2. 25.

C bend not under his corrections, he purſues Ad internecionem, even to deſtruction by obduration.

So then the manifeſtation of the Goſpel, that is, the helpes which God offers us, more then Jews, or Gentils, in the Miniſtery of the Goſpel, and the Ordinances of his Church, is the time of finding God; And woe unto us, if we ſeeke him not whileſt he affords us theſe helpes; And then the time of affliction, when God threatens to hide his face, but hath not yet hidden it, but awakens us by a calamity, is a time of finding God. But the beſt and the cleareſt time is in the Sun-ſhine, then when he appeares to us in the warme and chearefull ſplendor of temporall bleſſings upon us; Then when thou haſt a good eſtate, and good children to let it deſcend upon; Then when thou haſt good health, and a good profeſſion to exerciſe thy ſtrength, and thy labors in; Then when the diſhes upon thy table are doubled, and thy cup overflows, and the hungry and thirſty ſoules of Proſperitas.

D the poore doe not onely feed upon the crums under thy table, and lick up the overflowings of thy cup, but divide diſhes with thee, and enter into the midſt of thy Bolls; Then when thou haſt temporall bleſſings, (that is Gods ſilver) and his grace to uſe thoſe bleſſings well, (that is Gods gold) then is the beſt time of finding the Lord, for then he looks upon thee in the Sun-ſhine, and then thy thankfull acknowledgement of former bleſſings is the moſt effectuall prayer thou canſt make, for the continuance, and enlargement of them.

In a word, then is a fit time of finding God, whenſoever thy conſcience tells thee he calls to thee; for, a rectified conſcience is the word of God; If that ſpeake to thee now this minute, now is thy time of finding God. That Now, that I named then, that minute is paſt; but God affords thee another Now; he ſpeaks againe, he ſpeaks ſtill, and if thy conſcience tell thee that he ſpeaks to thee, now is that time. This word of God, thy con-

Nunc.

E ſcience will preſent unto thee, but that one condition, which Moſes preſented to Gods people, and that is, That thou ſeeke the Lord with all thy heart, and all thy ſoule. It is a kinde of denying the Infiniteneſſe of God, to ſerve him by pieces, and ragges; God is not Infinite to me, if I thinke a diſcontinued ſervice will ſerve him. It is a kinde of denying the Unity of God, to joyne other gods, Pleaſure, or Profit with him; He is not One God to me, if I joyne other Aſſociates, and Aſſiſtants to him, Saints or Angels. It is a kinde of diffidence in Chriſt, as though I were not ſure that he would ſtand in the favour of God ſtill, as though I were afraid that there might riſe a new favorite in heaven, to whom it might concerne me to apply my ſelfe, if I make the balance ſo eaven, as to ſerve God and Mammon; if I make a complementall viſit of God at his houſe upon Sunday, Deut. 4. 29.

and

and then plot with the other faction, the World, the Fleſh, and the Devill, all the weeke after. The Lord promiſed a power of ſeeking, and an infallibility of finding; but ſtill with this totall condition, Ye ſhall ſeeke mee, and ye ſhall finde me, becauſe ye ſhall ſeek mee with all your heart. This he promiſed for the future, that he would doe; This he teſtified for the houſe of Iudah, that he had done, Iudah ſought him with a whole deſire, and he was found of them, and the Lord gave them reſt round about: And the Lord ſhall give you reſt round about; reſt in your bodies, and reſt in your eſtates; reſt in your good name with others, and reſt in your conſciences in your ſelves; reſt in your getting, and reſt in your injoying that you have got, if you ſeeke him with a whole heart; and to ſeek him with a whole heart, is not by honeſt induſtry to ſeeke nothing elſe, (for God weares good cloathes, ſilk, and ſoft raiment, in his religious ſervants in Courts, as well as Cammels haire, in Iohn Baptiſt in the Wilderneſſe; and God manifeſts himſelfe to man, as well in the ſplendor of Princes in Courts, as in the auſterity of Iohn Baptiſt in the Wilderneſſe) but toſeeke God with the whole heart, is to ſeeke nothing with that Primary, and Radicall, and Fundamentall affection, as God; To ſeek nothing for it ſelfe, but God: not to ſeeke worldly things in exceſſe, becauſe I hope, if I had them, I ſhould glorifie God in them; but firſt to finde eſtabliſhed in my ſelfe a zealous deſire to glorifie God, and then a modeſt deſire of meanes to be able to doe it. And for this, every one that is holy ſhall pray unto thee, in a time when thou maiſt be found.

Ier. 29 13.

2 Chro. 15. 15.

A

B

And ſo we have done with our firſt Part, and the foure pieces that conſtitute that, The Perſon, Omnis ſanctus, Every godly man; that is, Sanctificatus, and Sanctificandus, Hee that is godly enough to pray, and prayes that he may be more godly: And the Object of prayer, Ad te, God alone, for God alone can heare, and God alone can give; And then the Subject of prayer, Hoc, This, this which David expreſſes, forgiveneſſe of the puniſhment, and of the iniquity of ſin, In which reſpect, (that David propoſes and ſpecificates the ſubject of prayer) wee are fairely directed rather to accuſtome our ſelves to thoſe prayers, which are recommended to us by the Church, then to extemporall prayers of others, or of our owne effuſion; And laſtly, the Time of finding God, that is, Then when we ſeeke him with a whole heart, ſeeke him as Principall, and then receive temporall things, as acceſſory, and conducible to his glory. Thus much hath fallen into the firſt Part, the duty of Prayer; A little remaines to be ſaid of the benefit here aſſured, Surely, in the floods of great waters they ſhall not come nigh unto him.

C

2. Part.

Taking theſe waters, either Diſtributively, to every one that is godly, or Collectively, as S. Hierome does to the whole Church, the uſe will be all one. The Holy Ghoſt who is a direct worker upon the ſoule and conſcience of man, but a Metaphoricall, and Figurative expreſſer of himſelfe, to the reaſon, and underſtanding of man, abounds in no Metophor more, then in calling Tribulations, Waters: particularly, He would bring in waters upon Tyrus, And, He would poure out his wrath upon his enemies, like waters. Neither doth he onely intimate temporall, but ſpirituall afflictions too, in the name of Waters. And as S. Hierome underſtands this whole place of the Church, collectively, ſo S. Auguſtine underſtands theſe waters, to be Varia Doctrina, thoſe diverſe opinions, that diſquiet and trouble the Church. And though the Church of God were built upon a hill, and compaſſed, and environed, and fenced with the blood of him that built it, and defended and guarded by the vigilancy of the Apoſtles; yet into this Jeruſalem did theſe waters breake, even in the Apoſtles time, as we ſee by thoſe ſeverall, thoſe manifold, thoſe contradictory Hereſies, that ſprung up then. Chriſt and his Apoſtles had carried two Waters about his Church: The water of Baptiſme, that is Limen Eccleſiæ, and Ianua Sacramentorum, The firſt Ferry, by which we paſſe into the Church; and by this Water came three thouſand, and five thouſand at once to the Church, upon particular Sermons of S. Peter. And then Chriſt gave another Water, by which, they came to another Ablution, to Abſolution from actuall ſins, the water of contrite teares, and repentance, which he had promiſed before, I will poure cleane water upon you, and you ſhall be cleane, And by this water came Peter himſelfe, when his faith had failed, And by this water came Mary Magdalen, when her life had been defiled. But yet for all theſe Waters, other Waters ſoaked in, and corrupted them earely; for, for Baptiſme, the Diſciples of Simon Magus annulled Chriſts Baptiſme, and baptized in Simons name; and his Diſciple Menander annulled the Baptiſme of Chriſt, and Simon, and baptized in his owne name. And then, for the other Water, Repentance, the Heretiques drained up that ſhrewdly, Hier. Aquæ.

Ezek. 26. 3. Hoſea 5.

Hieron. Auguſt.

Auguſt.

Ezek. 24. 25.

D

E

A shrewdly, when they took away all benefit of repentance for sins committed after Baptisme. David denies not, nay David assures us, that collectively, the whole Church shall be beaten upon with waters.

Waters multiplied; Aquæ multæ, Many waters; so the vulgat reades this, that wee Translate here, Great waters. So multiplied Heresies. The excellency of the Christian Religion is, that it is Verbum abbreviatum, A contracted Religion; All the Credenda, all that is to be beleeved, reduced to twelve Articles of the Creed; All the Speranda, all that is to be hoped for, prayed for, expressed in seaven Petitions, in the Lords Prayer; All the Agenda, all that is to be done in it, comprised in ten Commandements, in the Decalogue. And then our blessed Saviour, though he would take away none of the burden, (for it is an easie yoke, and a light burden) yet he was pleased to binde it in a lesse roome, and a more portable forme, when he re-abridged that Abridgement, and recon-
B tracts this contracted Doctrine, in those two, Love God, and Love thy Neighbour. And then the Devill hath opposed this Abridgement by Multiplication, by many waters, many heresies: for, it is easie to observe, that in every Article of the Creed, there have been at least a dozen Heresies. And in those Articles, which were most credible, most evident, most sensible, most of all; Many more Heresies upon the Humanity of Christ, then about his Divinity: And then, as in matters of Faith, so for matter of Manners, there was scarce any thing so foule and so obscene, which was not taught by some Heretiques, to be religious and necessary; Things which cannot be excused, things which may not be named, made by the Gnostiques, essentiall and necessary in the Consecration of the Sacrament. And then, when these waters of death were in a good part dryed up, these grosse errors in Faith and Manners were reasonably well overcome, Then came in those waters of Traditionall Doctrines in the Romane Church, which are so many, as
C that they overflow even the water of life, the Scriptures themselves, and suppresse, and surround them.

Multæ.

Therefore does David, in this text, call these many waters, Diluvium, A flood of great waters; many and violent. For this word Shatach, Inundans, signifies Vehemence, Eagernesse, and is elegantly applied to the fiercenesse of a horse in Battel, Equus inundans in Bellum, A horse that overflowes the Battell, that rushes into the Battell. Therefore speaks the Prophet of waters full of blood; What Seas of blood did the old Persecutions, what Seas have later times poured out, when in the Romane Church, their owne Authors will boast of sixty thousand slaine in a day, of them that attempted a Reformation in the times of the Waldenses!

Diluvium.

Jer. 8. 6.
Esay 15. 9.

Surely, sayes our Prophet, These waters shall be, Heresies there shall be. And no man may look for such a Church, as shall have no water; Evermore there will be some D things raw, and unconcocted in every Church; Evermore some waters of trouble and diffention, and a man is not to forsake a Church, in which he hath received his Baptisme for that. But waiving this generall, and collective application of these waters to the Church, and to take it as the letter of the Text invites us, Omnis sanctus, surely every godly man shall finde these waters, many waters, floods of many waters; for affliction is our daily bread; for, we cannot live in this world a spirituall life, without some kinde of affliction: for, as with long fasting we lose our stomachs, so by being long unexercised in tribulation, we come to lose our patience, and to a murmuring when it falls upon us. For that last Petition of the Lords Prayer, Libera nos à malo, Deliver us from evill, may as some interpret it, suppose that this Evill, that is Malum pœnæ, Affliction, will certainly fall upon us; and then we doe not so much pray to be delivered from it, as to be delivered in it, not that afflictions may not come, but that they may not overcome, when E they come, that they may not be ineffectuall upon us. For, it was Durus sermo, A harder and an angryer speech then it seemes, when God said to his people, Why should yee bee smitten any more? Why should I keep you at Schoole any longer? Why should I prepare Physick, or study your recovery by corrections any farther? When God was wearied with their afflictions, and they were not, this was a heavy case; He afflicted them forty yeares together in the Wilderneſse, and yet he saies, Forty yeares long was I grieved with this generation: He never saies, They were grieved, but he was with their stupidity; They murmured, but they sorrowed not to any amendment. So they perverted this word, Non approximabunt, They shall not come nigh thee, they shall not affect thee; That they must doe; we must be sensible of Gods corrections; but yet there is a good

Omnis sanctus.

Esay 1. 4.

senſe, and a plentifull comfort, in this word of our Text. To the godly man, non approximabunt, the floods of great waters, though waters, though floods, though great floods, they ſhall not come nigh him; and that is our laſt word, and finall concluſion. A

Non approximabunt.

Conſider the Church of God collectively, and the Saints of God diſtributively, in which Babylon you will, in the Chaldean Babylon, or in the Italian Babylon, and theſe waters doe come nigh us, touch, and touch to the quicke, to the heart. But yet as David intends here, they touch not us, they come not nigh us; for wee have treaſures in earthen veſſels; They may touch the veſſell, but not the Treaſure. And this is literally expreſſed in the Text it ſelfe, non approximabunt eum; not that they ſhall not come neare his houſe, or his lands, or his children, or his friends, or his body, but non eum, they ſhall not come nigh him. For, for the Church, the peace of the Church, the plenty of the Church, the ceremonies of the Church, they are ſua, but not illa, they are hers, but they are not ſhe. And theſe things, riches & ceremonies, they may be waſhed off with one tide, B and caſt on with another, diſcontinued in one Age, and re-aſſumed in another, deveſted in one Church, and inveſted in another, and yet the Churches, ſhe in her fundamentall Doctrines never touched. And ſo for us, a wave may waſh away as much as Iob loſt, and yet not come nigh us; for if a Heathen could ſay, Vix ea noſtra voco, That outward things were ſcarce worthy to bee called Ours, ſhall a Chriſtian call them not onely His, but Himſelfe, ſo as if they be loſt, he is loſt? How long will a Medall, a piece of Coine lie in the water, before the ſtampe be waſhed off? and yet how ſoone is the Image of God, of his patience, his longanimity defaced in us by every billow, every affliction? But for the Saints of God it ſhall not be ſo; Surely it ſhall not. They ſhall ſtand againſt the waters, And the Sea ſhall ſee it, and fly, and Iordan ſhall be turned backe: And the world ſhall ſay, What ayled thee O Sea, that thou fleddeſt, O Iordan that thou turnedſt back? For they that know not the power of the Almighty, though they envy, yet ſhall wonder, and C ſtand amazed at the deliverance of the righteous. Sto, & pulſo, ſayes God of himſelfe, I ſtand at the doore and knocke; God will not breake open doores to give thee a bleſſing, as well as he loves thee, and as well as he loves it, but will have thee open to him: much more will he keepe Tentations at the doore; They ſhall not breake in upon thee, except thou open. This then was that, which David elſewhere apprehended with feare, The ſorrowes of the grave compaſſed me about, and the ſnares of death overtooke mee; Here they were neare him, but no worſe. This is that that hee prayes deliverance from, Let not the water flood drowne mee, neither let the deepe ſwallow me up. And this is that God aſſures us all that are his, When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will bee with thee, and through the floods that they doe not overflow thee. Maintaine therefore a holy patience in all Gods viſitations: Accept your waters, though they come in teares; for hee that ſends them, Chriſt Jeſus, had his flood, his inundation in Blood; and whatſoever thou ſuffereſt from him, D thou ſuffereſt for him, and glorifieſt him in that conſtancy. Upon thoſe words, Tres ſunt, There are three that beare witneſſe, The Spirit, and water, and blood, S. Bernard taking water there, (by way of alluſion) for affliction, ſaith, Though the Spirit were witneſſe enough, without water, or blood, yet Vix aut nunquam inveniri arbitror Spiritum ſine aqua, & ſanguine, we lack one of the ſeales of the Spirit, if we lack Gods corrections. We conſider three waters in our bleſſed Saviour; He wept over Jeruſalem; Doe thou ſo over thy ſinfull ſoule. Hee ſweat in the garden; Doe thou ſo too, in eating thy bread in the ſweat of thy browes, in labouring ſincerely in thy Calling. And then hee ſent water and blood out of his ſide, being dead, which was, fons utriuſque Sacramenti, the ſpring-head of both Sacraments; Doe thou alſo refreſh in thy ſoule, the dignity which thou receiveſt in the firſt Sacrament of Baptiſme, and thereby come worthily to the participation of the ſecond, and therein the holy Ghoſt ſhall give thee, the ſeale of that ſecurity, which he tenders to thee in this Text, Non approximabunt, How great water floods ſoever come, they ſhall not come nigh thee, not nigh that, which is Thou, that is, thy faith, thy ſoule, and though it may ſwallow that, by which thou art a man, thy life, it ſhall not ſhake that, by which thou art a Chriſtian, thy Religion. Amen. E

2 Cor. 4. 7.

Pſal. 114. 3.

Rev. 3. 20.

Pſal. 18. 5.

Pſal. 69. 15.

Iſay 43. 2.

Bernard.

Auguſt.

SERM.

SERM. LX.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 32. 7.

Thou art my hiding place; Thou ſhalt preſerve mee from trouble; Thou ſhalt compaſſe me about with ſongs of deliverance.

AS Rhetorique is ſaid to bee a fiſt extended and diſplayed into an open Hand, And Logique a Hand recollected, and contracted into a fiſt; So the Church of God may be ſaid to be a ſoule dilated and diffuſed into many Congregations, and a ſoule may be ſaid to be the Church contracted and condenſed into one boſome. So not onely the Canticle of Solomon is taken indifferently by the ancient and later Expoſitors, by ſome for an Epithalamion, and marriage Song betweene Chriſt and his Church, by others, for the celebration of the ſame union between every Chriſtian ſoule and him, but alſo many other places of Scripture have received ſuch an indifferent interpretation, and are left in ſuſpence, whether they be to be underſtood of the Church in generall, or of particular ſoules; And of this nature and number is this Text, Thou art my hiding place, &c. For S. Hierom takes theſe words (and the whole Pſalme) to be ſpoken collectively, others diſtributively; He in the perſon of the Church, They of every, or at leaſt of ſome particular ſoules. To examine their reaſons is unneceſſary, and would bee tedious; It will aske leſſe time, and afford more profit to conſider the words both wayes. In them therefore, conſidered twice over, wee ſhall ſee a threefold ſtate of the Chriſtian Church, and a threefold mercy exhibited by God to every Chriſtian ſoule. Firſt, we ſhall ſee the Church under the clouds, in her low eſtate, in her obſcurity, in her inglorious ſtate of contempt and perſecution, and yet then ſupported by an aſſurance that God overſhadowed her, Tu abſconſio, Tu latibulum, Thou art my hiding place; And in that firſt part wee ſhall conſider the ſtate of a timorous ſoule, a ſoule that for feare of tentations dares ſcarce looke into the world, or embrace a profeſſion. Secondly, we ſhall ſee the Church emancipated, enfranchiſed, unfettered, unmanacled, delivered from her obſcure and inglorious ſtate, and brought to ſplendor, and beauty, and peace, and bleſſing God in that acknowledgement, Thou ſhalt preſerve me from trouble. And in that part, wee ſhall conſider the ſtate of that ſoule exalted to a holy confidence and aſſurance, that though ſhe come into the world, and partake of the dangers thereof, in opening herſelfe to ſuch tentations, as do neceſſarily and inſeparably accompany every calling, yet the Lord will preſerve her from trouble. And thirdly and laſtly, we ſhall ſee a kinde of Triumphant ſtate in the Church in this world, a holy exultation, God ſhall compaſſe her with ſongs of deliverance. In which part, we ſhall alſo ſee the bleſſed ſtate of that ſoule which is come, not to a preſumptuous ſecurity, but to modeſt certainty of continuing in the ſame ſtate ſtill. And theſe will bee our three parts in theſe words, as they receive a publike accommodation to the Church, and a more particular application to our ſelves.

Hieron.

1 Part.

Wee enter into theſe conſiderations, with this obſervation, That as God himſelfe is eternall and cannot bee conſidered in the diſtinction of times, ſo hath that language in which God hath ſpoken in his written word, the Hebrew, the leaſt conſideration of Time of any other language. Evermore in expreſſing the mercies of God to man, it is an indifferent thing to the holy Ghoſt whether he ſpeak in the preſent, or in the future, or in the time that is paſt: what mercies ſoever he hath given us, he will give us over againe; And whatſoever he hath done, and will doe, hee is alwayes ready to doe at the preſent. This verſe is eſpecially an exultation for mercies paſt, and yet the two laſt clauſes are delivered in the future, Thou ſhalt preſerve me, Thou ſhalt compaſſe me, And the firſt is delivered without any limitation at all; The preſent word, Thou art, is but inſerted by our

Tranſlators; In the Originall it is onely, Tu refugium, Thou my hiding place, There is no fuiſti, nor es, nor eris, That he was, or is, or will be ſo, but it is an expreſſing of a perpetuall and everlaſting mercy, for his mercy endureth for ever. A

Eccleſia. Firſt then, this is an acknowledgement of the Church, contemplating her ſelfe in her low eſtate; for the word Sether implies, Tu abſconſio, Though I were in the darke, it was thou that didſt overſhadow me, Though I were in danger, it was thou that didſt hide me from them. This the Church hath had occaſion to ſay more then once; Once in the Primitive plantation thereof, and againe in her Reformation: At both times God ſhewed mercy to her that way, in hiding her.

Primitiva. Firſt then God hid the Primitive Church from the eye of envy, by keeping her poore; and from the eye of jealouſie and ſuſpition, by keeping her in an humble devotion towards him. But yet even her poverty, and her humility hid her not ſo, but that perſecution found her out, and raged ſo againſt her, as that thoſe Emperours which raiſed the ten Perſecutions againſt the Church, ſeeme to have laboured to have gone beyond God in the ten Plagues of Egypt, and to have done more at Rome then he did there. All the power of the Roman world was bent againſt Chriſtians; more home-Chriſtians ſlaine then forraine enemies. All the criminall juſtice of the world bent upon them; All other mens crimes, even Neroes burning of Rome, imputed to the Chriſtians. All the wit of the world bent againſt them; All their Epigrammatiſts, & Satyriſts, having their wits exalted, with rage, with wine, with rewards, to multiply libels, and calumnies, and defamations upon the Chriſtians. All the Mechaniques of that world bent againſt them; All the Enginiers employed to invent racks and tortures for the Chriſtians. Truly, if I were to work upon Heathen men, Weſterne Americans, or Eaſterne Chineſes, for their converſion to Chriſt, I ſhould ſcarce adventure to propoſe to them the hiſtories of the Martyrs of the Primitive Church, becauſe to men that had no taſte of Religion before, they would rather ſeeme fables then truths; and I ſhould as ſoone be beleeved, That a Virgin had a Son, or in any maine Article of our Religion, as that man could inflict, or that man could beare ſuch things, as we are ſure the Martyrs in the Primitive Church did. Then God hid the Church; He hid her, in a great part in the Wilderneſſe, in Ermitages, and ſuch retirings, ſinglely one by one; and after in penurious and obſcure Monaſteries, many of theſe ſingle Ermits gathering themſelves together into one houſe; when thoſe Monaſteries were both Schooles of learning, and ſhops of Manufactures; they taught and wrought in them; Nemo cuiquam oneroſus, No man was a burden to any others, no man fed upon anothers labours, nor drunke the ſweat of anothers brow: But, Operabantur manibus ea, quibus & corpus paſci poſſit, & à Deo mens impediri non poſſit, They laboured in ſuch manufactures, as might ſuſtaine their bodies, and not withdraw their minds from the ſervice of God. So God hid the Church, not that the perſecution did not finde and lop off many a great, and top bough, but he hid the roote, and prevented the extirpation of that Tree, which his owne right hand had planted. B C Auguſt. D

Reformata. Tu abſconſio, Thou art my hiding place, ſayes the Primitive Church, and ſo may the Reformed Church ſay too. For when the Roman Church had made this Latibulum, this hiding place, this refuge from Perſecution, Ermitages and Monaſteries, to be the moſt conſpicuous, the moſt glorious, the moſt eminent, the richeſt and moſt abundant places of the World; when they had drawne theſe, at firſt remote corners in the Wilderneſſe, firſt into the skirts, and ſuburbs, then into the body and heart of every great City; when for revenew and poſſeſſion, they will confeſſe, that ſome one Monaſtery of the Benedictan had ten thouſand of our pounds of yearely rent; when they were come for their huge opulency to that height, that they were formidable to thoſe States that harboured them, and for their numbers, (other Orders holding proportion with that one) to reckon out of one Order, fifty two Popes, two hundred Cardinals, ſeven thouſand Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and almoſt three hundred Emperours and Kings, and their children, and fifty thouſand declared and approved Saints; when they were come to that over-valuation of their Religious Orders, as to ſay, That a Monke, a Fryer merited more in his very ſleep, or meales, then any ſecular man, (though a Church-man too) did in his beſt works, That to enter into any Order of Religion was a ſecond Baptiſme, and wrought as much as the firſt; Their revenew, their number, their dignity being come to this, And then their viciouſneſſe, their ſenſuality, their beſtiality, to as great a height and exaltation, as that; yet in the midſt of all theſe, Tu abſconſio mea, may the Reformed Church ſay, The Lord E

A Lord was their hiding place, that mourned for this, when they could not helpe, and at all times, and by all meanes that God afforded them, endeavoured to advance a Reformation. And though God expoſed them as a wood to be felled, to a ſlaughter of twenty, of forty, of ſixty thouſand in a day, yet Ille abſconſio, He hath beene our hiding place, He hath kept the roote alive all the way; And though it hath beene with a cloud, yet he hath covered us.

God came unto Moſes, though he came In caligine Nubis, In a thick Cloud; when the glory of the Lord is ſaid to have filled the Tabernacle, even that glory was a Cloud; And ſo it was in the ſecond place of his worſhip too, in Solomons Temple, that was filled with a Cloud. S. Chryſoſtome when he conſidered that Chriſt aſcended in a Cloud[a], And that he ſhall returne againe in a Cloud[b], Paternum Currum deligere voluit, The Son would make uſe of his Fathers Chariot, and ſhew mercy, nay ſhew glory in a Cloud, as his Father B had done often. The Primitive Church, the Reformed Church, muſt not complaine of having beene kept under Clouds; for Ille abſconſio, God hath made thoſe Clouds their hiding place, and wrapped up the ſeed, and the roote ſafe in that Cloud. Though the Church were trodden upon like a worme of the earth, yet ſtill ſhe might heare God in that Cloud, Noli timere vermis Iacob, Be not afraid thou worme of Iacob, for I will keepe thee, ſaith the Lord thy Redeemer, the holy One of Iſrael. God hid her then, and hath manifeſted now, that there was never any time, when he had not ſome of his to oppoſe her tyrannie and her Idolatry. They can name no time, when wee cannot name ſome ſuch; And it would be much harder for them, to name men in every age, that have profeſſed all the doctrines of the preſent Roman Church, then for us to finde men that have oppoſed thoſe points that we oppoſe. Will they ſay, that theſe were too few, to conſtitute or eſtabliſh, or give name to a Church? They were never ſo few, as Elias thought there had C beene in his time, when he ſaid, I onely am left; no nor ſo few, as God, for Elias comfort, named to him, ſeven thouſand; they were more then ſo, elſe they could not have found ſo many to kill, as they did. Howſoever, ſince ſo great Schoolemen amongſt them as Alexander Ales, and ſo great Canoniſts amongſt them, as Cardinall Turrecremata, with many others, (as they themſelves call them) Graviſſimi Theologi, of the graveſt Divines, aſſeveranter affirmant, do dogmatically affirme, that during the time that Chriſt lay in the Grave, there was no faith, and conſequently no Church, but onely in One, in the perſon of the Virgin Mary; in relation to which it is, that in the Ceremonies of the Church, they put out all their Candles but one, in the Church, at that time, to denote that all the Apoſtles loſt their faith, and one She alone retained one; If the Church were then in one perſon, they may well afford a Church to have conſiſted of ſuch numbers, as the Lord did hide under his wings, all the ſtormy time of their Perſecutions.

D Tu abſconſio, may the Primitive Church, and the Reformed Church ſay, Thou haſt beene our hiding place, And ſo muſt every timerous ſoule too, (for you may remember, that theſe words are by our Expoſitors aſcribed to particular ſoules in the Church, as well as to the Church in generall) every ſuch ſoule, that for feare of tentations in the world, is loth to come abroad from its retiredneſſe, and venture on the publique view, muſt rely upon that, Tu abſconſio, The Lord is able to hide them, able to cover them.

Iovinian the Heretique whom S. Hierom oppoſed, would needs thinke, or at leaſt ſay, That after Baptiſme no man was tempted of the Devill: not onely not overcome, but not tempted. But our Baptiſme does not drowne the Devill. Pauci inter Athletas inexpugnabiles, Few wraſtlers that never tooke fall; none that may not, ſince we are all at beſt, but wraſtlers. Vita hominis piraterium, ſayes S. Ambroſe, what Copy ſoever he followed. Others read it, Mans life is a warfare; And that is labour enough, and danger enough. E But to be ſtill upon ſo unconſtant an element as the water, and ſtill purſued by Pirats, or conſorted with Pirates, is more; and Vita Piraterium, ſayes he, Mans life, every mans life is ſpent amongſt Pirats, purſued by them, or conſorted with them. The Devill hath not a more ſubtile tentation to enſnare me with, then to bring me to thinke my ſelfe tentation-proofe; above tentation. Nemo diu fortis eſt, is excellently ſaid by the ſame Father: No man continues ſtrong againſt tentations long. For when he ſees, that ſome tentations have done him no harme, hee growes negligent and ſlacke towards others. Infœlix ego! victorem me puto, dum capior, Miſerable miſtaking man that I am! I thinke my ſelfe able to overcome any tentation, and I am overcome even by that tentation of thinking ſo. I thinke my ſelfe conquerour, when I am captive, and am chained to the Exod. 19. 9. 40. 34. 2 Chro. 5. 13. Chryſoſt. a Acts 1. b Mat. 24.

Eſay 41. 14.

1 King. 19. 14.

Brondus in Apoc. c. 1. q. 11.

Anima.

Chryſoſt.

Ser. 42. Iob. 7. 1. Ambroſe.

Idem.

Hieron.

Chariot, when I thinke I ſit in it. Tranquillitas iſta tempeſtas eſt, This calme is a ſtorme, this ſecurity is a defeat; For, it is one of Davids heavy imprecations, Veniat illi laqueus quem ignorat, Let him be catched in a ſnare, that he ſuſpected not: Deſtruction come upon him unawares, ſo we read it. We are tempted, and it is well that we are ſo. Qui non eſt tentatus, quid ſcit? He is an ignorant ſoule, and knowes nothing, that hath paſſed no tentations; Nothing at all; not himſelfe; Neſcit ſe homo, niſi tentatione diſcat ſe, Except he be taught in that Schoole, The Schoole of tentations, no man ever comes to know himſelfe. So then, Laqueus eſt in ſecuritate; If I be ſecure, and negligent, that is a ſnare; But Laqueus in timore too, ſayes he; It is a ſnare caſt by the Devils owne hand, If I be over-timerous, If upon pretence of hiding my ſelfe from tentations, I withdraw my ſelfe from the offices of mutuall ſociety. Tu abſconſio, The Lord will be my hiding place from tentations that attempt me in my calling, but not to hide me from a calling. Scito quod in medio laqueorum ingrederis, Know that thou walkeſt in the midſt of ſnares, but yet thou muſt walke, walke in a calling. So S. Chryſoſtome reads that; and adds, He does not ſay, Vide, but Scito; He does not ſay, ſee them, for they are inviſible; but know that there are ſnares, and be wary. And then, as S. Auguſtin ſayes of the whole Church, (which was our firſt Conſideration) Eccleſia Catholica inter tentationes vivit, inter tentationes creſcit, The whole Church is in the midſt of tentations, but lives and growes up in the midſt of them: So, heare thy God ſay to thy ſoule, (which is the Conſideration that we are now upon) Son of man, though briars and thornes be with thee, though thou dwell among Scorpions, bee not afraid of their words, nor diſmaid with their lookes. Proceed in a lawfull calling, and God ſhall hide thee though with his Clouds: And though he cover thee with a cloud of poverty, with ſickneſſe, with diſgrace, and if he ſee no other cover ſafe, cover thee with the cloud of death, and the grave, all is to cover thee from the Tempter, and thereby to preſerve thee for himſelfe, which is our ſecond part, Thou art my hiding place, Thou ſhalt preſerve me from trouble.

2 Part. Trouble.

If wee content our ſelves with that word which our Tranſlators have choſen here, Trouble, (Thou ſhalt preſerve me from Trouble) we muſt reſt in one of theſe two ſenſes; Either that God ſhall arme, and indue thoſe that are his, with ſuch a conſtancy, as thoſe things that trouble others, ſhall not trouble them, but, As the ſufferings of Chriſt abound in them, ſo their conſolation alſo aboundeth by Chriſt, As unknowne, and yet well knowne, as dying, and behold we live, as ſorrowfull yet alwayes rejoycing, as poore yet making many rich, as having nothing, and yet poſſeſſing all things; For, God uſes both theſe wayes in the behalfe of his ſervants; ſometimes to ſuſpend the working of that that ſhould worke their torment, as he ſuſpended the rage of the Lyons for Daniel, and the heat of the fire in the furnace, for the others; Sometimes by imprinting a holy ſtupefaction, and unſenſibleneſſe in the perſon that ſuffers, So S. Laurence was not onely patient, but merry and facetious when he lay broyling upon the fire, and ſo we reade of many other Martyrs, that they have beene leſſe moved, leſſe affected with their torments, then their Executioners, or their Perſecutors have beene, That which troubled others never troubled them; Or els the phraſe muſt have this ſenſe, That though they be troubled with their troubles, though God ſubmit them ſo far, to the common condition of men, that they be ſenſible of them, yet he ſhall preſerve them from that trouble ſo, as that it ſhall never overthrow them, never ſinke them into a dejection of ſpirit, or diffidence in his mercy; They ſhall finde ſtormes, but a ſtout and ſtrong ſhip under foote; They ſhall feele Thunder and lightning, but garlands of triumphant bayes ſhall preſerve them; They ſhall be trodden into the earth with ſcornes and contempts, but yet as ſeed is buried, to multiply to more. So far this word of our Tranſlators aſſiſt our devotion, Thou ſhalt preſerve me from trouble, Thou ſhalt make me unſenſible of it, or thou ſhalt make me victorious in it.

Perplexity.

But the Originall word Tzur hath a more peculiar ſenſe; It ſignifies a ſtraite, a narrowneſſe, a difficulty, a diſtreſſe; I am diſtreſſed for thee, my brother Ionathan, ſayes David, in this word, when he lamented his irremediable, his irrecoverable death. So is it alſo, Pangs have taken hold of me, as the pangs of a woman that travaileth. And ſo the word growes to ſignifie, Aciem gladii, Thou haſt turned the edge of the ſword, and to ſignifie the top and precipice of a rock; He clave the rocks in the wilderneſſe. So that the word expreſſes Anguſtiam, narrowneſſe, preſſure, precipitation, inextricableneſſe, in a word, (that will beſt fit us) Perplexity; and, The Lord ſhall preſerve me from perplexity; And this may the Church, and this may every good ſoule comfort it ſelfe in, Thou ſhalt preſerve me from perplexity.

Conſider

A Conſider it firſt in the Church, and then in our ſelves; and firſt in the Primitive, and then in the reformed Church. When God had brought his Church, ex abſcondito, from his hiding place, from poverty, and contempt, and ſolitarineſſe, and glorified it in the eyes of the world, by many royall endowments and poſſeſſions, with which Princes (then become Chriſtians) and other great perſons, piouſly and graciouſly inveſted her, though theſe were tentations to aſpire to greater, yet God preſerved her from perplexities of all kinds; from perplexing of Princes with her claims, that they might not marry, nor make leagues, nor levy Armies, but by her permiſſion. The Church called nothing her own, but that which God had called His, and given her, that is, Tithes: All the reſt, ſhee acknowledged to have received from the bounty of pious benefactors. This was her plea, The Lord is my rock, and my fortreſſe, and my deliverer, my ſtrength, my buckler, and my high tower. In all this Inventory, in all this Armory, and furniture of the Church, there is B never a ſword; Rocks, and fortreſſes, and bucklers, and Towers, but no ſword, no materiall ſword in the Churches hand; Arma noſtra preces & fletus; The Church fought with nothing but prayers and teares. And as God delivered her from theſe perplexities, from perplexing the affayres of Princes with her intereſt in their government; ſo he delivered her from any perplexities in her own government. No uſurpation, no offer of any Prince that attempted to invade or violate the true right of the Church, no practiſe of any Heretiques, how ſubtile, how potent ſoever, though they equalled, though they exceeded the Church in number, and in power, (as at ſome times the Arians did) ever brought the Church to a perplexitie, or to an apprehenſion of any neceſſitie, of yeelding to ſacrilegious Princes, or to irreligious Heretiques in any point, to procure their peace, or to enjoy their reſt, but ſtill they kept the dignitie of Prieſthood intire, and ſtill they kept the truth of the Chriſtian Religion intire; no perplexity how they ſhould ſubſiſt if they were ſo C ſtiffe, ever brought them to goe leſſe to any prevarications, or modifications, either in matter of Religion towards Heretiques, or in the execution of their religious function towards ſacrilegious uſurpers. So God preſerved the Primitive Church from perplexitie; ſhee was ever thankfull and ſubmiſſe towards her benefactors; ſhee was ever erect and conſtant againſt uſurpers. And this preſervation from perplexity, we conſider in the reformed Church alſo.

Eccleſia Primitiva.

Pſal. 18. 2.

Ambroſe.

When the fulneſſe of time was come, and that Church which lay in the bowels of the putative Church, the ſpecious Church, the Romane Church, that is, thoſe ſoules which groaned and panted after a Reformation, were enabled by God to effect it; when the Iniquity of Babylon was come to that height, That whereas at firſt they tooke of Almes, afterwards Monachi emunt & Nobiles vendunt, Monkes bought, and Lords ſold, nay Monaſteries bought, and the Crowne ſold; when they went ſo far, as to forge a Donation of D Conſtantin, by which they laid hold upon a great temporall ſtate, and after that ſo much farther, as to renounce the Donation of Conſtantin, by which, for a long time, the Roman Church claimed all their temporall ſtate, S. Peters patrimony, and ſo, at laſt came to ſay, That all the ſtates of all Chriſtian Princes are held of the Church, and really may be, and actually are forfeited to her, and may, at her pleaſure, be re-aſſumed by her; when for the art and ſcience of Divinity it ſelfe, they had buried it in the darkneſſe of the Schoole, and wrapped up that that ſhould ſave our ſoules, in thoſe perplexed and inextricable clouds of Schoole-divinitie, and their Schoole-divinitie ſubject to ſuch changes, as that a Jeſuit profeſſes, that in the compaſſe but of thirty yeares, ſince Gregory de Valentia writ, Verè dici poſſit, novam quodammodo Theologiam prognatam eſſe, We may truly ſay, that we have a new art of Divinity riſen amongſt us; The Divinity of theſe times, ſayes he, is not in our Church the ſame that it was thirty yeares ſince; ſince all parts of the E Chriſtian Church were ſo incenſed, both with their hereſie, and their tyranny, as that the Greeke Church, which generally they would make the world beleeve, is abſolutely as they are, is by ſome of their own Authors confeſſed to be more averſe from them, and more bitter againſt them, then Luther or Calvin; ſince upon all theſe provocations, God was pleaſed to bring this Church, the Reformed Church, not onely to light, but to ſplendor, He hath preſerved this Church from perplexities. If they ſay, we are perplexed with differences of opinions amongſt our ſelves, let this ſatisfie them, that we doe agree all, in all fundamentall things: And that in things much nearer the foundation, then thoſe in which our differences lie, they differ amongſt themſelves, with more acrimony and bitterneſſe, then we doe. If they thinke to perplex us with the Fathers, we are ready

Eccleſia Reformata.

Hieron. Ep. ad Demetr.

Tanner. in Aquin. p. 1. ad Lector.

Stenartius Ep. Dedic. ante Caleam.

ready to joyne that iſſue with them; where the Fathers ſpeak unanimouſly, dogmatically, in matters of faith, we are content to be tried by the Fathers. If they thinke to perplex us with Councels, we will goe as farre as they in the old ones, and as farre as they for meeting in new Councels, if they may be fully, that is, Royally, Imperially called, and equally proceeded in, and the Reſolutions grow and gathered there upon debatements, upon the place, and not brought thither upon commandment from Rome. If there be no way but Force and Armes, if they will admit no triall but that, God bee bleſſed that keepes us from the neceſſity, but God bee bleſſed alſo that he preſerves us from perplexity, or not being able to defend his cauſe, if he call us to that triall. And therefore let them never call it a Perplexity in us, let them never ſay that we know not what to doe, when we acknowledge the Church of Rome to be truly a Church: for the Peſt-houſe is a houſe, and theirs is ſuch a Church; But the Peſt-houſe is not the beſt ayre to live in, nor the Romane Church the beſt Church to die in. Thou haſt preſerved me from perplexities, may the Primitive Church ſay, and ſo may the Reformed too, and ſo alſo may every particular ſoule ſay, which is a Conſideration, that from the beginning we propoſed for every Part, and are now come to it in this.

Anima. When we were upon this conſideration in our former Part, we ſhewed you, that no over-tender or timorous ſoule, might hide it ſelfe in a retired life, from the offices of ſociety, but though every particular age bring a new ſin with it, every complexion a new ſin, every occupation a new ſin, every friend a new ſin, that muſt be loved for his ſake, yet Para te foro, Thou art bound to come abroad, and truſt upon Gods hiding thee there from tentations, and ſo aſſure thy ſelf that he will preſerve thee from perplexities. Now, wee conſider in the Schoole, Perplexities, which are ſuch onely by miſ-underſtanding; and Perplexities, which are ſuch in the true nature of the thing. Thoſe of the firſt kinde, perplexities in a miſ-underſtanding, ſhould fall upon no man; perplexities of the ſecond kinde, in the nature of the thing it ſelfe, can fall upon no man. Of the firſt kinde, this is an example, A man ſweares to conceale all his friends ſecrets, and he tells him of a treaſonable purpoſe againſt the State; Either way he muſt offend; Againſt his oath if he reaveale it, or againſt his Allegeance, if he doe not. This is no perplexity; for in a right underſtanding he muſt know, that ſuch an Oath bindes not. Of the ſecond kinde there was an example in Origen, who muſt, by the commandement of the Perſecutor, either offer ſacrifice to an Idol, or proſtitute his body to an abominable abuſe with another man. Which ſhould he doe? Neither. God gives a man an iſſue in ſuch caſes, by death; Et vitam potiùs finire debet quàm maculare, He is bound to give his life, rather then to ſtaine his life. This timorous ſoule then feares where no feare is. He would hide himſelfe, he is loath to come into the world, becauſe he thinks hee muſt needs ſin. Hee needs not. Is there a neceſſity laid upon him, that he muſt die as rich as the richeſt of his profeſſion, and that he cannot doe without ſin? That he muſt leave his wife ſuch a Joynture, and his children ſuch Portions, and all that he cannot doe without ſin? Firſt, all that he may doe without ſin: We have ſeene in all Profeſſions honeſt men die as rich, as diſhoneſt. If thou do not, he that hath ſaid, There is no man that hath left wife or children for my ſake, but ſhall have a hundred fold here, and everlaſting life, (which is a bleſſed Codicil to a Will that was abundant before) will alſo ſay, There is no man that hath left wife and children poore for my ſake, but I will enlarge my providence upon them even in this life, and my glory in the next: And this was our ſecond Part, conſidered in the Church and in our ſelves, Thou ſhalt preſerve, &c.

Auguſt.

Mark 10.29.

3. Part. There remaines yet a third Part, that as God hides us from tentations, that they reach us not; or preſerves us from intricacies, and perplexities, ſo that they hurt us not; ſo if they doe, yet he compaſſes us with a Joyfull Deliverance, (as our former) or with ſongs of Deliverance, as this Tranſlation hath it, that is, imprints in us a holy certitude, a faire aſſurance, that he will never forſake us; And this voyce we may heare from the Church firſt, and then from every particular ſoule; for, to both, (as we have told you all the way) doe all the parts of this Pſalme appertaine.

Compaſſe. Lament. 3.5. Eſay 29.3. As it is an exaltation of Gods indignation, when he is ſaid to Compaſſe by way of ſiege, (ſo Jeruſalem complaines, He hath builded againſt me, he hath compaſſed me with gall and travell, he hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out; So God threatens, I will camp againſt thee round about, and I will lay ſiege againſt thee) for this intimates ſuch a diſpleaſure of God, as that he does not onely leave us ſuccourleſſe, joyleſſe, comfortleſſe in our ſelves,

but

A but cuts off thoſe ſupplies which might relieve us; He compaſſes us, he beſieges us, hee camps round about us, that no reliefe can enter; ſo when his love and mercy is expreſſed in this phraſe, that he compaſſes us, it ſignifies both an intire mercy, that no enemy ſhall break in in any part, whilſt he doth compaſſe us, and a permanent and durable mercy, that as no force of the enemy, ſo no wearineſſe in himſelfe, ſhall make him diſcontinue his watches, or his guard over us, but that he will compaſſe us ſtill.

Thy faithfulneſſe is round about thee, ſayes David to God; that is our firſt comfort, that God compaſſes himſelfe with his owne faithfulneſſe, that is, is never unmindfull of his owne promiſes, and purpoſes; And then, He is round about our habitations; God compaſſes himſelfe with his owne faithfulneſſe, and then, he compaſſes us with himſelfe: That as Satan told God one day after another, Circuivi terram, & perambulavi eam, I have compaſſed the earth, and walked it round, but could never ſay that he had broke into Iobs B quarter, for hee found the impoſſibility in that, The Lord had made a hedge about him, Where note that Gods firſt care is of the man; and the ſoule is the man; firſt a hedge about him, and then, about his houſe, and about all that he had, on every ſide; So day after day we ſhall finde arguments to eſtabliſh our hearts in hope, that the Lord hath compaſſed us, and nothing ſhall breake in ſo, as to take us from him; but God ſhall ſay to us, as to his former people, Leva in circuitu oculos tuos, Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold, (which is one great comfort, that he enables us to ſee and to know our enemies, to diſcerne a tentation to be a tentation) Omnes iſti congregati ſunt, All theſe gather themſelves together, and come to thee, (which is another aſſiſtance, that when we ſee our enemies multiply, and that there is none that fighteth for us, but onely thou O God, we make a more preſent recourſe to him) But, Vivo ego dicit Dominus, As I live ſaith the Lord, Velut ornamento veſtieris, thou ſhalt ſurely cloathe thee with them all as with an ornament, and C binde them on thee as a Bride doth; (which is the fulneſſe of the mercy, That as in another place, he promiſes his children, Panis veſter ſunt, your enemies ſhall be your Bread, you ſhall feed upon your enemies; So here hee makes our enemies, even our ſpirituall enemies, our Cloathes, and more then that, our Jewels, our Ornaments, wee ſhall bee the ſtronger, the warmer, the richer, by tribulations, and tentations, having overcome them, as we ſhall, if the Lord compaſſe us, if he continue his watchfulneſſe over us) And that David ſayes here, firſt in the Churches behalfe.

Pſal. 89. 8.

Pſal. 78. 28.

Job 1. 8. 2. 2.

1. 10.

Eſay 49. 18.

Numb. 14. 9.

God from the beginning carried a wall about his Church, in that aſſurance, Porta inferi, The gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it. The Gentiles, the Philoſophers that were without the Church, found a party, Traitors, Conſpirators within, The Heretiques; and all theſe led and maintained by potent Princes that perſecuted the Church; The gates of hell were all opened, and iſſued all her forces, but Non prævaluerunt, they never pre- D vailed. The Arians were ſometimes more then the true Chriſtians in all the world: The Martyrians, a ſect that affected the name of Martyrdome, could name more Martyrs then the true Church could, but Evanuerunt, yet they vaniſhed: The Emperours of Rome perſecuted the Biſhops of Rome to death, yet when we looke upon the reckoning, the Emperors died faſter then Biſhops. Thou haſt compaſſed me, ſayes the Primitive Church, and ſo ſayes the Reformed too.

Primitiva.

Mat. 16. 18.

Princes that hated one another have joyned in leagues againſt the Religion, Princes that needed their Subjects, have ſpent their Subjects by thouſands, in Maſſacres, to extinguiſh the Religion; Perſonall Aſſaſinates, Clandeſtine plots by poyſon, by fire, by water have been multiplied againſt Princes that favour the Religion; Inquiſitions, Confiſcations, Baniſhments, Diſhonours have overflowne them that profeſſe the true Religion; and yet the Lord compaſſing his Church, ſhe enjoyes a holy certainty, ariſing out E of theſe teſtimonies of his care, that ſhe ſhall never be forſaken. And this may every good ſoule have too.

Reformata.

God comes to us without any purpoſe of departing from us againe; For the Spirit of life that God breathed into man, that departs from man in death; but when God had aſſumed the nature of man, the God-head never parted from that nature; no, not in death; When Chriſt lay dead in the grave, the God-head remained united to that body and that ſoule, which were diſ-united in themſelves; God was ſo united to man, as that he was with man, when man was not man, in the ſtate of death. So when the Spirit of God hath inveſted, compaſſed thy ſoule, and made it his by thoſe teſtimonies, that Spirit eſtabliſhes it in a kinde of aſſurance that he will never leave it. Old Rome

Anima.

Rome had (as every City amongſt the Heathen had) certaine gods which they called their Tutelar gods, gods that were affected to the preſervation of that place; But they durſt never call upon thoſe gods, by their proper names, for feare of loſing them; leſt if their names ſhould bee knowne by their enemies, their enemies ſhould winne away their gods from them, by beſtowing more coſt, or more devotion towards them then they themſelves uſed. So alſo is it ſaid of them, that when they had brought to Rome a foraigne god, which they had taken in a conquered place, Victory, they cut the wings of their new god Victory, leſt he ſhould flie from them againe. This was a miſery, that they were not ſure of their gods when they had them. We are; If he once come to us, he never goes from us, out of any variableneſſe in himſelfe, but in us onely; That promiſe reaches to the whole Church, and to every particular ſoule, Thy Teachers ſhall not bee removed into a corner any more, but thine eye ſhall ſee thy Teachers, which in the Originall (as is appliably to our preſent purpoſe, noted by Rabbi Moſes) is, Non erunt Doctores tui alati, Thy Teachers ſhall have no wings, They ſhall never flie from thee, and ſo the great Tranſlation reads it, Non avolabunt. As their great god, Victory, could not flie from Rome, ſo after this victory which God hath given his Church in the Reformation, none of her Teachers ſhould flie to, or towards Rome. Every way that God comes to us, he comes with a purpoſe to ſtay, and would imprint in us an aſſurance that he doth ſo, and that Impreſſion is this Compaſſing of thy ſoule, with ſongs of deliverance, in the ſignification and uſe of which word, we ſhall in one word conclude all.

Eſay 30.20.

Songs.

God hath given us this certitude, this faire aſſurance of his perpetuall reſidence with us, in a word of a double ſignification; The word is Ranan, which ſignifies Joy, exultation, ſinging; But it hath another ſenſe too. Ariſe, Cry out in the night. And, Attend unto my cry, which are voyces far from ſinging. This God meanes therein, That though he give us that comfort to ſit and ſing of our Deliverance, yet hee would not have us fall aſleepe with that muſique, but as when we contemplate his everlaſting goodneſſe, wee celebrate that with a conſtant Joy, ſo when we looke upon our owne weakneſſe and unworthineſſe, we cry out, Wretched men that wee are, who ſhall deliver us from this body of death? For though we have the Spirit of life in us, we have a body of death upon us. How loving ſoever my ſoule be, it will not ſtay in a diſeaſed body; How loving ſoever the Spirit of life be, it will not ſtay in a diſeaſed ſoule. My ſoule is loath to goe from my body, but ſickneſſe and paine will drive it out; ſo will ſinne, the Spirit of life from my ſoule. God compaſſes us with Songs of Deliverance, we are ſure he would not leave us; But he compaſſes us with Cries too, we are afraid, we are ſure, that we may drive him from us. Pray we therefore our Lord of everlaſting goodneſſe, That he will be our Hiding-place, That hee will protect us from tentations incident to our ſeverall Callings, That hee will preſerve us from troubles, preſerve us from them, or preſerve us in them, preſerve us that they come not, or preſerve us that they overcome not; And that hee will compaſſe us, ſo as no enemy find overture unto us, and compaſſe us with ſongs, with a joyfull ſenſe of our perſeverance, but yet with cries too, with a ſolicitous feare, that that multiplicity and hainouſneſſe of our ſins may weary even the inceſſant and indefatigable Spirit of comfort himſelfe, and chaſe him from us.

Lament. 2. 14. Pſal. 17. 1.

A B C D

SERM.

SERM. LXI.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 32. 8.

I will Inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt goe, I will guide thee with mine eye.

THis verſe, more then any other in the Pſalme, anſwers the Title of the Pſalme. The title is, Davids Inſtruction; and here in the Text it is ſaid, I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee, in the way thou ſhalt goe. There are eleven Pſalmes that have that Title, Pſalmes of Inſtruction; The whole booke is Sepher Tehillim, The booke of prayſes; and it is a good way of prayſing God, to receive Inſtruction, Inſtruction how to praiſe him. Therefore doth the holy Ghoſt returne ſo often to this Catechiſticall way, Inſtruction, Inſtitution, as to propoſe ſo many Pſalmes, expreſly under that Title purpoſely to that uſe. In one of thoſe, The manner how Inſtruction ſhould be given, is expreſſed alſo, It muſt be in a loving maner, for the Title is Canticum Amorum, A ſong of love for Inſtruction. For Abſque prudentia, & benevolentia, non ſunt perfecta conſilia: True Inſtruction is a making love to the Congregation, and to every ſoule in it; but it is but to the ſoule. And ſo when S. Paul ſaid, He was mad for their ſakes, Inſanivit Amatoriam inſaniam, ſayes Theophylact, S. Paul was mad for love of them, to whom he writ his holy love-letters, his Epiſtles. And thereupon doe the Rabbins call this Pſalme, Leb David, Cor Davidis, The opening and powring out of Davids heart to them, whom he inſtructs. Wee have no way into your hearts, but by ſending our hearts. The Poets counſell is, Vt ameris, ama, If thou wouldſt be truely loved, doe thou love truely; The holy Ghoſts precept upon us is, Vt credaris, crede, That if we would have you beleeve, wee beleeve our ſelves. It is not to our Eloquence that God promiſes a bleſſing, but to our ſincerity, not to our tongue, but to our heart: All our hope of bringing you to love God, is in a loving and hearty maner to propoſe Gods love to you. The height of the Spouſes love to Chriſt, came but to that, I am ſicke of love: The love of Chriſt went farther, To die for love. Love is as ſtrong as death; but nothing elſe is as ſtrong as either; and both, Love and Death, met in Chriſt. How ſtrong and powerfull upon you then ſhould that Inſtruction be, that comes to you from both theſe, The Love and Death of Chriſt Jeſus; and ſuch an Inſtruction doth this text exhibite, I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way in which thou ſhalt goe, I will guide thee with mine eye. God ſo loved the world, as that he ſent his Sonne to die: The Sonne being dead ſo loved the world, as that he returned to that world againe; and being aſcended, ſent the holy Ghoſt to eſtabliſh a Church, and in that Church, Vſque ad conſummationem, till the end of the world, ſhall that holy Spirit execute this Catechiſticall Office, He ſhall inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt goe, He ſhall guide thee with his eye.

Though then ſome later Expoſitors have doubted of the perſon, who doth this Office, To Inſtruct, who this I in our Text is, becauſe the Hebrew word Le David, is as well Davidis, as Davidi, An Inſtruction from David, as an Inſtruction to David, and ſo the Catechiſt may ſeeme to be David, and no more; yet ſince this Criticiſme upon the word, Le David, argues but a poſſibility that it may, and not a neceſſity that it muſt be ſo, wee accompany S. Hierome, and indeed the whole body of the Fathers, in accepting this Inſtruction from God himſelfe, it is no other then God himſelfe that ſayes, I will inſtruct thee, &c. No other then God himſelfe can undertake ſo much as is promiſed in this text. For here is firſt, a rectifying of the underſtanding, I will inſtruct thee, and in the Originall there is ſomewhat more then our Tranſlation reaches to; It is there, Intelligere faciam te, I will make thee underſtand. Man can inſtruct, God onely can make us underſtand. And then Pſal. 45. Bernard.

Cant. 2. 5. 8. 6.

Diviſio.

then it is Faciam te, I will make Thee, Thee underſtand; The worke is the Lords, The underſtanding is the mans: for God does not worke in man, as the Devill did in Idols, and In Pythoniſſis, and In Ventriloquis, in poſſeſt perſons, who had no voluntary concurrence with the action of the Devill, but were meerely Paſſive; God works ſo in man, as that he makes man worke too, Faciam Te, I will make Thee underſtand; That that ſhall be done ſhall be done by mee, but in Thee; the Power that rectifies the act is Gods, the Act is mans; Faciam te, ſayes God, I will make thee, thee, every particular perſon, (for that ariſes out of this ſingular and diſtributive word, Thee, which threatens no exception, no excluſion) I wil make every perſon, to whom I preſent Inſtruction, capable of that Inſtruction, and if he receive it not, it is onely his, and not my fault. And ſo this firſt part is an Inſtruction De credendis, of ſuch things, as by Gods rectifying of our underſtanding, we are bound to beleeve. And then in a ſecond part, there followes a more particular Inſtructing, Docebo, I will teach thee, And that In via, In the way; It is not onely De via, To teach thee, which is the way, that thou maieſt finde it, but In via, How to keepe the way, when thou art in it; He will teach thee, not onely Vt gradiaris, That thou maieſt walke in it, and not ſleepe, but Quo modo gradieris, How thou mayeſt walke in it, and not ſtray; And ſo this ſecond part is an Inſtitution De agendis, of thoſe things, which, thine underſtanding being formerly rectified, and deduced into a beliefe, thou art bound to do. And then in the laſt words of the text, I will guide thee with mine eye, there is a third part, an eſtabliſhment, a confirmation, by an inceſſant watchfulneſſe in God; He will conſider, conſult upon us, (for ſo much the Originall word imports) He will not leave us to Contingencies, to Fortune, no nor to his owne generall Providence, by which all Creatures are univerſally in his protection, and adminiſtration, but he will ponder us, conſider us, ſtudy us; And that with his eye, which is the ſharpeſt, and moſt ſenſible organ and inſtrument, ſooneſt feeles, if any thing be amiſſe, and ſo inclines him quickly to rectifie us; And ſo this third part is an Inſtruction De ſperandis, it hath evermore a relation to the future, to the conſtancy and perſeverance of Gods goodneſſe towards us; to the end, and in the end, he will guide us with his eye: Except the eye of God can be put out, we cannot be put out of his ſight, and his care. So that, both our fraight which we are to take in, that is, what we are to beleeve concerning God; And the voyage which we are to make, how we are to ſteere and governe our courſe, that is, our behaviour and converſation in the houſhold of the faithfull; And then the Haven to which we muſt goe, that is, our aſſurance of arriving at the heavenly Jeruſalem, are expreſſed in this Chart, in this Map, in this Inſtruction, in this Text, I will Inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt goe, I will guide thee with mine eye. And when you have done all this, Beleeved aright, and lived according to that beliefe, and died according to that life, in the laſt voyce Surgite, you ſhall finde a Venite, as ſoone as you are called from the duſt of the grave, you ſhall Enter into your Maſters joy, and be no more called ſervants, but friends, no more friends, but ſons, no more ſons but heires, no more heires, but coheires with the only Son of God, no more coheires, but Idem Spiritus, The ſame Spirit with the Lord.

1. Part. Inſtruct.

Firſt then, the office which God by his bleſſed Spirit, through us, in his Church, undertakes, is to Inſtruct. And this being done ſo by God himſelfe, God ſending his Spirit, his Spirit working in his Miniſters, his Miniſters labouring in his Church, it is ſtrange that S. Paul ſpeaking ſo, in the name of God, and his Spirit, and his Miniſters, and his Church, ſhould be put to intreat his hearers, To ſuffer a word of exhortation. Yet he is; I beſeech yee, brethren, ſuffer a word of Exhortation. And the ſtrangeneſſe of the caſe is exalted in this, that the word there is Παρακλήσεως, Solatii, and ſo the Vulgat reads it, and juſtly, Vt ſufferatis verbum ſolatii, I beſeech yee to ſuffer a word of Comfort. What will yee heare willingly, if yee doe not willingly heare words of Comfort? With what ſhall we exerciſe your holy joy and chearfulneſſe, if even words of Comfort muſt exerciſe your patience? And yet we muſt beſeech you to ſuffer, even our words of comfort; for, we can propoſe no true comfort unto you, but ſuch as carries ſome irkeſomeneſſe, ſome bitterneſſe with it; we can create no true joy, no true acquieſcence in you, without ſome exerciſe of your patience too. We cannot promiſe you peace with God, without a war in your ſelves, nor reconciliation to him, without falling out with your ſelves, nor eternall joy in the next world, without a ſolemne remorſe for the ſinfull abuſes of this. We cannot promiſe you a good to morrow, without ſending ye backe to the conſideration of an ill yeſterday; for your hearing to day, is not enough, except ye repent yeſterday.

Heb. 13. 22.

A yeſterday. But yet, though with S. Paul we be put to beſeech you, Vt ſufferatis, That ye would ſuffer Inſtruction, though we muſt ſometimes exerciſe your patience, yet it is but verbum inſtructionis, a word of Inſtruction; and though Inſtruction be Increpation, (for as the word is Solatium, Comfort, (ſo we have told you it is) it is Increpation too, for all true comfort hath Increpation in it) yet it may eaſily be ſuffered, becauſe it is but verbum, but a word, a word and away. We would not dwell upon increpations, and chidings, and bitterneſſes; we would pierce but ſo deepe as might make you ſearch your wounds, when you come home to your Chamber, to bring you to a tenderneſſe there, not to a paleneſſe or bluſhing here. Wee never ſtay ſo long upon denouncing the judgements of God, but that we would, as faine as you, be at an end of that Paragraph, of that period, of that point, that we might come into a calme, and into a Lee-ſhore, and tell you of the mercies of God in Chriſt Jeſus. You may ſuffer Inſtruction, though Inſtruction
B be increpation, for it is but a word of inſtruction, we have ſoone done; and you may ſuffer, them becauſe they are but Verba, not Verbera, They are but words, and not blowes. It is not Traditio Satanæ, a delivering you up to Satan, it is not the confuſion of face, nor conſternation of ſpirit, nor a jealouſie and ſuſpition of Gods good purpoſe upon you, that we would induce by our Inſtruction, though it be Increpation, but onely a ſenſe of your ſins, and of the Majeſty of God violated by them, and ſo to a better capacity of this Inſtruction, which the Holy Ghoſt here preſents, In credendis, in thoſe things which you are bound to beleeve; of which his firſt degree is, Intelligere te faciam, He will make ye underſtand, he will worke upon your underſtanding, for, ſo much (as we noted to you at firſt) doth that word, which we Tranſlate here, I will Inſtruct thee, comprehend.

Oportet accedentem credere; The Apoſtle ſeemes to make that our firſt ſtep, Hee that comes to God, muſt beleeve. So it is our firſt ſtep to God, To beleeve, but there is a ſtep to- In intellectu. Heb. 11. 6.
C wards God, before it come to faith, which is, to underſtand; God works firſt upon the underſtanding. God proceeds in our converſion, and regeneration, as he did in our firſt Creation. There man was nothing; but God breathed not a ſoule into that nothing; but of a clod of earth he made a body, and into that body infuſed a ſoule. Man in his Converſion, is nothing, does nothing. His bodie is not verier duſt in the grave, till a Reſurrection, then his ſoule is duſt in his body, till a reſuſcitation by grace. But then this grace does not worke upon this nothingneſſe that is in man, upon this meere privation; but Grace finds out mans naturall faculties, and exalts them to a capacity, and a ſuſciptibleneſſe of the working thereof, and ſo by the underſtanding infuſes faith. Therefore God begins his Inſtruction here at the underſtanding; and he does not ſay at firſt, Faciam te credere, I will make thee to beleeve, but Faciam te intelligere, I will make thee underſtand.

D That then being Gods Method, To make us underſtand, certainely thoſe things which belong to our Salvation, are not In-intelligibilia, not In-intelligible, un-under- Tertul.
ſtandable, un-conceiveavable things, but the Articles of faith are diſcernible by Reaſon. For though Reaſon cannot apprehend that a Virgin ſhould have a Son, or that God ſhould be made Man and dye, if we put our Reaſon primarily and immediately upon the Article ſingle, (for ſo it is the object of faith onely) yet if we purſue Gods Method, and ſee what our underſtanding can doe, we ſhall ſee, that out of ratiocination and diſcourſe, and probabilities, and very ſimilitudes, at laſt will ariſe evident and neceſſary concluſions; ſuch as theſe, That as there is a God, that God muſt be worſhiped according to his will, That therefore that will of God muſt be declared and manifeſted ſomewhere, That this is done in ſome permanent way, in ſome Scripture, which is the Word of God, That this booke, which we call the Bible, is, by better reaſons then any others can pre-E tend, that Scripture; And when our Reaſon hath carried us ſo far, as to accept theſe Scriptures for the Word of God, then all the particular Articles, A Virgins Son, and a mortall God, will follow evidently enough. And then thoſe two Propoſitions, Myſteria credenda ut intelligantur, Myſteries of Religion muſt be beleeved before they be underſtood, and Myſteria intelligenda ut credantur, Myſteries of Religion muſt be underſtood before they can be beleeved, will be all one; For God exalts our naturall faculties of underſtanding by Grace to apprehend them, and then to that ſubmiſſion and aſſent, which he by grace produces out of our underſtanding, by a ſucceeding and more powerfull Grace he ſets to the Seale of faith. Waite thou therefore upon God, his way; preſent unto him an humble and a diligent underſtanding; conclude not too deſperately againſt thy ſelfe, if thou have not yet attained to all degrees of faith, but admit that preparation, which God offers to thine underſtanding, by an aſſiduous and a ſedulous hearing; for a narrower faith that proceeds out of a true underſtanding, ſhall carry thee farther then a faith that ſeemes larger, but is wrapped up in an implicite ignorance; no man beleeves profitably, that knows not why he beleeves. The ſubject then, that this worke is wrought in, is that faculty, mans underſtanding; There God begins in the Inſtruction of this text, Thou ſhalt underſtand, Thou ſhalt; The act ſhall be thine, but yet, the power is mine, faciam te, I will make thee underſtand, which is another Conſideration in this part. A

Faciam. God doth not determine his promiſe here, in a Faciam ut intelligas, I will caſt an underſtanding upon thee, I will cauſe an underſtanding to fall upon thee, but it is faciam te intelligere, I will make thee to underſtand, Thou ſhalt be an Agent in thine own ſalvation. When God made the Aſſe ſpeake under Balaam, God went not ſo far as this firſt ſtep, (not to the faciam ut intelligas) he imprinted, infuſed no underſtanding in that Beaſt. When God ſuffers the hypocrite to praiſe him, he imprints no underſtanding; Here is a Fruſtra colunt, It is a worſhip that is no worſhip, when it is with the lips onely, and the heart far off. So when a Papiſt cryes Templum domini, Templum domini, Viſibility of a Church, Infallibility in a Church, here is no underſtanding; He pretends to beleeve as the Church beleeves, but he knowes not what the Church beleeves; no, nor he neither upon whom he relies for his Inſtruction, his Prieſt, his Confeſſor. They are deceived that thinke every Prieſt or Jeſuit, that comes hither, knowes the Tenets of that Church; it is a more reſerved, a more perplexed, a more involved matter then ſo. To contract this Conſideration, when a Preacher ſpeaks well, and deſtroys as faſt by his ill life, as he builds by his good doctrine, here is no underſtanding neither. A good underſtanding have all they that keepe the Commandements; not all they that preach them, but that keepe them: It is all they, and onely they. There is no other aſſurance but that; Hereby we are ſure that we know him, if we keepe his Commandements. This is our Criterium, and onely this; hereby we know it, and by nothing els. So that as he that is ſlothfull in his worke, is even the brother of him that is a great waſter; So he that builds not with both hands, life and doctrine, is ſlothfull in his worke. He that preaches againſt ſin, and doth it, Inſtruit dominum quomodo eum condemnet, He doth not ſo much teach his Auditory, how to ſcape condemnation, as teach God how to condemne him. In theſe caſes there is no underſtanding at all; In the caſe of the Aſſe, and the hypocrite, and the blind Romaniſt, and the vicious Preacher. In ſome other caſes, there is underſtanding given, but without any concurrence, any cooperation of man, as in thoſe often viſions, and dreames, and manifeſtations of God, to the Prophets, and his other ſervants; There was a faciam ut intelligas, God would make his pleaſure knowne unto them, but yet not as in this Text, where God makes uſe of the man himſelfe for his own ſalvation. But yet it is God, and God alone that does all this, that rectifies our underſtanding, as well as that eſtabliſhes our faith. It is my ſoule that ſayes to mine eye, faciam te videre, I will make thee ſee, and my ſoule that ſayes to mine eare, faciam te audire, I will make thee heare, and without that ſoule, that eye and eare could no more ſee nor heare, then the eyes and eares of an Idol; ſo it is my God that ſayes to my ſoule, faciam te intelligere, I will make thee underſtand. And therefore as thou art bound to infinite thankeſgivings to God, when he hath brought thee to faith, to forget not thy tribute by the way, to bleſſe and magnifie him, if he have enlarged thy deſire of underſtanding, and thy capacity of underſtanding, and thy meanes of underſtanding; for, as howſoever a man may forget the order of the letters, after he is come to reade perfectly, and forget the rules of his Grammar, after he is come to ſpeake perfectly, yet by thoſe letters, and by that Grammar he came to that perfection; ſo, though faith be of an infinite exaltation above underſtanding, yet, as though our underſtanding be above our ſenſes, yet by our ſenſes we come to underſtand, ſo by our underſtanding we come to beleeve. And though the Holy Ghoſt repeat that more then once, Domine quis credidit? Lord who beleeves our report? And that, Shall the ſonne of Man finde faith upon earth when he comes? though he complain of want of faith, yet he multiplies infinitely that complaint for want of underſtanding, and there are ten Non intelligunt for one Non credunt, ten increpations, that his people did not underſtand, for one that they did not beleeve; becauſe, though faith be a nobler operation, God takes it alwayes worſt in us, to neglect thoſe things which are neareſt us, as he doth to neglect the Pſal. 111. 10. 1 Joh. 2. 3. Pro. 18. 9. Chryſoſt.

B C D E

A the ordinary and neceſſary duties of Religion, and ſearch curiouſly into the unrevealed purpoſes of his ſecret counſails. And this Inſtruction to the underſtanding, he ſeemes in this text to extend to all, for this ſingular word, Te, I will make Thee, Thee to underſtand, includes no excluſion, but is an offer, a promiſe to all, which is our other and laſt Conſideration in this firſt part.

In this conſideration, let us ſtop a little upon this queſtion, why the Scriptures of God more then any other booke, doe ſtill ſpeake in this ſingular perſon, and in this familiar perſon? ſtill Tu, and Tibi, and Te; Thou muſt love God, God ſpeaks to thee, God hath care of thee. Certainly in thoſe paſſages, which are from lower perſons to Princes, no Author is of a more humble, and reverentiall, and ceremoniall phraſe, then the phraſe of the Scripture is. Who could goe lower then David to Saul, that calls himſelfe a flea, and a dead dogge? Who could goe higher, then Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar, O King, thou art King of Kings; In all places, the children of men, the beaſts of the field, the fouls of the ayre are given into thy hand; Thy greatneſſe reacheth to heaven, and thy dominions to the ends of the earth. So is it alſo in perſons nearer in nature, and nearer in ranke; Iacob bowes ſeaven times to the ground, in the preſence of his brother Eſau, and My Lord, and My Lord, at every word. The Scripture phraſe is as ceremoniall and as obſervant of diſtances, as any, and yet ſtill full of this familiar word too, Tu and Tuus, Thou and Thine. And we alſo, we who deale moſt with the Scriptures, are more accuſtomed to the ſame phraſe then any other kinde of ſpeakers are. In a Parliament, who is ever heard to ſay, Thou muſt needs grant this, Thou mayeſt be bold to yeeld to this? Or who ever ſpeaks ſo to a Judge in any Court? Nay, the King himſelfe will not ſpeake to the people in that phraſe. And yet in the preſence of the greateſt, we ſay ordinarily, Amend thy life, and God be mercifull to thee, and I abſolve thee of all thy ſinnes. Beloved, in the Scriptures, God ſpeaks either to the Church, his Spouſe, and to his children, and ſo he may be bold, and would be familiar with them; Or els he ſpeaks ſo, as that he would be thought by thee to ſpeake ſingularly to thy ſoule in particular. Know then, that Chriſt Jeſus hath done enough for the ſalvation of all; but know too, that if there had been no other name written in the booke of life but thine, he would have dyed for Thee. Of thoſe which were given him, he loſt none; but if there had been none given him, but Thou, rather then have loſt Thee, he would have given the ſame price for Thee, that he gave for the whole world. And therefore when thou heareſt his mercies diſtributed in that particular, and that familiar phraſe, Faciam Te, I will make Thee underſtand, thou knoweſt not whether he ſpeake to any other in the Congregation or no; Be ſure that he ſpeake to Thee; which he does, if thou hearken to him, and anſwer him. If thou canſt not find that he means Thee yet, that he ſpeaks to thee now, if thou thinke he ſpeake rather to ſome other, whoſe faith and good life thou preferreſt before thine own, doe but begin to thinke now of the bleſſedneſſe of that man, to whom thou thinkeſt he ſpeaks, and ſay to God, with thy Saviour, Eli, Eli, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Why art thou gone to the other ſide, or why to the next on my right, or on my left hand, and left out me? Why ſpeakeſt thou not comfortably to my ſoule? and he will leave the ninety nine for thee, and thou ſhalt finde Onus amoris, ſuch a waight, and burden, and load of his love upon thee, as thou ſhalt be faine almoſt to ſay with S. Peter, Exi à me Domine, O Lord goe farther from me, that is, thou ſhalt ſee ſuch an obligation of mercy laid upon thee, as puts thee beyond all poſſibility of comprehenſion, much more of retribution, or of due and competent thankeſgiving. Miſerere animæ tuæ, Be but mercifull to thine own ſoule, and God will be mercifull to it too; If God had never meant to be mercifull to thee, he would learne of thee; If thou couldeſt love thy ſelfe before God loved thee, God would love thee for loving thy ſelfe; how much more for thy loving his love in thee? Love underſtanding, and, faciet te intelligere, he will make thee underſtand enough for thy pilgrimage, enough for thy tranſmigration, enough for thy eternall habitation. As we count them wiſeſt, who are moſt provident, and foreſee moſt, he will make thee ſee farther then all they, through all generations, beyond children, and childrens children, (which is the proſpect of the world) to all eternity, that hath no termination, and he will allow thee an underſtanding for this world too; He will bid thee Lift up thine eyes to heaven, and bid thee Look downe to the earth too; He will make thy conſiderations of this world acceptable to him, as well as thoſe of the next; He will remember thee, that Angels deſcended as well as aſcended, that to a religious ſoule, this world is not out of the way

Te.

1 Sam. 24. 15.
2 Sam. 9. 8.
Dan. 2. 37.
Dan. 4. 19.
Gen. 33. 3.
Eſay 51. 6.
Gen. 28.

to heaven; Faciet te intelligere, He will make thee underſtand enough for both. And ſo we have done with that firſt Part, De credendis, Things which we are bound to beleeve, That even for thoſe, God workes upon the underſtanding, That though God worke all in all, yet it is the man that underſtands; and laſtly, that in the Holy Ghoſts chooſing this word of ſingularity, Te, I will make thee underſtand, there is a pregnant intimation of Gods large and diffuſive goodneſſe to all, This word, Thee, excludes none. And ſo we paſſe to our ſecond Part, Inſtruction, De agendis, what we are to doe, I will teach thee in the way thou ſhalt goe. A 2 Part. Docebo. If any man lack wiſedome, let him aske it of God; and Faciet intelligere, God ſhall make him underſtand: God ſhall; I may ſtudy, and then, you may heare me, but God onely makes us all underſtand; for the underſtanding is the doore of faith, and that doore he opens, and he ſhuts: So by underſtanding he brings us to beleeve. But then, he that truly beleeves, finds that he hath ſomething to doe too; And he ſaies to himſelf, Wherewith ſhall a young man cleanſe his wayes? And he cannot tell himſelfe; He askes them whom God hath ſent to tell him, his Miniſters, Viri, fratres, Men and brethren, what ſhall we doe to be ſaved? And by their leading, he goes to the Spirit of God, to God himſelf, and ſayes, Good Maſter, what good thing ſhall I do, that I may have eternall life? And that good Maſter will teach him what to doe, which is the promiſe of this part of Inſtruction in our Text, I will teach thee in the way thou ſhalt goe. And Plus eſt docere, quàm inſtruere, God promiſes more in this, that he will Teach thee in the way, then in the former, that he would make thee underſtand. Not that the matter or ſubject in this Part, is the greater, (for the former had relation to faith, and this but to good works) but that it intimates a more frequent recourſe to us, and a more ſtudious care of us, and a more provident vigilancy over us, and a more familiar converſation with us, that God accompanies us in all our way, and directs us in all our particular actions, then that by underſtanding he hath brought us to beleeve. He that horſes a man well for a journey, or he that rewards a man well for a journey, does a greater work, then he that goes along with him as a guide; but yet there is aliquid magis in the guide, there is a more continuall, a more inceſſant courteſie in him. We ſee in the Romane Church, they are not in their Beads, without Credoes, they beleeve enough; and leſt that ſhould not be enough, they have made a new Creed of more Articles then that, in the Councell of Trent, and to teſtifie a ſtrong faith therein, they muſt ſweare they beleeve it: And then they have to every Creed, more Pater noſters, they petition enough, aske enough at Gods hands; They have Credoes enow, Pater noſters enow, and Ave Maries more then enow; But when we conſider them in the Commandements, what we are to doe, (as great Workers as they pretend to be) though they inlarge their Credoes, and multiply their Pater noſters, they contract the Commandements, and put two into one, for feare of meeting one againſt Images. B C D

Mat. 19. 16.

Gregor.

This then expreſſes Gods daily care of us, that he teaches us the way. But then, even that implies, that we are all out of our way; ſtill all bends, all conduces to that, An humble acknowledgement of our own weakneſſe, a preſent recourſe to the love and power of God; The firſt thing I look for in the Expoſition of any Scripture, and the neareſt way to the literall ſenſe thereof, is, what may moſt deject and vilifie man, what may moſt exalt, and glorifie God. We are all, all out of our way; but God deales not alike with all; for, for the wicked, Their way is dark and ſlippery, And then, The Angel of the Lord perſecutes them; But for thoſe whom he loves, He will waigh the paths of the juſt, (ſayes our later Tranſlation) And, He will make the paths of the righteous equall and even, ſayes our former; It ſhall be a path often beaten by him, for it is not righteouſneſſe, to be righteous once a yeare, at Eaſter, nor once a week, upon Sunday. An Anniverſary righteouſneſſe, an Hebdomadary righteouſneſſe, a Sabbatarian righteouſneſſe is no righteouſneſſe. But it is a path; and ſo made even, without occaſions of ſtumbling; that is, he ſhall be able to walk in any profeſſion, and to make good any ſtation, and not be diverted by the power of any tentations incident to that calling. The Angel of the Lord, The evill Angel, diſtruſt and diffidence, ſhall perſecute the wicked, in his darke and ſlippery way; this is no teaching; but becauſe the godly have a teaching, even their direction hath a correction too; God beats his Scholars into their way too. The difference is expreſſed in the Prophet, When the Lord hath given you the bread of adverſity, and the water of affliction, (for in Gods Schoole that is Scholars fare) yet, ſayes God, Thy Teachers E

Pſal. 35. 6.

Iſay 26. 7.

Iſay 30. 21.

ſhall

A ſhall not be removed from thee into a corner; Still in thine affliction thou ſhalt have a Teacher, or even the affliction it ſelfe ſhall be Gods Uſher; and thou ſhalt have evidence of it, Thy Teacher ſhall not be removed into a corner; thou ſhalt ſee it; and (as it follows there) Thine eares ſhall heare a voyce behinde thee; (that is, a voyce ariſing even from that affliction that thou haſt ſuffered) and that voyce ſhall ſay, This is the way, walk ye in it; As dark as affliction is, it ſhall ſhew thee the way, Hæc eſt via, This is the way, as much as affliction enfeebles thee, yet it ſhall enable thee to walk in it, Ambulate in ea. God is a Schoole-maſter; not as the Law was, to teach with a ſword in his hand; but yet he teaches with a rod in his hand, though not with a ſword.

Now in teaching us the way, he inſtructs us De via, and In via; which is the way, and what is to be done in it. He ſees all our wayes; All my wayes are before thee, ſayes David. And he ſees them not ſo as though they belonged not to him, for he conſiders them, B Does not he behold all my wayes, and tell all my ſteps? He ſees them, and ſees our irremediable danger in them; Formido, & fovea, & laqueus, Feare, and a pit, and ſnares are upon thee; Upon whom? There we ſee the generality of this ſingle word, Thee, that it is all; for ſo, it followes there, Vpon thee, O Inhabitant of the earth. The danger then is generall, and the Lord knowes it; Who then can teach us a better way, but he? But how doth he teach us this way? When God had promiſed Moſes to ſend an Angel to ſhew the people their way, (I will ſend an Angel before thee) Moſes ſayes to God, See, thou ſayeſt, Lead this people forth, and thou haſt not ſhewed me whom thou wilt ſend with me; (ſo thoſe Tranſlators thought good to render it) God had told him of an Angel, but that ſatisfied not Moſes; He muſt have ſomething ſhewed to him, he muſt ſee his guide. If thy preſence goe not with me, carry me not from hence, ſayes he to God. For, wherein ſhall it be known, that I, and thy people have found favour in thy ſight? ſhall it not be C when thou goeſt up with us? And therefore God ſatisfies him, My preſence ſhall goe with thee. Goe? but how? ſayes Moſes; Wilt thou bee pleaſed to ſhew mee thy glory? Shall we ſee any thing? They did ſee that Pillar in which God was, and that preſence, that Pillar ſhewed the way. To us, the Church is that Pillar; in that, God ſhewes us our way. For ſtrength it is a Pillar, and a Pillar for firmneſſe and fixation: But yet the Church is neither an equall Pillar, alwaies fire, but ſometimes cloud too; The Church is more and leſſe viſible, ſometimes in ſplendor, ſometimes in an eclipſe; neither is it ſo a fixt Pillar, as that it is not in divers places. The Church is not ſo fixed to Rome, as that it is not communicated to other Nations, nor ſo limited in it ſelfe, as that it may not admit changes, in thoſe things that appertain to Order, and Diſcipline. Our way, that God teaches us, is the Church; That is a Pillar; Fixed, for Fundamentall things, but yet a moveable Pillar, for things indifferent, and arbitrary.

D Thus he teaches, Quid via, which is the way, It is the Church, the Pillar of Truth. He teaches next, Quid in via, What is to be done in the way; for, that counſell of the Apoſtle, See that ye walk circumſpectly, preſumes a man to be in the way; elſe he would have cried to have ſtopped him, or to have turned him, and not bid him goe on, how circumſpectly ſoever. But, In my path, ſayes David, (not making any doubt but that he was in a right path) in my path, the proud have laid a ſnare for me, and ſpread a net with cords; Ad manum orbitæ, (ſayes the Originall) even at the hand of the path; That path which ſhould (as it were) reach out a hand to lead me, hath a ſnare in it. And therefore, ſayes David, with ſo much vehemence in the entrance of that Pſalme, Deliver me, O Lord, from the evill man, who purpoſeth to overthrow my goings; Though I goe in the right way, the true Church, yet purpoſes to overthrow mee there. This Evill man workes upon us: The man of ſin; in thoſe inſtruments that ſtill caſt that ſnare in our way, in our Church, E There is a minority, an inviſibility, and a fallibility in your Church; you begun but yeſterday in Luther, and you are fallen out already in Calvin. So alſo works this Evill man amongſt us, in thoſe Sciſmatiques, who caſt that ſnare in our way, Your way (though it be in part mended) hath yet impreſſions of the ſteps of the Beaſt, and it is a circular, and giddy way, that will bring us back againe to Rome. And therefore, beloved, though you be in the way, ſee ye walk circumſpectly, for the ſnares that both theſe have caſt in the way, the reproaches, and defamations that both theſe have caſt upon our Church. But when thou haſt ſcaped both theſe ſnares, of Papiſt, and Sciſmatique, pray ſtill to be delivered from that Evill man, that is within thee. Non tantùm poteſt hominem decipere, quàm per Organum hominis, The Devill hath not ſo powerfull an inſtrument, nor ſo ſubtile

De via. Pſal. 119. 168. Job 31. 4. Eſay 24. 17. Exod. 33. 2, 12. Ver. 15. Ver. 18. In via. Eph. 5. 15. Pſal. 140. 5. Hieron.

Auguſt. tile an engine upon thee as thy ſelfe. Quis in hoc ſeculo non patitur hominem malum? Who in this world (or if he goe ſo farre out of this world, as never to ſee man but himſelfe) is not troubled with this evill man? When thou prayeſt with David, to be delivered from this evill man, if God aske thee whom thou meaneſt, muſt thou not ſay, thy ſelfe? Chryſoſt. Canſt thou ſhew God a worſe? Qui non eſt malus, nihil à malo mali patitur; If a man were not evill in himſelf, the worſt thing in the world could not hurt him; the Devil would not offer to give fire, if there were no powder in thy heart. What that evill man is, that is in another, I cannot know: I cannot alwayes diſcerne anothers ſnare; for, What man 1 Cor. 2. 11. knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of a man which is in him? Thy ſpirit knowes what the evill man that is in thee, is. Deliver thy ſelfe of that evill man that enſnares thee in thy way; though thou come to Church; yea even when thou art there. David repeats this word A viro malo, from the evill man, twice in that Pſalme. In one place, A viro malo, is in that name, Meiſh, which is a name of man proper onely to the ſtronger ſexe, and intimates ſnares and tentations of ſtronger power, As when feare, or favour tempts a man to come to a ſuperſtitious, and idolatrous ſervice. In the other it is but Meadam, and that is a name common to men, and women, and children, and intimates, that omiſſions, negligences, infirmities, may encumber us, enſnare us, though we be in the way, even in the true place of Gods ſervice; and the eye may be enſnared as dangerouſly, and as damnably in this place, as the eare, or the tongue in the Chamber. As S. Hierome ſayes, Nugæ in ore Sacerdotis ſunt ſacrilegium, An idle word in a Church-mans mouth is ſacriledge; ſo a wanton look in the Church, is an Adultery. Now when God hath thus taught us the way, what it is, that is, brought us to the true Church, (for till then, all is diverſion, all baniſhment) and taught us In via, what to doe in that way, To reſiſt tentations to ſuperſtition from other imaginary Churches, tentations to particular ſins from the evill men of the world, and from the worſt man in the world, our ſelfe, the Inſtruction in our Text is carried a ſtep farther, that is, to proceed and goe forward in that way, Qua gradieris, I will teach thee to walk in that way.

Qua gradieris. When S. Auguſtine ſaith upon this place, It is via qua gradieris, & non cui hærebis, A way to walke in, not to ſticke upon, he doth not meane, That wee ſhould ever change this way, or depart from it, (that any croſſe in this, ſhould make us hearken after another religion) It is not that we ſhould not ſticke to it, but that we ſhould not ſticke in it, nor loyter in the way. Thou haſt beene in this way (in the true Church) ever ſince thy Baptiſme: and yet, if a man that hath lived morally well all his life, and no more then ſo, finde by Gods grace a doore opened into the Chriſtian Church, and a ſhort turning into this right way, at the end of his life, hee by the benefit of thoſe good Morall actions, ſhall be before thee, who haſt lived lazily, though in the right way, at his firſt ſtep; For though thoſe good Morall actions were not good workes, when hee did them, yet then, that grace which he layes hold upon at laſt, ſhall reflect a tincture upon them, and make them good in the eyes of God, ab initio. If thou have not beene lazie in thy way, in thy Chriſtian profeſſion hitherto, yet except thou proceed ſtill, except thou goe from hence now, better then thou cameſt, (better in thy purpoſe) and come hither next day better then thou wenteſt, (better in thy practiſe) thou haſt not learned this leſſon in this Inſtruction, I will teach thee to walke in this way. A Chriſtian hath no Solſtice, no higheſt point, where he may ſtand ſtill, and goe no farther; much leſſe hath hee any Æquator, where dayes and nights are equall, that is, a liberty to ſpend as much time ill, as well, as many Auguſt. houres in ſinfull pleaſures, as in religious exerciſes. Quicquid citra Deum eſt, via eſt, nec immorandum in ea; Hee doth not ſay, præter Deum, much leſſe contra Deum; For whatſoever is againſt God, nay, whatſoever is beſides God, is altogether out of the way; But citra Deum, on this ſide of God: Till we come to God in heaven, all our beſt is but our way to him. All the zeale of gathering knowledge, all the growth of faith, all the practiſe of ſanctification, is but via, the way; and non immorandum in ea; ſince wee have here a promiſe of Gods aſſiſtance in it, in the way, we are ſure there is an obligation upon it, as upon a duty, in this way, humbly, and patiently, and laborioufly to walke towards him, without ſtopping upon any thing in this world, either preferments on the right, or diſgraces on the left hand, (for a Cart may ſtop us, as well as a Coach, low things as well as high, with as much trouble, and more anoyance) Which is more eſpecially intended in the laſt words of the Text, Firmabo ſuper te oculos meos, I will ſettle my providence, fixe mine eye upon thee, I will guide thee with mine eye.

Thus

A Thus farre hath our blessed Lord assured us, That he will make us understand, which is his Instruction de credendis, what to Beleeve; And that he will teach us to walke in his way, which is his Instruction de agendis, what to Doe, how to avoide tentations; This last is, That hee will guide us with his eye, which is his Instruction de sperandis, what wee are to Hope for at his hand, if in this way we doe stumble, or fall into some sinnes of infirmities. But it is but de sperandis, not de præsumendis; when by infirmity thou art fallen, thy Hope must begin then; but if the Hope begun before, so as thou fellest upon hope that God would raise thee, then it was presumption, and there the Lords eye shuts in, and guides thee no longer. Otherwise he directs thee with his eye, (that is, with his gracious and powerfull looking upon thee) to the meanes of thy recovery. Wee heare of no blowes, wee heare of no chiding from him towards Peter, but all that is said, is, The Lord turned back and looked upon Peter, and then he remembred his case; The eye of the Lord lightned his darknesse; The eye of the Lord thawed those three crusts of Ice, which were growne over his heart, in his three denials of his Master. A Candle wakes some men, as well as a noyse; The eye of the Lord works upon a good soule, as much as his hand, and hee is as much affected with this consideration, The Lord sees me, as with this, The Lord strikes me.

3 Part.

Luke 22.61.

B Wee reade in Naturall story of some creatures, Qui solo oculorum aspectu fovent ova, which hatch their egges onely by looking upon them; What cannot the eye of God produce and hatch in us? Plus est quod probatur aspectu, quàm quod sermone. A man may seeme to commend in words, and yet his countenance shall dispraise. His word infuses good purposes into us, but if God continue his eye upon us, it is a farther approbation, for He is a God of pure eyes, and will not looke upon the wicked. This land doth the Lord thy God care for, and the eyes of the Lord are alwayes upon it from the beginning of the yeare, C even to the end thereof. What a cheerefull spring, what a fruitfull Autumne hath that soule, that hath the eye of the Lord alwayes upon her? The eye of the Lord upon thee, makes midnight noone, and S. Lucies day S. Barnabies; It makes Capricorne Cancer, and the Winters the Summers Solstice; The eye of the Lord sanctifies, nay more then sanctifies, glorifies all the Eclipses of dishonour, makes Melancholy cheerefulnesse, diffidence assurance, and turnes the jealousie of the sad soule into infallibility. Upon his people his eye shined in the wildernesse; his eye singled them in Egypt, and in Babylon they were sustained by his eye. They were, and we are; The eye of their God was upon the Elders of Israel, And, Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon all them that feare him. The Proverb is not onely as old as Aristotle, Oculus domini, and Pes domini, The eye of the Master fattens the horse, and the foot of the Master marles the ground, but it is as old as the Creation, God saw all that he had made, and so, it was very good; It was visio approbationis, and D his approbation was the exaltation thereof.

Plin. l. 10. c. 9.

Ambrose.

Deut. 11.12.

Ezra 5.5.

Psal. 33.18.

Hieron.

This guiding then with the eye, we consider to be his particular care, and his personall providence upon us, in his Church; For, a man may be in the Kings presence, and yet not in his eye; and so he may in Gods. Gods whole Ordinance in his Church, is Gods face; For, that is the face of God, by which God is manifested to us; But then, that eye in that face, by which he promises to guide us, in this Text, is that blessed Spirit of his, by whose operation he makes that grace, which does evermore accompany his Ordinances, effectuall upon us; The whole Congregation sees God face to face, in the Service, in the Sermon, in the Sacrament; but there is an eye in that face, an eye in that Service, an eye in that Sermon, an eye in that Sacrament, a piercing and an operating Spirit, that lookes upon that soule, and foments and cherishes that soule, who by a good use of Gods former grace, is become fitter for his present.

August.

E And this guiding us with his eye, manifests it selfe in these two great effects; conversion to him, and union with him. First, his eye works upon ours; His eye turnes ours to looke upon him. Still it is so expressed with an Ecce; Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon all them that feare him; His eye cals ours to behold that; And then our eye cals upon his, to observe our cheerefull readinesse, Behold, as the eye of a servant lookes to the hand of his Master, so our eyes waite upon the Lord our God, till he have mercy upon us. Where the Donec, Vntill, is an everlasting Donec, as the blessed Virgins was; A Virgin Donec, till she brought forth her first Son, and a Virgin ever after; So our eyes waite upon God, till hee have mercy, that is, while he hath it, and that he may continue his mercy; for it was his mercifull eye that turned ours to him, and it is the same mercy, that we waite upon him.

Convertit.

Psal. 33.18.

123.2.

And

And then, when, as a well made Picture doth alwaies looke upon him, that lookes upon it, this Image of God in our ſoule, is turned to him, by his turning to it, it is impoſſible we ſhould doe any foule, any uncomely thing in his preſence. Will any man ſolicite a Wife or a Daughter, and call the Father or Husband to looke on? Will any man breake open thy houſe in the night, and firſt wake thee, and call thee up? Can any man give his body to uncleanneſſe, his tongue to prophaneneſſe, his heart to covetouſneſſe, and at the ſame time conſider, that his pure, and his holy, and his bountifull God hath his eye upon him? Can he looke upon God in that line, in that Angle, (upon God looking upon him) and diſhonour him? Upon thoſe words of David, Mine eyes are ever towards the Lord, Pſal. 25. 15. Quaſi dicceretur, quid agitur de pedibus? as though it were objected, Is all thy care of thine Auguſt. eyes? What becomes of thy feete? Non attendis ad eos? Doeſt thou looke to thy ſteps, To thy life, as well as to thy faith, To pleaſe God, as well as to know God? And hee anſwers in the words which follow, Ipſe evellet, As for my feet, God ſhall order, that is, B aſſiſt me in ordering them; If his eye be upon me, and mine upon him, (O bleſſed reflexion! O happy reciprocation! O powerfull correſpondence!) Ipſe evellet, He will plucke my feet out of the net, though I be almoſt enſnared, almoſt entangled, he will ſnatch me out of the fire, deliver me from the tentation.

Fruit. The other great effect of his guiding us with his eye, is, That it unites us to himſelfe; Pſal. 17. 8. when he fixes his his eye upon us, and accepts the returne of ours to him, then he keepes us as the Apple of his eye, Quaſi pupillam filiam oculi, (as S. Hierom reads it) as the Daugh- Zech. 2. 8. ter, the iſſue, the off-ſpring of his owne eye. For then, He that toucheth you, toucheth the Apple of his eye. And theſe are the two great effects of his guiding us by his eye, that firſt, his eye turnes us to himſelfe, and then turnes us into himſelfe; firſt, his eye turnes ours to him, and then, that makes us all one with himſelfe, ſo, as that our afflictions ſhall bee put upon his patience, and our diſhonours ſhall be injuries to him; wee cannot be ſafer C then by being his; but thus, we are not onely His, but He; To every Perſecutor, in every one of our behalfe, he ſhall ſay, Cur me? Why perſecuteſt thou me? And as hee is all Power, and can defend us, ſo here he makes himſelfe all eye, which is the moſt tender part, and moſt ſenſible of our preſſures.

So have you then this Inſtruction perfected unto you. Firſt, De credendis, facit te intelligere, God will make you underſtand, you, for he will worke upon your naturall faculties ſupernaturally, and by them, convey faith. And then, De agendis, docebo in via, He will teach you which is the way, and what to doe when you are in it. And after that, De ſperandis, firmabo oculos, he will guide you with his eye, watch, if in that way you ſtumble, and reſtore you. That you may conſtantly hope for; and when you have but thus much more, you have all, That there is In omni ſperando, timendum; In every hope, there is ſome- Rom. 5. 5. thing to be feared. Hope makes us not aſhamed, But yet hope, (as long as it is but hope) may D make us afraid; though not with a ſuſpicious feare, reflected upon God, yet with a ſolici- Rom. 5. 2. tous feare, ariſing from, and returning upon our ſelves. There is a Hope of glory, and there Heb. 3. 6. is a Glory in hope; but no ſuch Glory, as exterminates all feare: for we are bid To worke out Phil. 2. 12. our Salvation with feare and trembling; It muſt be ſuch a feare, as may ſtill relate to my Salvation; For feare that excludes me from Salvation, is a fearefull feare; but yet a feare it muſt be; for as there is a promiſe of guiding by his eye, there is alſo a poſſibility of taking his eye from thee. God is not in this, like the Sun, that makes no more haſte over a dunghill, then over a Garden; over Babylon, then over Jeruſalem. The eye of God is not infected with thy bleare-eye; but yet he will not ſtay and looke upon it. And when Pſal. 34. 13. he takes his eye from thee, he ſets his face againſt thee; The eyes of the Lord are upon the Gregor. righteous, but the face of the Lord is againſt them that doe evill. And thus, Ab ejus viſione, quem conſpicis, abes; Thou art out of Gods ſight, when thou ſeeſt him onely in his judge- E Deut. 32. 20. ments. Nay, thou ſhalt not ſee him in them; I will hide my face from them, ſayes God, (though it were an angry face, yet he would hide it) and I will ſee what their end will be. God ſhall looke upon thy fearfull end from the beginning, but thou thy ſelfe ſhalt not ſee the horror that appertaines to it, till it be too late; for that is it, in which God does eſpe- Verſ. 28. cially reproach that people, O that they were ſo wiſe, as to conſider their latter end! To that purpoſe hath God continued his Inſtruction to us, in this text, That we might know from him, what to beleeve, and what to doe, and how to returne to God, when we have gone aſtray, I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt go, and I will guide thee with mine eye.

SERM.

SERM. LXII.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Psalmes.

PSAL. 32. 9.

Be not as the Horſe, or the Mule, who have no underſtanding; whoſe mouth muſt be held in with bit and bridle, leſt they come neere unto thee.

AS God, above whom there is nothing, lookes downewards to us; So except we, below whom there is nothing that belongs to us, looke upward toward him, we ſhall never meet. And therefore God foreſeeing ſuch a deſcent in man, as might make him incapable, and put him out of diſtance of the rich promiſes of this Pſalme, in this Text hee forewarnes him, of ſuch a Deſcent, ſuch a dejection, ſuch a diminution of himſelfe. And firſt hee forbids a Deſcent generally into a lower nature; Nolite fieri, Be not made at all, not made any other, then God hath made you. God would have man, who was his Medal at firſt, (when God ſtamped and imprinted his Image in him) And was Gods Robe, and garment at laſt, (when Chriſt Jeſus inveſted and put on our Nature) God would have this man preſerve this Dignity, Nolite fieri, Be not made any new thing. Secondly, he forbids him a Deſcent, into certaine particular depravations, and deteriorations of our Nature; in thoſe qualities, which are intimated and ſpecified, in the nature and diſpoſition of thoſe two beaſts, The Horſe, and the Mule, Nolite fieri ſicut Equus & Mulus, Be not as the Horſe, or the Mule. But principally, for that which is in the third place, Quia non intellectus, Not becauſe they have no faith, but becauſe they have no underſtanding, for then, it is impoſſible that ever they ſhould have faith; And ſo it is a reaſon proportioned to our Reaſon; Do not ſo, for it will vitiate, it will annihilate your underſtanding, your reaſon, and then what are you, for ſupernaturall, or for naturall knowledge? But then there is another reaſon proportioned to the ſenſe, that this Declination of ours, into theſe inferiour natures, brings God to a neceſſity to bit, and bridle, and curbe us, that is, to inflict afflictions upon us; And then that reaſon is aggravated by the greateſt waight that can be laid upon it, That God will inflict all theſe puniſhments upon theſe perverſe men, metamorphoſed into theſe Beaſts, not onely Ne approximent, That they may not come neare Gods Servants, to do them harme, (which ſeemes indeed to be the moſt literall ſenſe of the word) But, (as ſome of our Expoſitors have found reaſon to interpret them) Ne approximent, That they ſhall not come neare him; not neare God in the ſervice of his Church, to do themſelves any good; his Corrections ſhall harden them, and remove them farther from him, and from all benefit by his Ordinances. Diviſio.

Firſt then God armes him with a pre-increpation upon Deſcent, Nolite fieri, Goe no leſſe, be not made lower. The firſt ſin that ever was, was an aſcending, a climing too high; when the pureſt Underſtandings of all, The Angels, fell by their aſcending; when Lucifer was tumbled downe, by his Similis ero Altiſſimo, I will be like the moſt High, then he tried upon them, who were next to him in Dignity, upon Man, how that clambring would worke upon him. He preſents to man, the ſame ladder; He infuſes into man the ſame Ambition, and as he fell with a Similis ero Altiſſimo, I will be like the moſt High, So he overthrew man, with an Eritis ſicut Dii, Ye ſhall be as Gods. It ſeemes this fall hath broake the neck of Mans ambition, and now we dare not be ſo like God, as we ſhould be. Ever ſince this fall, man is ſo far from affecting higher places, then his nature is capable of, that he is ſtill groveling upon the ground, and participates, and imitates, and expreſſes more of the nature of the Beaſt then of his owne. There is no creature but man that degenerates willingly from his naturall Dignity; Thoſe degrees of goodneſſe, which God imprinted in them at firſt, they preſerve ſtill; As God ſaw they were good then, ſo he Deſcenſus. Eſay 14. 14.

he may ſee they are good ſtill; They have kept their Talent; They have not bought nor ſold; They have not gained nor loſt; They are not departed from their native and naturall dignity, by any thing that they have done. But of Man, it ſeemes, God was diſtruſtfull from the beginning; He did not pronounce upon Mans Creation, (as he did upon the other Creatures) that He was good; becauſe his goodneſſe was a contingent thing, and conſiſted in the future uſe of his free will. For that faculty and power of the will, is Virtus transformativa; by it we change our ſelves into that we love moſt, and we are come to love thoſe things moſt, which are below us. As God ſaid to the Earth, (and it was enough to ſay ſo) Germinet terra juxta genus ſuum, Let the Earth bring forth according to her kinde; So, Vive juxta genus tuum, ſayes S. Ambroſe to Man, Live according to thy kinde; Non adulteres genus tuum, doe not abaſe, doe not allay, doe not betray, do not abaſtardiſe that noble kinde, that noble nature, which God hath imparted to thee, imprinted in thee.

Dionyſ. Gen. 1. Ambro.

Mundi moles liber eſt, This whole world is one Booke; And is it not a barbarous thing, when all the whole booke beſides remains intire, to deface that leafe in which the Authors picture, the Image of God is expreſſed, as it is in man? God brought man into the world, as the King goes in ſtate, Lords, and Earles, and perſons of other ranks before him. So God ſent out Light, and Firmament, and Earth, and Sea, and Sunne, and Moone, to give a dignity to mans proceſſion; and onely Man himſelfe diſorders all, and that by diſplacing himſelfe, by loſing his place. The Heavens and Earth were finiſhed, Et omnis exercitus eorum, ſayes Moſes, All the Hoſt thereof; and all this whole Army preſerves that Diſcipline, onely the Generall that ſhould governe them, miſ-governs himſelfe. And whereas we ſee that Tygers and Wolves, Beaſts of annoyance, doe ſtill keepe their places and natures in the world; and ſo doe Herbs and Plants, even thoſe which are in their nature offenſive and deadly, (for Alia eſui, alia uſui, Some herbs are made to eat, ſome to adorne, ſome to ſupply in Phyſick) whileſt we diſpute in Schools, whether if it were poſſible for Man to doe ſo, it were lawfull for him to deſtroy any one ſpecies of Gods Creatures, though it were but the ſpecies of Toads and Spiders, (becauſe this were a taking away one linke of Gods chaine, one Note of his harmony) we have taken away that which is the Jewel at the chaine, that which is the burden of the Song, Man himſelfe. Partus ſequitur ventrem; We verifie the Law treacherouſly, miſchievouſly; we all follow our Mother, we grovell upon the earth, whoſe children we are, and being made like our Father, in his Image, we neglect him. What is Man that thou art mindfull of him, and the ſonne of Man, that thou viſiteſt him? David admires not ſo much mans littleneſſe in that place, as his greatneſſe; He is a little lower then Angels; A little lower then God, ſayes our former Tranſlation; agreeably enough to the word, and in a good ſenſe too; Gods Lievtenant, his Vice-gerent over all Creatures; Thou haſt made him to have Dominion over the works of thy hands; (and Dominion is a great, it is a ſupreme eſtate) And thou haſt put all things under his feet; (as it follows there) And yet we have forfeited this Juriſdiction, this Dominion, and more, our owne Eſſence; we are not onely inferior to the Beaſts, and under their annoyance, but we are our ſelves become Beaſts. Conſider the dignitie of thy ſoule, which onely, of all other Creatures is capable, ſuſciptible of Grace; If God would beſtow grace any where els, no creature could receive it but thou. Thou art ſo neceſſary to God, as that God had no utterance, no exerciſe, no employment for his grace and mercy, but for thee. And if thou make thy ſelfe incapable of this mercy and this grace, of which nothing but thou is capable, then thou deſtroyeſt thy nature. And remember then, that as in the Kingdome of Heaven, in thoſe orders which we conceive to be in thoſe glorious Spirits, there is no falling from a higher to a lower order, a Cherubim or Seraphim does not fall, and ſo become an Archangel, or an Angel, but thoſe of that place that fell, fell into the bottomleſſe pit; So, if thou depart from thy nature, from that ſuſciptibleneſſe, that capacity of receiving Grace, if thou degenerate ſo from a Man to a Beaſt, thou ſhalt not reſt there in the ſtate and nature of a Beaſt, whoſe ſoule breaths out to nothing, and vaniſhes with the life, thou ſhalt not be ſo happy, but thy better nature will remain, in deſpite of thee, thine everlaſting ſoule muſt ſuffer everlaſting torment.

Baſil. Gen. 2. 1. Ambroſe. Pſal. 8. 4.

2 Part. Now as many men when they ſee a greater piece of coyne then ordinary, they doe not preſently know the value of it, though they know it to be ſilver, but thoſe leſſer coyns which are in currant uſe, and come to their hands every day, they know at firſt ſight;

A ſight; ſo becauſe this ſtamp, this impreſſion of the image of God in Man, is not well and clearly underſtood by every Man, neither this deſcent and departing from the dignity thereof, being delivered but in generall, (Nolite fieri, Be yee made like nothing els) Therefore the Holy Ghoſt brings us here to the conſideration of ſome leſſer pieces, things which are alwayes within diſtance and apprehenſion, alwayes in our eye, (Nolite fieri ſicut, Deſcend not to the qualities of the Horſe and the Mule. Though (as God ſummed up his temporall bleſſings to the Jews, in that totall, Et proſperiſti in regnum, Thou didſt proſper into a Kingdome) He may alſo ſumme up his ſpirituall bleſſings to us in this, Et proſperiſti in Eccleſiam, & in Eccleſiam credentium, (for there is Eccleſia malignantium, Odivi Eccleſiam malignantium, ſayes David, I have hated the Congregation of evill doers) I have brought thee firſt from the Nations, from the Common, into a viſible Church, And then from Babylon, from that Church of confuſion, that makes the word of God B and the word of Man equall, into an Orthodox and ſincere Church, yet our ſinnes have caſt us Infra Gentes, and Infra Babylonem, Below all theſe againe. For, for the Gentils, The Gentils which have not the law, doe by nature the things contained in the law; wee that have the helpe of the Law and Goſpel too, doe not. And for Rome, the example of our Reformation, and their own ſhame, contracted thereby, hath wrought upon the Church of Rome it ſelfe; They are the better for the Reformation, (in frequent Catechizing and preaching) and we are not. Compare us with the Gentils, and we ſhall fall under that increpation of the Apoſtle, There is ſuch fornication amongſt you, as is not once named amongſt the Gentils: We commit thoſe things which they forbeare to ſpeake of. Compare us with Rome, and I feare that will belong to us, which God ſayes and ſweares in the Prophet, As I live, ſaith the Lord, Sodome thy ſiſter hath not done as thou haſt done.

Rom. 2. 14.

1 Cor. 5. 1.

Ezek. 16. 48.

C Where, by the way, be pleaſed to note, that God calls even Samaria, and Sodome, ſiſters of Jeruſalem; there is a fraternity grounded in charity, which nothing muſt deveſt; If Sodome and Jeruſalem were Siſters, Babylon and we may be ſo too; uterin ſiſters of one wombe, (for there is but one Baptiſme) though fornication it ſelfe, (and fornication, in the ſpirituall ſenſe of the Scriptures, hath a heavy ſignification, and reaches even to Idolatry) have made that Church, as ſome thinke, ſcarce capable of the name of a Church, yet Sodome is a ſiſter.

But be ſhee as far degenerate as ſhe can, our ſin hath made a deſcent below them that are below us. It hath caſt us below the Inhabitants of the Earth, Beaſts, and below the Earth it ſelfe, even to Hell; for we make this life, which is the place of repentance, the place of obſtinacy and obduration; and obduration is Hell. Yea, it hath caſt us below the Devill himſelfe; our ſtate is, in this, worſe then theirs; They ſinned before God had given them any expreſſe law; and before God had made any examples, or taken any re- D venge upon any ſinners; But we ſin after a manifeſt law, and after they, and many others have been made our examples. They were never reſtored, we have been reſtored often; They proceed in their obſtinacy, when God caſts them from him, we proceed even when God calls us to him; They againſt God which turnes from them, and is glorified in their deſtruction, we againſt him that comes to us, and emptied and humbled himſelfe to the ſhame, to the ſcorne, to the paine, to the death of the Croſſe for us. Theſe be the lamentable deſcents of ſinne: But the particular deſcent to which this text doth purpoſely bend it ſelfe, is, That as God ſaid at beginning, in contempt, and in deriſion, Ecce Adam, quaſi unus ex nobis, Behold, Man is become as one of us; So now, (as S. Bernard makes the note) the Horſe and Mule may ſay, Quaſi unus ex nobis, Behold, Man is become as one of us; and, Nolite fieri, ſayes God in our text, Be not as the Horſe or the Mule.

Gen. 3. 22. Bernard.

According to the ſeverall natures of theſe two Beaſts, the Fathers, and other Expoſi- E tors have made ſeverall interpretations; at leaſt, ſeverall Alluſions. They conſider the Horſe and the Mule, to admit any Rider, any burden, without diſcretion or difference, without debatement or conſideration; They never aske whether their rider be noble or baſe, nor whether their load be gold for the treaſure, or roots for the market. And thoſe Expoſitors finde the ſame indifferency in an habituall ſinner, to any kinde of ſinne: whether he ſin for pleaſure, or ſin for profit, or ſin but for company, ſtill he ſins. They conſider the Mule to be engendred of two kinds, two ſpecies, and yet to beget, to produce neither, but to be alwayes barren; And they finde us to be compoſed of a double, a heavenly, and earthly nature, and thereby bound to duties of both kinds, towards God, and towards men, but to be defective and barren in both. They conſider in the Mule, that one

Equus & Mulus.

one of his Parents being more ignoble then the other, he is likeſt the worſt, He hath more of the Aſſe then of the Horſe in him; And they finde in us, that all our actions, and thoughts, taſte more of the ignobler part of earth then of heaven. S. Hierome thinks fierceneſſe and raſhneſſe to be preſented in the Horſe, and ſloth in the Mule. And S. Auguſtine carries theſe two qualities farre; He thinks that in this fierceneſſe of the Horſe, the Gentiles are repreſented, which ran farre from the knowledge of Chriſtianity; And by the lazineſſe of the Mule, the Jews, who came nothing ſo faſt, as they were invited by their former helps, to the imbracing thereof. They have gone farre in theſe alluſions, and applications; and they might have gone as farre farther as it had pleaſed them; They have Sea-roome enough, that will compare a Beaſt, and a Sinner together; and they ſhall finde many times, in the way, the Beaſt the better Man. A

Gregor. Here we may contract it beſt, if we underſtand Pride by the Horſe, and Luſt by the Mule; for, though both theſe, pride and luſt, might have been repreſented in the horſe, which is, (as the Philoſopher notes) Animal, poſt hominem, ſalaciſsimum, The moſt intemperate, and luſtful of all creatures, but man, (ſtill man, for this infamous prerogative, muſt be excepted) and though the Scriptures preſent that ſin, Luſt, by the horſe, (They roſe in the morning like fed horſes, and every man neighed after his neighbours wife) (and therefore S. Hierome delights himſelfe with that curious note, That when a man brings his wife to that triall and conviction of jealouſie, the offering that the man brings is Barley, Horſe-provender in thoſe parts, ſayes S. Hierome) though both ſins, pride and luſt, might be taxed in the horſe, yet pride is proper to him, and luſt to the mule, both becauſe the mule is Carne virgo, but Mente impudicus, which is one high degree of luſt, to have a luſtfull deſire in an impotent body, And then, he is engendred by unnaturall mixture, which is another high degree of the ſame ſin. And theſe two vices we take to be preſented here, as the two principall enemies, the two chiefe corrupters of mankinde; pride to be the principall ſpirituall ſin, and luſt, the principall that works upon the body. To avoid both, conſider we both in both theſe beaſts. B C

Jer. 5. 8. In Hoſ. 3. Numb. 5. 12. Hieron.

Superbia. It is not much controverted in the Schooles, but that the firſt ſin of the Angels was Pride. But becauſe (as we ſaid before) the danger of man is more in ſinking down, then in climbing up, in dejecting, then in raiſing himſelfe, we muſt therefore remember, that it is not pride, to deſire to be better. Angeli quæſiverunt id, ad quod perveniſſent, ſi ſtetiſſent. The Angels ſin was pride; but their pride conſiſted not in aſpiring to the beſt degrees that their nature was capable of: but in this, that they would come to that ſtate, by other meanes then were ordained for it. It could not poſſibly fall within ſo pure, and cleare underſtandings, as the Angels were, to think that they could be God; that God could be multiplied; That they who knew themſelves to be but new made, could think, not only that they were not made, but that they made all things elſe; To think that they were God, is impoſſible, this could not fall into them, though they would be Similes Altiſsimo, Like the moſt High. But this was their pride, and in this they would be like the moſt High, That whereas God ſubſiſted in his Eſſence of himſelfe, for thoſe degrees of perfection, which appertained to them, they would have them of themſelves; They would ſtand in their perfection, without any turning towards God, without any farther aſſiſtance from him; by themſelves, and not by meanes ordained for them. This is the pride that is forbidden man; not that he think well of himſelfe, In genere ſuo, That hee value aright the dignity of his nature, in the Creation thereof according to the Image of God, and the infinite improvement that that nature received, in being aſſumed by the Son of God; This is not pride, but not to acknowledge that all this dignity in nature, and all that it conduces to, that is, grace here, and glory hereafter, is not onely infuſed by God at firſt, but ſuſtained by God ſtill, and that nothing in the beginning, or way, or end, is of our ſelves, this is pride. D E

Aug. ſt.

Man may, and muſt think that God hath given him the Subjicite, and Dominamini, A Majeſticall Character even in his perſon, to ſubdue and governe all the creatures in the world; That he hath given him a nature, already above all other creatures, and a nature capable of a better then his owne is yet; (for, By his precious promiſes we are made partakers of the Divine nature) We are made Semen Dei, The ſeed of God, borne of God; Genus Dei, The off-ſpring of God; Idem Spiritus cum Domino, The ſame Spirit with the Lord; He the ſame fleſh with us, and we the ſame ſpirit with him. In Gods ſervants, to have ſaid to Nebuchadnezzar, Our God is able to deliver us, and he will deliver us; but, if he doe

2 Pet. 1. 4. 1 John 3. 9. Acts 17. 28. 1 Cor. 6. 17. Dan. 3. 17.

A doe not, yet we will not ſerve thy Gods: In the Martyrs of the Primitive Church, to have contemned torments, and tormentors with perſonall ſcornes and affronts: In all calamities and adverſities of this life, to rely upon that aſſurance, I have a better ſubſtance in me then any man can hurt, I have a better inheritance prepared for me, then any man can take from me, I am called to Triumph, and I goe to receive a Crown of Immortality, theſe high contemplations of Kingdomes, and Triumphs, and Crowns, are not pride; To know a better ſtate, and deſire it, is not pride; for pride is onely in taking wrong wayes to it. So that, to think we can come to this by our own ſtrength, without Gods inward working a beliefe, or to think that we can believe out of Plato, where we may find a God, but without a Chriſt, or come to be good men out of Plutarch or Seneca, without a Church and Sacraments, to purſue the truth it ſelfe by any other way then he hath laid open to us, this is pride, and the pride of the Angels.

B Now there is alſo a pride, which is the Horſes pride, converſant upon earthly things; To deſire Riches, and Honour, and Preferment in this world, is not pride; for they have all good uſes in Gods ſervice; but to deſire theſe by corrupt meanes, or to ill ends, to get them by ſupplantation of others, or for oppreſſion of others, this is pride, and a Beſtiall pride. And this proud man is elegantly expreſſed in the Horſe; The horſe rejoyceth in his ſtrength, he goes forth to meet the armed man, he mocks at feare, he turnes upon the ſword, and he ſwallowes the ground. Job 39.19. The River is mine, ſayes Pharaoh, and I have made it for my ſelf: They take all, and they miſtake all; That which is but lent them for uſe, they think theirs; (The River is mine) That which God gave them, they think of their own getting; (I made it) And that which God placed upon them, as his Stewards for the good of others, they appropriate to themſelves; (I have made it for my ſelf) Ezek. 29.3. But when time is, God mounteth on high, and he mocks the horſe and the rider. In that day, I will ſmite every horſe Job 39.21. Zech. 12.4.

C with aſtoniſhment, and his rider with madneſſe. The horſe beleeveth not that it is the ſound of the Trumpet; When the Trumpet ſounds to us in our laſt Bell, (for the laſt Bell that carries us out of this world, and the Trumpet that cals us to the next, is all one voyce to us, for we heare nothing between) the worldly man ſhall not beleeve that it is the ſound of the Trumpet, he ſhall not know it, not take knowledge of it, but paſſe away unſenſible of his own condition. Job 39.27.

So then is Pride well repreſented in the Horſe; and ſo is the other, Luſt, licentiouſneſſe in the Mule. For, beſides that reaſon of aſſimilation, that it deſires, and cannot, and that reaſon, that it preſents unnaturall and promiſcuous luſt, for this reaſon is that vice well repreſented in that Beaſt, becauſe it is ſo apt to beare any burdens. For, certainly, no man is ſo inclinable to ſubmit himſelfe to any burden of labour, of danger, of coſt, of diſhonour, of law, of ſickneſſe, as the licentious man is; He refuſes none, to come to his ends. Neither is there any tree ſo loaded with boughs, any one ſin that hath ſo many branches, ſo many ſpecies as this. Shedding of blood we can limit in murder, and manſlaughter, and a few more; and other ſins in as few names. In this ſin of luſt, the ſexe, the quality, the diſtance, the manner, and a great many other circumſtances, create new names to the ſin, and make it a ſin of another kinde. And as the ſin is a Mule, to beare all theſe loads, ſo the ſinner in this kind is ſo too, and (as we finde an example in the Nephew of a Pope) delights to take as many loads of this ſin upon him, as he could; to vary, and to multiply the kindes of this ſin in one act, He would not ſatisfie his luſt by a fornication, or adultery, or inceſt, (theſe were vulgar) but upon his own ſex; and that not upon an ordinary perſon, but in their account, upon a Prince; And he, a ſpirituall Prince, A Cardinall; And all this, not by ſolicitation, but by force: for thus he compiled his ſins, He raviſhed a Cardinall. This is the ſin, in which men pack up as much ſin as they can, and as E though it were a ſhame to have too little, they belie their own pack, they bragge of ſins in this kinde, which they never did, as S. Auguſtine with a holy and penitent ingenuity confeſſes of himſelfe. Mulus.

This ſin then, (though one great miſchiefe in it be, that for the moſt part, it deſtroyes two together, (the Devill will have his creatures come to his Arke by couples too, two and two together) yet this ſin we are able to commit without a companion, upon our own bodies, yea without bodies; (in the weakneſſe of our bodies our mindes can ſin this ſin) This which the Wiſe-man cals a pit, The mouth of a ſtrange woman is as a deep pit, he with whom the Lord is angry, ſhall fall therein. Prov. 22.14. And therefore he that purſues that ſin, is called to a double ſad conſideration, both that he angers the Lord in committing that ſinne then; And that the Lord was angry with him before for ſome other ſinne, and for a A puniſhment of that former ſin, God ſuffered him to fall into this. And it is truely a fearefull condition, when God puniſhes ſin by ſin; other corrections bring us to a peace with God; He will not be angry for ever, he will not puniſh twice, when hee hath puniſhed a ſin, he hath done: But when he puniſhes ſin by ſinne, wee are not thereby the nearer to a peace or reconciliation by that puniſhment, for ſtill there is a new ſin that continues us in his diſpleaſure. Puniſh me O Lord, with all thy ſcourges, with poverty, with ſickneſſe, with diſhonour, with loſſe of parents, and children, but with that rod of wyre, with that ſcorpion, to puniſh ſin with ſinne, Lord ſcourge me not, for then how ſhall I enter into thy reſt?

And this is the condition of this ſinne; for, He with whom the Lord is angry, ſhall fall in- to it. And when he is fallen, he ſhall not underſtand his ſtate, but thinke himſelfe well;
2 Sam. 12. For Nathan preſents Davids ſinne to him, in a parable of a feaſt, of an entertainment of B a ſtranger: He taſtes no ſowrneſſe, no bitterneſſe in it; not becauſe there is none, but becauſe a carkaſſe, a man already ſlain cannot feele a new wound; A man dead in the habit of a ſinne, hath no ſenſe of it: This ſinne of which S. Auguſtin, who had beene overcome by it, and was afraid that his caſe was a common caſe, ſaith in the perſon of all, Continua pugna, victoria rara; In a defenſive warre, where we are put to a continuall reſiſtance, it is hard comming to a victory; what hope then where there is no reſiſtance, no defence, but a ſpontaneous and voluntary opening our ſelves to all provocations, yea provoking of provocations by high diet, a tempting of tentations by expoſing our ſelves to dangerous
Gen. 19. 10. company, when as the Angels who were ſafe enough in themſelves, yet withdrew themſelves from the uncleanneſſe of the Sodomits. This ſinne will not be overcome but by Iob 31. 1. a league, Iobs league, Pepigi fœdus, I have made a covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould
I think upon a maid? Since I have bound my ſenſes, why ſhould my mind be at liberty to C ſinne? This league ſhould bind both; I have taken a promiſe of mine eyes, that they will not betray me by wanton glaunces, by carying me to dangerous objects, why ſhould not I keepe covenant with them? why ſhould my thoughts be ſcattered upon ſuch tentations? The league muſt be kept on both parts, the mind and the ſenſes; wee muſt not entertain tentations from without, we muſt not create them within. Eloquia Domini caſta, Pſal. 12. 7. The words of the Lord are chaſte words, pure words, and ſo muſt all the talke, and converſation of him, that loves God, be. And then, Caſtificate animas veſtras, you muſt ſee that 1 Pet. 1. 22. you keepe your minds pure and chaſte. If we have not both chaſte minds, and chaſt bodies, we ſhall have neither; And then follows the excommunication: S. Auguſtine ſaith, That according to moſt probability, there were no Mules in the Arke; but undiſputably there are no Mules in the Church, in the triumphant Church, none of our me-1 Cor. 6. 8. taphoricall Mules there: The Apoſtle hath put it beyond a Problem, Bee not deceived, D neither fornicators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate perſons ſhall inherit the Kingdome of hea- ven, there is the fearefull excommunication: And therefore Nolite fieri ſicut, Be not made like the Horſe or the Mule, in pride, or wantonneſſe eſpecially, Quia non Intellectum, becauſe then you loſe your underſtanding, and ſo become abſolutely irrecoverable, and leave God nothing to worke upon: For the underſtanding of man is the field which God ſowes, and the tree in which he engraffes faith it ſelfe; and therefore take heed of ſuch a deſcent, as induces the loſſe of the underſtanding, and that is the caſe here, (and our next conſideration) Non Intellectus, They have no underſtanding.

Intellectus. This faculty of the underſtanding in man is not alwayes well underſtood by men.
The whole Pſalme is a Pſalme to rectifie the underſtanding; It is in the title thereof, ver. 8. Davids Inſtruction: And that office God undertakes in the verſe before our Text, I will inſtruct thee, which is in ſome Latin Copies, Faciam te intelligere, I will make thee under- E
ſtand, and in others, (the vulgat) Intellectum tibi dabo, I will give thee underſtanding; Now though this Inſtruction, and this Underſtanding, which is intended in the Title, and ſpecified in the former verſe, bee not the ſame Underſtanding as this in our Text, (for Ioh. 1. 9. this is but of that naturall faculty of man, wherewith God enlightneth every man that com- meth into the world, till hee make himſelfe like the horſe or the mule) the other is Gods ſu-peredification upon this, thoſe other ſuper-naturall Graces, which God produces out of the underſtanding, or infuſes into the underſtanding; yet this Underſtanding in our Text, though it be but the naturall faculty, is a conſiderable thing, and hath, in part, the nature of materials for God to worke upon. That Inſtruction which is the ſubject of the whole

Pſalme,

A Pſalme, is that ſaving Doctrine, That there is no bleſſedneſſe but in the remiſsion of ſinnes. That David eſtabliſhes for his foundation in the firſt verſe, and would ſay nothing till he had ſaid that. But then, though this remiſſion of ſinnes, (which onely conſtitutes Bleſſedneſſe) proceed meerely from the goodneſſe of God, yet that goodneſſe of God, as it excites primarily, ſo it works ſtill upon that act of man, penitent confeſſion, Notum feci, I acknowledged my ſinne, and Dixi confitebor, I prepared my ſelfe to confeſſe my ſinne, and thou forgaveſt all. ver. 5.

This then S. Hierome delivers to be the Inſtruction of the Pſalme, Hominem, non propriis meritis, ſed Dei gratia, poſſe ſalvari, ſi confiteatur admiſſa; That man of himſelfe is irrecoverable, But yet there is a way opened to ſalvation in Chriſt Jeſus: But this way is onely open to them, who enter by Confeſſion. And though S. Hierome, and S. Auguſtin differ often in the expoſition of the Pſalmes, yet here they ſpeake almoſt the ſame B words. The Inſtruction of this Pſalme is, Intelligentia, qua intelligitur, non meritis operum, ſed gratia Dei hominem liberari, confitentem ſua peccata, That no man is ſaved by his owne merits, That any man may bee ſaved by the mercy of God in the merits of Chriſt, That no man attaines this mercy, but by confeſſion of his ſinnes: And that that rule, In ore duorum aut trium, may have the largeſt fulneſſe, adde wee a third witneſſe, Intellectus eſt, This is the Inſtruction that David promiſes, Nemo ante fidem, Let no man preſume of merits, before faith; But in all this they all three agree, Every man muſt know, that hee may bee ſaved, And that by his owne merits hee cannot, And laſtly, that the merits of Chriſt are applied to no man, that doth nothing for himſelfe. Quid eſt Intellectus? ſaith he againe, What is this underſtanding? It is, ſaith he, no more but this, Vt non jactes opera ante fidem, Never to take confidence in works, otherwiſe then as they are rooted in faith: For (as hee enlarges this Meditation) if thou ſhouldſt ſee a man pull at an Oare, C till his eye-ſtrings, and ſinews, and muſcles broke, and thou ſhouldſt aske him, whither he rowed; If thou ſhouldſt ſee a man runne himſelfe out of breath, and ſhouldſt aske him whither hee ranne; If thou ſhouldſt ſee him dig till his backe broke, and ſhouldſt aske him, what he ſought, And any of theſe ſhould anſwer thee, they could not tell, wouldſt not thou thinke them mad? So are all Diſciplines, all Mortifications, all whippings, all ſtarvings, all works of Piety, and of Charity madneſſe, if they have any other root then faith, any other title or dignity, then effects and fruits of a preceding reconciliation to God. Multi pagani, ſaith he, There are many Infidels that refuſe to bee made Chriſtians, becauſe they are ſo good already; Sibi ſufficiunt de ſua bona vita; They are the worſe for being ſo good, and they thinke they need no faith, but are rich enough in their morall honeſty. And there are Chriſtians, that are the worſe for thinking and beleeving that it is enough to Beleeve. It is not faith to beleeve in groſſe, that I ſhall be ſaD ved, but I muſt beleeve, that I ſhall be ſaved by him that died for me. If I conſider that, I cannot chuſe but love him too; And if I love him, I ſhall doe his will; Ama & operaberis, whomſoever thou loveſt, thou wilt doe what thou canſt to pleaſe him. Da mihi vacantem amorem; I would bee glad to ſee an idle love, that that man, that loved any thing in this world, ſhould not labour to compaſſe that that he loved: But purga amorem, ſaith hee, I doe not forbid thee loving, (it is a noble affection) but purge and purifie thy love; Aquam fluentem in cloacam converte in hortum; Turne that water which hath ſerved thy ſtables, and ſewers before, into thy gardens: Turne thoſe teares which thou haſt ſpent upon thy love, or thy loſſes, upon thy ſinnes, and the diſpleaſure of thy God, and Quales impetus habebas ad mundum, habebis ad Creatorem mundi, Thoſe paſſions which tranſported thee upon the creature, will eſtabliſh thee upon the Creator.

The Inſtruction then of the whole Pſalme, is peace with God, in the merits of Chriſt, E declared in a holy life; which being the ſumme of all our Chriſtian profeſſion, is farre beyond this Vnderſtanding in our Text, (They have no underſtanding) but yet upon this Underſtanding God raiſes that great building, and therefore wee take this faculty, The Vnderſtanding, into a more particular conſideration. Here is the danger, He that at ripe yeares hath no underſtanding, hath no grace, A little underſtanding may have much grace; but he that hath none of the former, can have none of this. God therefore brings us to the conſideration, not of the greateſt, but of the firſt thing; not of his ſuperedifications, but of his foundations, our underſtanding, our reaſon. For, though Animalis homo, The naturall man perceiveth not the things that be of the Spirit of God, yet let him bee what man he will, Naturall or Supernaturall, hee muſt bee a man, that muſt probare ſpiritum, 1 Cor. 2. 14.

prove and diſcerne the ſpirit; let him have as much more as you will, it is requiſite hee have ſo much reaſon, and underſtanding, as to perceive the maine points of Religion; not that he muſt neceſſarily have a naturall explicite reaſon for every Article of faith, but it were fit he had reaſon to prove, that thoſe Articles need not reaſon to prove them. If I beleeve upon the Authority of my Teacher, or of the Church, or of the Scripture, very expedient it were to have reaſon to prove to my ſelfe that theſe Authorities are certaine, and irrefragable. And therefore, Cæteris animalibus, ſe ignorare, natura eſt, homini vitium, If a Horſe or a Mule underſtand not it ſelfe, it is never the worſe Horſe nor Mule, for it is borne with that ignorance; But if man, having opportunities, both in reſpect of his parts and calling, to be better inſtructed, either by a negligent and lazy and implicite relying upon the opinion of others, doe but lay himſelfe downe as a leafe upon the water, to be carried along with the tide, or by a wilfull drowſineſſe, and ſecurity in his ſins, have given over the debatement, the diſcuſſing, the underſtanding of the maine of his beliefe, and of his life, if either he keepe not his underſtanding awake, or over-watch it, if he doe nothing with it, or employ it too buſily, too fervently, too eagerly upon the world, I would it were true of them, Facti ſicut, you are like the Horſe, and the Mule; but Vtinam eſſetis, I would you were ſo well, as the Horſe, and the Mule, who, though they have no underſtanding, have no forfeiture, no loſſe, no abuſe of underſtanding to anſwer for.

Superbus. First then the Horſe, The proud man, hath no underſtanding; He hath forgot his letters, his Alphabet; how he was ſpelled and put together, and made of body and ſoule. You may as well call him an Anatomiſt, that knowes how to pare a naile, or cut a corne, or him a Surgeon, that knowes how to cut, and curle haire, as allow him underſtanding, that knowes how to gather riches, or how to buy an Office, or how to hurt, and oppreſſe others, when he hath thoſe meanes. That abſurdity, that height of ſtrange ignorance, that the Prophet obſerves in an Idolatrous Image-maker, is in this proud man; He burnes halfe in the fire, and the reſidue he makes a god. He hath ſeene as great eſtates as his, burne to aſhes, as great perſons as himſelfe ruined and deſtroyed, burne out, and vaniſh into ſparks, and ſtinking ſmoake; He hath ſeene halfe his owne time burnt out and waſted, and yet hee dreames of an eternity in himſelfe; He ſayes, I am, and none elſe; hee will not ſay ſo to me in expreſſe words, but does hee not ſay ſo to the whole world, in his manifeſt actions?

Eſay 44. 16.

Mulus. The Horſe then, The proud man, hath no underſtanding, and the Mule, the licentious man, as little. The Ancients had a purpoſe to expreſſe that, when they placed by their Goddeſſe of Licentiouſneſſe, Venus, A Tortoyſe, A Creature that had no heart; capable of no underſtanding. And it is better expreſſed in thoſe licentious perſons, who purſued Lots gueſts. Their blindneſſe brought them to an impoſſibility of finding the doore, (They were weary in ſeeking the doore) And if they had found it, they had found it ſhut. A man that hath wallowed long in that ſin, when he ſeekes a doore to repentance, he will quickly be weary, for there lie hard conditions upon him; and he is in danger of finding the doore ſo ſhut, as his underſtanding (and that is all his key) cannot open; Hee will make ſhift for reaſons, why he ſhould continue in that ſin, and he will call it ill nature, or falſhood, or breach of promiſe, and inconſtancy, to depart from the Converſation that nouriſhes that ſin. The doore will be ſhut, and his Reaſon cannot, nay his Reaſon would not open it, but rather plead in the ſins behalfe.

Gen. 19.

Thus far our firſt reaſon hath carried us, Doe it not, leaſt you looſe your underſtanding, The field of that bleſſed ſeed, The tree of that fruitfull graft, The materials for that glorious building, Faith; For, the underſtanding is the receptacle of Faith: But doe it not, the rather, becauſe if ye do it, God will be brought to a neceſſity, In chamo & fræno maxillas conſtringere, to hold in your mouths with bit and bridle, to come to hard uſage, when as he would faine have you reduced by faire and gentle meanes. But to this way God is often brought; and, by this way of affliction, the cure is ſometimes wrought upon us. S. Auguſtine propoſes to himſelfe a wonder, why the firſt woman was called at firſt, and in her beſt ſtate, but Iſha, Virago, which was a name of diminution, as ſhe was taken from the man, (for Iſha is but a ſhee-man) And then in her worſe ſtate, when ſhe had ſinned, ſhe was called Eva, Mater viventium, The Mother of all living; ſhe had a better name in her worſt eſtate. But this was not in reſpect of her ſin, ſayes that Father, but in reſpect of her puniſhment. Now that ſhe was become mortall by a ſentence of death pronounced

Gen. 2. 23. 3. 20.

A pronounced upon her, and knew that ſhe muſt dye, and reſolve to duſt, now, ſayes he, there was no danger in her, of growing proud by any glorious title; affliction had tamed her, and rectified her now; and to that purpoſe ſometimes does God bit and bridle us with afflictions, that our corrupt affections might not tranſport us. Wee finde that Abſolom ſent for Ioab; The Kings Son for the Kings ſervant; There was coldneſſe, ſome drineſſe betweene Abſolom, and his Father, Abſolom was under a cloud at Court, and ſo Ioab neglected him, he would not come; Abſolom ſent againe, and againe Ioab refuſed; But then Abſolom ſent his ſervants to burne Ioabs Corne fields, and then Ioab came apace. Affliction and calamity are the bit and the bridle, that God puts into our mouth ſometimes to turne us to him. Behold, we put bits into the horſes mouthes, that they ſhould obey us, and we turne all the body about. And to this belongs that, A whip for the Horſe, a bridle for the Aſſe, and a rod for the fooles back; When we are become fooles, made like the Horſe and Mule, that we have no underſtanding, then God bits and bridles us, he whips and ſcourges us, ſometimes leſt our deſires ſhould miſlead us a wrong way, ſometimes, if they have, to turne us into the right way againe; But here in our text, it is, Ne approximent te, Their mouths muſt be held with bit and bridle, leſt they come neere unto thee.

2 Sam. 14.

Iam. 3. 3.

Prov. 26 3.

B

When God, by their incorrigibility, have given over all care of them, yet hee takes care of us, of his Servants, of his Church, and he bits and bridles his and our enemies, ſo, as that they ſhall not come neare us, they ſhall not hurt us. So God ſaid to Senacherib, Becauſe thou rageſt againſt me, (God was far enough out of Senacheribs reach, but God accounts his Jeruſalem as Heaven, and his Hezekias as himſelfe) Becauſe thy rage is againſt me, I will put my hooke into thy noſe, and my bridle in thy lips, and will turne thee back, by the way by which thou cameſt. When man is become as the Horſe, proud of his ſtrength, In chamo, et fræno, God ſhall bit him, and bridle him ſo, as that he ſhall be able to doe no harme; and certainely, the godly have not a greater joy, when they are able to do good to others, then the wicked have ſorrow, when having power in their hands, yet they are not able to execute their miſchievous purpoſes upon them that they hate. Satan was glad of any Commiſſion upon Iob, becauſe God made a hedge about him, and about his houſe, Ne approximaret, That Satan could not come neare him; He was glad God gave him power, to annoy him any way; but ſorry that he exempted his perſon, in that firſt Commiſſion, (Onely upon himſelfe put not forth thy hand) He was glad that in a ſecond Commiſſion, God did lay open his perſon to his power, but ſorry that he excepted his life, (Behold he is in thy hand, but ſave his life.) For, till the wicked come to an utter deſtruction of their enemies, they thinke it no approximation, They are never come neare enough to them. And In chamo, & fræno, therfore God bits & bridles them, that they ſhal not come neare, not ſo neare, to deſtroy; and certainely, Gods children have not ſo much ſorrow for that which the wicked doe inflict upon them, as the wicked have for that which they cannot inflict upon them; The wicked are more tormented that they can do no more, then the godly are, that they have done ſo much. And this is a comfortable, (and truly, the moſt literall ſenſe of this Ne approximent) Their mouths muſt be held, They muſt, though none can hold them but God, yet God muſt, God himſelfe for his owne glory, and the preſervation of his Church, is reduced to a neceſſity, he muſt, he will hold them in with bit and bridle, leſt they come neare us. But there is a ſadder, and a heavier ſenſe ariſing out of theſe words, as S. Hierom accepts and purſues the words, with which we ſhall end all that belongs to them.

Ne approximent.

2 King. 19. 28.

C

Iob 2. 6.

D

S. Hierom reads theſe words ſo, as that when God hath ſaid, Nolite fieri, Be not as the Horſe or Mule, that have no underſtanding, God hath done, and ſayes no more; and that in the reſt of the words, In chamo & fræno maxillas eorum conſtringe, (hold in their mouthes with bit and bridle, who come not neare thee) the Church ſpeakes to God; and ſo, this inhibition, Ne approximent, That they come not neare thee, may very well be, That they come not neare God, That God bits and bridles them ſo, afflicts and multiplies afflictions ſo, that even thoſe afflictions drive them farther from God, and ſeale their condemnation in their owne blood. Gods Spirit ſhall fanne them, ſift them; That might do them good; purifie them, cleanſe them; No, it ſhall do them no good; for, (as it follows) God ſhall ſift them with a ſieve of vanity; In vaine, to no purpoſe, without any amendment; And there ſhall be, Fræum erroris, a bridle in their jawes cauſing them to erre; Their impatient miſ-interpretation of Gods corrections, ſhall turne them upon a wrong way on the left hand, and depart them farther and farther from God. And then, He that being often reproved,

E

Eſay 30. 28.

Prov. 29. 1.

reproved, hardneth his neck, ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed, and that without remedy; ſuddenly, and irrecoverably; ſuddenly, no time given him to deprecate his deſtruction, no reprieve; Irrecoverably, if he had never ſo much time; I will not heare them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble. Shall any be able to cry unto God, and not be heard? Yes, to cry, and to cry for their trouble; for all this may be done, and yet no true prayer made, nor right foundation laid; when onely impatience upon affliction extorts, and preſſes, and vents a cry, God will not heare them. No, nor when they are thus diſabled to pray for themſelves, will God heare any other to pray for them. Thrice doth God chide the Prophet Ieremy from that charitable diſpoſition of praying for that people. Liſt not up a cry nor prayer for them; Not a Cry, by way of remembring me of their preſſures and afflictions, as though that ſhould move me; Not a Prayer, by remembring me of my Covenant of mercy towards them, as though that ſhould binde me. At other times, God ſought for a man among them, that ſhould make up the hedge, and ſtand in the gap before him for the land, that he might not deſtroy it, but he found none. Here Ieremy offers himſelfe in the gap, and God will not receive him to that Mediatorſhip, to that Interceſſion for that people. When Moſes importuned God for the people, God tells him, for thy ſelfe thou ſhalt be no loſer; whatſoever become of this people; (I will make thee a great Nation) But yet, ſayes God, (Let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot againſt this people, that I may conſume them.) O how contagious and peſtilent are the ſinnes of man, that can thus (if we may ſo ſpeake) infect God himſelfe! How violent, how impetuous, how tempeſtuous are the ſinnes of man, that can thus, (if we may ſo ſpeake) tranſport God himſelfe, and carry him beyond himſelfe! for himſelfe is mercy, and there is no roome for our own prayers, no roome for the prayers of others to open any doore, any pore of mercy to flow out, or to breath out upon us.

Jere. 11. 14.

Ibid. & 7. 16. & 14. 11.

Ezek. 22. 30.

Exod. 32. 10.

Truly, Beloved, it is hard to conceive, how any height of ſin in man ſhould worke thus upon God, as to throw him away, without any purpoſe of re-aſſuming him againe, or any poſſibility of returning to him againe. But to impute that diſtemper to God, that God ſhould thus peremptorily hate Man, thus irreparably deſtroy Man, before he conſidered that Man, as a ſinner, and as a manifold ſinner, and as an obdurate ſinner, nay before he conſidered him, as a Man, as a Creature, that firſt he ſhould mean to damne him, if he had him, and then mean to make him, that he might damne him; this is to impute to God, a ſowrer and worſe affected nature, then falls into any man. Doth any man deſire that his enemy had a ſonne, that he might kill him? Doth any man beget a ſonne therefore, that he might diſ-inherit him? Doth God hate any man therefore, becauſe he will hate him? Deliver me, O Lord, from my ſins, pardon them, and then returne to thy firſt purpoſes upon me; for I am ſure they were good, till I was ill; and my illneſſe came not from thee; but may be ſo multiplied by my ſelfe, as that thou mayeſt bit me and bridle me ſo, as that I ſhall not come near thee, in any of thoſe acceſſes which thou haſt opened in thy Church: Prayer, Preaching, Sacraments, Abſolution, all ſhall be unavailable upon me, ineffectuall to me. And therefore, as God would have us conſerve the dignity of our nature in his Image, and not deſcend to the qualities of theſe Beaſts, Horſe and Mule, ſpecified by the Holy Ghoſt, to repreſent to us thoſe two ſins, which are the wombes and mothers of very many others, Pride and Luſt, (the greateſt ſpirituall, and the greateſt bodily ſin) becauſe thereby we loſe all underſtanding, which is the matter upon which Grace works; ſo would he have us doe it for this alſo, that he might not be put to a neceſſity of bitting and bridling us, of hard uſage towards us, which may turne us as well to Obduration as Contrition, and ſo come to loſe our faith at laſt, as we had done our reaſon and underſtanding before.

A B C D E

18 Mar. 1627. This ſermon contains very ſtriking paſſages, and ſhows the writer to have been a man of great abilety, though it exhibits ſome obſcu-

SERM.

SERM. LXIII.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 32. 10, 11.

Many ſorrows ſhall be to the wicked; But he that truſteth in the Lord, Mercy ſhall compaſſe him about.

Be glad in the Lord, and rejoyce yee righteous; And ſhout for joy all yee that are upright in heart.

THe two Elements, of which Heaven is propoſed to us to be compoſed, are Joy and Glory. That which is oppoſed to theſe, is Sorrow and Contempt: Of the ſenſe of contempt and inglorioufneſſe, Men are not alike capable in this world; but of the ſenſe of ſorrow, we are ſomewhat more equall. A man muſt have had ſome poſſeſſion, or at leaſt ſome hopes of glory and greatneſſe, that apprehends contempt or inglorioufneſſe very paſſionately. And beſides, in the loweſt and moſt abject contempt a man may relieve himſelfe by conveniences of a plentifull Fortune at home, how much ſoever he be undervalued and deſpiſed abroad. But when it comes to a ſorrow of heart, which dwells not imaginarily in the opinion of others, as contempt doth, but really in mine owne boſome, it is a heavy colluctation. Therefore doth the Holy Ghoſt ſo often, ſo very often, blow that coale, and threaten that inſupportable, that inextinguiſhable fire, ſorrow, ſorrow of heart, ſorrow of ſoule; Many ſorrows ſhall be to the wicked. But the Holy Ghoſt is the Spirit of Conſolation; He is a Dove that haſts to a better ayre, to a whiter houſe, to the Arke of Peace, the ſtation of the Righteous; Joy in the mercy of God; for, He that truſteth in the Lord, mercy ſhall compaſſe him about; Be glad in the Lord, and rejoyce yee Righteous, and ſhout for joy all yee that are upright in heart.

Our parts are, the Perſons, and their Portions; Who they Be, and what they Have. Diviſio. The Perſons are all the Inhabitants of this world; for all are wicked, or righteous; And the Portion is all that the ſoule receives here, or hereafter; for all is joy or ſorrow; Many ſorrows ſhall be to the wicked, but he &c.

Firſt then, here are ſorrows; A paſſion which we cannot expreſſe, and from the underſtanding whereof, in this ſenſe, God bleſſe us all: A ſorrow, that is nothing but ſorrow; a ſorrow that determines not in joy at laſt. And here are Dolores multi, his ſorrows are multiplied, Many ſorrows; And as the word Rabbim doth as properly import, and might be as well ſo tranſlated, here are Dolores magni, Great ſorrows; Great in their owne waight, great in themſelves, and great alſo in the apprehenſion, and tenderneſſe, and impatience of the ſufferer, great to him; And then all theſe heavy circumſtances, as the dregs and lees of this cup of malediction, meet in the bottome, in the center of all; That theſe ſorrowes are determinable by no time; for in the Originall, there is neither that which our firſt Tranſlation inſerted, (Shall come) Sorrowes ſhall come to the wicked, leſt the wicked might ſay, Let it goe as it came, if I know how it came, what occaſioned the ſorrow, I know how to overcome it; nor is there that which our later Tranſlation added, (Shall be) Sorrowes ſhall be to the wicked; for though that imply a Continuance, when it comes, yet the wicked might ſay, It is not come yet, and why ſhould I anticipate ſorrow, or execute my ſelfe before the Executioner be ſent? But it is without all limitation of time, and ſo includes all parts of time; Eſt, fuit, & erit, The wicked are not, never were, or ſhall be without ſorrowes, many ſorrows, great ſorrows, everlaſting ſorrows. This is the Portion in our firſt part; and then the Perſon, for whom this cup is thus filled there, is The wicked; Which denotes a Plurality, and a Singularity too; For it is not ſaid, The wanton, The ambitious, The covetous, The man that is a little leavened, or ſowred, or diſcoloured with ſome degrees of ſome of theſe; but it is The wicked; a man whoſe whoſe whole complexion, and ſtructure ſeemes made up of wickedneſſe; And ſo it is Super impium, Upon the wicked, Emphatically, The wicked; And then, Super impium, Upon the wicked, in the ſingular; that is, upon every ſuch wicked perſon. The ſorrow is not leſſened by being divided amongſt many; The wicked is not eaſed by having companions in his torments. And this is the Portion, and theſe be the Perſons of the firſt kinde; which will determine the firſt Part, Many ſorrowes ſhall be to the wicked. A

And then in the ſecond, to give all this the full waight, and to make the ſorrow the more diſcernible, and the more terrible, God puts into the other balance, The joy of the righteous. In which, that all may be in oppoſition to the other, we have alſo the Perſon, Him that truſteth in the Lord; Where we have, as in the former part, a plurality intimated, and a ſingularity too. For it is not ſaid, He that truſteth not in Man, He that truſteth not in Princes, He that truſteth not in this or that miſerable Comforter in the world, but He that truſteth in the Lord; Whoſe preſent refuge, be the caſe what it will, or can be, is the Lord; Him, Emphatically Him, mercies ſhall compaſſe. And then, Ille, He, every ſuch man, is infallibly intereſſed in this portion, in this true cauſe of joy, which is not, that he ſhall have no affliction, but that he ſhall have Mercy in his afflictions, patience and eaſe all the way, and an end and joy at laſt. And then, this mercy ſhall Compaſſe him; It ſhall not ſuffer his confidence to break out into a preſumption in God, nor any diffidence, or diſtruſt in God, to break in upon him; But he ſhall ſee, that only to him, who Truſts in the Lord, to him who is Righteous, to him who is Vpright in heart, (with which three Characters the Holy Ghoſt ſpecifies the perſon, in this ſecond Part of our Text) belong thoſe three great priviledges, thoſe glorious beames of joy, which flow out here; firſt, Lætari, To be glad, that is, to conceive an inward joy; And then, Exultari, To rejoyce, that is, to teſtifie that inward joy, by outward demonſtrations; And laſtly, Iubilare, To be full of joy, which our laſt Tranſlation hath expreſt well, in that word, To ſhout for joy, that is, to extend our joy to others, to glorifie God by drawing in of others, and to call upon them, to call upon God: Many ſorrowes ſhall be to the wicked, but, &c. B C

1. Part. Sorrow.

Firſt then, they ſhall have ſorrow, and cauſe of ſorrow. For when we conceive a ſorrow in the minde, without any reall, and externall cauſe, without paine, or ſhame, or loſſe, this is but a melancholy, but an abundance of a diſtempered humour, but a naturall thing, to which ſome in their conſtitutions are borne, and to be conſidered but ſo: But when God laies his hand, and his croſſes upon us, the ſorrow of the wicked, conceived upon that impreſſion, is the ſorrow. For this Word, which we Tranſlate Sorrowes here, is according to the Septuagint, Scourges, and Whips; God ſhall ſcourge them, and that ſhall only work to a ſorrow; So farre, and no farther. As a ſtartling horſe, they ſhall avoid a ſhadow, and fall into a ditch; They ſhall ſorrow, and murmure at their afflictions in this life, and fall the ſooner for that into the Eternal. Amongſt the Romans, condemned perſons were firſt whipt; but that excuſed them not; when they were whipt, they were executed too. The wicked are ſcourged by God in this life; and then their temporall afflictions ſhall meet, and joyne with the everlaſting, they have begun already here, that which they ſhall never end there. Deeis qui voluntatem Dei facere nolunt, fit voluntas Dei; It is Panis quotidianus, A loafe of that bread which is to be diſtributed every day; A ſaying of S. Auguſtine, worthy to be repeated in every Sermon, That upon them, who will not doe the will of God, the will of God is done; And God executes his righteous ſentence upon them, and he executes his juſtice upon others alſo by giving them inſtructions from the impatience and obduration of theſe. Fata fugiendo in fata ruant; They chide, and they wrangle, they wraſtle, and they exclaime at their miſeries in an intemperate ſorrow, and this intemperate ſorrow is the heavieſt part of the judgement of God upon them; they are too ſenſible of their afflictions, that is, too tender, too impatient; and yet altogether unſenſible, without all ſenſe of Gods purpoſe in thoſe afflictions. In hell it ſelf, they know that they are in hell; And yet in this world, there are Dolores inferni, Sorrowes that have begun hell here, and they that are under them, are ſtupified, and deveſted of all ſenſe of them. That ſenſe that is bodily, and carnall, they abound in; They feele them impatiently; but of all ſpirituall ſenſe they are abſolutely deſtitute; They underſtand not them, nor Gods purpoſe in them at all; yet they are Many, and Great, and Eternall. For by all theſe heavy talents doth the Holy Ghoſt waigh them in theſe words. D E

Auguſt.

Many.

They are Many. Now the pride of the wicked is to conceale their ſorrowes, that God might receive no glory by the diſcovery of them. And therefore if we ſhould goe about

to

A to number their ſorrowes, they would have their victory ſtill, and ſtill ſay to themſelves, yet for all his cunning he hath miſt; they would ever have ſome boſome-ſorrowes, which we could not light upon. Yet we ſhall not eaſily miſſe, nor leave out any, if we remember thoſe men, that even this falſe and imaginary joy, which they take in concealing their ſorrow and affliction, is a new affliction, a new cauſe of ſorrow. We ſhall make up the number apace, if we remember theſe men, that all their new ſins, and all their new ſhifts, to put away their ſorrowes, are ſorrowfull things, and miſerable comforters; if their conſcience doe preſent all their ſins, the number growes great; And if their own conſcience have forgotten them, if God forget nothing that they have thought, or ſaid, or done, in all their lives, are not their occaſions of ſorrow the more for their forgetting, the more for Gods remembring? Iudgements are prepared for the ſcorners, ſayes Solomon, God foreſaw their wickednеſſe from before all times, and even then ſet himſelfe on work, To pre- Prov. 19. 29.
B pare iudgements for them; And as they are Prepared before, ſo affliction followeth ſinners, 13. 21.
ſayes the ſame Wiſe King; It follows them, and it knowes how to overtake them; eyther by the ſword of the Magiſtrate, or by that which is nearer them, Diſeaſes in their owne bodies, accelerated and complicated by their ſins. And then, as affliction is Prepared, and Follows, and Overtakes, ſo ſayes that wiſe King ſtill, There ſhall be no end of 24. 20.
plagues to the evill man; We know the beginning of their plagues; they are Prepared in Gods Decree, as ſoone as God ſaw their ſins; we know their continuance, they ſhall Follow, and they ſhall Overtake; Their end we doe not know, we cannot know, for they have none. Thus they are Many.

And if we conſider farther, the manifold Topiques, and places, from which the ſorrowes of the wicked ariſe, That every inch of their ground is overgrown with that venomous weed, that every place, and every part of time, and every perſon buddes out a parti-
C cular occaſion of ſorrow to him, that he can come into no chamber, but he remembers, In ſuch a place as this, I ſinned thus, That he cannot heare a Clock ſtrike, but he remembers, At this hour I ſinned thus, That he cannot converſe with few perſons, but he remembers, With ſuch a perſon I ſinned thus, And if he dare goe no farther then to himſelfe, he can look ſcarcely upon any limb of his body, but in that he ſees ſome infirmity, or ſome deformity, that he imputes to ſome ſin, and muſt ſay, By this ſin, this is thus: When he can open the Bible in no place, but if he meet a judgement, he muſt ſay, Vindicta mihi, This vengeance belongs to me; and if he meet a mercy, he muſt ſay, Quid mihi? What have I to doe to take this mercy into my mouth? In this deluge of occaſions of ſorrow, I muſt not ſay with God to Abraham, Look up to heaven, and number the Starres, (for this man cannot look up to heaven) but I muſt ſay, Continue thy dejected look, and look downe to the earth, thy earth, and number the graines of duſt there, and the ſorrowes of D the wicked are more then they. Many are the ſorrowes; And as the word as naturally denotes, Great; Great ſorrowes are upon the wicked.

That Pill will choak one man, which will ſlide down with another eaſily, and work Great.
well. That ſorrow, that affliction would ſtrangle the wicked, which would purge, and recover the godly. The coare of Adams apple is ſtill in their throat, which the blood of the Meſſias hath waſht away in the righteous; Adams diſobedience works in them ſtill, and therefore Gods Phyſick, the affliction, cannot work. So they are great to them, as Cains puniſhment was to him, greater then he could beare, becauſe he could not eaſe himſelfe upon the conſideration of Gods purpoſe, in laying that puniſhment upon him. But it is not onely their indiſpoſition, and impatience, that makes their ſorrowes and afflictions great; They are truly ſo in themſelves; as the Holy Ghoſt expreſſes it, Is not Iob 31. 3.
deſtruction to the wicked, and ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity? A puniſhment, E which we cannot tell how to meaſure, how to waigh, how to call, A ſtrange puniſhment; Greater then former examples have preſented. There the greatneſſe is expreſt in the Word; And in Eſay it is expreſt in the action; When the ſcourge ſhall run over you, and Eſay 28. 18.
paſſe thorow you, Eritis in conculcationem, You ſhall be trodden to duſt; Which is, as the Prophet cals it there, Flagellum inundans, An affliction that overflowes, and ſurrounds all, as a deluge, a flood, that ſhall waſh away from thee, even the water of thy Baptiſme, and all the power of that, And waſh away from thee the blood of thy Saviour, and all his offers of grace to worthy receivers; A flood that ſhall carry away the Ark it ſelfe out of thy ſight, and leave thee no apprehenſion of reparation by Gods inſtitution in his Church; A flood that ſhall diſſolve, and waſh thee thy ſelfe into water; Thy ſorrowes ſhall ſcatter

thee

thee into drops, into teares, upon a carnall ſenſe of thy torment, And into drops, into incoherent doubts, and perplexities, and ſcruples, in underſtanding, and conſcience, and into deſperation at laſt. And this is the Greatneſſe: Solutis doloribus inferni, In another ſenſe then David ſpeaks that of Chriſt; There it is, that the ſorrowes of hell were looſed, that is, were ſlacked, diſſolved by him: But here it is that the ſorrowes of hell are looſed, that is, let looſe upon thee; and when thou ſhalt heare Chriſt ſay from the Croſſe, Behold and ſee, if ever there were any ſorrow like my ſorrow, thou ſhalt finde thy ſorrow like his in the Greatneſſe, and nothing like his in the Goodneſſe: Chriſt bore that ſorrow, that every man might rejoyce, and thou wouldeſt be the more ſorry, if every man had not as much cauſe of deſperate ſorrow, as thou haſt. A

Many, and great are the ſorowes of the wicked, and then eternall too, which is more then intimated, in that the Originall hath neither of thoſe particles of ſupplement, which are in our Tranſlations, no ſuch (ſhall come) no ſuch (ſhall be) nor no (ſhall) at all; but onely, Many ſorrowes to the wicked, Many and great now, more and greater hereafter, All for ever, if they amend not. B

Eternall. It is not, They have had ſorrowes, but they are overblown; nor that they have them, but patience ſhall outweare them; nor that they ſhall have them, but they have a breathing time to gather ſtrength before hand; But as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever ſhall be, Sorrowes upon them, and upon them for ever. Whatſoever any man conceives for eaſe in this caſe, it is a falſe conception; Eſay 33.11. You ſhall conceive chaffe, and bring forth ſtubble. And this ſtubble is your vaine hope of a determination of this ſorrow; But the wicked ſhall not be able to lodge ſuch a hope, though this hope, if they could apprehend it, would be but an aggravating of their ſorrowes in the end. It is eternall, no determination of time afforded to it. For, Ibid. ver. 14. They ſhall bee as the burning of lime, and as thornes cut up ſhall they bee burnt in the fire. Who amongſt us ſhall dwell with the devouring fire? Who amongſt us ſhall dwell with that everlaſting burning? It is a devouring fire, and yet it is an everlaſting burning. The Prophet asks, Who can dwell there? In that intenſeneſſe who can Deut. 32.22. laſt? They that muſt, and that is, All the wicked. Fire is kindled in my wrath, ſaith God; Yet may not teares quench it? Teares might, if they could be had; But It ſhall burne to the bottome of hell, ſaith God there. And Dives that could not procure a drop of water to coole his tongue there, can much leſſe procure a repentant teare in that place: There, Revel. 18.8. as S. Iohn ſpeakes, Plagues ſhall come in one day; Death, and Sorrow, and Famine. But it is in a long day; Short for the ſuddenneſſe of comming, for that is come already, which for any thing we know, may come this minute, before we be at an end of this point, or at a period of this ſentence: So it is ſudden in comming, but long for the enduring. For it is Ibid. that day, when They ſhall be burnt with fire, for ſtrong is the Lord God, that will condemne them. That is argument enough of the vehemence of that fire, that the Lord God, who is called the ſtrong God, makes it a Maſter-piece of his ſtrength, to make that fire. C D

Art thou able to diſpute out this Fire, and to prove that there can be no reall, no materiall fire in Hell, after the diſſolution of all materiall things created? If thou be not able to argue away the immortality of thine owne ſoule, but that that ſoule muſt laſt, nor to argue away the eternity of God himſelfe, but that that muſt laſt, thou haſt but little eaſe, in making ſhift to give a figurative interpretation to that fire, and to ſay, It may be a torment, but it cannot be a fire, ſince it muſt be an everlaſting torment; nor to give a figurative ſignification to the Worme, and to ſay, It may bee a paine, a remorſe, but it can bee no worme after the generall diſſolution, ſince that Conſcience, in which that remorſe, and anguiſh ſhall ever live, muſt live ever: If there bee a figure in the names, and words, of Fire and Wormes, there is an indiſputable reality in the ſorrow, in the torment, and in the manifoldneſſe, and in the weightineſſe, and in the everlaſtingneſſe thereof. For in the inchoation of theſe ſorrowes, in this life, and in the conſummation of them, in the life to come, The ſorrowes of the wicked are many, and great, and eternall. E

The Perſon. Pſal. 50.18. This then is the portion prepared here, Thy portion was with the Adulterers, as our laſt Tranſlators have expreſt that place in their Margin. Thy portion was with them here, in this world, and thy portion ſhall be with them for ever; for God expreſſes all kind of wickedneſſe, carnall and ſpirituall, in that name of Adultery, throughout the body of the Scriptures. And therefore when you meet judgements denounced againſt Adulterers, never thinke that thoſe judgements concerne not you, if you have forborne that one ſin, (and yet even that ſinne may have beene committed in a looke, in a letter, in a word, in a wiſh,

A a wiſh, in a dreame) when S. Iames ſaith, Yee Adulterers, and Adultereſſes, know you not this? Thinke not that S. Iames cals not upon you if you be but Covetous, but Ambitious, but Superſtitious, and no Adulterers; for every averſion from the Creatour, every converting to the creature is Adultery. Even in nature you are made for that marriage; In the covenant of God you were betroathed, and affianced for that marriage; In the Sacrament of Baptiſme you were actually, perſonally married; and in the other Sacrament there is a conſummation of that marriage; And every departing from that contract which you made with God at your Baptiſme, and renewed at your receiving the other Sacrament, is an Adultery. Thus a Hermite is a husband, and a Nun a wife; and thus both may bee adulterers, though in a Wilderneſſe, though in a Cloyſter. Si deſeris Deum qui te fecit, & amas illa quæ fecit, adulteraris; If thou turne from God that made thee, to thoſe things that he made, this is an adultery. Therefore Chriſt calls them, An evill and adulterous generation, becauſe they ſought a ſigne; becauſe they turned upon other B wayes of ſatisfaction, then he had ordained for them, that was adultery. And as David ſaith, Thy portion was with adulterers here; ſo, as theirs is ſaid to be, Thy portion alſo ſhall be in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death. Thou art this perſon, if thou be this adulterer, which is intended in this emphaticall word, The wicked.

Iam. 4 4. Auguſt. Matt. 12. 39. Revel 21. 8.

So then, as theſe Sorrowes in our Text, are an inchoative Hell, they are ſuch wounds as induce, ſuch pangs as precede even the ſecond death, ſorrowes that flow into deſperation, and impenitibleneſſe, (and impenitibleneſſe is hell.) As the torment is an inchoative hell, ſo is the perſon, the Wicked here, an inchoated Devill: It is S. Chryſoſtoms ſpontaneus dæmon, and voluntarius dæmon; He that is a devill to himſelfe, that could be, and would be ambitious in a Spittle, licentious in a Wilderneſſe, voluptuous in a Famine, and abound with tentations in himſelfe, though there were no devill. Moſt of the C names of the devill in the Scripture, denote ſome action of his upon us; As he is called The Prince of the power of the Ayre, there he is called ſo, becauſe as it is added there, Hee works in the children of diſobedience; As the ayre works upon our bodies, this Prince of the Ayre works upon our minds; how works he? hee deceives; Hee deceived the whole world, ſaith S. Iohn; from this inſinuation, hee hath thoſe other names there, the great Dragon, and the old Serpent. When hee hath crept in as a Serpent, then hee growes A roaring Lyon; He profeſſes his power, he diſguiſes not a tentation; then he growes Satan an Adverſary, an Enemy, he oppoſes all good endeavors in us; & then he growes Diabolus, an Accuſer, an accuſer to God, an accuſer to our owne conſcience; and when he hath made our ſinne, as great as it can be in our practiſe, when by age, or ſickneſſe, or poverty, he cannot multiply our ſinnes for the preſent, then by his multiplying glaſſe, he multiplies the ſins of our former times, and preſents them greater, then even the mercies of D God, or the merits of Chriſt Jeſus. So he growes in miſchievous names, according to his miſchievous actions and practiſes upon us; but then out of himſelfe ariſes the moſt vehement, and the moſt collective name that is given him in all the Scriptures, πονηρὸς, and that with the emphaticall article, The wicked one; One that is all wickedneſſe, & one that is the wickedneſſe of all; One, who if he had no object to direct his wickedneſſe upon, no ſubject to exerciſe his wickedneſſe in, If God ſhould proclaime ſo generall a Pardon, That all men, All, ſhould effectually be ſaved, and ſo all hope to have enlarged his Kingdome be withdrawne, yet would ſtill be as wicked, and as oppoſite to God as he is.

Ephes. 2. 2. Revel. 12. 9. 1 Pet. 5. 8.

So then, by this character of Multiplicity, this emphaticall note of the wicked in our Text, the perſon, whoſe portion this ſorrow is, this ſorrow which is a brand of Hell, at leaſt a match, by which Hell fire it ſelfe is kindled, is not hee that is an Adulterer, or that is a Murtherer; not hee that hath fallen into ſome particular ſinnes, though great, E and continued thoſe great ſinnes in habits, though long, for David fell ſo, and yet found a holy ſorrow, a medicinall ſorrow: but it is the wicked, he that runnes headlong into all wayes of wickedneſſe, and uſque ad finem, precludes, or neglects all wayes of recovery: That is glad of a tentation, and afraid of a Sermon; that is dry wood, and tinder to Satans fire, if he doe but touch him, and is aſhes it ſelfe to Gods Spirit, if he blow upon him; That from a love of ſinne, at firſt, becauſe it is pleaſing, comes at laſt to a love of ſinne, becauſe it is ſinne, becauſe it is liberty, becauſe it is a deliverance of himſelfe from the bondage, as he thinks it, of the law of God, and from the remorſe and anguiſh of conſidering ſinne too particularly. This is the perſon, in whom, at firſt, by this emphaticall note, the wicked, we deſigne a Plurality, (as we called it) that is, a Complicated, a Multiplied

The wicked

Plurality.

a Multiplied, a Compact ſinner, a Body, rather a Carkaſſe of Many, of All ſins, all that have fallen within his reach. And then, in the word we noted alſo a Singularity, That upon ſuch a ſinner, upon every ſuch ſinner, theſe Many, theſe Great, theſe Eternall ſorrowes ſhall fall and tarry. A Singularity. As in the former Circumſtance, we noted that it was the They, that aggravated it, it was not an An, an Adulterer, an Ambitious man, but a The, The wicked, whom God enwrapped in this irrecoverable, this undeterminable ſorrow: ſo here, it is not a This, or That, This wicked, or that wicked man, but The wicked, every wicked man is ſurrounded with this ſorrow. He can propoſe no comfort in a decimation, as in popular Rebellions, where nine may be ſpared, and the tenth man hanged; No, nor ſo much hope as to have nine hanged, and the tenth ſpared; He is not in Sodoms caſe, That a few righteous might have ſaved the wicked; But he feeles a neceſſity of applying to himſelfe, that, If Noah, Daniel, and Iob were in the midſt of them, as I live, ſaith the Lord God, they ſhould deliver neither Son, nor Daughter. Iuſtiſti Domine, & ſic eſt, ut pœna ſit ſibi omnis inordinatus animus; It is thy pleaſure O God, and thy pleaſure ſhall be infallibly accompliſhed, that every wicked perſon ſhould be his owne Executioner. He is Spontaneus Dæmon, as S. Chryſoſtome ſpeaks, an In-mate, an in-nate Devill; a boſome devill, a ſelfe-Devill; That as he could be a tempter to himſelfe, though there were no Devill, ſo he could be an Executioner to himſelfe, though there were no Satan, and a Hell to himſelfe, though there were no other Torment. Sometimes he ſtaies not the Aſſiſes, but prevents the hand of Juſtice; he deſtroies himſelfe before his time. But when he ſtaies, he is evermore condemned at the Aſſiſes. Let him ſleepe out as much of the morning as ſecurely as he can, embelliſh, and adorne himſelfe as gloriouſly as he can; dine as largely and as delicately as he can; weare out as much of the afternoone, in converſation, in Comedies, in pleaſure, as hee can; ſup with as much diſtenſion, and inducement of drouſineſſe as he can, that he may ſcape all remorſe, by falling aſleepe quickly, and fall aſleepe with as much diſcourſe, and muſicke, and advantage as he can, he hath a conſcience that will ſurvive, and overwatch all the company; he hath a ſorrow that ſhall joyne iſſue with him when he is alone, and both God, and the devill, who doe not meet willingly, ſhall meet in his caſe, and be in league, and be on the ſorrowes ſide, againſt him. The anger of God, and the malice of the devill, ſhall concurre with his ſorrow, to his farther vexation. No one wicked perſon, by any diverſion or cunning, ſhall avoid this ſorrow, for it is in the midſt, and in the end of all his forced contentments; Even in laughing, the heart is ſorrowfull, and the end of that mirth is heavineſſe.

Ezek. 14. 20. B

Auguſt. C

Prov. 14. 13.

Communication. The perſon is The wicked; Every wicked perſon; He hath no reliefe in a decimation, that ſome may ſcape: Nor reliefe in the communication of the torment; It is no eaſe to him, that ſo many beare a part with him. In ſome afflictions in the world, men lay hold upon ſuch a reliefe, Many men are in as ill caſe, as I; why am I ſo ſenſible of it? and they make ſhift to patch up a comfort of that kinde, out of ſome chips of Poets, and fragmentary ſentences; And they that cannot finde this reliefe ready made, will make ſhift to make it; when they are under the burden of a defamation, of an ill name, they will caſt aſperſions of the ſame crime, upon as many as they can, and thinke themſelves the better, if they can make others be thought as ill as they. But all theſe are amongſt Iobs miſerable comforters; It is a part of our joy in Heaven, that every mans joy ſhall be my joy; I ſhall have fulneſſe of ſalvation in my ſelfe, and I ſhall have as many ſalvations, as there are ſoules ſaved: But in hell there is no one feather towards ſuch a Pillow, no degree of eaſe, in the communication of the torment. Every ſoule ſhall murmure againſt God, and curſe God, for damning every other ſoule, as well as for damning his: Though they would have them damned, that are damned, yet they ſhall reproach God, for damning them: And though they wiſh all the Saints in Heaven, in hell, yet they ſhall call it tyrannie in God, to have ſent a Cain, or an Achitophel, or a Iudas thither. And as the perſon whom we conſider in this text, is an embryon of the Devill, Genimina viperarum, The ſpawne of the Devill, a potentiall, and as we ſaid, an inchoated Devill; ſo is the torment, this ſorrow, a Lucifer, Such a Lucifer, as hell can ſend out; not a light of any light, but a cloud of that darkneſſe: As ſure as this man, The wicked, ſhall be a Devill, ſo ſure this ſorrow, ſhall end, not end, but reach to hell. D E

Yet when all this is thus ſaid, ſaid with a holy vehemence, with a zealous animoſity, as indeed belongs to the denouncing of Gods judgements, yet may wee not be askt,

where

A where is there any ſuch perſon, or upon whom works there any ſuch ſorrow? Is it alwaies true, that the wicked make no good uſe of afflictions? or is it alwaies true, that they have them? The firſt may admit a doubt, for if God juſtifie the ungodly, (God juſtifieth the ungodly) then their affliction may be a way, to prepare juſtification in them, as well as in them whom we call godly; And if Chriſt dyed for the ungodly, (Chriſt dyed for the Vngodly) they alſo may fulfill his ſufferings in their fleſh, and their afflictions may produce good effects. But for that, they which are called ungodly, in both thoſe places, are only ſuch as were ungodly before Gods juſtification began to work upon them, before Chriſts Death began to be applied to them, but did not continue in their ungodlineſſe after; But theſe ungodly perſons, whom afflictions ſupple and mollifie no farther, but to an intemperate, and excruciating, and exclamatory ſorrow, and continue ungodly ſtill, are ſuch as never have good effect of affliction or ſorrow. Rom. 4. 5. 5.6.

B But then have theſe alwaies affliction inflicted upon them? one would doubt it, by that in Iob, The Tabernacles of robbers do proſper, and they are in ſafety that provoke God. Gods children are robbed and ſpoiled by the wicked, and the wicked ſhew it in Gods face, they hide not their Theft, they maintaine publiquely their Wantonneſſe, and their Exceſſes, with the ſpoile of the poore; They have it, and they will hold it, and they bid God bring his action, and recover how he can. This the Prophet Ieremy ſaw, and was affected, and ſcandalized with it; O Lord, if I plead with thee, thou art righteous; I know thou canſt maintaine, and make good that which thou haſt done; But yet, ſaies hee, Let me talke with thee of thy judgements; wherefore doth the way of the wicked proſper? wherefore are all they happy that deale very treacherouſly? Why, their wayes proſper in a juſt puniſhment of God for their former ſins, that they may have a larger and a broader way to deſtruction; and they are happy in temporall happineſſes, that they may have more occaſions C of ſmarting; If their wealth ſticke not to their heires, in a third generation, call them not Rich; If their proſperity cleave not to their ſoules, call them not Happy; He is a poor man, whoſe wealth can be writ in an Inventorie; That hath lockt all in ſuch an iron Cheſt, in ſuch a Cabinet, and hath ſent up nothing to meet him in Heaven. As all the wealth of the wicked is but counterfeit, ſo is all the joy that they have in it counterfeit too. And howſoever they diſguiſe their ſorrow, yet if their torment be inviſible to us, it is the liker hell; If we know not how they are afflicted, it is the liker hell; Their damnation ſleepeth not, nor they neither; And when at midnight their owne conſciences are a thouſand witneſſes to them, it is but a poore eaſe, that other men doe not know, that they are thoſe wicked perſons, and their ſorrow the ſorrow of this text; that they are The wicked, and their ſorrowes many, and great, and eternall ſorrowes. But I would be glad to reſerve as much time as I could for the other part, The perſon and The portion, that is D in the other ſcale; Mercy ſhall compaſſe, &c. Ier. 12. 1.

In this part we will begin with the perſons; For when wee come to their portion, with which we muſt end, of that we ſhall be able to finde no end, nay no beginning, for it begins with Mercy, (Mercy ſhall compaſſe them) and mercy is as much without beginning, as eternall, as God himſelfe, and it flowes on to joy and gladneſſe, and exultation, and this joy ſhall no more ſee an end of it ſelfe, then God himſelfe ſhall ſee an end of himſelfe. Upon the perſons we have three characters, and in their portions wee have three waights; Three degrees of goodneſſe in their perſons, three degrees of greatneſſe in their portions. The perſons firſt Truſt in God, and then They are Righteous, and laſtly, They are upright in heart; So alſo, the reward is firſt Inward joy, and then Outward declaration, and laſtly, An exemplary working upon others; And then, all theſe are rooted in the roote of all, that mercy ſhall compaſſe them. 2 Part.

E Firſt then They truſt in God. And that, firſt Excluſivè; They truſt in him ſo, as that they truſt in nothing elſe, and Incluſivè too; ſo, as that they do actually, and poſitively truſt in God. Some have bin ſo beaten out of all confidences in this world, ſo evacuated of former power, ſo deveſted of former favour, ſo diſpoiled of former treaſures, as that they are brought to truſt in nothing elſe; But then they truſt not in God neither; Quia Deo non audent dare iniquitatem, auferunt ei gubernationem; Becauſe they dare not ſay, that God does any thing ill, they come to ſay, that God does nothing at all; and to avoid the making of an unjuſt God, they make an idle God; which is as great an Atheiſme as the other. But becauſe it goes thus with them, that they have many and great ſorrowes, they conclude that all have ſo; But The heart knoweth his owne bitterneſſe; They know Truſt in God. Auguſt. Prov. 14. 10.

Ibid. their own caſe, the caſe of the godly they know not. The ſtranger ſhall not meddle with their Ioy; He that is a ſtranger to this truſt in God, underſtands nothing of the joy that Eſth. 14. 19. appertaines to them that have it. Let that be thy prayer, which was the prayer of Eſther, Thy handmaid hath had no joy but in thee, O Lord God of Abraham; O thou mightie God, above all, heare thou the voyce of them that have no other hope.

Our Adverſaries of Rome charge us, that we have but a negative Religion; If that were true, it were a heavy charge, if we did onely deny, and eſtabliſh nothing; But we deny all their new additions, ſo as that we affirme all the old foundations. The Negative man, that truſts in nothing in the world, may be but a Philoſopher, but an Atheiſt, but a ſtupid and dead carcaſſe. The Affirmative man, that does acknowledge all bleſſings, ſpirituall and temporall, to come from God, that prepares himſelfe by holineſſe to be fit to receive them from God, that comes for them by humble prayer to God, that returnes for them humble thankes to God, this man hath the firſt marke of this perſon upon him, He truſts in God. But he that truſts not in the world, nor in God neither, is worſe then he, that truſts in the world, and not in God; becauſe he is farther removed from all humility, that attributes all to himſelfe; He pretends to be an Atheiſt, and to beleeve in no God; and yet he conſtitutes a new Idolatry, he ſacrifices to himſelfe, and makes himſelfe his God.

Righteous. The ſecond Character, and ſpecification of this Perſon, is, that he is Righteous. And this word, we ſhall doe beſt to containe here within a legall Righteouſneſſe; that Righteouſneſſe, in which S. Paul proteſted, and proclaimed himſelfe to be unblamable. For howſoever this apparant Righteouſneſſe, Righteouſneſſe in the eyes of the world, be not enough alone, yet no other Righteouſneſſe is enough without this. The hypocrite, by being an hypocrite, may aggravate his own condemnation, when he comes to reckon with God; But to the Church, who knows him not to be an hypocrite, he does good, by his exemplar and outward Righteouſneſſe. He that does good for vaine-glory, may lead another man to good upon good grounds; And the prayers of thoſe poore ſoules, whom he may have benefited by his vain-glorious good worke, may prevaile ſo with God in his behalfe, as that his vaine-glory here, may become true glory, even in the Kingdome of Heaven.

So then we carry this word Righteous no farther, but to the doing of thoſe honeſt things, which we are bound to doe in the ſight of men. The word is Tzadok, which is often uſed for the exaltation and perfection of all true holineſſe; But as it is very often in the old Teſtament taken for Verax and Æquus, when a mans word and worke anſwer one another towards men; ſo in the New Teſtament, in the Syriake Tranſlation, where the word is the ſame as in the Hebrew, it is Oportuit, It behoved Chriſt to ſuffer; and in ſuch a ſenſe, in very many places, to be Righteous, is to doe that which it behoved us to doe, became us to doe, concerned us to doe in the ſight of men. Which can be expreſt in no one thing more fully, then in this, To embrace a lawfull Calling, and to walke honeſtly in that Calling; That is Righteouſneſſe; For, Iuſtus ſua fide vivit, The Righteous lives by his owne faith; Not without faith, nor with the faith of another; ſo Iuſtus ſuo ſudore veſcitur, The Righteous eats his Bread in the ſweat of his owne browes; He labours in an honeſt Calling, and drinks not the ſweat of others labours; And this is that Righteouſneſſe in this Text, the ſecond marke upon this Perſon, who is partaker of this Portion.

Vpright in heart. And the third is, that he is Rectus corde, Vpright in heart; That he direct even all the works of his Calling, all the actions of his life upon the glory of God. If you carry a Line from the Circumference, to the Circumference againe, as a Diameter, it paſſes the Center, it flowes from the Center, it looks to the Center both wayes. God is the Center; The Lines above, and the Lines below, ſtill reſpect and regard the Center; Whether I doe any action honeſt in the ſight of men, or any action acceptable to God, whether I doe things belonging to this life, or to the next, ſtill I muſt paſſe all through the Center, and direct all to the glory of God, and keepe my heart right, without variation towards him. For as I doe no good action here, meerly for the interpretation of good men, though that be one good and juſtifiable reaſon of my good actions: ſo I muſt doe nothing for my Salvation hereafter, meerly for the love I beare to mine owne ſoule, though that alſo be one good and juſtifiable reaſon of that action; But the primary reaſon in both, as well the actions that eſtabliſh a good name, as the actions that eſtabliſh eternall

A eternall life, must be the glory of God. Distortum lignum semper nutat, A wry and crooked planke in the floore, will alwayes shake and kicke up, and creake under a mans foote. A wry and a crooked heart will alwayes shake distrustfully, and kicke rebelliously, and creake repiningly, under the hand of God. Non potest collineari rectitudine Dei, sayes the same Father, He is not paralleld with God, he is not leveld with God, if he use not his blessings, if he accept not his corrections, as God intends them. First, To trust in God, and then to deale Righteously with men, and all the way to keepe the heart straight upon God; these three make up the Person; And these three his Portion, That he shall be glad, and he shall rejoyce, and jubilabit, he shall shout for joy. Augustl. Idem.

Now as three great summes of gold put into one bagge, these three branches of this Portion of the Righteous, are fixt in one roote, raised upon one foundation, Mercy shall compasse him about. But then this mercy, this Compassing mercy reaches not so farre, as B that thou shalt have no affliction, though thou trust in God; David had been an unfit person, to have delivered such a Doctrine, who sayes of himselfe, Daily have I been punished, and chastned every morning: He had it every day, it was his daily bread; and it was the first thing that he had, he had it in the morning. Here is mention of a morning, early sorrowes, even to the godly; and mention of a Day, continuing sorrowes, even to the godly; But he speaks of no Night here, the Son of grace, the Son of God, does not set in a Cloud of anger upon him. The Martyrs that abounded with this Trust in God, and this Righteousnesse, and this Vprightnesse of heart, abounded with these afflictions too. They that bestowed themselves upon God and his Church, as the Apostle expresses it, had these sorrowes plentifully bestowed upon themselves. And to passe from them to the Author of their constancy, Christ himselfe, He is Vir dolorum, A man of sorrowes, and acquainted with Griefe. And now, Whom he loveth he chastneth, and he scourgeth every C one that he receiveth; Flagellat omnem, He scourgeth every one; Vis audire quem omnem? Will you know how generall, and yet how particular this is? Vnicus sine peccato, non tamen sine flagello, There was one Man without any sin, but even that Man was not without punishment, Christ Jesus himselfe. So generall is correction, as that in this case, and in this sense, it is more generall then sin it selfe. Mercy. Psal. 73. 14. 2 Cor. 12. 15. Esay 53. 3. Augustl.

It is not then that the godly shall have no afflictions, no sorrowes; But mutant fortitudinem, They that waite upon the Lord shall renue their strength, say our Translators in the body of their Translation; but in the Margin, (and neerer to the Originall) They shall change their strength. They that have been strong in sinning, that have sinned with a strong hand, when they feele a judgement upon them, and finde that it is Gods hand, and Gods hand for their sinnes, they faint not, they lose not their strength, but mutant fortitudinem, They change their strength, they grow as strong in suffering, as they were D in sinning, and invest the Prophets resolution, I will beare the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him. The Booke which God gave Ezekiel to eate, was written within and without, with Lamentations, and Mournings, and Woes; but when he eate it, he found it in his mouth as sweet as honey. When God offers the Booke, which is the Register of our sinnes to our Consciences, or the Decree of his Judgements to our understanding, or to our sense, it is writ in gall and wormwood, and in the bitternesse of sorrow; but if we can bring it to the first concoction, the first digestion, to that mastication, that rumination, which is the consideration of Gods purpose upon us in that Judgement, we shall change our taste, for we shall Taste and See, Quam suavis Dominus, How good, and how sweet the Lord is; for even this Judgement is Mercy. Esay 40. 31. Mic. 7. 9. Ezek. 2. 10. Psal. 34. 9.

Think not then thy valour sufficiently tried, if thou canst take it patiently, to have mist a fute long pursued, or failed of a Preferment long expected; no not if thou have stood E in a haile of bullets without winking, or sate the searching of a wound without starting; but Muta fortitudinem, Change thy valour, and when thou commest to beare great crosses, proportionable to thy great sins, with a spirituall courage, acknowledge that courage to be the mercy of God, and not thine owne morall constancy. God loves his owne example, to doe as he hath done; Omni quæstione severius, à te interrogari; It was said to a Romane Emperour, who examined with Wisedome, and Majesty too: It is truer of God; that it is more fearfull then any rack, or torture, when he comes to search and sift a conscience: Yet God did come to that office upon Adam, before he would condemne him. He came to a worse place then Paradise; hee came to Sodome, to rack and torture them, with that confession, that there could not be found ten Righteous men amongſt them. But yet this he did, before he condemned them. God will viſit thee in this wrack, in this furnace, in theſe trialls, before he proceed to thy condemnation. But when God doth ſo, beleeve thou David, in his Indulgence to his Son, to have been a Type of Gods diſpoſition to thy ſoule. When he ſent out his Army againſt Abſalom, he ſtood in the gate to ſurvey the Muſter, and to every one of the Commanders, Ioab, and the reſt, ſtill he ſaid, Servate mihi puerum Abſalom, Intreat the young man Abſalom well for my ſake. The Lord of Hoſts may ſend forth his Army againſt thee, Sickneſſe, Loſſe, Shame, Paine, Baniſhment, Impriſonment, (which are all ſwords of his) but he ſayes to them all, Servate mihi Abſalom, That ſoule that I have bought with my blood, preſerve for me; Fight but againſt mine enemies, his Pride, his Security, his Preſumption; but Servate Abſalom, Preſerve his ſoule unſhaken, and un-offended. A

Jer. 29. 11. God hath ſaid it before, and he ſayes againe to thee, in all thy afflictions, I know the thoughts that I think towards you, the thoughts of peace, and not of evill, to give you an expected end. God ſaid this, when a Falſe Prophet had promiſed them deliverance in two yeares; God prorogues the time; he would doe it, but he would not doe it under threeſcore and ten yeares. Limit not God in his time, nor in his meanes: The mercy conſiſts in relieving thee ſo, as that thy ſoule ſuffer not, though thou doe. And if that be preſerved, this mercy is a Compaſſing mercy, which is alſo another Circumſtance in this Branch. B

Compaſſe. The Devill had Compaſt all the Earth, and he was angry that God had Compaſt

Job 1. 9. Iob. He ſayes in indignation, Haſt thou not made a hedge about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath, on every ſide? God did ſo for Iob, and he will doe ſo for thee:

Pſal. 103. 4. He redeemeth thy life from the grave, and crowneth thee with mercy, and compaſſion. This is the Compaſſing in heaven, when we come to be crowned there. But there is a Com-

Rom 8. 28. paſſing here, and an empailing of Gods children, in S. Pauls Co-operantur, When all things work together, for good, to them that love God. When Proſperity and Adverſity, Honour and Diſgrace, Profit and Loſſe, the Lords Giving and the Lords Taking, doe all concurre to the making up of this Paile, that muſt Compaſſe us; When we acknowledge that there muſt be nailes in the Paile, as well as ſtakes, there muſt be thornes in the hedge, as well as fruit trees; Croſſes as well as Bleſſings; when we leere not over the Paile, neither into the Common; that is, to the Gentiles and Nations, and begin to thinke, that we might be ſaved by the light of nature, without this burden of Chriſtianity: nor leere over into the Paſtures, and Corne of our neighbours; that is, to think, that we are not well in our own Church, but muſt needs hearken to the Doctrine, or Diſcipline of another; When we ſee all that comes, to come from God, and are content with that, then Omnia co-operantur, Every piece ſerves to the making up this Paile, and his Mercy compaſſes us about. C D

This is the roote of our three Branches, the foundation of our three Stories; the bagge of our three ſummes, in this portion, Mercy, Compaſſing mercy; and then the Branches themſelves, the roomes, the ſummes are but theſe three words, expreſſing and

Glad. exalting one affection, Be glad, Rejoyce, and Shout for joy; Which joy, is firſt an inward

Pſal. 119. 111. love of the Law of God, Thy teſtimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever, for they are the joy of my heart: It is not Dant, but Sunt, not that they Bring joy, but that they Are joy; There is no other joy but the delight in the Law of the Lord: For all other joy,

Eccleſ. 2. 2. the Wiſe King ſaid, Of laughter, thou art mad, and of joy, what is this that thou doſt? True joy is the earneſt which we have of heaven, It is the treaſure of the ſoule, and therefore ſhould be laid in a ſafe place, and nothing in this world is ſafe to place it in: And there-

Cant. 1. 4. fore with the Spouſe we ſay, We will be glad in thee, we will remember thy love more then wine. Let others ſeek their joy in wine, in ſociety, in converſation, in muſique; for mee, E Thou haſt put gladneſſe into my heart, more then in the time that their corne and their wine increaſed.

Rejoyce. Rejoyce therefore in the Lord always, and againe I ſay, rejoyce: Againe, that is, Rejoyce

Phil. 4. 4. in the ſecond manner of expreſſing it, by externall declarations. Goe chearfully, and joyfully forward, in the works of your callings. Rejoyce in the bleſſings of God without murmuring, or comparing with others. And eſtabliſh thy joy ſo, in an honeſt, and religious manner of getting, that thy joy may deſcend to thine heire, as well as thy land. No land is ſo well fenced, no houſe ſo well furniſhed, as that, which hath this joy, this Job 20. 4. teſtimony of being well gotten. For, This thou knoweſt of old, ſince man was placed upon earth,

A earth, that the Triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, and the joy of the Hypocrite but for a moment.

And then the laſt degree is louder then this, Iubilate, Shout for joy; Declare thy joy in the eares of other men. As the Angels ſaid to the Shepheards, I bring you tidings of great joy, which ſhall be unto all people, So be thou a chearfull occaſion of glorifying God by thy joy. Declare his loving kindneſſe unto the ſons of men; Tell them what he hath done for thy ſoule, thy body, thy ſtate. Say, With this ſtaffe came I over Iordane: Be content to tell whoſe Son thou waſt, and how ſmall thy beginning. Smother not Gods bleſſings, by making thy ſelfe poore, when he who is truly poore, begges of thee, for that Gods ſake, who gave thee all that thou haſt. Hold up a holy chearfulneſſe in thy heart; Goe on in a chearfull converſation; and let the world ſee, that all this growes out of a peace, betwixt God and thee, teſtified in the bleſſings of this world; and then thou art that Per-
B ſon, and then thou haſt that Portion, which growes out of this root, in this Text, Mercy ſhall compaſſe him about that truſteth in the Lord.

Iubilate. Luke 2.

SERM. LXIV.

Preached upon the Penitentiall Pſalmes.

PSAL. 51. 7.

C Purge me with Hyſſope, and I ſhall be cleane; waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter then ſnow.

IN the Records of the growth, and propagation of the Chriſtian Church, The Eccleſiaſticall Story, we have a relation of one Pambo, an unlearned, but devout, and humble Ermit, who being informed of another man, more learned then himſelfe, that profeſſed the underſtanding, and teaching of the Book of Pſalmes, ſought him out, and applied himſelfe to him, to be his Diſciple. And taking his firſt leſſon caſually, at the firſt verſe of the thirty ninth Pſalme, I will take heed to my wayes, that I ſin not with my tongue, He went away with that leſſon, with a promiſe to returne againe when he was perfect in that. And when he diſcontinued ſo long, that his Maſter, ſometimes occaſionally lighting upon him, accu-
D ſed him of this ſlackneſſe, for almoſt twenty yeares together he made ſeverall excuſes, but at laſt profeſſed, that at the end of thoſe twenty yeares, he was not yet perfect in his firſt leſſon, in that one verſe, I will take heed to my wayes, that I ſinne not with my tongue. Now, that which made this leſſon hard unto him, was, that it employed all his diligence, and his watchfulneſſe upon future things; to examine and debate all his actions, and all his words; for, elſe he did not take heed to his wayes; at leaſt, not ſo, as that hee would not ſin with his tongue. But if he had begun with this leſſon, with this Pſalme, which is but a calling to our memory that which is paſt, The ſinfull employment of that time, which is gone, and ſhall not returne, The ſinfull heats of our youth, which, ſince we wanted remorſefull teares to quench them, even the ſin it ſelfe, and the exceſſe thereof hath overcome, and allayed in us, ſinfull omiſſions, ſinfull actions, and habits, and all thoſe tranſitory paſſages, in which the Apoſtle ſhewes us, our prodigality, our E unthriftineſſe, our ill bargaine, when he askes us that queſtion of Confuſion, What fruit had you then in thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? If he had begun his firſt leſſon at this, with the preſenting of all his paſſed ſins, in the ſight of the Father, and in the Mediation and merit of the Sonne, he would have been ſooner perfect in that leſſon, and would have found himſelfe, even by laying open his diſeaſe, ſo purged with Hyſſop as that he ſhould have been cleane, and ſo waſhed, as that he ſhould have been whiter then ſnow. For, Repentance of ſins paſt is nothing but an Audit, a caſting up of our accounts, a conſideration, a ſurvey, how it ſtands between God and our ſoule. And yet, as many men run out of plentifull eſtates, onely becauſe they are loath to ſee a liſt of their debts, to take knowledge how much they are behind hand, or to contract their expenſes: ſo we run out of a whole and rich inheritance, the Kingdome of heaven, we profuſe and poure out even our own ſoule, rather then we will caſt our eye upon that which is paſt, rather then we will preſent a liſt of our ſpirituall debts to God, or diſcover our diſeaſe to that Phyſician, who onely can Purge us with hyſſope, that we may be cleane, and waſh us, that wee may be whiter then ſnow. A

Rom. 6. 21.

Diviſio. In the words we ſhall conſider the Perſon, and the Action, who petitions, and what he asks. Both are twofold; for, the perſons are two, the Phyſitian and the Patient, God and David, Doe thou purge me, doe thou waſh me; and the Action is twofold, Purgabis, doe thou purge me, and Lavabis, doe thou waſh me. In which laſt part, and in the firſt branch thereof, wee ſhall ſee firſt, the Action it ſelfe, Purgabis, Thou ſhalt purge mee, and what that imports; And then the meanes, Purgabis hyſſopo, Thou ſhalt purge me with hyſſope, what that implies; and then the effect, Mundabor, I ſhall bee made cleane, and what that comprehends. And in the other branch of that ſecond part, Lavabis, Thou ſhalt waſh me, wee ſhall alſo looke upon the Action on Gods part, Lavabis, Thou ſhalt waſh mee, and the Effect on our part, Dealbabor, I ſhall be white, and the Degree, the Extent, the Exaltation of that Emundation, that Dealbation, that Cleanſing, ſupra nivem, I ſhall be whiter then ſnow. And then we ſhall conclude all with that conſideration, That though in the firſt part, we finde two perſons in action; for God works, but man prayes that God would worke, yet in the other part, the worke it ſelfe; Though the worke bee divers, a purging, and then a waſhing of the ſoule, the whole worke is Gods alone: David doth not ſay, no man can ſay, Doe thou purge me, and then, I will waſh my ſelfe; nor doe thou make the Medicine, and I will bring the Hyſſope; nor doe thou but waſh mee, begin the worke, and I will goe forward with it, and perfit it, and make my ſelfe whiter then ſnow; but the intire worke is his, who onely can infuſe the deſire, and onely accompliſh that deſire, who onely gives the will, and the ability to ſecond, and execute that will, He, He purges me, or I am ſtill a veſſell of peccant humors; His, His is the hyſſope, or there is Mors in olla, Death in the cup; He, He waſhes me, or I am ſtill in my blood; He, He exalts that cleanneſſe, which his, his waſhing hath indued, or I returne againe to that red earth, which I brought out of Adams bowels; Therefore Doe thou purge mee with Hyſſope, and I ſhall be cleane; Do thou waſh me, and I ſhalbe whiter then ſnow. B C

1. Part. Deus. Rom. 10. 20. Firſt then, for our firſt part, wee conſider the perſons. Of theſe God is the firſt; Eſay ſpoke boldly, ſaith the Apoſtle, when hee ſaid, God is found by them that ſeeke him not; But ſtill we continue in that humble boldneſſe, to ſay, God is beſt found, when we ſeeke him, and obſerve him in his operation upon us. God gives audiences, and admits acceſſes in his ſolemne and publike and out-roomes, in his Ordinances: In his Cabinet, in his Bed-chamber, in his unrevealed purpoſes, wee muſt not preſſe upon him. It was ill taken in the Roman State, when men enquired in Arcana Imperii, the ſecrets of State, by what wayes, and meanes, publike buſineſſes were carried: Private men were to reſt in the generall effects, peace, and protection, and Juſtice, and the like, and to enquire no more; But to enquire in Arcana Domus, what was done in the Bed-chamber, was criminall, capitall, inexcuſable. We muſt abſtaine from enquiring De modo, how ſuch or ſuch things are done in many points, in which it is neceſſary to us to know that ſuch things are done: As the maner of Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament, and the maner of Chriſts deſcent into Hell, for theſe are Arcana Imperii, ſecrets of State, for the maner is ſecret, though the thing bee evident in the Scriptures. But the entring into Gods unrevealed, and boſome-purpoſes, are Arcana domus, a man is as farre from a poſſibility of attaining the knowledge, as from an excuſe for offering at it. That curioſity will bring a man to that blaſphemy of Alfonſus King of Caſtile, the great Aſtronomer, who ſaid, That if hee had beene of Gods Counſell in the creation of the world, hee could have directed him to have done many things better then he did. They that looke too farre into Gods unrevealed purpoſes, are ſeldome content with that that they thinke God hath done; but ſtray either into an uncharitable condemning of other men, or into a jealous, a ſuſpitious, a deſperate condemning of themſelves. Here, in this firſt branch of this firſt part, wee ſeeke God, and becauſe we ſeeke him, where he hath promiſed to be, we are ſure to find him; Becauſe we joyne with David, in an humble confeſſion of our ſins, the Lord joyns us with David, in a fruition of himſelfe. And more of that firſt Perſon, God himſelfe, we ſay not, but paſſe to the other, to the petitioner, to the penitent, to the patient, to David himſelfe. D E

His

A His example is ſo comprehenſive, ſo generall, that as a well made, and well placed Picture in a Gallery looks upon all that ſtand in ſeverall places of the Gallery, in ſeverall lines, in ſeverall angles, ſo doth Davids hiſtory concerne and embrace all. For his Perſon includes all ſtates, betweene a ſhepherd and a King, and his ſinne includes all ſinne, between firſt Omiſſions, and complications of Habits of ſin upon ſin: So that as S. Baſil ſaid, hee needed no other Booke, for all ſpirituall uſes, but the Pſalmes, ſo wee need no other Example to diſcover to us the ſlippery wayes into ſin, or the penitentiall wayes out of ſin, then the Author of that Booke, David. From his Example then, we firſt deduce this, That in the war-fare of this life, there are no Emeriti milites; none of that diſcipline, that after certaine yeares ſpent in the warres, a man ſhould returne to eaſe, and honour, and ſecurity, at home. A man is not delivered from the tentation of Ambition, by having overcome the heats and concupiſcences of his youth; nor from the tentation B of Covetouſneſſe in his age, by having eſcaped ambition, and contented himſelfe with a meane ſtation in his middle yeares. David, whom neither a ſudden growth into ſuch degrees of greatneſſe, as could not have fallen into his thought, or wiſh before, nor the perſecution of Saul, which might have enraged him to a perſonall revenge, conſidering how many advantages, and occaſions hee might have made ſhift to thinke that God had put into his hands, to execute that revenge; David, whom neither the concourſe and application of the people, who tooke knowledge of him, as of a riſing Sun, nor the intereſt and neareneſſe in the love and heart of Ionathan the Kings Son, which fals ſeldome upon a new, and a popular man; David, whom not that higheſt place, to which God had brought him, in making him King, nor that addition even to that higheſt place, that he made him Succeſſor to a King of whom the State was weary; (for, as the Panegyrique ſayes, Oneroſum eſt ſuccedere bono principi, It is a heavy thing, and binds a Prince C to a great diligence, to come immediately after one, whom his ſubjects loved, So had David an eaſe, in comming after one, with whom the Kingdome was diſcontented) David, whom this ſudden preferment, and perſecutions, and popularity, did not ſo ſhake, but that wee may ſay of him, as it is ſaid of Iob, That in all this height, David did not ſin, nor in all theſe afflictions, He did not charge God fooliſhly; Though he had many victories, he came not to a Triumph; but him, whom an Army, and an armed Giant, Goliah, neare hand, could not hurt, a weaker perſon, and naked, and farre off, overthrowes and ruines.

David.

It is therefore but an imperfect comfort for any man to ſay, I have overcome tentations to great ſins, and my ſins have beene but of infirmity, not of malice. For herein, more then in any other contemplation appeares the greatneſſe, both of thy danger, and of thy tranſgreſſion. For, conſider what a dangerous, and ſlippery ſtation thou art in, if D after a victory over Giants, thou mayeſt be overcome by Pigmees; If after thy ſoule hath beene Canon proofe againſt ſtrong tentations, ſhe be ſlaine at laſt by a Piſtoll; And, after ſhe hath ſwom over a tempeſtuous Sea, ſhee drowne at laſt, in a ſhallow and ſtanding ditch. And as it ſhowes the greatneſſe of thy danger, ſo it aggravates the greatneſſe of thy fault; That after thou haſt had the experience, that by a good husbanding of thoſe degrees of grace, which God hath afforded thee, thou haſt beene able to ſtand out the great batteries of ſtrong tentations, and ſeeſt by that, that thou art much more able to withſtand tentations to leſſer ſins, if thou wilt, yet by diſarming thy ſelfe, by deveſting thy gariſons, by diſcontinuing thy watches, meerely by inconſideration, thou ſelleſt thy ſoule for nothing, for little pleaſure, little profit, thou fruſtrateſt thy Saviour of that purchaſe, which he bought with his precious blood, and thou enricheſt the Devils treaſure as much, with thy ſingle money, thy frequent ſmall ſins, as another hath done with his E talent; for, as God was well pleaſed with the widowes two farthings, ſo is the Devill well pleaſed, with the negligent mans leſſer ſins. O who can be confident in his footing, or in his hold, when David, that held out ſo long, fell, and if we conſider but himſelfe, irrecoverably, where the tempter was weake, and afar off?

De longè vidit illam in qua captus eſt. Berſeba was far off; Mulier longè, libido prope, but Davids diſpoſition was in his owne boſome. Yet David came not up into the Teras, with any purpoſe or inclination to that ſin. Here was no ſuch plotting as in his ſon Hammons caſe, to get his ſiſter Tamar, by diſſembling himſelfe to be ſick, to his lodging. That man poſt-dates his ſin, and begins his reckning too late, that dates his ſin at that houre, when he commits that ſin. You muſt not reckon in ſin, from the Nativity, but the Conception; ception; when you conceived that ſin in your purpoſe, then you ſinned that ſin, and in every letter, in every diſcourſe, in every preſent, in every wiſh, in every dreame, that conduces to that ſin, or riſes from that ſin, you ſin it over, and over againe, before you come to the committing of it, and ſo your ſin is an old, an inveterate ſin, before it bee borne, and that which you call the firſt, is not the hundredth time, that you have ſinned that ſinne. A

Auguſt.

It is not much that David contributed to this ſin on his part: He is onely noted in the Text, to have beene negligent in the publique buſineſſe, and to have given himſelfe too much eaſe in this particular, that he lay in bed all day; When it was evening, David aroſe out of his bed, and walked upon the Teras. And it is true, that the juſtice of God is ſubtile, as ſearching, as unſearchable; and oftentimes puniſhes ſins of Omiſſion, with other ſins, Actuall ſins, and makes their lazineſſe, who are ſlack in doing that they ſhould, an occaſion of doing that they ſhould not. 2 Sam. 11.

It was not much that Bathſheba contributed to this tentation, on her part. The Vulgat Edition of the Roman Church, hath made her caſe ſomewhat the worſe, by a miſtranſlation, Ex adverſo ſuper ſolarium ſuum, as though ſhe had beene waſhing her ſelfe, upon her owne Teras, and in the eye of the Court; whereas indeed, it is no more, but that David ſaw her, he upon his Teras, not her upon hers. For her waſhing, it may well be collected out of the fourth verſe, that it was a Legall waſhing, to which ſhee was bound by the Leviticall Law, being a purification after her naturall infirmity, and which it had beene a ſin in her, to have omitted. But had it beene a waſhing of Refreſhing, or of Delicacy, even that was never imputed to Suſanna for a fault, that ſhe waſhed in a Garden, and in the day, and employed not onely ſope, but other ingredients and materials, of more delicacy, in that waſhing. B

Certainly the limits of adorning and beautifying the body are not ſo narrow, ſo ſtrict, as by ſome ſowre men they are ſometimes conceived to be. Differences of Ranks, of Ages, of Nations, of Cuſtomes, make great differences in the enlarging, or contracting of theſe limits, in adorning the body; and that may come neare ſin at ſome time, and in ſome places, which is not ſo alwaies, nor every where. Amongſt the women there, the Jewiſh women, it was ſo generall a thing to helpe themſelves with aromaticall Oyles, and liniments, as that that which is ſaid by the Prophets poore Widow, to the Prophet Eliſha, That ſhe had nothing in the houſe but a pot of Oyle, is very properly by ſome collected from the Originall word, that it was not Oyle for meate, but Oyle for unction, aromaticall Oyle, Oyle to make her looke better; ſhe was but poore, but a Widow, but a Prophets Widow, (and likely to be the poorer for that) yet ſhe left not that. We ſee that even thoſe women, whom the Kings were to take for their Wives, and not for Miſtreſſes, (which is but a later name for Concubines) had a certaine, and a long time aſſigned to be prepared by theſe aromaticall unctions, and liniments for beauty. Neither do thoſe that conſider, that when Abraham was afraid to loſe his wife Sara in Egypt, and that every man that ſaw her, would fall in love with her, Sara was then above threeſcore; And when the King Abimelech did fall in love with her, and take her from Abraham, ſhe was foureſcore and ten, they doe not aſſigne this preſervation of her complexion, and habitude to any other thing, then the uſe of thoſe unctions, and liniments, which were ordinary to that Nation. But yet though the extent and limit of this adorning the body, may be larger then ſome auſtere perſons will allow, yet it is not ſo large, as that it ſhould be limited onely, by the intention and purpoſe of them that doe it; So that if they that beautifie themſelves, meane no harme in it, therefore there ſhould be no harme in it; for, except they could as well provide, that others ſhould take no harme, as that they ſhould meane no harme, they may participate of the fault. And ſince we finde ſuch an impoſſibility in rectifying and governing our owne ſenſes, (we cannot take our owne eye, nor ſtop our owne eare, when we would) it is an unneceſſary, and inſupportable burden, to put upon our ſcore, all the laſcivious glances, and the licentious wiſhes of other perſons, occaſioned by us, in over-adorning our ſelves. 2 King. 4 C D E

And this may well have beene Bathſhebaes fault, That though ſhe did not bathe with a purpoſe to be ſeene, yet ſhe did not enough to provide againſt the infirmity of others. It had therefore been well if David had riſen earlier, to attend the affaires of the State; And it had been well, if Bathſheba had bathed within doores, and with more caution; but yet theſe errors alone, we ſhould not be apt to condemne in ſuch perſons, except by Gods permitting

A permitting greater ſins to follow upon theſe, we were taught, that even ſuch things, as ſeeme to us in their nature to be indifferent, have degrees of naturall and eſſentiall ill in them, which muſt be avoyded, even in the probability, nay even in the poſſibility that they may produce ſin.

And as from this Example, we draw that Concluſion, That ſins, which are but the Children of indifferent actions, become the Parents of great ſins; which is the induſtry of ſin, to exalt it ſelfe, and (as it were) ennoble it ſelfe, above the ſtocke, from which it was derived; The next ſin will needs be a better ſin then the laſt: So have we alſo from David this Concluſion, that this generation of ſin is infinite; infinite in number, infinite in duration; So infinite both waies, as that Luther (who ſeldome checks himſelfe in any vehement expreſſion) could not forbeare to ſay, Si Nathan non veniſſet, If Nathan had not come to David, David had proceeded to the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. O how im-

B poſſible a thing is it then, for us to condition and capitulate with God, or with our owne Nature, and ſay to him, or to our ſelves, We will ſin thus long and no longer, Thus far, and no farther, this ſin, and no more; when not onely the frailty of man, but even the juſtice of God provokes us (though not as Author, or cauſe of ſin) to commit more and more ſins, after wee have entangled and enwrapped our ſelves in former! Who can doubt, but that in this yeares ſpace, in which David continued in his ſin, but that he did ordinarily all the externall acts of the religious Worſhip of God? who can doubt but that he performed all the Legall Sacrifices, and all the Ceremoniall Rites? Yea, we ſee, that when Nathan put Davids caſe in another name, of a rich man that had taken away a poore mans onely ſheepe, David was not onely juſt, but he was vehement in the execution of Juſtice; Hee was, ſaies the text, exceeding wroth, and ſaid, As the Lord liveth, that man ſhall dye; But yet, for all this externall Religion, for all this Civill juſtice in mat-

C ter of government, no mention of any repentance in all this time. How little a thing then is it, nay how great a thing, that is, how great an aggravating of thy ſin, if thou thinke to bribe God with a Sabboth, or with an almes; And, as a criminall perſon would faine come to Sanctuary, not becauſe it is a conſecrated place, but becauſe it reſcues him from the Magiſtrate, So thou comeſt to Chuch, not becauſe God is here, but that thy being here may redeeme thee from the imputation of prophaneneſſe. At laſt Nathan came; David did not ſend for him, but God ſent him; But yet David laid hold upon Gods purpoſe in him. And he confeſſes to God, he confeſſes to the Prophet, he confeſſes to the whole Church; for, before he pleads for mercy in the body of the Pſalme, in the title of the Pſalme, which is as Canonicall Scripture, as the Pſalme it ſelfe, hee confeſſes himſelfe plainly, A Pſalme of David, when the Prophet Nathan came to him, after he had gone in to Bathſheba.

D Audiunt male viventes, & quærunt ſibi patrocinia peccandi; Wee heare of Davids ſin, and wee juſtifie our ſins by him; Si David, cur non & ego? If David went in to a Bathſheba, why may not I? That Father tels you why, Qui facit, quia David fecit, id facit, quod David non fecit, He that does that, becauſe David did it, does not doe that which David did; Quia nullum exemplum propoſuit, For David did not juſtifie his ſin, by any precedent example; So that he that ſins as David did, yet ſins worſe then David did; and hee that continues as unſenſible of his ſin, as David was, is more unſenſible then David was; Quia ad te mittitur ipſe David, For God ſends Nathan to thee, with David in his hand; He ſends you the Receit, his invitations to Repentance, in his Scriptures, and he ſends you a Probatum eſt, a perſonall teſtimony how this Phyſicke hath wrought upon another, upon David. Auguſt. Auguſt.

And ſo having in this firſt Part, which is the Conſideration of the perſons in our

E Text, God and David, brought them by Nathans mediation, together, conſider wee alſo, for a concluſion of this Part, the perſonall applications, that David ſcatters himſelfe upon none but God, Tu me, and hee repeats it, doe Thou purge mee, doe Thou waſh mee.

Damaſcen hath a Sermon of the Aſſumption of the bleſſed Virgin, which whole Sermon is but a Dialogue, in which Eve acts the firſt part, and the bleſſed Virgin another; It is but a Dialogue, yet it is a Sermon. If I ſhould inſiſt upon this Dialogue, between God and David, Tu me, Tu me, Doe thou worke upon me, it would not be the leſſe a profitable part of a Sermon for that. For firſt, when we heare David in an anhelation and panting after the mercy of God, cry out, Domine Tu, Lord doe thou that that is to be Tu.

be done, doe Thou purge, doe Thou waſh, and may have heard God, (thereby to excite us to the uſe of his meanes) ſay, Purget natura, purget lex, I have infuſed into thee a light and a law of nature, and exalted that light and that law, by a more particular law and a clearer light then that, by which thou knoweſt what is ſin, and knoweſt that in a ſinfull ſtate thou canſt not be acceptable to me, Purget natura, purget lex, let the light of nature, or of the law purge thee, and rectifie thy ſelfe by that; Doe but as much for thy ſelfe, as ſome naturall men, ſome Socrates, ſome Plato hath done, we may heare David reply, Domine Tu, Lord put me not over to the catechizing of Nature, nor to the Pedagogie of the Law, but take me into thine owne hands, do Thou, Thou, that is to be done upon me. When we heare God ſay, Purget Eccleſia, I have eſtabliſhed a Church, ſettled conſtant Ordinances, for the purging and waſhing of ſouls there; Purget Eccleſia, Let the Church purge thee, we may heare David reply, Domine Tu, Alas Lord, how many come to that Bath, and goe foule out of it? how many heare Sermons, and receive Sacraments, and when they returne, returne to their vomit? Domine Tu, Lord, except the power of thy Spirit make thine Ordinance effectuall upon me, even this thy Jordan will leave me in my leproſie, and exalt my leproſie, even this Sermon, this Sacrament will aggravate my ſin. If we heare God ſay, Shall I purge thee? Doeſt thou know what thou askeſt, what my method in purging is, That if I purge, I ſhall purge thee with fire, with ſeaven fires, with tribulations, nay, with tentations, with temporall, nay, with ſpirituall calamities, with wounds in thy fortune, wounds in thine honor, wounds in thy conſcience, yet we may heare David reply, Tu Domine; As the people ſaid to Ioſhuah, God forbid we ſhould forſake the Lord, we will ſerve the Lord; And when Ioſhuah ſaid, You cannot ſerve the Lord, for he is a jealous God; and if yee turne from him, he will turne and doe you hurt, and conſume you after he hath done you good; The people replyed, Nay, but we will ſerve the Lord; ſo whatſoever God threatens David of afflictions and tribulations, and purgings in fire, we may heare David reply, Nay but Lord, doe Thou doe it, do it how Thou wilt, but doe Thou do it: Thy corroſives are better then others fomentations; Thy bitterneſſes ſweeter then others honey; Thy fires are but lukewarme fires, nay, they have nothing of fire in them, but light to direct me in my way; And thy very frowns are but as trenches cut out, as lanes that leade me to thy grave, or Rivers or Channels, that lead me to the ſea of thy bloud. Let me go upon Crouches, ſo I go to Heaven; Lay what waight thou wilt even upon my ſoule, that that be heavy, and heavy unto death, ſo I may have a cheerfull tranſmigration theſe! Domine Tu, Lord doe thou doe it, and I ſhall not wiſh it mended.

Joſh. 24. 16.

And then when we heare David ſay, Domine Me, Lord purge Me, waſh Me, and returne foure times in this ſhort Text, to that perſonall appropriation of Gods worke upon himſelfe, Purge Me, that I may be cleane, waſh Me, that I may be whiter then ſnow, if we heare God ſay (as the language of his mercy is, for the moſt part, generall) As the Sea is above the Earth, ſo is the blood of my Son above all ſin; Congregations of three thouſand, and of five thouſand were purged and waſhed, converted and baptized at particular Sermons of S. Peter; whole legions of Souldiers, that conſiſted of thouſands, were purged in their owne blood, and became Martyrs in one day. There is enough done to worke upon all; Examples enow given to guide all; we may heare David reply, Domine Me, Nay but Lord, I doe not heare Peter preach, I live not in a time, or in a place, where Crownes of Martyrdome are diſtributed, nor am I ſure my Conſtancy would make me capable of it if I did, Lord I know, that a thouſand of theſe worlds were not worth one drop of thy blood, and yet I know, that if there had been but one ſoule diſtreſſed, and that ſoule diſtreſſed but with one ſin, thou wouldeſt have ſpent the laſt drop of that blood for that ſoule; Bleſſed be thy Name, for having wrapped me up in thy generall Covenants, and made me partaker of thy generall Ordinances, but yet Lord, looke more particularly upon me, and appropriate thy ſelfe to me, to me, not onely as thy Creature, as a man, as a Chriſtian, but as I am I, as I am this ſinner that confeſſes now, and as I am this penitent that begs thy mercy now. And now, Beloved, we have ſaid ſo much towards enough of the perſons, God and David; The acceſſe of David to God, and the appropriation of God to David, as that we may well paſſe to our other generall part, the petitions which David in his own and out behalfe makes to God, Purge me with Hyſſop, and I ſhall be cleane, waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter then ſnow.

2 Part. Purgabis.

In this, the firſt is a great worke, That which we tranſlate, Purge me. And yet how ſoone David is come to it? It is his firſt period. The paſſage of a Spirit is very quick, but

A but it is not immediate; Not from extreame to extreame, but by paſſing the way between. The Evill ſpirit paſſes not ſo; no good ſoule was ever made very ill in an inſtant, no, nor ſo ſoone as ſome ill have been made good: No man can give me Examples of men ſo ſoone perverted, as I can of men converted. It is not in the power of the Devill to doe ſo much harme, as God can doe good; Nay, we may be bold to ſay, it is not in the will, not in the deſire of the Devill to doe ſo much harme, as God would doe good; for illneſſe is not in the nature of the Devill; The Devill was naturally good, made, created good. His firſt illneſſe was but a defection from that goodneſſe; and his preſent illneſſe is but a puniſhment for that defection; but God is good, goodneſſe in his nature, eſſentially, eternally good; and therefore the good motions of the Spirit of God worke otherwiſe upon us, then the tentations of the evill Spirit doe. How ſoone, and to what a height came David here? He makes his Petition, his firſt Petition with that
B confidence, as that it hath ſcarce the nature of a Petition: for it is in the Originall, Thou wilt purge me, Thou wilt waſh me, Thou hadſt a gracious will, and purpoſe to doe it, before thou didſt infuſe the will and the deſire in me to petition it. Nay, this word may well be tranſlated not onely Thou wilt, but by the other denotation of the future, Thou ſhalt, Thou ſhalt purge me, Thou ſhalt waſh me, Lord I doe but remember thee of thy debt, of that which thy gracious promiſe hath made thy debt, to ſhew mercy to every penitent ſinner. And then, as the word implies confidence, and acceleration, infallibility, and expedition too, That as ſoone as I can aske, I am ſure to be heard; ſo does it imply a totality, an intireneſſe, a fulneſſe in the worke; for the roote of the word is Peccare, to ſin, for purging is a purging of peccant humors; but in this Conjugation in that language, it hath a privative ſignification, and literally ſignifies Expeccabù; and if in our language, that were a word in uſe, it might be tranſlated, Thou ſhalt un-ſin me; that is, look upon C me as a man that had never ſinned, as a man inveſted in the innocency of thy Sonne, who knew no ſin. David gives no man rule nor example of other aſſurance in God, then in the remiſſion of ſins: Not that any precontract or Election makes our ſins no ſins, or makes our ſins no hindrances in our way to ſalvation, or that we are in Gods favour at that time when we ſin, nor returned to his favour before we repent our ſin; It is onely this expeccation, this unſinning, this taking away of ſins formerly committed, that reſtores me; And that is not done with nothing; David aſſignes, propoſes a meanes, by which he looks for it, Hyſſop, Thou ſhalt purge me with Hyſſop.

The Fathers taking the words as they found them, and faſtning with a ſpirituall delight, as their devout cuſtome was, their Meditations upon the figurative and Metaphoricall phraſe of purging by Hyſſop, have found purgative vertues in that plant, and made uſefull and ſpirituall applications thereof, for the purging of our ſoules from ſin. In this
D doe S. Ambroſe, and Auguſtine, and Hierome agree, that Hyſſop hath vertue in it proper for the lungs, in which part, as it is the furnace of breath, they place the ſeat of pride and oppoſition againſt the Truth, making their uſe of that which is ſaid of Saul, That he breathed out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the Diſciples of the Lord. And by this interpretation, Davids diſeaſe that he muſt be purged of, ſhould be pride. But except, as the Schoolemen, when they have tyred themſelves in ſeeking out the name of the ſin of the Angels, are content at laſt for their eaſe to call it Pride, both becauſe they thought they need goe no farther, for, where pride is, other ſins will certainly accompany it; and becauſe they extended the name of Pride to all refuſals and reſiſtances of the will of God, and ſo pride, in effect, includes all ſin; Except, I ſay, the Fathers take Pride in ſo large a ſenſe as that they would not preſcribe Hyſſop to purge Davids lungs, for his diſeaſe lay not properly there; They muſt have purged his liver, the ſeate of blood, the ſeat of con-E cupiſcence; They muſt have purged his whole ſubſtance, for the diſtemper was gone over all. And to this rectifying of his blood, by the application of better blood, had David relation in this place.

Hyſſopo.

Acts 9.

All the ſacrifices of Expiation of ſin, in the old Law, were done by blood, and that blood was ſprinckled upon the people, by an inſtrument made of a certain plant, which becauſe the word in Hebrew is Ezob, for the nearneſſe of the ſound, and for the indifferency of the matter, (for it imports us nothing to know, of what plant that Aſpergillum, that Blood-ſprinckler was made) the Interpreters have ever uſed in all languages to call this word Hyſſop. And though we know no proper word for Hyſſop in Hebrew, (for when they finde not a word in the Bible, the Hebrew Rabbins will acknowledge no Hebrew word for any thing) yet the other languages deduced from the Hebrew, Syriaque, and Arabique, have clearly another word for Hyſſop, Zuf; And the Hebrew Rabbins think this word of our text, Ezob, to ſignifie any of three or foure plants, rather then our Hyſſop. But be the plant what it will, the forme and the uſe of that Blood-ſprinkler is manifeſt. In the inſtitution of the Paſſeover, Take a bunch of Hyſſop, and dip it in blood. Exod. 12. Levit. 14. In the cleanſing of the Leper, there was to be the blood of a ſparrow, and then Cedar wood, and ſcarlet lace, and Hyſſop: And about that Cedar ſtick, they bound this Hyſſop with this lace, and ſo made this inſtrument to ſprinkle blood. And ſo the name of the Hyſſop, becauſe it did the principall office, was after given to the whole Inſtrument; all the ſprinkler was called an Hyſſop; As we ſee when they reached up a ſponge of vinegar to Chriſt upon the Croſſe, They put it, ſayes the text, upon Hyſſop, Ioh. 19. 29. that is, upon an Hyſſop; not upon an Hyſſop ſtalke, (as the old tranſlation had it) for no Hyſſop hath ſuch a ſtalke, but they called ſuch ſticks of Cedar, as ordinarily ſerved for the ſprinkling of blood, Hyſſops. And whether this were ſuch a Cedar ſtick, or ſome other ſuch thing, fit to reach up that ſpunge to Chriſt, we cannot ſay. For S. Matthew Mat. 27. 48. calls that, that S. Iohn calls an Hyſſop, a Reed.

Hebrew

This then was Davids petition here; firſt, That hee might have the blood of Chriſt Jeſus applied and ſprinkled upon him; David thought of no election, hee looked for no ſanctification, but in the blood of Chriſt Jeſus. And then he deſired this blood to be applied to him, by that Hyſſope, by that Blood-ſprinkler, which was ordained by God, for the uſe of the Church. Home-infuſions, and inward inſpirations of grace, are powerfull ſeales of Gods love; but all this is but the Privy ſeale, David deſired to bring it to the Great ſeale, the publike Ordinance of the Church. In a caſe of neceſſity God gave his children Manna and Quailes; Ioſh. 5. In caſes of neceſſity God allowes Sermons, and Sacraments at home; But as ſoone as ever they came to the Land of promiſe, the ſame day both Manna and Quailes ceaſed: God hath given us a free and publike paſſage of his Word, and Sacraments, the diet and the ordinary food of our ſouls, and he purges us with that Hyſſope, with the application of his promiſes, with the abſolution of our ſins, with a redintegration into his myſticall body, by the ſeales of reconciliation. And this reconciliation to God, by the blood of Chriſt, applied in the Ordinances of the Church, is that which David begs for his cleanſing, and is the laſt circumſtance of this branch, Purge me with Hyſſope, and I ſhall be cleane.

Cleanſing. This Cleanſing then implies that, which wee commonly call the enwrapping in the Covenant, the breeding in the viſible Church, when God takes a Nation out of the Common, and encloſes it, empailes it for his more peculiar uſe, when God withdrawes us from the impoſſibility, under which the Gentiles ſterve, who heare not Chriſt preached, to live within the ſound of his voyce, and within the reach of our ſpirituall food, the Word and Sacraments. It is that ſtate, which the holy Ghoſt ſo elegantly expreſſes and enlarges, Ezek. 16. That God found Jeruſalem, Her father an Amorite, and her mother an Hittite, none of the ſeed of the faithfull in her; that he found her in Canaan, not ſo much as in a place of true profeſſion; that he found her in her blood, and her navell uncut, ſtill incorporated in her former ſtock; And, The time was a time of love, ſayes God, and I covered thy nakedneſſe, and ſware unto thee, and entred into a covenant with thee, and thou becameſt mine. Will you ſay, this could not be the ſubject of Davids petition, this could not bee the cleanſing that he begged at Gods hand, to bee brought into that Covenant, to bee a member of that Church? for hee was in poſſeſſion of that before. Beloved, how many are borne in this Covenant, and baptized, and catechized in it, and yet fall away? How many have taught, and wrought, and thought in their owne conſcience that they did well, in defence of the Covenant, and yet fell away? And from how many places, which gave light to others, hath God removed the Candleſtick, and left themſelves in darkneſſe? Pſal. 84. 8. Though David ſay, A day in thy Courts is better then a thouſand, (then a thouſand any where elſe) yet he expreſſes his deſire, That hee might continue in that happineſſe all the dayes of his life; It is as fearefull a thing to be removed from the meanes of ſalvation, as never to have had them.

This then is Cleanſing, To be continued in the diſtance, and working of the meanes of cleanſing, that he may alwayes grow under the dew, and breath in the ayre of Gods grace exhibited in his Ordinance. Amongſt the Jewes there were many uncleanneſſes, which did not amount to ſin: They reckon in the Ceremoniall law, at leaſt fifty kinds of uncleanneſſes,

A uncleanneſſes, from which if they neglected to cleanſe themſelves, by thoſe ceremonies which were appropriated to them, then thoſe uncleanneſſes became ſins, and they were put to their ſacrifices, before they could be diſcharged of them. Many levities, many omiſſions, many acts of infirmity might be prevented by conſideration before, or cleanſed by conſideration now, if we did truly value the preſent grace, that is alwayes offered us in theſe the Ordinances of God. What ſin can I be guilty of, that is without example of mercy, in that Goſpel which is preached to me here? But if you will not accept it, when God offers it, you can never have it ſo good cheape, becauſe hereafter you ſhall have this preſent ſin, of refuſing that offer of grace, added to your burthen. Becauſe I have purged thee, & thou waſt not purged, thou ſhalt not be purged any more, til I have cauſed my fury to light upon thee. But ſhall we be purged then? Then, when his fury in any calamity hath lighted upon us? Is not this donec, this untill, ſuch a donec, as donec faciam, Till I make thine ene-
B mies thy footſtoole: Such a donec as the donec peperit, ſhee was a Virgin, Till ſhee brought forth her firſt ſonne? Is it not an everlaſting donec? That we ſhall not be purged till Gods Judgements fall upon us, nor then neither: Phyſicke may be miniſtred too late to worke, and Judgements may fall too late, to ſouple or entender the ſoule: For as wee may die with that Phyſick in our ſtomach, ſo may we be carried to the laſt Judgement, with that former Judgement upon our ſhoulders. And therefore our later Tranſlation hath expreſſed it more fully, Not that that fury ſhall light, but ſhall reſt upon us. Ezek. 24. 13.

This cleanſing therefore, is that diſpoſition, which God by his grace, infuſes into us, That we ſtand in the congregation, and Communion of Saints, capable of thoſe mercies, which God hath by his Ordinance, annexed to theſe meetings; That we may ſo feele at all times when we come hither, ſuch a working of his Hyſſop, ſuch a benefit of his Ordinance, as that we beleeve all our former ſins to be ſo forgiven, as that if God
C ſhould tranſlate us now, this minute, to another life, this Doſis of this purging Hyſſop, received now, had ſo wrought, as that we ſhould be aſſuredly tranſlated into the Kingdome of heaven. This cleanſing applies to us thoſe words of our Saviour, My ſonne, be of good cheare, thy ſinnes are forgiven thee; But yet there is a farther degree of cleaneneſſe expreſſed in Chriſts following words, Goe, and ſin no more; And that grace againſt relapſes, the gift of ſanctification, and perſeverance, is that that David askes in his other Petition, Lava me, Waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter then ſnow.

Here we propoſed firſt the action, Lava, Waſh me. This is more then a ſprinkling, A totall, and intire waſhing; More then being an ordinary partaker of the outward meanes, The Word, and Sacraments; more then a temporary feeling of the benefit thereof in a preſent ſenſe; for it is a building up of habits of religious actions, viſible to others, and it is a holy and firme confidence created in us by the Spirit of God, that we ſhall keepe
D that building in reparation, and goe forward with it to our lives end. It is a waſhing like Naamans in Jordan, to be iterated ſeaven times, ſeaventy ſeaven times, daily, hourly, all our life; A waſhing begun in Baptiſme, purſued in ſweat, in the induſtry of a lawfull calling, continued in teares, for our deficiencies in the workes of our calling, and perchance to bee conſummated in blood, at our deaths. Not ſuch a waſhing, as the Waſhes have, which are thoſe ſands that are overflowed with the Sea at every Tide, and then lie dry, but ſuch a waſhing as the bottome of the Sea hath, that is alwayes equally wet. It is not a ſtillicidium, a ſpout, a ſhowre, a bucket powred out upon us, when we come to Church, a Sabbath-ſanctification, and no more, but a water that enters into every office of out houſe, and waſhes every action proceeding from every faculty of the ſoule. And this is the waſhing, A continuall ſucceſſion of Grace, working effectually to preſent Habits of religious acts, and conſtituting a holy purpoſe of perſevering in them that induces the
E Whiteneſſe, the Candor, the Dealbation that David begs here, Lava & Dealbabor. Lava.

The purging with Hyſſope, which we ſpoke of before, which is the benefit which we have by being bred in a true Church, delivers us from that redneſſe, which is in the earth of which wee are made, from that guiltineſſe, which is by our naturall derivation from our Parents imprinted in us; Baptiſme doth much upon that; but that that is not Red, is not therefore White. But this is our caſe: Our firſt colour was white; God made man righteous. Our redneſſe is from Adam, and the more that redneſſe is waſhed off, the more we returne to our firſt whiteneſſe; And this which is petitioned here, is a waſhing of ſuch perfection, as cleanſes us Ab omni inquinamento, from all filthineſſe of fleſh and ſpirit. Thoſe inquinamenta, which are ordinary, are firſt in the fleſh, Concupiſcence and Dealbabor. 1 Cor. 7. 1.

Gal.5.19. Carnality, and thoſe other, of which the Apoſtle ſayes, The works of the fleſh are manifeſt; And in the ſpirit, they are Murmuring, Diffidence in God, and ſuch others. But beſides theſe, as an over-diligent cleanſing of the Body, and additionall beauty of the Body, is inquinamentum carnis, one of S. Pauls filthineſſes upon the fleſh, ſo an over purifying of the ſpirit, in an uncharitable undervaluing of other men, and in a ſchiſmaticall departing from the unity of the Church, is Inquinamentum ſpiritus: Falſe beauties are a foulneſſe of the body, falſe purity is a foulneſſe of the ſpirit. But the waſhing, that wee ſeeke, cleanſes us Ab omni inquinamento, from all foulneſſe of fleſh and ſpirit. All waters will not cleanſe us, nor all fires dry us, ſo as wee may be cleane, ſmoaky fires will not doe that. A

Ezek.36.25. I will poure cleane water upon you, and you ſhall be cleane. The Sunne produces ſweat upon us, and it dries us too: Zeale cleanſes us; but it muſt be zeale impermixt as the Sun, not mingled with our ſmoaky, ſooty, factious affections. Some Grammarians have noted, the word Waſhing here, to be derived from a word, that ſignifies a Lambe; we muſt be waſhed in the blood of the Lambe, and we muſt be brought to the whiteneſſe, the candor, the ſimplicity of the Lambe; no man is pure, that thinks no man pure but himſelfe. And this whiteneſſe, which is Sanctification in our ſelves, and charitable interpretation of other men, is exalted here to that Superlative, Super Nivem, Waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter then Snow. B

Super nivem. Eſay 1.18. Though your ſins be as Scarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow. Eſay was an Euangelicall Prophet, a propheticall Euangeliſt, and ſpeaks ſtill of the ſtate of the Chriſtian Church. There, by the ordinary meanes exhibited there, our Scarlet ſins are made as white as Snow; And the whiteneſſe of Snow, is a whiteneſſe that no art of man can reach to; So

Marke 9.3. Chriſts garments in his Transfiguration are expreſſed to have beene as white as Snow, ſo, as no Fuller on earth could white them. Nothing in this world can ſend me home in ſuch a whiteneſſe, no morall counſaile, no morall comfort, no morall conſtancy; as Gods Abſolution by his Miniſter, as the profitable hearing of a Sermon, the worthy receiving of the Sacrament do. This is to be as white as ſnow; In a good ſtate for the preſent. But David begs a whiteneſſe above Snow; for Snow melts, and then it is not white; our preſent Sanctification withers, and we loſe that cheereful verdure, the teſtimony of an upright conſcience; And Snow melted, Snow water, is the coldeſt water of all; Devout men departed from their former fervor are the coldeſt and the moſt irreducible to true zeale, true holineſſe. Therefore David who was metall tried ſeven times in the fire, and deſired to be ſuch gold as might be laid up in Gods Treaſury, might conſider, that in tranſmutation of metals, it is not enough to come to a calcination, or a liquefaction of the metall, (that muſt be done) nor to an Ablution, to ſever droſſe from pure, nor to a Tranſmutation, to make it a better metall, but there muſt be a Fixion, a ſettling thereof, ſo that it ſhall not evaporate into nothing, nor returne to his former nature. Therefore he ſaw that he needed not only a liquefaction, a melting into teares, nor only an Ablution, & a Tranſmutation, thoſe he had by this purging and this waſhing, this ſtation in the Church of God, and this preſent Sanctification there, but he needed Fixionem, an eſtabliſhment, which the compariſon of Snow afforded not; That as he had purged him with Hyſſop, and ſo cleanſed him, that is, enwrapped him in the Covenant, and made him a member of the true Church; and there waſhed him ſo, as that he was reſtored to a whiteneſſe, that is, made his Ordinances ſo effectuall upon him, as that then he durſt deliver his ſoule into his hands at that time: So he would exalt that whiteneſſe, above the whiteneſſe of Snow, ſo as nothing might melt it, nothing diſcolour it, but that under the ſeale of his bleſſed Spirit, he might ever dwell in that calme, in that aſſurance, in that acquieſcence, that as he is in a good ſtate this minute, he ſhall be in no worſe, whenſoever God ſhall be pleaſed to tranſlate him. C D E

Concluſio. We end all the Pſalmes in our ſervice, thoſe of Praiſe, and thoſe of Prayer too, with a Gloria Patri, Glory be to the Father, &c. For our concluſion of this Prayer in this Pſalme, we have reſerved a Gloria Patri too, This conſideration for the glory of God, that though in the firſt Part, The Perſons, the perſons were varied, God and man, yet in our ſecond Part, where we conſider the worke, the whole worke is put into Gods hand, and received from Gods hand. Let God be true, and every man a liar; Let God be ſtrong and every man infirme; Let God give, and man but receive. What man that hath no propriety therein, can take a penny out of another mans houſe, or a roote out of his Garden, but the Law will take hold of him? Hath any man a propriety in Grace? what had he to give

for

A for it? Nature? Is Nature equivalent to Grace? No man does refine, and exalt Nature to the height it would beare, but if naturall faculties were exalted to their higheſt, is Nature a fit exchange for Grace? and if it were, is Nature our owne? Why ſhould we be loath to acknowledge to have all our ability of doing good freely from God, and immediately by his grace, when as, even thoſe faculties of Nature, by which we pretend to do the offices of Grace, we have from God himſelfe too? For that queſtion of the Apoſtle involves all, What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? Thy naturall faculties are no more thine owne, then the grace of God is thine owne; I would not be beholden to God for Grace, and I muſt be as much beholden to him for Nature, if Nature do ſupply Grace; Becauſe he hath made thee to be a man, he hath given thee naturall faculties; becauſe he hath vouchſafed thee to be a Chriſtian, he hath given thee meanes of Grace. But, as thy body, conceived in thy Mothers wombe, could not claime a ſoule at Gods hand, nor wiſh a ſoule, no
B nor know that there was a ſoule to be had: So neither by being a man indued with naturall faculties canſt thou claime grace, or wiſh grace; nay thoſe naturall faculties, if they be not pre-tincted with ſome infuſion of Grace before, cannot make thee know what Grace is, or that Grace is. To a child rightly diſpoſed in the wombe, God does give a ſoule; To a naturall man rightly diſpoſed in his naturall faculties, God does give Grace; But that Soule was not due to that child, nor that grace to that man.

Therefore, (as we ſaid at firſt) David does not bring the Hyſſop, and pray God to make the potion, but, Doe thou purge me with Hyſſop, All is thine owne; There was no pre-exiſtent matter in the world, when God made the world; There is no pre-exiſtent merit in man, when God makes him his. David does not ſay, Do thou waſh me, and I will perfect thy worke; Give me my portion of Grace, and I will trouble thee for no more, but deale upon that ſtocke; But Qui ſanctificatur, ſanctificetur adhuc, Let him that is holy be
C more holy, but accept his Sanctification from him, of whom he had his Juſtification; and except he can think to glorifie himſelf becauſe he is ſanctified, let him not think to ſanctifie himſelf becauſe he is juſtified; God does all. Yet thus argues S. Auguſtin upon Davids words, Tuus ſum Domine, Lord I am thine, and therefore ſafer then they, that thinke themſelves their owne. Every man can and muſt ſay, I was thine, Thine by Creation; but few can ſay, I am thine, few that have not changed their Maſter. But how was David his ſo eſpecially? ſayes S. Auguſtine: Quia quæſivi juſtificationes tuas, as it followes there; Becauſe I ſought thy Righteouſneſſe, thy Juſtification. But where did he ſeeke it? Hee ſought it, and he found it in himſelfe. In himſelfe, as himſelfe, there was no good thing to be found, how far ſoever he had ſought: But yet he found a Juſtification, though of Gods whole making, yet in himſelfe.

So then, this is our Act of Recognition, we acknowledge God, and God onely to doe
D all; But we doe not ſo make him Soveraigne alone, as that we leave his preſence naked, and empty; Nor ſo make him King alone, as that we depopulate his Country, and leave him without Subjects; Nor ſo leave all to Grace, as that the naturall faculties of man do not become the ſervants, and inſtruments of that Grace. Let all, that we all ſeeke, be, who may glorifie God moſt; and we ſhall agree in this, That as the Pelagian wounds the glory of God deepely, in making Naturall faculties joynt-Commiſſioners with Grace, ſo do they diminiſh the glory of God too, if any deny naturall faculties to be the ſubordinate ſervants and inſtruments of Grace; for as Grace could not worke upon man to Salvation, if man had not a faculty of will to worke upon, becauſe without that will man were not man; ſo is this Salvation wrought in the will, by conforming this will of man to the will of God, not by extinguiſhing the will it ſelfe, by any force or conſtraint that God imprints in it by his Grace: God ſaves no man without, or againſt his will. Glory be
E to God on high, and on earth Peace, and Good will towards men; And to this God of Glory, the Father, and this God of Peace and reconciliation, the Son, and this God of Good will and love amongſt men, the Holy Ghoſt, be aſcribed all praiſe, &c.

PREBEND
SERMONS
Preached at ## S^t. PAULS.

PREBEND
SERMONS

Preached at

S. PAUL'S.

The firſt of the Prebend of Cheſwicks five Pſalmes; which five are appointed for that Prebend; as there are five other, for every other of our thirty Prebendaries.

SERM. LXV.

Preached at S. Pauls, May 8. 1625.

PSAL. 62. 9.

Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie; To bee laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity.

WE conſider the dignity of the Booke of Pſalmes, either in the whole body together, or in the particular limmes and diſtribution thereof. Of the whole Body, it may be enough to tell you that which S. Baſil ſaith, That if all the other bookes of Scripture could periſh, there remained enough in the booke of Pſalmes for the ſupply of all: And therefore he cals it Amuletum ad profligandum dæmonem; Any Pſalme is Exorciſme enough to expell any Devill, Charme enough to remove any tentation, Enchantment enough to eaſe, nay to ſweeten any tribulation. It is abundantly enough that our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe cites the Pſalmes, not onely as Canonicall Scripture, but as a particular, and entire, and noble limme of that Body; All muſt be fulfilled of me, (ſaith he) which is written in the Law, in the Prophets, and in the Pſalmes. The Law alone was the Sadduces Scripture, they received no more: The Law and the Prophets were (eſpecially) the Scribes Scripture, they interpreted that: The Chriſtians Scripture, in the Old Teſtament, is eſpecially the Pſalmes. For (except the Prophecy of Eſay be admitted into the compariſon) no booke of the Old Teſtament is ſo like a Goſpel, ſo particular in all things concerning Chriſt, as the Pſalmes.

Baſil.

Luk. 24. 44.

So hath the Booke of Pſalmes an eſpeciall dignity in the intire Body, all together. It hath ſo alſo in divers diſtributions thereof into parts. For even amongſt the Jewes themſelves, thoſe fifteen Pſalmes which follow immediatly and ſucceſſively after the 119. Pſalme, were eſpecially diſtinguiſhed, and dignified by the name of Graduall Pſalmes; Whether becauſe they were ſung upon the Degrees and ſtaires aſcending to the Altar, Or becauſe hee that read them in the Temple, aſcended into a higher and more eminent place to reade them, Or becauſe the word Graduall implies a degree of excellency in the Pſalmes themſelves, I diſpute not; But a difference thoſe fifteen Pſalmes ever had above the reſt, in the Jewiſh and in the Chriſtian Church too. So alſo hath there beene a particular dignity aſcribed to thoſe ſeven Pſalmes, which we have ever called the Penitentiall Pſalmes; Of which S. Auguſtine had ſo much reſpect, as that he commanded them to be be written in a great Letter, and hung about the curtaines of his Death-bed within, that hee might give up the ghoſt in contemplation, and meditation of thoſe ſeven Pſalmes. And it hath beene traditionally received, and recommended by good Authors, that that Hymne, which Chriſt and his Apoſtles are ſaid to have ſung after the Inſtitution and celebration of the Sacrament, was a Hymne compoſed of thoſe ſix Pſalmes, which we call the Allelujah Pſalmes, immediatly preceding the hundred and nineteenth. A

Auguſt.

Matt. 26. 30.

So then, in the whole Body, and in ſome particular limmes of the Body, the Church of God hath had an eſpeciall conſideration of the booke of Pſalmes. This Church in which we all ſtand now, and in which my ſelfe, by particular obligation ſerve, hath done ſo too. In this Church, by ancient Conſtitutions, it is ordained, That the whole booke of Pſalmes ſhould every day, day by day bee rehearſed by us, who make the Body of this Church, in the eares of Almighty God. And therefore every Prebendary of this Church, is by thoſe Conſtitutions bound every day to praiſe God in thoſe five Pſalmes which are appointed for his Prebend. And of thoſe five Pſalmes which belong to mee, this, out of which I have read you this Text, is the firſt. And, by Gods grace, (upon like occaſions) I ſhall here handle ſome part of every one of the other foure Pſalmes, for ſome teſtimony, that thoſe my five Pſalmes returne often into my meditation, which I alſo aſſure my ſelfe of the reſt of my brethren, who are under the ſame obligation in this Church. B

Pſalmus integer.

For this whole Pſalme, which is under our preſent conſideration, as Athanaſius amongſt all the Fathers, was moſt curious, and moſt particular, and exquiſite, in obſerving the purpoſe, and uſe of every particular Pſalm, (for to that purpoſe, he goes through them all, in this maner; If thou wilt encourage men to a love, and purſuit of goodneſſe, ſay the firſt Pſalme, and 31. and 140, &c. If thou wilt convince the Jewes, ſay the ſecond Pſalme; If thou wilt praiſe God for things paſt, ſay this, and this, And this, and this if thou wilt pray for future things) ſo for this Pſalme, which we have in hand, he obſerves in it a ſummary abridgement of all; For of this Pſalme he ſayes in generall, Adverſus inſidiantes, Againſt all attempts upon thy body, thy ſtate, thy ſoule, thy fame, tentations, tribulations, machinations, defamations, ſay this Pſalme. As he ſaith before, that in the booke of Pſalmes, every man may diſcerne motus animi ſui, his owne ſinfull inclinations expreſſed, and arme himſelfe againſt himſelfe; ſo in this Pſalme, he may arme himſelfe againſt all other adverſaries of any kinde. And therefore as the ſame Father entitles one Sermon of his, Contra omnes hæreſes, A Sermon for the convincing of all Hereſies, in which ſhort Sermon he meddles not much with particular hereſies, but onely eſtabliſhes the truth of Chriſts Perſon in both natures, which is indeed enough againſt all Hereſies, and in which (that is the conſubſtantiality of Chriſt with the Father, God of God) this Father Athanaſius, hath enlarged himſelfe more then the reſt (inſomuch, that thoſe heretiques which grow ſo faſt, in theſe our dayes, The Socinians, (who deny the Godhead of Chriſt) are more vexed with that Father, then with any other, and call him for Athanaſius, Sathanaſius) As he cals that Sermon, a Sermon againſt all Hereſies, ſo he preſents this Pſalme againſt all Tentations, and Tribulations; Not that therein David puts himſelfe to waigh particular tentations, and tribulations, but that he puts every man, in every triall, to put himſelfe wholly upon God, and to know, that if man cannot helpe him in this world, nothing can; And, for man, Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie; To be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity. C D

Diviſio.

We conſider in the words, The maner, and the matter, How it is ſpoken, And what is ſaid. For the firſt, the maner, this is not abſolutely ſpoken, but comparatively, not peremptorily, but reſpectively, not ſimply, but with relation. The Holy Ghoſt, in Davids mouth, doth not ſay, That man can give no aſſiſtance to man; That man may looke for no helpe from man; But, that God is alwayes ſo preſent, and ſo all-ſufficient, that wee need not doubt of him, nor rely upon any other, otherwiſe then as an inſtrument of his. For that which he had ſpread over all the verſes of the Pſalme before, he ſummes up in the verſe immediatly before the Text, Truſt in God at all times, for hee is a refuge for us; and then, hee ſtrengthens that with this, What would yee prefer before God, or joyne with God? man? what man? Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie; To be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity. E

Which words being our ſecond part, open to us theſe ſteps: Firſt, that other Doctrins, morall or civill Inſtructions may be delivered to us poſſibly, and probably, and likely, and

A and credibly, and under the like termes, and modifications, but this in our Text, is Aſſuredly, undoubtedly, undeniably, irrefragably, Surely men of low degree, &c. For howſoever when they two are compared together, with one another, it may admit diſcourſe and diſputation, whether men of high degree, or of low degree doe moſt violate the lawes of God; that is, whether proſperity or adverſity make men moſt obnoxious to ſin, yet, when they come to bee compared, not with one another, but both with God, this aſſeveration, this ſurely reaches to both; Surely, The man of low degree is vanity, and, as Surely, The man of high degree is a lie. And though this may ſeeme to leave ſome roome, for men of middle ranks, and fortunes, and places, That there is a mediocrity, that might give an aſſurance, and an eſtabliſhment, yet there is no ſuch thing in this caſe, for (as ſurely ſtill) to be laid in the balance, they are all, (not all of low, and all of high degree, all rich, and all poore, but) All, of all conditions, altogether lighter then vanity.

B Now, all this doth not deſtroy, not extinguiſh, not annihilate that affection in man, of hope, and truſt, and confidence in any thing; but it rectifies that hope, and truſt, and confidence, and directs it upon the right object: Truſt not in fleſh, but in ſpirituall things, That wee neither bend our hopes downeward, to infernall ſpirits, to ſeeke help in Witches; nor miſ-carry it upward, to ſeeke it in Saints, or Angels, but fix it in him, who is nearer us then our owne ſoules, our bleſſed, and gracious, and powerfull God, who in this one Pſalme is preſented unto us, by ſo many names of aſſurance and confidence, My expectation, my ſalvation, my rocke, my defence, my glory, my ſtrength, my refuge, and the reſt.

1 Part. Quid homo erga Deum.

First then theſe words, Surely men of low degree, and men of high degree are vanity, are not abſolutely, ſimple, unconditionally ſpoken; Man is not nothing: Nay, it is ſo farre from that, as that there is nothing but man. As, though there may bee many other creatures living, which were not derived from Eve, and yet Eve is called Mater viventium, C The Mother of all that live, becauſe the life of none but man, is conſidered; ſo there bee ſo many other Creatures, and Chriſt ſends his Apoſtles to preach, Omni Creaturæ, to every creature, yet he meanes none but Man. All that God did in making all other creatures, in all the other dayes, was but a laying in of Materials; The ſetting up of the work was in the making of Man. God had a picture of himſelfe from all eternity; from all eternity, the Sonne of God was the Image of the inviſible God; But then God would have one picture, which ſhould bee the picture of Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt too, and ſo made man to the Image of the whole Trinity. As the Apoſtle argues, Cui dixit, To whom did God ever ſay, This day have I begotten thee, but to Chriſt? ſo we ſay, for the dignity of man, Cui dixit, of what creature did God ever ſay, Faciamus, Let us, us make it, All, all, the Perſons together, and to imploy, and exerciſe, not onely Power, but D Counſaile in the making of that Creature? Nay, when man was at worſt, he was at a high price; man being fallen, yet then, in that undervalue, he coſt God his own and onely Son, before he could have him. Neither became the Son of God capable of redeeming man, by any leſſe, or any other way, then by becomming man. The Redeemer muſt be better then he whom he is to redeeme; and yet, he muſt abaſe himſelfe to as low a nature as his; to his nature; elſe he could not redeeme him. God was aliened from man, and yet God muſt become man, to recover man.

Gen. 3. 20.

Luke 16. 15.

Coloſ. 1. 15.

Heb. 1. 5.

God joyned man in Commiſſion with himſelfe, upon his Creation, in the Replete and Dominamini, when he gave Man power to poſſeſſe the Earth, and ſubdue the Creature; And God hath made man ſo equall to himſelfe, as not onely to have a ſoule endleſſe and immortall, as God himſelfe, (though not endleſſe and immortall as himſelfe, yet endleſſe and immortall as himſelfe too, though not immortall the ſame way, (for Gods immortality is of himſelfe) yet as certainly, and as infallibly Immortall as he) but God E hath not onely given man ſuch an immortall ſoule, but a body that ſhall put on Incorruption and Immortality too, which he hath given to none of the Angels. In ſo much, that howſoever it be, whether an Angel may wiſh it ſelfe an Archangel, or an Archangel wiſh it ſelfe a Cherubin; yet man cannot deliberately wiſh himſelfe an Angel, becauſe he ſhould loſe by that wiſh, and lacke that glory, which he ſhall have in his body. We ſhall be like the Angels, ſayes Chriſt; In that wherein we can be like them, we ſhall be like them, in the exalting and refining of the faculties of our ſoules; But they ſhall never attaine to be like us in our glorified bodies. Neither hath God onely reſerved this treaſure and dignity of man to the next world, but even here he hath made him filium Dei, The

Gen. 1. 28.

Marke 12. 25.

Luke 6. 35.

1 Joh. 3. 9. 2 Pet. 1. 4. The Sonne of God, and Semen Dei, The ſeed of God, and Conſortem divinæ naturæ, Partaker of the divine Nature, and Deos ipſos, Gods themſelves, for Ille dixit Dii eſtis, he hath ſaid we are Gods. So that, as though the glory of heaven were too much for God alone, God hath called up man thither, in the aſcenſion of his Sonne, to partake thereof; and as though one God were not enough for the adminiſtration of this world, God hath multiplied gods here upon Earth, and imparted, communicated, not onely his power to every Magiſtrate, but the Divine nature to every ſanctified man. David asks that queſtion with a holy wonder, Quid eſt homo? What is man that God is ſo mindfull of him? But I may have his leave, and the holy Ghoſts, to ſay, ſince God is ſo mindfull of him, ſince God hath ſet his minde upon him, What is not man? Man is all. A

Since we conſider men in the place that they hold, and value them according to thoſe places, and aske not how they got thither, when we ſee Man made The Love of the Father, The Price of the Sonne, The Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, The Signet upon Gods hand, The Apple of Gods eye, Abſolutely, unconditionally we cannot annihilate man, not evacuate, not evaporate, not extenuate man to the levity, to the vanity, to the nullity of this Text (Surely men altogether, high and low, are lighter then vanity.) For, man is not onely a contributary Creature, but a totall Creature; He does not onely make one, but he is all; He is not a piece of the world, but the world it ſelfe; and next to the glory of God, the reaſon why there is a world. B

Quid homo ergo hominem. But we muſt not determine this conſideration here, That man is ſomething, a great thing, a noble Creature, if we refer him to his end, to his intereſt in God, to his reverſion in heaven; But, when we conſider man in his way, man amongſt men, man is not nothing, not unable to aſſiſt man, not unfit to be relyed upon by man; for, even in that reſpect alſo, God hath made Hominem homini Deum, He hath made one man able to doe the offices of God to another, in procuring his regeneration here, and advancing his ſalvation hereafter; As he ſayes, Saviours ſhall come up on Mount Sion; which is the Church. Neither hath God determined that power of aſſiſting others, in the Character of Prieſthood onely, (that the Prieſt ſhould be a god, that is, doe the offices and the work of God to the people, by delivering ſalvation unto them) but he hath alſo made the Prince, and the ſecular Magiſtrate, a god, that is able to doe the offices, and the works of God, not onely to the people, but to the Prieſt himſelfe, to ſuſtaine him, yea, and to countenance, and favour, and protect him too, in the execution and exerciſe of his prieſtly office; As we ſee in the firſt plantation of thoſe two great Cedars, The Secular, and the Eccleſiaſticall Power, (which, that they might alwayes agree like brethren, God planted at firſt in thoſe two brethren, Moſes and Aaron) There, though Moſes were the temporall, and Aaron the ſpirituall Magiſtrate, yet God ſayes to Moſes, I have made thee a God to Pharaoh, (but not onely to Pharaoh) but Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy Prophet; for, (as he had ſaid before) Thou ſhalt be to him inſtead of a God. So uſefull, ſo neceſſary is man to man, as that the Prieſt, who is of God, incorporated in God, ſubſiſts alſo by man; for, Principes hujus ſeculi rationem reddituri ſunt, The Princes of this world muſt give God an account, Propter Eccleſiam, quam à Chriſto tuendam ſuſceperunt, for that Church, which Chriſt hath committed to their protection. In ſpirituall difficulties, and for ſpirituall duties, God ſends us to the Prieſt; but to ſuch a Prieſt as is a man; and (as our comfort is expreſſed) A Prieſt which was touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and was in all points tempted like as we are: for the buſineſſes of this world, Rights, and Titles, and Proprieties, and Poſſeſſions, God ſends us ſtill to the Judge; (Judges and officers ſhalt thou make in all thy gates) Judges to try between man and man; And the ſword in battaile tryes between State and State, Prince and Prince; And therefore God commands and directs the levying of men to that purpoſe, in many places of the hiſtory of his people; particularly God appoints Gideon to take a certaine proportion of the army, a certaine number of Souldiers. And in another place, there goes out a preſſe for Souldiers from Moſes mouth; He preſſes them upon their holy allegeance to God, when he ſayes, Who is on the Lords ſide, let him come unto me. So, in infirmities, in ſickneſſes of the body, we aske with the Prophet, Is there no balme in Gilead? Is there no Phyſitian there? God does not reprove Aſa for ſeeking of helpe of the Phyſitians; but the increpation lyes onely upon this, That he ſought to the Phyſitian, and not to the Lord. God ſends man to the Prieſt, to the Prince, to the Judge, to the Phyſitian, to the Souldier, and ſo, (in other places) to the Merchant, and to cunning Artificers, (as in the building of the Temple)

Exod. 7. 1. Exod. 4. 16. Iſidor. Heb. 4. 15. Deut. 16. 18. Judg. 6. Exod. 32. 26. Jer. 8. 22. 2 Chro. 16. 12. C D E

A ple) that all that man needs might be communicated to man by man.

So that ſtill, ſimply, abſolutely, unconditionally, we cannot ſay, Surely, men, men altogether, high or low, or meane, all are leſſe then vanity. And ſurely they that pervert and detort ſuch words as theſe, to ſuch a uſe, and argue from thence, Man is nothing, no more then a worme or a fly, and therefore what needs this ſolemne conſideration of mans actions, it is all one what he does, for all his actions, and himſelfe too are nothing; They doe this but to juſtifie or excuſe their own lazineſſe in this world, in paſſing on their time, without taking any Calling, embracing any profeſſion, contributing any thing to the ſpirituall edification, or temporall ſuſtentation of other men. But take the words, as the Holy Ghoſt intends them, comparatively, what man compared with God, or what man conſidered without God, can doe any thing for others, or for himſelfe? When the Apoſtle ſayes, That all the world is but dung, when the Prophet ſayes, Phil. 3. 8.

B That all the Nations of the world are leſſe then nothing, when the Apoſtle ſayes even of Eſay 40. 15.
himſelfe, that he is nothing, all this is nothing in compariſon of that expreſſion in the ſame 2 Cor. 12. 11.
Apoſtle, That even the preaching of the Goſpel is fooliſhneſſe, That that which is the favour 1 Cor. 1. 21.
of life unto life, Gods owne Ordinance, Preaching, is but fooliſhneſſe; Let it be a Paul that plants, and an Apollo that waters, if God give not increaſe, all is but frivolouſneſſe, but fooliſhneſſe; And therefore boldly, confidently, uncontroulably we may proceed to the propoſitions of our Text, which conſtitute our ſecond part, Man, any man, every man, all men, collectively, diſtributively, conſidered ſo, (comparatiuely with God, or privatively without God) is but a lie, but vanity, leſſe then vanity.

To make our beſt uſe of the words, (as our tranſlation exhibits them) we make our 2 Part. Surely.
entrance, with this word of confidence, and infallibility, which onely becomes the holy
C Ghoſt, in his aſſeverations, and in which he eſtabliſhes the propoſitions following; Surely, ſurely men of low degree, and as ſurely, men of high, and, ſurely ſtill all men together, are lighter then vanity. Men deliver their aſſertions otherwiſe modified, and under other qualifications. They obtrude to us miraculous doctrines of Tranſubſtantiation, and the like, upon a poſſibility onely; It may be done, ſay they, It is poſſible, God can doe it. But that is far from the aſſuredneſſe of the Holy Ghoſt, Surely it is ſo; for Aſylum hæreticorum, eſt omnipotentia Dei, is excellently ſaid, and by more then one of the Fathers, The omnipotence of God is the Sanctuary of Heretiques, Thither they fly, to countenance any ſuch error; This God can doe, why ſhould you not beleeve it? Men proceed in their aſſeverations farther then ſo, from this poſſibility to a probability; It will abide argument, it hath been diſputed in the Schoole, and therefore is probable; why ſhould not you beleeve it? And ſo they offer us the doctrine of the immaculate conception of the bleſſed Virgin without Originall ſinne; But this probability reaches not to D this aſſuredneſſe of our text, ſurely. They will goe farther then this probability, to a veriſimilitude, it is more then meerly poſſible, more then fairly probable, it is likely to be ſo; ſome of the ancient Fathers have thought ſo; and then, why ſhould not you beleeve it? and ſo they offer us prayer for the dead. Farther then this veriſimilitude they goe too; They goe to a Piè creditur, It may be piouſly beleeved, and it is fit to beleeve it, becauſe it may aſſiſt and exalt devotion to thinke ſo; And then why ſhould you not beleeve it? And ſo they offer us the worſhip of Images and Reliques. But ſtill, all this comes ſhort of our aſſuredneſſe, Surely, undoubtedly, undiſputably it is ſo. Chryſoſt.

And when the Romane Church would needs counterfeit the language of the Holy Ghoſt, and pronounce this ſureneſſe upon ſo many new Articles in the Councell of Trent, it hath not proſpered well with them; for we all know, they have repented that forwardneſſe ſince, and wiſhed they had not determined ſo many particulars to be matter
E of faith, becauſe after ſuch a determination by a Councell, they have bound themſelves not to recede from thoſe doctrines, how unmaintenable ſoever they be in themſelves, or how inconvenient ſoever they fall out to be to them. And therefore we ſee, that in all the ſolicitations that can be uſed, even by Princes, to whom they are moſt affected, they will not come now to pronounce ſo ſurely, to determine ſo poſitively upon divers points that reſt yet in perplexity amongſt them. Which hath rayſed ſo many commotions in the kingdome of Spaine, and put more then one of their later Kings, to ſend divers Ambaſſages to Rome, to ſolicite a cleare declaration in that point, but could never, nor can yet attaine it, that is, The immaculate conception of the bleſſed Virgin without Originall ſinne. So alſo, for the obligation that the lawes of ſecular Magiſtrates lay upon on the Conſcience, ſo alſo for the Concurrence of Grace, and Free-will, and divers o- A thers; in which they will not be drawne to this, Surely, to determine and declare of either ſide; for, indeed that is the language of the Holy Ghoſt.

It hath been obſerved amongſt Philoſophers, that Plato ſpeaks probably, and Ariſto- tle poſitively; Platoes way is, It may be thus, and Ariſtotles, It muſt be thus. The like hath been noted amongſt Divines, between Calvin, and Melanchton; Calvin will ſay, Videtur, It ſeemes to be thus, Melanchton, It can be no otherwiſe but thus. But the beſt men are but Problematicall, Onely the Holy Ghoſt is Dogmaticall; Onely he ſubſcribes this ſurely, and onely he ſeales with Infallibility. Our dealings are appointed to be in yea, 2 Cor. 1. 20. yea, and nay, nay, and no farther; But all the promiſes of God are yea, and Amen, that is,
Rev. 3. 14. ſurely, verily; for that is his Name; Theſe things ſaith The Amen, He that is Amen.
And it is not (I hope) an impertinent note, That that Euangeliſt S. Iohn, who conſiders the Divinity of Chriſt, more then the other Euangeliſts doe, does evermore, conſtantly, B without any change, double that which was Chriſts ordinary aſſeveration, Amen. As oft as the other Euangeliſts mention it in Chriſts mouth, ſtill they expreſſe it with one A- men, verily I ſay; S. Iohn alwayes, Amen, Amen, verily, verily, it is thus and thus. The nearer we come to the conſideration of God, the farther we are removed from all contingencies, and all inclination to Error, and the more is this Amen, verily, ſurely, multiplied and eſtabliſhed unto us.

It is in doctrines and opinions, as it is in deſignes and purpoſes; Goe to, (ſayes the Prophet, by way of reprehenſion) Goe to, you that ſay, we will goe to ſuch a City, and trade thus and thus there, &c. So, goe to, you that pronounce upon every invention, and Tradition of your own, a Quicunque vult ſalvus eſſe, Whoſoever will be ſaved, muſt beleeve this, and clogge every problematicall propoſition with an Anathema, Curſed be he, Excommunicated he that thinks the contrary to this; Goe to you, that make matters of faith C of the paſſions of men. So alſo, goe to you that proceed and continue in your ſinnes, and ſay, Surely I ſhall have time enough to repent hereafter. Goe to you that in a ſpirituall and irreligious melancholy and diffidence in Gods mercy, ſay, Surely the Lord hath locked up his mercy from me, ſurely I ſhall never ſee that Sunne more, never receive, never feele beame of his mercy more, but paſſe through this darkneſſe into a worſe.
This word, ſurely, in ſuch caſes, in ſuch ſenſes, is not your mothers tongue, not the language of the Chriſtian Church. She teaches you, to condition all in Chriſt; In him you are enabled to doe all things, and without him nothing. But abſolutely, unconditionally, this ſurely is appropriated to the propoſitions, to the aſſertions of God himſelfe; And ſome of thoſe follow in this text.

Comparatio
Divitis &
Pauperis.

Now that which the Holy Ghoſt preſents here upon this aſſuredneſſe, is, That men of low degree are vanity, and that men of high degree are a lie; Theſe are both ſure, and alike D ſure. It is true that it conſtitutes a Probleme, that it admits a Diſcourſe, it will abide a debatement, whether men of high degree, or of low degree be worſt; whether riches or poverty, (both conſidered in a great meaſure, very rich, and very poore) Proſperity or Adverſity occaſion moſt ſinnes. Though God call upon us in every leafe of the Scripture, to pity the poore, and relieve the poore, and ground his laſt Judgement upon our Mat. 25. 34. works of mercy, (Becauſe you have fed and clothed the poore, inherit the kingdome) yet, as the rich and the poore ſtand before us now, (as it were in Judgement) as we inquire and heare evidence, which ſtates moſt obnoxious, and open to moſt ſinnes, we embrace, Exod. 23. 3. and apply to our ſelves that law, Thou ſhalt not countenance a poore man in his cauſe; And Levit. 19. 15. (as it is repeated) Thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poore in Iudgement.

There is then a poverty, which, without all queſtion, is the direct way to heaven;
Mat. 5. 3. but that is ſpirituall; Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit. This poverty is humility, it is not beg- E gary. A rich man may have it, and a beggar may be without it. The Wiſeman found Ecclus 25. 2. not this poverty, (not humility) in every poore man. He found three ſorts of men, whom his ſoule hated; And one of the three, was a poore man that is proud. And Eſay 51. 21. when the Prophet ſaid of Jeruſalem in her afflictions, Paupercula es & ebria. Thou art poore, and miſerable, and yet drunke, though (as he addes there) it were not with wine, (which is now, in our dayes an ordinary refuge of men of all ſorts, in all ſadneſſes and croſſes to relieve themſelves upon wine and ſtrong drinke, which are indeed ſtrong illu-ſions) yet, though Jeruſalems drunkenneſſe were not with wine, it was worſe; It was a ſtaggering, a vertiginouſneſſe, an ignorance, a blindneſſe, a not diſcerning the wayes to God;

A God; which is the worſt drunkenneſſe, and fals often upon the poore and afflicted, That their poverty and affliction ſtaggers them, and damps them in their recourſe to God, ſo far, as that they know not, That they are miſerable, and wretched, and poore, and blinde, and naked. The Holy Ghoſt alwaies makes the danger of the poore great, as well as of the rich. The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong City. There is his fault, his confidence in that; But Pavor pauperum, The deſtruction of the poore is his poverty; There is his fault, Deſperation under it. Solomon preſents them, as equally dangerous, Give me neither poverty, nor riches. So does Booz to Ruth, Bleſſed be thou of the Lord, my daughter, in as much as thou followedſt not young men, whether poore, or rich. That which Booz intended there, Incontinency, and all vices that ariſe immediately out of the corruption of nature, and are not induced by other circumſtances, have as much inclination from poverty, as from riches. May we not ſay, more? I doubt we may. He muſt be a very ſanctified man, whom extreame pover-
B ty, and other afflictions, doe not decline towards a jealouſie, and a ſuſpicion, and a diſtruſting of God; And then, the ſins that bend towards deſperation, are ſo much more dangerous, then thoſe that bend towards preſumption, that he that preſumes, hath ſtill mercy in his contemplation, He does not thinke, that he needs no mercy, but that mercy is eaſily had; He beleeves there is mercy, he doubts not of that; But the deſpairing man imagines a cruelty, an unmercifulneſſe in God, and deſtroyes the very nature of God himſelfe. Riches is the Metaphor, in which, the Holy Ghoſt hath delighted to expreſſe God and Heaven to us; Deſpiſe not the riches of his goodneſſe, ſayes the Apoſtle; And againe, O the depth of the riches of his wiſdome; And ſo, after, The unſearchable riches of Chriſt; And for the conſummation of all, The riches of his Glory, Gods goodneſſe towards us in generall, our Religion in the way, his Grace here, his Glory hereafter, are all repreſented to us in Riches. With poverty God ordinarily accompanies his comminations; he
C threatens feebleneſſe, and warre, and captivity, and poverty every where, but he never threatens men with riches.

Rom. 2. 4. 11. 33. Ephes. 3. 8. ver. 16.

Ordinary poverty, (that is a difficulty, with all their labors, and induſtry to ſuſtaine their family, and the neceſſary duties of their place) is a ſhrewd, and a ſlippery tentation. But for that ſtreet-beggery, which is become a Calling, (for Parents bring up their children to it, nay they doe almoſt take prentiſes to it, ſome expert beggers teach others what they ſhall ſay, how they ſhall looke, how they ſhall lie, how they ſhall cry) for theſe, whom our lawes call Incorrigible, I muſt ſay of them (in a juſt accommodation of our Saviours words, It is not meet to take the childrens bread, and to caſt it to dogs) It is not meet, that this vermin ſhould devoure any of that, which belongs to them who are truely poore. Neither is there any meaſure, any proportion of riches, that expoſes man naturally to ſo much ſin, as this kinde of beggery doth. Rich men forget, or neglect the D duties of their Baptiſme; but of theſe, how many are there, that were never baptized? Rich men ſleepe out Sermons, but theſe never come to Church: Rich men are negligent in the practiſe, but theſe are ignorant in all knowledge.

Matt. 25. 26.

It would require a longer diſquiſition, then I can afford to it now, whether Riches, or Poverty (conſidered in leſſer proportions, ordinary riches, ordinary poverty) open us to more, and worſe ſins; But conſider them in the higheſt and in the loweſt, abundant riches, beggerly poverty, and it will ſcarce admit doubt, but that the incorrigible vagabond is farther from all wayes of goodneſſe, then the corrupteſt rich man is. And therefore labour wee all earneſtly in the wayes of ſome lawfull calling, that we may have our portion of this world by good meanes. For firſt, the advantages of doing good to others in a reall reliefe of their wants, is in the rich onely, whereas the beſt way of a good poore man, to doe good to others, is but an exemplary patience, to catechize others by his ſuf-
E fering; And then, all degrees of poverty are dangerous and ſlippery, even to a murmuring againſt God, or an invading of the poſſeſſions, and goods of other men, but eſpecially the loweſt, the deſperate degree of beggery, and then eſpecially, when we cannot ſay it is inflicted by the hand of God, but contracted by our owne lazineſſe, or our owne waſtfulneſſe.

This is a problematicall, a diſputable caſe, Whether riches or poverty occaſion moſt ſins. And becauſe on both ſides there ariſe good doctrines of edification, I have thus far willingly ſtopped upon that diſputable conſideration. But now, that which wee receive here, upon Davids, upon the Holy Ghoſts ſecurity, Surely it is thus, It is ſurely ſo, is this, That we ſhall be deceived, if we put our truſt in men; for, what ſort of men would we truſt? Surely men of low degree are vanity. And this, if it be taken of particular men, needs no proving, no illuſtrating, no remembring. Every man ſees and acknowledges, that to rely upon a man of no power, of no place, no blood, no fortune, no friends, no favour, is a vanity, Surely men of low degree are vanity. The firſt younger brother that was borne in the world, becauſe he was leſſe then another, is called by the very name of vanity; The eldeſt brother Cain ſignifies poſſeſſion, but Abel is vanity. A

Men of low degree.

But take it of a whole body of ſuch men, Men of low degree, and it is ſo too; the Applauſe of the people is vanity, Popularity is vanity. At how deare a rate doth that man buy the peoples affections, that payes his owne head for their hats? How cheaply doth he ſell his Princes favour, that hath nothing for it, but the peoples breath? And what age doth not ſee ſome examples of ſo ill merchants of their owne honours and lives too? How many men, upon confidence of that flattering gale of winde, the breath and applauſe of the people, have taken in their anchors, (that is, departed from their true, and ſafe hold, The right of the Law, and the favour of the Prince) and as ſoone as they hoyſed their ſailes, (that is, entred into any by-action) have found the wind in their teeth, that is, Thoſe people whom they truſted in, armed againſt them. And as it is in Civill, and Secular, ſo it is in Eccleſiaſticall, and Spirituall things too. How many men, by a popular hunting after the applauſe of the people, in their manner of preaching, and humouring them in their diſtempers, have made themſelves incapable of preferment in the Church where they tooke their Orders, and preached themſelves into a neceſſity of running away into forraine parts, that are receptacles of ſeditious and ſchiſmaticall Separatiſts, and have been put there, to learne ſome trade, and become Artificers for their ſuſtentation? The ſame people that welcommed Chriſt, from the Mount of Olives, into Jeruſalem, upon Sunday, with their Hoſannaes to the Sonne of David, upon Friday mocked him in Jeruſalem, with their Haile King of the Iewes, and blew him out of Jeruſalem to Golgotha, with the peſtilent breath, with the tempeſtuous whirlwind of their Crucifige's. And of them, who have called the Maſter Beelzebub, what ſhall any ſervant looke for? Surely men of low degree are vanity. B C

Matt. 21. 9.

Matt. 10. 25.

High degree

And then, under the ſame oath, and aſſeveration, Surely, as ſurely as the other, men of high degree are a lie. Doth David meane theſe men, whom he calls a lie, to be any leſſe then thoſe whom hee called vanity? Leſſe then vanity, then emptineſſe, then nothing, nothing can be; And low, and high are to this purpoſe, and in this conſideration, (compared with God, or conſidered without God) equally nothing. He that hath the largeſt patrimony, and ſpace of earth, in the earth, muſt heare me ſay, That all that was nothing; And if he ask, But what was this whole Kingdom, what all Europe, what all the World? It was all, not ſo much as another nothing, but all one and the ſame nothing as thy dunghill was. But yet the Holy Ghoſt hath beene pleaſed to vary the phraſe here, and to call Men of high degree, not vanity, but a lie, becauſe the poore, men of low degree, in their condition promiſe no aſſiſtance, feed not men with hopes, and therefore cannot be ſaid to lie, but in the condition of men of high degree, who are of power, there is a tacit promiſe, a naturall and inherent aſſurance of protection, and aſſiſtance, flowing from them. For, the Magiſtrate cannot ſay, That he never promiſed me Juſtice, never promiſed mee Protection; for in his aſſuming that place, he made me that promiſe. I cannot ſay, that I never promiſed my Pariſh, my ſervice; for in my Induction, I made them that promiſe, and if I performe it not, I am a lie; for ſo this word Chaſab (which we tranſlate a lie) is frequently uſed in the Scriptures, for that which is defective in the duty it ſhould performe; Thou ſhalt bee a ſpring of water, (ſayes God in Eſay) Cujus aqua non mentiuntur, whoſe waters never lie, that is, never dry, never faile. D

Eſay 58. 11.

So then, when men of high degree doe not performe the duties of their places, then they are a lie of their owne making; And when I over-magnifie them in their place, flatter them, humor them, aſcribe more to them, expect more from them, rely more upon them, then I ſhould, then they are a lie of my making. But whether the lie be theirs, That they feare greater men then themſelves, and ſo prevaricate in their duties; Or the lie be mine, that canonize them and make them my God, they, and I ſhall be diſappointed; for, Surely men of high degree are a lie. But we are upon a Sermon, not upon a Satyr, therefore we paſſe from this. E

Mediocrity.

And, for all this, there may ſeeme to be roome left for the Middle-ſtate, for a mediocrity; when it is not ſo low as to be made the ſubject of oppreſſion, nor ſo high as to be made

A made the object of ambition, when it is neither exposed to scorne and contempt, nor to envy, and undermining, may we not then trust upon, not rest in such a condition? Indeed, this mediocrity seemes (and justly) the safest condition; for this, and this onely enjoyes it selfe: The lazy man gets not up to it; The stirring man stayes not at it, but is gone beyond it. From our first Themes at Schoole, to our Texts in the Pulpit, we continue our praysing and perswading of this mediocrity. A man may have too much of any thing; Anima saturata, A full soule will tread hony under his feete; He may take in know- Prov. 27. 7.
ledge till he be ignorant; Let the Prophet Ieremy give the Rule, Stultus factus est omnis Ier. 10, 14.
homo à scientia, Every man becomes a foole by knowledge, by over-weening, and over-valuing his knowledge; And let Adam be the example of this Rule, His eyes were opened by eating the fruit, and he knew so much, as he was ashamed of it; Let the Apostle be the Physitian, the moderator, Sapere ad sobrietatem, not to dive into secrets, and unrevealed Rom. 12. 3.
B mysteries. There is enough of this doctrine involved in the fable, Acteon saw more then he should have seene, and perished. There is abundantly enough expressed in the Oracle of Truth, Vzza was over-zealous in an office that appertained not to him, in assisting the 2 Sam. 6. 6.
Arke, and suffered for that.

We may quickly exceed a mediocrity, even in the praise of Mediocrity. But all our diligence will scarce finde it out. What is mediocrity? Or where is it? In the Hierarchy of the Roman Church they never thought of this mediocrity; They go very high, and very low, but there is no meane station; I meane no denomination of any Order from meanneſse, from mediocrity. In one degree you finde embroydered shooes, for Kings to kisse, and in another degree bare feet; we finde an Order of the Society of Iesus; and that is very high, for, Society implies community, partnership; And we finde low descents, Minorits, men lesse then others, And Minims, least of all men; and lower then all them,
C Nullans, men that call themselves, Nothing; And truly, this Order, best of all others hath answered and justified the name, for, very soone, they came to nothing. Wee finde all extreames amongst them, even in their names, but none denominated from this mediocrity.

But to passe from names to the thing; indeed what is Mediocrity? where is it? Is it the same thing as Competency? But what is competency? or where is that? Is it that which is sufficient for thy present degree? perchance thy present degree is not sufficient for thee; Thy charge perchance, perchance thy parts and abilities, or thy birth and education may require a better degree. God produced plants in Paradise therefore, that they might grow; God hath planted us in this world, that we might grow; and he that does not endeavour that by all lawfull meanes, is inexcusable, as well as he that pursues unlawfull. But, if I come to imagine such a mediocrity, such a competency, such a suffi-
D ciency in my selfe, as that I may rest in that, that I thinke I may ride out all stormes, all dis-favours, that I have enough of mine owne, wealth, health, or morall constancy, if any of these decay, this is a verier vanity, then trusting in men of low degree, and a verier lye, then men of high degree; for, this is to trust to our selves; this is a sacrificing to our Habbak. 1. 16.
owne nets, our owne industry, our owne wisdome, our owne fortune; And of all the Idolatries of the Heathen, who made Gods of every thing they saw or imagined, of every thing, in, and betweene Heaven and hell, we reade of no man that sacrificed to himselfe. Indeed no man flatters me so dangerously, as I flatter my selfe, no man wounds me so desperately, as I wound my selfe; And therefore, since this which we call Mediocrity, and Competency is conditioned so, that it is enough to subsist alone, without relation to others, dependency upon others, feare from others, induces a confidence, a relying upon my selfe; As, that which we imagine to be the middle region of the ayre, is the coldest of E all, So this imagined mediocrity, that induces a confidence in our selves, is the weakest rest, the coldest comfort of all, and makes me a lye to my selfe. Therefore may the Prophet well spread, and safely extend his asseveration, his Surely, upon all, high, and low, and meane; Surely to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity.

Here then, upon a full enumeration of all parts, the Prophet concludes upon all. If Lighter then vanity.
therefore thou have the favour of great ones, the applause of the people, confidence in thy selfe, in an instant, the power of those great ones may be overthrowne, or their favour to thee withdrawne from thee, (and so, that bladder is pricked, upon which thou swommest) The applause of the people may be hushed and silenced, (either they would not, or they dare not magnifie thee) And, thine owne constancy may be turned into a dejection of ſpirit, and conſternation of all thy faculties. Put all together, (which fals out ſeldome, that any man can do ſo) but if he can do that, (which is the beſt ſtate of man, that can be imagined in this world, that he hath all theſe together, the favour of High and low, and of himſelfe, that is, his owne teſtimony in his conſcience, (though perchance an erring, a miſtaking conſcience) yet, the Prophet had delivered the ſame aſſurance before (even of that ſtate of man, which is rather imagined, then ever poſſeſt) Surely every man, at his beſt ſtate, is altogether vanity; And here, he adds, lighter then vanity. Vanity is nothing, but there is a condition worſe then nothing. Confidence in the things, or perſons of this world, but moſt of all, a confidence in our ſelves, will bring us at laſt to that ſtate, wherein we would faine be nothing, and cannot. But yet, we have a balance in our text; And all theſe are but put together in one balance. In the other ſcale there is ſomething put to, in compariſon whereof all this world is ſo light. God does not leave our great and noble faculty, and affection of hope, and truſt, and confidence, without ſomething to direct it ſelfe upon, and rectifie it ſelfe in. He does not; for, for that he propoſes himſelfe; The words immediately before the text, are, God is a refuge; and in compariſon of him, To be laid in the balance, Surely they are altogether lighter then vanity.

Pſal. 39. 5.

Deus omnia.

So then, it is not enough not to truſt in the fleſh (for, for that, Curſed be man, that truſted in man, or maketh fleſh his arme; Their fleſh cannot ſecure thee, neither is thine owne fleſh braſſe, that thou canſt endure the vexations of this world, neither can fleſh and blood reveale unto thee the things of the next world) It is not enough not to truſt in fleſh, but thou muſt truſt in that that is Spirit. And when thou art to direct thy truſt upon him, who is ſpirit, the ſpirit of power, and of conſolation, ſtop not, ſtray not, divert not upon evill ſpirits, to ſeeke advancement, or to ſeeke knowledge from them, nor upon good ſpirits, the glorious Saints of GOD in Heaven, to ſeeke ſalvation from them, nor upon thine owne ſpirit, in an over-valuation of thy purity, or thy merits. For, there is a peſtilent pride in an imaginary humility, and an infectious foulneſſe in an imaginary purity; but turne onely to the onely inviſible and immortall God, who turnes to thee, in ſo many names and notions of power, and conſolation, in this one Pſalme. In the laſt verſe but one of this Pſalme, David ſayes, God hath ſpoken once, and twice have I heard him. God hath ſaid enough at once; but twice, in this Pſalme, hath he repeated this, in the ſecond, and in the ſixt verſe, He onely is my Rocke, and my Salvation, and my Defence, And, (as it is inlarged in the ſeventh verſe) my Refuge, and my Glory. If my Refuge, what enemy can purſue me? If my Defence, what tentation ſhall wound me? If my Rock, what ſtorme ſhall ſhake me? If my Salvation, what melancholy ſhall deject me? If my Glory, what calumny ſhall defame me?

Ier. 17. 5.

Iob 6. 12.

Mat. 16. 17.

I muſt not ſtay you now, to infuſe into you, the ſeverall conſolations of theſe ſeverall names, and notions of God towards you. But, goe your ſeverall wayes home, and every ſoule take with him that name, which may miniſter moſt comfort unto him. Let him that is purſued with any particular tentation, inveſt God, as God is a Refuge, a Sanctuary. Let him that is buffeted with the meſſenger of Satan, battered with his owne concupiſcence, receive God, as God is his Defence and target. Let him that is ſhaked with perplexities in his underſtanding, or ſcruples in his conſcience, lay hold upon God, as God is his Rock, and his anchor. Let him that hath any diffident jealouſie or ſuſpition of the free and full mercy of God, apprehend God, as God is his Salvation; And him that walks in the inglorioufneſſe and contempt of this world, contemplate God, as God is his Glory. Any of theſe notions is enough to any man, but God is all theſe, and all elſe, that all ſoules can thinke, to every man. Wee ſhut up both theſe Conſiderations, (man ſhould not, (that is not all) God ſhould be relied upon) with that of the Prophet, Truſt ye not in a friend, put not your confidence in a guide, keepe the doores of thy mouth from her that lies in thy boſome; (there is the excluſion of truſt in man) and then he adds in the ſeventh verſe, becauſe it ſtands thus betweene man and man, I will looke unto the Lord, I will looke to the God of my Salvation, my God will heare me.

Mic. ult. 5.

SERM.

SERM. LXVI.

The ſecond of my Prebend Sermons upon my five Pſalmes.

Preached at S. Pauls, Ianuary 29. 1625.

PSAL. 63. 7.

Becauſe thou haſt been my helpe, Therefore in the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoyce.

THe Pſalmes are the Manna of the Church. As Manna taſted to every man like that that he liked beſt, ſo doe the Pſalmes miniſter Inſtruction, and ſatisfaction, to every man, in every emergency and occaſion. David was not onely a cleare Prophet of Chriſt himſelfe, but a Prophet of every particular Chriſtian; He foretels what I, what any ſhall doe, and ſuffer, and ſay. And as the whole booke of Pſalmes is Oleum effuſum, (as the Spouſe ſpeaks of the name of Chriſt) an Oyntment powred out upon all ſorts of ſores, A Searcloth that ſouples all bruiſes, A Balme that ſearches all wounds; ſo are there ſome certaine Pſalmes, that are Imperiall Pſalmes, that command over all affections, and ſpread themſelves over all occaſions, Catholique, univerſall Pſalmes, that apply themſelves to all neceſſities. This is one of thoſe; for, of thoſe Conſtitutions which are called Apoſtolicall, one is, That the Church ſhould meet every day, to ſing this Pſalme. And accordingly, S. Chryſoſtome teſtifies, That it was decreed, and ordained by the Primitive Fathers, that no day ſhould paſſe without the publique ſinging of this Pſalme. Under both theſe obligations, (thoſe ancient Conſtitutions, called the Apoſtles, and thoſe ancient Decrees made by the primitive Fathers) belongs to me, who have my part in the ſervice of Gods Church, the eſpeciall meditation, and recommendation of this Pſalme. And under a third obligation too, That it is one of thoſe five pſalmes, the daily rehearſing whereof, is injoyned to me, by the Conſtitutions of this Church, as five other are to every other perſon of our body. As the whole booke is Manna, ſo theſe five Pſalmes are my Gomer, which I am to fill and empty every day of this Manna.

Wiſd. 16. 20.

Cant. 1. 3.

Conſtitut. Apoſtol.

Chryſoſt.

Now as the ſpirit and ſoule of the whole booke of Pſalmes is contracted into this pſalme, ſo is the ſpirit and ſoule of this whole pſalme contracted into this verſe. The key of the pſalme, (as S. Hierome calls the Titles of the pſalmes) tells us, that David uttered this pſalme, when he was in the wilderneſſe of Iudah; There we ſee the preſent occaſion that moved him; And we ſee what was paſſed between God and him before, in the firſt clauſe of out Text; (Becauſe thou haſt been my helpe) And then we ſee what was to come, by the reſt, (Therefore in the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoyce.) So that we have here the whole compaſſe of Time, Paſt, Preſent, and Future; and theſe three parts of Time, ſhall be at this time, the three parts of this Exerciſe; firſt, what Davids diſtreſſe put him upon for the preſent; and that lyes in the Context; ſecondly, how David built his aſſurance upon that which was paſt; (Becauſe thou haſt been my help) And thirdly, what he eſtabliſhed to himſelfe for the future, (Therefore in the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoyce.) Firſt, His diſtreſſe in the Wilderneſſe, his preſent eſtate carried him upon the memory of that which God had done for him before, And the Remembrance of that carried him upon that, of which he aſſured himſelfe after. Fixe upon God any where, and you ſhall finde him a Circle; He is with you now, when you fix upon him; He was with you before, for he brought you to this fixation; and he will be with you hereafter, for He is yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever.

Diviſio.

Hieron.

Heb. 13. 8.

For Davids preſent condition, who was now in a baniſhment, in a perſecution in the Wilderneſſe of Judah, (which is our firſt part) we ſhall onely inſiſt upon that, (which is indeed ſpread over all the pſalme to the Text, and ratified in the Text) That in all thoſe temporall temporall calamities David was onely ſenſible of his ſpirituall loſſe; It grieved him not that he was kept from Sauls Court, but that he was kept from Gods Church. For when he ſayes, by way of lamentation, That he was in a dry and thirſty land, where no water was, he expreſſes what penury, what barrenneſſe, what drought and what thirſt he meant; To ſee thy power, and thy glory, ſo as I have ſeene thee in the Sanctuary. For there, my ſoule ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow, and with fatneſſe, and there, my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyfull lips. And in ſome few conſiderations conducing to this, That ſpirituall loſſes are incomparably heavier then temporall, and that therefore, The Reſtitution to our ſpirituall happineſſe, or the continuation of it, is rather to be made the ſubject of our prayers to God, in all preſſures and diſtreſſes, then of temporall, we ſhall determine that firſt part. And for the particular branches of both the other parts, (The Remembring of Gods benefits paſt, And the building of an aſſurance for the future, upon that Remembrance) it may be fitter to open them to you, anon when we come to handle them, then now. Proceed we now to our firſt part, The comparing of temporall and ſpirituall afflictions.

Ver. 1. Ver. 2. Ver. 5. Ver. 3.

1 Part. Afflictio univerſalis.

In the way of this Compariſon, falls firſt the Conſideration of the univerſality of afflictions in generall, and the inevitableneſſe thereof. It is a bleſſed Metaphore, that the Holy Ghoſt hath put into the mouth of the Apoſtle, Pondus Gloriæ, That our afflictions are but light, becauſe there is an exceeding, and an eternall waight of glory attending them. If it were not for that exceeding waight of glory, no other waight in this world could turne the ſcale, or waigh downe thoſe infinite waights of afflictions that oppreſſe us here. There is not onely Peſtis valde gravis, (the peſtilence grows heavy upon the Land) but there is Muſca valde gravis, God calls in but the fly, to vexe Egypt, and even the fly is a heavy burden unto them. It is not onely Iob that complains, That he was a burden to himſelfe, but even Abſaloms haire was a burden to him, till it was polled. It is not onely Ieremy that complains, Aggravavit compedes, That God had made their fetters and their chains heavy to them, but the workmen in harveſt complaine, That God had made a faire day heavy unto them, (We have borne the heat, and the burden of the day.) Sand is heavy, ſayes Solomon; And how many ſuffer ſo? under a ſand-hill of croſſes, daily, hourely afflictions, that are heavy by their number, if not by their ſingle waight? And a ſtone is heavy; (ſayes he in the ſame place) And how many ſuffer ſo? How many, without any former preparatory croſſe, or comminatory, or commonitory croſſe, even in the midſt of proſperity, and ſecurity, fall under ſome one ſtone, ſome grind-ſtone, ſome mil-ſtone, ſome one inſupportable croſſe that ruines them? But then, (ſayes Solomon there) A fooles anger is heavier then both; And how many children, and ſervants, and wives ſuffer under the anger, and moroſity, and peeviſhneſſe, and jealouſie of fooliſh Maſters, and Parents, and Husbands, though they muſt not ſay ſo? David and Solomon have cryed out, That all this world is vanity, and levity; And (God knowes) all is waight, and burden, and heavineſſe, and oppreſſion; And if there were not a waight of future glory to counterpoyſe it, we ſhould all ſinke into nothing.

Afflictio univerſalis. 2 Cor. 4. 17. Exod. 9. 3. 8. 24. Job 7. 20. 2 Sam. 14. 26. Lament. 3. 7. Mat. 20. 12. Pro. 27. 3.

I aske not Mary Magdalen, whether lightneſſe were not a burden; (for ſin is certainly, ſenſibly a burden) But I aske Suſanna whether even chaſt beauty were not a burden to her; And I aske Ioſeph whether perſonall comelineſſe were not a burden to him. I aske not Dives, who periſhed in the next world, the queſtion; but I aske them who are made examples of Solomons Rule, of that ſore evill, (as he calls it) Riches kept to the owners thereof for their hurt, whether Riches be not a burden.

Eccleſ. 5. 13.

All our life is a continuall burden, yet we muſt not groane; A continuall ſqueaſing, yet we muſt not pant; And as in the tenderneſſe of our childhood, we ſuffer, and yet are whipt if we cry, ſo we are complained of, if we complaine, and made delinquents if we call the times ill. And that which addes waight to waight, and multiplies the ſadneſſe of this conſideration, is this, That ſtill the beſt men have had moſt laid upon them. As ſoone as I heare God ſay, that he hath found an upright man, that feares God, and eſchews evill, in the next lines I finde a Commiſſion to Satan, to bring in Sabeans and Chaldeans upon his cattell, and ſervants, and fire and tempeſt upon his children, and loathſome diſeaſes upon himſelfe. As ſoone as I heare God ſay, That he hath found a man according to his own heart, I ſee his ſonnes raviſh his daughters, and then murder one another, and then rebell againſt the Father, and put him into ſtraites for his life. As ſoone as I heare God teſtifie of Chriſt at his Baptiſme, This is my beloved Sonne in whom

Mat. 3. 17.

I am

A I am well pleased, I finde that Sonne of his led up by the Spirit, to be tempted of the Devill. Matt. 4. 1.
And after I heare God ratifie the same testimony againe, at his Transfiguration, (This is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleased) I finde that beloved Sonne of his, deserted, Matt. 17. 5.
abandoned, and given over to Scribes, and Pharisees, and Publicans, and Herodians, and Priests, and Souldiers, and people, and Judges, and witnesses, and executioners, and he that was called the beloved Sonne of God, and made partaker of the glory of heaven, in this world, in his Transfiguration, is made now the Sewer of all the corruption, of all the sinnes of this world, as no Sonne of God, but a meere man, as no man, but a contemptible worme. As though the greatest weakenesse in this world, were man, and the greatest fault in man were to be good, man is more miserable then other creatures, and good men more miserable then any other men.

But then there is Pondus Gloriæ, An exceeding waight of eternall glory, and that turnes Afflictio spiritualis.
B the scale; for as it makes all worldly prosperity as dung, so it makes all worldly adversity as feathers. And so it had need; for in the scale against it, there are not onely put temporall afflictions, but spirituall too; And to these two kinds, we may accommodate those words, He that fals upon this stone, (upon temporall afflictions) may be bruised, broken, But he upon whom that stone falls, (spirituall afflictions) is in danger to be ground to powder. And then, the great, and yet ordinary danger is, That these spirituall afflictions Matt. 21. 44.
grow out of temporall; Murmuring, and diffidence in God, and obduration, out of worldly calamities; And so against nature, the fruit is greater and heavier then the Tree, spirituall heavier then temporall afflictions.

They who write of Naturall story, propose that Plant for the greatest wonder in na- Plin. l. 27. 11. Lithospermus.
ture, which being no firmer then a bull-rush, or a reed, produces and beares for the fruit thereof no other but an intire, and very hard stone. That temporall affliction should pro-
C duce spirituall stonenesse, and obduration, is unnaturall, yet ordinary. Therefore doth God propose it, as one of those greatest blessings, which he multiplies upon his people, I will take away your stony hearts, and give you hearts of flesh; And, Lord let mee have a Ezek. 11. 19. & 36. 26.
fleshly heart in any sense, rather then a stony heart. Wee finde mention amongst the observers of rarities in Nature, of hairy hearts, hearts of men, that have beene overgrowne Plin. & Plutar.
with haire; but of petrified hearts, hearts of men growne into stone, we read not; for this petrefaction of the heart, this stupefaction of a man, is the last blow of Gods hand upon the heart of man in this world. Those great afflictions which are powred out of Revel. 16.
the Vials of the seven Angels upon the world, are still accompanied with that heavy effect, that that affliction hardned them. They were scorched with heats and plagues, by the fourth Angel, and it followes, They blasphemed the name of God, and repented not, to give ver. 9.
him glory. Darkenesse was induced upon them by the fift Angel, and it followes, They ver. 11.
D blasphemed the God of heaven, and repented not of their deeds. And from the seventh Angel there fell haile-stones of the waight of talents, (perchance foure pound waight) upon ver. 29.
men; And yet these men had so much life left, as to blaspheme God, out of that respect, which alone should have brought them to glorifie God, Because the plague thereof was exceeding great. And when a great plague brings them to blaspheme, how great shall that second plague be, that comes upon them for blaspheming?

Let me wither and weare out mine age in a discomfortable, in an unwholesome, in a penurious prison, and so pay my debts with my bones, and recompence the wastfulnesse of my youth, with the beggery of mine age; Let me wither in a spittle under sharpe, and foule, and infamous diseases, and so recompence the wantonnesse of my youth, with that loathsomnesse in mine age; yet, if God with-draw not his spirituall blessings, his Grace, his Patience, If I can call my suffering his Doing, my passion his Action, All this that is E temporall, is but a caterpiller got into one corner of my garden, but a mill-dew fallen upon one acre of my Corne; The body of all, the substance of all is safe, as long as the soule is safe. But when I shall trust to that, which wee call a good spirit, and God shall deject, and empoverish, and evacuate that spirit, when I shall rely upon a morall constancy, and God shall shake, and enfeeble, and enervate, destroy and demolish that constancy; when I shall think to refresh my selfe in the serenity and sweet ayre of a good conscience, and God shall call up the damps and vapours of hell it selfe, and spread a cloud of diffidence, and an impenetrable crust of desperation upon my conscience; when health shall flie from me, and I shall lay hold upon riches to succour me, and comfort me in my sicknesse, and riches shall flie from me, and I shall snatch after favour, and good opinion, to comfort me in my poverty; when even this good opinion ſhall leave me, and calumnies and miſinformations ſhall prevaile againſt me; when I ſhall need peace, becauſe there is none but thou, O Lord, that ſhould ſtand for me, and then ſhall finde, that all the wounds that I have, come from thy hand, all the arrowes that ſtick in me, from thy quiver; when I ſhall ſee, that becauſe I have given my ſelfe to my corrupt nature, thou haſt changed thine; and becauſe I am all evill towards thee, therefore thou haſt given over being good towards me; When it comes to this height, that the fever is not in the humors, but in the ſpirits, that mine enemy is not an imaginary enemy, fortune, nor a tranſitory enemy, malice in great perſons, but a reall, and an irreſiſtible, and an inexorable, and an everlaſting enemy, The Lord of Hoſts himſelfe, The Almighty God himſelfe, the Almighty God himſelfe onely knowes the waight of this affliction, and except hee put in that pondus gloriæ, that exceeding waight of an eternall glory, with his owne hand, into the other ſcale, we are waighed downe, we are ſwallowed up, irreparably, irrevocably, irrecoverably, irremediably. A B

to

This is the fearefull depth, this is ſpirituall miſery, to be thus fallen from God. But was this Davids caſe? was he fallen thus farre, into a diffidence in God? No. But the danger, the precipice, the ſlippery ſliding into that bottomleſſe depth, is, to be excluded from the meanes of comming to God, or ſtaying with God; And this is that that David laments here, That by being baniſhed, and driven into the wilderneſſe of Judah, hee had not acceſſe to the Sanctuary of the Lord, to ſacrifice his part in the praiſe, and to receive his part in the prayers of the Congregation; for Angels paſſe not to ends, but by wayes and meanes, nor men to the glory of the triumphant Church, but by participation of the Communion of the Militant. To this note David ſets his Harpe, in many, many Pſalms: Sometimes, that God had ſuffered his enemies to poſſeſſe his Tabernacle, (Hee forſooke the Tabernacle of Shiloh, Hee delivered his ſtrength into captivity, and his glory into the enemies hands) But moſt commonly he complaines, that God diſabled him from comming to the Sanctuary. In which one thing he had ſummed up all his deſires, all his prayers, (One thing have I deſired of the Lord, that will I looke after; That I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord, all the dayes of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple) His vehement deſire of this, he expreſſes againe, (My ſoule thirſteth for God, for the living God; when ſhall I come and appeare before God?) He expreſſes a holy jealouſie, a religious envy, even to the ſparrows and ſwallows, (yea, the ſparrow hath found a houſe, and the ſwallow a neſt for her ſelfe, and where ſhe may lay her yong, Even thine Altars, O Lord of Hoſts, my King and my God.) Thou art my King, and my God, and yet excludeſt me from that, which thou affordeſt to ſparrows, And are not we of more value then many ſparrows? C

Pſal. 78. 60.

Pſal. 27. 4.

Pſal. 42. 2.

Pſal. 84. 3.

Luk. 12. 7.

And as though David felt ſome falſe eaſe, ſome half-tentation, ſome whiſpering that way, That God is in the wilderneſſe of Iudah, in every place, as well as in his Sanctuary, there is in the Originall in that place, a patheticall, a vehement, a broken expreſſing expreſſed, O thine Altars; It is true, (ſayes David) thou art here in the wilderneſſe, and I may ſee thee here, and ſerve thee here, but, O thine Altars, O Lord of hoſts, my King and my God. When David could not come in perſon to that place, yet he bent towards the Temple, (In thy feare will I worſhip towards thy holy Temple.) Which was alſo Daniels devotion; when he prayed, his Chamber windowes were open towards Ieruſalem; And ſo is Hezekias turning to the wall to weepe, and to pray in his ſick bed, underſtood to be to that purpoſe, to conforme, and compoſe himſelfe towards the Temple. In the place conſecrated for that uſe, God by Moſes fixes the ſervice, and fixes the Reward; And towards that place, (when they could not come to it) doth Solomon direct their devotion in the Conſecration of the Temple, (when they are in the warres, when they are in Captivity, and pray towards this houſe, doe thou heare them.) For, as in private prayer, when (according to Chriſts command) we are ſhut in our chamber, there is exerciſed Modeſtia fidei, The modeſty and baſhfulneſſe of our faith, not preſſing upon God in his houſe: ſo in the publique prayers of the Congregation, there is exerciſed the fervor, and holy courage of our faith, for Agmine facto obſidemus Deum, It is a Muſtering of our forces, and a beſieging of God. Therefore does David ſo much magnifie their bleſſednesſe, that are in this houſe of God; (Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy houſe, for they will be ſtill praiſing thee) Thoſe that looke towards it, may praiſe thee ſometimes, but thoſe men who dwell in the Church, and whoſe whole ſervice lyes in the Church, have certainly D

Pſal. 84. 3.

Pſal. 5. 7.

Dan. 6. 10.

Eſa. 38. 2.

Deut. 31. 11.

1 King. 8. 44.

E

Tertull.

A an advantage of all other men (who are neceſſarily withdrawne by worldly buſineſſes) in making themſelves acceptable to almighty God, if they doe their duties, and obſerve their Church-ſervices aright.

Excommunicatio.

Man being therefore thus ſubject naturally to manifold calamities, and ſpirituall calamities being incomparably heavier then temporall, and the greateſt danger of falling into ſuch ſpirituall calamities being in our abſence from Gods Church, where onely the outward meanes of happineſſe are miniſtred unto us, certainely there is much tenderneſſe and deliberation to be uſed, before the Church doores be ſhut againſt any man. If I would not direct a prayer to God, to excommunicate any man from the Triumphant Church, (which were to damne him) I would not oyle the key, I would not make the way too ſlippery for excommunications in the Militant Church; For, that is to endanger him. I know how diſtaſtfull a ſin to God, contumacy, and contempt, and diſobedience B to Order and Authority is; And I know, (and all men, that chooſe not ignorance, may know) that our Excommunications (though calumniators impute them to ſmall things, becauſe, many times, the firſt complaint is of ſome ſmall matter) never iſſue but upon contumacies, contempts, diſobediences to the Church. But they are reall contumacies, not interpretative, apparant contumacies, not preſumptive, that excommunicate a man in Heaven; And much circumſpection is required, and (I am far from doubting it) exerciſed in thoſe caſes upon earth; for, though every Excommunication upon earth be not ſealed in Heaven, though it damne not the man, yet it dammes up that mans way, by ſhutting him out of that Church, through which he muſt goe to the other; which being ſo great a danger, let every man take heed of Excommunicating himſelfe. The imperſwaſible Recuſant does ſo; The negligent Libertin does ſo; The fantaſtique Separatiſt does ſo; The halfe-preſent man, he, whoſe body is here, and minde away, does ſo; And C he, whoſe body is but halfe here, his limbes are here upon a cuſhion, but his eyes, his eares are not here, does ſo: All theſe are are ſelfe-Excommunicators, and keepe themſelves from hence. Onely he enjoyes that bleſſing, the want whereof David deplores, that is here intirely, and is glad he is here, and glad to finde this kinde of ſervice here, that he does, and wiſhes no other.

And ſo we have done with our firſt Part, Davids aſpect, his preſent condition, and his danger of falling into ſpirituall miſeries, becauſe his perſecution, and baniſhment amounted to an Excommunication, to an excluding of him from the ſervice of God, in the Church. And we paſſe, in our Order propoſed at firſt, to the ſecond, his retroſpect, the Conſideration, what God had done for him before, Becauſe thou haſt beene my helpe.

2 Part.

Through this ſecond part, we ſhall paſſe by theſe three ſteps. Firſt, That it behoves us, in all our purpoſes, and actions, to propoſe to our ſelves a copy to write by, a patterne D to worke by, a rule, or an example to proceed by, Becauſe it hath beene thus heretofore, ſayes David, I will reſolve upon this courſe for the future. And ſecondly, That the copy, the patterne, the precedent which we are to propoſe to our ſelves, is, The obſervation of Gods former wayes and proceedings upon us, Becauſe God hath already gone this way, this way I will awaite his going ſtill. And then, thirdly and laſtly, in this ſecond part, The way that God had formerly gone with David, which was, That he had been his helpe, (Becauſe thou haſt beene my helpe.)

Idea.

Firſt then, from the meaneſt artificer, through the wiſeſt Philoſopher, to God himſelfe, all that is well done, or wiſely undertaken, is undertaken and done according to pre-conceptions, fore-imaginations, deſignes, and patterns propoſed to our ſelves beforehand. A Carpenter builds not a houſe, but that he firſt ſets up a frame in his owne minde, what kinde of houſe he will build. The little great Philoſopher Epictetus, would E undertake no action, but he would firſt propoſe to himſelfe, what Socrates, or Plato, what a wiſe man would do in that caſe, and according to that, he would proceed. Of God himſelfe, it is ſafely reſolved in the Schoole, that he never did any thing in any part of time, of which he had not an eternall pre-conception, an eternall Idea, in himſelfe before. Of which Ideaes, that is, pre-conceptions, pre-determinations in God, S. Auguſtine pronounces, Tanta vis in Ideis conſtituitur, There is ſo much truth, and ſo much power in theſe Ideaes, as that without acknowledging them, no man can acknowledge God, for he does not allow God Counſaile, and Wiſdome, and deliberation in his Actions, but ſets God on worke, before he have thought what he will doe. And therefore he, and others of the Fathers read that place, (which we read otherwiſe) Quod factum eſt, in ipſo vita erat;

Auguſt.

Ioh. 1. 3, 4.

erat; that is, in all their Expoſitions, whatſoever is made, in time, was alive in God, before it was made, that is, in that eternall Idea, and patterne which was in him. So alſo doe A Heb. 11. 3. divers of thoſe Fathers read thoſe words to the Hebrews, (which we read, The things that are ſeene, are not made of things that doe appeare) Ex inviſibilibus viſibilia facta ſunt, Things formerly inviſible, were made viſible; that is, we ſee them not till now, till they are made, but they had an inviſible being, in that Idea, in that pre-notion, in that purpoſe of God before, for ever before. Of all things in Heaven, and earth, but of himſelfe, God had an Idea, a patterne in himſelfe, before he made it.

And therefore let him be our patterne for that, to worke after patternes; To propoſe to our ſelves Rules and Examples for all our actions; and the more, the more immediately, the more directly our actions concerne the ſervice of God. If I aske God, by what Idea he made me, God produces his Faciamus hominem ad Imaginem noſtram, That there was a concurrence of the whole Trinity, to make me in Adam, according to that Image B which they were, and according to that Idea, which they had pre-determined. If I pretend to ſerve God, and he aske me for my Idea, How I meane to ſerve him, ſhall I bee able to produce none? If he aske me an Idea of my Religion, and my opinions, ſhall I not be able to ſay, It is that which thy word, and thy Catholique Church hath imprinted in me? If he aske me an Idea of my prayers, ſhall I not be able to ſay, It is that which my particular neceſſities, that which the forme preſcribed by thy Son, that which the care, and piety of the Church, in conceiving fit prayers, hath imprinted in me? If he aske me an Idea of my Sermons, ſhall I not be able to ſay, It is that which the Analogy of Faith, the edification of the Congregation, the zeale of thy worke, the meditations of my heart have imprinted in me? But if I come to pray or to preach without this kind of Idea, if I come to extemporall prayer, and extemporall preaching, I ſhall come to an extemporall faith, and extemporall religion; and then I muſt looke for an extemporall Heaven, a Hea- C ven to be made for me; for to that Heaven which belongs to the Catholique Church, I ſhall never come, except I go by the way of the Catholique Church, by former Idea's, former examples, former patterns, To beleeve according to ancient beliefes, to pray according to ancient formes, to preach according to former meditations. God does nothing, man does nothing well, without theſe Idea's, theſe retroſpects, this recourſe to pre-conceptions, pre-deliberations.

Via Domini. Something then I muſt propoſe to my ſelfe, to be the rule, and the reaſon of my preſent and future actions; which was our firſt branch in this ſecond Part; And then the ſecond is, That I can propoſe nothing more availably, then the contemplation of the hiſtory of Gods former proceeding with me; which is Davids way here, Becauſe this was Gods way before, I will looke for God in this way ſtill. That language in which God ſpake to man, the Hebrew, hath no preſent tenſe; They forme not their verbs as our D Weſterne Languages do, in the preſent, I heare, or I ſee, or I reade, But they begin at that which is paſt, I have ſeene and heard, and read. God carries us in his Language, in his ſpeaking, upon that which is paſt, upon that which he hath done already; I cannot have better ſecurity for preſent, nor future, then Gods former mercies exhibited to me. Quis
Auguſt. non gaudeat, ſayes S. Auguſtine, Who does not triumph with joy, when hee conſiders what God hath done? Quis non & ea, quæ nondum venerunt, ventura ſperat, propter illa, quæ jam tanta impleta ſunt? Who can doubt of the performance of all, that ſees the greateſt part of a Propheſie performed? If I have found that true that God hath ſaid, of the perſon of Antichriſt, why ſhould I doubt of that which he ſayes of the ruine of Antichriſt? Credamus modicum quod reſtat, ſayes the ſame Father, It is much that wee have ſeene done, and it is but little that God hath reſerved to our faith, to beleeve that it ſhall be done. E

There is no State, no Church, no Man, that hath not this tie upon God, that hath not God in theſe bands, That God by having done much for them already, hath bound himſelfe to doe more. Men proceed in their former wayes, ſometimes, leſt they ſhould confeſſe an error, and acknowledge that they had beene in a wrong way. God is obnoxious to no error, and therefore he does ſtill, as he did before. Every one of you can ſay now to God, Lord, Thou broughteſt me hither, therefore enable me to heare; Lord, Thou doeſt that, therefore make me underſtand; And that, therefore let me beleeve; And that too, therefore ſtrengthen me to the practiſe; And all that, therefore continue me to a perſeverance. Carry it up to the firſt ſenſe and apprehenſion that ever thou hadſt of Gods working

A working upon thee, either in thy ſelfe, when thou cameſt firſt to the uſe of reaſon, or in others in thy behalfe, in thy baptiſme, yet when thou thinkeſt thou art at the firſt, God had done ſomething for thee before all that; before that, hee had elected thee, in that election which S. Auguſtine ſpeaks of, Habet electos, quos creaturus eſt eligendos, God hath elected certaine men, whom he intends to create, that he may elect them; that is, that he may declare his Election upon them. God had thee, before he made thee; He loved thee firſt, and then created thee, that thou loving him, he might continue his love to thee. The ſureſt way, and the neareſt way to lay hold upon God, is the conſideration of that which he had done already. So David does; And that which he takes knowledge of, in particular, in Gods former proceedings towards him, is, Becauſe God had been his helpe, which is our laſt branch in this part, Becauſe thou haſt beene my helpe. Auguſt.

From this one word, That God hath been my Helpe, I make account that we have Quia auxi-
B both theſe notions; firſt, That God hath not left me to my ſelfe, He hath come to my ſuccour, He hath helped me; And then, That God hath not left out my ſelfe; He hath been my Helpe, but he hath left ſome thing for me to doe with him, and by his helpe. My ſecurity for the future, in this conſideration of that which is paſt, lyes not onely in this, That God hath delivered me, but in this alſo, that he hath delivered me by way of a Helpe, and Helpe alwayes preſumes an endevour and co-operation in him that is helped. God did not elect me as a helper, nor create me, nor redeeme me, nor convert me, by way of helping me; for he alone did all, and he had no uſe at all of me. God infuſes his firſt grace, the firſt way, meerly as a Giver; intirely, all himſelfe; but his ſubſequent graces, as a helper; therefore we call them Auxiliant graces, Helping graces; and we alwayes receive them, when we endevour to make uſe of his former grace. Lord, I beleeve, Mar. 9. 24.
(ſayes the Man in the Goſpel to Chriſt) Helpe mine unbeliefe. If there had not been un-
C beliefe, weakneſſe, unperfectneſſe in that faith, there had needed no helpe; but if there had not been a Beliefe, a faith, it had not been capable of helpe and aſſiſtance, but it muſt have been an intire act, without any concurrence on the mans part.

So that if I have truly the teſtimony of a rectified Conſcience, That God hath helped me, it is in both reſpects; firſt, That he hath never forſaken me, and then, That he hath never ſuffered me to forſake my ſelfe; He hath bleſſed me with that grace, that I truſt in no helpe but his, and with this grace too, That I cannot looke for his helpe, except I helpe my ſelfe alſo. God did not helpe heaven and earth to proceed out of nothing in the Creation, for they had no poſſibility of any diſpoſition towards it; for they had no beeing: But God did helpe the earth to produce graſſe, and herbes; for, for that, God had infuſed a ſeminall diſpoſition into the earth, which, for all that, it could not have perfected without his farther helpe. As in the making of Woman, there is the very word of our D Text, Gnazar, God made him a Helper, one that was to doe much for him, but not without him. So that then, if I will make Gods former working upon me, an argument of his future gracious purpoſes, as I muſt acknowledge that God hath done much for me, ſo I muſt finde, that I have done what I could, by the benefit of that grace with him; for God promiſes to be but a helper. Lord open thou my lips, ſayes David; that is Gods Pſal. 51. 15.
worke intirely; And then, My mouth, My mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe; there enters David into the worke with God. And then, ſayes God to him, Dilata os tuum, Open thy Pſal. 81. 10.
mouth, (It is now made Thy mouth, and therefore doe thou open it) and I will fill it; All inchoations and conſummations, beginnings and perfectings are of God, of God alone; but in the way there is a concurrence on our part, (by a ſucceſſive continuation of Gods grace) in which God proceeds as a Helper; and I put him to more then that, if I doe nothing. But if I pray for his helpe, and apprehend and husband his graces well, E when they come, then he is truly, properly my helper; and upon that ſecurity, that teſtimony of a rectified Conſcience, I can proceed to Davids confidence for the future, Becauſe thou haſt been my Helpe, therefore in the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoyce; which is our third, and laſt generall part.

In this laſt part, which is, (after Davids aſpect, and conſideration of his preſent con- Diviſio.
dition, which was, in the effect, an Excluſion from Gods Temple, And his retroſpect, 3 Part. his conſideration of Gods former mercies to him, That he had been his Helpe) his proſpect, his confidence for the future, we ſhall ſtay a little upon theſe two ſteps; firſt, That that which he promiſes himſelfe, is not an immunity from all powerfull enemies, nor a ſword of revenge upon thoſe enemies; It is not that he ſhall have no adverſary, nor that that adversary shall be able to doe him no harme, but that he should have a refreshing, a respiration, In velamento alarum, under the shadow of Gods wings. And then, (in the second place) That this way which God shall be pleased to take, this manner, this measure of refreshing, which God shall vouchsafe to afford, (though it amount not to a full deliverance) must produce a joy, a rejoycing in us; we must not onely not decline to a murmuring, that we have no more, no nor rest upon a patience for that which remains, but we must ascend to a holy joy, as if all were done and accomplished, In the shadow of thy wings will I rejoyce.

that

Vmbra Alarum.

First then, lest any man in his dejection of spirit, or of fortune, should stray into a jealousie or suspition of Gods power to deliver him, As God hath spangled the firmament with starres, so hath he his Scriptures with names, and Metaphors, and denotations of power. Sometimes he shines out in the name of a Sword, and of a Target, and of a Wall, and of a Tower, and of a Rocke, and of a Hill; And sometimes in that glorious and manifold constellation of all together, Dominus exercituum, The Lord of Hosts. God, as God, is never represented to us, with Defensive Armes; He needs them not. When the Poets present their great Heroes, and their Worthies, they alwayes insist upon their Armes, they spend much of their invention upon the description of their Armes; both because the greatest valour and strength needs Armes, (Goliah himselfe was armed) and because to expose ones selfe to danger unarmed, is not valour, but rashnesse. But God is invulnerable in himselfe, and is never represented armed; you finde no shirts of mayle, no Helmets, no Cuirasses in Gods Armory. In that one place of Esay, where it may seeme to be otherwise, where God is said to have put on righteousnesse as a breastplate, and a Helmet of salvation upon his head; in that prophecy God is Christ, and is therefore in that place, called the Redeemer. Christ needed defensive armes, God does not. Gods word does; His Scriptures doe; And therefore S. Hierome hath armed them, and set before every booke his Prologum galeatum, that prologue that armes and defends every booke from calumny. But though God need not, nor receive not defensive armes for himselfe, yet God is to us a Helmet, a Breastplate, a strong tower, a rocke, every thing that may give us assurance and defence; and as often as he will, he can refresh that Proclamation, Nolite tangere Christos meos, Our enemies shall not so much as touch us.

Esay 59. 17.

Psal. 105. 15.

But here, by occasion of his Metaphore in this Text, (Sub umbra alarum, In the shadow of thy wings) we doe not so much consider an absolute immunity, That we shall not be touched, as a refreshing and consolation, when we are touched, though we be pinched and wounded. The Names of God, which are most frequent in the Scriptures, are these three, Elohim, and Adonai, and Iehovah; and to assure us of his Power to deliver us, two of these three are Names of Power. Elohim is Deus fortis, The mighty, The powerfull God: And (which deserves a particular consideration) Elohim is a plurall Name; It is not Deus fortis, but Dii fortes, powerfull Gods. God is all kinde of Gods; All kinds, which either Idolaters and Gentils can imagine, (as Riches, or Justice, or Wisdome, or Valour, or such) and all kinds which God himself hath called gods, (as Princes, and Magistrates, and Prelates, and all that assist and helpe one another) God is Elohim, All these Gods, and all these in their height and best of their power; for Elohim, is Dii fortes, Gods in the plurall, and those plurall gods in their exaltation.

The second Name of God, is a Name of power too, Adonai. For, Adonai is Dominus, The Lord, such a Lord, as is Lord and Proprietary of all his creatures, and all creatures are his creatures; And then, Dominium est potestas tum utendi, tum abutendi, sayes the law; To be absolute Lord of any thing, gives that Lord a power to doe what he will with that thing. God, as he is Adonai, The Lord, may give and take, quicken and kill, build and throw downe, where and whom he will. So then two of Gods three Names are Names of absolute power, to imprint, and re-imprint an assurance in us, that hee can absolutely deliver us, and fully revenge us, if he will. But then, his third Name, and that Name which hee chooses to himselfe, and in the signification of which Name, hee employes Moses, for the reliefe of his people under Pharaoh, that Name Iehovah, is not a Name of Power, but onely of Essence, of Being, of Subsistence, and yet in the vertue of that Name, God relieved his people. And if, in my afflictions, God vouchsafe to visit mee in that Name, to preserve me in my being, in my subsistence in him, that I be not shaked out of him, disinherited in him, excommunicate from him, devested of him, annihilated towards him, let him, at his good pleasure, reserve his Elohim, and his Adonai, the exercises

A ercises and declarations of his mighty Power, to those great publike causes, that more concerne his Glory, then any thing that can befall me; But if he impart his Iehovah, enlarge himselfe so far towards me, as that I may live, and move, & have my beeing in him; though I be not instantly delivered, nor mine enemies absolutely destroyed, yet this is as much as I should promise my selfe, this is as much as the Holy Ghost intends in this Metaphor, Sub umbra alarum, Vnder the shadow of thy wings, that is a Refreshing, a Respiration, a Conservation, a Consolation in all afflictions that are inflicted upon me.

Yet, is not this Metaphor of Wings without a denotation of Power. As no Act of Gods, though it seeme to imply but spirituall comfort, is without a denotation of power, (for it is the power of God that comforts me; To overcome that sadnesse of soule, and that dejection of spirit, which the Adversary by temporall afflictions would induce upon me, is an act of his Power) So this Metaphor, The shadow of his wings, (which in this
B place expresses no more, then consolation and refreshing in misery, and not a powerfull deliverance out of it) is so often in the Scriptures made a denotation of Power too, as that we can doubt of no act of power, if we have this shadow of his wings. For, in this Metaphor of Wings, doth the Holy Ghost expresse the Maritime power, the power of some Nations at Sea, in Navies, (Woe to the land shadowing with wings;) that is, that hovers over the world, and intimidates it with her sailes and ships. In this Metaphor doth God remember his people, of his powerfull deliverance of them, (You have seene what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on Eagles wings, and brought you to my selfe.) In this Metaphor doth God threaten his and their enemies, what hee can doe, (The noise of the wings of his Cherubims, are as the noise of great waters, and of an Army.) So also, what hee will doe, (Hee shall spread his wings over Bozrah, and at that day shall the hearts of the mighty men of Edom, be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.) So that, if I have the shadow
C of his wings, I have the earnest of the power of them too; If I have refreshing, and respiration from them, I am able to say, (as those three Confessors did to Nebuchadnezzar) My God is able to deliver me, I am sure he hath power; And my God will deliver me, when it conduces to his glory, I know he will; But, if he doe not, bee it knowne unto thee, O King, we will not serve thy Gods; Be it knowne unto thee, O Satan, how long soever God deferre my deliverance, I will not seeke false comforts, the miserable comforts of this world. I will not, for I need not; for I can subsist under this shadow of these Wings, though I have no more.

Esay 18.1. Exod.19.14. Ezek.1.24. Ier.49.22. Dan.3.17.

The Mercy-seat it selfe was covered with the Cherubims Wings; and who would have more then Mercy? and a Mercy-seat; that is, established, resident Mercy, permanent and perpetuall Mercy; present and familiar Mercy; a Mercy-seat. Our Saviour Christ intends as much as would have served their turne, if they had laid hold upon it, when hee sayes, That hee would have gathered Ierusalem, as a henne gathers her chickens under her wings. And though the other Prophets doe (as ye have heard) mingle the signification of Power, and actuall deliverance, in this Metaphor of Wings, yet our Prophet, whom wee have now in especiall consideration, David, never doth so; but in every place where hee uses this Metaphor of Wings (which are in five or sixe severall Psalmes) still hee rests and determines in that sense, which is his meaning here; That though God doe not actually deliver us, nor actually destroy our enemies, yet if hee refresh us in the shadow of his Wings, if he maintaine our subsistence (which is a religious Constancy) in him, this should not onely establish our patience, (for that is but halfe the worke) but it should also produce a joy, and rise to an exultation, which is our last circumstance, Therefore in the shadow of thy wings, I will rejoice.

Exod.25.20. Mat.23.37.

I would always raise your hearts, and dilate your hearts, to a holy Joy, to a joy in the E Holy Ghost. There may be a just feare, that men doe not grieve enough for their sinnes; but there may bee a just jealousie, and suspition too, that they may fall into inordinate griefe, and diffidence of Gods mercy; And God hath reserved us to such times, as being the later times, give us even the dregs and lees of misery to drinke. For, God hath not onely let loose into the world a new spirituall disease; which is, an equality, and an indifferency, which religion our children, or our servants, or our companions professe; (I would not keepe company with a man that thought me a knave, or a traitor; with him that thought I loved not my Prince, or were a faithlesse man, not to be beleeved, I would not associate my selfe; And yet I will make him my bosome companion, that thinks I doe not love God, that thinks I cannot be saved) but God hath accompanied, and complicated almoſt all our bodily diſeaſes of theſe times, with an extraordinary ſadneſſe, a predominant melancholy, a faintneſſe of heart, a cheerleſneſſe, a joyleſneſſe of ſpirit, and therefore I returne often to this endeavor of raiſing your hearts, dilating your hearts with a holy Joy, Joy in the holy Ghoſt, for Vnder the ſhadow of his wings, you may, you ſhould rejoyce. A

Gaudium.

If you looke upon this world in a Map, you find two Hemiſphears, two half worlds. If you cruſh heaven into a Map, you may find two Hemiſphears too, two half heavens; Halfe will be Joy, and halfe will be Glory; for in theſe two, the joy of heaven, and the glory of heaven, is all heaven often repreſented unto us. And as of thoſe two Hemiſphears of the world, the firſt hath been knowne long before, but the other, (that of America, which is the richer in treaſure) God reſerved for later Diſcoveries; So though he reſerve that Hemiſphear of heaven, which is the Glory thereof, to the Reſurrection, yet the other Hemiſphear, the Joy of heaven, God opens to our Diſcovery, and delivers for our habitation even whilſt we dwell in this world. As God hath caſt upon the unrepentant ſinner two deaths, a temporall, and a ſpirituall death, ſo hath he breathed into us two lives; for ſo, as the word for death is doubled, Morte morieris, Thou ſhalt die the death, ſo is the word for life expreſſed in the plurall, Chaiim, vitarum, God breathed into his noſtrils the breath of lives, of divers lives. Though our naturall life were no life, but rather a continuall dying, yet we have two lives beſides that, an eternall life reſerved for heaven, but yet a heavenly life too, a ſpirituall life, even in this world; And as God doth thus inflict two deaths, and infuſe two lives, ſo doth he alſo paſſe two Judgements upon man, or rather repeats the ſame Judgement twice. For, that which Chriſt ſhall ſay to thy ſoule then at the laſt Judgement, Enter into thy Maſters joy, Hee ſayes to thy conſcience now, Enter into thy Maſters joy. The everlaſtingneſſe of the joy is the bleſſedneſſe of the next life, but the entring, the inchoation is afforded here. For, that which Chriſt ſhall ſay then to us, Venite benedicti, Come ye bleſſed, are words intended to perſons that are comming, that are upon the way, though not at home; Here in this world he bids us Come, there in the next, he ſhall bid us Welcome. The Angels of heaven have joy in thy converſion, and canſt thou bee without that joy in thy ſelfe? If thou deſire revenge upon thine enemies, as they are Gods enemies, That God would bee pleaſed to remove, and root out all ſuch as oppoſe him, that Affection appertaines to Glory; Let that alone till thou come to the Hemiſphear of Glory; There joyne with thoſe Martyrs under the Altar, Vſquequo Domine, How long O Lord, doſt thou deferre Judgement? and thou ſhalt have thine anſwere there for that. Whilſt thou art here, here joyne with David, and the other Saints of God, in that holy increpation of a dangerous ſadneſſe, Why art thou caſt downe O my ſoule? why art thou diſquieted in mee? That ſoule that is diſſected and anatomized to God, in a ſincere confeſſion, waſhed in the teares of true contrition, embalmed in the blood of reconciliation, the blood of Chriſt Jeſus, can aſſigne no reaſon, can give no juſt anſwer to that Interrogatory, Why art thou caſt downe O my ſoule? why art thou diſquieted in me? No man is ſo little, as that he can be loſt under theſe wings, no man ſo great, as that they cannot reach to him; Semper ille major eſt, quantumcumque creverimus, To what temporall, to what ſpirituall greatneſſe ſoever wee grow, ſtill pray wee him to ſhadow us under his Wings; for the poore need thoſe wings againſt oppreſſion, and the rich againſt envy. The Holy Ghoſt, who is a Dove, ſhadowed the whole world under his wings; Incubabat aquis, He hovered over the waters, he ſate upon the waters, and he hatched all that was produced, and all that was produced ſo, was good. Be thou a Mother where the Holy Ghoſt would be a Father; Conceive by him; and be content that he produce joy in thy heart here. Firſt thinke, that as a man muſt have ſome land, or els he cannot be in wardſhip, ſo a man muſt have ſome of the love of God, or els he could not fall under Gods correction; God would not give him his phyſick, God would not ſtudy his cure, if he cared not for him. And then thinke alſo, that if God afford thee the ſhadow of his wings, that is, Conſolation, reſpiration, refreſhing, though not a preſent, and plenary deliverance, in thy afflictions, not to thanke God, is a murmuring, and not to rejoyce in Gods wayes, is an unthankfulneſſe. Howling is the noyſe of hell, ſinging the voyce of heaven; Sadneſſe the damp of Hell, Rejoycing the ſerenity of Heaven. And he that hath not this joy here, lacks one of the beſt pieces of his evidence for the joyes of heaven; and hath neglected or refuſed that Earneſt, by which God uſes to binde his bargaine, that true joy in this world ſhall flow

Gen. 2. 17.

Matt. 25. 23.

Verſe 24.

Luk. 15. 10.

Revel. 6. 10.

Pſal. 42. 5.

Auguſt.

B C D E

flow into the joy of Heaven, as a River flowes into the Sea; This joy ſhall not be put out in death, and a new joy kindled in me in Heaven; But as my ſoule, as ſoone as it is out of my body, is in Heaven, and does not ſtay for the poſſeſſion of Heaven, nor for the fruition of the ſight of God, till it be aſcended through ayre, and fire, and Moone, and Sun, and Planets, and Firmament, to that place which we conceive to be Heaven, but without the thouſandth part of a minutes ſtop, as ſoone as it iſſues, is in a glorious light, which is Heaven, (for all the way to Heaven is Heaven; And as thoſe Angels, which came from Heaven hither, bring Heaven with them, and are in Heaven here, So that ſoule that goes to Heaven, meets Heaven here; and as thoſe Angels doe not deveſt Heaven by comming, ſo theſe ſoules inveſt Heaven, in their going.) As my ſoule ſhall not goe towards Heaven, but goe by Heaven to Heaven, to the Heaven of Heavens, So the true joy of a good ſoule in this world is the very joy of Heaven; and we goe thither, not that being without joy, we might have joy infuſed into us, but that as Chriſt ſayes, Our joy might be full, perfected, ſealed with an everlaſtingneſſe; for, as he promiſes, That no man ſhall take our joy from us, ſo neither ſhall Death it ſelfe take it away, nor ſo much as interrupt it, or diſcontinue it, But as in the face of Death, when he layes hold upon me, and in the face of the Devill, when he attempts me, I ſhall ſee the face of God, (for, every thing ſhall be a glaſſe, to reflect God upon me) ſo in the agonies of Death, in the anguiſh of that diſſolution, in the ſorrowes of that valediction, in the irreverſibleneſſe of that tranſmigration, I ſhall have a joy, which ſhall no more evaporate, then my ſoule ſhall evaporate, A joy, that ſhall paſſe up, and put on a more glorious garment above, and be joy ſuperinveſted in glory. Amen.

John 16. 24. 22.

SERM. LXVII.

The third of my Prebend Sermons upon my five Pſalmes:

Preached at S. Pauls, November 5. 1626. In Veſperis.

PSAL. 64. 10.

And all the upright in heart ſhall glory.

I Have had occaſion to tell you more then once before, that our Predeceſſors, in the inſtitution of the Service of this Church, have declared ſuch a reverence and ſuch a devotion to this particular Booke of Scripture, The Pſalmes, as that by diſtributing the hundred and fifty Pſalmes (of which number the body of this booke conſiſts) into thirty portions, (of which number the body of our Church conſiſts) and aſſigning to every one of thoſe thirty perſons, his five Pſalmes, to bee ſaid by him every day, every day God receives from us (howſoever wee be divided from one another in place) the Sacrifice of Praiſe, in the whole Booke of Pſalmes. And, though we may be abſent from this Quire, yet whereſoever diſperſed, we make up a Quire in this Service, of ſaying over all the Pſalmes every day. This ſixty fourth Pſalme, is the third of my five. And when, (according to the obligation which I had laid upon my ſelfe, to handle in this place ſome portion of every one of theſe my five Pſalmes) in handling of thoſe words, of the Pſalme immediately before this, in the ſeventh verſe, (Becauſe thou haſt beene my helpe, therefore in the ſhadow of thy Wings I will rejoyce) I told you, that the next world, Heaven, was (as this world is) divided into two Hemiſpheares, and that the two Hemiſpheares of Heaven, were Joy and Glory, (for, in thoſe two notions of Joy and Glory, is Heaven often repreſented unto us) as in thoſe words which we handled then, wee ſailed about the firſt Hemiſpheare, That of Joy, (In the ſhadow of thy Wings will I rejoyce) So, in theſe which I have read to you now, our voyage lies about the Hemiſpheare of Glory, for, (All the upright in heart ſhall ſhall Glory.) As we ſaid then of Joy, we ſay of Glory now; There is an inchoative joy here, though the conſummative joy be reſerved for Heaven; ſo is there alſo ſuch a taſte, ſuch an inchoation of glory in this life. And as no man ſhall come to the joyes of Heaven, that hath no joy in this world, (for, there is no peace of conſcience without this joy) ſo no man ſhall come to the glory of Heaven, that hath not a holy ambition of this glory in this world; for, this glory which we ſpeake of, is the evidence, and the reflexion of the glory from above; for, the glory of God ſhines through godly men, and wee receive a beame and a tincture of that glory of God, when we have the approbation, and teſtimony, and good opinion, and good words of good men; which is the Glory of our Text, as far as this world is capable of glory. All the upright in heart ſhall glory, that is, They ſhall be celebrated and encouraged with the glory and praiſe of good men here, and they ſhall be rewarded with everlaſting glory in Heaven. A

Diviſio. In theſe words we propoſe to you but two parts; Firſt, The diſpoſition of the Perſons, Omnes recti corde, All the upright in heart, and then, The retribution upon theſe Perſons, Gloriabuntur, They ſhall Glory, or, (as it is in the Vulgat, and well) Laudabuntur, They ſhall be celebrated, they ſhall be praiſed. In the firſt, The qualification of the perſons, wee ſhall paſſe by theſe ſteps; Firſt, that God in his puniſhments and rewardings propoſes to himſelfe Perſons, Perſons already made, and qualified. God does not begin at a retribution, nor begin at a condemnation, before he have Perſons, Perſons fit to be rewarded, Perſons fit to be condemned. God did not firſt make a Heaven and a Hell, and after thinke of making man, that he might have ſome perſons to put in them; but, firſt for his Glory he made Man, and for thoſe, who by a good uſe of his grace preſerved their ſtate, Heaven, and for thoſe, who by their owne fault fell, he made Hell. Firſt, he propoſed Perſons, Perſons in being; And then, for the Perſons (as his delight is for the moſt part to doe) in this Text he expreſſes it; which is, rather to inſiſt upon the Rewards, which the Good ſhall receive, then upon the condemnation and judgements of the wicked. If he could chuſe, that is, If his owne Glory, and the edification of his Children would beare it, he would not ſpeake at all of judgements, or of thoſe perſons that draw neceſſary judgements upon themſelves, but he would exerciſe our contemplation wholly upon his mercy, and upon Perſons qualified and prepared for his gracious retributions. So he does here; He ſpeakes not at all of perverſe, and froward, and ſiniſter, and oblique men, men incapable of his retributions, but onely of Perſons diſpoſed, ordained, prepared for them. B C

And, in the qualification of theſe Perſons, he propoſes firſt a rectitude, a directneſſe, an uprightneſſe; declinations downeward, deviations upon the wrong hand, ſquint-eyed men, ſplay-footed men, left-handed men, (in a ſpirituall ſenſe) he meddles not withall. They muſt be direct, and upright; And then, upright in heart; for, to be good to ill ends, (as, in many caſes, a man may be) God accepts not, regards not. But, let him be a perſon thus qualified, Vpright; upright becauſe he loves uprightneſſe, Vpright in heart; And then, he is infallably imbraced, and enwrapped in that generall rule, and propoſition, that admits no exception, Omnes recti corde, All the upright in heart ſhall be partakers of this retribution: And in theſe branches we ſhall determine our firſt Part, firſt, That God propoſes to himſelfe Perſons; Perſons thus and thus qualified; he begins at them. Secondly, That God had rather dwell himſelfe, and propoſe to us the conſideration of good perſons, then bad, of his mercies, then his judgements, for he mentions no other here, but perſons capable of his retributions; And then, the goodneſſe that God conſiders, is rectitude, and rectitude in the roote, in the heart; And from that roote growes that ſpreading univerſality, that infallibility, Omnes, All ſuch are ſure of the Reward. D

And then, in our ſecond Part, in the Reward it ſelfe, though it be delivered here in the whole barre, in the Ingot, in the Wedge, in Bulloyn, in one ſingle word, Gloriabuntur, Laudabuntur, They ſhall Glory, yet it admits this Mintage, and coyning, and iſſuing in leſſer pieces, That firſt we conſider the thing it ſelfe, The metall in which God rewards us, Glory, Praiſe; And then, ſince Gods promiſe is faſtened upon that, (We ſhall be praiſed) As we may lawfully ſeeke the praiſe of good men, ſo muſt wee alſo willingly afford praiſe to good men, and to good actions. And then, ſince we finde this retribution fixed in the future, (We ſhall be praiſed, we ſhall be in glory) there ariſes this Conſolation, That though we have it not yet, yet we ſhall have it, Though wee be in diſhonour, and contempt, and under a cloud, of which we ſee no end our ſelves, yet there is a determined E

A ned future in God, which ſhall be made preſent, we ſhall overcome this contempt, and Gloriabimur, and Laudabimur, we ſhall Glory, we ſhall be celebrated; In which future, the conſolation is thus much farther exalted, that it is an everlaſting future; the glory, and praiſe, the approbation, and acclamation, which we ſhall receive from good men, here, ſhall flow out and continue, to the Hoſannaes in Heaven, in the mouth of Saints, and Angels, and to the Euge bone ſerve, Well done, good and faithfull Servant, in the mouth of God himſelfe. Mat. 25. 21.

First then, God propoſes to himſelfe, (in his Rewards and Retributions) Perſons; Perſons diſpoſed and qualified. Not diſpoſed by nature, without uſe of grace; that is flat and full Pelagianiſme; Not diſpoſed by preventing grace, without uſe of ſubſequent grace, by Antecedent and anticipant, without concomitant and auxiliant grace; that is Semi-pelagianiſme. But perſons obſequious to his grace, when it comes, and perſons in- 1 Part. Perſonæ qualificatæ.

B duſtrious and ambitious of more and more grace, and husbanding his grace well all the way, ſuch perſons God propoſes to himſelfe. God does not onely reade his own works, nor is he onely delighted with that which he hath writ himſelfe, with his own eternall Decrees in heaven, but he loves alſo to reade our books too, our hiſtories which we compoſe in our lives and actions, and as his delight is to be with the ſonnes of men, ſo his ſtudy is Pro. 8. 31.
in this Library, to know what we doe. S. Paul ſayes, That God made him a Miniſter of the Epheſ. 3. 7.
Goſpel, to preach to the Gentils, to the intent that the Angels might know the manifold wiſdome of God by the Church; That is, by that that was done in the Church. The Angels ſaw God; Did they not ſee theſe things in God? No; for, Theſe things were hid in God, ſayes the Apoſtle there; And the Angels ſee no more in God, then God reveales unto them; and theſe things of the Church, God reſerved to a future, and to an experimentall knowledge, to be knowne then when they were done in the Church. So there are De-

C crees in God, but they are hid in God; To this purpoſe and entendment, and in this ſenſe, hid from God himſelfe, that God accepts or condemnes Man Secundum allegata & Probata, according to the Evidence that ariſes from us, and not according to thoſe Records that are hid in himſelfe. Our actions and his Records agree; we doe thoſe things which he hath Decreed; but onely our doing them, and not his Decreeing them, hath the nature of evidence. God does not Reward, nor Condemne out of his Decrees, but out of our actions. God ſent downe his Commiſſioners the Angels to Sodome, to inquire, and Gen. 18. 17.
to informe him how things went. God goes down himſelfe to inquire, and informe him- Gen. 3. 9.
ſelfe, how it ſtood with Adam and Eve. Not that God was ever ignorant of any thing concerning us, but that God would prevent that dangerous imagination in every man, That God ſhould firſt meane to deſtroy him, and then to make him, that he might de-

D ſtroy him, without having any evidence againſt him. For God made man Ad imaginem ſuam, To his owne Image. If he had made him under an inevitable, and irreſiſtible neceſſity of damnation, he had made him Ad Imaginem Diabolicam, to the Image of the Devill, and not to his own. God goes not out as a Fowler, that for his pleaſure and recreation, or for his commodity, or commendation, would kill, and therefore ſeeks out game that he may kill it; It is not God that ſeeks whom he may devoure: But God ſees the 1 Pet. 5. 8.
Vulture tearing his Chickens, or other birds picking his Corne, or pecking his fruit, and then when they are in that miſchievous action, God takes his bowe and ſhoots them for that. When God condemns a man, he propoſes not that man to himſelfe, as he meant to make him, and as he did make him, but as by his ſinnes he hath made himſelfe. At the firſt Creation, God looked upon nothing; there was nothing; But ever ſince there have been Creatures, God hath looked upon the Creature: and as Adam gave every Crea-

E ture the Name, according as he ſaw the Nature thereof to be; ſo God gives every man reward or puniſhment, the name of a Saint or a Devill, in his purpoſe, as he ſees him a good or a bad uſer of his graces. When I ſhall come to the ſight of the Booke of life, and the Records of heaven, amongſt the Reprobate, I ſhall never ſee the name of Cain alone, but Cain with his addition, Cain that killed his brother; Nor Iudas name alone; but Iudas with his addition, Iudas that betrayed his Maſter. God does not begin with a morte moriendum, ſome body muſt die, and therefore I will make ſome body to kill; But God came to a morte morieris, yet thou art alive, and mayeſt live, but if thou wilt rebell, thou muſt die. God did not call up feavers, and peſtilence, and conſumptions, and fire, and Levit. 26. 16.
famine, and warre, and then make man, that he might throw him into their mouths, but when man threw downe himſelfe, God let him fall into their mouths. Had I never finned in wantonneſſe, I ſhould never have had conſumption; nor feaver, if I had not ſinned in Riot; nor death, if I had not tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord of life. If God be pleaſed to looke upon me, at the laſt day, as I am renewed in Chriſt, I am ſafe. But if God ſhould looke upon me, (as he made me) in Adam, I could not be un-acceptable in his ſight, except he looked farther, and ſaw me in mine own, or in Adams ſin. I would never wiſh my ſelfe better, then God wiſhed me at firſt; no, nor then God wiſhes me now, as manifold a ſinner as he ſees me now, if yet I would conforme my will to his. God looks upon perſons; perſons ſo conditioned as they were, which was our firſt branch, in this firſt part; and our ſecond is, That he delights to propoſe to himſelfe Perſons that are capable of his rewards; for he mentions no others in this place, All that are upright in heart. A

Inſiſtit in bonis.

The firſt thing that Moſes names to have been made, was Heaven, (In the beginning God made Heaven and Earth) And infinite millions of generations before this Heaven was made, there was a Heaven, an eternall emanation of beams of glory, from the preſence of God. But Moſes tells us of no Hell made at the Creation; And before the Creation, ſuch a Hell, as there was a Heaven, there could not be; for, the preſence of God made Heaven; and God was equally preſent every where. And they who have multiplied Hells unto us, and made more Hells then God hath made, more by their two Limboes, (one for Fathers, another for Children) and one Purgatory, have yet made their new Hells, more of the nature of Heaven then of Hell. For, in one of their Limboes, (that of the Fathers) and in their Purgatory, there is in them, who are there, an infallible aſſurance of Heaven, They that are there, are infallibly aſſured to come to Heaven; And an aſſurance of ſalvation will hardly conſiſt with Hell; He that is ſure to come to Heaven, can hardly be ſaid to be in Hell. B

God was loath and late in making places of torment; He is loath to ſpeake of Judgements, or of thoſe that extort Judgements from him. How plentifully, how abundantly is the word Beatus, Bleſſed, multiplied in the Booke of Pſalmes? Bleſſed, and Bleſſed in every Pſalme, in every Verſe; The Booke ſeems to be made out of that word, Bleſſed, And the foundation rayſed upon that word, Bleſſed, for it is the firſt word of the Booke. But in all the Booke, there is not one Væ, not one woe, ſo denounced; Not one woe, upon any ſoule in that Booke. And when this Væ, this woe is denounced in ſome other of the Prophets, it is very often Vox dolentis, and not Increpantis, That Væ, that woe, is a voyce of compaſſion in him that ſpeaks it, and not of deſtruction to them to whom it is ſpoken. C

Jerem. 9. 1. God, in the perſon of Ieremy, weeps in contemplation of the calamities threatned, Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountaine of teares, that I might weepe day and night for the ſlaine of the Daughter of my people. It is God that was their Father, and it is God, their God that ſlew them; but yet, that God, their Father weepes over the ſlaughter. D

Eſay 16. 9. So in the perſon of Eſay, God weeps againe, I will bewaile thee with weeping, and I will water thee with teares. And without putting on the perſon of any man, God himſelfe avowes his ſighing, when he comes to name Judgements, Heu, vindicabor, Alas, I will revenge me of mine enemies; And he ſighs, when he comes but to name their ſinnes, Heu abominationes, Alas, for all the evill abominations of the houſe of Iſrael. As though God had contracted an Irregularity, by having to doe in a cauſe of blood, He ſighs, he weeps when he muſt draw blood from them. God delights to inſtitute his diſcourſes, and to take, and to make his Examples, from men that ſtand in ſtate of grace, and are capable of his Mercies, and his Retributions, as here in this Text, he names onely thoſe, who are Recti corde, The upright in heart, They ſhall be conſidered, rewarded.

Eſay 1. 24.

Ezek. 16. 11.

Recti.

The diſpoſition that God propoſes here in thoſe perſons, whom he conſiders, is Rectitude, Uprightneſſe, and Directneſſe. God hath given Man that forme in nature, much more in grace, that he ſhould be upright, and looke up, and contemplate Heaven, and God there. And therefore to bend downwards upon the earth, to fix our breaſt, our heart to the earth, to lick the duſt of the earth with the Serpent, to inhere upon the profits and pleaſures of the earth, and to make that which God intended for our way, and our riſe to heaven, (the bleſſings of this world) the way to hell; this is a manifeſt Declination from this Uprightneſſe, from this Rectitude. Nay, to goe ſo far towards the love of the earth, as to be in love with the grave, to be impatient of the calamities of this life, and murmur at Gods detaining us in this priſon, to ſinke into a ſordid melancholy, or irreligious dejection of ſpirit; this is alſo a Declination from this Rectitude, this Uprightneſſe. So is it too, E

A too, to decline towards the left hand, to Modifications, and Temporiſings in matter or forme of Religion, and to thinke all indifferent, all one; or to decline towards the right hand, in an over-vehement zeale, To pardon no errors, to abate nothing of hereſie, if a man beleeve not all, and juſt all that we beleeve; To abate nothing of Reprobation, if a man live not juſt as we live; this is alſo a Diverſion, a Deviation, a Deflection, a Defection from this Rectitude, this Uprightneſſe. For, the word of this Text, Iaſhar, ſignifies Rectitudinem, and Planitiem; It ſignifies a direct way; for, the Devils way was Circular, Compaſſing the Earth; But the Angels way to heaven upon Iacobs ladder, was a ſtraight, a direct way. And then it ſignifies, as a direct and ſtraight, ſo a plaine, a ſmooth, an even way, a way that hath been beaten into a path before, a way that the Fathers, and the Church have walked in before, and not a diſcovery made by our curioſity, or our confidence, in venturing from our ſelves, or embracing from others, new doctrines and B opinions.

The perſons then, whom God propoſes here to be partakers of his Retributions, are firſt Recti, (that is, both Direct men, and Plaine men) and then recti corde, this qualification, this ſtraightneſſe, and ſmoothneſſe muſt be in the heart; All the upright in heart ſhall have it. Upon this earth, a man cannot poſſibly make one ſtep in a ſtraight, and a direct line. The earth it ſelfe being round, every ſtep wee make upon it, muſt neceſſarily bee a ſegment, an arch of a circle. But yet though no piece of a circle be a ſtraight line, yet if we take any piece, nay if wee take the whole circle, there is no corner, no angle in any piece, in any intire circle. A perfect rectitude we cannot have in any wayes in this world; In every Calling there are ſome inevitable tentations. But, though wee cannot make up our circle of a ſtraight line, (that is impoſſible to humane frailty) yet wee may paſſe on, without angles, and corners, that is, without diſguiſes in our Religion, and without the C love of craft, and falſehood, and circumvention in our civill actions. A Compaſſe is a neceſſary thing in a Ship, and the helpe of that Compaſſe brings the Ship home ſafe, and yet that Compaſſe hath ſome variations, it doth not looke directly North; Neither is that ſtarre which we call the North-pole, or by which we know the North-pole, the very Pole it ſelfe; but we call it ſo, and we make our uſes of it, and our concluſions by it, as if it were ſo, becauſe it is the neereſt ſtarre to that Pole. He that comes as neere uprightneſſe, as infirmities admit, is an upright man, though he have ſome obliquities. To God himſelfe we may alwayes go in a direct line, a ſtraight, a perpendicular line; For God is verticall to me, over my head now, and verticall now to them, that are in the Eaſt, and Weſt-Indies; To our Antipodes, to them that are under our feet, God is verticall, over their heads, then when he is over ours.

To come to God there is a ſtraight line for every man every where: But this we doe
D not, if we come not with our heart. Præbe mihi fili cor tuum, ſaith God, My ſonne give me thy heart. Was hee his ſonne, and had hee not his heart? That may very well bee. There is a filiation without the heart; not ſuch a filiation, as ſhall ever make him partaker of the inheritance, but yet a filiation. The aſſociating our ſelves to the ſonnes of God, in an outward profeſſion of Religion, makes us ſo farre the ſonnes of God, as that the judgement of man cannot, and the judgement of God doth not diſtinguiſh them. Becauſe, then when the ſonnes of God ſtood in his preſence, Satan ſtood amongſt the ſons of God; God doth not diſavow him, God doth not excommunicate him, God makes his uſe of him, and yet God knew his heart was farre from him. So, when God was in Councell with his Angels, about Ahabs going up to Ramoth Gilead, A ſpirit came forth and offered his ſervice, and God refuſes not his ſervice, but employes him, though hee knew his heart to be farre from him. So, no doubt, many times, they to whom God
E hath committed ſupreme government, and they who receive beames of this power by ſubordination, and delegation from them, they ſee Satan amongſt the ſonnes of God, hypocrites and impiouſly diſpoſed men come into theſe places of holy convocation, and they ſuffer them, nay they employ them, nay they preferre them, and yet they know their hearts are farre from them; but as long as they ſtand amongſt the ſonnes of God, that is, appeare and conforme themſelves in the outward acts of Religion, they are not diſavowed, they are not ejected: by us here, they are not. But howſoever wee date our Excommunications againſt them, but from an overt act, and apparant diſobedience, yet in the Records of heaven, they ſhall meet an Excommunication, and a conviction of Recuſancy, that ſhall beare date from that day, when they came firſt to Church, with that purpoſe

Recti Corde.

Pro. 23. 26.

Iob 1. 6.

1 King. 22. 22.

purpoſe to delude the Congregation, to elude the lawes in that behalfe provided, to advance their treacherous deſignes by ſuch diſguiſes, or upon what other collaterall and indirect occaſion ſoever, men come to this place: for, though they bee in the right way, when they are here, at Church, yet becauſe they are not upright in heart, therefore that right way brings not them to the right end. A

And that is it which David lookes upon in God, and deſires that God ſhould looke upon in him; (According to thine owne heart, ſaith David to God, haſt thou done all theſe great things unto us) (For, ſometimes God doth give temporall bleſſings to men, upon whom he hath not ſet his heart) And then in the 27. Verſe he ſayes, (Therefore hath thy ſervant found in his heart, to pray this prayer unto thee) If he had onely found it in the Liturgy, and in the manner of the Service of that Church, to which hee came with an ill will, and againſt his heart, he would not have prayed that prayer, nay he would not have come to that Church. For, though David place a great joy in that, (That he can come to praiſe God in the Congregation, and in the great Congregation) And though David ſeeme even to determine Gods preſence in the Church, (for he multiplies that expoſtulation, that adprecation many times, When ſhall I come, in conſpectum tuum, into thy preſence? And, Reſtore me, O Lord, conſpectui tuo, to thy preſence, Hee was not right, not in the right way, if he came not to Church) yet there is a caſe in which David glories in, though (as hee ſaith there) In corde meo abſcondi eloquium tuum, Thy word have I hidden, locked up, in my heart. Though in another, in many other places, he rejoyce in that, (I have not hid thy righteouſneſſe in my heart, I have not concealed thy truth from the great Congregation) yet here he glories in his Abſcondi, I have hid it. Which, (as both S. Hilary, and S. Ambroſe referre it to a diſcreet and ſeaſonable ſuppreſſing of the myſteries of Religion, and not to caſt pearles before ſwine) may alſo inferre this Inſtruction; That a man were better ſerve God at home, (though not in ſo right a way, if he thinke it right) then to come hither againſt his heart, and conſcience. Not, but that there is better meanes of receiving good here, then at home in private prayer, (though made the right way) But his end in comming is not to make this meanes his way to that good; And therefore his very being here, (though hee be thereby in the right way) becauſe it comes not from an upright heart, as it is a greater danger to us, who are deluded by their hypocriticall conformity, ſo is it a greater ſinne to them, who come ſo againſt their conſcience. David prayes thus, Incola ſum, ne abſcondas, I am a ſtranger, hide not thy commandements from mee, (Let me not be a ſtranger at Church, at thy Service.) And ſo it behooves us to pray too, That thoſe Doores, and thoſe Books may alwayes bee open unto us; But yet I will ſay with David too, Abſcondam eloquium, where I am a ſtranger, and in a place of ſtrange, and ſuperſtitious worſhip, I will hide my religion ſo farre, as not to communicate with others, in a ſervice againſt my heart; It is not ſafe for us to truſt our ſelves at a ſuperſtitious Service, though curioſity, or company, or dependency upon others draw us thither; neither is it ſafe to truſt all that come hither, if their hearts be not here. For the Retribution of our Text, that is, Thanks and Praiſe, belongs onely to them, who are Right, and Right of heart, and to them it is made due, and infallible, by this promiſe from God, and made univerſall, Omnes, All the upright in heart ſhall glory.

2 Sam. 7. 21.

Pſal. 35. 11. 40. 10.

Pſal. 119. 11.

Pſal. 40. 10.

Pſal. 119. 19.

A

B

C

D

Omnes.

How often God admits into his owne Name, this addition of Univerſality, Omne, All, as though he would be knowne by that eſpecially. He is Omnipotent, There he can doe All; He is Omniſcient, There he can know All; Hee is Omnipreſent, There he can direct All. Neither doth God extend himſelfe to all, that he may gather from all, but that he may gather all, and all might meet in him, and enjoy him. So, God is all Center, as that hee looks to all, and ſo, all circumference, as that hee embraces all. The Sunne works upon things that he ſees not, (as Mynes in the wombe of the earth) and ſo works the leſſe perfectly. God ſees all, and works upon all, and deſires perfection in all. There is no one word ſo often in the Bible, as this, Omne, All. Neither hath God ſpread the word more liberally upon all the lines of this Booke, then he hath his gracious purpoſes upon all the ſoules of men. And therefore, to withdraw Gods generall goodneſſe out of his generall propoſitions, That he would have all repent, That he came to ſave all, is to contract and abridge God himſelfe, in his moſt extenſive Attribute, or Denotation, that is, his Mercy: And as there is a curſe laid upon them, that take away any part, any propoſition out of this Booke, ſo may there be a curſe, or an ill affection, and countenance and ſuſpicion from God, that preſſes any of his generall propoſitions to a narrower, and leſſe

E

A leſſe gracious ſenſe then God meant in it. It were as eaſily beleeved, that God lookes towards no man, as that there ſhould be any man (in whom he ſees, that is, conſiders no ſin) that he lookes not towards. I could as eaſily doubt of the univerſall providence of God, as of the univerſall mercy of God, if man continued not in rebellion, and in oppoſition. If I can ſay, by way of confeſſion, and accuſing my ſelfe, Lord, my wayes have not beene right, nor my heart right, there is yet mercy for mee. But, to them who have ſtudied and accuſtomed themſelves to this uprightneſſe of heart, there is mercy in that exaltation, mercy in the nature of a Reward, of a Retribution; And this Retribution expreſſed here, in this word Glory, conſtitutes our ſecond Part, All the upright in heart ſhall Glory.

This Retribution is expreſſed in the Originall, in the word Halal; And Halal, to thoſe Tranſlators that made up our Booke of Common Prayer, preſented the ſignification of 2 Part. Laus.

B Gladneſſe, for ſo it is there, They ſhall be glad; So it did to the Tranſlators that came after, for there it is, They ſhall rejoyce; And to our laſt Tranſlators it ſeemed to ſignifie Glory, They ſhall Glory, ſay they. But the firſt Tranſlation of all into our Language (which was long before any of theſe three) cals it Praiſe, and puts it in the Paſſive, All men of right full heart ſhall be praiſed. He followed S. Hierom, who reads it ſo, and interprets it ſo, in the Paſſive, Laudabuntur, They ſhall be praiſed. And ſo truly Iithhalelu, in the Original, beares it, nay requires it, which is not of a praiſe that they ſhall give to God, but of a praiſe, that they ſhall receive for having ſerved God with an upright heart; not that they ſhall praiſe God in doing ſo, but that godly men ſhall praiſe them for having done ſo. All this will grow naturally out of the roote; for, the roote of this word, is Lucere, Splendere, To ſhine out in the eyes of men, and to create in them a holy and a reverentiall admiration, as it was Iohn Baptiſts praiſe, That he was A burning, and a ſhining Lampe. Properly it is,

C by a good and a holy exemplary life, to occaſion others to ſet a right value upon Holineſſe, and to give a due reſpect to holy men. For ſo, where we read, Their Maidens were not given in Marriage, we finde this word of our Text, Their Maidens were not praiſed, that is, there was not a due reſpect held of them, nor a juſt value ſet upon them. Pſal. 78.63.

So that, this retribution intended for the upright in heart, as in the growth and extenſion of the word, it reaches to Joy, and Glory, and Eminency, and Reſpect, ſo in the roote, it ſignifies Praiſe; And it is given them by God, as a Reward, That they ſhall be Praiſed; now, Praiſe (ſayes the Philoſopher) is Sermo elucidans magnitudinem virtutis; It is the good word of good men, a good teſtimony given by good men of good actions. And this difference we uſe to aſſigne betweene Praiſe, and Honour, Laus eſt in ordine ad finem, Honor eorum qui jam in fine; Praiſe is an encouragement to them that are in the way, and ſo far, a Reward, a Reward of good beginnings; Honour is reſerved to

D the end, to crowne their conſtancy, and perſeverance. And therefore, where men are rewarded with great honours at the beginning, in hope they will deſerve it, they are paid beforehand. Thanks, and Grace, and good countenance, and Praiſe, are interlocutory encouragements, Honours are finall Rewards. But, ſince Praiſe is a part of Gods retribution, a part of his promiſe in our text, They ſhall be praiſed, we are thereby not onely allowed, but bound to ſeeke this praiſe from good men, and to give this praiſe to good men; for, in this Coine God hath promiſed, that the upright in heart ſhall be paid, They ſhall be praiſed.

To ſeeke praiſe from good men, by good meanes, is but the ſame thing which is recommended to us by Solomon, A good name is rather to be choſen, then great riches, and loving favour, then ſilver and Gold. For, Habent & mores colores ſuos, habent & odores; Our good works have a colour, and they have a ſavor; we ſee their Candor, their ſincerity in Laus à bonis quærenda. Prov. 22.1. Bernar.

E our owne conſciences, there is their colour; (for, in our owne conſciences our works appeare in their true colours; no man can be an hypocrite to himſelfe, nor ſeriouſly, deliberately deceive himſelfe) And, when others give allowance of our works, and are edified by them, there is their ſavour, their odor, their perfume, their fragrancy. And therefore S. Hierom, and S. Auguſtin differ little in their manner of expreſſing this, Non paratum habeas illud è trivio, Serve not thy ſelfe with that triviall, and vulgar ſaying, As long as my conſcience teſtifies well to me, I care not what men ſay of me; And ſo ſayes that other Father, They that reſt in the teſtimony of their owne conſciences, and contemne the opinion of other men, Imprudenter agunt, & crudeliter, They deale weakly, and improvidently for themſelves, in that they aſſiſt not their conſciences, with more witneſſes, Hieron. Auguſt.

neſſes, And they deale cruelly towards others, in that they provide not for their edification, by the knowledge and manifeſtation of their good works. For, (as he adds well there) Qui à criminibus vitam cuſtodit, bene facit, He that is innocent in his owne heart, does well for himſelfe, but Qui famam cuſtodit, & in alios miſericors eſt, He that is known to live well, he that hath the praiſe of good men, to bee a good man, is mercifull, in an exemplary life, to others, and promoves their ſalvation. For, when that Father gives a meaſure, how much praiſe a man may receive, and a rule, how he may receive it, when he hath firſt ſaid, Nec totum, nec nihil accipiatur, Receive not all, but yet refuſe not all praiſe, he adds this, That that which is to be received, is not to be received for our owne ſakes, ſed propter illos, quibus conſulere non poteſt, ſi nimia dejectione vileſcat, but for their ſakes, who would undervalue goodneſſe it ſelfe, if good men did too much undervalue themſelves, or thought themſelves never the better for their goodneſſe. And therefore S. Bernard applies that in the Proverbs to this caſe; Haſt thou found Honey? eate that which is ſufficient. Mellis nomine, favor humanæ laudis, ſayes he, By Honey, favour, and praiſe, and thankfulneſſe is meant; Meritóque non ab omni, ſed ab immoderato edulio prohibemur, We are not forbid to taſte, nor to eate, but to ſurfet of this Honey, of this praiſe of men. S. Auguſtine found this love of praiſe in himſelfe, and could forbid it no man, Laudari à bene viventibus, ſi dicam, nolo, mentior, If I ſhould ſay, that I deſired not the praiſe of good men, I ſhould belie my ſelfe. He carries it higher then thus; He does not doubt, but that the Apoſtles themſelves had a holy joy, and complacency, when their Preaching was acceptable, and thereby effectuall upon the Congregation. Such a love of praiſe is rooted in Nature; and Grace deſtroyes not Nature; Grace extinguiſhes not, but moderates this love of praiſe in us, nor takes away the matter, but onely exhibits the meaſure. Certainly, he that hath not ſome deſire of praiſe, will bee negligent in doing praiſe-worthy things; and negligent in another duty intended here too, that is, To praiſe good men, which is alſo another particular branch in this Part.

Prov. 25. 16.

Laus danda aliis.

The hundred forty fift Pſalme is, in the Title thereof, called A Pſalme of Praiſe; And the Rabbins call him Filium futuri Seculi, A child of the next World, that ſayes that Pſalme thrice a day. We will interpret it, by way of Accommodation, thus, that he is a child of the next World, that directs his Praiſe every day, upon three objects, upon God, upon himſelfe, upon other men. Of God, there can be no queſtion; And for our ſelves, it is truly the moſt proper, and moſt literall ſignification of this word in our Text, Iithhaleln, That they ſhall praiſe themſelves, that is, They ſhall have the teſtimony of a rectified conſcience, that they have deſerved the praiſe of good men, in having done laudible ſervice to God. And then, for others, That which God promiſes to Iſrael in their reſtauration, belongs to all the Iſrael of the Lord, to all the faithfull, I will get thee praiſe, and fame in every land, and I will make thee a name, and a praiſe amongſt all the people of the earth. This, God will doe; procure them a name, a glory: By whom? When God bindes himſelfe, he takes us into the band with him, and when God makes himſelfe the debtor, he makes us ſtewards; when he promiſes them praiſe, he meanes that we ſhould give them that praiſe. Be all waies of flatterings, and humourings of great perſons precluded with a Proteſtation, with a deteſtation; Be Philo Iudæus his compariſon received, His Coquus, and his Medicus, One provides ſweetneſſe for the preſent taſte, but he is but a Cooke, The other is a Phyſitian, and though by bitter things, provides for thy future health; And ſuch is the hony of Flatterers, and ſuch is the wormewood of better Counſellors. I will not ſhake a Proverbe, not the Ad Corvos, That wee were better admit the Crowes, that picke out our eyes, after we are dead, then Flatterers that blinde us, whilſt we live; I caſt juſtly upon others, I take willingly upon my ſelfe, the name of wicked, (if I bleſſe the covetous whom the Lord abhorreth) or any other whom he hath declared to be odious to him. But making my object goodneſſe in that man, and taking that goodneſſe in that man, to be a Candle, ſet up by God in that Candleſticke, God having engaged himſelfe, that that good man ſhall be praiſed, I will be a Subſidy man ſo far, ſo far pay Gods debts, as to celebrate with condigne praiſe the goodneſſe of that man; for, in that, I doe, as I ſhould deſire to be done to, And in that, I pay a debt to that man, And in that I ſuccour their weakneſſe, who, (as S. Gregory ſayes) when they heare another praiſed, Si non amore virtutis, at delectatione laudis accenduntur, At firſt for the love of Praiſe, but after, for the love of goodneſſe it ſelfe, are drawne to bee good. For, when the Apoſtle had directed the Philippians upon things that were True, and Zephan. 3. 19.

Greg.

Phil. 4. 8.

A and honeſt, and juſt, and pure, and lovely, and of a good report, he ends all thus, If there be any vertue, and if there be any praiſe, thinke on theſe things. In thoſe two ſayes S. Auguſtine, he divides all, Vertue, and Praiſe; Vertue in our ſelves, that may deſerve Praiſe; Praiſe towards others, that may advance and propagate Vertue. This is the retribution which God promiſes to all the upright in heart, Gloriabuntur, Laudabuntur, They ſhall Glory, they ſhall have, they ſhall give praiſe. And then it is ſo far from diminiſhing this Glory, as that it infinitely exalts our conſolation, that God places this Retribution in the future, Gloriabuntur, If they doe not yet, yet certainly they ſhall glory, And if they doe now, that glory ſhall not goe out, ſtill they ſhall, they ſhall for ever glory.

In the Hebrew there is no Preſent tenſe; In that language wherein God ſpake, it could not be ſaid, The upright in heart, Are praiſed; Many times they are not. But God ſpeaks in the future; firſt, that he may ſtill keepe his Children in an expectation and de- Futurum.

B pendance upon him, (you ſhall be, though you be not yet) And then, to eſtabliſh them in an infallibility, becauſe he hath ſaid it, (I know you are not yet, but comfort your ſelves, I have ſaid it, and it ſhall be.) As the Hebrew hath no Superlatives, becauſe God would keepe his Children within compaſſe, and in moderate deſires, to content themſelves with his meaſures, though they be not great, and though they be not heaped; ſo, conſidering what preſſures, and contempts, and terrors, the upright in heart are ſubject to, it is a bleſſed reliefe, That they have a future propoſed unto them, That they ſhall be praiſed, That they ſhall be redeemed out of contempt. This makes even the Expectation it ſelfe as ſweet to them, as the fruition would be. This makes them, that when David ſayes, Expectа viriliter, Waite upon the Lord with a good courage; Waite, I ſay, Pſal. 27. 14.

upon the Lord, they doe not anſwer with the impatience of the Martyrs under the Altar, Vſquequo, How long, Lord, wilt thou defer it? But they anſwer in Davids owne Rev. 6. 10.

C words, Expectans expectavi, I have waited long, And, Expectabo nomen tuum, ſtill I will Pſal. 40. 1.
waite upon thy Name; I will waite till the Lord come; His kingdome come in the mean Pſal. 52. 9.
time, His kingdome of Grace, and Patience; and for his Eaſe, and his Deliverance, and his Praiſe, and his Glory to me, let that come, when he may be moſt glorified in the comming thereof. Nay, not onely the Expectation, (that is, that that is expected) ſhall be comfortable, becauſe it ſhall be infallible; but that very preſent ſtate that he is in, ſhall be comfortable, according to the firſt of our three Tranſlations, They that are true of heart, ſhall be glad thereof; Glad of that; Glad that they are true of heart, though their future retribution were never ſo far removed; Nay, though there were no future retribution in the caſe, yet they ſhall finde comfort enough in their preſent Integrity. Nay, not onely their preſent ſtate of Integrity, but their preſent ſtate of miſery, ſhall be comfortable to them; for this very word of our Text, Halal, that is here tranſlated Joy, and D Glory, and Praiſe, in divers places of Scripture, (as Hebrew words have often ſuch a tranſplantation) ſignifies Inglorioуſneſſe, and contempt, and dejection of ſpirit; So that Ingloriouſneſſe, and contempt, and dejection of ſpirit, may be a part of the retribution; God Pſal. 75. 4. Eſa. 44. 25. Job 12. 17.

may make Ingloriouſneſſe, and Contempt, and Dejection of ſpirit, a greater bleſſing and benefit, then Joy, and Glory, and Praiſe would have been; and ſo reſerve all this Glory and Praiſing to that time, that David intends, The righteous ſhall be in everlaſting remembrance. Though they live and die contemptibly, they ſhall be in an honorable remembrance, even amongſt men, as long as men laſt, and even when time ſhall be no more, and men no more, they ſhall have it in futuro æterno; where there ſhall be an everlaſting preſent, and an everlaſting future, there the upright in heart ſhall be praiſed, and that for ever, which is our concluſion of all. Pſal. 112. 6.

If this word of our Text, Halal, ſhall ſignifie Joy, (as the Service Booke, and the Gene- Æternum.

E va tranſlation render it) that may be ſomewhat towards enough, which we had occaſion to ſay of the Joyes of heaven, in our Exerciſe upon the precedent Pſalme, when we ſayled thorough that Hemiſpheare of Heaven, by the breath of the Holy Ghoſt, in handling thoſe words, Vnder the ſhadow of thy wings I will rejoyce. So that, of this ſignification of the word, Gaudebunt in æterno, They ſhall rejoyce for ever, we adde nothing now. If the word ſhall ſignifie Glory, (as our laſt tranſlation renders it) conſider with me, That when that Glory which I ſhall receive in Heaven, ſhall be of that exaltation, as that my body ſhall inveſt the glory of a ſoule, (my body ſhall be like a ſoule, like a ſpirit, like an Angel of light, in all endowments that glory it ſelfe can make that body capable of, that body remaining ſtill a true body) when my body ſhall be like a ſoule, there will be nothing

2 Pet. 1. 4. 1 Cor. 6. 17. nothing left for my ſoule to be like but God himſelfe; I ſhall be partaker of the Divine nature, and the ſame Spirit with him. Since the glory that I ſhall receive in body, and in ſoule, ſhall be ſuch, ſo exalted, what ſhall that glory of God be, which I ſhall ſee by the light of this glory ſhed upon me there? In this place, and at this time the glory of God is; but we lack that light to ſee it by. When my ſoule and body are glorified in heaven, by that light of glory in me, I ſhall ſee the glory of God. But then, what muſt that glory of the Eſſence of God be, which I ſhall ſee thorough the light of Gods own glory? I muſt have the light of glory upon me, to ſee the glory of God, and then by his glory Rom. 11. 33. I ſhall ſee his Eſſence. When S. Paul cryes out upon the bottomleſſe depth of the riches of his Attributes, (O the depth of the riches, both of the wiſedome and knowledge of God!) how glorious, how bottomleſſe is the riches of his Eſſence? If I cannot look upon him 1 Cor. 13. 12. in his glaſſe, in the body of the Sunne, how ſhall I looke upon him face to face? And if I 1 Joh. 3. 2. be dazeled to ſee him as he works, how ſhall I ſee him, Sicuti eſt, as he is, and in his Eſſence? But it may be ſome eaſe to our ſpirits, (which cannot endure the ſearch of this glory of heaven, which ſhall ſhew us the very Eſſence of God) to take this word of our Text, as our firſt tranſlation of all tooke it, for one beame of this glory, that is Praiſe; Conſider we therefore this everlaſting future onely ſo, How the upright in heart ſhall be praiſed in heaven.

First, The Militant Church ſhall tranſmit me to the Triumphant, with her recommendation, That I lived in the obedience of the Church of God, That I dyed in the faith of the Sonne of God, That I departed and went away from them, in the company and conduct of the Spirit of God, into whoſe hands they heard me, they ſaw me recommend my ſpirit, And that I left my body, which was 1 Cor. 6. 19. the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, to them, and that they have placed it in Gods treaſury, in his conſecrated earth, to attend the Reſurrection, which they ſhall beſeech him to haſten for my ſake, and to make it joyfull and glorious to me, and them, when it comes. So the Militant Church ſhall tranſmit me to the Triumphant, with this praiſe, this teſtimony, this recommendation. And then, if I have done any good to any of Gods ſervants, (or to any that hath not been Gods ſervant, for Gods ſake) If I have but fed a hungry man, If I have but clothed a naked childe, If I have but comforted a ſad ſoule, or inſtructed an ignorant ſoule, If I have but preached a Sermon, and then printed that Sermon, that is, firſt preached it, and then lived according to it, (for the ſubſequent life is the beſt printing, and the moſt uſefull and profitable publiſhing of a Sermon) All thoſe things that I have done for Gods glory, ſhall follow me, ſhall accompany me, ſhall be in heaven before me, and meet me with their teſtimony, That as I did not ſerve God for nothing, (God gave me his bleſſings with a large hand, and in overflowing meaſures) ſo I did not nothing for the ſervice of God; Though it be as it ought to be, nothing in mine own eyes, nothing in reſpect of my duty, yet to them who have received any good by it, it muſt not ſeeme nothing; for then they are unthankfull to God, who gave it, by whoſe hand ſoever.

This ſhall be my praiſe to Heaven, my recommendation thither; And then, my praiſe in Heaven, ſhall be my preferment in Heaven. That thoſe bleſſed Angels, that rejoyced at my Converſion before, ſhall praiſe my perſeverance in that profeſſion, and admit me to a part in all their Hymns and Hoſannaes, and Hallelujahs; which Hallelujah is a word produced from the very word of this Text, Halal; My Hallelujah ſhall be my Halal, my praiſing of God ſhall be my praiſe. And from this teſtimony I ſhall come to the accompliſhment of all, to receive from my Saviours own mouth, that glorious, that victorious, that harmonious praiſe, that Diſſolving, and that Recollecting teſtimony, that ſhall melt my bowels, and yet fix me, powre me out, and yet gather me into his boſome, that Euge Mat. 25. 21. bone ſerve, Well done, good and faithfull ſervant, enter into thy Maſters joy. And when he hath ſealed me with his Euge, and accepted my ſervice, who ſhall ſtamp a Va quod non, upon me? who ſhall ſay, Woe be unto thee, that thou didſt not preach, this or that day, in this or that place? When he ſhall have ſtyled me Bone & fidelis, Good and faithfull ſervant, who ſhall upbraid me with a late undertaking this Calling, or a ſlack purſuing, or a lazy intermitting the function thereof? When he ſhall have entred me into my Maſters joy, what fortune, what ſin can caſt any Cloud of ſadneſſe upon me? This is that that makes Heaven, Heaven, That this Retribution, which is future now, ſhall be preſent then, and when it is then preſent, it ſhall be future againe, and preſent and future for ever, ever enjoyed, and expected ever. The upright in heart ſhall have, whatſoever all

Tranſlations

A Translations can enlarge and extend themſelves unto; They ſhall Rejoyce, they ſhall Glory, they ſhall Praiſe, and they ſhall bee praiſed, and all theſe in an everlaſting future, for ever. Which everlaſtingneſſe is ſuch a Terme, as God himſelfe cannot enlarge; As God cannot make himſelfe a better God then he is, becauſe hee is infinitely good, infinite goodneſſe, already; ſo God himſelfe cannot make our Terme in heaven longer then it is; for it is infinite everlaſtingneſſe, infinite eternity. That that wee are to beg of him is, that as that ſtate ſhall never end, ſo he will be pleaſed to haſten the beginning thereof, that ſo we may be numbred with his Saints in Glory everlaſting. Amen.

B

SERM. LXVIII.

The fourth of my Prebend Sermons upon my five Pſalmes:

Preached at S. Pauls, 28. Ianuary, 1626.

PSAL. 65. 5.

By terrible things in righteouſneſſe wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our ſalvation; who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are a far off, upon the Sea.

C GOd makes nothing of nothing now; God eaſed himſelfe of that incomprehenſible worke, and ended it in the firſt Sabbath. But God makes great things of little ſtill; And in that kinde hee works moſt upon the Sabbath; when by the fooliſhneſſe of Preaching hee infatuates the wiſedome of the world, and by the word, in the mouth of a weake man, he enfeebles the power of ſinne, and Satan in the world, and by but ſo much breath as blows out an houre-glaſſe, gathers three thouſand ſoules at a Sermon, and five thouſand ſoules at a Sermon, as upon Peters preaching, in the ſecond, and in the fourth of the Acts. And this worke of his, to make much of little, and to doe much by little, is moſt properly a Miracle. For, the Creation, (which was a production of all out of nothing) was not properly a miracle: A miracle is a thing done againſt nature; when ſomething in the courſe of nature D reſiſts that worke, then that worke is a miracle; But in the Creation, there was no reluctation, no reſiſtance, no nature, nothing to reſiſt. But to doe great works by ſmall meanes, to bring men to heaven by Preaching in the Church, this is a miracle. When Chriſt intended a miraculous feeding of a great multitude, he askt, Quot panes habetis? Mark 6.38. Firſt hee would know, how many loaves they had; and when hee found that they had ſome, though they were but five, he multiplied them, to a ſufficiency for five thouſand perſons. This Pſalme is one of my five loaves, which I bring; One of thoſe five Pſalms, which by the Inſtitution of our Anceſtors in this Church, are made mine, appropriated eſpecially to my daily meditation, as there are five other Pſalmes to every other perſon of our Church. And, by ſo poore meanes as this, (my ſpeaking) his Bleſſing upon his Ordinance may multiply to the advancement, and furtherance of all your ſalvations. He multiplies now, farther then in thoſe loaves; not onely to feed you all, (as he did all E that multitude) but to feed you all three meales.

In this Pſalme (and eſpecially in this Text) God ſatisfies you with this threefold knowledge: Firſt, what he hath done for man, in the light and law of nature; Then, how much more he had done for his choſen people, the Jewes, in affording them a law; And laſtly, what he had reſerved for man after, in the eſtabliſhing of the Chriſtian Church. The firſt, (in this Metaphore, and miracle of feeding) works as a break-faſt; for though there bee not a full meale, there is ſomething to ſtay the ſtomach, in the light of nature. The ſecond, that which God did for the Jewes in their Law, and Sacrifices, and Types, and Ceremonies, is as that Dinner, which was ſpoken of in the Goſpel, which was plentifully prepared, but prepared for ſome certaine gueſts, that were bidden, and no more;

Better meanes then were in nature, they had in the law, but yet onely appropriated to them that were bidden, to that Nation, and no more. But in the third meale, Gods plentifull refection in the Christian Church, and meanes of salvation there; first, Christ comes in the visitation of his Spirit, (Behold I come, and knock, and will sup with him) (Hee sups with us, in the private visitation of his Spirit) And then, (as it is added there) hee invites us to sup with him, hee calls us home to his house, and there makes us partakers of his blessed Sacraments; And by those meanes we are brought at last to that blessednesse, which he proclaimes, (Blessed are all they which are called to the marriage Supper of the Lambe) in the Kingdome of heaven. For all these three meales, wee say Grace in this Text, (By terrible things, in righteousnesse, wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation) for all these wayes of comming to the knowledge and worship of God, we blesse God in this Text, (Thou art the confidence of all the ends of the Earth, and of them that are a farre off, upon the Sea.

Revel. 3. 20.

Revel. 19. 9.

A

B

The consideration of the meanes of salvation, afforded by God to the Jewes in their law, inanimates the whole Psalme, and is transfused thorow every part thereof; and so, it falls upon this Verse too, as it doth upon all the rest; And then, for that, that God had done before in nature, and for all, is in the later part of this Verse, (Who art the confidence of all the ends of the Earth, and of them that are a farre off, upon the Sea) And lastly, that that hee hath reserved for the Christian Church, God hath centred, and embowelled in the wombe and bosome of the Text, in that compellation, (O God of our salvation) for there the word salvation, is rooted in Iashang, which Iashang is the very Name of Iesus, the foundation, and the whole building of the Christian Church. So then our three parts will bee these; What God hath done in Nature, what in the Law, what in the Gospel. And, when in our Order wee shall come to that last part, which is that, that we drive all to, (The advantage which wee have in the Gospel, above Nature, and the Law) wee shall then propose, and stop upon the Holy Ghosts manner of expressing it in this place, (By terrible things in righteousnesse wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation) But first, look we a little into the other two, Nature, and Law.

C

1 Part. Natura.

First then, the last words settle us upon our first consideration, What God hath done for man in Nature, Hee is the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are a far off, upon the Sea, that is, of all the world, all places, all persons in the world; All, at all times, every where, have Declarations enow of his power, Demonstrations enow of his Goodnesse, to confide in him, to rely upon him. The Holy Ghost seemes to have delighted in the Metaphore of Building. I know no figurative speech so often iterated in the Scriptures, as the name of a House; Heaven and Earth are called by that name, and wee, who being upon earth, have our conversation in heaven, are called so too, (Christ hath a House, which House wee are) And as God builds his House, (The Lord builds up Ierusalem, saith David) so hee furnishes it, he plants Vineyards, Gardens, and Orchards about it, He layes out a way to it, (Christ is the way) He opens a gate into it, (Christ is the gate) And when hee hath done all this, (built his house, furnished it, planted about it, made it accessible, and opened the gate) then hee keepes house, as well as builds a house, he feeds us, and feasts us in his house, as well as he lodges us, and places us in it. And as Christ professes what his owne Diet was, what he fed upon, (My meat is to doe the will of my Father) so our meat is to know the will of the Father, Every man, even in nature, hath that appetite, that desire, to know God. And therefore if God have made any man, and not given him meanes to know him, he is but a good Builder, he is no good Housekeeper, He gives him lodging, but he gives him no meat; But the eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou giv'st them their meat in due season. All, (not onely we) wait upon God; and he gives them Their meat, though not our meat, (The Word and the Sacraments) yet Their meat, such as they are able to digest and endue. Even in nature, He is the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are a far off, upon the Sea. That is his daily bread, which even the naturall man begs at Gods hand, and God affords it him.

Phil. 3. 20.

Heb. 3. 6.

Psal. 147. 2.

D

Ioh. 14. 6.

Matt. 7. 13.

Ioh. 10. 7.

Ioh. 4. 34.

Psal. 145. 15.

E

The most precious and costly dishes are alwaies reserved for the last services, but yet there is wholesome meat before too. The cleare light is in the Gospel, but there is light in Nature too. At the last Supper, (the Supper of the Lambe in Heaven) there is no bill of fare, there are no particular dishes named there. It is impossible to tell us what we shall feed upon, what we shall be feasted with, at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb; Our way of knowing God there cannot be expressed. At that Supper of the Lambe, which

Revel. 19. 9.

A which is here, here in our way homewards, that is, in the Sacramentall Supper of the Lambe, it is very hard to tell, what we feed upon; How that meat is dreſſed, how the Body and Blood of Chriſt is received by us, at that Supper, in that Sacrament, is hard to be expreſſed, hard to be conceived, for the way and manner thereof. So alſo in the former meale, that which we have called the Dinner, which is The knowledge which the Jews had in the Law, it was not eaſie to diſtinguiſh the taſte, and the nature of every diſh, and to finde the ſignification in every Type, and in every Ceremony. There are ſome difficulties (if curious men take the matter in hand, and be too inquiſitive) even in the Goſpel; more in the Law; moſt of all in Nature. But yet, even in this firſt refection, this firſt meale, that God ſets before man, (which is our knowledge of God in Nature) becauſe wee are then in Gods Houſe, (all this World, and the next make God but one Houſe) though God doe not give Marrow and fatneſſe, (as David ſpeaks) though he doe Pſal. 63. 6.
B not feed them with the fat of the wheat, nor ſatiſfie them with honey out of the Rock, (for the 81. 16.
Goſpel is the honey, and Chriſt is the Rock) yet, even in Nature, hee gives ſufficient meanes to know him, though they come to neither of the other Meales, neither to the Jews Dinner, The benefit of the Law, nor to the Chriſtians Supper, either when they feed upon the Lamb in the Sacrament, or when they feed with the Lamb in the poſſeſſion and fruition of Heaven.

Though therefore the Septuagint, in their Tranſlation of the Pſalms, have, in the Title of this Pſalme, added this, A Pſalme of Ieremy and Ezekiel, when they were departing out of the Captivity of Babylon, intimating therein, that it is a Pſalme made in contemplation of that bleſſed place which we are to go to, (as, literally, it was of their happie ſtate in their reſtitution from Babylon to Jeruſalem) And though the ancient Church, by appropriating this Pſalme to the office of the dead, to the ſervice at Burials, intimate alſo,
C that this Pſalme is intended of that fulneſſe of knowledge, and Joy, and Glory, which they have that are departed in the Lord, yet the Holy Ghoſt ſtops, as upon the way, before we come thither, and, ſince we muſt lie in an Inne, that is, Lodge in this World, he enables the World to entertaine us, as well as to lodge us, and hath provided, that the World, the very world it ſelfe, (before wee conſider the Law in the World, or the Church in the World, or Glory in the next World) This very World, that is, Nature, and no more, ſhould give ſuch an univerſall light of the knowledge of God, as that he ſhould bee The confidence of all the ends of the Earth, and of them that are a farre off upon the Sea.

And therefore as men that come to great places, and preferments, when they have entred by a faire and wide gate of Honour, but yet are laid downe upon hard beds of trouble and anxiety in thoſe places, (for, when the body ſeemes in the ſight of men, to D go on in an eaſie amble, the minde is every day (if not all day) in a ſhrewd and diſeaſefull trot) As thoſe men will ſometimes ſay, It was better with me, when I was in a lower place, and fortune, and will remember, being Biſhops, the pleaſures they had when they were Schoole-boyes, and yet, for all this, intermit not their thankfulneſſe to God, who hath raiſed them to that height, and thoſe meanes of glorifying him: ſo, howſoever we abound with joy and thankfulneſſe, for theſe gracious and glorious Illuſtrations of the Law, and the Goſpel, and beames of future Glory, which we have in the Chriſtian Church, Let us reflect often upon our beginning, upon the conſideration of Gods firſt benefits, which he hath given to us all in Nature, That light, by which he enlighteneth every Iohn 1. 9.
man that commeth into the World, That he hath given us a reaſonable ſoule capable of grace, here, (that, he hath denied no man, and no other creature hath that) That he hath given us an immortal ſoul capable of glory hereafter, (and that, that immortality he hath E denied no man, and no other creature hath that.) Conſider we alwaies the grace of God, to be the Sun it ſelfe, but the nature of man, and his naturall faculties to be the Sphear, in which that Sun, that Grace moves. Conſider we the Grace of God to be the ſoule it ſelf, but the naturall faculties of man, to be as a body, which miniſters Organs for that ſoule, that Grace to worke by. That ſo, as how much ſoever I feare the hand of a mighty man, that ſtrikes, yet I have a more immediate feare of the ſword he ſtrikes with; So, though I impute juſtly my ſins, and my feares of judgements for them, to Gods withdrawing, or to my neglecting his grace, yet I looke alſo upon that which is next me, Nature, and naturall light, and naturall faculties, and that I conſider how I uſe to uſe them; whether I be as watchfull upon my tongue, that that miniſter no tentation to others, and upon mine eye, that that receive no tentation from others, as by the light of Nature, I might, and as ſome morall Men, without addition of particular Grace, have done. That ſo, firſt for my ſelfe, I be not apt to lay any thing upon God, and to ſay, that hee ſtarved me, though he ſhould not bid me to the Jews dinner, in giving me the light of the Law, nor bid me to the Chriſtians Supper, in giving me the light of the Goſpell, becauſe he hath given me a competent refection even in Nature. And then, that for others, I may firſt ſay with the Apoſtle, That they are without excuſe, who doe not ſee the inviſible God, in the viſible Creature, and may ſay alſo with him, O altitudo! The wayes of the Lord are paſt my finding out; And therefore to thoſe, who doe open their eyes to that light of Nature, in the beſt exaltation thereof, God does not hide himſelfe, though he have not manifeſted to me, by what way he manifeſts himſelfe to them. For, God diſappoints none, and he is The confidence of all the ends of the Earth, and of them who are a farre off upon the Sea.

Rom. 1. 20. 11. 33.

Commit thy way unto the Lord, ſayes David; And he ſayes more, then our Tranſlation ſeemes to expreſſe; The Margin hath expreſſed it; for, according to the Originall word, Galal, it is in the Margin, not Commit, but Roll thy way upon the Lord; which may very well imply, and intend this precept, Carry thy Rolling trench up to God, and gather upon him; As Abraham, when he beat the price with God for Sodom, from fifty, to ten, rolled his Petition upon God, ſo roll thy wayes upon him, come up to him in a thankfull acknowledgement, what he hath done for thee, in the Goſpel, in the Law, and in Nature; And then, as Tertullian ſayes of publique Prayers, Obſidemus Deum, In the Prayers of the Congregation wee beſiege God, So this way wee entrench our ſelves before God, ſo, as that nothing can beat us out of our trenches; for, if all the Canons of the Church beat upon me, ſo that I be by Excommunication removed from the aſſiſtances of the Church, (though I be inexcuſable, if I labour not my Reconciliation, and my Abſolution) yet, before that be effected, I am ſtill in my firſt trench, ſtill I am a man, ſtill I have a ſoule capable of Grace, ſtill I have the light of Nature, and ſome preſence of God in that; though I be attenuated, I am not annihilated, though by my former abuſes of Gods graces, and my contumacy, I be caſt back to the ends of the earth, and a far off upon the Sea, yet even there, God is the confidence of all them; As long as I conſider that I have ſuch a ſoule, capable of Grace and Glory, I cannot deſpaire.

Pſal. 37. 5.

Gen. 18. 23.

Thus Nature makes Pearls, Thus Grace makes Saints. A drop of dew hardens, and then another drop fals, and ſpreads it ſelfe, and cloathes that former drop, and then another, and another, and become ſo many ſhels and films that inveſt that firſt ſeminall drop, and ſo (they ſay) there is a pearle in Nature. A good ſoule takes firſt Gods firſt drop into his conſideration, what he hath ſhed upon him in Nature, and then his ſecond coate, what in the Law, and ſucceſſively his other manifold graces, as ſo many ſhels, and films, in the Chriſtian Church, and ſo we are ſure, there is a Saint.

Roll thy wayes upon God; And (as it followes in the ſame verſe) Spera in eo, & ipſe faciet; we tranſlate it, Truſt in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſſe; Begin at Alpha, and hee ſhall bring it to Omega: Conſider thy ſelfe but in the ſtate of Hope, (for the ſtate of Nature is but a ſtate of Hope, a ſtate of Capableneſſe; In Nature wee have the capacity of Grace, but not Grace in poſſeſſion, in Nature) Et ipſe faciet, ſayes that Text, God ſhall doe, God ſhall work; There is no more in the Originall but ſo, Ipſe faciet; Not God ſhall doe it, or doe this, or doe that, but doe all; doe but conſider that God hath done ſomething for thee, and he ſhall doe all, for, He is the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are a farre off upon the Sea. Here is a new Mathematiques; without change of Elevation, or parallax, I that live in this Climate, and ſtand under this Meridian, looke up and fixe my ſelf upon God, And they that are under my feete, looke up to that place, which is above them, And as divers, as contrary as our places are, we all fixe at once upon one God, and meet in one Center; but we doe not ſo upon one Sunne, nor upon one conſtellation, or configuration in the Heavens; when we ſee it, thoſe Antipodes doe not; but they, and we ſee God at once. How various formes of Religion ſoever paſſe us through divers wayes, yet by the very light and power of Nature, we meet in one God; and for ſo much, as may make God acceſſible to us, and make us inexcuſable towards him, there is light enough in this dawning of the day, refection enough in this firſt meale, The knowledge of God, which we have in Nature; That alone diſcharges God, and condemns us; for, by that, He is, that is, He offers himſelfe to be, The confidence of all the ends of the

A the Earth, and of them who are afar off upon the Sea; that is, of all mankinde.

But then, Lunæ radiis non matureſcit botrus, fruits may be ſeene by the Mooneſhine, but the Mooneſhine will not ripen them. Therefore a Sunne riſes unto us, in the law, and in the Prophets, and gives us another manner of light, then we had in nature. The way of the wicked is as Darkneſſe, ſayes Solomon; Wherein? It follows, They know not at what they ſtumble. A man that calls himſelfe to no kinde of account, that takes no candle into his hand, never knowes at what he ſtumbles, not what occaſions his ſin. But by the light of nature, if he will looke upon his owne infirmities, his own deformities, his own inclinations, he may know at what he ſtumbles, what that is that leads him into tentation. For, though S. Paul ſay, That by the law is the knowledge of ſin, And, Sin is not imputed when there is no law; And againe, I had not knowne ſin, but by the law; in ſome of theſe places, the law is not intended onely of the law of the Jews, but of the law of na-

B ture in our hearts, (for, by that law, every man knows that he ſins) And then, ſin is not onely intended of ſin produced into act, but ſin in the heart; as the Apoſtle inſtances there, I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet. Of ſome ſinnes, there is no cleare evidence given by the light of nature: That the law ſupplied; and more then that. The law did not onely ſhew, what was ſin, but gave ſome light of remedy againſt ſin, and reſtitution after ſin, by thoſe ſacrifices, which, though they were ineffectuall in themſelves, yet involved, and repreſented Chriſt, who was their ſalvation. So then, God was to the Jews, in generall, as he was to his principall ſervant amongſt them, Moſes; He ſaw the land of promiſe, but he entred not into it; The Jews ſaw Chriſt, but embraced him not. Abraham ſaw his day, and rejoyced; They ſaw it, that is, they might have ſeen it, but winked at it. Luther ſayes well, Judæi habuere jus mendicandi, The Jews had a licence to beg, They had a Breve, and might gather, They had a Cove-

C nant, and might plead with God; But they did not; and therefore, though they were inexcuſable for their neglect of the light of Nature, and more inexcuſable for reſiſting the light of the law, That they and we might be abſolutely inexcuſable, if we continued in darkneſſe after that, God ſet up another light, the light of the Goſpel, which is our third and laſt part, wrapped up in thoſe firſt words of our Text, By terrible things, in righteouſneſſe, wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our ſalvation.

Rom. 3. 20. Rom. 5. 13. Rom. -. 7. Deut. 34. 1.

3 Part. Eccleſia Chriſtiana.

This word, Salvation, Iaſhang, is the roote of the name of Ieſus. In the beginning of the Primitive Church, when the followers of Chriſt left or diſcontinued their being called the Diſciples, and the Faithfull, and the Brethren, and the Profeſſors, as they had been called before, and would bring the Name of their founder, Chriſt Jeſus, into more evidence and manifeſtation, yet they were not called by the Name of Ieſus, but from Chriſt; at Antioch firſt they were called Chriſtians. For, it is well diſtinguiſhed, That the Name

Acts 11. 26.

D of Ieſus, as it ſignifies a Saviour, firſt contemplates God, and the Divine nature, (which onely could ſave us) And then hath relation to Man, and the Humane nature, without aſſuming of which, the Sonne of God could not have ſaved us that way, that God had propoſed, The ſatisfaction of his Juſtice; And then, the Name of Chriſt, (as it ſignifies Anointed, and appointed to a certaine purpoſe, as to die for us) firſt contemplates Man, and the Humane nature, which onely could die, And then hath relation to God, and the Divine nature. So that Jeſus is God, and Man in Him; And Chriſt is Man, and God in Him. So the Name Ieſus ſeemes to taſte of more Myſtery, and more Incomprehenſibleneſſe; And the Name of Chriſt, of more Humility, and Appliableneſſe.

Bonavent.

And with this lower Name, to be called Chriſtians from Chriſt, was the Church of God contented; Whereas a later race of men in the Romane Church, will needs take their Denomination from Ieſus himſelfe; But I know not whether they meane our Ieſus

E or no. Ioſephus remembers two (at leaſt) of that name, Ieſus, that were infamous malefactors, and men of blood; and they may deduce themſelves from ſuch a Ieſus. And a Jeſuit teaches us, that it is the common opinion, that Barrabas the murderer, was by his proper Name called Ieſus; that his name was Ieſus Barrabas; and that therefore Pilate made that difference upon our Saviour, Ieſus Nazarenus, This is Ieſus of Nazareth, and not Ieſus Barrabas; and from that Ieſus, Ieſus Barrabas they may deduce themſelves. And we know alſo, that that miſchievous ſorcerer, was called by that Name, Bar-jeſu, The Sonne of Jeſus. From which Ieſus amongſt theſe, they will make their extraction, let them chuſe. As amongſt the Jeſuits, the bloodieſt of them all, (even to the drawing of the ſacred blood of Kings) is, by his name, Mariana; So all the reſt of them, both in that Joſephus. Lorinus. Act. 13. 6. Ibid.

reſpect, of ſucking blood, and occaſioning maſſacres, and other reſpects too, are rather Marianits then Jeſuits, Idolaters of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, then worſhippers of Jeſus. A

We conſiſt in the Humility of the Ancients; we are Chriſtians, Ieſus is meerly a Saviour, A name of Myſtery, Chriſt is Anointed, A name of Communication, of Accommodation,

Cant. 1. 3. of Imitation; And ſo this name, the name of Chriſt, is Oleum effuſum, (as the Spouſe ſpeaks) An oyntment, a perfume powred out upon us, and we are Chriſtians. In the Corn. Lap. name of Ieſus, S. Paul abounded, but in the Name of Chriſt more; for, (as a Jeſuit gives Eph. 1. 10. us the account) he repeats the name of Ieſus almoſt three hundred times, but the name of Chriſt more then foure hundred, in his Epiſtles. In this Church then, which is gathered in the Name of Chriſt, (though in the power and merit of Ieſus) This light which we ſpeake of, This knowledge of God, and means of ſalvation, is in the higheſt exaltation. In the ſtate of nature, we conſider this light, as the Sunne, to be riſen at the Moluccæ, in the fartheſt Eaſt; In the ſtate of the law, we conſider it, as the Sunne come to Ormus, B the firſt Quadrant; But in the Goſpel, to be come to the Canaries, the fortunate Ilands, the firſt Meridian. Now, whatſoever is beyond this, is Weſtward, towards a Declination. If we will goe farther then to be Chriſtians, and thoſe doctrines, which the whole

1 Cor. 1. 12. Chriſtian Church hath ever beleeved, if we will be of Cephas, and of Apollos, if we will call our ſelves, or endanger, and give occaſion to others, to call us from the Names of men, Papiſts, or Lutherans, or Calviniſts, we depart from the true glory and ſerenity, from the luſtre and ſplendor of this Sunne; This is Tabernaculum Solis, Here in the Chri-

Pſal. 19. 5. ſtian Church, God hath ſet a Tabernacle for the Sunne; And, as in nature, Man hath light enough to diſcerne the principles of Reaſon; So in the Chriſtian Church, (conſidered without ſubdiviſions of Names, and Sects) a Chriſtian hath light enough of all things neceſſary to ſalvation.

So then, ſtill roll thy wayes upon God, Gather upon him nearer and nearer; for, all C theſe are emanations of lights from him, that he might be found, and ſeen, and knowne by thee. The looking upon God, by the firſt light of Nature, is, to catechize, and examine thy ſelfe, whether thou doe governe, and employ thy naturall faculties to his glory; whether thou doe ſhut thine eyes at a tentation, ſtop thine eares at a blaſphemy upon God, or a defamation upon thy neighbour; and withhold thy hand from blood and bribes, and thy feet from fellowſhip in ſin. The looking upon God, by the ſecond light, the light of the law, is, to diſcerne by that, that God hath alwayes had a peculiar people of his own, and gathered them, and contained them in his worſhip, by certaine viſible, ſenſible Ordinances and Inſtitutions, Sacraments, and Sacrifices, and rituall Ceremonies, and to argue and conclude out of Gods former proceedings with them, his greatneſſe and his goodneſſe towards the preſent world. And then, to ſee God by that laſt and beſt light, the light of the Chriſtian Church, is, to be content with ſo much of D God, as God hath revealed of himſelfe to his Church; And (as it is expreſſed here) to heare him anſwer thee, By terrible things in righteouſneſſe; for, that he does as he is the God of our ſalvation, that is, as he works in the Chriſtian Church; which is our laſt Conſideration; By terrible, &c.

Reſpondet, ergo Orandum. In this Conſideration, (Gods proceeding with us in the Chriſtian Church) this obſervation meets us firſt, That Gods converſation with us there, is called an Anſwering; (He ſhall anſwer us) Now if we looke that God ſhould anſwer us, we muſt ſay ſomething to God; and our way of ſpeaking to God, is by petition, by prayer. If we pre-

Rom. 10. 20. ſent no petition, if we pray not, we can looke for no anſwer, for we aske none. Eſaias is very bold, (ſaith S. Paul) when he ſayes, That God was found of them that ſought him not, and made manifeſt to them that asked not after him; Yet though it were boldly ſaid, it was truly ſaid; ſo early, and ſo powerfull is Gods preventing grace towards us. So it is a ve- E ry ordinary phraſe amongſt the Prophets, God anſwered, and ſaid thus, and thus, when the Prophet had asked nothing of God. But here we are upon Gods proceeding with man in the Chriſtian Church; and ſo, God anſwers not, but to our petitions, to our prayers. In a Sermon, God ſpeaks to the Congregation, but he anſwers onely that ſoule, that hath been with him at Prayers before. A man may pray in the ſtreet, in the fields, in a fayre; but it is a more acceptable and more effectuall prayer, when we ſhut our doores, and obſerve our ſtationary houſes for private prayer in our Chamber; and in our Chamber, when we pray upon our knees, then in our beds. But the greateſt power of all, is in the publique prayer of the Congregation.

It is

A It is a good remembrance that Damaſcene gives, Non quia gentes quædam faciunt, à nobis linquenda; We muſt not forbeare things onely therefore, becauſe the Gentiles, or the Jewes uſed them. The Gentiles, particularly the Romans, (before they were Chriſtians) had a ſet Service, a preſcribed forme of Common prayer in their Temples; and they had a particular Officer in that State, who was Conditor precum, that made their Collects, and Prayers upon emergent occaſions; And Omni luſtro, every five yeares there was a review, and an alteration in their Prayers, and the ſtate of things was preſumed to have received ſo much change in that time, as that it was fit to change ſome of their Prayers and Collects. It muſt not therefore ſeeme ſtrange, that at the firſt, there were certaine Collects appointed in our Church; nor that others, upon juſt occaſion, be added. Damaſc.

Gods bleſſing here, in the Chriſtian Church, (for, to that we limit this conſideration) is, that here He will anſwer us; Therefore, here we muſt ask; Here, our asking is
B our communion at Prayer: And therefore they that undervalue, or neglect the prayers of the Church, have not that title to the benefit of the Sermon; for though God doe ſpeake in the Sermon, yet hee anſwers, that is, applies himſelfe, by his Spirit, onely to them, who have prayed to him before. If they have joyned in prayer, they have their intereſt, and ſhall feele their Conſolation in all the promiſes of the Goſpel, ſhed upon the Congregation, in the Sermon. Have you asked by prayer, Is there no Balme in Gilead? He anſwers you by me, Yes, there is Balme; Hee was wounded for your tranſgreſſions, and with his ſtripes you are healed; His Blood is your Balme, his Sacrament is your Gilead. Have you asked by prayer, Is there no Smith in Iſrael? No meanes to diſcharge my ſelfe of my fetters, and chaines, of my temporall, and ſpirituall Encumbrances? God anſwers thee, Yes, there is; He bids you but looke about, and you ſhall finde your ſelfe in Peters caſe; The Angel of the Lord preſent, A light ſhining, and his chaines falling
C off: All your manacles locked upon the hands, All your chaines loaded upon the legges, All your ſtripes numbred upon the back of Chriſt Jeſus. You have ſaid in your prayers here, (Lord, from whom all good counſails doe proceed) And God anſwers you from hence, The Angel of the great Counſell ſhall dwell with you, and direct you. You have ſaid in your prayers, Lighten our darkneſſe, and God anſwers you by mee, (as he did his former people by Eſay) The Lord ſhall be unto thee an everlaſting light, and thy God thy glory. Petition God at prayers, and God ſhall anſwer all your petitions at the Sermon. There we begin, (if wee will make profit of a Sermon) at Prayers; And thither wee returne againe, (if we have made profit by a Sermon) in due time, to prayers. For, that is S. Auguſtines holy Circle, in which hee walkes from Prayers to the Sermon, and from the Sermon, next day to Prayers againe. Invocat te fides mea, ſayes he to God; Here I ſtand or kneele in thy preſence, and in the power of faith, to pray to thee. But where had I this faith,
D that makes my prayer acceptable? Dediſti mihi per miniſterium Prædicatoris; I had it at the Sermon, I had it, ſaith he, by the miniſtery of the Preacher; but I had it therefore, becauſe thy Spirit prepared me by prayer before; And I have it therefore, that is, to that end, that I might returne faithfully to prayers againe. As hee is The God of our ſalvation, (that is, As he works in the Chriſtian Church) he anſwers us: If we aske by prayer, he applies the Sermon; And, He anſwers by terrible things, in righteouſneſſe. Eſay 53.5. 1 Sam.13.18. Act.12.7. Eſay 60.19. Confeſſ.l.1.c.1.

Theſe two words, (Terribilia per Iuſtitiam) By Terrible things in Righteouſneſſe, are ordinarily by our Expoſitors taken, to intimate a confidence, that God imprints by the Ordinance of his Church, that by this right uſe of Prayer and Preaching, they ſhall alwayes be delivered from their enemies, or from what may bee moſt terrible unto them. In which expoſition, Righteouſneſſe ſignifies faithfulneſſe, and Terrible things ſignifie miraculous deliverances from, and terrible Judgements upon his, and our enemies.
E Therefore is God called, Deus fidelis, The faithfull God; for, that faithfulneſſe implies a Covenant, made before, (and there entred his Mercy, that hee would make that Covenant) and it implies alſo the aſſurance of the performance thereof, for there enters his faithfulneſſe. So he is called, Fidelis Creator, (We commit our ſoules to God, as to a faithfull Creator) He had an eternall gracious purpoſe upon us, to create us, and he hath faithfully accompliſhed it. So, Fidelis quia vocavit, Hee is faithfull in having called us; That he had decreed, and that he hath done. So Chriſt is called, Fidelis Pontifex, A mercifull and a faithfull high Prieſt; Mercifull in offering himſelfe for us, faithfull in applying himſelfe to us. So Gods whole word is called ſo often, ſo very often Teſtimonium fidele, A faithfull witneſſe, an evidence that cannot deceive, nor miſlead us. Therefore we may be Terribilia per Iuſtitiam Deut.7.9. 1 Pet.4.19. 1 Theſ.5.24. Heb.2.17. Pſal.19.8.

be ſure, that whatſoever God hath promiſed to his Church, (And whatſoever God hath done upon the enemies of his Church heretofore, thoſe very performances to them, are promiſes to us, of the like ſuccours in the like diſtreſſes) he will performe, re-performe, multiply performances thereof upon us. Thy counſails of old are faithfulneſſe and truth; That is, whatſoever thou didſt decree, was done even then, in the infallibility of that Decree; And when that Decree came to be executed, and actually done, in that very execution of that former Decree was enwrapped a new Decree, That the ſame ſhould be done over and over againe for us, when ſoever wee needed it. So that then, caſting up our account, from the deſtruction of Babel, by all the plagues of Egypt, through the depopulation of Canaan, and the maſſacre in Sennacheribs Army, to the ſwallowing of the Invincible Navy upon our Seas, and the bringing to light that Infernall, that ſubterranean Treaſon in our Land, we may argue, and aſſume, That the God of our ſalvation will anſwer us by terrible things, by multiplying of miracles, and miniſtring ſupplies, to the confuſion of his, and our enemies, for, By terrible things in righteouſneſſe, will the God of our ſalvation anſwer us.

Eſay 25.1.

A

B

Per Iuſtitiam.

So then, his Judgements are theſe Terribilia, Terrible, fearefull things; And hee is faithfull in his Covenant, and by terrible Judgements he will anſwer, that is, ſatisfie our expectation. And that is a convenient ſenſe of theſe words. But, the word, which we tranſlate Righteouſneſſe here, is Tzadok, and Tzadok is not faithfulneſſe, but holineſſe; And theſe Terrible things are Reverend things; and ſo Tremellius tranſlates it, and well; Per res Reverendas, By Reverend things, things to which there belongs a Reverence, thou ſhalt anſwer us. And thus, the ſenſe of this place will be, That the God of our ſalvation, (that is, God working in the Chriſtian Church) calls us to Holineſſe, to Righteouſneſſe, by Terrible things; not Terrible, in the way and nature of revenge; but Terrible, that is, ſtupendious, reverend, myſterious: That ſo we ſhould not make Religion too homely a thing, but come alwayes to all Acts, and Exerciſes of Religion, with reverence, with feare, and trembling, and make a difference, between Religious, and Civill Actions.

C

In the frame and conſtitution of al Religions, theſe Materials, theſe Elements have ever entred; Some words of a remote ſignification, not vulgarly underſtood, ſome actions of a kinde of halfe-horror and amazement, ſome places of reſervation and retiredneſſe, and appropriation to ſome ſacred perſons, and inacceſſible to all others. Not to ſpeake of the ſervices, and ſacrifices of the Gentiles, and thoſe ſelfe-manglings and lacerations of the Prieſts of Iſis, and of the Prieſts of Baal, (faintly counterfaited in the ſcourgings and flagellations in the Roman Church) In that very diſcipline which was delivered from God, by Moſes, the ſervice was full of myſterie, and horror, and reſervation, By terrible things, (Sacrifices of blood in manifold effuſions) God anſwered them, then. So, the matter of Doctrine was delivered myſteriouſly, and with much reſervation, and in-intelligibleneſſe, as Tertullian ſpeaks. The Joy and Glory of Heaven was not eaſily underſtood by their temporall abundances of Milke, and Honey, and Oyle, and Wine; and yet, in theſe (and ſcarce any other way) was Heaven preſented, and notified to that people by Moſes. Chriſt, a Meſſias, a Saviour of the World, by ſhedding his blood for it, was not eaſily diſcerned in their Types and Sacrifices; And yet ſo, and ſcarce any other way was Chriſt revealed unto them. God ſayes, I have multiplied viſions, and uſed ſimilitudes, by the miniſtery of the Prophets. They were Viſions, they were Similitudes, not plaine and evident things, obvious to every underſtanding, that God led his people by. And there was an Order of Doctors amongſt the Jews that profeſſed that way, To teach the People by Parables and darke ſayings; and theſe were the powerfulleſt Teachers amongſt them, for they had their very name (Moſſelim) from power and dominion; They had a power, a dominion over the affections of their Diſciples, becauſe teaching them by an obſcure way, they created an admiration, and a reverence in their hearers, and laid a neceſſity upon them, of returning againe to them, for the interpretation and ſignification of thoſe darke Parables. Many thinke that Moſes cites theſe obſcure Doctors, theſe Moſſelim, in that place, in the booke of Numbers, when he ſayes, Wherefore they that ſpeake in Proverbs, ſay thus, and thus, And ſo he proceeds in a way and words, as hard to be underſtood, as any place in all his Books. David profeſſes this of himſelfe often; I will open darke ſayings upon my Harpe, And, I will open my mouth in a Parable. And this was the way of Solomon; for that very word is the Title of his booke of Proverbs. And in this way of teaching, our Saviour abounded, and excelled; for when it is ſaid, He taught them as one having

D

E

Hoſ.12.10.

Sandæi ſymbolica fol.108.

Num.21.7.

Pſal.49.4. 77.2.

Matt.7.29.

A having authority, And when it is ſaid, They were aſtoniſhed at his Doctrine, for his word was with Power, they refer that to this manner of teaching, that hee aſtoniſhed them with theſe reſerved and darke ſayings, and by the ſubſequent interpretation thereof, gained a reverend eſtimation amongſt them, that he onely could lead them to a deſire to know, (that darke way encreaſed their deſire) and then he onely ſatisfie them with the knowledge of thoſe things which concerned their ſalvation. For theſe Parables, and compariſons of a remote ſignification, were called by the Jews, Poteſtates, Powers, Powerfull inſinuations, as, amongſt the Grecians, the ſame things were called Axiomata, Dignities; And of Chriſt it is ſaid, Without a Parable ſpake he not. Luke 4.32. Mat.13.34.

So that God in the Old, and Chriſt in the New Teſtament, hath conditioned his Doctrine, and his Religion (that is, his outward worſhip) ſo, as that evermore there ſhould be preſerved a Majeſty, and a reverentiall feare, and an awfull diſcrimination of B Divine things from Civill, and evermore ſomething reſerved to be inquired after, and laid up in the mouth of the Prieſt, that the People might acknowledge an obligation from him, in the expoſition, and application thereof. Nay, this way of anſwering us by terrible things, (that is, by things that imprint a holy horror, and a Religious reverence) is much more in the Chriſtian Church, then it can have beene in any other Religion; Becauſe, if wee conſider the Jews, (which is the onely Religion, that can enter into any compariſon with the Chriſtian, in this kinde) yet, we looke more directly and more immediately upon God in Chriſt, then they could, who ſaw him but by way of Prophecie, a future thing that ſhould be done after; we looke upon God, in Hiſtory, in matter of fact, upon things done, and ſet before our eyes; and ſo that Majeſty, and that holy amazement, is more to us then ever it was to any other Religion, becauſe we have a nearer approximation, and vicinity to God in Chriſt, then any others had, in any repreſentions of C their Gods; and it is a more dazeling thing to looke upon the Sun, in a direct, then in an oblique or ſide line. And therefore, the love of God, which is ſo often propoſed unto us, is as often ſeaſoned with the feare of God; nay, all our Religious affections are reduced to that one, To a reverentiall feare; If he be a Maſter, he cals for feare, and, If he be a Father, he calls for honor; And honour implies a reverentiall feare. And that is the Art that David profeſſes to teach, Artem timendi, Come ye children, and hearken unto me, and I will teach you the feare of the Lord. That you thinke not Divinity an Occupation, nor Church-Service a recreation; but ſtill remember, That the God of our Salvation (God working in the Chriſtian Church) will anſwer you; but yet, by terrible things; that is, by not being over-fellowly with God, nor over-homely with places, and acts of Religion; which, it may be an advancement to your Devotion and edification, to conſider, in ſome particulars in the Chriſtian Church. Mal.1.6. Pſal.34.12.

D And firſt, conſider we it, in our manners, and converſation. Chriſt ſayes, Henceforth I call you not ſervants, but friends. But, howſoever Chriſt called him friend, that was come to the feaſt without the wedding garment, he caſt him out, becauſe he made no difference of that place from another. Firſt then, remember by what terrible things God anſwers thee in the Chriſtian Church, when he comes to that round and peremptory iſſue, Qui non crediderit, damnabitur, He that beleeves not every Article of the Chriſtian faith, & with ſo ſtedfaſt a belief, as that he would dye for it, Damnabitur, (no modification, no mollification, no going leſſe) He ſhal be damned. Conſider too the nature of Excõmunication, That it teares a man from the body of Chriſt Jeſus; That that man withers that is torne off, and Chriſt himſelfe is wounded in it. Conſider the inſupportable penances that were laid upon ſinners, by thoſe penitentiall Canons, that went through the Church in thoſe Primitive times; when, for many ſins which we paſſe through now, without ſo much as E taking knowledge that they are ſins, men were not admitted to the Communion all their lives, no, nor eaſily upon their death-beds. Conſider how dangerouſly an abuſe of that great doctrine of Predeſtination may bring thee to thinke, that God is bound to thee, and thou not bound to him, That thou maieſt renounce him, and he muſt embrace thee, and ſo make thee too familiar with God, and too homely with Religion, upon preſumption of a Decree. Conſider that when thou prepareſt any uncleane action, in any ſinfull nakedneſſe, God is not onely preſent with thee in that roome then, but then tels thee, That at the day of Judgement thou muſt ſtand in his preſence, and in the preſence of all the World, not onely naked, but in that foule, and ſinfull, and uncleane action of nakedneſſe, which thou committedſt then; Conſider all this and confeſſe, that for matter of manners In moribus. Iohn 15.14. Mat.22.12. Marke 16.16.

manners, and converſation, The God of thy Salvation anſwers thee by terrible things. And ſo it is alſo, if we conſider Prayer in the Church. A

In oratione. Gods Houſe is the houſe of Prayer; It is his Court of Requeſts; There he receives petitions, there he gives Order upon them. And you come to God in his Houſe, as though you came to keepe him company, to ſit downe, and talke with him halfe an houre; or you come as Ambaſſadors, covered in his preſence, as though ye came from as great a Prince as he. You meet below, and there make your bargaines, for biting, for devouring Uſury, and then you come up hither to prayers, and ſo make God your Broker. You rob, and ſpoile, and eat his people as bread, by Extortion, and bribery, and deceitfull waights and meaſures, and deluding oathes in buying and ſelling, and then come hither, and ſo make God your Receiver, and his houſe a den of Thieves. His houſe is Sanctum Sanctorum, The holieſt of holies, and you make it onely Sanctuarium; It ſhould be a place ſanctified by your devotions, and you make it onely a Sanctuary to priviledge Malefactors, A place that may redeeme you from the ill opinion of men, who muſt in charity be bound to thinke well of you, becauſe they ſee you here. Offer this to one of your Princes, (as God argues in the Prophet) and ſee, if he will ſuffer his houſe to be prophaned by ſuch uncivill B

Pſal. 47. 3. 96. 4. abuſes; And, Terribilis Rex, The Lord moſt high is terrible, and a great King over all the earth; and, Terribilis ſuper omnes Deos, More terrible then all other Gods. Let thy Maſter be thy god, or thy Miſtreſſe thy god, thy Belly be thy god, or thy Back be thy god, thy fields be thy god, or thy cheſts be thy god, Terribilis ſuper omnes Deos, The Lord is ter-

95. 3. rible above all gods, A great God, and a great King above all gods. You come, and call

Deut. 28. 58. upon him by his name here, But Magnũ & terribile, Glorious and fearefull is the name of the Lord thy God. And, as if the Son of God were but the Son of ſome Lord, that had beene your Schoole-fellow in your youth, and ſo you continued a boldneſſe to him ever after, ſo, becauſe you have beene brought up with Chriſt from your cradle, and catechized C

Pſal. 111. 4. in his name, his name becomes leſſe reverend unto you, And Sanctum & terribile, Holy, and reverend, Holy and terrible ſhould his name be.

Conſider the reſolution that God hath taken upon the Hypocrite, and his prayer; What Iob 27. 8. is the hope of the Hypocrite, when God taketh away his ſoule? Will God heare his cry? They

Hoſ. 7. 14. have not cryed unto me with their hearts, when they have howled upon their beds. Conſider, that error in the matter of our prayer fruſtrates the prayer and makes it ineffectuall. Ze-

Mat. 20. 21. bedees Sons would have beene placed at the right hand, and at the left hand of Chriſt, and were not heard. Error in the manner may fruſtrate our prayer, and make it ineffectu-

Iam. 4. 3. all too. Ye aſk, and are not heard, becauſe ye aſk amiſſe. It is amiſſe, if it be not referred to his Luke 5. 12. will, (Lord if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean.) It is amiſſe, if it be not asked in faith, (Let

Iam. 1. 6. not him that wavereth, thinke he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord.) It is amiſſe, if prayer be

1 Theſ. 5. 17. diſcontinued, intermitted, done by fits, (Pray inceſſantly) And it is ſo too, if it be not vehe- D

Luke 22. 44. ment; for Chriſt was in an Agony in his prayer, and his ſweat was as great drops of blood. Of

Eſay 1. 15. prayers without theſe conditions, God ſayes, When you ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes, & when you make many prayers, I will not heare you. Their prayer ſhall not only be

Prov. 28. 9. ineffectuall, but even their prayer ſhall be an abomination; And not only an abomination to Pſal. 109. 7. God, but deſtruction upon themſelves; for, Their prayer ſhall be turned to ſin. And, when they ſhall not be heard for themſelves, no body elſe ſhall be heard for them; (Though theſe

Ezek. 14. 14. three men, Noah, Iob, & Daniel, ſtood for them, they ſhould not deliver thẽ; Though the whole Congregation conſiſted of Saints, they ſhall not be heard for him, nay, they ſhall be forbidden to pray for him, forbidden to mentiõ, or mean him in their prayers, as Ieremy was. When God leaves you no way of reconciliation but prayer, and then layes theſe heavy and terrible conditions upon prayer, Confeſſe that though he be the God of your ſalvation, and do anſwer you, yet By terrible things doth the God of your ſalvation anſwer you. And con- E

In concionibus. ſider this againe, as in manners, and in prayer, ſo in his other Ordinance of Preaching.

Thinke with your ſelves what God lookes for from you, and what you give him, in 1 Cor. 1. 21. that Exerciſe. Becauſe God cals Preaching fooliſhneſſe, you take God at his word, and you thinke Preaching a thing under you. Hence is it, that you take ſo much liberty in cenſuring and comparing Preacher and Preacher, nay Sermon and Sermon from the ſame Preacher; as though we preached for wagers, and as though coine were to be valued from the inſcription meerely, and the image, and the perſon, and not for the metall.

Lam. 4. 16. You meaſure all by perſons; and yet, Non erubeſcit is faciem Sacerdotis, You reſpect not the perſon of the Prieſt, you give not ſo much reverence to Gods Ordinance, as he does. In no

A no Church of Christendome but ours, doth the Preacher preach uncovered. And for all this good, and humble, and reverend example, (fit to be continued by us) cannot we keepe you uncovered till the Text be read. All the Sermon is not Gods word, but all the Sermon is Gods Ordinance, and the Text is certainely his word. There is no salvation but by faith, nor faith but by hearing, nor hearing but by preaching; and they that thinke meanliest of the Keyes of the Church, and speake faintliest of the Absolution of the Church, will yet allow, That those Keyes lock, and unlock in Preaching; That Absolution is conferred, or withheld in Preaching. That the proposing of the promises of the Gospel in preaching, is that binding and loosing on earth, which bindes and looses in heaven. And then, though Christ have bid us, Preach the Gospel to every creature, yet, Mar. 16. 15. in his own great Sermon in the Mount, he hath forbidden us, to give holy things to dogs, or to cast pearle before swine, lest they trample them, and turne and rend us. So that if all Mat. 7. 6.
B those manifold and fearfull judgements, which swell in every Chapter, and blow in every verse, and thunder in every line of every Booke of the Bible, fall upon all them that come hither, as well, if they turne, and rend, that is, Calumniate us, the person of the Preacher, as if they trample upon the pearles, that is, undervalue the Doctrine, and the Ordinance it selfe; If his terrible Judgements fall upon every uncharitable mis-interpretation of that which is said here, and upon every irreverence in this place, and in this action; Confesse, that though he be the God of your salvation, and doe answer you, yet, by terrible things doth the God of your salvation answer you. And confesse it also, as in manners, and in prayers, and in preaching, so in the holy and blessed Sacrament.

This Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, Luther calls safely, Venerabile & adorabile; for certainly, whatsoever that is which we see, that which we receive, is to be adored; for, we receive Christ. He is Res Sacramenti, The forme, the Essence, the In Sacramento.
C substance, the soule of the Sacrament; And Sacramentum sine re Sacramenti, mors est, To Bernar.
take the body, and not the soule, the bread, and not Christ, is death. But he that feels Christ, in the receiving of the Sacrament, and will not bend his knee, would scarce bend his knee, if he saw him. The first of that royall Family, which thinks it selfe the greatest Alvarez de Auxil. Epist. ad Phil. 3.
in Christendome at this day, The House of Austrich, had the first marks of their Greatnesse, The Empire, brought into that House, for a particular reverence done to the holy and blessed Sacrament. What the bread and wine is, or what becomes of it, Damascen Damasc.
thinks impertinent to be inquired. He thinks he hath said enough, (and so may we doe) Migrat in substantiam animæ; There is the true Transubstantiation, that when I have received it worthily, it becomes my very soule; that is, My soule growes up into a better state, and habitude by it, and I have the more soule for it, the more sanctified, the more deified soule by that Sacrament.

D Now this Sacrament, which as it is ministred to us, is but a Sacrament, but as it is offered to God, is a Sacrifice too, is a fearfull, a terrible thing. If the sacrifices of the Law, the blood of Goats and Rammes, were so, how fearfull, how terrible, how reverentiall a thing is the blood of this immaculate Lambe, the Sonne of God? And though God doe so abound in goodnesse towards us, Vt pristina injuriata Sacramenta prodesse reversis, (as S. Cyprian excellently expresses it) That that Sacrament which we have injured and Cyprian.
abused, received unworthily, or irreverently, at one time, may yet benefit us, and be the savour and seale of life unto us, at another, yet when you heare that terrible Thunder break upon you, That the unworthy receiver eats and drinks his own damnation, That he 1 Cor. 11. 27.
makes Christ Jesus, who is the propitiation of all the world, his damnation; And then, That not to have come to a severe examination of the Conscience before, and to a sincere detestation of the sin, and to a formed, and fixed, and deliberate, and determinate E resolution against that sin, at the receiving of the Sacrament, (which, alas, how few doe? Is there one that does it? There is scarce one) That this makes a man an unworthy receiver of the Sacrament, That thus we make a mock of the Sonne of God, thus we tread the Heb. 10. 29.
blood of the Covenant under foot, and despite the Spirit of grace; And that for this, at the last day, we shall be ranked with Iudas, and not onely with Iudas, as a negligent despiser, but with Iudas, as an actuall betrayer of the blood of Christ Jesus. Consider well, with what fearfull Conditions even this seale of your reconciliation is accompanied, and though you may not doubt, but that God, the God of your salvation does answer you, yet you must confesse too, That it is by terrible things, that he does it. And, as it is so in matter of manners, and so in our prayers, and so in our preaching, and so in the Sacrament,

so

so is it also at the houre of our Death, which is as far as we can pursue this Meditation, (for, after Death we can aske nothing at Gods hands, and therefore God makes us no answer) And therefore with that Conclusion of all, we shall conclude all, That by terrible things, the God of our salvation answers us, at the houre of our death. A

In morte. Though death be but a sleepe, yet it is a sleepe that an Earth-quake cannot wake; And yet there is a Trumpet that will, when that hand of God, that gathered dust to make these bodies, shall crumble these bodies into dust againe, when that soule that evaporated it selfe in unnecessary disputations in this world, shall make such fearfull and distempered conclusions, as to see God onely by absence, (never to see him face to face) And to know God onely by ignorance, (never to know him sicuti est, as he is) (for he is All mercy) And to possesse immortality, and impossibility of dying onely in a continuall dying; when, as a Cabinet whose key were lost, must be broken up, and torne in pieces, before the Jewell that was laid up in it, can be taken out; so thy body, (the Cabinet of thy soule) must be shaked and shivered by violent sicknesse, before that soule can goe out, And when it is thus gone out, must answer for all the imperfections of that body, which body polluted it, And yet, though this soule be such a loser by that body, it is not perfectly well, nor fully satisfied, till it be reunited to that body againe; when thou remembrest, (and, oh, never forget it) that Christ himselfe was heavy in his soule unto Death, That Christ himselfe came to a Si possibile, If it be possible, let this Cup passe; That he came to a Quare dereliquisti, a bitter sense of Gods dereliction, and forsaking of him, when thou considerest all this, compose thy selfe for death, but thinke it not a light matter to dye. Death made the Lyon of Judah to roare; and doe not thou thinke, that that which we call going away like a Lambe, doth more testifie a conformity with Christ, then a strong sense, and bitter agony, and colluctation with death, doth. Christ gave us the Rule, in the Example; He taught us what we should doe, by his doing it; And he pre-admitted a fearfull apprehension of death. A Lambe is a Hieroglyphique of Patience, but not of stupidity. And death was Christs Consummatum est, All ended in death; yet he had sense of death; How much more doth a sad sense of our transmigration belong to us, to whom death is no Consummatum est, but an In principio; our account, and our everlasting state begins but then. B C

Mat. 26. 36. Mat. 26. 39. Mat. 27. 46.

Psal. 130. 4. Apud te propitiatio, ut timearis; In this knot we tie up all; With thee there is mercy, that thou mightest be feared. There is a holy feare, that does not onely consist with an assurance of mercy, but induces, constitutes that assurance. Pavor operantibus iniquitatem, sayes Solomon; Pavor, horror, and servile feare, jealousie and suspition of God, diffidence, and distrust in his mercy, and a bosome-prophecy of self-destruction; Destruction it selfe, (so we translate it) be upon the workers of iniquity; Pavor operantibus iniquitatem; And yet sayes that wise King, Beatus qui semper Pavidus; Blessed is that man that alwayes feares; who, though he alwayes hope, and beleeve the good that God will shew him, yet also feares the evills, that God might justly multiply upon him; Blessed is he that looks upon God with assurance, but upon himselfe with feare. For, though God have given us light, by which we may see him, even in Nature, (for, He is the confidence of all the ends of the Earth, and of them that are a far off upon the Sea) Though God have given us a clearer light in the Law, and experience of his providence upon his people throughout the Old Testament, Though God have abundantly, infinitely multiplied these lights and these helpes to us in the Christian Church, where he is the God of salvation, yet, as he answers us by terrible things, (in that first acceptation of the words which I proposed to you) that is, Gives us assurances, by miraculous testimonies in our behalfe, that he will answer our patient expectation, by terrible Judgements and Revenges upon our enemies, In his Righteousnesse, that is, In his faithfulnesse, according to his Promises, and according to his performances of those Promises, to his former people; So in the words, considered the other way, In his Holinesse, that is, in his wayes of imprinting Holinesse in us, He answers us by terrible things, in all those particulars, which we have presented unto you; By infusing faith; but with that terrible addition, Damnabitur, He that beleeveth not, shall be damned; He answers us, by composing our manners, and rectifying our life and conversation; but with terrible additions of censures, and Excommunications, and tearings off from his own body, which is a death to us, and a wound to him; He answers us by enabling us to speake to him in Prayer; but with terrible additions, for the matter, for the manner, for the measure of our Prayer, which being neglected, our D E

Pro. 21. 15. Pro. 28. 14.

A our very Prayer is turned to ſin. He anſwers us in Preaching; but with that terrible commination, that even his word may be the ſavor of death unto death. He anſwers us in the Sacrament; but with that terrible perplexity and diſtraction, that he that ſeemes to be a Iohn, or a Peter, a Loving, or a Beloved Diſciple, may be a Iudas, and he that ſeems to have received the ſeale of his reconciliation, may have eat and drunke his own Damnation. And he anſwers us at the houre of death; but with this terrible obligation, That even then I make ſure my ſalvation with feare and trembling. That ſo we imagine not a God of wax, whom we can melt, and mold, when, and how we will; That we make not the Church a Market, That an over-homelines and familiarity with God in the acts of Religion, bring us not to an irreverence, nor indifferency of places; But that, as the Militant Church is the porch of the Triumphant, ſo our reverence here, may have ſome proportion to that reverence which is exhibited there, where the Elders caſt their Revel. 4. 10.
B Crownes before the Throne, and continue in that holy and reverend acclamation, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Glory, and Honor, and Power; for, (as we may adde from this Text) By terrible things, O God of our ſalvation, doeſt thou anſwer us in righteouſneſſe.

SERM. LXIX.

The fifth of my Prebend Sermons upon my five Pſalmes:

C

Preached at S. Pauls.

PSAL. 66. 3.

Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! Through the greatneſſe of thy Power ſhall thine Enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee.

IT is well ſaid, (ſo well, as that more then one of the Fathers ſeeme to have delighted themſelves in having ſaid it) Titulus Clavis, The Title of the D Pſalme, is the Key of the Pſalme; the Title opens the whole Pſalme. The Church of Rome will needs keepe the Key of heaven, and the key to that Key, the Scriptures, wrapped up in that Tranſlation, which in no caſe muſt be departed from. There, the key of this Pſalm, (the Title thereof) hath one bar wreſted, that is, made otherwiſe, then he that made the Key, (the Holy Ghoſt) intended it; And another bar inſerted, that is, one clauſe added, which the Holy Ghoſt added not. Where we reade, in the Title, Victori, To the chiefe Muſician, they reade, In finem, A Pſalme directed upon the end. I think, they meane upon the later times, becauſe it is in a great part, a Propheticall Pſalme, of the calling of the Gentiles. But after this change, they alſo adde, Reſurrectionis, A Pſalme concerning the Reſurrection; and that is not in the Hebrew, nor any thing in the place thereof. And, after one Author in that Church had charged Leo Caſtr.
the Jewes, That they had raſed that clauſe out of the Hebrew, and that it was in the He- Lorinus.
E brew at firſt, A learned, and a laborious Jeſuit, (for truely, Schooles may confeſſe the Jeſuits to bee learned, for they have aſſiſted there; and States, and Councell-tables may confeſſe the Jeſuits to be laborious, for they have troubled them there) hee, I ſay, after he hath chidden his fellow, for ſaying, That this word had ever been in the Hebrew, or was razed out from thence by the Jewes, concludes roundly, Vndecunque advenerit, Howſoever thoſe Additions, which are not in the Hebrew, came into our Tranſlation, Authoritatem habent, & retineri debent, Their very being there, gives them Authentikeneſſe, and Authority, and there they muſt be. That this, in the Title of this Pſalme, be there, wee are content, as long as you know, that this particular, (That this Pſalme by the Title thereof concerns the Reſurrection) is not in the Originall, but added by ſome Expoſitor of the Pſalmes; you may take knowledge too, That that addition hath beene accepted and followed, by many, and ancient, and reverend Expoſitors, almoſt all of the Eaſterne, and many of the Weſterne Church too; and therefore, for our uſe and accommodation, may well be accepted by us alſo. A

We conſider ordinarily three Reſurrections: A ſpirituall Reſurrection, a Reſurrection from ſinne, by Grace in the Church; A temporall Reſurrection, a Reſurrection from trouble, and calamity in the world; And an eternall Reſurrection, a Reſurrection after which no part of man ſhall die, or ſuffer againe, the Reſurrection into Glory. Of the firſt, The Reſurrection from ſinne, is that intended in Eſay, Ariſe, and ſhine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is riſen upon thee. Of the later Reſurrection, is that harmonious ſtraine of all the Apoſtles in their Creed intended, I beleeve the Reſurrection of the body. And of the third Reſurrection, from oppreſſions and calamities which the ſervants of God ſuffer in this life, ſome of our later men underſtand that place of Iob, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that in my fleſh I ſhall ſee God; And that place of Ezekiel all underſtand of that Reſurrection, where God ſaith to the Prophet, Sonne of man, can theſe bones live? Can theſe men thus ruined, thus diſperſed, bee reſtored againe by a reſurrection in this world? And to this reſurrection from the preſſures and tribulations of this life, doe thoſe Interpreters, who interpret this Pſalme, of a Reſurrection, refer this our Text, (Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! Through the greatneſſe of thy power ſhall thine enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee.) Conſider how powerfully God hath, and you cannot doubt, but that God will give them a Reſurrection in this world, who rely upon him, and uſe his meanes, whenſoever any calamity hath dejected them, ruined them, ſcattered them in the eyes of men. Say unto the Lord, That he hath done it, and the Lord will ſay unto thee, that he will doe it againe, and againe for thee.

Eſay 60.1. Calvin. Iob 19.26. Ezek.37. B

Diviſio. We call Noah, Ianus, becauſe hee had two faces, in this reſpect, That hee looked into the former, and into the later world, he ſaw the times before, and after the flood. David in this Text, is a Ianus too; He looks two wayes, he hath a Proſpect, and a Retroſpect, he looks backward and forward, what God had done, and what God would doe. For, as we have one great comfort in this, That Prophecies are become Hiſtories, that whatſoever was ſaid by the mouthes of the Prophets, concerning our ſalvation in Chriſt, is effected, (ſo prophecies are made hiſtories) ſo have wee another comfort in this Text, That Hiſtories are made Prophecies; That whatſoever we reade that God had formerly done, in the reliefe of his oppreſſed ſervants, wee are thereby aſſured that he can, that he will doe them againe; and ſo Hiſtories are made Prophecies: And upon theſe two pillars, A thankfull acknowledgement of that which God hath done, And a faithfull aſſurance that God will doe ſo againe, ſhall this preſent Exerciſe of your devotions be rayſed; And theſe are our two parts. Dicite Deo, Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! (that part is Hiſtoricall, of things paſt) In multitudine virtutis, In the greatneſſe of thy power, ſhall thine enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee, (that part is Propheticall, of things to come.) C D

In the Hiſtory wee are to turne many leafes, and many in the Prophecy too, to paſſe many ſteps, to put out many branches in each. In the firſt, theſe; Dicite, ſay ye; where we conſider firſt, The Perſon that enjoyns this publike acknowledgement and thankſgiving, It is David, and David as a King; for to Him, to the King, the ordering of publike actions, even in the ſervice of God appertains. David, David the King ſpeaks this, by way of counſell, and perſwaſion, and concurrence to all the world, (for ſo in the beginning, and in ſome other paſſages of the Pſalme, it is Omnis terra, All yee lands, Verſe 1. and All the earth, Verſe 4.) David doth what he can, that all the world might concurre in one manner of ſerving God. By way of Aſſiſtance he extends to all, And by way of Injunction and commandement to all his, to all that are under his government, Dicite, ſay you, that is, you ſhall ſay, you ſhall ſerve God thus. And as he gives counſell to all, and gives lawes to all his ſubjects, ſo he ſubmits himſelfe to the ſame law; For, (as wee ſhall ſee in ſome parts of the Pſalme, to which the Text refers) he profeſſes in his particular, that he will ſay and doe, whatſoever hee bids them doe, and ſay; My houſe ſhall ſerve the Lord, ſayes Ioſhua; But it is, Ego, & domus mea, I and my houſe; himſelfe would ſerve God aright too. E

Ioſh.24 15.

From ſuch a conſideration of the perſons, in the Hiſtoricall part, wee ſhall paſſe to the commandement, to the duty it ſelfe; That is, firſt Dicite, ſay. It is more then Cogitate, to Conſider Gods former goodneſſe; more then Admirari, to Admire Gods former goodneſſe;

A goodneſſe; ſpeculations, and extaſies are not ſufficient ſervices of God; Dicite, Say unto God, Declare, manifeſt, publiſh your zeale, is more then Cogitate, Conſider it, thinke of it; but it is leſſe then Facite, To come to action; wee muſt declare our thankfull zeale to Gods cauſe, we muſt not modifie, not diſguiſe that; But, for the particular wayes of promoving, and advancing that cauſe, in matter of action, we muſt refer that to them, to whom God hath referred it. The Duty is a Commemoration of Benefits; Dicite, Speake of it, aſcribe it, attribute it to the right Author; Who is that? That is the next Conſideration, Dicite Deo, Say unto God; Non vobis, Not to your owne Wiſdome, or Power, Non Sanctis, Not to the care and protection of Saints or Angels, Sed nomini ejus da gloriam, Onely unto his name be all the glory aſcribed. And then, that which fals within this commandement, this Conſideration, is Opera ejus, The works of God, (How terrible art thou in thy works!) It is not Decreta ejus, Arcana ejus, The ſecrets of his State,
B the wayes of his government, unrevealed Decrees, but thoſe things, in which he hath manifeſted himſelfe to man, Opera, his works. Conſider his works, and conſider them ſo as this commandement enjoynes, that is, How terrible God is in them; Determine not your Conſideration upon the worke it ſelf, for ſo you may think too lightly of it, That it is but ſome naturall Accident, or ſome impoſture and falſe Miracle, or illuſion, Or you may thinke of it with an amazement, with a ſtupidity, with a conſternation, when you conſider not from whom the worke comes, conſider God in the worke; And God ſo, as that though he be terrible in that worke, yet, he is ſo terrible but ſo, as the word of this Text expreſſes this terribleneſſe, which word is Norah, and Norah is but Reverendus, it is a terror of Reverence, not a terror of Confuſion, that the Conſideration of God in his works ſhould poſſeſſe us withall.

And in thoſe plaine and ſmooth paths, wee ſhall walke through the firſt part, The C hiſtoricall part, what God hath formerly done, (Say unto God, how terrible art thou in thy works!) from thence we deſcend to the other, The Propheticall part, what, upon our performance of this duty, God will ſurely do in our behalfe; he will ſubdue thoſe enemies, which, becauſe they are ours, are his; In multitudine virtutis, In the greatneſſe of thy power, ſhall thine enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee. Where we ſhall ſee firſt, That even God himſelfe hath enemies; no man therefore can be free from them; And then we ſhall ſee, whom God cals enemies here, Thoſe who are enemies to his cauſe, and to his friends; All thoſe, if we will ſpeake Davids language, the Holy Ghoſts language, we muſt call Gods enemies. And theſe enemies nothing can mollifie, nothing can reduce, but Power; faire meanes, and perſwaſion will not worke upon them; Preaching, Diſputing will not doe it; It muſt be Power, and greatneſſe of power, and greatneſſe of Gods Power. The Law is Power, and it is Gods Power; All juſt Laws are from God.
D One Act of this Power (an occaſionall executing of Laws at ſome few times, againſt the enemies of Gods truth) will not ſerve; there muſt be a conſtant continuation of the execution thereof; nor will that ſerve, if that be done onely for worldly reſpects, to raiſe money, and not rather to draw them, who are under thoſe Laws, to the right worſhip of God, in the truth of his Religion. And yet all, that even all this, This power, this great power, his power ſhall worke upon theſe, his, and our enemies, is but this, They ſhall ſubmit themſelves, ſayes the text, but how? Mentientur tibi, (as it is in the Originall, and as you finde it in the Margin) They ſhall diſſemble, they ſhall lie, they ſhall yeeld a fained obe-
E dience, they ſhall make as though they were good Subjects, but not be ſo. And yet, even this, Though their ſubmiſſion be but diſſembled, but counterfaited, David puts amongſt Gods bleſſings to a State, and to a Church; It is ſome bleſſing, when Gods enemies dare not appeare, and juſtifie themſelves, and their Cauſe, as it is a heavy diſcouragement, when they dare do that. Though God doe not ſo far conſummate their happineſſe, as that their enemies ſhall be truly reconciled, or throughly rooted out, yet he ſhall afford them ſo much happineſſe, as that they ſhall doe them no harme.

And, Beloved, this diſtribution of the text, which I have given you, is rather a Paraphraſe, then a Diviſion, and therefore the reſt will rather be a Repetition, then a Dilatation; And I ſhall onely give ſome ſuch note, and marke, upon every particular branch, as may returne them, and fix them in your memories, and not enlarge my ſelfe far in any of them, for I know, the time will not admit it.

1 Part. Rex gubernat Eccleſiã.

First then, we remember you, in the firſt branch of the firſt part, that David, in that Capacity, as King, inſtitutes thoſe Orders, which the Church is to obſerve in the publique ſervice of God. For, the King is King of men; not of bodies onely, but of ſoules too; And of Chriſtian men; of us, not onely as we worſhip one God, but as we are to expreſſe that worſhip in the outward acts of Religion in the Church. God hath called himſelfe King; and he hath called Kings Gods. And when we looke upon the actions of Kings, we determine not our ſelves in that perſon, but in God working in that perſon. 1 Cor. 15. 10. As it is not I that doe any good, but the grace of God in me, So it is not the King that commands, but the power of God in the King. For, as in a Commiſſion from the King, the King himſelfe workes in his Commiſſioners, and their juſt Act is the Kings Act: So in the Kings lawfull working upon his Subjects, God works, & the Kings acts are Gods acts. A

That abſtinence therefore, and that forbearance which the Roman Church hath uſed, from declaring whether the Laws of ſecular Magiſtrates do bind the Conſcience, or no, that is, whether a man ſin in breaking a Temporall Law, or no, (for, though it have beene diſputed in their books, and though the Biſhop of that Church were ſupplicated in the Trent Councell, to declare it, yet he would never be brought to it) that abſtinence, I ſay, of theirs, though it give them one great advantage, yet it gives us another. For, by keeping it ſtill undetermined, and undecided, how far the Laws of temporall Princes doe binde us, they keepe up that power, which is ſo profitable to them, that is, To divide Kings and Subjects, and maintaine jealouſies betweene them, becauſe, if the breach of any Law, conſtitute a ſin, then enters the juriſdiction of Rome; for, that is the ground of their indirect power over Princes, In ordine ad ſpiritualia, that in any action, which may conduce to ſin, they may meddle, and direct, and conſtraine temporall Princes. That is their advantage, in their forbearing to declare this doctrine; And then, our advantage is, That this enervates, and weakens, nay deſtroyes and annihilates that ordinary argument, That there muſt be alwayes a Viſible Church, in which every man may have cleare reſolution, and infallible ſatisfaction, in all ſcruples that ariſe in him, and that the Roman Church is that Seat, and Throne of Infallibility. For, how does the Roman Church give any man infallible ſatisfaction, whether theſe or theſe things, grounded upon the temporall Laws of ſecular Princes, be ſins or no, when as that Church hath not, nor will not come to a determination in that point? How ſhall they come to the Sacrament? how ſhall they go out of the world with a cleare conſcience, when many things lye upon them which they know not, nor can be informed by their Confeſſors, whether they be ſins or no? And thus it is in divers other points beſides this; They pretend to give ſatisfaction and peace in all caſes, and pretend to be the onely true Church for that, and yet leave the conſcience in ignorance, and in diſtemper, and diſtreſſe, and diſtraction in many particulars. B C

The Law of the Prince is rooted in the power of God. The roote of all is Order, and the orderer of all is the King; And what the good Kings of Judah, and the religious Kings of the Primitive Chriſtian Church did, every King may, nay, ſhould do. For, both the Tables are committed to him; (as well the firſt that concernes our religious duties to God, as the other that concernes our Civill duties to men.) So is the Arke, where thoſe Tables are kept, and ſo is the Temple, where that Arke is kept; all committed to him; and he overſees the manner of the religious ſervice of God. And therefore it is, that in the Schooles we call Sedition and Rebellion, Sacriledge; for, though the treſpaſſe ſeeme to be directed but upon a man, yet in that man, whoſe office (and conſequently his perſon) is ſacred, God is oppoſed, and violated. And it is impiouſly ſaid of a Jeſuit, (I may eaſily be beleeved of that Jeſuit, if any other might be excepted) Non eſt Regum etiam veram doctrinam confirmare, The King hath nothing to doe with Religion, neither doth it belong to him to eſtabliſh any forme of Religion in his Kingdome, though it bee the right Religion, and though it be but by way of Confirmation. D

Gretzer. E

Omnibus perſuadet. This then David, David as a King takes to be in his care, in his office, To rectifie and ſettle Religion, that is, the outward worſhip of God. And this he intimates, this he conveyes by way of counſaile, and perſwaſion to all the world; he would faine have all agree in one ſervice of God. Therefore he enters the Pſalme ſo, Jubilate omnes terra, Rejoyce all ye lands; and, Adoret te omnis terra, All the earth ſhall worſhip thee, and againe, Venite & audite omnes, Come and heare all ye that feare God. For, as S. Cyprian ſayes of Biſhops, That every Biſhop is an univerſall Biſhop, That is, muſt take into his care and contemplation, not onely his owne particular Dioces, but the whole Catholique Church: So every Chriſtian King is a King of the whole Chriſtian world, that is, muſt ſtudy, and take into to his care, not onely his own kingdome, but all others too. For, it is not onely the municipall law of that kingdome, by which he is bound to ſee his own ſubjects, in all caſes, righted, but in the whole law of Nations every King hath an intereſt. My ſoule may be King, that is, reſide principally in my heart, or in my braine, but it neglects not the remoter parts of my body. David maintains Religion at home; but he aſſiſts, as much as he can, the eſtabliſhing of that Religion abroad too.

Ver. 1. Ver. 4. Ver. 16.

David endevours that, perſwades that every where; but he will be ſure of it at home; There he enjoyns it, there he commands it; Dicite, ſayes he, Say; that is, This you ſhall ſay, you ſhall ſerve God thus. We cannot provide, that there ſhall be no Wolves in the world, but we have provided that there ſhall be no Wolves in this kingdome. Idolatry will be, but there needs be none amongſt us. Idolaters were round about the children of Iſrael in the land of promiſe; They could not make all thoſe Proſelytes; but yet they kept their own ſtation. When the Arian hereſie had ſo ſurrounded the world, as that Vniverſa fere Orientalis Eccleſia, Almoſt all the Eaſtern Church, And Cuncti pene Latini Epiſcopi, aut vi, aut fraude decepti, Almoſt all the Biſhops of the Weſterne Church, were deceived, or threatned out of their Religion into Arianiſme; Inſomuch, that S. Hilarie gives a note of an hundred and five Biſhops of note, noted with that hereſie; When that one Biſhop, who will needs be all alone, the Biſhop of Rome, Liberius, ſo far ſubſcribed to that hereſie, (as S. Hieroms expreſſe words are) that Bellarmine himſelfe does not onely not deny it, but finds himſelfe bound, and finds it hard for him to prove, That though Liberius did outwardly profeſſe himſelfe to be an Arian, yet in his heart he was none; yet for all this impetuouſneſſe of this flood of this hereſie, Athanaſius, as Biſhop, excommunicated the Arians in his Dioces, And Conſtantine, as Emperor, baniſhed them out of his Dominions. Athanaſius would have been glad, if no other Church, Conſtantine would have been glad, if no other State would have received them; When they could not prevaile ſo far, yet they did that which was poſſible, and moſt proper to them, they preſerved the true worſhip of the true God in their own Juriſdiction.

Suis imperat.

Nicephor. Vinc. Lyra.

Hilar.

Hieron. De Romi. pont. l. 4. c. 9.

David could not have done that, if he had not had a true zeale to Gods truth, in his own heart. And therefore, as we have an intimation of his deſire to reduce the whole world, and a teſtimony of his earneſtneſſe towards his own Subjects, ſo we have an aſſurance, that in his own particular, he was conſtantly eſtabliſhed in this truth, He cals to all, (Come and ſee the works of God) And more particularly to all his, (O bleſſe our God yee people) but he propoſes himſelfe to their conſideration too, (I will declare what he hath done for my ſoule.) Great is the Lord, and greatly to be feared, ſayes this religious King, in another Pſalme; And that is a Proclamation, a Remonſtrance to all the world. He addes, One generation ſhall declare thy works to another; And that is a propagation to the ends of the world. But all this is rooted in that which is perſonall, and follows after, I will ſpeake of the glorious honour of thy Majeſty; And that is a proteſtation for his own particular. And to the ſame purpoſe is that which follows in the next verſe, Men ſhall ſpeake of the might of thy terrible acts; They ſhall, that is, They ſhould; and, I would all men would, ſayes David; But, whether they doe, or no, I will declare thy greatneſſe, ſayes he there; I will not be defective in my particular. And David was to be truſted with a pious endevour amongſt his Neighbours, and with a pious care over all his own ſubjects, as long as he nouriſhed, and declared ſo pious a diſpoſition in his own perſon. And truly, it is an injurious, it is a diſloyall ſuſpition, and jealouſie, it is an ungodly faſcination of our own happineſſe, to doubt of good effects abroad, and of a bleſſed aſſurance at home, as long as the zeale of Gods truth remains ſo conſtantly in his heart, and flowes out ſo declaratorily in his actions, in whoſe perſon God aſſures both our temporall ſafety, and our Religion.

Ipſe facit, quod jubet.

Ver. 5.
Ver. 8.
Ver. 16.
Pſal. 145. 3.

Ver. 4.
Ver. 6.

We paſſe now from this conſideration of the perſons; which, though it be fixed here, in the higheſt, in Kings, extends to all, to whom any power is committed, To Magiſtrates, to Maſters, to Fathers, All are bound to propagate Gods truth to others, but eſpecially to thoſe who are under their charge; And this they ſhall beſt doe, if themſelves be the Example. So far we have proceeded, and we come now to the Duty, as it is here more particularly expreſſed, Dicite, Say unto God, Publiſh, declare, manifeſt your zeale. Chriſt is Verbum, The Word, and that excludes ſilence; but Chriſt is alſo λόγος, and that excludes raſhneſſe, and impertinence in our ſpeech. Inter cæteras Dei appellationes, Sermonem veneramur, Amongſt Gods other Names, we honour that, that he is the Word; That

Dicite.

Nazianz.

That implies a Communication, Gods goodneſſe in ſpeaking to us, and an obligation upon us, to ſpeake to him. For, Beloved, That ſtanding of the Sunne and Moone, which gave occaſion to the drawing of ſo much blood of the Amorites, is, in the Originall, not Siſte Sol, but Sile Sol; He does not bid the Sunne and Moone ſtand ſtill, but he bids them ſay nothing, make no noiſe, no motion ſo. Be the Sunne the Magiſtrate, and be the Moone, the Church, Si ſileant, if they be ſilent, command not, pray not, avow not Gods cauſe, the caſe is dangerous. The Holy Ghoſt fell in fiery tongues, he inflamed them, and inflamed them to ſpeake. Divers dumb men were preſented to Chriſt; but if they were dumb, they were deafe too, and ſome of them blinde. Upon men that are dumb, that is, ſpeechleſſe in avowing him, God heaps other miſchievous impediments too; Deafneſſe, They ſhall not heare him in his word, and Blindneſſe, They ſhall not ſee him in his works.

Joſh. 10. 12.
Acts 2. 3.
Mat. 12. 22.
Mar. 7. 32.

Magis quàm cogitare.

Dicite, Say, ſayes David, Delight to ſpeake of God, and with God, and for God; Dicite, ſay ſomething. We told you, this was Magis quàm Cogitare, That there was more required then to thinke of God. Conſideration, Meditation, Speculation, Contemplation upon God, and divine objects, have their place, and their ſeaſon; But this is more then that; And more then Admiration too; for all theſe may determine in extaſies, and in ſtupidities, and in uſeleſſe and frivolous imaginations. Gold may be beat ſo thin, as that it may be blowne away; And Speculations, even of divine things, may be blowne to that thinneſſe, to that ſubtilty, as that all may evaporate, never fixed, never applied to any uſe. God had conceived in himſelfe, from all eternity, certaine Idea's, certaine patterns of all things, which he would create. But theſe Idea's, theſe conceptions produced not a creature, not a worme, not a weed; but then, Dixit, & facta ſunt, God ſpoke, and all things were made. Inward ſpeculations, nay, inward zeale, nay, inward prayers, are not full performances of our Duty. God heares willinglieſt, when men heare too; when we ſpeake alowd in the eares of men, and publiſh, and declare, and manifeſt, and avow our zeale to his glory.

Minùs quàm facere.

It is a duty, which in every private man, goes beyond the Cogitare, and the Admirari; but yet not ſo far as to a Facite, in the private man. Private men muſt thinke piouſly, and ſeriouſly, and ſpeake zealouſly, and ſeaſonably of the cauſe of God. But this does not authorize, nor juſtifie ſuch a forwardneſſe in any private man, as to come to actions, though he, in a rectified conſcience, apprehend, that Gods cauſe might be advantaged by thoſe actions of his. For, matter of action requires publique warrant, and is not ſafely grounded upon private zeale. When Peter, out of his own zeale, drew his ſword for Chriſt, Nondum manifeſtè conceperat Euangelium patientiæ, He was not yet well inſtructed in the patience of the Goſpel; Nay, he was ſubmitted to the ſentence of the law, out of the mouth of the ſupreme Judge, All they that take the ſword (that take it before it be given them by Authority) ſhall periſh by the ſword. The firſt law, that was given to the new world, after the Flood, was againſt the eating of blood. God would not have man ſo familiar with blood. And the ſecond commandement, was againſt the ſhedding of blood, (Who ſo ſheddeth mans blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed.) Nay, not onely where Peter was over-forward of himſelf, to defend Chriſt by armes, but where Iohn and Iames were too vehement, and importunate upon Chriſt, to give them leave to revenge the wrong done to him upon the Samaritans, (Wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and conſume them?) Chriſt rebukes them, and tells them, They knew not of what ſpirit they were; that is, of what ſpirit they ought to be. They knew, ſayes S. Hierome, they had no power of their own; They goe to him who had; And they doe not ſay, Domine jube, Lord doe thou doe it; but, Thou ſhalt never appeare in it, never be ſeene in it, onely let us alone, and we will revenge thee, and conſume them. Though they went no farther then this, yet this raſh, and precipitate importunity in Iames and Iohn, as well as that haſty comming to action in Peter, was diſpleaſing to Chriſt; Dicite, ſpeake; ſo far goes the duty of this Text; Speake by way of Counſell, you that are Counſellors to Princes, And, by way of Exhortation, you that are Preachers to the people; but leave the Facite, matter of action, to them in whoſe hearts, and by whoſe hands, and thorough whoſe commandments God works.

Origen.
Mat. 26. 54.
Gen. 9. 4.
Gen. 9. 6.
Luk. 9. 55.

Opera.

We are yet in our firſt, in our Hiſtoricall part, Commemoration, and there we made it, (in our diſtribution and paraphraſe) our next ſtep, what we are to commemorate, to employ this Dicite, this ſpeaking upon; and it is upon Gods works; (Say unto God, how terrible

A terrible art thou in thy works !) So that the ſubject of our ſpeech, (let it bee in holy Conferences, and Diſcourſes, let it be in Gods Ordinance, Preaching) is not to ſpeake of the unrevealed Decrees of God, of his internall, and eternall purpoſes in himſelfe, but of his works, of thoſe things in which he hath declared, and manifeſted himſelfe to us. God gave not alwayes to his Church, the Manifeſtation of the pillar of Fire, but a pillar of Cloud too; And, though it were a Cloud, yet it was a Pillar; In a holy, and devout, and modeſt ignorance of thoſe things which God hath not revealed to us, we are better ſettled, and ſupported by a better Pillar, then in an over-curious, and impertinent inquiſition of things reſerved to God himſelfe, or ſhut up in their breaſts, of whom God hath ſaid, Ye are gods. God would not ſhew all himſelfe to Moſes, as well as he loved him, and as freely as he converſed with him, He ſhewed him but his hinder parts. Let that be his Decrees then, when in his due time they came to execution; for then, and not till then, they Exod. 33. 23.

B are works. And God would not ſuffer Moſes his body to be ſeene, when it was dead, Deut. 34. 6. becauſe then it could not ſpeake to them, it could not inſtruct them, it could not direct them in any duty, if they tranſgreſſed from any. God himſelfe would not be ſpoken to by us, but as hee ſpeaks of himſelfe; and he ſpeaks in his works. And as among men, ſome may Build, and ſome may Write, and wee call both by one name, (wee call his Buildings, and wee call his Books, his Works) ſo if wee will ſpeake of God, this World which he hath built, and theſe Scriptures which he hath written, are his Works, and we ſpeak of God in his Works, (which is the commandement of this Text) when we ſpeak of him ſo, as he hath manifeſted himſelfe in his miracles, and as hee hath declared himſelfe in his Scriptures; for both theſe are his Works. There are Decrees in God, but we can take out no Copies of them, till God himſelfe exemplifie them, in the execution of them; The accompliſhing of the Decree is the beſt publiſhing, the beſt notifying of C the Decree. But, of his Works we can take Copies; for, his Scriptures are his Works, and we have them by Tranſlations and Illuſtrations, made appliable to every underſtanding; All the promiſes of his Scriptures belong to all. And, for his Miracles, (his Miracles are alſo his Works) we have an aſſurance, That whatſoever God hath done for any, he will doe againe for us.

It is then his Works upon which we fix this Commemoration, and this glorifying of God; but ſo, as that wee determine not upon the Work it ſelfe, but God in the Work, (Say unto God, (to Him) how terrible art thou, (that God) in thy Works?) It may bee of uſe to you, to receive this note, Then when it is ſaid in this Pſalme, Come, and ſee the Works of God, and after, Come, and heare all yee that feare God, in both places it is not, Venite, but Ite, It is Lechu, not Come, but Goe, Goe out, Goe forth, abroad, to conſider God in his Works; Goe as farre as you can, ſtop not in your ſelves, nor ſtop not in any

D other, till you come to God himſelfe. If you conſider the Scriptures to be his Works, make not Scriptures of your owne; which you doe, if you make them ſubject to your private interpretation. My ſoule ſpeaks in my tongue, elſe I could make no ſound; My tongue ſpeaks in Engliſh, elſe I ſhould not be underſtood by the Congregation. So God ſpeaks by his Sonne, in the Goſpel; but then, the Goſpel ſpeaks in the Church, that every man may heare. Ite, goe forth, ſtay not in your ſelves, if you will heare him. And ſo, for matter of Action, and Protection, come not home to your ſelves, ſtay not in your ſelves, not in a confidence in your owne power, and wiſedome, but Ite, goe forth, goe forth into Ægypt, goe forth into Babylon, and look who delivered your Predeceſſors, (predeceſſors in Affliction, predeceſſors in Mercy) and that God, who is Yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever, ſhall doe the ſame things, which he did yeſterday, to day, and Heb. 13. 8. for ever. Turne alwayes to the Commemoration of Works, but not your owne; Ite,

E goe forth, goe farther then that, Then your ſelves, farther then the Angels, and Saints in heaven; That when you commemorate your deliverance from an Invaſion, and your deliverance from the Vault, you doe not aſcribe theſe deliverances to thoſe Saints, upon whoſe dayes they were wrought; In all your Commemorations, (and commemorations are prayers, and God receives that which wee offer for a Thankſgiving for former Benefits, as a prayer for future) Ite goe forth, by the river to the ſpring, by the branch to the root, by the worke to God himſelfe, and Dicite, ſay unto him, ſay of him, Quam terribilis Tu in Tuis, which ſets us upon another ſtep in this part, To conſider what this Terribleneſſe is, that God expreſſes in his works.

Though there be a difference between timor, and terror, (feare and terror) yet the difference

Deus ipſe, in operibus illis, conſiderandus.

Pſal. 66. 5. Verſe 16.

Terribilis.

ference is not ſo great, but that both may fall upon a good man; Not onely a feare of God muſt, but a terror of God may fall upon the Beſt. When God talked with Abraham, a horror of great darkneſſe fell upon him, ſayes that Text. The Father of lights, and the God of all comfort preſent, and preſent in an action of Mercy, and yet, a horror of great darkneſſe fell upon Abraham. When God talked perſonally, and preſentially with Moſes, Moſes hid his face, for (ſayes that Text) he was afraid to looke upon God. When I look upon God, as I am bid to doe in this Text, in thoſe terrible Judgements, which he hath executed upon ſome men, and ſee that there is nothing between mee and the ſame Judgement, (for I have ſinned the ſame ſinnes, and God is the ſame God) I am not able of my ſelfe to dye that glaſſe, that ſpectacle, thorow which I looke upon this God, in what colour I will; whether this glaſſe ſhall be black, through my deſpaire, and ſo I ſhall ſee God in the cloud of my ſinnes, or red in the blood of Chriſt Jeſus, and I ſhall ſee God in a Bath of the blood of his Sonne, whether I ſhall ſee God as a Dove with an Olive branch, (peace to my ſoule) or as an Eagle, a vulture to prey, and to prey everlaſtingly upon mee, whether in the deepe floods of Tribulation, ſpirituall or temporall, I ſhall ſee God as an Arke to take mee in, or as a Whale to ſwallow mee; and if his Whale doe ſwallow mee, (the Tribulation devour me) whether his purpoſe bee to reſtore mee, or to conſume me, I, I of my ſelfe cannot tell. I cannot look upon God, in what line I will, nor take hold of God, by what handle I will; Hee is a terrible God, I take him ſo; And then I cannot diſcontinue, I cannot breake off this terribleneſſe, and ſay, Hee hath beene terrible to that man, and there is an end of his terror; it reaches not to me. Why not to me? In me there is no merit, nor ſhadow of merit; In God there is no change, nor ſhadow of change. I am the ſame ſinner, he is the ſame God; ſtill the ſame deſperate ſinner, ſtill the ſame terrible God.

Reverendus. But terrible in his works, ſayes our Text; Terrible ſo, as hee hath declared himſelfe to be in his works. His Works are, as we ſaid before, his Actions, and his Scriptures. In his Actions we ſee him Terrible upon diſobedient Reſiſters of his Graces, and Deſpiſers of the meanes thereof, not upon others, wee have no examples of that. In his word, we accept this word in which he hath beene pleaſed to expreſſe himſelfe, Norah, which is rather Reverendus, then Terribilis, as that word is uſed, I gave him life and peace, for the feare wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my Name. So that this Terribleneſſe, which we are called upon to profeſſe of God, is a Reverentiall, a Majeſticall, not a Tyrannicall terribleneſſe. And therefore hee that conceives a God, that hath made man of fleſh and blood, and yet exacts that purity of an Angel in that fleſh, A God that would provide himſelfe no better glory, then to damme man, A God who leſt hee ſhould love man, and be reconciled to man, hath enwrapped him in an inevitable neceſſity of ſinning, A God who hath received enough, and enough for the ſatisfaction of all men, and yet, (not in conſideration of their future ſinnes, but meerely becauſe he hated them before they were ſinners, or before they were any thing) hath made it impoſſible, for the greateſt part of men, to have any benefit of that large ſatisfaction. This is not ſuch a Terribleneſſe as ariſes out of his Works, (his Actions, or his Scriptures) for God hath never ſaid, never done any ſuch thing, as ſhould make us lodge ſuch conceptions of God in our ſelves, or lay ſuch imputations upon him.

The true feare of God is true wiſedome. It is true Joy; Rejoice in trembling, ſaith David; There is no rejoycing without this feare; there is no Riches without it; Reverentia Iehovæ, The feare of the Lord is his treaſure, and that is the beſt treaſure. Thus farre we are to goe; Let us ſerve God with reverence, and godly feare, (godly feare is but a Reverence, it is not a Jealouſie, a ſuſpition of God.) And let us doe it upon the reaſon that followes in the ſame place, For our God is a conſuming fire, There is all his terribleneſſe; he is a conſuming fire to his enemies, but he is our God; and God is love: And therefore to conceive a cruell God, a God that hated us, even to damnation, before we were, (as ſome, who have departed from the ſenſe and modeſty of the Ancients, have adventured to ſay) or to conceive a God ſo cruell, as that at our death, or in our way, he will afford us no aſſurance, that hee is ours, and we his, but let us live and die in anxiety and torture of conſcience, in jealouſie and ſuſpition of his good purpoſe towards us in the ſalvation of our ſoules, (as thoſe of the Romane Hereſie teach) to conceive ſuch a God as from all eternity meant to damne me, or ſuch a God as would never make me know, and be ſure that I ſhould bee ſaved, this is not to profeſſe God to be terrible in his works; For, his Actions

Gen. 15. 12.

Exod. 13. 6.

Mal. 2. 5.

Pſal. 2. 11.

Heb. 12. 28.

A Actions are his works, and his Scriptures are his works, and God hath never done, or said any thing to induce so terrible an opinion of him.

And so we have done with all those pieces, which in our paraphrasticall distribution of the text, at beginning, did constitute our first, our Historicall part, Davids retrospect, his commemoration of former blessings; In which he proposes a duty, a declaration of Gods goodnesse, Dicite, publish it, speake of it; He proposes Religious duties, in that capacity, as he is King; (Religion is the Kings care) He proposes, by way of Counsaile to all; by way of Commandment to his owne Subjects; And by a more powerfull way, then either counsaile or Commandment, that is, by Example, by doing that himselfe, which he counsailes, and commands others to doe. Dicite, Say, speake; It is a duty more then thinking, and lesse then doing; Every man is bound to speake for the advancement of Gods cause, but when it comes to action, that is not the private mans office, but be-
B longs to the publique, or him, who is the Publique, David himselfe, the King. The duty is Commemoration, Dicite, Say, speake, but Dicite Deo, Do this to God; ascribe not your deliverances to your Armies, and Navies, by Sea, or Land; no, nor to Saints in Heaven, but to God onely. Nor are ye called upon to contemplate God in his Essence, or in his Decrees, but in his works; In his Actions, in his Scriptures; In both those you shall find him terrible, that is, Reverend, majesticall, though never tyrannicall, nor cruell. Passe we now, according to our order laid downe at first, to our second part, the Propheticall part, Davids prospect for the future; and gather wee something from the particular branches of that, Through the greatnesse of thy power, thine enemies shall submit themselves unto thee.

In this, our first consideration is, that God himselfe hath enemies; and then, how should we hope to be, nay, why would wee wish to be without them? God had good, 2 Part. Habet Deus hostes.
C that is, Glory from his enemies; And we may have good, that is, advantage in the way to glory, by the exercise of our patience, from enemies too. Those for whom God had done most, the Angels, turned enemies first; vex not thou thy selfe, if those whom thou hast loved best, hate thee deadliest. There is a love, in which it aggravates thy condemnation, that thou art so much loved; Does not God recompence that, if there be such a hate, as that thou art the better, and that thy salvation is exalted, for having been hated? And that profit, the righteous have from enemies. God loved us then, when we were his enemies, Rom. 5. 10.
and we frustrate his exemplar love to us, if we love not enemies too. The word Hostis, (which is a word of heavy signification, and implies devastation, and all the mischiefes of war) is not read in all the New Testament: Inimicus, that is, non amicus, unfriendly, is read there often, very very often. There is an enmity which may consist with Euangelicall charity; but a hostility, that carries in it a denotation of revenge, of extirpation, of D annihilation, that cannot. This gives us some light, how far we may, and may not hate enemies. God had enemies to whom he never returned, The Angels that opposed him; and that is, because they oppose him still, and are, by their owne perverseneſſe, incapable of reconciliation. We were enemies to God too; but being enemies, we were reconciled to Rom. 5. 10.
God by the death of his Son.

As then actual reconciliation makes us actually friends, so in differences which may be reconciled, we should not be too severe enemies, but maintaine in our selves a disposition of friendship; but, in those things, which are in their nature irreconciliable, we must be irreconciliable too. There is an enmity which God himselfe hath made, and made perpetuall: Ponam inimicitias, sayes God; God puts an enmity betweene the seed of the Gen. 3. 15.
Serpent, and the seed of the woman; And, those whom God joynes, let no man sever, those whom God severs, let no man joyne. The Schoole presents it well; wee are to E consider an enemy formally, or materially; that is, that which makes him an enemy, or that which makes him a man. In that which makes him a man, hee hath the Image of God in him, and by that is capable of grace and glory; and therefore, that wee may not hate, which excludes all personall, and all nationall hatred. In that which makes him an enemy he hath the Image of the Devill, infidelity towards God, perfidiousneſſe towards man, Heresie towards God, infectious manners towards man; and, that we must alwaies hate; for, that is Odium perfectum, A hate that may consist with a perfect man, nay, a hate that constitutes love it selfe; I do not love a man, except I hate his vices, because those vices are the enemies, and the destruction of that friend whom I love. Inimici tui, Dei sunt inimici.

God himselfe hath enemies, Thine enemies shall submit, sayes the text, to God; There thou thou haſt one comfort, though thou have enemies too; but the greater comfort is, A Pſal. 105.15. That God cals thine enemies his. Nolite tangere Chriſtos meos, ſayes God of all holy peo-

17.8. ple; you were as good touch me, as touch any of them, for, they are the apple of mine eye. Our Saviour Chriſt never expoſtulated for himſelfe; never ſaid, why ſcourged you me? why ſpit you upon me? why crucifie you me? as long as their rage determined in his perſon, he opened not his mouth; when Saul extended the violence to the Church, to Acts 9. his ſervants, then Chriſt came to that, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Cains treſpaſſe againſt God himſelfe was, that he would binde God to an acceptation of his Sacrifice;
Gen. 4.6. And for that God comes no farther, but to Why doeſt thou thus? but in his treſpaſſe
Ver. 11. upon his brother, God proceeds ſo much farther, as to ſay, Now art thou curſed from the earth. Ieroboam ſuffered Idolatry, and God let him alone; that concerned but God him-
1 King. 13.4. ſelfe. But when Ieroboam ſtretched forth his hand to lay hold on the Prophet, his hand withered. Here is a holy league, Defenſive, and Offenſive; God ſhall not onely protect B us from others, but he ſhall fight for us againſt them; our enemies are his enemies.

Magnitudo potentiæ. And beloved, it is well that it is ſo, for, if we were left to our ſelves, we were remedileſſe. It is his mercy that we are not conſumed, by his indignation, by himſelfe; But it muſt be the exerciſe of his power, if we be not conſumed by his, and our enemies; for, there is but that one way in the text, that can bring theſe enemies to any thing, that is, In multitudine virtutis tuæ, In the greatneſſe of thy power. It muſt be power; Intreaty, Appliableneſſe, Conformity, Facility, Patience does not ſerve. It muſt be Power, and His power; To aſſiſt our ſelves by his enemies, by Witches, or by Idolaters, is not his power. It is Power that does all; for, the name that God is manifeſted in, in all the making of the World, in the firſt of Geneſis, is Elohim, and that is Deus fortis, The powerfull God. It is Power, and it is His power; for, his name is Dominus tzebaoth, The Lord of Hoſts. Hoſts and Armies of which he is not the Generall, are but great inſurrections, great re- C bellions. And then, as it is Power, and His power, ſo it is the greatneſſe of his Power; His Power extended, exalted. It is in the Originall, Berob, In multitudine fortitudinis, in thy manifold power, in thy multiplied power. Moſes conſiders the aſſurance that they might Deut. 20.4. have in God, in this, That God fought their battails (The Lord your God goeth with you, to fight for you againſt your enemies, and ſave you) There was his power declared, and exerciſed one way; and then in this, That he had afforded them particular Laws, for their direction in all their actions, Religious, and Civill; (To what Nation is God come ſo neare? what people have Lawes and Ordinances, ſuch as we have?) So that, where God defends us by Armies, and directs us by juſt Lawes, that is Multitudo fortitudinis, The greatneſſe of his power, his power magnified, his power multiplied upon us.

Mentiuntur. Now, through this power, and not without this power, this double power, Law and Armes, Thine enemies ſhall ſubmit themſelves unto thee, ſayes our text. And then, is all the D danger at an end? ſhall we be ſafe then? Not then. The word is Cacaſh, and Cacaſh is but Mendacem fieri, to be brought to lie, to diſſemble, to equivocate, to modifie, to temporize, to counterfait, to make as though they were our friends, in an outward conformity. And there are enemies of God, whom no power of Armies or Lawes can bring any farther then that, To hold their tongues, and to hold their hands, but to withhold their Ioſh 9. hearts from us ſtill. So the Gibeonites deceived Ioſhua, in the likeneſſe of Ambaſſadors; Ioſhuahs power made them lie unto him. So Pharaoh deceived and deluded Moſes and Aaron; Every Act of power brought Pharaoh to lie unto them. I direct not your thoughts upon publique Conſiderations; It is not my end; It is not my way: My way and end is to bring you home to your ſelves, and to conſider there, That we are full of weakeneſſes in our ſelves, full of enemies, ſinfull tentations about us; That onely the power of God, his power multiplied, (that is, The receiving of his word, (that is, the E power of Law) The receiving of his corrections (that is, the power of his Hoſts) can make our enemies, our ſinfull tentations ſubmit, and when they do ſo, it is but a lie, They returne to us, and we turne to them againe, In the greatneſſe of thy power ſhall thine enemies ſubmit unto thee.

Conſolatio. But then, (which is our laſt ſtep and Concluſion) even this, That theſe enemies ſhall be forced to ſuch a ſubmiſſion, to any ſubmiſſion, though diſguiſed and counterfait, is, in this Text, preſented for a Conſolation; There is a comfort even in this, That thoſe enemies ſhall be faine to lie, that they ſhall not dare to avow their malice, nor to blaſpheme God in open profeſſions. There is a conditionall bleſſing propoſed to Gods people;

A ple; (O that my people had hearkned unto me! O that Iſrael had walked in my wayes!) What had been their recompence? This. The haters of the Lord ſhould have ſubmitted themſelves unto them. Should they in earneſt? No truly; there is the ſame word, They ſhould have lyed unto them, they ſhould have made as though they had ſubmitted themſelves; and that, God preſents for a great degree of his mercy to them. And therefore, as in thy particular Conſcience, though God doe not take away that Stimulum carnis, and that Angelum Satanæ, though he doe not extinguiſh all luſts and concupiſcencies in thee, yet if thoſe luſts prevaile not over thee, if they command not, if they divert thee not from the ſenſe, and ſervice of God, thou haſt good reaſon to bleſſe God for this, to reſt in this, and to call it peace of conſcience: So haſt thou reaſon too to call it Peace in the Church, and peace in the State, when Gods enemies, though they be not rooted out, though they be not diſpoſed to a hearty Allegeance, and juſt Obedience, yet they muſt be ſubject,
B they muſt ſubmit themſelves whether they wil or no, and though they wil wiſh no good, yet they ſhall be able to doe no harme. For, the Holy Ghoſt declares this to be an exerciſe of power, of Gods power, of the greatneſſe of Gods power, that his enemies ſubmit themſelves, though with a fained obedience.

Pſal. 80. 15.

SERMONS

Preached at

COURT, AND ELSE-WHERE,

VPON

Severall Occasions.

SERMONS

Preached at

COURT, AND ELSE-WHERE, UPON

Several Occasions.

A

B

SERM. LXX.

Preached at VVhite-hall, April 8. 1621.

PROV. 25. 16.

Haſt thou found honey? eat ſo much as is ſufficient for thee, leſt thou be filled therewith, and vomit it.

C THere is a temporall unſatiableneſſe of riches, and there is a ſpirituall unſatiableneſſe of ſin. The firſt Covetouſneſſe, that of riches, the Apoſtle cals The roote of all evill, but the ſecond Covetouſneſſe, that of ſin, is the fruit of all evill, for that is The treaſure of Gods wrath, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, when he makes our former ſins, the mother of future ſins, and then our future ſins the puniſhments of former. As though this World were too little to ſatisfie man, men are come to diſcover or imagine new worlds, ſeverall worlds in every Planet; and as though our Fathers heretofore, and we our ſelves too, had beene but dull and ignorant ſinners, we thinke it belongs to us to perfect old inventions, and to ſin in another height and excellency, then former times did, as though ſin had had but a minority, and an infancy till now. Though the pride of the Prince of Tyrus were ever in ſome Tyrans, who ſayes there, I am a god, and ſit in the ſeat of God, in the midſt of the Seas, and am Ezek.28.2.
D wiſer then Daniel; Yet there is a Sea above theſe ſeas, a power above this power, a ſpirituall pride above this temporall pride, one ſo much wiſer then Daniel, as that he is as wiſe as the Holy Ghoſt. The world hath ever had leviries and inconſtancies, and the Eccluſ.27.11.
foole hath changed as the Moone; the ſame men that have cryed Hoſanna, are ready to cry Crucifige; but, as in Iob: Wife, in the ſame mouth, the ſame word was ambiguous, (whether it were bleſſe God, or curſe God, out of the word we cannot tell) ſo are the actions of men ſo ambiguous, as that we cannot conclude upon them; men come to our Prayers here, and pray in their hearts here in this place, that God would induce another manner of Prayer into this place; and ſo pray in the Congregation, that God would not heare the prayers of the Congregation; There hath alwaies beene ambiguity and equivocation in words, but now in actions, and almoſt every action will admit a diverſe ſenſe.
And it was the Prophets complaint of old, You have multiplied your fornications, and yet Ezek.16.
E are not ſatisfied; but we wonder why the Prophet ſhould wonder at that, for the more we multiplie temporally or ſpiritually, the leſſe we are ſatisfied. Others have thought, that our ſoules ſinned before they came into the world, and that therefore they are here as in a priſon; but they are rather here, as in a Schoole; for, if they had ſtudied ſin in another world before, they practiſe it here, If they have practiſed it before, they teach it now, they lead and induce others into ſin.

But this conſideration of our inſatiableneſſe in ſin, in my purpoſe I ſepoſed for the end of this houre; But who knowes whether your patience, that you will heare, or who knowes whether yours, or my life, that you can heare, ſhall laſt to the end of this houre? and therefore it is an excuſable anticipation, to have begun with this ſpirituall covetouſneſſe neſſe of ſin, though our firſt paiment be to be made in the literall ſenſe of the text, A reprehenſion, and in it, a Counſaile, againſt our generall inſatiableneſſe of the temporall things of this world. Haſt thou found honey? eat ſo much as is ſufficient for thee, leſt thou bee filled therewith, and vomit it. A

Diviſio. In which words, there being firſt a particular Compellation, Tu, haſt thou found it? it remembers thee, that there be a great many, that have not found it, but lack that which thou aboundeſt in; And Inveniſti, thou haſt not inherited it, nor merited it, thou haſt but found it; and for that which thou haſt found, it is Honey, ſweetneſs, but it is but Honey, which eaſily becomes choler, and gall, and bitterneſſe. Such as it is, Comede, thou maiſt eat it, and eat it ſafely, it is not unwholeſome; but Comede ſufficientiam, eat no more then is ſufficient; And in that, let not the ſervant meaſure himſelfe by his Maſter, nor the ſubject by the King, nor the private man by the Magiſtrate, but Comede ſufficientiam tuam, eat that which is ſufficient for thee, for more then that will fill thee, over-fill thee; B perchance not ſo full as thou wouldſt bee, yet certainly ſo full, as that there will bee no roome in thee for better things; and then thou wilt vomit, nay perchance thou muſt vomit, the malice and plots of others ſhall give thee a vomit, And ſuch a vomit ſhall bee Evacuans, an exinanition, leave thee empty; and Immundum, an uncleanneſſe, leave thee in ſcorne and contempt; and Periculoſum, a danger, breake a veine, a veine at the heart, breake thy heart it ſelfe, that thou ſhalt never recover it. Haſt thou found honey? eat ſo much as is ſufficient for thee, leſt thou be filled therewith, and vomit it.

Tu. Firſt then, for that Compellation Tu, haſt thou found it? It is a word firſt of familiarity, and then a word of particularity. It is a degree of familiarity, that God hath notified himſelfe to us in ſeverall Perſons; that hee hath come ſo neere to our comprehenſion, as to be conſidered not onely as an univerſall, and infinite God, but as a Father, and as a Sonne, and opened himſelfe unto us in theſe Notions, Tu Pater, Tu Fili, Thou O C Father, and Thou O Sonne, have mercy upon us. A Conſtable, or Beadle will not bee ſpoke to ſo, to be thou'd, and any Perſon in the Trinity, the whole Trinity together is Pſal. 92. 8. content with it; Take God altogether, and at higheſt, Tu altiſſimus, Thou Lord art moſt 93. 2. high for evermore; Take him from before any beginning, Tu à ſeculo, Thy throne is eſtabliſhed of old, and thou art from everlaſting; Take him from beyond all ending, Tu autem 102. 27. permanes, Thou art the ſame, and thy yeares ſhall have no end.

In which, we goe not about to condemne, or correct the civill manner of giving different titles, to different ranks of men; but to note the ſlipperineſs of our times, where titles flow into one another, and loſe their diſtinctions; when as the Elements are condenſed into one another, ayre condenſed into water, and that into earth, ſo an obſequious flatterer, ſhall condenſe a yeoman into a Worſhipfull perſon, and the Worſhipfull into Honorable, and ſo that which duly was intended for diſtinction, ſhall occaſion confuſion. But D that which we purpoſe, in noting this Tu, is rather the ſingularity, the particularity, then the familiarity; That the Holy Ghoſt in this collects Man, abridges Man, ſummes up Clem. Alex. Man in an unity, in the conſideration of one, of himſelfe. Oportet hominem fieri unum, Man muſt grow in his conſideration, till he be but one man, one individuall man. If he conſider himſelfe in Humanitate, in the whole mankinde, a glorious creature, an immortall ſoule, he ſhall ſee this immortall ſoule, as well in Goats at the left hand, as in Sheepe at the right hand of Chriſt, at the Reſurrection; Men on both ſides: If he conſider himMat. 7. 22. ſelfe in Qualitate, in his quality, in his calling, he ſhall heare many then plead their Prophetavimus, we have prophecied, and their Ejecimus, we have exerciſed, and their Virtutes fecimus, we have done wonders, and all in thy Name, and yet receive that anſwer, Nunquam cognovi, I doe not know you now, I never did know you. Oportet unum fieri, he muſt conſider himſelfe in individuo, that one man, not that man in nature, not that E Origen Homil. unica in lib. reg. man in calling, but that man in actions. Origen makes this uſe of thoſe words, as he found them, Erat vir unus, There was one man, (which was Elkanah) He addes, Nomen ejus poſſeſſio Dei, this one man, ſayes he, was, in his Name, Gods poſſeſſion; Nam quem Dæmones poſſident, non unus ſed multi, for he whom the Devill poſſeſſes, is not one. The ſame ſinner is not the ſame thing; ſtill he clambers in his ambitious purpoſes, there he is an Eagle; & yet lies ſtill groveling, and trodden upon at any greater mans threſhold, there he is a worme. He ſwells to all that are under him, there he is a full Sea; and his dog that is above him, may wade over him, there he is a ſhallow, an empty River. In the compaſſe of a few dayes, he neighes like a horſe in the rage of his luſt over all the City,

and

A and groanes in a corner of the City, in an hoſpitall. A ſinner is as many men, as he hath vices; he that is Elkanah, Poſſeſsio Dei, poſſeſſed by God, and in poſſeſſion of God, he is unus homo, one and the ſame man. And when God calls upon man ſo particularly, he intends him ſome particular good. It is S. Hieromes note, That when God in the Scriptures ſpeakes of divers things in the ſingular number, it is ever in things of grace; And it is S. Auguſtins note, that when he ſpeaks of any one thing in the plurall Number, it is of heavy and ſorrowfull things; as Ieptha was buryed In civitatibus Gilead, in the Cities, but he had but one grave; And ſo that is, they made Aureos vitulos, Golden Calves, when it was but one Calfe. Hieron. Judg. 12. 7.

When Gods voyce comes to thee in this Text, in particular, Tu, Haſt thou found, he would have thee remember, how many ſeeke and have ſought, with teares, with ſweat, with blood, and lacke that, that thou aboundeſt in. That whereas his Evidence to them
B whom he loves not, in the next world ſhall be, Eſurivi, I was hungry, and yee gave me no meate; And his proceeding with them whom he loves not in this world, is, Si eſuriero, If I be hungry, I will not tell thee, I will not awaken thee, not remember thy conſcience, wherein thou mayeſt doe me a ſervice; He does call upon thee in particular, and ask thee, Nonne tu, Haſt thou not fortune enough, to let fall ſome crums upon him that ſtarves? and, Nonne tu, haſt not thou favour enough, to ſhed ſome beams upon him that is frozen in diſgrace? There is a ſquint eye, that lookes ſide-long; to looke upon riches, and honor, on the left hand, and long life here, on the right, is a ſquint eye. There is a ſquint eye, that lookes upwards and downwards; to looke after God and Mammon, is a ſquint eye. There are ſquint eyes, that looke upon one another; to looke upon ones own beauty, or wiſedome, or power, is a ſquint eye. The direct looke is to looke inward upon thine own Conſcience; Not with Nabuchadnezzar, Is not this great Babylon, which I have
C built by the might of my power, and for the honor of my Majeſty? But with David, Quid retribuam? for if thou looke upon them with a cleare eye, thou wilt ſee, that though thou haſt them, thou haſt but found them, which is our next ſtep. Mat. 25. 42. Pſal. 50. 12. Dan. 4. 30.

Now, if you have but found them, thou haſt them but by chance, by contingency, by fortune. The Emperour Leo, he calls money found, Dei beneficium, It is a benefit derived from God; but the great Lawyer, Triphonius, calls it, Donum fortunæ too, An immediate gift of fortune. They conſiſt well enough together, God and fortune. S. Auguſtine in his Retract: makes a conſcience of having named her too oft, leſt other men ſhould be ſcandalized; and ſo the Prophet complaines of that, (as the Vulgat reads it) Ponitis menſam fortunæ, You ſacrifice to fortune, you make fortune a god; that you ſhould not doe; but yet you ſhould acknowledge that God hath ſuch a ſervant, ſuch an inſtrument, as fortune too. Gods ordinary working is by Nature, theſe cauſes muſt produce theſe ef-
D fects; and that is his common Law; He goes ſometimes above that, by Prerogative, and that is by miracle, and ſometimes below that, as by cuſtome, and that is fortune, that is contingency; Fortune is as far out of the ordinary way, as miracle; no man knows in Nature, in reaſon, why ſuch, or ſuch perſons grow great; but it falls out ſo often, as we do not call it miracle, and therefore reſt in the Name of Fortune. We need not quarrell the words of the Poet, Tu quamcunq; Deus tibi fortunaverit horam, Grata ſume manu, Thanke God for any good fortune, ſince the Apoſtle ſayes too, that Godlineſſe hath the promiſe of this life; The godly man ſhall be fortunate, God will bleſſe him with good fortune here; but ſtill it is fortune, and chance, in the ſight and reaſon of man, and therefore he hath but found, whatſoever he hath in that kinde. It is intimated in the very word which we uſe for all worldly things; It is Inventarium, an Inventory; we found them here, and here our ſucceſſors finde them, when we are gone from hence. Iezabel had an E eſtimation of beauty, and ſhe thought to have drawne the King with that beauty, but ſhe found it, ſhe found it in her box, and in her wardrope, ſhe was not truly fayre. Achitophel had an eſtimation of wiſedome in Counſell, I know not how he found it; he counſelled by an example, which no man would follow, he hanged himſelfe. Thou wilt not be drawne to confeſſe, that a Man that hath an office, is preſently wiſer then thou, or a man that is Knighted, preſently valianter then thou. Men have preferment for thoſe parts, which other men, equall to them in the ſame things, have not, and therefore they doe but finde them; And to things that are but found, what is our title? Niſi reddantur, rapina eſt, ſayes the Law, If we reſtore not that which we finde, it is robbery. S. Auguſtine hath brought it nearer, Qui alienum negat, ſi poſſet, tolleret, He that confeſſeth not that which he hath found of another mans, if he durſt, he would have taken it by force. For that which we have found in this world, our calling is the owner, our debts are the owner, our children are the owner; our luſts, our ſuperfluities are no owners: of all the reſt, God is the owner, and to this purpoſe, the poore is God. A

Inveniſti. Co. l. 10. Pand. Eſa. 65. 11. 2 King. 9. 30.

Aug. Serm. 19. de verb. Apoſt.

S. Auguſtine puts a caſe to the point: He ſayes when he was at Milan, a poore Uſher of a Grammar Schoole found a bag of money, 200 Solidorum; let it be but one hundreth pounds; he ſet up bills; the owner came, offered him his tithe, ten pounds; he would none; he preſſed him to five, to three, to two; he would none: and then he that had loſt it, in an honorable indignation, diſclaimed it all; Nihil perdidi, ſayes he, it is all your own, I loſt nothing: Quale certamen! Theatrum mundus, ſpectator Deus, Out of importunity, he that found it, tooke it all, and out of conſcience, that it was not his, gave it all to the poore.

Matzah Exuxit, vel expreſſit.

The things of this world we doe but finde, and of the things which we finde, we are but Stewards for others. This finding is not ſo meerly caſuall, as that it implies no manner of ſeeking; We muſt put our ſelves into the way, into a calling. The word is Matza, and that word is allowed us; but a word like it, is not allowed us; Matza is, but Matzah is not; if there be an H added, an H, as it is an aſpiration, a breathing, a panting after the things of this world, or an Ache, as it is a paine, that it make our bones ake, or our hearts ake, or our conſcience ake, it is a ſeeking, and a finding, not intended in this word. Our proſecution and ſeeking muſt be moderate, our title and intereſt is but a finding; and what hath the moſt fortunate found? Hony; it is true, but yet but Hony. B

Mel.

That which Solomon may juſtly ſeeme to intend, eſpecially by Hony in this Text, is that which the Poets, and other Maſters of language, have called Magnas amicitias, and Magnas Clientelas, dependance, and intereſt, and favour in great perſons. It appeares by the next verſe, which depends upon this, and paraphraſes it; Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbours houſe. Where that which we reade, Withdraw, is in the Originall Hokar, which is Fac pretioſum, make not thy ſelfe cheape, not vulgar, have ſome reſpect to thy ſelfe, to thine own ingenuity, but principally to the other, to thy great friend: be not importune and troubleſome by any indiſcreet aſſiduity, to them who are poſſeſſed with buſineſſe, though at ſometimes they deſcend to thee; This is this Hony, where thou haſt acceſſe, yet doe not puſh open every doore, fling up every hanging, but uſe thy favour modeſtly. C

But in this Hony is wrapped up alſo all that is delightfull in this life; and Solomon carries us often to that Compariſon; In the Chapter before this, for Wiſedome; My Sonne, eat thou Hony, becauſe it is good; ſo ſhall the knowledge of wiſedome be to thy ſoule; and in the ſeaven and twentieth verſe of this Chapter, he uſes it for Glory; It is not good to eat much hony; ſo for men to ſearch their own glory, is not glory. In the ſixt Chapter of this booke, when Solomon had ſent us to the Ant, to learne wiſedome, betweene the eight verſe and the ninth, he ſends us to another ſchoole, to the Bee: Vade ad Apem & diſce quomodo operationem venerabilem facit, Goe to the Bee, and learne how reverend and myſterious a worke ſhe works. For, though S. Hierome acknowledge, that in his time, this verſe was not in the Hebrew Text, yet it hath ever been in many Copies of the Septuagint, and though it be now left out in the Complutenſe Bible, and that which they call the Kings, yet it is in that ſtill, which they value above all, the Vatican. S. Hierome himſelfe takes it into his expoſition, and other Fathers into theirs. So far therefore we may hearken to that voyce, as to goe to the Bee, and learne to worke by that Creature.

Ver. 13.

27.

Prov. 6.

Hieron.

In Ezek. 3. 3.

Baſil. Hom. 8. in Hexa. Chryſoſt. in Pſal. 110.

Both S. Baſil, and S. Chryſoſtome put this difference in that place, between the labour of the Ant, and the Bee, That the Ants worke but for themſelves, the Bee for others: Though the Ants have a Common-wealth of their own, yet thoſe Fathers call their labour, but private labour; becauſe no other Common-wealths have benefit by their labour, but their own. Direct thy labours in thy calling to the good of the publique, and then thou art a civill, a morall Ant; but conſider alſo, That all that are of the houſhold of the faithfull, and profeſſe the ſame truth of Religion, are part of this publique, and direct thy labours, for the glory of Chriſt Jeſus, amongſt them too, and then thou art a religious and a Chriſtian Bee, and the fruit of thy labour ſhall be Hony. The labour of the Ant is ſub Dio, open, evident, manifeſt; The labour of the Bee is ſub Tecto, in a houſe, in a hive; They will doe good, and yet they will not be ſeene to doe it; they affect not glory, nay, they avoyd it. For in experience, when ſome men curious of naturall know- D E ledge,

A ledge, have made their Hives of glaſſe, that by that tranſparency, they might ſee the Bees manner of working, the Bees have made it their firſt work to line that Glaſſe-hive, with a cruſt of Wax, that they might work and not be diſcerned. It is a bleſſed ſincerity, to work as the Ant, profeſſedly, openly; but becauſe there may be caſes, when to doe ſo, would deſtroy the whole worke, though there be a cloud and a curtaine betweene thee, and the eyes of men, yet if thou doe them clearely in the ſight of God, that he ſee his glory advanced by thee, the fruit of thy labour ſhall be Honey.

Pliny names one Ariſtomachum Soleníem, that ſpent threeſcore yeares in the contemplation of Bees; our whole time for this exerciſe is but threeſcore minutes; and therefore wee ſay no more of this, but Vade ad Apem, practiſe the ſedulity of the Bee, labour in thy calling, And the community of the Bee, beleeve that thou art called to aſſiſt others, And the ſecreſie of the Bee, that the greateſt, and moſt authorized ſpie ſee it not, to ſupB plant it, And the purity of the Bee, that never ſettles upon any foule thing, that thou never take a foule way to a faire end, and the fruit of thy labour ſhall bee Hony; God ſhall give thee the ſweetneſſe of this world, honour, and eaſe, and plenty, and hee ſhall give thee thy honey-combe, with thy honey, that which preſerves thy honey to thee, that is, a religious knowledge, that all this is but hony; And honey in the dew of the flowres, whence it is drawne, is but Cæli ſudor, a ſweaty excrement of the heavens, and Siderum ſaliva, the ſpettle, the fleame of the ſtarres, and Apum vomitus, the caſting, the vomit of the Bee. And though honey be the ſweeteſt thing that wee doe take into the body, yet there it degenerates into gall, and proves the bittereſt; And all this is honey in the Anti-type, in that which it ſignifies, in the temporall things of this world; In the temporall things of this world there is a bitternaſſe, in our uſe of them; But in his hand, and his purpoſe that gives them, they have impreſſions of ſweetneſſe; and ſo Comede, Eat thy honC ney, which is alſo a ſtep farther.

Here is libery for any man to eat Honey, if hee have found it, and Ionathan the Kings ſonne found honey upon the ground, and did but dip his ſtaffe in it, and put it to his mouth, and hee muſt die for it. Of forbidden honey the leaſt dramme is poyſon, how ſweet ſoever any collaterall reſpect make it. But Ionathan knew not that it was forbidken by the King: Ignorance is no plea in any ſubject againſt the Kings lawes; and there is a King, in breach of whoſe lawes, no King, no Kings ſonne can excuſe themſelves by ignorance, if they doe but dip their Scepter in forbidden honey, in any unlawfull delight in this world; For they doe, or they may know the unlawfulneſſe of it. But for the honey which God allowes us, whether God give it in that plenty, Terram fluentem, that the land flow with milke and honey, nay Torrentes mellis, rivers and ſtreames of honey, that great fortunes flow into men, in this world; or whether God put us to ſuck honey out D of the Rock, that that which we have, we digge, and plough, and threſh for, yet when thou haſt found that, Comede, uſe it, enjoy it, eat it; Hee that will not work, ſhall not eat; He that ſhuts himſelfe up in a Cloyſter, till the honey finde him, till meat bee brought to him, ſhould not eat.

Chriſt himſelfe ate Honey, but after his Reſurrection; when his body needed not refection; when our principall end in worldly things, is not for the body, nor for the world, but that we have had a ſpirituall reſurrection, that we can ſee Gods love in them, and ſhew Gods glory by them, then Inveniſti, thou haſt found; (for Invenire, eſt in rem venire, id eſt in uſum) to find a thing is to make the right uſe of it, and Inveniſti mel, thou haſt found Honey, that which God intends for ſweetneſſe, for neceſſities, conveniences, abundances, recreations, and delights; and therefore Comede, eat it, enjoy it; but to thee alſo belongs that Caveat, Comede ad ſufficientiam, Eat but enough.

E That great Morall man Seneca, could ſee, that Nihil agere, to paſſe this life, and intend no Vocation, was very ill; and that Aliud agere, to profeſſe a Vocation, and be buſier in other mens callings, then his owne, was worſe; but the Super-agere, to over-doe, to doe more then was required at his hands, he never brought into compariſon, hee never ſuſpected; and yet that is our moſt ordinary fault. That which hath been ordinarily given by our Phyſitians, by way of counſell, That we ſhould riſe with an appetite, hath been enough followed by worldly men; They alwayes lie downe, and alwayes riſe up with an appetite to more, and more in this world. An Office is but an Anti-paſt, it gets them an appetite to another Office; and a title of Honour, but an Anti-paſt, a new ſtomach to a new Title. The danger is, that we cannot goe upward directly; If wee have a ſtaire, Plin.

Plin.

Comede.
1 Sam. 14 24.

Exod. 3. 8.
Iob 20 17.
Deut. 32. 13.
2 Theſ. 3. 10.

Luk. 24. 41.

Feſtus.

Sufficientiam

a ſtaire, to goe any height, it muſt be a winding ſtaire; It is a compaſſing, a circumventing, to riſe: A Ladder is a ſtraight Engin of it ſelfe, yet if we will riſe by that, it muſt be ſet a ſlope; Though our meanes be direct in their owne nature, yet wee put them upon crooked wayes; It is but a poore riſing, that any man can make in a direct line, and yet it is, Ad ſufficientiam, high enough, for it is to heaven. Have yee ſeene a glaſſe blowne to a handſome competency, and with one breath more, broke? I will not ask you, whether you haue ſeene a competent beauty made worſe, by an artificiall addition, becauſe they have not thought it well enough before; you ſee it every day, and every where. A

Act. 14. 12. If Paul himſelfe were here, whom for his Eloquence the Lyſtrians called Mercury, hee could not perſwade them to leave their Mercury; It will not eaſily be left; for how many of them that take it outwardly at firſt, come at laſt to take it inwardly? Since the

Eccleſ. 7. 17. ſaying of Solomon, Be not over righteous, admits many good ſenſes, even in Morall vertues, and in religious duties too, which are naturally good, it is much more appliable in temporall things, which are naturally indifferent; Bee not over faire, over witty, over ſociable, over rich, over glorious; but let the meaſure be Sufficientia tua, So much as is ſufficient for thee. B

Tuam. But where ſhall a man take meaſure of himſelfe? At what age, or in what calling ſhall he ſay, This is ſufficient for me? Ieremy ſayes, Puer ſum, I am a child, and cannot ſpeake at all; S. Paul ſayes, Quando puer, When I was a child, no bigger, I ſpake like a child; this was not ſufficientia ſua, ſufficienr for him; for ſince he was to be a man, he was to ſpeak like a man: The ſame clothes doe not ſerve us throughout our lives, nay not the ſame bodies, nay not the ſame vertues, ſo there is no certaine Gomer, no fixed Meaſure for Clem. Alex. worldly things, for every one to have. As Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith, Eadem Drachma data Nauclero, eſt Naulum, The ſame piece of Money given to a Water-man, is his Fare; Publicano Vectigal, given to a Farmer of Cuſtome, it is Impoſt; Mercatori pretium, to a C Merchant it is the price of his Ware; Operario Merces, Mendico Eleemoſyna, To a Labourer it is Wages, to a Begger it is Almes; So on the other ſide, this which we call ſufficiency, as it hath relation to divers ſtates, hath a different meaſure. I think the rule will not be inconveniently given, if we ſay, That whatſoever the world doth juſtly looke for at our hands, wee may juſtly look for at Gods hands: Thoſe outward meanes, which are requiſite for the performance of the duties of your calling to the world, ariſing from your birth, or ariſing from your place, you are to pray for, you are to labour for; For that is Sufficientia tua, ſo much is ſufficient for you, and ſo much Honey you may eat; but eat no more, ſayes the Text, Ne ſatieris, Leſt you be filled.

Ne ſatieris. Hee doth not ſay yet, leſt thou bee ſatisfied; there is no great feare, nay there is no hope of that, that he will be ſatisfied. We know the receipt, the capacity of the ventricle, the ſtomach of man, how much it can hold; and wee know the receipt of all the receptacles of blood, how much blood the body can have; ſo wee doe of all the other conduits and ciſterns of the body; But this infinite Hive of honey, this inſatiable whirlpoole of the covetous mind, no Anatomy, no diſſection hath diſcovered to us. When I looke into the larders, and cellars, and vaults, into the veſſels of our body for drink, for blood, for urine, they are pottles, and gallons; when I looke into the furnaces of our ſpirits, the ventricles of the heart and of the braine, they are not thimbles; for ſpirituall things, the things of the next world, we have no roome; for temporall things, the things of this world, we have no bounds. How then ſhall this over-eater bee filled with his honey? So filled, as that he can receive nothing elſe. More of the ſame honey hee can; Another Mannor, and another Church, is but another bit of meat, with another ſauce to him; Another Office, and another way of Extortion, is but another garment, and another lace to him. But he is too full to receive any thing elſe; Chriſt comes to E this Bethlem, (Bethlem which is Domus panis) this houſe of abundance, and there is no roome for Chriſt in this Inne; there are no crums for Chriſt under this table; There comes Boanerges, (Boanerges, that is, filius Tonitrui, the ſonne of Thunder) and he thunders out the Væ's, the Comminations, the Judgements of God upon ſuch as hee; but if the Thunder ſpoile not his drink, he ſees no harme in Thunder; As long as a Sermon is not a Sentence in the Starre-chamber, that a Sermon cannot fine and impriſon him, hee hath no roome for any good effect of a Sermon. The Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of Comfort comes to him, and offers him the conſolation of the Goſpel; but hee will die in his old religion, which is to ſacrifice to his owne Nets, by which his portion is plenteous;

He

A he had rather have the God of the Old Teſtament, that payes in this world with milke and honey, then the God of the New Teſtament, that cals him into his Vineyard in this World, and payes him no wages till the next: one Iupiter is worth all the three Elohims, or the three Iehovahs (if we may ſpeake ſo) to him. Iupiter that can come in a ſhowre of gold, outweighs Iehova, that comes but in a ſhowre of water, but in a ſprinkling of water in Baptiſme, and ſels that water ſo deare, as that he will have ſhowres of teares for it, nay ſhowres of blood for it, when any Perſecutor hath a mind to call for it. The voyce of God whom he hath contemned, and wounded, The voyce of the Preacher whom he hath derided, and impoveriſhed, The voyce of the poore, of the Widow, of the Orphans, of the priſoner, whom he hath oppreſſed, knocke at his doore, and would enter, but there is no roome for them, he is ſo full. This is the great danger indeed that accompanies this fulneſſe, but the danger that affects him more is that which is more literally in the text,
B Evomet, he ſhall be ſo filled as that he ſhall vomit; even that fulneſſe, thoſe temporall things which he had, he ſhall caſt up.

It is not a vomiting for his eaſe, that he would vomit, but he ſhall vomit; he ſhall bee forced to vomit. He hath ſwallowed downe riches, and he ſhall vomit them up againe; God ſhall caſt them out of his belly; But by what hand? whether by his right hand, by the true way of juſtice, or his left hand, by malice, under colour of juſtice, his money ſhall be his Antimony, his own riches ſhall be his vomit. Solomon ſayes, he ſaw a ſore evill under the Sun; but if he had lived as long as the Sun, he might have ſeen it every courſe of the Sun, Riches reſerved to their owners for their own hurt; Rich men periſh, that ſhould not have periſhed, or not ſo ſoone, or not ſo abſolutely, if they had not beene rich. Their confidence in their riches provokes them to ſome unjuſtifiable actions, and their riches provoke others to a vehement perſecution. And in this vomit of theirs, if we had time to doe ſo, we would
C conſider firſt, The ſordidneſſe, and the contempt and ſcorne that this evacuated Man comes to in the world, when he hath had this vomit of all his honey; That becauſe there can be no vacuity, he ſhall be filled againe, but Saturabitur ignominia, He ſhall be filled with ſhame for glory, and ſhamefull ſpuing ſhall be upon his glory. He magnified himſelfe againſt the Lord, and therefore was made drunk, and ſhall wallow in his vomit, and be had in deriſion. His honey was his ſoule, and that being vomited, he is now but a rotten and abhorred carkaſs; At beſt he was but a bag of money, and now he is but the bag it ſelfe, which ſcarce any man will ſtoop to take up: And as in a vomit in a baſon, the Phyſitian is able to ſhew the world, what cold meat, and what raw meat, and what hard and indigeſtible meat he had eaten; So when ſuch a perſon comes by juſtice, or malice to this vomit, every man becomes a Phyſitian, every man brings Inditements, and evidence againſt him, and can ſhew all his falſhoods, and all his extortions in particular.

D In theſe particulars we would conſider the ſcorne upon this vomit; and then the danger of it in theſe, That nothing weakens the eyes more then vomiting; when this worldly man hath loſt his honey, he hath loſt his ſight; he was dimme ſighted at beginning, when he could ſee nothing but worldly things, things neareſt to him, but when he hath vomited thē, he hath loſt his ſpectacles; through his riches he ſaw ſome glimmering, ſome colour of comfort, now he ſees no comfort at all: And a greater danger in vomiting is, that often times it breakes a veine within, and that is moſt commonly incurable, This man that vomits without, bleeds within; his fortune is broke, and his heart is broke; and he bleeds better blood then his owne, he bleeds out the blood of Chriſt Jeſus himſelfe; the blood of Chriſt Jeſus poured into him heretofore in the conſolation of the Goſpel, and in the Cup of Salvation in the Sacrament (for ſo much as concernes him) is but ſpilt upon the ground; as though his honey, his worldly greatneſſe, were his Father, and Mother, and E Wife, and Children, and Prince, and friends, and all, when that is loſt by this vomit, he mournes for all, in a ſad and everlaſting mourning, in ſuch a diſconſolate dejection of ſpirit as ends either in an utter inconſideration of God, or in a deſperation of his mercies. This is that Incipiam te evomere (as the Vulgat reads it) in this vomit of worldly things, God does begin to vomit him out of his mouth; and then God does not returne to his vomit, but leaves this impatient patient to his impenitibleneſſe. But we muſt not lanch into theſe wide Seas now, to conſider the ſcorne, or the danger of this vomit, but rather draw into the harbor, and but repeat the text, transferred from this world to the text, from temporall to ſpirituall things.

Thus far we have beene In melle, In honey, upon honey; but now Super mel, above honey.

Evomat. Iob 20.15.

Eccleſ. 5.12.

Habak. 2.16. Ier. 48.26.

Revel. 3.16.

Concluſio.

Pſal. 19. 10. honey. The judgements of the Lord are Dulcia præ melle, Sweeter then honey, and the honey combe; And the judgements of the Lord are that, by which the Lord will judge us, and this world; it is his word. His word, the ſincerity of the Goſpel, the truth of his Religion is our honey and honey combe; our honey, and our waxe, our Covenant, and our Seale; we have him not, if we have not his truth, if we require other honey; and wee truſt him not, if we require any other Seale, if we thinke the word of God needs the traditions of men. And Inveniſti tu, Hath God manifeſted to thee the truth of his Goſpell? Bleſſe thou the Lord, praiſe him and magnifie him for ever, whoſe day-ſpring from an high hath viſited thee, and left ſo many Nations in darkneſſe, who ſhall never heare of Chriſt, till they heare himſelfe, nor heare other voyce from him then, then the Ite maledicti; Pity them that have not this honey, and confeſſe for thy ſelfe, that though thou have it, thou haſt but found it; couldſt thou beſpeake Chriſtian Parents beforehand, and ſay, I will be borne of ſuch Parents as ſhall give me a title to the Covenant, to Baptiſme? or couldſt thou procure Sureties, that ſhould bind themſelves for thee, at the entring into the Covenant in Baptiſme? Thou foundeſt thy ſelfe in the Chriſtian Church, and thou foundeſt meanes of ſalvation there; thou broughteſt none hither, thou boughteſt none here; the Title of S. Andrew, the firſt of the Apoſtles that came to Chriſt, was but that, Invenimus Meſſiam, We have found the Meſſias. It is onely Chriſt himſelfe that ſayes of Cant. 5. 1. himſelfe, Comedi mel meum, I have eat my honey, his owne honey. We have no grace, no Goſpel of our owne, we find it here.

But ſince thou haſt found it, Comede, Eat it; do not drinke the cup of Babylon, leſt thou drink the cup of Gods wrath too: but make this Honey (Chriſts true Religion) thy meate; digeſt that, aſſimilate that, incorporate that: and let Chriſt himſelf, and his merit, be as thy ſoul; & let the cleere and outward profeſſion of his truth, Religion, be as thy body: If thou give away that body, (be flattered out of thy Religion, or threatned out of thy Religion) If thou ſell this body, (be bought and bribed out of thy Religion) If thou lend this body, (diſcontinue thy Religion for a yeare or two, to ſee how things will fall out) if thou have no body, thou ſhalt have no Reſurrection, and the cleere and undiſguiſed profeſſion of the truth, is the body.

Eat therefore this honey Ad ſufficientiam; ſo much as is enough. To beleeve implicitly as the Church beleeves, and know nothing, is not enough; know thy foundations, and who laid them; Other foundations can no man lay, then are laid, Chriſt Jeſus; neither can other men lay thoſe foundations otherwiſe then they are laid by the Apoſtles, but eat Ad ſufficientiam tuam, that which is enough for thee, for ſo much knowledge is not required in thee in thoſe things, as in them, whoſe profeſſion it is to teach them; be content to leave a roome ſtil for the Apoſtles, Æmulamini chariſmata meliora, deſire better gifts; and ever think it a title of dignity which the Angel gave Daniel, to be Vir deſideriorum; To have ſtill ſome farther object of thy deſires. Do not thinke thou wanteſt all, becauſe thou haſt not all; for at the great laſt day, we ſhall ſee more plead Catechiſmes for their ſalvation, then the great volumes of Controverſies, more plead their pockets, then their Libraries. If S. Paul ſo great an Argoſie held no more, but Chriſtum crucifixum, what can thy Pinnace hold? Let humility be thy ballaſt, and neceſſary knowledge thy fraight: for there is an over-fulneſſe of knowledge, which forces a vomit; a vomit of opprobrious and contumelious ſpeeches, a belching and ſpitting of the name of Heretique and Schiſmatique, and a loſſe of charity for matters that are not of faith; and from this vomiting comes emptineſs, The more diſputing, the leſſe beleeving: but Saturaſti nos benignitate tua, Domine, Thou haſt ſatisfied us early with thy mercy, Thou gaveſt us Chriſtianity early, and thou gaveſt us the Reformation early: and therefore ſince in thee we have found this honey, let us ſo eat it, and ſo hold it, That the land do not vomit her Inhabitants, nor ſpew us out, as it ſpewed out the Nations that were before us, but that our dayes may be long in this land, which the Lord our God hath given us, and that with the Ancient of dayes, we may have a day without any night in that land, which his Son our Saviour hath purchaſed for us with the ineſtimable price of his incorruptible blood. To which glorious Son of God, &c.

Pſal. 90. 14.

Levit. 18. 25. 29.

SERM.

SERM. LXXI.

At the Haghe Decemb. 19. 1619. I Preached upon this Text. Since in my ſickneſſe at Abrey-hatche in Eſſex, 1630. reviſing my ſhort notes of that Sermon, I digeſted them into theſe two.

MAT. 4. 18, 19, 20.

And Ieſus walking by the Sea of Galile ſaw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, caſting a net into the Sea, (for they were fiſhers.) And he ſaith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men; And they ſtraightway left their nets, and followed him.

SOLOMON preſenting our Saviour Chriſt, in the name and perſon of Wiſdome, in the booke of Proverbs, puts, by inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt, theſe words into his mouth, Delicia mea eſſe cum filiis hominum, Chriſts delight is to be with the children of men; And in ſatisfaction of that delight, he ſayes in the ſame verſe, in the perſon of Chriſt, That he rejoyced to be in the habitable parts of the Earth, (that is, where he might converſe with men) Ludens in orbe terrarum, (ſo the Vulgat reads it) and ſo our former Tranſlation had it, I tooke my ſolace in the compaſſe of the Earth. Prov. 8. 30.

But ſince Chriſts adverſary Satan does ſo too, (Satan came from compaſſing the Earth to and fro, and from walking in it;) ſince the Scribes and Phariſees doe more then ſo, They compaſſe Land and Sea, to make one of their own profeſſion, the mercy of Chriſt is not leſſe active, not leſſe induſtrious then the malice of his adverſaries, He preaches in populous Cities, he preaches in the deſart wilderneſſe, he preaches in the tempeſtuous Sea: and as his Power ſhall collect the ſeverall duſts, and atomes, and Elements of our ſcattered bodies at the Reſurrection, as materialls, members of his Triumphant Church; ſo he collects the materialls, the living ſtone, and timber, for his Militant Church, from all places, from Cities, from Deſarts, and here in this Text, from the Sea, (Ieſus walking by the Sea, &c.) Job 1. 7.

Diviſio.

In theſe words we ſhall onely purſue a twofold conſideration of the perſons whom Chriſt called here to his Apoſtleſhip, Peter and Andrew; What their preſent, what their future function was, what they were, what they were to be; They were fiſhermen, they were to be fiſhers of men. But from theſe two conſiderations of theſe perſons, ariſe many Circumſtances, in and about their calling; and their preferment for their chearfull following. For firſt, in the firſt, we ſhall ſurvay the place, The Sea of Galile; And their education and converſation upon that Sea, by which they were naturally leſſe fit for this Church-ſervice. At this Sea he found them caſting their Nets; of which act of theirs, there is an emphaticall reaſon expreſſed in the text, For they were fiſhers, which intimates both theſe notes, That they did it becauſe they were fiſhers; It became them, it behoved them, it concerned them to follow their trade; And then they did it as they were fiſhers, If they had not been fiſhers they would not have done it, they might not have uſurped upon anothers Calling; (they caſt their Nets into the Sea, for they were fiſhers) And then, in a nearer conſideration of theſe perſons, we finde that they were two that were called; Chriſt provided at firſt againſt ſingularity, He called not one alone; And then they were two Brethren, perſons likely to agree; He provided at firſt againſt ſchiſme; And then, they were two ſuch as were nothing of kinne to him, (whereas the ſecond payre of brethren, whom he called, Iames and Iohn, were his kinſmen) He provided at firſt, againſt partiality, and that kinde of Simony, which prefers for affection. Theſe men, thus thus conditioned naturally, thus disposed at this place, and at this time, our blessed Saviour calls; And then we note their readinesse, they obeyed the call, they did all they were bid, They were bid follow, and they followed, and followed presently; And they did somewhat more then seemes expresly to have been required, for, They left their Nets, and followed him. And all these substantiall circumstances invest our first part, these persons in their first estate. For those that belong to the second part, Their preferment upon this obedience, (Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men) it would be an impertinent thing, to open them now, because I doe easily foresee, that this day we shall not come to that part. A

Andreas. In our first part, The consideration of these persons then, though in this Text Peter be first named, yet we are to note, that this was not the first time of their meeting; when Christ and they met first, which was, when Iohn Baptist made that declaration upon Joh. 1. 35. Christs walking by him, Behold the Lamb of God, Peter was not the first that applied himselfe to Christ, nor that was invited by Christs presenting himselfe to him, to doe it; Peter was not there; Peter was not the second; for, Andrew, and another, who were then Iohn Baptists Disciples, and saw Christ declared by him, were presently affected with a desire to follow Christ, and to converse with him, and to that purpose presse him with that question, Magister, ubi habitas? They professe that they had chosen him for their Master, and they desire to know where he dwelt, that they might waite upon him, and receive their instructions from him. And in Andrews thus early applying himselfe to Christ, we are also to note, both the fecundity of true Religion; for, as soone as he had found Christ, he sought his brother Peter, Et duxit ad Iesum, he made his brother as happy as himselfe, he led him to Jesus; (And that other Disciple, which came to Christ as soone as Andrew did, yet because he is not noted to have brought any others but himselfe, is not named in the Gospel) And we are to observe also, the unsearchable wisdome of God in his proceedings, that he would have Peter, whom he had purposed to be his principall Apostle, to be led to him by another, of inferior dignity, in his determination. And therefore Conversus converte, Think not thy selfe well enough preached unto, except thou finde a desire, that thy life and conversation may preach to others, And Edoctus disce, thinke not that thou knowest any thing, except thou desire to learne more; neither grudge to learne of him, whom thou thinkest lesse learned then thy selfe; The blessing is in Gods Calling, and Ordinance, not in the good parts of the man; Andrew drew Peter, The lesser in Gods purpose for the building of the Church, brought in the greater. Therefore doth the Church celebrate the memory of S. Andrew, first of any Saint in the yeare; and after they have been altogether united in that one festivall of All-Saints, S. Andrew is the first that hath a particular day. He was Primogenitus Testamenti Bernar. novi, The first Christian, the first begotten of the new Testament; for, Iohn Baptist, who may seeme to have the birthright before him, had his conception in the old Testament, Mal. 3. 1. in the wombe of those prophecies of Malachy, and of Esay, of his comming, and of his Esa. 40. 3. office, and so cannot be so intirely referred to the new Testament, as S. Andrew is. Because therefore, our adversaries of the Romane heresie distill, and racke every passage of Scripture, that may drop any thing for the advantage of S. Peter, and the allmightines of his Successor, I refuse not the occasion offered from this text, compared with that other, Ioh. 1. to say, That if that first comming to Christ were but (as they use to say) Ad notitiam & familiaritatem, and this in our Text, Ad Apostolatum, That they that came there, came but to an acquaintance, and conversation with Christ, but here, in this text, to the Apostleship, yet, to that conversation, (which was no small happinesse) Andrew came clearly before Peter, and to this Apostleship here, Peter did not come before Andrew; they came together. B C D E

Mare Galileum. These two then our Saviour found, as he walked by the Sea of Galile. No solitude, no tempest, no bleakenesse, no inconvenience averts Christ, and his Spirit, from his sweet, and gracious, and comfortable visitations. But yet this that is called here, The Sea of Galile, was not properly a Sea; but according to the phrase of the Hebrews, who call all great meetings of waters, by that one name, A Sea, this, which was indeed a lake of fresh water, is called a Sea. From the roote of Mount Libanus, spring two Rivers, Jor, and Dan; and those two, meeting together, joyning their waters, joyne their names too, and make that famous river Jordan; a name so composed, as perchance, our River is, Thamesis, of Thame, and Isis. And this River Jordan falling into this flat, makes this lake,

A Lake, of ſixteene miles long, and ſome ſixe in breadth. Which Lake being famous for fiſh; though of ordinary kinds, yet of an extraordinary taſte and reliſh, and then of extraordinary kinds too, not found in other waters, and famous, becauſe divers famous Cities did engirt it, and become as a garland to it, Capernaum, and Chorazim, and Bethſaida, and Tiberias, and Magdalo, (all celebrated in the Scriptures) was yet much more famous for the often recourſe, which our Saviour (who was of that Countrey) made to it; For this was the Sea, where he amazed Peter, with that great draught of fiſhes, that brought him to ſay, Exi à me Domine, Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a ſinfull man; This was the Sea, where himſelfe walked upon the waters; And where he rebuked the tempeſt; And where he manifeſted his Almighty power many times. And by this Lake, this Sea, dwelt Andrew and Peter, and uſing the commodity of the place, lived upon fiſhing in this Lake; and in that act our Saviour found them, and called them to his ſervice. Luk. 5. 8. Matt. 14. 25. 8. 23.

B Why them? Why fiſhers?

First, Chriſt having a greater, a fairer Jeruſalem to build then Davids was, a greater Kingdome to eſtabliſh then Juda's was, a greater Temple to build then Solomons was, having a greater work to raiſe, yet he begun upon a leſſe ground; Hee is come from his twelve Tribes, that afforded armies in ſwarmes, to twelve perſons, twelve Apoſtles, from his Juda and Levi, the foundations of State and Church, to an Andrew and a Peter fiſher-men, ſea-men; and theſe men accuſtomed to that various, and tempeſtuous Element, to the Sea, leſſe capable of Offices of civility, and ſociableneſſe, then other men, yet muſt be employed in religious offices, to gather all Nations to one houſhold of the faithfull, and to conſtitute a Communion of Saints; They were Sea-men, fiſher-men, unlearned, and indocil; Why did Chriſt take them? Not that thereby there was any ſcandall given, or juſt occaſion of that calumny of Iulian the Apoſtat, That Chriſt found it eaſie to ſeduce, and draw to his Sect, ſuch poore ignorant men as they were; for C Chriſt did receive perſons eminent in learning, (Saul was ſo) and of authority in the State, (Nicodemus was ſo) and of wealth, and ability, (Zacheus was ſo, and ſo was Ioſeph of Arimathea) But firſt he choſe ſuch men, that when the world had conſidered their beginning, their inſufficiency then, and how unproper they were for ſuch an employment, and yet ſeene that great work ſo farre, and ſo faſt advanced, by ſo weake inſtruments, they might aſcribe all power to him, and ever after, come to him cheerfully upon any invitation, how weake men ſoever he ſhould ſend to them, becauſe hee had done ſo much by ſo weak inſtruments before: To make his work in all ages after proſper the better, he proceeded thus at firſt. And then, hee choſe ſuch men for another reaſon too; To ſhew that how inſufficient ſoever he received them, yet he received them into ſuch a Schoole, ſuch an Univerſity, as ſhould deliver them back into his Church, made D fit by him, for the ſervice thereof. Chriſt needed not mans ſufficiency, he took inſufficient men; Chriſt excuſes no mans inſufficiency, he made them ſufficient. Cur Piſcatores.

His purpoſe then was, that the worke ſhould be aſcribed to the Workman, not to the Inſtrument; To himſelfe, not to them; Nec quæſivit per Oratorem piſcatorem, He ſent not out Orators, Rhetoricians, ſtrong or faire-ſpoken men to work upon theſe fiſher-men, Sed de piſcatore lucratus eſt Imperatorem, By theſe fiſher-men, hee hath reduced all thoſe Kings, and Emperours, and States which have embraced the Chriſtian Religion, theſe thouſand and ſix hundred yeares. When Samuel was ſent with that generall Commiſſion, to anoint a ſonne of Iſhai King, without any more particular inſtructions, when hee came, and Eliab was preſented unto him, Surely, ſayes Samuel, (noting the goodlineſſe of his perſonage) this is the Lords Anointed. But the Lord ſaid unto Samuel, Looke not on his countenance, nor the height of his ſtature, for I have refuſed him; for, (as it followeth E there, from Gods mouth) God ſeeth not as man ſeeth; Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord beholdeth the heart. And ſo David, in apparance, leſſe likely was choſen. But, if the Lords arme be not ſhortned, let no man impute weakneſſe to the Inſtrument. For ſo, when David himſelfe was appointed by God, to purſue the Amalekites, the Amalekites that had burnt Ziklag, and done ſuch ſpoile upon Gods people, as that the people began to ſpeak of ſtoning David, from whom they looked for defence, when David had no kind of intelligence, no ground to ſettle a conjecture upon, which way he muſt purſue the Amalekites, and yet purſue them he muſt, in the way he findes a poore young fellow, a famiſhed, ſicke young man, derelicted of his Maſter, and left for dead in the march, and by the meanes and conduct of this wretch, David recovers the enemy, Nequid Inſtrumentis. Auguſt. 1 Sam. 16. 6. 1 Sam. 30. Ver. 6.

recovers the ſpoile, recovers his honour, and the love of his people. A

If the Lords arme bee not ſhortned, let no man impute weakneſſe to his Inſtrument. But yet God will alwayes have ſo much weakneſſe appeare in the Inſtrument, as that their ſtrength ſhall not be thought to be their owne. When Peter and Iohn preached in Acts 4.13. the ſtreets, The people marvelled, (ſayes the Text) why? for they had underſtood that they were unlearned. But beholding alſo the man that was healed ſtanding by, they had nothing to ſay, ſayes that ſtory. The inſufficiency of the Inſtrument makes a man wonder naturally; but the accompliſhing of ſome great worke brings them to a neceſſary acknowledgement of a greater power, working in that weake Inſtrument. For, if thoſe Apo-Acts 8.10. ſtles that preached, had beene as learned men, as Simon Magus, as they did in him, (This man is the great power of God, not that he had, but that he was the power of God) the people would have reſted in the admiration of thoſe perſons, and proceeded no farther. It was their working of ſupernaturall things, that convinced the world. For all Pauls learning, (though hee were very learned) never brought any of the Conjurers to burne his B bookes, or to renounce his Art; But when God wrought extraordinary works by him, Acts 19.11. That ſickneſſes were cured by his napkins, and his handkerchiefs, (in which cures, Pauls learning had no more concurrence, no more cooperaton, then the ignorance of any of Verſe 13. the fiſher-men Apoſtles) And when the world ſaw that thoſe Exorciſts, which went Verſe 19. about to doe Miracles in the Name of Jeſus, becauſe Paul did ſo, could not doe it, becauſe that Jeſus had not promiſed to worke in them, as in Paul, Then the Conjurers came, and burnt their bookes, in the ſight of all the world, to the value of fifty thouſand pieces of ſilver. It was not learning, (that may have been got, though they that heare them, know it not; and it were not hard to aſſigne many examples of men that have ſtolne a great meaſure of learning, and yet lived open and converſable lives, and never beene obſerved, (except by them, that knew their Lucubrations, and night-watchings) C to have ſpent many houres in ſtudy) but it was the calling of the world to an apprehenſion of a greater power, by ſeeing great things done by weake Inſtruments, that reduced them, that convinced them. Peter and Iohns preaching did not halfe the good then, as the preſenting of one man, which had been recovered by them, did. Twenty of our Sermons edifie not ſo much, as if the Congregation might ſee one man converted by us. Any one of you might out-preach us. That one man that would leave his beloved ſinne, that one man that would reſtore ill-gotten goods, had made a better Sermon then ever I ſhall, and ſhould gaine more ſoules by his act, then all our words (as they are ours) can doe.

Non in-ideneos. Such men he took then, as might be no occaſion to their hearers, to aſcribe the work to their ſufficiency; but yet ſuch men too, as ſhould be no examples to inſufficient men to adventure upon that great ſervice; but men, though ignorant before, yet docil, and D glad to learne. In a rough ſtone, a cunning Lapidary will eaſily foreſee, what his cutting, and his poliſhing, and his art will bring that ſtone too. A cunning Statuary diſcerns in a Marble-ſtone under his feet, where there will ariſe an Eye, and an Eare, and a Hand, & other lineaments to make it a perfect Statue. Much more did our Saviour Chriſt, who was himſelfe the Author of that diſpoſition in them, (for no man hath any ſuch diſpoſion but from God) foreſee in theſe fiſher-men, an inclinableneſſe to become uſefull in that great ſervice of his Church. Therefore hee tooke them from their owne ſhip, but he ſent them from his Croſſe; Hee tooke them weatherbeaten with North and South winds, and rough-caſt with foame, and mud; but he ſent them back ſoupled, and ſmoothed, and levigated, quickned, and inanimated with that Spirit, which he had breathed into them from his owne bowels, his owne eternall bowels, from which the Holy Ghoſt proceeded; Hee tooke fiſher-men, and he ſent fiſhers of men. Hee ſent them not out to E preach, as ſoone as he called them to him; He called them ad Diſcipulatum, before hee called them ad Apoſtolatum; He taught them, before they taught others. As S. Paul ſayes 2 Cor. 3.6. of himſelfe, and the reſt, God hath made us able Miniſters of the New Teſtament; Idoneos, fit Miniſters, that is, fit for that ſervice. There is a fitneſſe founded in Diſcretion; a Diſcretion to make our preſent ſervice acceptable to our preſent Auditory; for if it be not acceptable, agreeable to them, it is never profitable.

Wiſd. 16.20. As God gave his children ſuch Manna as was agreeable to every mans taſte, and taſted to every man like that, that that man liked beſt: ſo are wee to deliver the bread of life agreeable to every taſte, to fit our Doctrine to the apprehenſion, and capacity, and digeſtion

A digeſtion of the hearers. For as S. Auguſtine ſayes, That no man profits by a Sermon that he heares with paine, if he doe not ſtand eaſily; ſo if he doe not underſtand eaſily, or if he doe not aſſent eaſily to that that he heares, if he be put to ſtudy one ſentence, till the Preacher have paſſed three or foure more, or if the doctrine be new and doubtfull, and ſuſpitious to him, this fitneſſe which is grounded in diſcretion is not ſhewed. But the generall fitneſſe is grounded in learning, S. Paul hath joyned them ſafely together, Rebuke and exhort with all long ſuffering, and learning. Shew thy diſcretion in ſeaſonable Rebuking; ſhew thy learning in Exhorting. Let the Congregation ſee that thou ſtudieſt the good of their ſoules, and they will digeſt any wholeſome increpation, any medicinall reprehenſion at thy hands, Dilige & dic quod voles. We ſay ſo firſt to God, Lord let thy ſpirit beare witneſſe with my ſpirit, that thou loveſt me, and I can endure all thy Prophets, and all the væ's, and the woes that they thunder againſt me and my ſin. So alſo
B the Congregation ſayes to the Miniſter, Dilige & dic quod voles, ſhew thy love to me, in ſtudying my caſe, and applying thy knowledge to my conſcience, ſpeake ſo, as God and I may know thou meaneſt me, but not the Congregation, leſt that bring me to a confuſion of face, and that to a hardneſſe of heart; deale thus with me, love me thus, and ſay what thou wilt; nothing ſhall offend me. And this is the Idoneity, the fitneſſe which we conſider in the Miniſter, fitneſſe in learning, fitneſſe in diſcretion, to uſe and apply that learning. So Chriſt fits his.

2 Tim. 4. 2.

Auguſt.

Such men then Chriſt takes for the ſervice of his Church; ſuch as bring no confidence in their owne fitneſſe, ſuch as embrace the meanes to make them fit in his Schoole, and learne before they teach. And to that purpoſe he tooke Andrew and Peter; and he tooke them, when he found them caſting their net into the Sea. This was a Symbolicall, a Propheticall action of their future life; This fiſhing was a type, a figure, a propheſie of their
C other fiſhing. But here (in this firſt part) we are bound to the conſideration of their reall and direct action, and exerciſe of their preſent calling; They caſt their Net, for they were Fiſhers, ſayes the Text. In which, for, (as wee told you at firſt) there is a double reaſon involved.

Mittebant rete in Mare.

First, in this For is intimated, how acceptable to God that labour is, that is taken in a calling. They did not forbeare to caſt their nets becauſe it was a tempeſtuous Sea; we muſt make account to meet ſtormes in our profeſſion, yea and tentations too. A man muſt not leave his calling, becauſe it is hard for him to be an honeſt man in that calling; but he muſt labour to overcome thoſe difficulties, and as much as he can, vindicate and redeeme that calling from thoſe aſperſions and calumnies, which ill men have caſt upon a good calling. They did not forbeare becauſe it was a tempeſtuous Sea, nor becauſe they had caſt their nets often and caught nothing, nor becauſe it was uncertaine how the Mar-
D ket would goe when they had catched. A man muſt not be an ill Prophet upon his own labours, nor bewitch them with a ſuſpition that they will not proſper. It is the ſlothfull man that ſayes, A Lion in the way, A Lion in the ſtreet. Caſt thou thy net into the Sea, and God ſhall drive fiſh into thy net; undertake a lawfull Calling, and clogge not thy calling with murmuring, nor with an ill conſcience, and God ſhall give thee increaſe, and worſhip in it, They caſt their nets into the Sea, for they were fiſhers; it was their Calling, and they were bound to labour in that.

1. Quia piſcatores.

Prov. 26. 13.

And then this For hath another aſpect, lookes another way too, and implies another Inſtruction, They caſt their nets into the Sea, for they were fiſhers, that is, if they had not beene fiſhers, they would not have done it; Intruſion into other mens callings is an unjuſt uſurpation; and, if it take away their profit, it is a theft. If it be but a cenſuring of them in their calling, yet it is a calumny, becauſe it is not in the right way, if it be extrajudiciall.
E To lay an aſperſion upon any man (who is not under our charge) though that which we ſay of him be true, yet it is a calumny, and a degree of libelling, if it be not done judiciarily, and where it may receive redreſſe and remedy. And yet how forward are men that are not fiſhers in that Sea, to cenſure State Councels, and Judiciary proceedings? Every man is an Abſolom, to ſay to every man, Your cauſe is good, but the King hath appointed none to heare it; Money brings them in, favour brings them in, it is not the King; or, if it muſt be ſaid to be the King, yet it is the affection of the King and not his judgement, the King miſled, not rightly informed, ſay our ſeditious Abſoloms, and, Oh that I were made Iudge in the land, that every man might come unto me, and I would doe him juſtice, is the charme that Abſolom hath taught every man. They caſt their nets into a deeper Sea then this,

2. Quia piſcatores.

2 Sam. 15. 3.

Ver. 4.

this, and where they are much leſſe fiſhers, into the ſecret Councels of God. It is well provided by your Lawes, that Divines and Eccleſiaſticall perſons may not take farmes, nor buy nor ſell, for returne, in Markets. I would it were as well provided, that buyers and ſellers, and farmers might not be Divines, nor cenſure them. I ſpeake not of cenſuring our lives; pleaſe your ſelves with that, till God bee pleaſed to mend us by that, (though that way of whiſpering calumny be not the right way to that amendment) But I ſpeak of cenſuring our Doctrines, and of appointing our doctrines; when men are weary of hearing any other thing, then Election and Reprobation, and whom, and when, and how, and why God hath choſen, or caſt away. We have liberty enough by your Law, to hold enough for the maintenance of our bodies, and ſtates; you have liberty enough by our Law, to know enough for the ſalvation of your ſoules; If you will ſearch farther into Gods eternall Decrees, and unrevealed Councels, you ſhould not caſt your nets into that Sea, for you are not fiſhers there. Andrew and Peter caſt their nets, for they were fiſhers, (therefore they were bound to do it) And againe, for they were fiſhers, (if they had not been ſo, they would not have done ſo.)

Duo ſimul. Theſe perſons then thus diſpoſed, unfit of themſelves, made fit by him, and found by him at their labour, labour in a lawfull Calling, and in their owne Calling, our Saviour Chriſt cals to him; And he called them by couples, by paires; two together. So he called his Creatures into the world at the firſt Creation, by paires. So he called them into the Arke, for the reparation of the world, by paires, two and two. God loves not ſingularity; The very name of Church implies company; It is Concio, Congregatio, Cœtus; It is a Congregation, a Meeting, an aſſembly; It is not any one man; neither can the Church be preſerved in one man. And therefore it hath beene dangerouſly ſaid, (though they confeſſe it to have beene ſaid by many of their greateſt Divines in the Roman Church) that during the time that our bleſſed Saviour lay dead in the grave, there was no faith left upon the earth, but onely in the Virgin Mary; for then there was no Church. God hath manifeſted his will in two Teſtaments; and though he have abridged and contracted the doctrine of both in a narrow roome, yet he hath digeſted it into two Commandements, Love God, love thy neighbour. There is but one Church; that is true, but one; but that one Church cannot be in any one man; There is but one Baptiſme; that is alſo true, but one; But no man can Baptize himſelfe; there muſt be Sacerdos & competens, (as our old Canons ſpeake) a perſon to receive, and a Prieſt to give Baptiſme. There is but one faith in the remiſſion of ſins; that is true too, but one; But no man can abſolve himſelfe; There muſt be a Prieſt and a penitent. God cals no man ſo, but that he cals him to the knowledge, that he hath called more then him to that Church, or elſe it is an illuſory, and imaginary calling, and a dreame.

Take heed therefore of being ſeduced to that Church that is in one man; In ſcrinio pectoris, where all infallibility, and aſſured reſolution is in the breaſt of one man; who (as their owne Authors ſay) is not bound to aske the counſell of others before, nor to follow their counſell after. And ſince the Church cannot be in one, in an unity, take heed of bringing it too neare that unity, to a paucity, to a few, to a ſeparation, to a Conventicle. The Church loves the name of Catholique, and it is a glorious, and an harmonious name; Love thou thoſe things wherein ſhe is Catholique, and wherein ſhe is harmonious, that is, Quod ubique, quod ſemper, Thoſe univerſall, and fundamentall doctrines, which in all Chriſtian ages, and in all Chriſtian Churches, have beene agreed by all to be neceſſary to ſalvation; and then thou art a true Catholique. Otherwiſe, that is, without relation to this Catholique and univerſall doctrine, to call a particular Church Catholique, (that ſhe ſhould be Catholique, that is, univerſall in dominion, but not in doctrine) is ſuch a ſoleciſme, as to ſpeak of a white blackneſſe, or a great littleneſſe; A particular Church to be univerſall, implies ſuch a contradiction.

Lyrinen.

Duo fratres. Chriſt loves not ſingularity; he called not one alone; He loves not ſchiſme neither between them whom he cals; & therfore he cals perſons likely to agree, two brethren, (He ſaw two brethren, Peter and Andrew, &c. So he began to build the Synagogues, to eſtabliſh that firſt government, in Moſes and Aaron, brethren; So he begins to build the Church, in Peter and Andrew, brethren. The principall fraternity and brotherhood that God reſpects, is ſpirituall; Brethren in the profeſſion of the ſame true Religion. But Peter and Andrew whom he called here to the true Religion, and ſo gave them that ſecond fraternity and brotherhood, which is ſpirituall, were naturall brethren before; And that God loves;

A loves; that a naturall, a ſecular, a civill fraternity, and a ſpirituall fraternity ſhould be joyned together; when thoſe that profeſſe the ſame Religion, ſhould deſire to contract their alliances, in marrying their Children, and to have their other dealings in the world (as much as they can) with men that profeſſe the ſame true Religion that they do. That ſo (not medling nor diſputing the proceedings of States, who, in ſome caſes, go by other rules then private men do) we doe not make it an equall, an indifferent thing, whether we marry our ſelves, or our children, or make our bargaines, or our converſation, with perſons of a different Religion, when as our Adverſaries amongſt us will not goe to a Lawyer, nor call a Phyſitian, no, nor ſcarce a Taylor, or other Tradeſman of another Religion then their owne, if they can poſſibly avoid it. God ſaw a better likelihood of avoyding Schiſme and diſſention, when thoſe whom hee called to a new ſpirituall brotherhood in one Religion, were naturall brothers too, and tied in civill bands, as well
B as ſpirituall.

And as Chriſt began, ſo he proceeded; for the perſons whom he called were Catechiſticall, inſtructive perſons; perſons, from whoſe very perſons we receive inſtruction. The next whom he called, (which is in the next verſe) were two too; and brethren too; Iohn and Iames; but yet his owne kinſmen in the fleſh. But, as he choſe two together to avoid ſingularity, and two brethren to avoid Schiſme, ſo he preferred two ſtrangers before his own kindred, to avoid partiality, and reſpect of perſons. Certainly every man is bound to do good to thoſe that are neare him by nature; The obligation of doing good to others lies (for the moſt part) thus; Let us do good to all men, but eſpecially unto them which are of the houſhold of the faithfull; (They of our owne Religion are of the Quorum) Now, when all are ſo, (of the houſhold of the faithfull, of our owne Religion) the obligation looks home, and lies thus, He that provideth not for his own, denieth the faith, and is worſe then
C an Infidel. Chriſt would therefore leave no example, nor juſtification of that perverſe diſtemper, to leave his kindred out, nor of their diſpoſition, who had rather buy new friends at any rate, then relieve or cheriſh the old. But yet when Chriſt knew how far his ſtock would reach, that no liberality, howſoever placed, could exhauſt that, but that he was able to provide for all, he would leave no example nor juſtification of that perverſe diſtemper, to heape up preferments upon our owne kindred, without any conſideration how Gods glory might be more advanced by doing good to others too; But finding in theſe men a fit diſpoſition to be good labourers in his harveſt, and to agree in the ſervice of the Church, as they did in the band of nature, he calls Peter and Andrew, otherwiſe ſtrangers, before he called his Coſins, Iames and Iohn.

Non cognati.

Gal. 6. 10.

1 Tim. 5. 8.

Theſe Circumſtances we propoſed to be conſidered in theſe perſons before, and at their being called. The firſt, after their calling, is their chearfull readineſſe in obeying,
D Continuò ſequuti, They were bid follow, and forthwith they followed. Which preſent obedience of theirs is exalted in this, that this was freſhly upon the impriſonment of Iohn Baptiſt, whoſe Diſciple Andrew had been; And it might eaſily have deterred, and averted a man in his caſe, to conſider, that it was well for him that he was got out of Iohn Baptiſts ſchoole, and company, before that ſtorme, the diſpleaſure of the ſtate fell upon him; and that it behoved him to be wary to apply himſelfe to any ſuch new Maſter, as might draw him into as much trouble; which Chriſts ſervice was very like to doe. But the contemplation of future perſecutions, that may fall, the example of perſecutions paſt, that have falne, the apprehenſion of imminent perſecutions, that are now falling, the ſenſe of preſent perſecutions, that are now upon us, retard not thoſe, upon whom the love of Chriſt Jeſus works effectually; They followed for all that. And they followed, when there was no more perſwaſion uſed to them, no more words ſaid to them, but E Sequere me, Follow me.

Continuò ſequuti.

And therefore how eaſie ſoever Iulian the Apoſtate might make it, for Chriſt to work upon ſo weake men, as theſe were, yet to worke upon any men by ſo weake means, onely by one Sequere me, Follow me, and no more, cannot be thought eaſie. The way of Rhetorique in working upon weake men, is firſt to trouble the underſtanding, to diſplace, and diſcompoſe, and diſorder the judgement, to ſmother and bury in it, or to empty it of former apprehenſions and opinions, and to ſhake that beliefe, with which it had poſſeſſed it ſelf before, and then when it is thus melted, to powre it into new molds, when it is thus mollified, to ſtamp and imprint new formes, new images, new opinions in it. But here in our caſe, there was none of this fire, none of this practiſe, none of this battery of eloquence, none of this verball violence, onely a bare Sequere me, Follow me, and they followed. No eloquence enclined them, no terrors declined them: No dangers withdrew them, no preferment drew them; they knew Christ, and his kindred, and his means; they loved him, himselfe, and not any thing they expected from him. Minùs te amat, qui aliquid tuum amat, quod non propter te amat, That man loves thee but a little, that begins his love at that which thou hast, and not at thy selfe. It is a weake love that is divided between Christ and the world; especially, if God come after the world, as many times he does, even in them, who thinke they love him well; that first they love the riches of this world, and then they love God that gave them. But that is a false Method in this art of love; The true is, radically to love God for himselfe, and other things for his sake, so far, as he may receive glory in our having, and using them.

Augusti.

Relictis retibus.

This Peter and Andrew declared abundantly; they did as much as they were bid; they were bid follow, and they followed; but it seemes they did more, they were not bid leave their nets, and yet they left their nets, and followed him: But, for this, they did not; no man can doe more in the service of God, then is enjoyned him, commanded him. There is no supererogation, no making of God beholden to us, no bringing of God into our debt. Every man is commanded to love God with all his heart, and all his power, and a heart above a whole heart, and a power above a whole power, is a strange extension. That therefore which was declared explicitely, plainly, directly by Christ, to the young man in the Gospel, Vade, & vende, & sequere, Goe and sell all, and follow me, was implicitely implied to these men in our text, Leave your nets, and follow me. And, though to doe so, (to leave all) be not alwayes a precept, a commandment to all men, yet it was a precept, a commandment to both these, at that time; to the young man in the Gospel, (for he was as expresly bid to sell away all, as he was to follow Christ) and to these men in the text, because they could not performe that that was directly commanded, except they performed that which was implied too; except they left their nets, they could not follow Christ. When God commands us to follow him, he gives us light, how, and in which way he will be followed; And then when we understand which is his way, that way is as much a commandment, as the very end it selfe, and not to follow him that way, is as much a transgression, as not to follow him at all. If that young man in the Gospel, who was bid sell all, and give to the poore, and then follow, had followed, but kept his interest in his land; If he had devested himselfe of the land, but let it fall, or conveyed it to the next heire, or other kinsmen; If he had employed it to pious uses, but not so, as Christ commanded, to the poore, still he had been in a transgression: The way when it is declared, is as much a command, as the end.

Mat. 19. 21.

But then, in this command, which was implicitely, and by necessary consequence laid upon Peter and Andrew, to leave their nets, (because without doing so, they could not forthwith follow Christ) there is no example of forsaking a calling, upon pretence of following Christ; no example here, of devesting ones selfe of all means of defending us from those manifold necessities, which this life lays upon us, upon pretence of following Christ; It is not an absolute leaving of all worldly cares, but a leaving them out of the first consideration; Primùm quærite regnum Dei, so, as our first businesse be to seeke the kingdome of God. For, after this leaving of his nets, for this time, Peter continued owner of his house, and Christ came to that house of his, and found his mother in law sicke in that house, and recovered her there. Upon a like commandment, upon such a Sequere, Follow me, Matthew followed Christ too; but after that following, Christ went with Matthew to his house, and sate at meat with him at home. And for this very exercise of fishing, though at that time when Christ said, Follow me, they left their nets, yet they returned to that trade, sometimes, upon occasions, in all likelihood, in Christs life; and after Christs death, clearly they did returne to it; for Christ, after his Resurrection, found them fishing.

Mat. 8. 14.

Mat. 9. 10.

Joh. 21. 1.

They did not therefore abandon and leave all care, and all government of their own estate, and dispose themselves to live after upon the sweat of others; but transported with a holy alacrity, in this present and chearfull following of Christ, in respect of that then, they neglected their nets, and all things else. Perfecta obedientia est sua imperfecta relinquere, Not to be too diligent towards the world, is the diligence that God requires. S. Augustine does not say, sua relinquere, but sua imperfecta relinquere, That God requires we should leave the world, but that we should leave it to second considerations;

Augusti.

That

A That thou do not forbeare, nor defer thy converſion to God, and thy reſtitution to man, till thou have purchaſed ſuch a ſtate, bought ſuch an office, married, and provided ſuch and ſuch children, but imperfecta relinquere, to leave theſe worldly things unperfected, till thy repentance have reſtored thee to God, and eſtabliſhed thy reconciliation in him, and then the world lyes open to thy honeſt endeavours. Others take up all with their net, and they ſacrifice to their nets, becauſe by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous. They are confident in their own learning, their own wiſedome, their own practiſe, and (which is a ſtrange Idolatry) they ſacrifice to themſelves, they attribute all to their own induſtry. Theſe men in our text were fat from that; they left their nets. Hab. 1. 16.

But ſtill conſider, that they did but leave their nets, they did not burne them. And conſider too, that they left but nets; thoſe things, which might entangle them, and retard them in their following of Chriſt. And ſuch nets, (ſome ſuch things as might hin-
B der them in the ſervice of God) even theſe men, ſo well diſpoſed to follow Chriſt, had about them. And therefore let no man ſay, Imitari vellem, ſed quod relinquam, non habeo, I would gladly doe as the Apoſtles did, leave all to follow Chriſt, but I have nothing to leave; alas, all things have left me, and I have nothing to leave. Even that murmuring at poverty, is a net, leave that. Leave thy ſuperfluous deſire of having the riches of this world; though thou mayeſt flatter thy ſelfe, that thou deſireſt to have onely that thou mighteſt leave it, that thou mighteſt employ it charitably, yet it might prove a net, and ſtick too cloſe about thee to part with it. Multa relinquitis, ſi deſideriis renunciatis, You leave your nets, if you leave your over-earneſt greedineſſe of catching; for, when you doe ſo, you doe not onely fiſh with a net, (that is, lay hold upon all you can compaſſe) but, (which is ſtrange) you fiſh for a net, even that which you get proves a net to you, and hinders you in the following of Chriſt, and you are leſſe diſpoſed to follow
C him, when you have got your ends, then before. He that hath leaſt, hath enough to waigh him down from heaven, by an inordinate love of that little which he hath, or in an inordinate and murmuring deſire of more. And he that hath moſt, hath not too much to give for heaven; Tantum valet regnum Dei, quantum tu vales, Heaven is alwayes ſo much worth, as thou art worth. A poore man may have heaven for a penny, that hath no greater ſtore; and, God lookes, that he to whom he hath given thouſands, ſhould lay out thouſands upon the purchaſe of heaven. The market changes, as the plenty of money changes; Heaven coſts a rich man more then a poore, becauſe he hath more to give. But in this, rich and poore are both equall, that both muſt leave themſelves without nets, that is, without thoſe things, which, in their own Conſciences they know, retard the following of Chriſt. Whatſoever hinders my preſent following, that I cannot follow to day, whatſoever may hinder my conſtant following, that I cannot follow to D morrow, and all my life, is a net, and I am bound to leave that. Gregor. Idem. Idem.

And theſe are the pieces that conſtitute our firſt part, the circumſtances that inveſt theſe perſons, Peter, and Andrew, in their former condition, before, and when Chriſt called them.

SERM.

SERM. LXXII.

MAT. 4. 18, 19, 20.

And Iesus walking by the Sea of Galile saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the Sea, (for they were fishers.) And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men; And they straightway left their nets, and followed him.

WE are now in our Order proposed at first, come to our second part, from the consideration of these persons, Peter and Andrew, in their former state and condition, before, and at their calling, to their future estate in promise, but an infallible promise, Christs promise, if they followed him, (Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.) In which part we shall best come to our end, (which is your edification) by these steps. First, that there is an Humility enjoyned them, in the Sequere, follow, come after. That though they bee brought to a high Calling, that doe not make them proud, nor tyrannous over mens consciences; And then, even this Humility is limited, Sequere me, follow me; for there may be a pride even in Humility, and a man may follow a dangerous guide; Our guide here is Christ, Sequere me, follow me. And then we shall see the promise it selfe, the employment, the function, the preferment; In which there is no new state promised them, no Innovation, (They were fishers, and they shall be fishers still) but there is an emprovement, a bettering, a reformation, (They were fisher-men before, and now they shall bee fishers of men;) To which purpose, wee shall finde the world to be the Sea, and the Gospel their Net. And lastly, all this is presented to them, not as it was expressed in the former part, with a For, (it is not, Follow me, for I will prefer you) he will not have that the reason of their following; But yet it is, Follow me, and I will prefer you; It is a subsequent addition of his owne goodnesse, but so infallible a one, as we may rely upon; Whosoever doth follow Christ, speeds well. And into these considerations will fall all that belongs to this last part, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

Sequere. Humilitas.

First then, here is an impression of Humility, in following, in comming after, Sequere, follow, presse not to come before; And it had need be first, if we consider how early, how primarie a sinne Pride is, and how soone it possesses us. Scarce any man, but if he looke back seriously into himselfe, and into his former life, and revolve his owne history, but that the first act which he can remember in himselfe, or can be remembred of by others, will bee some act of Pride. Before Ambition, or Covetousnesse, or Licentiousnesse is awake in us, Pride is working; Though but a childish pride, yet pride; and this Parents rejoyce at in their children, and call it spirit, and so it is, but not the best. Wee enlarge not therefore the consideration of this word Sequere, follow, come after, so farre, as to put our meditations upon the whole body, and the severall members of this sinne of pride; Nor upon the extent and diffusivenesse of this sinne, as it spreads it selfe over every other sinne; (for every sinne is complicated with pride, so as every sinne is a rebellious opposing of the law and will of God) Nor to consider the waighty hainousnes of pride, how it aggravates every other sin, how it makes a musket a Canon bullet, and a peble a Milstone; but after we have stopped a little upon that usefull consideration, That there is not so direct, and Diametrall a contrariety between the nature of any sinne and God, as between him and pride, wee shall passe to that which is our principall observation in this branch, How early and primary a sin pride is, occasioned by this, that the commandement of Humility is first given, first enjoyned in our first word, Sequere, follow.

Nihil tam contrarium Deo.

But first, wee exalt that consideration, That nothing is so contrary to God, as Pride, with this observation, That God in the Scriptures is often by the Holy Ghost invested, and represented in the qualities and affections of man; and to constitute a commerce and familiarity between God and man, God is not onely said to have bodily lineaments, eyes and

A and eares, and hands, and feet, and to have ſome of the naturall affections of man, as Joy, in particular, (The Lord will rejoyce over thee for good, as he rejoyced over thy Fathers) And ſo, pity too, (The Lord was with Ioſeph, and extended kindneſſe unto him) But ſome of thoſe inordinate and irregular paſſions and perturbations, exceſſes and defects of man, are imputed to God, by the Holy Ghoſt in the Scriptures. For ſo, lazineſſe, drowſineſſe is imputed to God; (Awake Lord, why ſleepeſt thou?) So corruptibleneſſe, and deterioration, and growing worſe by ill company, is imputed to God; (Cum perverſo perverteris, God is ſaid to grow froward with the froward, and that hee learnes to go crookedly with them that go crookedly) And prodigality and waſtfulneſſe is imputed to God; (Thou ſelleſt thy people for naught, and doeſt not increaſe thy wealth by their price) So ſudden and haſty choler; (Kiſſe the Son leſt he be angry, and ye periſh In ira brevi, though his wrath be kindled but a little) And then, illimited and boundleſſe anger, a vindicative irreconcill-

B ableneſſe is imputed to God; (I was but a little diſpleaſed, (but it is otherwiſe now) I am very ſore diſpleaſed) So there is Ira devorans; (Wrath that conſumes like ſtubble) So there is Ira multiplicata, (Plagues renewed, and indignation increaſed) So God himſelfe expreſſes it, (I will fight againſt you in anger and in fury) And ſo for his inexorableneſſe, his irreconciliableneſſe, (O Lord God of Hoſts, Quouſque, how long wilt thou be angry againſt the prayer of thy people?) Gods owne people, Gods own people praying to their owne God, and yet their God irreconciliable to them. Scorne and contempt is imputed to God; which is one of the moſt enormious, and diſproportioned weakeneſſes in man; that a worme that crawles in the duſt, that a graine of duſt, that is hurried with every blaſt of winde, ſhould find any thing ſo much inferiour to it ſelfe as to ſcorne it, to deride it, to contemne it; yet ſcorne, and deriſion, and contempt is imputed to God, (He that ſitteth in the Heavens ſhall laugh, the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion) and againe, (I will laugh at your calamity,

C I will mock you when your feare commeth.) Nay beloved, even inebriation, exceſſe in that kinde, Drunkenneſſe, is a Metaphor which the Holy Ghoſt hath mingled in the expreſſing of Gods proceedings with man; for God does not onely threaten to make his enemies drunke, (and to make others drunke is a circumſtance of drunkenneſſe) (ſo Jeruſalem being in his diſpleaſure complaines, Inebriavit abſynthio, (He hath made me drunke with wormewood) and againe, (They ſhall be drunke with their owne blood, as with new Wine) Nor onely to expreſſe his plentifull mercies to his friends and ſervants, does God take that Metaphore, (Inebriabo animam Sacerdotis, I will make the ſoule of the Prieſt drunke; fill it, ſatiate it) and againe, (I will make the weary ſoule, and the ſorrowfull ſoule drunke) But not onely all this, (though in all this God have a hand) not onely towards others, but God in his owne behalfe complaines of the ſcant and penurious Sacrificer, Non inebriaſti me, Thou haſt not made me drunke with thy Sacrifices. And yet, though for the better applying

D of God to the underſtanding of man, the Holy Ghoſt impute to God theſe exceſſes, and defects of man (lazineſſe and drowſineſs, deterioration, corruptibleneſſe by ill converſation, prodigality and waſtfulneſſe, ſudden choler, long irreconcibleneſſe, ſcorne, inebriation, and many others) in the Scriptures, yet in no place of the Scripture is God, for any reſpect ſaid to be proud; God in the Scriptures is never made ſo like man, as to be made capable of Pride; for this had not beene to have God like man, but like the devill.

God is ſaid in the Scriptures to apparell himſelf gloriouſly; (God covers him with light as with a garment) And ſo of his Spouſe the Church it is ſaid, (Her cloathing is of wrought gold, and her raiment of needle worke) and, as though nothing in this world were good enough for her wearing, ſhe is ſaid to be cloathed with the Sun. But glorious apparell is not pride in them, whoſe conditions require it, and whoſe revenews will beare it. God is ſaid in the Scriptures to appeare with greatneſſe and majeſty, (A ſtreame of fire came E forth before him; thouſand thouſands miniſtred unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him.) And ſo Chriſt ſhall come at Judgement, with his Hoſts of Angels, in majeſty, and in glory. But theſe outward appearances and acts of greatneſſe are not pride in thoſe perſons, to whom there is a reverence due, which reverence is preſerved by this outward ſplendor, and not otherwiſe. God is ſaid in the Scriptures to triumph over his enemies, and to be jealous of his glory; (The Lord, whoſe name is Iealous, is a jealous God) But, for Princes to be jealous of their glory, ſtudious of their honour, for any private man to be jealous of his good name, carefull to preſerve an honeſt reputation, is not pride. For, Pride is Appetitus celſitudinis perverſus, It is an inordinate deſire of being better then we are.

Deut. 30. 9. Gen. 39. 21. Pſal. 44. 23. 18. 26. 44. 12. 2. 12. Zech. 1. 15. Exod. 15. 4. Iob 10. 17. Ier. 21. 5. Pſal. 80. 4. Pſal. 2. 4. Prov. 1. 26. Lam. 3. 15. Eſay 49. 26. Ier. 31. 14. Ver. 25. Eſay 43. 24. Pſal. 104. 2. 45. 13. Rev. 12. 1. Dan. 7. 10. Exod. 34. 14.

Now

Now there is a lawfull, nay a neceſſary deſire of being better and better; And that, not onely in ſpirituall things, (for ſo every man is bound to be better and better, better to day then yeſterday, and to morrow then to day, and he that growes not in Religion, withers, There is no ſtanding at a ſtay, He that goes not forward in godlineſſe, goes backward, and he that is not better, is worſe) but even in temporall things too there is a liberty given us, nay there is a law, an obligation laid upon us, to endeavour by induſtry in a lawfull calling, to mend and improve, to enlarge our ſelves, and ſpread, even in worldly things. The firſt Commandement that God gave man, was not prohibitive; Gen. 1. 28. God, in that, forbad man nothing, but enlarged him with that Creſcite, & multiplicamini, Increaſe and multiply, which is not onely in the multiplication of children; but in the enlargement of poſſeſſions too; for ſo it followes in the ſame place, not onely Replete, but Dominamini, not onely repleniſh the world, but ſubdue it, and take dominion over it, that is, make it your owne. For, Terram dedit filiis hominum, As God hath given ſons to men, ſo God gives the poſſeſſion of this world to the ſons of men. For ſo when God delivers that commandement, the ſecond time, to Noah, for the reparation of the world, Creſcite & multiplicamini, Increaſe and multiply, he accompanies it with that reaſon, Gen. 9. 1. The feare of you, and the dread of you ſhall be upon all, and all are delivered into your hands; which reaſon can have no relation to the multiplying of Children, but to the enlarging of poſſeſſions. God planted trees in Paradiſe in a good ſtate at firſt; at firſt with ripe fruits upon them; but Gods purpoſe was, that even thoſe trees, though well then, ſhould grow greater. God gives many men good eſtates from their parents at firſt; yet Gods purpoſe is that they ſhould increaſe thoſe eſtates. He that leaves no more, then his father left him, (if the fault be in himſelfe) ſhall hardly make a good account of his ſtewardſhip to God; for, he hath but kept his talent in a handkercheif. And the ſlothfull man is even brother to the waſter. Mat. 18. 25. Prov. 18. 9. The holy Ghoſt in Solomon, ſcarce prefers him that does not get more, before him that waſts all. He makes them brethren; almoſt all one. Curſed be he that does the worke of God negligently; Ier. 48. 10. that does any Commandement of God by halves; And this negligent and lazy man, this in-induſtrious and illaborious man that takes no paines, he does one part of Gods Commandement, He does multiply, but he does not the other, he does not increaſe; He leaves Children enow, but he leaves them nothing; not in poſſeſſions and maintenance, nor in vocation and calling.

And truly, howſoever the love of money be the roote of all evill, (He cannot miſtake that told us ſo) Howſoever they that will be rich (that reſolve to be rich by any meanes) ſhall fall into many tentations, Howſoever a haſty deſire of being ſuddenly and prematurely rich, be a dangerous and an obnoxious thing, a peſtilent and contagious diſeaſe, (for what a perverſe and inordinate anticipation and prevention of God and nature is it, to looke for our harveſt in May, or to looke for all grains at once? and ſuch a perverſneſſe is the haſty deſire of being ſuddenly and prematurely rich, yet, to go on induſtriouſly in an honeſt calling, and giving God his leaſure, and giving God his portion all the way, in Tithes, and in Almes, and then, ſtill to lay up ſomething for poſterity, is that, which God does not onely permit and accept from us, but command to us, and reward in us. And certainly, that man ſhall not ſtand ſo right in Gods eye at the laſt day, that leaves his Children to the Pariſh, as he that leaves the Pariſh to his Children, if he have made his purchaſes out of honeſt gaine, in a lawfull Calling, and not out of oppreſſion.

In all which, I would be rightly underſtood; that is, that I ſpeake of ſuch poverty as is contracted by our owne lazineſſe, or waſtfulneſſe. For otherwiſe, poverty that comes from the hand of God, is as rich a bleſſing as comes from his hand. He that is poore with a good conſcience, that hath laboured and yet not proſpered, knows to whom to go, and what to ſay, Lord, thou haſt put gladneſſe into my heart, more then in the time when corne and wine increaſed; Pſal. 4. 7. (more now, then when I had more) I will lay me downe and ſleepe, for thou Lord onely makeſt me to dwell in ſafety. Does every rich man dwell in ſafety? Can every rich man lye downe in peace and ſleepe? no, nor every poore man neither; but he that is poore with a good conſcience, can. And, though he that is rich with a good conſcience may, in a good meaſure, do ſo too, (ſleepe in peace) yet not ſo out of the ſpheare and latitude of envy, and free from the machinations, and ſupplantations, and underminings of malicious men, that feed upon the confiſcations, and build upon the ruines of others, as the poore man is.

Though then S. Chryſoſtome call riches Abſurditatis parentes, the parents of abſurdities,

That

A That they make us doe, not onely ungodly, but inhumane things, not onely irreligious, but unreasonable things, uncomely and absurd things, things which we our selves did not suspect that we could be drawne to, yet there is a growing rich, which is not covetousnesse, and there is a desire of honor and preferment, which is not Pride. For, Pride is, (as we said before) Appetitus perversus, A perverse and inordinate desire, but there is a desire of honor and preferment, regulated by rectified Reason; and rectified Reason is Religion. And therefore, (as we said) how ever other affections of man, may, and are, by the Holy Ghost, in Scriptures, in some respects ascribed to God, yet never Pride. Nay, the Holy Ghost himselfe seemes to be straitned, and in a difficulty, when he comes to expresse Gods proceedings with a proud man, and his detestation of him, and aversion from him. There is a considerable, a remarkable, indeed a singular manner of expressing it, (perchance you finde not the like in all the Bible) where God sayes, Him that hath a Psal. 101. 5.
B high looke, and a proud heart, I will not, (in our last) I cannot, (in our former translation) Not what? Not as it is in those translations, I cannot suffer him, I will not suffer him; for that word of Suffering, is but a voluntary word, supplied by the Translators; In the Originall, it is as it were an abrupt breaking off on Gods part, from the proud man, and, (if we may so speake) a kinde of froward departing from him. God does not say of the proud man, I cannot worke upon him, I cannot mend him, I cannot pardon him, I cannot suffer him, I cannot stay with him, but meerly I cannot, and no more, I cannot tell what to say of him, what to doe for him; (Him that hath a proud heart, I cannot) Pride is so contrary to God, as that the proud man, and he can meet in nothing. And this consideration hath kept us thus long, from that which we made our first and principall collection, That this commandment of Humility, was imprinted in our very first word, Sequere, follow, be content to come after, to denote how early and primary a sin Pride is,
C and how soone it entred into the world, and how soone into us; and that consideration we shall pursue now.

We know that light is Gods eldest childe, his first borne of all Creatures; and it is Superbia in Angelis. ordinarily received, that the Angels are twins with the light, made then when light was made. And then the first act, that these Angels that fell, did, was an act of Pride. They not thanke nor praise God, for their Creation; (which should have been their first act) They did not solicite, nor pray to God for their Sustentation, their Melioration, their Confirmation; (so they should have proceeded) But the first act that those first Creatures did, was an act of pride, a proud reflecting upon themselves, a proud overvaluing of their own condition, and an acquiescence in that, in an imaginary possibility of standing by themselves, without any farther relation, or beholdingnesse to God. So early, so primary a sin is Pride, as that it was the first act of the first of Creatures.

D So early, so primary a sin, as that whereas all Pride now is but a comparative pride, Superbia positiva. this first pride in the Angels was a positive, a radicall pride. The Pharisee is but proud, that he is not as other men are; that is but a comparative pride. No King thinks himselfe Luk. 18. 11. great enough, yet he is proud that he is independant, soveraigne, subject to none. No subject thinks himselfe rich enough, yet he is proud that he is able to oppresse others that are poorer, Et gloriatur in malo, quia potens est, He boasteth himselfe in mischiefe, be- Psal. 52. 1. cause he is a mighty man. But all these are but comparative prides; and there must be some subjects to compare with, before a King can be proud, and some inferiors, before the Magistrate, and some poore, before the rich man can be proud. But this pride in those Angels in heaven, was a positive pride; There were no other Creatures yet made, with whom these Angels could compare themselves, and before whom these Angels could prefer themselves, and yet before there was any other creature but themselves, E any other creature, to undervalue, or insult over, these Angels were proud of themselves. So early, so primary a sin is Pride.

So early, so primary, as that in that ground, which was for goodnesse next to heaven, Superbia in Paradiso. that is, Paradise, Pride grew very early too. Adams first act was not an act of Pride, but an act of lawfull power and jurisdiction, in naming the Creatures; Adam was above them all, and he might have called them what he would; There had lyen no action, no appeale, if Adam had called a Lyon a Dog, or an Eagle an Owle. And yet we dispute with God, why he should not make all us vessels of honor, and we complaine of God, that he hath not given us all, all the abundances of this world. Comparatively Adam was better then all the world beside, and yet we finde no act of pride in Adam, when he was alone. Solitude is not the ſcene of Pride; The danger of pride is in company, when we meet to looke upon another. But in Adams wife, Eve, her firſt act (that is noted) was an act of Pride, a hearkning to that voyce of the Serpent, Ye ſhall be as Gods. As ſoone as there were two, there was pride. How many may we have knowne, (if we have had any converſation in the world) that have been content all the weeke, at home alone, with their worky day faces, as well as with their worky day clothes, and yet on Sundayes, when they come to Church, and appeare in company, will mend both, their faces as well as their clothes. Not ſolitude, but company is the ſcene of pride; And therefore I know not what to call that practiſe of the Nunnes in Spaine, who though they never ſee man, yet will paint. So early, ſo primary a ſin is Pride, as that it grew inſtantly from her, whom God intended for a Helper, becauſe he ſaw that it was not good for man to be alone. God ſees that it is not good for man to be without health, without wealth, without power, and juriſdiction, and magiſtracy, and we grow proud of our helpers, proud of our health and ſtrength, proud of our wealth and riches, proud of our office and authority over others.

was

Gen. 3. 5.

Gen. 2. 18.

So early, ſo primary a ſin is pride, as that, out of every mercy, and bleſſing, which God affords us, (and, His mercies are new every morning) we gather Pride; wee are not the more thankfull for them, and yet we are the prouder of them. Nay, we gather Pride, not onely out of thoſe things, which mend and improve us, (Gods bleſſings and mercies) but out of thoſe actions of our own, that deſtroy and ruine us, we gather pride; ſins overthrow us, demoliſh us, deſtroy and ruine us, and yet we are proud of our ſinnes. How many men have we heard boaſt of their ſinnes; and, (as S. Auguſtine confeſſes of himſelfe) belie themſelves, and boaſt of more ſinnes then ever they committed? Out of every thing, out of nothing ſin grows. Therefore was this commmandment in our text, Sequere, Follow, come after, well placed firſt, for we are come to ſee even children ſtrive for place and precedency, and mothers are ready to goe to the Heralds to know how Cradles ſhall be ranked, which Cradle ſhall have the higheſt place; Nay, even in the wombe, there was contention for precedency; Iacob tooke hold of his brother Eſaus heele, and would have been borne before him.

Gen. 25. 26.

Superbia in monumentis.

And as our pride begins in our Cradle, it continues in our graves and Monuments. It was a good while in the primitive Church, before any were buried in the Church; The beſt contented themſelves with the Churchyards. After, a holy ambition, (may we call it ſo) a holy Pride brought them ad Limina, to the Church-threſhold, to the Church-doore, becauſe ſome great Martyrs were buried in the Porches, and devout men deſired to lie neare them, as one Prophet did to lie neare another, (Lay my bones beſides his bones.) But now, perſons whom the Devill kept from Church all their lives, Separatiſts, Libertines, that never came to any Church, And perſons, whom the Devill brought to Church all their lives, (for, ſuch as come meerly out of the obligation of the Law, and to redeem that vexation, or out of cuſtome, or company, or curioſity, or a perverſe and ſiniſter affection to the particular Preacher, though they come to Gods houſe, come upon the Devils invitation) Such as one Devill, that is, worldly reſpect, brought to Church in their lives, another Devill, that is, Pride and vain-glory, brings to Church after their deaths, in an affectation of high places, and ſumptuous Monuments in the Church. And ſuch as have given nothing at all to any pious uſes, or have determined their almes and their dole which they have given, in that one day of their funerall, and no farther, have given large annuities, perpetuities, for new painting their tombes, and for new flags, and ſcutcheons, every certaine number of yeares.

1 King. 13. 31.

O the earlineſſe! O the lateneſſe! how early a Spring, and no Autumne! how faſt a growth, and no declination, of this branch of this ſin Pride, againſt which, this firſt word of ours, Sequere, Follow, come after, is oppoſed! this love of place, and precedency, it rocks us in our Cradles, it lies down with us in our graves. There are diſeaſes proper to certaine things, Rots to ſheepe, Murrain to cattell. There are diſeaſes proper to certaine places, as the Sweat was to us. There are diſeaſes proper to certaine times, as the plague is in divers parts of the Eaſtern Countryes, where they know aſſuredly, when it will begin and end. But for this infectious diſeaſe of precedency, and love of place, it is run over all places, as well Cloyſters as Courts, And over all men, as well ſpirituall as temporall, And over all times, as well the Apoſtles as ours. The Apoſtles diſputed often, who ſhould be greateſt, and it was not enough to them, that Chriſt aſſured them, that they ſhould

Mar. 19. 28.

A ſhould ſit upon the twelve thrones, and judge the twelve Tribes; it was not enough for the ſonnes of Zebedee, to be put into that Commiſſion, but their friends muſt ſolicite the office, to place them high in that Commiſſion; their Mother muſt move, that one may ſit at Chriſts right hand, and the other at his left, in the execution of that Commiſſion. Becauſe this ſin of pride is ſo early and primary a ſin, is this Commandment of Humility firſt enjoyned, and becauſe this ſin appeares moſt generally in this love of place, and precedency, the Commandment is expreſſed in that word, Sequere, Follow, Come after. But then, even this Humility is limited, for it is Sequere me, follow me, which was propoſed for our ſecond Conſideration, Sequere me. Matt. 19. 28.

There may be a pride in Humility, and an over-weaning of our ſelves, in attributing too much to our owne judgement, in following ſome leaders; for ſo, we may be ſo humble as to goe after ſome man, and yet ſo proud, as to goe before the Church, becauſe B that man may be a Schiſmatike. Therefore Chriſt propoſes a ſafe guide, himſelf, Sequere me, follow me. It is a dangerous thing, when Chriſt ſayes, Vade poſt me, Get thee behind me; for that is accompanied with a ſhrewd name of increpation, Satan, Get thee behind me Satan; Chriſt ſpeaks it but twice in the Goſpell; once to Peter, who becauſe he then did the part of an Adverſary, Chriſt calls Satan, and once to Satan himſelfe, becauſe he purſued his tentations upon him; for there is a going behind Chriſt, which is a caſting out of his preſence, without any future following, and that is a fearefull ſtation, a fearefull retrogradation; But when Chriſts ſayes, not Vade retro, Get thee behind me, ſee my face no more, but Sequere me, follow me, he meanes to look back upon us; ſo the Lord turned and looked upon Peter, and Peter wept bitterly, and all was well; when hee bids us follow him, he directs us in a good way, and by a good guide. Sequere me. Matt. 16. 23. 4. 10. Luk. 22. 63.

The Carthuſian Friers thought they deſcended into as low paſtures as they could goe, C when they renounced all fleſh, and bound themſelves to feed on fiſh onely; and yet another Order followes them in their ſuperſtitious ſingularity, and goes beyond them, Foliantes, the Fueillans, they eat neither fleſh, nor fiſh, nothing but leafes, and rootes; and as the Carthuſians in a proud humility, deſpiſe all other Orders that eat fleſh, ſo doe the Fueillans the Carthuſians that eat fiſh. There is a pride in ſuch humility. That Order of Friers that called themſelves Ignorantes, Ignorant men, that pretended to know nothing, ſunk as low as they thought it poſſible, into an humble name and appellation; And yet the Minorits, (Minorits that are leſſe then any) think they are gone lower, and then the Minimes, (Minimes that are leſſe then all) lower then they. And when one would have thought, that there had not been a lower ſtep then that, another Sect went beyond all, beyond the Ignorants, and the Minorits, and the Minimes, and all, and called themſelves, Nullanos, Nothings. But yet, even theſe Diminutives, the Minorits, and Mini- D mes, and Nullans, as little, as leſſe, as leaſt, as very nothing as they profeſſe themſelves, lie under this diſeaſe, which is oppoſed in the Sequere me, follow, come after, in our Text; For no ſort nor condition of men in the world are more contentious, more quarrelſome, more vehement for place, and precedency, then theſe Orders of Friers are, there, where it may appeare, that is, in their publique Proceſſions, as we finde by thoſe often troubles, which the Superiours of the ſeverall Orders, and Biſhops in their ſeverall Dioces, and ſome of thoſe Councels, which they call Generall, have been put to, for the ranking, and marſhalling of theſe contentious, and wrangling men. Which makes me remember the words, in which the eighteenth of Queene Elizabeths Injunctions is conceived, That to take away fond Curteſie, (that is, needleſſe Complement) and to take away challenging of places, (which it ſeemes were frequent and troubleſome then) To take away fond curteſie, and challenging of places, Proceſſions themſelves were taken away, becauſe in E thoſe Proceſſions, theſe Orders of Friers, that pretended to follow, and come after all the world, did thus paſſionately, and with ſo much ſcandalous animoſity purſue the love of place, and precedency. Therefore is our humility here limited, Sequere me, follow me, follow Chriſt. How is that done?

Conſider it in Doctrinall things firſt, and then in Morall; Firſt how we are to follow Chriſt in beleeving, and then how in doing, in practiſing. Firſt in Doctrinall things, There muſt have gone ſome body before, elſe it is no following; Take heed therefore of going on with thine owne inventions, thine owne imaginations, for this is no following; Take heed of accompanying the beginners of Hereſies and Schiſmes; for theſe are no followings where none have gone before: Nay, there have not gone enow before, to Sequendus in Doctrina.

make it a path to follow in, except it have had a long continuance, and beene much trodden in. And therfore to follow Christ doctrinally, is to embrace those Doctrins, in which his Church hath walked from the beginning, and not to vexe thy selfe with new points, not necessary to salvation. That is the right way, and then thou art well entred; but that is not all; thou must walke in the right way to the end, that is, to the end of thy life. So that to professe the whole Gospel, and nothing but Gospel for Gospel, and professe this to thy death, for no respect, no dependance upon any great person, to slacken in any fundamentall point of thy Religion, nor to bee shaken with hopes or feares in thine age, when thou wouldst faine live at ease, and therefore thinkest it necessary to do, as thy supporters doe; To persevere to the end in the whole Gospel, this is to follow Christ in Doctrinall things. A

Sequendus in vita.

Iam.5.11. In practicall things, things that belong to action, wee must also follow Christ, in the right way, and to the end. They are both (way and end) laid together, Sufferentiam Iob audiistis, & finem Domini vidistis; You have heard of the patience of Iob, and you have seen the end of the Lord; and you must goe Iobs way to Christs end. Iob hath beaten a path for us, to shew us all the way; A path that affliction walked in, and seemed to delight in it, in bringing the Sabæan upon his Oxen, the Chaldean upon his Camels, the fire upon his Sheep, destruction upon his Servants, and at last, ruine upon his Children. One affliction makes not a path; iterated, continued calamities doe; and such a path Iob hath shewed us, not onely patience, but cheerfulnesse; more, thankfulnesse for our afflictions, because they were multiplied. And then, wee must set before our eyes, as the way of Iob, so the end of the Lord; Now the end of the Lord was the crosse: So that to follow him to the end, is not onely to beare afflictions, though to death, but it is to bring our crosses to the Crosse of Christ. How is that progresse made? (for it is a royall B Matt.16.24. progresse, not a pilgrimage to follow Christ to his Crosse) Our Saviour saith, He that will follow me, let him take up his crosse, and follow me. You see foure stages, foure resting, baiting places in this progresse. It must bee a crosse, And it must be my crosse, And then it must be taken up by me, And with this crosse of mine, thus taken up by me, I must follow Christ, that is, carry my crosse to his. C

Crux.

Gal.6.14. First it must bee a Crosse, Tollat crucem; for every man hath afflictions, but every man hath not crosses. Onely those afflictions are crosses, whereby the world is crucified to us, and we to the world. The afflictions of the wicked exasperate them, enrage them, stone and pave them, obdurate and petrifie them, but they doe not crucifie them. The afflictions of the godly crucifie them. And when I am come to that conformity with my

Col.1.24. Saviour, as to fulfill his sufferings in my flesh, (as I am, when I glorifie him in a Christian constancy and cheerfulnesse in my afflictions) then I am crucified with him, carried up to 2 King.4.34. his Crosse: And as Elisha in raysing the Shunamits dead child, put his mouth upon the childs mouth, his eyes, and his hands, upon the hands, and eyes of the child; so when my crosses have carried mee up to my Saviours Crosse, I put my hands into his hands, and hang upon his nailes, I put mine eyes upon his, and wash off all my former unchast looks, and receive a soveraigne tincture, and a lively verdure, and a new life into my dead teares, from his teares. I put my mouth upon his mouth, and it is I that say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? and it is I that recover againe, and say, Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit. Thus my afflictions are truly a crosse, when those afflictions doe truely crucifie me, and souple me, and mellow me, and knead me, and roll me out, to a conformity with Christ. It must be this Crosse, and then it must be my crosse that I must take up, Tollat suam. D

Crux mea.

Other mens crosses are not my crosses; no man hath suffered more then himselfe needed. That is a poore treasure which they boast of in the Romane Church, that they have in their Exchequer, all the works of supererogation, of the Martyrs in the Primitive Church, that suffered so much more then was necessary for their owne salvation, and those superabundant crosses and merits they can apply to me. If the treasure of the blood of Christ Jesus be not sufficient, Lord what addition can I find, to match them, to piece out them! And if it be sufficient of it selfe, what addition need I seek? Other mens crosses are not mine, other mens merits cannot save me. Nor is any crosse mine owne, which is not mine by a good title; If I be not Possessor bonæ fidei, If I came not well by

1 Cor.4.7. that crosse. And Quid habeo quod non accepi? is a question that reaches even to my crosses; what have I that I have not received? not a crosse; And from whose hands can I receive E

A receive any good thing, but from the hands of God? So that that onely is my crosse, which the hand of God hath laid upon me. Alas, that crosse of present bodily weakneſſe, which the former wantonneſſes of my youth have brought upon me, is not my crosse; That crosse of poverty which the waſtfulneſſe of youth hath brought upon me, is not my crosse; for theſe, weakneſſe upon wantonneſſe, want upon waſtfulneſſe, are Natures crosſes, not Gods, and they would fall naturally, though there were (which is an impoſſible ſuppoſition) no God. Except God therefore take theſe croſſes in the way, as they fall into his hands, and ſanctifie them ſo, and then lay them upon me, they are not my croſſes; but if God doe this, they are. And then this croſſe thus prepared, I muſt take up; Tollat.

Forraine croſſes, other mens merits are not mine; ſpontaneous and voluntary croſſes, contracted by mine owne ſins, are not mine; neither are devious, and remote, and unneceſſary croſſes, my croſſes. Since I am bound to take up my croſſe, there muſt be a croſſe that is mine to take up; that is, a croſſe prepared for me by God, and laid in my way, which is tentations or tribulations in my calling; and I muſt not go out of my way to ſeeke a croſſe; for, ſo it is not mine, nor laid for my taking up. I am not bound to hunt after a perſecution, nor to ſtand it, and not flye, nor to affront a plague, and not remove, nor to open my ſelfe to an injury, and not defend. I am not bound to ſtarve my ſelfe by inordinate faſting, nor to teare my fleſh by inhumane whippings, and flagellations. I am bound to take up my Croſſe; and that is onely mine which the hand of God hath laid for me, that is, in the way of my Calling, tentations and tribulations incident to that. Tollat.

If it be mine, that is, laid for me by the hand of God, and taken up by me, that is, voluntarily embraced, then Sequatur, ſayes Chriſt, I am bound to follow him, with that croſſe, that is, to carry my croſſe to his croſſe. And if at any time I faint under this croſſe in the way, let this comfort me, that even Chriſt himſelfe was eaſed by Simon of Cyrene, in the carrying of his Croſſe; and in all ſuch caſes, I muſt flye to the aſſiſtance of the prayers of the Church, and of good men, that God, ſince it is his burden, will make it lighter, ſince it is his yoake, eaſier, and ſince it is his Croſſe, more ſupportable, and give me the iſſue with the tentation. When all is done, with this croſſe thus laid for me, and taken up by me, I muſt follow Chriſt; Chriſt to his end; his end is his Croſſe; that is, I muſt bring my croſſe to his; lay downe my croſſe at the foote of his; Confeſſe that there is no dignity, no merit in mine, but as it receives an impreſſion, a ſanctification from his. For, if I could dye a thouſand times for Chriſt, this were nothing, if Chriſt had not dyed for me before. And this is truly to follow Chriſt, both in the way, and to the end, as well in doctrinall things as in practicall. And this is all that lay upon theſe two, Peter and Andrew, Follow me. Remaines yet to be conſidered, what they ſhall get by this; which is our laſt Conſideration. Sequatur me. Mat. 27. 32.

They ſhall be fiſhers; and what ſhall they catch? men. They ſhall be fiſhers of men. And then, for that the world muſt be their Sea, and their net muſt be the Goſpel. And here in ſo vaſt a ſea, and with ſo ſmall a net, there was no great appearance of much gaine. And in this function, whatſoever they ſhould catch, they ſhould catch little for themſelves. The Apoſtleſhip, as it was the fruitfulleſt, ſo it was the barrenneſt vocation; They were to catch all the world; there is their fecundity; but the Apoſtles were to have no Succeſſors, as Apoſtles; there is their barrenneſſe. The Apoſtleſhip was not intended for a function to raiſe houſes and families; The function ended in their perſons; after the firſt, there were no more Apoſtles. Piſcatores hominum.

And therefore it is an uſurpation, an impoſture, an illuſion, it is a forgery, when the Biſhop of Rome will proceed by Apoſtolicall authority, and with Apoſtolicall dignity, and Apoſtolicall juriſdiction; If he be S. Peters Succeſſor in the Biſhopricke of Rome, he may proceed with Epiſcopall authority in his Dioces. If he be; for, though we doe not deny that S. Peter was at Rome, and Biſhop of Rome; though we receive it with an hiſtoricall faith, induced by the conſent of Ancient writers, yet when they will conſtitute matter of faith out of matter of fact, and, becauſe S. Peter was (de facto) Biſhop of Rome, therefore we muſt beleeve, as an Article of faith, ſuch an infallibility in that Church, as that no Succeſſor of S. Peters can ever erre, when they ſtretch it to matter of faith, then for matter of faith, we require Scriptures; and then we are confident, and juſtly confident, that though hiſtorically we do beleeve it, yet out of Scriptures (which is a neceſſary proofe in Articles of faith) they can never prove that S. Peter was Biſhop of Rome, or ever at Rome. So then, if the preſent Biſhop of Rome be S. Peters Succeſſor, as Biſhop of Rome, he hath Epiſcopall juriſdiction there; but he is not S. Peters Succeſſor in his Apoſtleſhip; and onely that Apoſtleſhip was a juriſdiction over all the world. But the Apoſtleſhip was an extraordinary office inſtituted by Chriſt, for a certaine time, and to certaine purpoſes, and not to continue in ordinary uſe. As alſo the office of the Prophet was in the Old Teſtament an extraordinary Office, and was not transferred then, nor does not remaine now in the ordinary office of the Miniſter. A

And therefore they argue impertinently, and collect and infer ſometimes ſeditiouſly that ſay, The Prophet proceeded thus and thus, therefore the Miniſter may and muſt proceed ſo too; The Prophets would chide the Kings openly, and threaten the Kings publiquely, and proclaime the fault of the Kings in the eares of the people confidently, authoritatively, therefore the Miniſter may and muſt do ſo. God ſent that particular Prophet Ieremy with that extraordinary Commiſſion, Behold I have this day ſet thee over the Nations, and over the Kingdomes, to roote out, and to pull downe, to deſtroy and throw downe, and then to build, and to plant againe; But God hath given none of us his Miniſters, in our ordinary function, any ſuch Commiſſion over Nations, and over Kingdomes. Even in Ieremies Commiſſion there ſeemes to be a limitation of time; Behold this day I have ſet thee over them, where that addition (this day) is not onely the date of the Commiſſion, that it paſſed Gods hand that day, but (this day) is the terme, the duration of the Commiſſion, that it was to laſt but that day, that is, (as the phraſe of that language is) that time for which it was limited. And therefore, as they argue perverſely, frowardly, dangerouſly that ſay, The Miniſter does not his duty that ſpeakes not as boldly, and as publiquely too, and of Kings, and great perſons, as the Prophets did, becauſe theirs was an Extraordinary, ours an Ordinary office, (and no man will thinke that the Juſtices in their Seſſions, or the Judges in their Circuits may proceed to executions, without due tryall by a courſe of Law, becauſe Marſhals, in time of rebellion and other neceſſities, may doe ſo, becauſe the one hath but an ordinary, the other an extraordinary Commiſſion) So doe they deceive themſelves and others, that pretend in the Biſhop of Rome an Apoſtolicall juriſdiction, a juriſdiction over all the world, whereas howſoever he may be S. Peters Succeſſor, as Biſhop of Rome, yet he is no Succeſſor to S. Peter as an Apoſtle; upon which onely the univerſall power can be grounded, and without which that univerſall power fals to the ground: The Apoſtolicall faith remaines ſpread over all the world, but Apoſtolicall juriſdiction is expired with their perſons.

Ier. 1. 10. B

C

Piſcatores, quia nomen humile.

Theſe twelve Chriſt cals Fiſhers; why fiſhers? becauſe it is a name of labour, of ſervice, and of humiliation; and names that taſt of humiliation, and labour, and ſervice, are moſt properly ours; (fiſhers we may be) names of dignity, and authority, and command are not ſo properly ours, (Apoſtles wee are not in any ſuch ſenſe as they were) Nothing inflames, nor ſwels, nor puffes us up, more then that leaven of the ſoule, that empty, aery, frothy love of Names and Titles. We have knowne men part with ancient lands for new Titles, and with old Mannors for new Honours; and as a man that ſhould beſtow all his money upon a faire purſe, and then have nothing to put into it; ſo whole Eſtates have melted away for Titles and Honours, and nothing left to ſupport them. And how long laſt they? How many winds blaſt them? That name of God, in which, Moſes was ſent to Pharaoh, is by our Tranſlators and Expoſitors ordinarily ſaid to be I Am that I Am, (Go and ſay, I Am hath ſent me, ſayes God there) But in truth, in the Originall, the name is conceived in the future, it is, I ſhall be. Every man is that he is; but onely God is ſure that he ſhall be ſo ſtill. Therefore Chriſt cals them by a name of labour and humiliation. But why by that name of labour and humiliation, Fiſhers? D

Exod. 3. 14.

Piſcatores, quia nomen primitivum.

Becauſe it was Nomen primitivum, their owne, their former name. The Holy Ghoſt purſues his owne way, and does here in Chriſt, as hee does often in other places, he ſpeakes in ſuch formes, and ſuch phraſes, as may moſt worke upon them to whom he ſpeaks. Of David, that was a ſhepheard before, God ſayes, he tooke him to feed his people. To thoſe Magi of the Eaſt, who were given to the ſtudy of the Stars, God gave a Star to be their guide to Chriſt at Bethlem. To thoſe which followed him to Capernaum for meat, Chriſt tooke occaſion by that, to preach to them of the ſpirituall food of their ſouls. To the Samaritan woman, whom he found at the Well, he preached of the water of Life. To theſe men in our Text accuſtomed to a joy and gladneſſe, when they tooke great, or great ſtore of fiſh, he preſents his comforts agreeably to their taſt, They E

Pſal. 78. 70.
Mat. 2. 2.
Iohn 6. 24.
4. 11.

ſhould

A should be fiſhers ſtill. Beloved, Chriſt puts no man out of his way, (for ſinfull courſes are no wayes, but continuall deviations) to goe to heaven. Chriſt makes heaven all things to all men, that he might gaine all: To the mirthfull man he preſents heaven, as all joy, and to the ambitious man, as all glory; To the Merchant it is a Pearle, and to the husbandman it is a rich field. Chriſt hath made heaven all things to all men, that he might gaine all, and he puts no man out of his way to come thither. Theſe men he calls Fiſhers.

He does not call them from their calling, but he mends them in it. It is not an Innovation; God loves not innovations; Old doctrines, old diſciplines, old words and formes of ſpeech in his ſervice, God loves beſt. But it is a Renovation, though not an Innovation, and Renovations are alwayes acceptable to God; that is, the renewing of a mans ſelfe, in a conſideration of his firſt eſtate, what he was made for, and wherein he might be moſt
B ſerviceable to God. Such a renewing it is, as could not be done without God; no man can renew himſelfe, regenerate himſelfe; no man can prepare that worke, no man can begin it, no man can proceed in it of himſelfe. The deſire and the actuall beginning is from the preventing grace of God, and the conſtant proceeding is from the concomitant, and ſubſequent, and continuall ſucceeding grace of God; for there is no concluſive, no conſummative grace in this life; no ſuch meaſure of grace given to any man, as that that man needs no more, or can loſe or fruſtrate none of that. The renewing of theſe men in our text, Chriſt takes to himſelfe; Faciam vos, I will make yee fiſhers of men; no worldly reſpects muſt make us ſuch fiſhers; it muſt be a calling from God; And yet, (as the other Euangeliſt in the ſame hiſtory expreſſes it) it is Faciam fieri vos, I will cauſe yee to be made fiſhers of men, that is, I will provide an outward calling for you too. Our calling to this Man-fiſhing is not good, Niſi Dominus faciat, & fieri faciat, except God
C make us fiſhers by an internall, and make his Church to make us ſo too, by an externall calling. Then we are fiſhers of men, and then we are ſucceſſors to the Apoſtles, though not in their Apoſtleſhip, yet in this fiſhing. And then, for this fiſhing, the world is the Sea, and our net is the Goſpel.

Non Innovatio, ſed Renovatio.

Mar. 1. 16.

The world is a Sea in many reſpects and affimilations. It is a Sea, as it is ſubject to ſtormes, and tempeſts; Every man (and every man is a world) feels that. And then, it is never the ſhallower for the calmneſſe, The Sea is as deepe, there is as much water in the Sea, in a calme, as in a ſtorme; we may be drowned in a calme and flattering fortune, in proſperity, as irrecoverably, as in a wrought Sea, in adverſity; So the world is a Sea. It is a Sea, as it is bottomleſſe to any line, which we can ſound it with, and endleſſe to any diſcovery that we can make of it. The purpoſes of the world, the wayes of the world, exceed our conſideration; But yet we are ſure the Sea hath a bottome, and ſure that it
D hath limits, that it cannot overpaſſe; The power of the greateſt in the world, the life of the happieſt in the world, cannot exceed thoſe bounds, which God hath placed for them; So the world is a Sea. It is a Sea, as it hath ebbs and floods, and no man knowes the true reaſon of thoſe floods and thoſe ebbs. All men have changes and viciſſitudes in their bodies, (they fall ſick) And in their eſtates, (they grow poore) And in their minds, (they become ſad) at which changes, (ſickneſſe, poverty, ſadneſſe) themſelves wonder, and the cauſe is wrapped up in the purpoſe and judgement of God onely, and hid even from them that have them; and ſo the world is a Sea. It is a Sea, as the Sea affords water enough for all the world to drinke, but ſuch water as will not quench the thirſt. The world affords conveniences enow to ſatisfie Nature, but theſe encreaſe our thirſt with drinking, and our deſire growes and enlarges it ſelfe with our abundance, and though we ſayle in a full Sea, yet we lacke water; So the world is a Sea. It is a Sea, if we conſider
E the Inhabitants. In the Sea, the greater fiſh devoure the leſſe; and ſo doe the men of this world too. And as fiſh, when they mud themſelves, have no hands to make themſelves cleane, but the current of the waters muſt worke that; So have the men of this world no means to cleanſe themſelves from thoſe ſinnes which they have contracted in the world, of themſelves, till a new flood, waters of repentance, drawne up, and ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, worke that bleſſed effect in them.

Mundus Mare.

All theſe wayes the world is a Sea, but eſpecially it is a Sea in this reſpect, that the Sea is no place of habitation, but a paſſage to our habitations. So the Apoſtle expreſſes the world, Here we have no continuing City, but we ſeeke one to come; we ſeeke it not here, but we ſeeke it whileſt we are here, els we ſhall never finde it. Thoſe are the two great works which we are to doe in this world; firſt to know, that this world is not our home, and then to provide us another home, whileſt we are in this world. Therefore the Prophet ſayes, Ariſe, and depart, for this is not your reſt. Worldly men, that have no farther proſpect, promiſe themſelves ſome reſt in this world, (Soule, thou haſt much goods laid up for many yeares, take thine eaſe, eate, drinke, and be merry, ſayes the rich man) but this is not your reſt; indeed no reſt; at leaſt not yours. You muſt depart, depart by death, before yee come to that reſt; but then you muſt ariſe, before you depart; for except yee have a reſurrection to grace here, before you depart, you ſhall have no reſurrection to glory in the life to come, when you are departed.

Heb. 13. 14.

Mic. 2. 10. Luk. 12. 19.

Status navigantium.

Now, in this Sea, every ſhip that ſayles muſt neceſſarily have ſome part of the ſhip under water; Every man that lives in this world, muſt neceſſarily have ſome of his life, ſome of his thoughts, ſome of his labours ſpent upon this world; but that part of the ſhip, by which he ſayls, is above water; Thoſe meditations, and thoſe endevours which muſt bring us to heaven, are removed from this world, and fixed entirely upon God. And in this Sea, are we made fiſhers of men; Of men in generall; not of rich men, to profit by them, nor of poore men, to pierce them the more ſharply, becauſe affliction hath opened a way into them; Not of learned men, to be over-glad of their approbation of our labours, Nor of ignorant men, to affect them with an aſtoniſhment, or admiration of our gifts: But we are fiſhers of men, of all men, of that which makes them men, their ſoules. And for this fiſhing in this Sea, this Goſpel is our net.

Rete Euangelium.

Eloquence is not our net; Traditions of men are not our nets; onely the Goſpel is. The Devill angles with hooks and bayts; he deceives, and he wounds in the catching; for every ſin hath his ſting. The Goſpel of Chriſt Jeſus is a net; It hath leads and corks; It hath leads, that is, the denouncing of Gods judgements, and a power to ſink down, and lay flat any ſtubborne and rebellious heart, And it hath corks, that is, the power of abſolution, and application of the mercies of God, that ſwimme above all his works, means to erect an humble and contrite ſpirit, above all the waters of tribulation, and affliction. A net is Res nodoſa, a knotty thing; and ſo is the Scripture, full of knots, of ſcruple, and perplexity, and anxiety, and vexation, if thou wilt goe about to entangle thy ſelfe in thoſe things, which appertaine not to thy ſalvation; but knots of a faſt union, and inſeparable alliance of thy ſoule to God, and to the fellowſhip of his Saints, if thou take the Scriptures, as they were intended for thee, that is, if thou beeſt content to reſt in thoſe places, which are cleare, and evident in things neceſſary. A net is a large thing, paſt thy ſadoming, if thou caſt it from thee, but if thou draw it to thee, it will lie upon thine arme. The Scriptures will be out of thy reach, and out of thy uſe, if thou caſt and ſcatter them upon Reaſon, upon Philoſophy, upon Morality, to try how the Scriptures will fit all them, and beleeve them but ſo far as they agree with thy reaſon; But draw the Scripture to thine own heart, and to thine own actions, and thou ſhalt finde it made for that; all the promiſes of the old Teſtament made, and all accompliſhed in the new Teſtament, for the ſalvation of thy ſoule hereafter, and for thy conſolation in the preſent application of them.

Rete nodoſum.

Rete diffuſivum.

Non quia tanquam cauſa.

Now this that Chriſt promiſes here, is not here promiſed in the nature of wages due to our labour, and our fiſhing. There is no merit in all that we can doe. The wages of ſin is Death; Death is due to ſin, the proper reward of ſin; but the Apoſtle does not ſay there, That eternall life is the wages of any good worke of ours. (The wages of ſinne is death, but eternall life is the gift of God, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord) Through Jeſus Chriſt, that is, as we are conſidered in him; and in him, who is a Saviour, a Redeemer, we are not conſidered but as ſinners. So that Gods purpoſe works no otherwiſe upon us, but as we are ſinners; neither did God meane ill to any man, till that man was, in his ſight, a ſinner. God ſhuts no man out of heaven, by a lock on the inſide, except that man have clapped the doore after him, and never knocked to have it opened againe, that is, except he have ſinned, and never repented. Chriſt does not ſay in our text, Follow me, for I will prefer you; he will not have that the reaſon, the cauſe. If I would not ſerve God, except I might be ſaved for ſerving him, I ſhall not be ſaved though I ſerve him; My firſt end in ſerving God, muſt not be my ſelfe, but he and his glory. It is but an addition from his own goodneſſe, Et faciam, Follow me, and I will doe this; but yet it is as certaine, and infallible as a debt, or as an effect upon a naturall cauſe; Thoſe propoſitions in nature are not ſo certaine; The Earth is at ſuch a time juſt between the Sunne, and

Rom. 6. 23.

A and the Moone, therefore the Moone must be Eclipsed, The Moone is at such time just betweene the Earth and the Sunne, therefore the Sunne must be Eclipsed; for upon the Sunne, and those other bodies, God can, and hath sometimes wrought miraculously, and changed the naturall courses of them; (The Sunne stood still in Ioshua, And there was an unnaturall Eclipse at the death of Christ) But God cannot by any Miracle so worke upon himselfe, as to make himselfe not himselfe, unmercifull, or unjust; And out of his mercy he makes this promise, (Doe this, and thus it shall be with you) and then, of his justice he performes that promise, which was made meerely, and onely out of mercy, If we doe it, (though not because we doe it) we shall have eternall life.

Therefore did Andrew, and Peter faithfully beleeve, such a net should be put into their hands. Christ had vouchsafed to fish for them, and caught them with that net, and they beleeved that he that made them fishers of men, would also enable them to catch others
B with that net. And that is truly the comfort that refreshes us in all our Lucubrations, and night-studies, through the course of our lives, that that God that sets us to Sea, will prosper our voyage, that whether he fix us upon our owne, or send us to other Congregations, he will open the hearts of those Congregations to us, and blesse our labours to them. For as S. Pauls Vae si non, lies upon us whersoever we are, (Wo be unto us if wee doe not preach) so, (as S. Paul sayes to) we were of all men the most miserable, if wee preached without hope of doing good. With this net S. Peter caught three thousand soules in one day, at one Sermon, and five thousand in another. With this net S. Paul fished all the Mediterranean Sea, and caused the Gospel of Christ Jesus to abound from Jerusalem round about to Illyricum. This is the net, with which if yee be willing to bee caught, that is, to lay downe all your hopes and affiances in the gracious promises of his Gospel, then you are fishes reserved for that great Mariage-feast, which is the Kingdome
C of heaven; where, whosoever is a dish, is a ghest too; whosoever is served in at the table, sits at the table; whosoever is caught by this net, is called to this feast; and there your soules shall be satisfied as with marrow, and with fatnesse, in an infallible assurance, of an everlasting and undeterminable terme, in inexpressible joy and glory. Amen.

Acts 2. 41. 4. 4.

Rom. 15. 19.

SERM. LXXIII.

Preached to the King in my Ordinary waiting at White-hall,
D 18. Aprill 1626.

JOH. 14. 2.

In my Fathers House are many Mansions; If it were not so, I would have told you.

THere are occasions of Controversies of all kinds in this one Verse; And one is, whether this be one Verse or no; For as there are Doctrinall Controversies, out of the sense and interpretation of the words, so are there Grammaticall differences about the Distinction, and Interpunction of them: Some Translations differing therein from the Originall, (as the Originall E Copies are distinguished, and interpuncted now) and some differing from one another. The first Translation that was, that into Syriaque, as it is expressed by Trewellius, renders these words absolutely, precisely, as our two Translations doe; And, as our two Translations doe, applies the second clause and proposition, Si quo minus, If it were not so, I would have told you, as in affirmation, and confirmation of the former, In domo Patris, In my Fathers house there are many Mansions, For, If it were not so I would have told you. But then, as both our Translations doe, the Syriaque also admits into this Verse a third clause and proposition, Vado parare, I goe to prepare you a place. Now Beza doth not so; Piscator doth not so; They determine this Verse in those two propositions which constitute our Text, In my Fathers house, &c. and then they let fall the third proposition, as an inducement, ducement, and inchoation of the next Verſe, I goe to prepare a place for you, and if I goe, I will come againe. Divers others doe otherwiſe, and diverſly; For ſome doe aſſume (as we, and the Syriaque doe) all three propoſitions into the Verſe, but then they doe not (as we, and the Syriaque doe) make the ſecond a proofe of the firſt, In my Fathers houſe are many Manſions, For, If it were not ſo, I would have told you, But they refer the ſecond to the third propoſition, If it were not ſo, I would have told you, For, I goe to prepare you a place, and being to goe from you, would leave you ignorant of nothing. But we find no reaſon to depart from that Diſtinction and Interpunction of theſe words, which our own Church exhibits to us, aud therefore we ſhall purſue them ſo; and ſo determine, though not the Verſe, (for into the Verſe, we admit all three propoſitions) yet the whole purpoſe and intention of our Saviour, in thoſe two propoſitions, which accompliſh our Text, In my Fathers houſe, &c. A

Diviſe. This Interpunction then offers and conſtitutes our two parts. Firſt, A particular Doctrine, which Chriſt infuſes into his Diſciples, In domo Patris, In my Fathers houſe are many Manſions; And then a generall Rule and Scale, by which we are to meaſure, and waigh all Doctrines, Si quo minus, If it were not ſo, I would have told you. In the order of nature, the later part fals firſt into conſideration, The rule of all Doctrines; which in this place is, The word of God in the mouth of Chriſt, digeſted into the Scriptures; In which, wee ſhall have juſt, more then juſt, neceſſary occaſion to note both their diſtempers, both theirs, that think, That there are other things to be beleeved, then are in the Scriptures, and theirs that think, That there are ſome things in the Scriptures, which are not to bee beleeved: For when our Saviour ſayes, Si quo minus, If it were not ſo, I would have told you, he intends both this propoſition, I have told you all that is neceſſary to be beleeved; and this alſo, All that I have told you, is neceſſary to bee beleeved, ſo as I have told it you. So that this excludes both that imaginary inſufficiency of the Scriptures, which ſome have ventured to averre, (for God ſhall never call Chriſtian to account for any thing not notified in the Scriptures) And it excludes alſo thoſe imaginary Doles bonos, and fraudes pias, which ſome have adventured to averre too, That God ſhould uſe holy Illuſions, holy deceits, holy frauds, and circumventions in his Scriptures, and not intend in them, that which he pretends by them; This is his Rule, Si quo minus, If it were not ſo, I would have told you, If I have not told you ſo, it is not ſo, and if I have, it is ſo as I have told you: And in theſe two branches we ſhall determine the firſt part, The Rule of Doctrines, the Scripture. B C

The ſecond part, which is the particular Doctrine which Chriſt adminiſters to his Diſciples here, will alſo derive and cleave it ſelfe into two branches; For firſt wee ſhall inquire, whether this propoſition in our Text, In my Father's houſe are many Manſions, give any ground, or aſſiſtance, or countenance to that pious opinion, of a diſparity, and difference of degrees of Glory in the Saints in heaven; And then, if we finde the words of this Text to conduce nothing to that Doctrine, wee ſhall conſider the right uſe of the true, and naturall, the native and genuine, the direct, and literall, and uncontrovertible ſenſe of the words; becauſe in them, Chriſt doth not ſay, that in his Fathers houſe there are Divers Manſions, divers for ſeat, or lights, or faſhion, or furniture, but onely that there are Many, and in that notion, the Plurality, the Multipliciry, lies the Conſolation. D

1 Part. Firſt then, for the firſt branch of our firſt part, The generall Rule of Doctrines, our Saviour Chriſt in theſe words involves an argument, That hee hath told them all that was neceſſary; Hee hath, becauſe the Scripture hath, for all the Scriptures which were written before Chriſt, and after Chriſt, were written by one and the ſame Spirit, his Spirit. It might then make a good Probleme, why they of the Romane Church, not affording to the Scriptures that dignity which belongs to them, are yet ſo vehement, and make ſo hard ſhift, to bring the books of other Authors into the ranke, and nature, and dignity of being Scriptures: What matter is it, whether their Maccabees, or their Tobies be Scripture or no? what get their Maccabees, or their Tobies by being Scripture, if the Scripture be not full enough, or not plaine enough, to bring me to ſalvation? But ſince their intention and purpoſe, their aime, and their end is, to under-value the Scriptures, that thereby they may over-value their owne Traditions, their way to that end may bee to put the name of Scriptures upon books of a lower value, that ſo the unworthineſſe of thoſe additionall books, may caſt a diminution upon the Canonicall books themſelves, when E

A when they are made all one: as in ſome forraigne States we have ſeene, that when the Prince had a purpoſe to erect ſome new Order of Honour, he would diſgrace the old Orders, by conferring and beſtowing them upon unworthy and incapable perſons.

But why doe we charge the Roman Church with this undervaluing of the Scriptures, when as they pretend, (and that cannot well be denied them) That they aſcribe to all the books of Scripture this dignity, That all that is in them is true. It is true; they doe ſo; But this may be true of other Authors alſo, and yet thoſe Authors remaine prophane and ſecular Authors. All may be true that Livy ſayes, and all that our Chronicles ſay, may be true; and yet our Chronicles, nor Livy become Goſpell: for ſo much they themſelves will confeſſe and acknowledge, that all that our Church ſayes is true, that our Church affirmes no error; and yet our Church muſt be a hereticall Church, if any Church at all, for all that. Indeed it is but a faint, but an illuſory evidence or witneſſe,
B that pretends to cleare a point, if, though it ſpeake nothing but truth, yet it does not ſpeake all the truth. The Scriptures are our evidence for life or death; Search the Scriptures, ſayes Chriſt, for in them ye thinke ye have eternall life. Where, ye thinke ſo, is not, ye thinke ſo, but miſtake the matter, but ye thinke ſo, is ye thinke ſo upon a well-grounded and rectified faith and aſſurance. Now if this evidence, the Scripture, ſhall acquit me in one Article, in my beliefe in God, (for I doe finde in the Scripture, as much as they require of me to beleeve, of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt) And then this evidence, the Scripture, ſhall condemne me in another Article, The Catholique Church, (for I doe not finde ſo much in the Scripture, as they require me to beleeve of their Catholique Church) If the Scripture be ſufficient to ſave me in one, and not in the reſt, this is not onely a defective, but an illuſory evidence, which though it ſpeake truth, yet does not ſpeake all the truth. Iohn 5.39.

C Fratres ſumus, quare litigamus? ſayes S. Auguſtine, Wee are all Brethren, by one Father, one Almighty God, and one Mother, one Catholique Church, and then why do we goe to Law together? At leaſt, why doe we not bring our Suits to an end? Non inteſtatus mortuus eſt Pater, ſayes he, Our Father is dead; for, Is not he your Father that bought you? is Moſes queſtion; he that bought us with himſelfe, his blood, his life, is not dead inteſtate, but hath left his Will and Teſtament, and why ſhould not that Teſtament decide the cauſe? Silent Advocati, Suſpenſus eſt populus, Legant verba teſtamenti: This that Father notes, to be the end in other cauſes, why not in this? That the Counſell give over pleading, That the people give over murmuring, That the Judge cals for the words of the Will, & by that governs, and according to that eſtabliſhes his Judgement. I would at laſt contentious men would leave wrangling, and people to whom thoſe things belonged not, leave blowing of coales, and that the words of the Will might try the cauſe, Deut. 32. 30.
D ſince he that made the Will, hath made it thus cleare, Si quo minus, If it were not thus, I would have told you, If there were more to be added then this, or more clearneſſe to bee added to this, I would have told you.

In the fift of Matthew, Chriſt puts a great many caſes, what others had told them, but he tels them, that is not their Rule. Audiviſtis, & ab antiquis, ſays he, you have heard, & heard by them of old, but now I tel you otherwiſe. So Audivimus, & ab antiquis, we have heard, and heard by them of old, That the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt is ſo abſolutely neceſſary, as that Children were bound to receive it, preſently after Baptiſme, and that no man could be ſaved without it, more then without Baptiſme: This we have heard, and heard by them of old; for we have heard S. Auguſtin to have ſaid ſo, and the practiſe of the Church for ſome hundreds of yeares to have ſaid ſo. So Audivimus, & ab antiquis, We have heard, and heard by them of old, That the Saints of God departed out
E of this life, after their reſurrection, and before their aſcenſion into heaven, ſhall enjoy all worldly proſperity and happineſſe upon the earth, for a thouſand yeares: This we have heard, and heard by them of old, for we have heard Tertullian ſay ſo, and Irenæus, and Lactantius, and ſo many more as would make the balance more then even. So alſo Audivimus, & ab antiquis, We have heard, and heard by them of old, That in how good ſtate ſoever they dye, yet the ſouls of the departed do not ſee the face of God, nor enjoy his preſence, till the day of Judgement; This we have heard, and from ſo many of them of old, as that the voyce of that part is louder, then of the other. And amongſt thoſe reverend and bleſſed Fathers, which ſtraied into theſe errors, ſome were hearers and Diſciples of the Apoſtles themſelves, as Papias was a Diſciple of S. Iohn, and yet Papias Mat. 5. Maldon. in Iohn 6. 35.

was

was a Millenarian, and expected his thousand yeares prosperity upon the earth after the Resurrection: some of them were Disciples of the Apostles, and some of them were better men then the Apostles, for they were Bishops of Rome; Clement was so; and yet Clement was one of them, who denied the fruition of the sight of God, by the Saints, till the Judgement. A

And yet our Adversaries will enjoy their liberty to depart from all this which they have heard, and heard from them of old, in the mouths of these Fathers. And where the Fathers are divided in two streames, where all the Fathers, few, scarce any excepted, till S. Augustine, placed the cause of our Election in Gods foresight, and fore-knowledge of our faith and obedience, and, as generally after S. Augustin, they placed it in the right Center, that is, onely in the free goodnesse and pleasure of God in Christ, halfe the Roman Church goes one way, and halfe the other; (for we may be bold to call the Jesuits halfe that Church) And in that point the Jesuits depart from that which they had heard, and heard of old, from the Primitive Fathers, and adhere to the later; And their very heavy, and very bitter adversaries, the Dominicans, apply themselves to that which they have heard of old, to the first opinion. In that point in the Roman Church they have Fathers on both sides; but, in a point, where they have no Father, where all the Fathers are unanimely and diametrally against them, in the point of the Conception of the most blessed Virgin, Etsi omnes Sancti uno ore assevirent, sayes a wise Author of theirs, Though all the Ancient Fathers with one intire consent affirme that she was conceived in Originall sin, Etsi nullus Author contravenerit, sayes he, Though no one ancient Author ever denyed it, yet sayes he, Infirmum est ex omnium patrum consensu argumentum, Though our opinion have no ground in Scriptures (that, sayes he, I confesse) Though it bee no Apostolicall Tradition, (that, sayes he, I confesse) yet it is but a weake argument, sayes he, that is concluded out of all the Fathers against it, because, It was a doctrine manifested to the Church but about five hundred yeares since, and now for two hundred yeares hath beene well followed and embraced: As the Jesuit Maldonat sayes in such another case, whatsoever the ancient Fathers have thought, or taught, or said, or writ, that the marriage of Priests after Orders taken, and chastity professed, was a good marriage, Contrarium nunc verum est, whatsoever was true then, the contrary is true now. B C

If then these men who take to themselves this liberty, will yet say to me, in some other points, Si quo minus, Surely if you were in the right, some of the ancient Fathers would have told you so; And then, if I assist my selfe by the Fathers, they will say, Si quo minus, If it were not otherwise, some generall Councell would have told you so; And againe, if I support my selfe by a Councell, Si quo minus, if that Councell were to be followed, some Pope would have confirmed that Councell, And if I show that to have beene done, yet they will say, that that Confirmation reaches not to that Session of the Councell, or not to that Canon of that Session, or not to that period in that Canon, or not to that word in that period; And then, of every Father, and Councell, and Session, and Canon, and period, and word, Ejus interpretatio est sensus Spiritus Sancti, His sense and interpretation must be esteemed the Interpretation, and the Sense of the Holy Ghost, as Bellarmine hath concluded us, why will they not allow me a juster liberty, then that which they take? That when they stop my prayers in their way to God, and bid me turne upon Saints, when they stop my faith in the way to Christ, and bid me turne upon mine owne, or others merits, when they stop my hopes of Heaven upon my death-bed, and bid me turne upon Purgatory, That when, as yet it is in debatement and disputation, whether man can performe the Law of God or no, they will multiply their Laws, above the proportion of Moses Tables, And when we have Primogenitum Ecclesiæ, The eldest son by the Primitive Church, The Creed of the Apostles, they will super-induce another son, by another venter, by a step-mother, by their sick and crazy Church, and (as the way of step-mothers is) will then make the portion of the later, larger then the elders, make their Trent-Creed larger then the Apostles, That in such a case, they will not allow me, neither in my studies in the way, nor upon my death-bed at mine end, to hearken unto this voyce of my Saviour, Si quo minus, If it were not so, I would have told you, this is not onely to preclude the liberty, but to exclude the duty of a Christian. D E

But the mystery of their Iniquity is easily revealed, their Arcana Imperii, the secrets of their State easily discovered. All this is not because they absolutely oppose the Scriptures, or stiffly deny them to be the most certain and constant rule that can be presented, (for Historia Vossii l. 7. Thes. 8. fo. 538. &c. Benius ca. 26. Peterius Ro. 8. disp 22.

Canus.

A (for whatſoever they pretend for their own Church, or for the Super-ſoveraigne in that Church, their tranſcendent and hyperbolicall ſupreme Head, they will pretend to deduce out of the Scriptures) But becauſe the Scriptures are conſtant, and limited, and determined, there can be no more Scriptures, And they ſhould be ſhrewdly prejudiced, and ſhrewdly diſadvantaged, if all emergent caſes ariſing in the Chriſtian world, muſt be judged by a Law, which others may know before-hand, as well as they; Therefore being wiſe in their own generation, they chooſe rather to lay up their Rule in a Cupboard, then upon a Shelfe, rather in Scrinio pectoris, in the breaſt and boſome of one man, then upon every deske in a ſtudy, where every man may lay, or whence every man may take a Bible. Therefore have ſo many ſad and ſober men amongſt them, repented, that in the Councell of Trent, they came to a finall reſolution in ſo many particulars; becauſe how incommodious ſoever ſome of thoſe particulars may prove to them, yet they are
B bound to ſome neceſſity of a defence, or to ſome aſperſion if they forſake ſuch things as have been ſolemnly reſolved in that manner.

Therefore it was a prudent, and diſcreet abſtinence in them, to forbeare the determination of ſome things, which have then, and ſince, falne into agitation amongſt them. Be pleaſed to take one in the Councell, and one after for all. Long time it had, and then it did, and ſtill it doth, perplex the Conſciences of penitents that come to Confeſſion, and the underſtandings of Confeſſors, who are to give Abſolution, how far the ſecular Lawes of temporall Princes binde the Conſcience of the Subject, and when, and in what caſes, he is bound to confeſſe it as a ſin, who hath violated and tranſgreſſed any of thoſe Lawes; And herein, ſayes an Author of theirs, who hath written learnedly De legibus, Carbo.
of the hand and obligation of Lawes, The Pope was ſolicited and ſupplicated from the Councell, in which it was debated, that he would be pleaſed to come to a Determinati-
C on; but becauſe he ſaw it was more advantage to him, to hold it undetermined, that ſo he might ſerve others turnes, and his own eſpecially, it remains undetermined, and no Confeſſor is able to un-entangle the Conſcience of his penitent yet. So alſo in another point, of as great conſequence, (at leaſt for the peace of the Church, if not for the profit) which is, thoſe differences, which have ariſen between the Jeſuits and the Dominicans, about the concurrence of the Grace of God, and the free will of man, Though both ſides have come to that vehemence, that violence, that virulency, as to call one anothers opinion hereticall, (which is a word that cuts deepe, and ſhould not be paſſionately uſed) yet he will not be brought to a deciſion, to a determination in the point, but onely forbids both ſides to write at all in that point; and in that inhibition of his, we ſee how he ſuffers himſelfe to be deluded, for ſtill they write with proteſtation, that they write not to advance either opinion, but onely to prepare the way againſt ſuch time, as the Pope
D ſhall be pleaſed to take off that inhibition, and reſtore them to their liberty of writing; for this way hath one of their laſt Authors, Arriba, taken to vent himſelfe. In a word, if they ſhould ſubmit themſelves to try all points and caſes of Conſcience by Scripture, that were to governe by a knowne, and conſtant Law; but as they have imagined a Monarchy in their Church, ſo have they a prerogative in their Monarchy, a ſecret judgement in one breaſt, however, he who gives them all their power, make this proteſtation, Si quo minus, If it were not thus, and thus, I would have told you ſo.

So then this propoſition in our Text falls firſt upon them, who doe not beleeve All things to be contained in the Scriptures; And it falls alſo upon them, who doe not beleeve All perſons to be intended in the Scriptures, who ſeeme to be concerned therein. The firſt ſort diſhonor God in his Scriptures, in that kinde, That there is not enough in the Scriptures for any mans ſalvation; And the other in this kinde, That that that is, is E not intended, as it is pretended, not in that largeneſſe and generality, as it is propoſed, but that God hath ſet a little Diamond in a great deale of gold, a narrow purpoſe in large promiſes; and thereupon they impute to God (in their manner of expreſſing themſelves) Dolos bonos, and Fraudes pias, holy deceits, holy falſhoods, holy illuſions, and circumventions, and over-good husbands of Gods large and bountifull Grace, contract his generall promiſes. I diſpute not, but I am glad to heare the Apoſtle ſay, That as all were Rom. 5. 14.
dead, ſo one dyed for all; and to put the force of his argument there, in that, That except we can ſay, That one dyed for all, we cannot ſay, that all were dead. I argue not, but I am glad to heare another Apoſtle ſay, That Chriſt is the propitiation for the ſinnes of 1 Joh. 2. 2.
all the world; for if any man had been left out, how ſhould I have come in?

I am

I am not exerciſed, nor would I exerciſe theſe Auditories with curioſities, but I heare A
Rom. 14. 11. the Apoſtle ſay, Deſtroy not him with thy meat for whom Chriſt dyed; And I heare him
1 Cor. 8. 11. ſay, Through thy knowledge may thy weake brother periſh, for whom Chriſt dyed: and, me thinks, he meanes, That though they might be deſtroyed, though they might periſh, yet Chriſt dyed for them. Onely to deliver God from all aſperſions, and to defend particular Conſciences from being ſcandalized with dangerous phraſes, and in a pious deteſtation of thoſe impious Doli, and Fraudes, holy deceits, holy falſhoods, I onely ſay, God forbid, that when our Saviour Chriſt called the Phariſee hypocrite, that Phariſee ſhould have been able to recriminate that upon Chriſt, and to have ſaid, So are you, for you pretend to offer ſalvation where you meane it not: God forbid, that when Chriſt had made that the mark of a true Iſraelite in the perſon of Nathaniel, In quo non eſt dolus, In whom there is no deceit, any man ſhould have been able to have ſaid to Chriſt,
Joh. 1. 47. Then Nathaniel is a better Iſraelite then you, for you pretend to offer ſalvation, where B
Pſal. 35. 3. you meane it not. David hath joyned thoſe two words together, The words of their mouth, are Iniquity and Deceit; If there be Deceit, there is Iniquity too. Our Saviour
Mar. 7. 22. hath joyned all theſe together, Adulteries, Murders, Blaſphemies, and Deceit; where there is Deceit, all miſchiefe is juſtly preſumed. The Apoſtle S. Paul diſcharges himſelfe
2 Cor. 12. 16. of nothing with more earneſtneſſe then that, Have I deceived you? have I circumvented
Acts 13. 10. you with fraud? Neither doth he charge him, whom he calls, The childe of the Devill, Elymas the ſorcerer, farther then ſo, O plene omni dolo, That he was full of all Deceit. And therefore they that thinke to gild and enamell deceit, and falſhood, with the additions of good deceit, good falſhood, before they will make deceit good, will make God bad: For, even in the Law, an action De Dolo, will not lie againſt a Father, nor againſt a Maſter, and ſhall we emplead God De Dolo?

In the laſt forraine Synod, which our Divines aſſiſted, with what a bleſſed ſobriety, C Art. 2. ad Theſ. 3. they delivered their ſentence, That all men are truly, and in earneſt called to eternall life, by Gods Miniſter; And that whatſoever is promiſed or offered out of the Goſpel by the Miniſter, is to the ſame men, and in the ſame manner promiſed and offered by the Author of the Goſpel, by God himſelfe. They knew whoſe breaſts they had ſucked; and
Art. 17. that that Church, our Church had declared, That we muſt receive Gods promiſes ſo, as they be generally ſet forth to us in the Scriptures; And that for our actions and manners, for our life and converſation, we follow that will of God, which is expreſly declared to us in his Word: And that is, That conditionall ſalvation is ſo far offered to every man, as that no man may preclude himſelfe from a poſſibility of ſuch a performance of thoſe Conditions which God requires at his hands, as God will accept at his hands, if either he doe ſincerely endevour the performing, or ſincerely repent the not performing of them. For all this is fayrly implyed in this propoſition, Si quo minus, If it were not ſo, D
I would have told you; That all that is neceſſary to ſalvation, is comprehended in the Scriptures, which was our firſt branch; And then, That all that is in the Scriptures, is intended ſo as it is propoſed, which was our ſecond; And theſe two conſtitute our firſt part, The generall Rule of Doctrines, and farther we enlarge not that part, but deſcend to the other, The particular Doctrine, which Chriſt gives to his Diſciples, in the other Propoſition, In domo patris, In my Fathers houſe there are many Manſions.

2 Part. This ſecond part, you may alſo be pleaſed to remember, derives it ſelfe into two branches; firſt to inquire, whether this propoſition aſſiſt that Doctrine of Diſparity and Degrees of Glory in the Saints in heaven; And then the right uſe which is to be made of the right ſenſe of theſe words, In domo patris, In my Fathers houſe there are many Manſions. The occaſion of the words will be the foundation of all; Our Saviour Chriſt had
Ver. 33. ſaid to his Diſciples in the Chapter before, That he was to ſtay with them but a little E while; That when he was gone, they ſhould ſeeke him, and not finde him; And that whither he went, they could not follow: And when, upon that, Peter, who was alwayes
Ver. 36. forwardeſt, and ſooneſt ſcandalized, had preſſed him with that queſtion, Lord, whither goeſt thou? and received that anſwer, whither I goe, thou canſt not follow me now, but hereafter thou ſhalt follow me, leſt the reſt of the Diſciples, who were troubled with that which was formerly ſaid, ſhould be more affected with this, to heare that Peter ſhould come, whither none of them might, to eſtabliſh them all, as well as Peter, he ſayes to them all, in the firſt verſe of this Chapter, Let not your hearts be troubled, for, (And here enters this propoſition of our Text, for their generall eſtabliſhment) In my Fathers houſe are many Manſions.

A Mansions. So that, that these are words of Consolation is certaine, but whether the consolation be placed in the disparity, and difference of degrees of Glory in Heaven, or no, is not so certaine.

That there are degrees of Glory in the Saints in heaven, scarce any ever denied. Heaven is a Kingdome, and Christ a King, and a popular parity agrees not with that State, with a Monarchy. Heaven is a Church, and Christ a High-Priest, and such a parity agrees as ill with the Triumphant, as with the Militant Church. In the Primitive Church Iovinian denied this difference, and degrees of glory; and S. Hierome was so incensed, so inflamed for this, as if foundations had beene shaken, and the common cause endangered. Indeed it was thus farre the common cause, that all the Fathers followed this chase, (if wee may use that Metaphor) and were never at a default: No one of the Fathers, whom I have observed to touch upon this point, did ever deny this difference of B degrees of Glory. And therefore, as in the Primitive Church, when that one man Iovinian, came to deny it, S. Hierome was vehement upon him, so when in the Reformation, one man (for I never found more then that one, one Schonfeldius) denies it too, I wonder the lesse, that another (of the Reformation also) growes somewhat sharpe towards him.

Non negatur.

Gerard.

We deny not then this difference of degrees of glory in Heaven; But that frame, and that scale of these degrees, which they have set up in the Romane Church, we do deny. We must continue, and returne often to that complaint against them, That they shake and endanger things neere foundations, by their enormous super-edifications, by their incommodious upper-buildings: That many things, which might bee well enough accepted, and would bee agreed by all, become justly suspicious, and really dangerous to the Church, by their manifold consequences which they super-induce upon them: That
C many things, which in the sincerity of their beginning, and institution, were pious, and conduced to the exaltation of Devotion, by their additions are become impious, and destroy Devotion so farre, as to divert it upon a wrong object. In this point which we have in hand, it is so; In these degrees of glory in Heaven, That Church, which treads all soveraigne Crownes in this world, under her feet, pretends to impart, and distribute Crownes in Heaven also of her owne making: Wee find Coronam auream, a Crowne of gold upon the head of that Sonne of Man, who is also the Sonne of God, Christ Jesus, in the Revelation. And wee find Coronas aureas, particular Crownes of gold, upon the heads of all the Saints that stand about the Throne, in the same Booke. And these Crownes upon the Saints are the emanations, and effluences of that Crowne which is upon Christ; The glory of the Saints is the communication of his glory. But then, because in their Translation, in the vulgat Edition of the Roman Church, they find in Exodus that word Aureolam, Facies Coronam aureolam, Thou shalt make a lesser Crowne of D gold; out of this diminutive, and mistaken word, they have established a Doctrine, that besides those Corona aurea, Those Crownes of gold, which are communicated to all the Saints from the Crown of Christ, some Saints have made to themselves, and produced out of their owne extraordinary merits certaine Aureolas, certaine lesser Crownes of their own, whereas indeed the word in the Originall in that place of Exodus is Zer zehab, which is a Crowne of gold, without any intimation of any such lesser crownes growing out of themselves. This then is their new Alchymy; that whereas old Alchymists pretend to make gold of courser Metals, these will make it of Nothing; Out of a suppositious word, which is not in the Text, they have hammered and beat out these Aureolas, these lesser crownes. And these Aureolaes they ascribe onely to three sorts of persons, to Virgins, to Martyrs, to Doctors.

Modus in Eccles. Rom. negatur.

Revel. 14. 14.

Revel. 4. 4.

Exod. 25. 25.

E Are then all the other Saints without Crowns? They must make shift with that beame which they have from the Crowne of Christ; for, for these additionall crownes proceeding from themselves, they have none. And yet, say they, there are Saints which have some additions growing out of themselves, though not Aureolas, little crownes, and those they call Fructus, peculiar fruits growing out of themselves; And for these fruits they distraine upon that place of Matthew, where Christ saith, That some brought forth fruit a hundred fold, some sixty, and some thirty; And the greater measure they ascribe to Virgins, the sixty to Widowes, and the thirty to Maried persons, but onely such maried persons, as have lived continently in mariage. So then, to make this Riddle of theirs as plaine as the matter will admit, They place salvation it selfe, Blessednesse it selfe, (if a man will be content with that) in that union with God, which is common to all the Saints: But then they conceive certaine Dotes, as they call them, certaine diſpoſitions in this life, by which ſome have made themſelves fitter to be united to God, in a nearer diſtance then an ordinary Saint; And theſe Dotes, theſe endowments, and diſpoſitions here, produce thoſe Aureolas, and thoſe Fructus, thoſe leſſer crownes, and thoſe meaſures of fruits, which are a particular Joy, not that they are united to God, (for ſo every Saint is) but that they had thoſe Dotes, thoſe diſpoſitions to take that particular way of being united to God, The way of Virginity, the way of Martyrdome, and the way of Preaching; for by this, they become Sancti Majores, as they call them, Saints in favor, Saints in office, and fitter to receive our petitions, and mediate between God and us, then thoſe whom they call Mediocres, and Inferiores, Saints of a middle forme, or of an inferiour ranke. Yet theſe are ſo farre provided for, by them too, that wee muſt pray alſo to theſe Inferiour Saints, either becauſe I may have had a more particular intereſt in this life in that Saint, then in a greater, and ſo the readineſſe, and the aſſiduity of that Saint may recompence his want of power, Or elſe, Ad tollendum faſtidium, leſt a great Saint ſhould grow weary of me, if I trouble him every day, and for every trifle in heaven; And ſome other ſuch reaſons, it pleaſes them to aſſigne, why though ſome Saints have more power with God then others, yet we are bound to pray to all. A B

Matt. 13. 6.

And thus they play with Divinity, as though after they had troubled all States with politicall Divinity, with their Bulls, and Breves of Rebus ſic ſtantibus, That as long as things ſtood thus, this ſhould be Catholique Doctrine, and otherwiſe, when otherwiſe, And in this politicall Divinity, Machiavel is their Pope; And after they had perplexed underſtandings with Philoſophicall Divinity in the Schoole, and in that Divinity, Ariſtotle is their Pope; They thought themſelves in courteſie, or conſcience bound, to recreate the world with Poeticall Divinity, with ſuch a Heaven, and ſuch a Hell as would ſtand in their Verſes, and in this Divinity, Virgill is their Pope. And ſo, as Melanchthon ſaid, when he furthered the Edition of the Alcoran, that hee would have it printed, Vt videamus quale poema ſit, That the world might ſee what a piece of Poetry the Alcoran was; So I have ſtopped upon this point, that you might ſee what a piece of Poetry they have made of this Problematicall point of Divinity, The diſparity, and degrees of Glory in the Saints in Heaven. C

Non liquet ex Scripturis.

Be this then thus ſettled; In the matter, The difference of degrees of Glory, we will not differ; In the manner, we would not differ ſo, as to induce a Schiſme, if they would handle ſuch points Problematically, and no farther. But when upon matter of fact they will induce matter of faith, when they will extend Problematicall Divinity to Dogmaticall, when they will argue and conclude thus, It may be thus, therefore it muſt be thus, A man may be ſaved, though he beleeve this, therefore he cannot be ſaved except hee beleeve this, when (in this point in hand) out of our acknowledgement of theſe degrees of Glory in the Saints they will eſtabliſh the Doctrine of Merits, and of Invocation of Saints, then wee muſt neceſſarily call them to the Rule of all Doctrines, the Scriptures. When they tell us Hiſtorically, and upon a Hiſtoricall Obligation, and for a Hiſtoricall certitude, that Peter was at Rome, and that hee was Biſhop of Rome, we are not ſo froward as to deny them that: But when upon his Hiſtoricall and perſonall being at Rome, they will build that mother Article, of an univerſall Supremacy over all the Church, then we muſt neceſſarily call them to the Rule, to the Scriptures, and to require them to prove both his being there, and his being Biſhop there, by the Scriptures, and either of theſe would trouble them; As it would trouble them, in our preſent caſe, to aſſigne evident places of Scripture, for theſe degrees of Glory in the Saints of Heaven. For though we be far from denying the Conſentaneum eſt, That it is reaſonable it ſhould be, and likely it is ſo, and farre from denying the Piè creditur, That it may advance Devotion, and exalt Induſtry to beleeve that it is ſo, Though we acknowledge a poſſibility, a probability, a very ſimilitude, a very truth, and thus farre a neceſſary truth, that our endevours may flagge and ſlacken, except we doe embrace that helpe, that there are degrees of Glory in Heaven, yet if wee ſhall preſſe for places of Scriptures, ſo evident, as muſt conſtitute an Article of faith, there are perchance none to be found, to which very learned, and very reverend Expoſitors have not given convenient Interpretations, without inducing any ſuch neceſſity. D E

Minus ex hoc Textu.

At leaſt, however other places of Scripture may ſeeme to contribute more, this propoſition

A position of our text, In my Fathers house are many mansions (though it have beene applyed to the proofe of that) hath no inclination, no inclinableneſſe that way. For in this text, our Saviour applies himſelfe to his Diſciples, in that wherein they needed comfort, That Chriſt would go away, That they might not goe too, That Peter had got a Non-obſtante, He might, and they might not, and Chriſt gives them that comfort, that all might, In my Fathers houſe are many mansions. When the Apoſtle preſents a great part of our Chriſtian Religion together, ſo as that he cals it a Myſterie, and a great myſterie, yet he cals it a myſterie without controverſie; Without controverſie great is the myſterie of God manifeſted in the fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit, preached to the Gentiles, beleeved in the world, received into glory. When he preſents matter of conſolation, he would have it without controverſie; To eſtabliſh a diſconſolate ſoule, there is alwaies Divinity enough, that was never drawne into Controverſie. I would pray? I finde the Spirit of God to diſpoſe my B heart, and my tongue, and mine eyes, and hands, and knees to pray; Doe I doubt to whom I ſhould pray? To God, or to the Saints? That prayer to God alone was ſufficient, was never drawne into controverſie. I would have ſomething to rely and ſettle and eſtabliſh my aſſurance upon; Doe I doubt whether upon Chriſt, or mine owne, or others merits? That to rely upon Chriſt alone was ſufficient, was never drawne into Controverſie. At this time, Chriſt diſpoſed himſelfe to comfort his Diſciples in that wherein they needed comfort; now their diſcomfort, and their feare lay not in this, whether there were different degrees of glory in Heaven, but their feare was, that Chriſt being gone, and having taken Peter, and none but him, there ſhould be no roome for them, and thereupon Chriſt ſayes, Let not that trouble you, for, In my Fathers houſe are many manſions. And ſo we have done with the former branch of this laſt part, That it is piouſly done to beleeve theſe degrees of glory in Heaven; That they have inconſiderately extended this C probleme in the Roman Church, That no Scriptures are ſo evident as to induce a neceſſity in it, That this Scripture conduces not at all to it; and therefore we paſſe to our laſt Conſideration, The right uſe of the right ſenſe of theſe words.

Conſolatio.

First then, Chriſt propoſes in theſe words Conſolation; A worke, then which none is more divine, nor more proper to God, nor to thoſe inſtruments, whom he ſends to worke upon the ſoules and conſciences of others. Who but my ſelfe can conceive the ſweetneſſe of that ſalutation, when the Spirit of God ſayes to me in a morning, Go forth to day and preach, and preach conſolation, preach peace, preach mercy, And ſpare my people, ſpare that people whom I have redeemed with my precious Blood, and be not angry with them for ever; Do not wound them, doe not grinde them, do not aſtoniſh them with the bitterneſſe, with the heavineſſe, with the ſharpneſſe, with the conſternation of my judgements. David propoſes to himſelfe, that he would Sing of mercy, and of Pſal. 101. 1. D judgement; but it is of mercy firſt; and not of judgement at all, otherwiſe then it will come into a ſong, as joy and conſolation is compatible with it. It hath falne into diſputation, and admitted argument, whether ever God inflicted puniſhments by his good Angels; But that the good Angels, the miniſteriall Angels of the Church, are properly his inſtruments, for conveying mercy, peace, conſolation, never fell into queſtion, never admitted oppoſition.

How heartily God ſeemes to utter, and how delightfully to inſiſt upon that, which he ſayes in Eſay, Conſolamini, conſolamini populum meum, Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, Eſay 40. 1. And Loquimini ad cor, Speake to the heart of Ieruſalem, and tell her, Thine iniquities are pardoned? How glad Chriſt ſeemes that he had it for him, when he gives the ſick man that comfort, Fili confide, My ſon be of good comfort, thy ſins are forgiven thee? What a Coronation is our taking of Orders, by which God makes us a Royall Prieſthood? And what E an intbronization is the comming up into a Pulpit, where God inveſts his ſervants with his Ordinance, as with a Cloud, and then preſſes that Cloud with a Væ ſi non, woe be unto thee, if thou doe not preach, and then enables him to preach peace, mercy, conſolation, to the whole Congregation. That God ſhould appeare in a Cloud, upon the Mercy Seat, as he promiſes Moſes he will doe, That from ſo poore a man as ſtands here, wrapped Levit. 16. 2. up in clouds of infirmity, and in clouds of iniquity, God ſhould drop, raine, poure downe his dew, and ſweeten that dew with his honey, and cruſt that honied dew into Manna, and multiply that Manna into Gomers, and fill thoſe Gomers every day, and give every particular man his Gomer, give every ſoule in the Congregation, conſolation by me; That when I call to God for grace here, God ſhould give me grace for grace, Grace in a power to derive grace upon others, and that this Oyle, this Balſamum ſhould flow to the hem of the garment, even upon them that ſtand under me; That when mine eyes looke up to Heaven, the eyes of all ſhould looke up upon me, and God ſhould open my mouth, to give them meat in due ſeaſon; That I ſhould not onely be able to ſay, as Chriſt ſaid to that poore ſoule, Confide fili, My ſon be of good comfort, but Fratres & Patres mei, My Brethren, and my Fathers, nay Domini mei, and Rex meus, My Lords, and my King be of good comfort, your ſins are forgiven you; That God ſhould ſeale to me that Patent, Ite prædicate omni Creaturæ, Goe and preach the Goſpell to every Creature, be that creature what he will, That if God lead me into a Congregation, as into his Arke, where there are but eight ſoules, but a few diſpoſed to a ſenſe of his mercies, and all the reſt (as in the Arke) ignobler creatures, and of brutall natures and affections, That if I finde a licentious Goat, a ſupplanting Fox, an uſurious Wolfe, an ambitious Lion, yet to that creature, to every creature I ſhould preach the Goſpel of peace and conſolation, and offer theſe creatures a Metamorphoſis, a transformation, a new Creation in Chriſt Jeſus, and thereby make my Goat, and my Fox, and my Wolfe, and my Lion, to become Semen Dei, The ſeed of God, and Filium Dei, The child of God, and Participem Divinæ Naturæ, Partaker of the Divine Nature it ſelfe; This is that which Chriſt is eſſentially in himſelfe, This is that which miniſterially and inſtrumentally he hath committed to me, to ſhed his conſolation upon you, upon you all; Not as his Almoner to drop his conſolation upon one ſoule, nor as his Treaſurer to iſſue his conſolation to a whole Congregation, but as his Ophir, as his Indies, to derive his gold, his precious conſolation upon the King himſelfe.

What would a good Judge, a good natured Judge give in his Circuit, what would you, in whoſe breaſts the Judgements of the Star-chamber, or other criminall Courts are, give, that you had a warrant from the King, to change the ſentence of blood into a pardon, where you found a Delinquent penitent? How rufully do we heare the Prophets groane under that Onus viſionis, which they repeat ſo often, O the burden of my viſion upon Judah, or upon Moab, or Damaſcus, or Babylon, or any place? Which is not only that that judgement would be a heavy burden upon that place, but that it was a heavy burden to them to denounce that judgement, even upon Gods enemies. Our errand, our joy, our Crowne is Conſolation: for, if we conſider the three Perſons of the holy, bleſſed and glorious Trinity, and their working upon us, a third part of their worke (if we may ſo ſpeake) is conſolation; the Father is Power, the Son Wiſdome, and the Holy Ghoſt Conſolation: for the Holy Ghoſt is not in a Vulture, that hovers over Armies, and infected Cities, and feeds upon carcaſſes, But the Holy Ghoſt is in a Dove, that would not make a Congregation a ſlaughter-houſe, but feeds upon corne, corne that hath in nature a diſpoſition to a reviviſcence, and a repullulation, and would imprint in you al, the conſolation and ſenſe of a poſſibility of returning to a new, and a better life. God found me nothing, and of that nothing made me; Adam left me worſe then God found me, worſe then nothing, the child of wrath, corrupted with the leaven of Originall ſin; Chriſt Jeſus found me worſe then Adam left me, not onely ſowred with Originall, but ſpotted, and gangrened, and dead, and buried, and putrified in actual and habitual ſins, and yet in that ſtate redeemed me; And I make my ſelfe worſe then Chriſt found me, and in an inordinate dejection of ſpirit, conceive a jealouſie and ſuſpition, that his merit concernes not me, that his blood extends not to my ſin; And in this laſt and worſt ſtate, the Holy Ghoſt finds me, the Spirit of Conſolation, And he ſends a Barnabas, a ſon of Conſolation unto me, A Barnabas to my ſick bed ſide, A Phyſitian that comforts with hopes, and meanes of health, A Barnabas to my broken fortune, A potent and a loving friend, that aſſiſts the reparation, and the eſtabliſhing of my ſtate, A Barnabas into the Pulpit, that reſtores and rectifies my conſcience, and ſcatters, and diſpels all thoſe clouds that inveſted it, and infeſted it before. That un-imaginable worke of the Creation were not ready for a Sabbath, though I be a Creature, and a man, I could have no Sabbath, no reſt, no peace of conſcience; That un-expreſſible worke of the Redemption were not ready for that Seale, which our Saviour ſet to it upon the Croſſe, in the Conſummatum eſt; All were not finiſhed that concerned me, if the Holy Ghoſt were not ready to deliver that which Chriſt ſealed, and to witneſſe that which were ſo delivered, that that Spirit might ever teſtifie to my ſpirit, That all that Chriſt Jeſus ſaid, and did, and ſuffered, was ſaid, and done, and ſuffered for my ſoule. Conſolation is not all, if we conſider

A sider God, but if I consider my selfe, and my state, Consolation is all.

Consolatio vera.

Christs meaning then in this place, was to establish in his Disciples this Consolation; but thus, Si quo minus, If it were not thus, I would tell you; If this were not true consolation, I would not delude you, I would not entertaine you with false: for he is Deus omnium misserationum, The God of all mercies, and yet he will not shew mercy to them, who sin upon presumption; So he is Deus omnium Consolationum, The God of all Comforts, and yet will not comfort them, who rely upon the false, and miserable comforts of this world. How many, how very many of us doe otherwise? Otherwise to others, otherwise to our own Consciences? Delude all with false Comforts? They would not suffer Christ himselfe to sleepe upon a pillow in a storme, but they waked him with that, Master, carest not thou, though we perish? When will we wake any Master, any upon whom we depend, and say, Master, carest not thou, though thou perish? We suffer others, B whom we should instruct, and we suffer our selves to passe on to the last gaspe, and we never rebuke our Consciences, till our Consciences rebuke us at last, Alas, it is otherwise, and you never told us.

Mar. 4. 38.

Domus.

Christ comforts then, he disputes not, that is not his way; He ministers true comfort, he flatters not, that is not his way; And in this true comfort, the first beame is, That that state which he promises them is a House, In my Fathers House, &c. God hath a progresse house, a removing house here upon earth, His house of prayer; At this houre, God enters into as many of these houses, as are opened for his service at this houre: But his standing house, his house of glory, is that in Heaven, and that he promises them. God himselfe dwelt in Tents in this world, and he gives them a House in Heaven. A House, in the designe and survay whereof, the Holy Ghost himselfe is figurative, the Fathers wanton, and the School-men wilde. The Holy Ghost, in describing this House, fills our con- C templation with foundations, and walls, and gates, of gold, of precious stones, and all materialls, that we can call precious. The Holy Ghost is figurative; And the Fathers are wanton in their spirituall elegancies, such as that of S. Augustins, (if that booke be his) Hiems horrens, Æstas torrens, And, Virent prata, vernant sata, and such other harmonious, and melodious, and mellifluous cadences of these waters of life. But the School-men are wild; for as one Author, who is afraid of admitting too great a hollownesse in the Earth, lest then the Earth might not be said to be solid, pronounces that Hell cannot possibly be above three thousand miles in compasse, (and then one of the torments of Hell will be the throng, for their bodies must be there, in their dimensions, as well as their soules) so when the School-men come to measure this house in heaven, (as they will measure it, and the Master, God, and all his Attributes, and tell us how Allmighty, and how Infinite he is) they pronounce, that every soule in that house shall have more roome to it D selfe, then all this world is. We know not that; nor see we that the consolation lyes in that; we rest in this, that it is a House, It hath a foundation, no Earth-quake shall shake it, It hath walls, no Artillery shall batter it, It hath a roofe, no tempest shall pierce it. It is a house that affords security, and that is one beame; And it is Domus patris, His Fathers house, a house in which he hath interest, and that is another beame of his Consolation.

Rev. 21.

Munster.

Patris.

It was his Fathers, and so his; And his, and so ours; for we are not joynt purchasers of Heaven with the Saints, but we are co-heires with Christ Jesus. We have not a place there, because they have done more then enough for themselves, but because he hath done enough for them and us too. By death we are gathered to our Fathers in nature; and by death, through his mercy, gathered to his Father also. Where we shall have a full satisfaction, in that wherein S. Philip placed all satisfaction, Ostende nobis patrem, E Lord, shew us thy Father, and it is enough. We shall see his Father, and see him made ours in him.

Mansiones.

And then a third beame of this Consolation is, That in this house of his Fathers, thus by him made ours, there are Mansions; In which word, the Consolation is not placed, (I doe not say, that there is not truth in it) but the Consolation is not placed in this, That some of these Mansions are below, some above staires, some better seated, better lighted, better vaulted, better fretted, better furnished then others; but onely in this, That they are Mansions; which word, in the Originall, and Latin, and our Language, signifies a Remaining, and denotes the perpetuity, the everlastingnesse of that state. A state but of one Day, because no Night shall over-take, or determine it, but such a Day, as is not of a thouſand yeares, which is the longeſt meaſure in the Scriptures, but of a thouſand millions of millions of generations: Qui nec præceditur heſterno, nec excluditur craſtino, A day that hath no pridie, nor poſtridie, yeſterday doth not uſher it in, nor to morrow ſhall not drive it out. Methuſalem, with all his hundreds of yeares, was but a Muſhrome of a nights growth, to this day, And all the foure Monarchies, with all their thouſands of yeares, And all the powerfull Kings, and all the beautifull Queenes of this world, were but as a bed of flowers, ſome gathered at ſix, ſome at ſeaven, ſome at eight, All in one Morning, in reſpect of this Day. In all the two thouſand yeares of Nature, before the Law given by Moſes, And the two thouſand yeares of Law, before the Goſpel given by Chriſt, And the two thouſand of Grace, which are running now, (of which laſt houre we have heard three quarters ſtrike, more then fifteen hundred of this laſt two thouſand ſpent) In all this ſix thouſand, and in all thoſe, which God may be pleaſed to adde, In domo patris, In this Houſe of his Fathers, there was never heard quarter clock to ſtrike, never ſeen minute glaſſe to turne. No time leſſe then it ſelfe would ſerve to expreſſe this time, which is intended in this word Manſions; which is alſo exalted with another beame, that they are Multa, In my Fathers Houſe there are many Manſions. A B

Auguſt.

Multa.

In this Circumſtance, an Eſſentiall, a Subſtantiall Circumſtance, we would conſider the joy of our ſociety, and converſation in heaven, ſince ſociety and converſation is one great element and ingredient into the joy, which we have in this world. We ſhall have an aſſociation with Chriſt himſelfe; for where he is, it is his promiſe, that we alſo ſhall be. We ſhall have an aſſociation with the Angels, and ſuch a one, as we ſhall be ſuch as they. We ſhall have an aſſociation with the Saints, and not onely ſo, to be ſuch as they, but to be they: And with all who come from the Eaſt, and from the Weſt, and from the North, and from the South, and ſit down with Abraham, and Iſaac, and Iacob in the kingdome of heaven. Where we ſhall be ſo far from being enemies to one another, as that we ſhall not be ſtrangers to one another: And ſo far from envying one another, as that all that every one hath, ſhall be every others poſſeſſion: where all ſoules ſhall be ſo intirely knit together, as if all were but one ſoule, and God ſo intirely knit to every ſoule, as if there were as many Gods as ſoules.

Mat. 8. 11. C

Be comforted then, ſayes Chriſt to them, for This, which is a Houſe, and not a Ship, not ſubject to ſtormes by the way, nor wrecks in the end, My Fathers Houſe, not a ſtrangers, in whom I had no intereſt, A Houſe of Manſions, a dwelling, not a ſojourning, And of many Manſions, not an Abridgement, a Modell of a Houſe, not a Monaſtery of many Cells, but an extenſion of many Houſes, into the City of the living God, This houſe ſhall [illegible] though I depart from you. Chriſt is nearer us, when we behold him with the eyes of faith in Heaven, then when we ſeeke him in a piece of bread, or in a ſacramentall box here. Drive him not away from thee, by wrangling and diſputing how he is preſent with thee; unneceſſary doubts of his preſence may induce fearfull aſſurances of his abſence: The beſt determination of the Reall preſence is to be ſure, that thou be really preſent with him, by an aſcending faith: Make ſure thine own Reall preſence, and doubt not of his: Thou art not the farther from him, by his being gone thither before thee. D

No, nor though Peter be gone thither before thee neither, which was the other point, in which the Apoſtles needed conſolation; They were troubled that Chriſt would goe, and none of them, and troubled that Peter might goe, and none but he. What men ſoever God take into heaven before thee, though thy Father that ſhould give thee thy education, though thy Paſtor that ſhould give thee thy inſtruction, though theſe men may be ſuch in the ſtate, and ſuch in the Church, as thou mayeſt thinke the Church and ſtate cannot ſubſiſt without them, Diſcourage not thy ſelfe, neither admit a jealouſie or ſuſpition of the providence and good purpoſe of God; for, as God hath his panier full of Manna, and of Quailes, and can powre out to morrow, though he have powred them out plentifully upon his friends before; ſo God hath his Quiver full of arrows, and can ſhoot as powerfully, as heretofore, upon his Enemies. I forbid thee not S. Pauls wiſh, Cupio diſſolvi, To deſire to be diſſolved, therefore, that thou mayeſt be with Chriſt; I forbid thee not Davids ſigh, Hei mihi, Woe is me that I muſt dwell ſo long with them that love not peace! I onely enjoyne thee thy Saviours Veruntamen, Yet not mine, but thy will, O Father, be done; That all thy wiſhes may have relation to his purpoſes, and all thy prayers may be inanimated with that, Lord manifeſt thy will unto me, and conforme my will unto thine. So ſhalt thou not be affrighted, as though God aymed at thee, when he ſhoots about the marke, E

A marke, and thou ſeeſt a thouſand fall at thy right hand, and ten thouſand at thy left; Nor diſcouraged as though God had left out thee, when thou ſeeſt him take others into garriſon, and leave thee in the field, aſſume others to Triumph, and leave thee in the Battell ſtill. For as Chriſt Jeſus would have come down from heaven, to have dyed for thee, though there had been no ſoule to have been ſaved but thine; So is he gone up to heaven, to prepare a place for thee, though all the ſoules in this world were to be ſaved as well as thine. Trouble not thy ſelfe with dignity, and priority, and precedency in Heaven, for Conſolation and Devotion conſiſt not in that, and thou wilt be the leſſe troubled with dignity, and priority, and precedency in this world, for Reſt and Quietneſſe conſiſt not in that.

B

SERM. LXXIV.

Preached at White-hall, the 30. Aprill 1620

PSAL. 144. 15. Being the firſt Pſalme for the day.

Bleſſed are the People that be ſo; Yea bleſſed are the People, whoſe God is the Lord.

C THe firſt part of this Text hath relation to temporall bleſſings, Bleſſed is the people that be ſo: The ſecond part to ſpirituall, Yea bleſſed is the people, whoſe God is the Lord. His left hand is under my head, ſaith the Spouſe; That ſuſtaines me from falling into murmuring, or diffidence of his Providence, becauſe out of his left hand he hath given me a competency of his temporall bleſſings; But his right hand doth embrace mee, ſaith the Spouſe there; His ſpirituall bleſſings fill me, poſſeſſe me, ſo that no rebellious fire breaks out within me, no outward tentation breaks in upon me. So alſo ſayes Solomon againe, In her left hand is riches and glory, (temporall bleſſings) and in her right hand length of dayes, all that accompliſhes and fulfils the eternall joyes of the Saints of heaven. The perſon to whom Solomon attributes this right and left hand is Wiſedome; And a wiſe man may reach out his right and left hand, to receive the bleſſings of both ſorts. And the perſon whom Solomon repreſents by Wiſedome there, is Chriſt himſelfe. So that not onely a worldly wiſeman, but a Chriſtian wiſeman may reach out both hands, to both kinds of bleſſings, right and left, ſpirituall and temporall. And therefore, Interrogo vos, filios regni cælorum, ſaith S. Auguſtine, Let mee ask you, who are ſonnes and heires of the Kingdome of Heaven, Progeniem Reſurrectionis in æternum, You that are the off-ſpring of the Reſurrection of Chriſt Jeſus, and have your reſurrection in his, Membra Chriſti, Templa Spiritus Sancti, You that are the very body of Chriſt, you that are the very temples of the Holy Ghoſt, Interrogo vos, Let me ask you, for all your great reverſion hereafter, for all that preſent poſſeſſion which you have of it, in an apprehenſive faith, and in a holy converſation in this life, for all that bleſſednеſſe, Non eſt iſta felicitas? Is there not a bleſſednеſſe in enjoying Gods temporall bleſſings here too? Sit licèt, ſed ſiniſtra, ſaith that Father; It is certainely a bleſſednеſſe, but a left handed bleſſednеſſe, a weaker, a more imperfect bleſſednеſſe, then ſpirituall bleſſings are.

Cant. 2. 6.

Prov. 3. 16.

D

E As then there is dextra, and ſiniſtra beatitudo, a right handed, and a left handed bleſſednеſſe in the Text; ſo there is dextra and ſiniſtra Interpretatio, a right and a left Expoſition of the Text. And as both theſe bleſſednеſſes, temporall and ſpirituall, are ſeales and teſtimonies of Gods love, though not both of equall ſtrength, and equall evidence; ſo both the Interpretations of theſe words are uſefull for our edification, though they bee not both of equall authority. That which we call Similtram Interpretationem, is that ſenſe of theſe words, which ariſes from the firſt Tranſlators of the Bible, the Septuagint, and thoſe Fathers which followed them; which, though it bee not an ill way, is not the beſt, becauſe it is not according to the letter; and then, that which we call Dextram Interpretationem, tionem, is that ſenſe which ariſes pregnantly, and evidently, liquidly, and manifeſtly out of the Originall Text it ſelfe. A

The Authors and followers of the firſt ſenſe reade not theſe words as we doe, Beatus populus, That people is bleſſed, but Beatum dixerunt populum, That people was eſteemed bleſſed; and ſo they referre this and all the temporall bleſſings mentioned in the three former Verſes to a popular error, to a generall miſtaking, to the opinions, and words of wicked and worldly men, that onely they deſire theſe temporall things, onely they taſte a ſweetneſſe, and apprehend a bleſſedneſſe in them; whereas they who have truely their converſation in heaven, are ſwallowed up with the contemplation of that bleſſedneſſe, without any reflection upon earth or earthly things. But the Author of the ſecond ſenſe, which is God himſelfe, and his direct word, preſents it thus, Beatus populus, That people is truely bleſſed, there is a true bleſſedneſſe in temporall things; but yet, this is but ſiniſtra beatitudo, a leſſe perfect bleſſedneſſe; For the followers of both Interpretations, and B all Tranſlators, and all Expoſitors meet in this, That the perfect, the accompliſhing, the conſummatory bleſſedneſſe is onely in this, That our God be the Lord.

Interpretatio Firſt then, to make our beſt uſe of the firſt ſenſe, That temporall things conduce not at all to bleſſedneſſe, S. Cyprians wonder is juſt, Deum nobis ſolis contentum eſſe, nobis non ſufficere Deum; That God ſhould think man enough for him, and man ſhould not bee ſatiſfied with God; That God ſhould be content with Fili da mihi cor, My ſonne give me thy heart, and man ſhould not be content with Pater da mihi Spiritum, My God, my Father, grant me thy Spirit, but muſt have temporall additions too. Non eſt caſtum cor, ſaith S. Auguſtine, ſi Deum ad mercedem colit; as he ſaith in another place, Non eſt caſta uxor, quæ amat quia dives, She is never the honeſter woman, nor the lovinger wife, that loves her husband in contemplation of her future joynture, or in fruition of her preſent abundancies; ſo hee ſayes here, Non eſt caſtum cor, That man hath not a chaſt, a ſincere heart towards God, that loves him by the meaſure end proportion of his temporall bleſſings. C
The Devill had ſo much colour for that argument, that in proſperity there can bee no triall, whether a man love God or no, as that he preſſes it even to God himſelfe, in Iobs Iob 1. caſe: Doth Iob ſerve God for nought? haſt not thou hedged him in, and bleſſed the works of his hands, and encreaſed his ſubſtance? How canſt thou tell whether he will love thee, or feare thee, if thou ſhouldſt take away all this from him? thou haſt had no triall yet. And this argument deſcended from that father to his children, from the Devill there, to thoſe followers of his whom the Prophet Malachy reprehends for ſaying, It is in vaine Mal. 3. 14. to ſerve God, for what profit is it, that wee have kept his commandements? When men are willing to prefer their friends, we heare them often give theſe teſtimonies of a man; He hath good parts, and you need not be aſhamed to ſpeake for him; hee hath money in his purſe, and you need not be ſorry to ſpeak for him; he underſtands the world, he knowes D how things paſſe, and he hath a diſcreet, a ſupple, and an appliable diſpoſition, and hee may make a fit inſtrument for all your purpoſes, and you need not be afraid to ſpeake for him. But who ever caſts into this ſcale and valuation of a man, that waight, that he hath a religious heart, that hee feares God? what profit is there in that, if wee conſider this world onely?

But what profits it a man, if he get all the world, and loſe his owne ſoule? And therefore that opinion, That there was no profit at all, no degree towards bleſſedneſſe in thoſe temporall things, prevailed ſo farre, as that it is eaſie to obſerve in their Expoſitions upon the Lords Prayer, that the greateſt part of the Fathers doe ever interpret that Petition, Da nobis hodie, Give us this day our daily bread, to be intended onely of ſpirituall bleſſings, and not of temporall; So S. Hierome ſaith, when we aſk that bread, Illum petimus, qui panis vivus eſt, & deſcendit de cælo; we make our petition for him, who is the bread of life, E and deſcended from the boſome of the Father; and ſo he refers it to Chriſt, and in him, to the whole myſtery of our Redemption. And Athanaſius and S. Auguſtine too (and not they two alone) refer it to the Sacramentall bread; That in that Petition, wee deſire ſuch an application of the bread of life, as wee have in the participation of the body and blood of Chriſt Jeſus in that Communion. S. Cyprian inſiſts upon the word Noſtrum, Our bread; For, ſaith he, temporall bleſſings cannot properly bee called Ours, becauſe they are common to the Saints, and to the reprobates; but in a prayer ordained by Chriſt for the faithfull, the petition is for ſuch things as are proper, and peculiar to the faithfull, and that is for ſpirituall bleſſings onely. If any man ſhall ſay, Ideo quærenda,

quia

A quia neceſſaria, We muſt pray, and we muſt labour for temporall things, becauſe they are neceſſary for us, we cannot be without them, Ideo non quærenda quia neceſſaria, ſayes S. Chryſoſtome, ſo much of them, as is neceſſary for our beſt ſtate, God will give us, without this laborious anxiety, and without eating the bread of ſorrow in this life, Non ſperandum de ſuperfluis, non deſperandum de neceſſariis, ſayes the ſame Father; It is a ſuſpicious thing to doubt or diſtruſt God in neceſſary things, and it is an unmannerly thing to preſſe him in ſuperfluous things. They are not neceſſary before, and they are not ours after: for thoſe things onely are ours, which no body can take from us: and for temporall thing, Auferre poteſt inimicus homo, invito: Let the inimicus homo be the devill, and remember Iobs caſe, Let the inimicus homo be any envious and powerfull man, who hath a minde to that that thou haſt, and remember Naboths caſe, and this envious man can take any temporall thing from thee againſt thy will. But ſpirituall bleſſings cannot bee
B taken ſo, Fidem nemo perdidit, niſi qui ſpreverit, ſayes S. Auguſtin, No man ever loſt his faith, but he that thought it not worth the keeping.

But for Iobs temporall eſtate ſayes S. Auguſtine, all was loſt. And leſt any man ſhould ſay, Vxor relicta erat, Iob had not loſt all, becauſe his Wife was left, Miſericordem putatis diabolum, ſaies that Father, qui ei reliquit Vxorem? doe you thinke that Iob lighted upon a mercifull and good natur'd devill, that the devill did this out of pity and compaſſion to Iob, or that Iob was beholding to the devill for this, that he left him his Wife? Noverat per quam deceperat Adam, ſayes he, The devill knew by what inſtrument he had deceived the firſt man, and by the ſame inſtrument he practiſes upon Iob; Suam reliquit adjutricem, non mariti conſolatricem, He left Iob a helper, but a helper for his owne ends, but for her Husband a miſerable comforter. Caro conjux, ſayes the ſame Father in another place, This fleſh, this ſenſuall part of ours, is our wife: and when theſe temporall
C things by any occaſion are taken from us, that wife, that fleſh, that ſenſuality is left to murmure and repine at Gods corrections, and that is all the benefit we have by that wife, and all the portion we have with that wife.

Though therefore S. Hierom, who underſtood the Originall Language, the beſt of his time, in his Tranſlation of the Pſalmes, doe give the true, the right ſenſe of this place, yet in his owne Commentaries upon the Pſalmes, he takes this firſt ſenſe, and beats upon that doctrine, that it is but a popular error, a generall miſtaking, to make worldly bleſſings any degree of happineſſe: he ſaw ſo good uſe of that doctrine, as that he would not ſee the right interpretation of the words: he ſaw well enough, that according to the letter of the text, temporall things were bleſſings, yet becauſe they were but left-handed bleſſings, remembring the ſtory in the booke of Judges, of 700. left-handed Benjamites, Iudg. 20. 16.
that would ſling ſtones at a haires breadth, and were better mark-men then the right-
D handed, and conſidering the left-handed men of this world, thoſe who purſue temporall bleſſings onely, went with moſt earneſtneſſe, and beſt ſucceſſe to their works, to correct that generall diſtemper, that generall vehemence upon temporall things, S. Hierom, and ſo many of the Fathers as accompany him in that interpretation, were content to embrace that ſenſe, which is not truly the literall ſenſe of this place, that it ſhould be only Beatum dixerint, and not Beatus populus, a popular error, and not a truth, that any man, for any people, were bleſſed in temporall things; and ſo we have done with the firſt ſenſe of theſe words, and the reaſon why ſo many follow it.

We are come now to the ſecond Interpretation: where there is not Beatitudo falſa and 2. Interpretatio.
vera, for both are true, but there is dextra and ſiniſtra, a right-handed and left-handed bleſſedneſſe; there is Inchoativa and perfectiva, there is an introductory, and a conſummatory bleſſedneſſe: and in the firſt of theſe, in the left-handed, in the leſſe perfect bleſ-
E ſedneſſe, we muſt conſider three things. Firſt, Beatitudinem ipſam, That there is a bleſſedneſſe propoſed: and ſecondly, In quibus, in what that bleſſedneſſe is placed in this text, Quibus ſic, bleſſed are they that are ſo, that is, ſo, as is mentioned in the three former verſes: and thirdly, another In quibus, not in what things, but in what perſons this firſt bleſſedneſſe is placed, Beatus populus, It is when all the people, the whole body, and not ſome ranks of men, nor ſome particular men in thoſe ranks, but when all the people participate of theſe bleſſings.

Now firſt, for this firſt bleſſedneſs, As no Philoſophers could ever tell us amongſt Beatitudo.
the Gentiles, what true bleſſedneſs was, ſo no Grammarian amongſt the Jews, amongſt the Hebrews, could ever tell us, what the right ſignification of this word is, in which which David expreſſes bleſſedneſs here; whether Aſherei, which is the word, be a plurall Noune, and ſignifie Beatitudines, Bleſſednesſes in the plurall, and intimate thus much, that bleſſedneſs conſiſts not in any one thing, but in a harmony and conſent of many; or whether this Aſherei be an Adverbe, and ſignifie beatè, and ſo be an acclamation, O how happily, how bleſſedly are ſuch men provided for that are ſo; they cannot tell. Whatſoever it bee, it is the very firſt word, with which David begins his booke of Pſalmes; Beatus vir: as the laſt word of that booke is, Laudate Dominum; to ſhew, that all that paſſes betweene God and man, from firſt to laſt, is bleſſings from God to man, and praiſes from man to God; and that the firſt degree of bleſſedneſſe is, to finde the print of the hand of God, even in his temporall bleſſedneſſe, and to praiſe and glorifie him for them, in the right uſe of them. A

A man that hath no land to hold by it, nor title to recover by it, is never the better, for finding, or buying, or having a faire peece of evidence, a faire inſtrument, fairely written, duly ſealed, authentically teſtified; A man that hath not the grace of God, and ſpirituall bleſſings too, is never the neerer happineſſe, for all his abundances of temporall bleſſedneſſe. Evidences are evidences to them who have title. Temporall bleſſings are evidences to them, who have a teſtimony of Gods ſpirituall bleſſings in the temporall. Otherwiſe as in his hands, who hath no Title, it is a ſuſpicious thing to finde evidences, and he will be thought to have embeazeled and purloyned them, he will bee thought to have forged and counterfaited them, and he will be called to an account for them, how he came to them, and what he meant to doe with them: ſo to them, who have temporall bleſſings without ſpirituall, they are but uſeleſſe bleſſings, they are but counterfait bleſſings, they ſhall not purchaſe a minutes peace of conſcience here, nor a minutes refreſhing to the ſoule hereafter; and there muſt be a heavy account made for them, both how they were got, and how they were employed. B C

1 Tim. 4. 8. But when a man hath a good title to Heaven, then theſe are good evidences: for, Godlineſſe hath a promiſe of the life to come, and of the life that now is; and if we ſpend any thing in maintenance of that title, give, or loſe any thing for his glory and making ſure this Mat. 19. 29. ſalvation, We ſhall inherit everlaſting life, ſayes the beſt ſurety in the world; but we ſhall not ſtay ſo long for our bill of charge, we ſhall have A hundred fold in this life. S. Auguſtine ſeemes loath to take Chriſt at that large word, he ſeemes to thinke it too great uſury, to take a hundred fold for that which we have laid out for Chriſt: And therefore he reads that place, Accipiet ſeptics tantum, He ſhall receive ſeven times as much, in this life. But in both the Euangeliſts, Matthew and Marke, the overflowing bounty and retribution of God is ſo expreſſed, Centuplum accipiet. God repaired Iob ſo, as he had beene impaired; God recompenced him in ſpecie, in the ſame kinde as he had beene damnified. And Chriſt teſtifies of himſelfe, that his comming to us is not onely, Vt vitam habeatis, ſed habeatis abundantiùs; More abundantly; that is, as diverſe of the Fathers interpret it, that you might have eternall life ſealed to you, in the proſperity and abundancies of this life. I am the doore, ſayes Chriſt, in the ſame Chapter: we muſt not thinke to flye over wals, by ſudden and undeſerved preferments, nor to ſap and undermine, and ſupplant others; wee muſt enter at that doore, by faire and Chriſtian meanes: And then, By me if any man enter, ſayes Chriſt there, he ſhall be ſaved; there is a rich and bleſſed inheritance; but before he come to that ſalvation, He ſhall goe in and out, and finde paſture, ſayes that text. Now, in Heaven there is no going in and out; but in his way to Heaven, in this life, he ſhall finde his intereſt in the next, conveied and ſealed to him in temporall bleſſings here. D

Iohn 9. 10.

If Plato found and acknowledged a happineſſe in that, Quòd natus homo, that he was borne a man, and not a beaſt, (Lactantius adds in Platoes behalfe, when he cites that place out of him, Quòd natus vir, that he was borne a man and not a woman) if he found a farther happineſſe, Quòd Græcus, that he was borne a Grecian, and not a Barbarian; quòd Athenienſis, that he was borne in the Towne which was the receptacle, and dwelling of all wiſdome; and quòd tempore Socratis, and that he was borne in Socrates his time, that ſo he might have a good example, as well as a good rule for his life: As all we owe to God an acknowledgement of bleſſedneſſe, that we are borne in a Chriſtian Church, in a Reformed Church, in a Monarchy, in a Monarchy compoſed of Monarchies, and in the time of ſuch a Monarch, as is a Peace-maker, and a peace-preſerver both at home and abroad; ſo let all them who are borne of Nobility, or borne up to Nobility upon the E

two

A two faire wings of merit and of favour, all that are borne to riches, and born up and born out by their riches, all whom their induſtry, and wiſedome, and uſefulneſſe to the State, hath or may any way preferre, take heed of ſeparating the Author and the meanes; of ſeparating God and the King, in the wayes of favour; of ſeparating God and their riches, in the wayes of purchaſe; of ſeparating God and their wiſedome, in the wayes of preferment; but let them alwayes diſcerne, and alwayes acknowledge, the hand of God, the Author, in directing and proſpering the hand of his inſtrument in all theſe temporall things, and then, theſe temporall things are truly bleſſings unto them, and they are truly bleſſed in them.

In quibus.

This was our firſt Conſideration, our firſt branch in this part, that temporall things were ſeales and teſtimonies of bleſſedneſſe; The ſecond is, to what particular evidence this ſeale is annexed in this text, upon what things this bleſſedneſſe is placed here; which
B are all involved in this one little particle, this monaſyllable So, Bleſſed are they that are ſo; that is, ſo, as a prayer is made in the three former verſes, that they might be. Now as the maledictions which were threatned to David, were preſented to him by the Prophet in three formes, of warre, of famine, of peſtilence; ſo theſe bleſſings which are comprized in thoſe three verſes, may well be reduced to three things contrary to thoſe three maledictions; To the bleſſing of peace, contrary to Davids warre, That there may be no invaſion; Ver. 14. To the bleſſing of plenty, contrary to Davids famine, That our barnes may abound with all ſorts of Corne; Ver. 13. To the bleſſing of health, contrary to Davids deſtroying ſickneſſe, That our ſonnes may grow up as plants in their youth. Ver. 12.

Pax.

For the firſt temporall bleſſing of peace, we may conſider the lovelineſſe, the amiableneſſe of that, if we looke upon the horror and gaſtlineſſe of warre: either in Effigie, in that picture of warre, which is drawn in every leafe of our own Chronicles, in the blood
C of ſo many Princes, and noble families, or if we look upon warre it ſelfe, at that diſtance where it cannot hurt us, as God had formerly kindled it amongſt our neighbours, and as he hath transferred it now to remoter Nations, whileſt we enjoy yet a Goſhen in the midſt of all thoſe Egypts. In all Cities, diſorderly and facinorous men, covet to draw themſelves into the skirts and ſuburbs of thoſe Cities, that ſo they may be the nearer the ſpoyle, which they make upon paſſengers. In all Kingdomes that border upon other Kingdomes, and in Iſlands which have no other border but the Sea, particular men, who by dwelling in thoſe skirts and borders, may make their profit of ſpoile, delight in hoſtility, and have an adverſeneſſe and deteſtation of peace: but it is not ſo within: they who till the earth, and breed up cattell, and imploy their induſtry upon Gods creatures, according to Gods ordinance, feele the benefit and apprehend the ſweetneſſe, and pray for the continuance of peace.

Copia.

D This is the bleſſing, in which God ſo very very often expreſſes his gracious purpoſe upon his people, that he would give them peace; and peace with plenty; O that my people had hearkned unto me! ſayes God, I would ſoone have humbled their enemies, (there is their peace) And I would have fed them with the fat of wheat, and with the honey out of the Rocke, and there is their plenty. Perſons who are preferred for ſervice in the warre, prove often ſuſpicious to the Prince. Ioabs confidence in his own merit and ſervice, made him inſolent towards the King, and the King jealous of him. But no man was more ſuddenly nor more ſafely preferred then Ioſeph, for his counſell to reſiſt penury, and to preſerve plenty and abundance within the Land. See Baſil in an Homily which he made in a time of dearth and drought, in which he expreſſes himſelfe with as much elegancy, as any where, (and every where I thinke with as much as any man) where he ſayes, there was in the skie, Triſtis ſeveritas & ipſa puritate moleſta, That the ayre was the worſe for being E ſo good, and the fouler for being ſo faire; and where he inverts the words of our Saviour, Meſsis magna, operarii pauci, ſayes Chriſt, Here is a great harveſt, but few workmen; but Operarii multi, meſsis parva, ſayes Baſil, Here are workmen enow, but no harveſt to gather, in that Homily; He notes a barrenneſſe in that which uſed to be fruitfull, and a fruitfulneſſe in that which uſed to be barren; Terra ſterilis & aurum fœcundum, He prophecyed of our times; when not onely ſo many families have left the Country for the City, in their perſons, but have brought their lands into the City, they have brought all their Evidences into Scriveners ſhops, and changed all their renewing of leaſes every ſeaven yeares, into renewing of bonds every ſix moneths: They have taken a way to inflict a barrenneſſe upon land, and to extort a fruitfulneſſe from gold by uſury. Monſters may Pſal. 81. 13. & ult.

Luk. 10. 2.

may be got by unnaturall mixtures, but there is no race, no propagation of monſters: money may be raiſed by this kinde of uſe; but, Non hærebit, It is the ſweat of other men, and it will not ſtick to thine heire. Nay, commonly it brings not that outward bleſſing of plenty with it; for, for the moſt part, we ſee no men live more penuriouſly, more ſordidly, then theſe men doe. A

The third of theſe temporall bleſſings is health, without which both the other are no more to any man, then the Rainbow was to him who was ready to drowne; Quid mihi, ſi peream ego? ſayes he, what am I the better, that God hath paſt his word, and ſet to his ſeale in the heavens, that he will drowne the world no more, if I be drowned my ſelfe? What is all the peace of the world to me, if I have the rebellions and earth-quakes of ſhaking and burning Feavers in my body? What is all the plenty of the world to me, if I have a languiſhing conſumption in my blood, and in my marrow? The Heathens had a goddeſſe, to whom they attributed the care of the body, deam Carnam: And we that are Chriſtians, acknowledge, that Gods firſt care of man, was his body, he made that firſt; and his laſt care is reſerved for the body too, at the Reſurrection, which is principally for the benefit of the body. There is a care belongs to the health, and comelineſſe of the body. When the Romans canonized Pallorem and Febrim, Paleneſſe and Fevers, and made them gods, they would as faine have made them Devills, if they durſt; they worſhipped them onely, becauſe they ſtood in feare of them. Sickneſſe is a ſword of Gods, and health is his bleſſing. For when Hezekias had aſſurance enough, that he ſhould recover and live, yet he had ſtill a ſenſe of miſery, in that he ſhould not have a perfect ſtate of health. What ſhall I ſay, ſayes he, I ſhall walke weakly all my yeares, in the bitterneſſe of my ſoule. All temporall bleſſings are inſipid and taſtleſſe, without health. B

Eſay 38. 15.

Populus.

Now the third branch of this part, is the other In quibus, not the things, but the perſons, in whom theſe three bleſſings are here placed: And it is Beatus populus, when this bleſſedneſſe reaches to all, dilates it ſelfe over all. When David places bleſſedneſſe in one particular man, as he does in the beginning of the firſt Pſalme, Beatus vir, Bleſſed is that man, there he pronounces that man bleſſed, If he neither walke in the counſell of the wicked, nor ſtand in the way of ſinners, nor ſit in the ſeate of the ſcornfull. If he doe not all, walke, and ſtand, and ſit in the preſence and feare of God, he is not bleſſed. So, if theſe temporall bleſſings fall not upon all, in their proportions, the people is not bleſſed. The City may be bleſſed in the increaſe of acce[illegible]; And the Lawyer may be bleſſed in the increaſe of ſuits; and the Merchant may be bleſſed in the increaſe of meanes of getting, if he be come to get as well by taking, as by trading; but if all be not bleſſed, the people is not bleſſed: yea, if theſe temporall bleſſings reach not to the Prince himſelfe, the people is not bleſſed. For in favorabilibus Princeps è populo, is a good rule in the Law; in things beneficiall, the King is one of the people. When God ſayes by David, Let all the people bleſſe the Lord, God does not exempt Kings from that duty; and when God ſayes by him too, God ſhall bleſſe all the people, God does not exempt, not exclude Kings from that benefit; And therfore where ſuch things as conduce to the beeing, and the well-beeing, to the ſubſtance and ſtate, to the ceremony and majeſty of the Prince, be not chearfully ſupplied, and ſeaſonably adminiſtred, there that bleſſing is not fully faln upon them, Bleſſed is that people that are ſo; for the people are not ſo, if the Prince be not ſo. C D

Nay, the people are not bleſſed, if theſe bleſſings be not permanent; for, it is not onely they that are alive now, that are the people; but the people is the ſucceſſion. If we could imagine a bleſſing of health without permanency, we might call an intermitting ague, a good day in a fever, health. If we could imagine a bleſſing of plenty without permanency, we might call a full ſtomach, and a ſurfet, though in a time of dearth, plenty. If we could imagine a bleſſing of peace without permanency, we might call a nights ſleepe, though in the midſt of an Army, peace; but it is onely proviſion for the permanency and continuance, that makes theſe bleſſings bleſſings. To thinke of, to provide againſt famine, and ſickneſſe, and warre, that is the bleſſing of plenty, and health, and peace. E

Eſay 9.

One of Chriſts principall titles was, that he was Princeps pacis, and yet this Prince of peace ſayes, Non veni mittere pacem, I came not to bring you peace, not ſuch a peace as ſhould bring them ſecurity againſt all warre. If a Ship take fire, though in the midſt of the Sea, it conſumes ſooner, and more irrecoverably, then a thatched houſe upon Land: If God caſt a fire-brand of warre, upon a State accuſtomed to peace, it burnes the more deſperately, by their former ſecurity.

But

A But here in our Text we have a religious King, David, that firſt prayes for theſe bleſſings, (for the three former Verſes are a prayer) and then praiſes God in the acknowledgement of them; for this Text is an acclamatory, a gratulatory glorifying of God for them. And when theſe two meet in the conſideration of temporall bleſſings, a religious care for them, a religious confeſſing of them, prayer to God for the getting, praiſe to God for the having, Bleſſed is that people, that is, Head and members, Prince and ſubjects, preſent and future people, that are ſo; So bleſſed, ſo thankefull for their bleſſings.

We come now, Ad dextram dextræ, to the right bleſſedneſs, in the right ſenſe and interpretation of theſe words, to ſpirituall bleſſedneſs, to the bleſſedneſs of the ſoule. Eſtne Deo cura de bobus? is the Apoſtles queſtion, and his anſwer is pregnantly implied, God hath care of beaſts: But yet God cared more for one ſoule then for thoſe two thouſand B hogges which he ſuffered to periſh in the Sea, when that man was diſpoſſeſſed. A dram of ſpirituall is worth infinite talents of temporall. Here then in this ſpirituall bleſſedneſs (as we did in the former) wee ſhall looke firſt, Quid beatitudo, what it is; and then, In quibus, in what it is placed here, Vt Deus eorum ſit Dominus, That their God bee the Lord; And laſtly, the extent of it, That all the people bee made partakers of this ſpirituall bleſſedneſs.

2 Part. 1 Cor. 9. 9. Mar. 5. Beatitudo.

This bleſſedneſs then, you ſee is placed laſt in the Text; not that it cannot be had till our end, till the next life; In this caſe, the Nemo ante obitum failes, for it is in this life, that we muſt find our God to be the Lord, or elſe, if we know not that here, we ſhall meet his Neſcio vos, he will not know us; But it is placed laſt, becauſe it is the waightieſt, and the uttermoſt degree of bleſſedneſs, which can be had, To have the Lord for our God. Conſider the making up of a naturall man, and you ſhall ſee that hee is a convenient Type of a C ſpirituall man too.

Firſt, in a naturall man wee conceive there is a ſoule of vegetation and of growth; and ſecondly, a ſoule of motion and of ſenſe; and then thirdly, a ſoule of reaſon and underſtanding, an immortall ſoule. And the two firſt ſoules of vegetation, and of ſenſe, wee conceive to ariſe out of the temperament, and good diſpoſition of the ſubſtance of which that man is made, they ariſe out of man himſelfe; But the laſt ſoule, the perfect and immortall ſoule, that is immediatly infuſed by God. Conſider the bleſſedneſs of this Text, in ſuch degrees, in ſuch proportions. Firſt, God bleſſes a man with riches, there is his ſoule of vegetation and growth, by that hee growes in eſtimation, and in one kinde of true ability to produce good fruits, for he hath wherewithall. And then, God gives this rich man the bleſſing of underſtanding, his riches, how to employ them according to thoſe morall and civill duties, which appertaine unto him, and there is his ſoule of ſenſe; D for many rich men have not this ſenſe, many rich men underſtand their owne riches no more then the Oaks of the Forreſt doe their owne Akorns. But laſt of all, God gives him the bleſſing of diſcerning the mercy, and the purpoſe of God in giving him theſe temporall bleſſings, and there is his immortall ſoule. Now for the riches themſelves, (which is his firſt ſoule) he may have them ex traduce, by devolution from his parents; and the civill wiſedome, how to governe his riches, where to purchaſe, where to ſell, where to give, where to take, (which is his ſecond ſoule) this he may have by his owne acquiſition, and experience, and converſation; But the immortall ſoule, that is, the diſcerning of Gods image in every piece, and of the ſeale of Gods love in every temporall bleſſing, this is infuſed from God alone, and ariſes neither from Parents, nor the wiſedome of this world, how worldly wiſe ſo ever wee bee in the governing of our eſtate.

And this the Prophet may very well ſeeme to have intimated, when he ſaith, The generation of the righteous ſhall be bleſſed; Here is a permanent bleſſedneſs, to the generation. E Wherein is it expreſſed? thus; Riches and treaſure ſhall bee in his houſe, and his righteouſneſſe endureth for ever. Hee doth not ſay, that Simony, or Uſury, or Extortion ſhall bee in his houſe; for riches got ſo are not treaſure; Nor he doth not ſay, that Riches well got, and which are truely a bleſſing, ſhall endure for ever, but his righteouſneſſe ſhall endure for ever. The laſt ſoule, the immortall ſoule endures for ever. The bleſſedneſs of having ſtudied, and learnt, and practiſed the knowledge of Gods purpoſe in temporall bleſſings, this bleſſedneſs ſhall endure for ever; When thou ſhalt turne from the left to the right ſide, upon thy death bed, from all the honours, and riches of this world, to breathe thy ſoule into his hands that gave it, this righteouſneſs, this good conſcience ſhall endure then, and then accompany thee: And when thine eyes are closed, and in the twinckling of his eye that closed thine, thy soule shall be gone an infinite way from this honour, and these riches, this righteousnes, this good conscience shall endure then, and meet thee in the gates of heaven. And this is so much of that righteousnes, as is expressed in this Text, (because this is the root of all) That our God be the Lord. A

Pſal. 112. 1.

In quibus. In which, first wee must propose a God, that there is one, and then appropriate this God to our selves, that he be our God, and lastly, be sure that we have the right God, that our God be the Lord. For, for the first, he that enterprises any thing, seeks any thing, possesses any thing without recourse to God, without acknowledging God in that action, he is, for that particular, an Atheist, he is without God in that; and if hee doe so in most of his actions, he is for the most part an Atheist. If he be an Atheist every where, but in his Catechisme, if onely then he confesse a God when hee is asked, Doest thou beleeve that there is a God, and never confesse him, never consider him in his actions, it shall do him no good, to say at the last day, that he was no speculative Atheist, he never thought in his heart, that there was no God, if hee lived a practique Atheist, proceeded in all his actions without any consideration of him. But accustome thy selfe to find the presence of God in all thy gettings, in all thy preferments, in all thy studies, and he will be abundantly sufficient to thee for all. Quantumlibet sis avarus, saith S. Augustine, sufficit tibi Deus, Be as covetous as thou wilt; bee as ambitious as thou canst, the more the better; God is treasure, God is honour enough for thee. Avaritia terram quærit, saith the same Father, adde & Cælum; wouldst thou have all this world? wouldst thou have all the next world too? Plus est, qui fecit cælum & terram, He that made heaven and earth is more then all that, and thou mayest have all him. B

Noster. And this appropriates him so neare to us, as that hee is thereby Deus noster. For, it is not enough to finde Deum, a God; a great and incomprehensible power, that sits in luce, in light, but in luce inaccessibili, in light that we cannot comprehend. A God that enjoyes his owne eternity, his owne peace, his owne blessednes, but respects not us, reflects not upon us, communicates nothing to us. But it is a God, that is Deus noster; Ours, as we are his creatures; ours, as we are like him, made to his image; ours, as he is like us, in assuming our nature; ours, as he hath descended to us in his Incarnation; and ours, as we are ascended with him in his glorification: So that wee doe not consider God, as our God, except we come to the consideration of God in Christ, God and man. It is not enough to find Deum, a God in generall, nor to find Deum meum, a God so particularly my God, as that he is a God of my making: That I should seeke God by any other motions, or know God by any other notions, or worship God in any other fashions, then the true Church of God doth, for there he is Deus noster, as hee is received in the unanime consent of the Catholique Church. Sects are not bodies, they are but rotten boughes, gangrened limmes, fragmentary chips, blowne off by their owne spirit of turbulency, fallen off by the waight of their owne pride, or hewen off by the Excommunications and censures of the Church. Sects are no bodies, for there is Nihil nostrum, nothing in common amongst them, nothing that goes through them all; all is singular, all is meum and tuum, my spirit and thy spirit, my opinion and thy opinion, my God and thy God; no such apprehension, no such worship of God, as the whole Church hath evermore been acquainted withall, and contented with. C D

It is true, that every man must appropriate God so narrowly, as to find him to be Deum suum, his God; that all the promises of the Prophets, and all the performances of the Gospell, all that Christ Jesus said, and did, and suffered, belongs to him and his soule; but yet God is Deus meus, as he is Deus noster, my God, as he is our God, as I am a part of that Church, with which he hath promised to be till the end of the world, and as I am an obedient sonne of that Mother, who is the Spouse of Christ Jesus: For as S. Augustine saith of that Petition, Give us this day our daily bread, Vnde dicimus Da nostrum? How come we to ask that which is ours, Quomodo nostrum, quomodo da? if we be put to ask it, why doe wee call it ours? and then answers himselfe, Tuum confitendo, non eris ingratus, It is a thankfull part to confesse that thou hast some, that thou hast received some blessings; and then, Ab illo petendo, non eris vacuus, It is a wise and a provident part, to ask more of him, whose store is inexhaustible; So if I feele God, as hee is Deus meus, as his Spirit works in me, and thankfully acknowledge that, Non sum ingratus; But if I derive this Pipe from the Cistern, this Deus meus, from Deus noster, my knowledge and sense of E

A of God, from that knowledge which is communicated by his Church, in the preaching of his Word, in the administration of his Sacraments, in those other meanes which he hath instituted in his Church, for the assistance and reparation of my soule that way, Non ero vacuus, I shall have a fuller satisfaction, a more abundant refection then if I rely upon my private inspirations: for there he is Deus noster.

Now, as we are thus to acknowledge a God, and thus to appropriate that God; so we must be sure to confer this honour upon the right God, upon him who is the Lord. Now this name of God, which is translated the Lord here, is not the name of God, which presents him with relation to his Creatures: for so it is a problematicall, a disputable thing, Whether God could be called the Lord, before there were any Creatures. Tertullian denies absolutely that he could be called Lord till then; S. Augustin is more modest, he sayes, Non audeo dicere, I dare not say that he was not; but he does not affirme that B he was; Howsoever the name here, is not the name of Relation, but it is the name of his Essence, of his Eternity, that name, which of late hath beene ordinarily called Iehovah. So that we are not to trust in those Lords, Whose breath is in their nostrils, as the Prophet sayes, For, wherein are they to be esteemed? sayes he; we are lesse to trust in them, whose breath was never in their nostrils, such imaginary Saints, as are so far from hearing us in Heaven, as that they are not there: and so far from being there, as that they were never here: so farre from being Saints, as that they were never men, but are either fabulous illusions, or at least, but symbolicall and allegoricall allusions. Our Lord is the Lord of life and being, who gave us not onely a well-being in this life, (for that, other Lords can pretend to doe, and doe indeed, by preferments here) nor a beginning of a temporary being in this life, (for that our Parents pretend, and pretend truly to have done) nor onely an enlarging of our being in this life, (for that the King can doe by a Pardon, and C the Physitians by a Cordiall) but he hath given us an immortall being, which neither our Parents began in us, nor great persons can advance for us, nor any Prince can take from us. This is the Lord in this place, this is Iehova, and Germen Iehovæ, The Lord, and the off-spring of the Lord; and none is the off-spring of God, but God, that is, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. So that this perfect blessednesse consists in this, the true knowledge and worship of the Trinity.

Dominus.

Esay 2. ult.

Esay 4. 2.

And this blessing, that is, the true Religion and profession of Christ Jesus, is to be upon all the people; which is our last Consideration. Blessed is the Nation, whose God is the Lord, and the people whom he hath chosen for his Inheritance. And here againe (as in the former Consideration of temporall blessednesse) The people includes both Prince and people; and then, the blessing consists in this, that both Prince and people be sincerely affected to the true Religion; And then, the people includes all the people; and so, the blessing D consists in this, that there be an unanimitie, a consent in all, in matter of Religion; And lastly, the people includes the future people; and there, the blessing consists in this, that our posterity may enjoy the same purity of Religion that we doe. The first tentation that fell amonst the Apostles carried away one of them: Iudas was transported with the tentation of money; and how much? For thirty peeces, and in all likelihood he might have made more profit then that, out of the privy purse; The first tentation carried one, but the first persecution carried away nine, when Christ was apprehended, none was left but two, and of one of those two, S. Hierom saies, Vtinam fugisset & non negasset Christum, I would Peter had fled too, and not scandalized the cause more by his stay, in denying his Master: for, a man may stay in the outward profession of the true Religion, with such purposes, and to such ends, as he may thereby damnifie the cause more, and damnifie his owne soule more, then if he went away to that Religion, to which his conscience E (though ill rectified) directs him. Now, though when such tentations, and such persecutions doe come, the words of our Saviour Christ will alwayes be true, Feare not little flocke, for it is Gods pleasure to give you the Kingdome; though God can lay up his seed-corne in any little corner, yet the blessing intended here, is not in that little seed-corne, nor in the corner, but in the plenty, when all the people are blessed, and the blessed Spirit blowes where he will, and no doore nor window is shut against him.

Populus.

Psal. 33. 12.

Luke 12. 32.

And therefore let all us blesse God, for that great blessing to us, in giving us such Princes, as make it their care, Ne bona caduca sint, ne mala recidiva, That that blessednesse which we enjoy by them, may never depart from us, that those miseries which wee felt before them, may never returne to us. Almighty God make alwaies to us all, Prince and people, these temporall blessings which we enjoy now, Peace, and Plenty, and Health, seales of his spirituall blessings, and that spirituall blessednesse which we enjoy now, the profession of the onely true Religion, a seale of it selfe, and a seale of those eternall blessings, which the Lord the righteous Judge hath laid up for his, in that Kingdome which his Son, our Saviour hath purchased for us, with the inestimable price of his incorruptible blood. In which glorious Son of God, &c.

SERM. LXXV.

Preached to the King at VVhite-hall, April 15. 1628.

ESAY 32. 8.

But the liberall deviseth liberall things, and by liberall things he shall stand.

BY two wayes especially hath the Gospell beene propagated by men of letters, by Epistles, and by Sermons. The Apostles pursued both wayes; frequent in Epistles, assiduous in Sermons. And, as they had the name of Apostles, from Letters, from Epistles, from Missives, (for, the Certificates, and Testimonials, and safe-conducts, and letters of Credit, which issued from Princes Courts, or from Courts that held other Jurisdiction, were in the formularies and termes of Law called Apostles, before Christs Apostles were called Apostles) so they executed the office of their Apostleship so too, by Writing, & by Preaching. This succession in the Ministery of the Gospell did so too. Therefore it is said of S. Chrysostome, Vbiq; prædicavit, quia ubique lectus, He preached every where, because he was read every where. And, he that is said to have beene S. Chrysostomes disciple, Isidore, is said to have written ten thousand Epistles, and in them to have delivered a just, and full Commentary upon all the Scriptures. In the first age of all, they scarce went any other way, (for writing) but this, by Epistles. Of Clement, of Ignatius, of Polycarpus, of Martial, there is not much offered us, with any probability, but in the name of Epistles.

Chrysost.

Peluſiota.

When Christians gathered themselves with more freedome, and Churches were established with more liberty, Preaching prevailed; And there is no exercise, that is denoted by so many names, as Preaching. Origen began; for, (I thinke) we have no Sermons, till Origens. And though hee began early, (early, if wee consider the age of the Church, (a thousand foure hundred yeares since) and early, if wee consider his owne age, for, Origen preached by the commandement, and in the presence of Bishops, before he was a Churchman) yet he suffered no Sermons of his to be copied, till he was sixty yeares old. Now, Origen called his Homilies; And the first Gregory, of the same time with Origen, that was Bishop of Neocesaria, hath his called Sermons. And so names multiplied; Homilies, Sermons, Conciones, Lectures, S. Augustins Enarrations, Dictiones, that is, Speeches, Damascens and Cyrils Orations (nay, one excercise of Cæsareus, conveied in the forme of a Dialogue) were all Sermons. Add to these Church-exercises, (Homilies, Sermons, Lectures, Orations, Speeches, and the rest) the Declamations of Civill men in Courts of Justice, the Tractates of Morall men written in their Studies, nay goe backe to your our owne times, when you went to Schoole, or to the University; and remember but your owne, or your fellowes Themes, or Problemes, or Commonplaces, and in all these you may see evidence of that, to which the Holy Ghost himselfe hath set a Seale in this text, that is, the recommendation of Bountie, of Munificence, of Liberalitie, The Liberall deviseth liberall things, and by liberall things hee shall stand.

Divisio.

That which makes me draw into consideration, the recommendation of this vertue, in civill Authors, and exercises, as well as in Ecclesiasticall, is this, That our Expositors, of all the three ranks, and Classes (The Fathers and Ancients, The later men in the Romane Church, and ours of the Reformation) are very near equally divided, in every of these

A theſe three rankes; whether this Text be intended of a morall and a civill, or of a ſpirituall and Eccleſiaſticall liberality; whether this prophecy of Eſay, in this Chapter, beginning thus, (Behold, a King ſhall reigne in righteouſneſſe, and Princes ſhall rule in judgement) be to be underſtood of an Hezekias, or a Ioſias, or any other good King, which was to ſucceed, and to induce vertuous times in the temporall State, and government, Or whether this were a prophecy of Chriſts time, and of the exaltation of all vertues in the Chriſtian Religion, hath divided our Expoſitors in all thoſe three Claſſes. In all three, (though in all three ſome particular men are peremptory and vehement upon ſome one ſide, abſolutely excluding the other expoſition, as, amongſt our Authors in the Reformation, one ſayes, Dubium non eſt, It can admit no doubt, but that this is to be underſtood of Hezekias, and his reigne, And yet another of the ſame ſide, ſayes too, Qui Rabbinos ſecuti, They that adhere too much to the Jewiſh Rabbins, and will needs interpret B this prophecy of a temporall King, obſcure the purpoſe of the Holy Ghoſt, and accommodate many things to a ſecular Prince, which can hold in none, but Chriſt himſelfe) yet, I ſay, though there be ſome peremptory, there are in all the three Claſſes, Ancients, Romans, Reformed, moderate men, that apply the prophecy both wayes, and finde that it may very well ſubſiſt ſo, That in a faire proportion, all theſe bleſſings ſhall be in the reignes of thoſe Hezekiaſſes, and thoſe Ioſiaſſes, thoſe good Kings which God affords to his people; But the multiplication, the exaltation of all theſe bleſſings, and vertues, is with relation to the comming of Chriſt, and the eſtabliſhing of his Kingdome: And this puts us, if not to a neceſſity, yet with conveniency, to conſider theſe words both wayes; What this civill liberality is, that is here made a bleſſing of a good Kings reigne; And what this ſpirituall liberality is, that is here made a teſtimony of Chriſts reigne, and of his Goſpel. And therefore, ſince we muſt paſſe twice thorough theſe words, it is time to C begin; The liberall man deviſeth liberall things; and by liberall things he ſhall ſtand.

Ver. 1. Calvin. Heſhuſius.

From theſe two armes of this tree, that is, from the civill, and from the ſpirituall accommodation of theſe words, be pleaſed to gather, and lay up theſe particular fruits. In each of theſe, you ſhall taſte firſt, what this Liberality thus recommended is; And ſecondly, what this deviſing, and ſtudying of liberall things is; And againe, how this man is ſaid to ſtand by liberall things; The liberall man deviſeth liberall things, and by liberall things he ſhall ſtand. And becauſe in the courſe of this Prophecy, in this Chapter, we have the King named, and then his Princes, and after, perſons of lower quality and condition, we ſhall conſider theſe particulars; This Liberality, this Deviſing, this Standing; Firſt, in the firſt accommodation of the words, In the King, in his Princes, or great perſons, the Magiſtrate, and laſtly, in his people. And in the ſecond accommodation, the ſpirituall ſenſe, we ſhall conſider theſe three termes, (Liberality, Deviſing, Standing) D Firſt, in the King of Kings, Chriſt Jeſus, And then, in his Officers, the Miniſters of his Goſpel, And laſtly, in his people gathered by this Goſpel; In all which perſons, in both ſorts, Civill and Spirituall, we ſhall ſee how the liberall man deviſeth liberall things, and how by liberall things he ſtands.

1 Part. Liberality.

Firſt then, in our firſt part, In the civill conſideration of this vertue, Liberality, It is a communication of that which we have to other men; and it is the beſt character of the beſt things, that they are communicable, diffuſive. Light was Gods firſt childe; Light opened the wombe of the Chaos; borne heire to the world, and ſo does poſſeſſe the world; and there is not ſo diffuſive a thing, nothing ſo communicative, and ſelf-giving as light is. And then, Gold is not onely valued above all things, but is it ſelfe the value of all things; The value of every thing is, Thus much gold it is worth; And no metall is ſo extenſive as gold; no metall enlarges it ſelfe to ſuch an expanſion, ſuch an attenuation as gold does, nor ſpreads ſo much, with ſo little ſubſtance. Sight is the nobleſt, and the powerfulleſt of our Senſes; All the reſt, (Hearing onely excepted) are determined in a very narrow diſtance; And for Hearing, Thunder is the fartheſt thing that we can heare, and Thunder is but in the ayre; but we ſee the hoſt of Heaven, the ſtarres in the firmament. All the good things that we can conſider, Light, Sight, Gold, all are accompanied with a liberality of themſelves, and are ſo far good, as they are diſpenſed and communicated to others; for their goodneſſe is in their uſe. It is Virtus prolifica, a generative, a productive vertue, a vertue that begets another vertue; another vertue upon another man; Thy liberality begets my gratitude; and if there be an unthankfull barrenneſſe in me, that thou have no children by me, no thankfulneſſe from me, God ſhall raiſe thee the more children for my barrenneſſe, Thy liberality ſhall be the more celebrated by all the world, becauſe I am unthankfull. God hath given me a being, and my liberall Benefactor hath given me ſuch a better being, as that, without that, even my firſt being had been but a paine, and a burden unto me. He that leaves treaſure at his death, left it in his life; Then, when he locked it up, and forbad himſelfe the uſe of it, be left it. He that locks up, may be a good Jaylor; but he that gives out, is his Steward: The ſaver may be Gods cheſt; The giver is Gods right hand. But the matter of our Liberality (what we give) is but the body of this vertue. The ſoule of this Liberality, that that inanimates it, is the manner, intended more in the next word, He deviſeth, He ſtudieth, The liberall deviſeth liberall things. A

Deviſeth. Here the Holy Ghoſts word is Iagnatz, and Iagnatz carries evermore with it a denotation of Counſell, and Deliberation, and Concluſions upon premiſſes. He Deviſes, that is, Conſiders what liberality is, diſcourſes with himſelfe, what liberall things are to be done, And then, upon this, determines, concludes, that he will doe it, and really, actually does it. Therefore, in our firſt Tranſlation, (the firſt ſince the Reformation) we reade this Text thus, The liberall man imagineth honeſt things; Though the Tranſlator have varied the word, (Liberall and Honeſt) the Originall hath not. It is the ſame word in both places; Liberall man, Liberall things; but the Tranſlator was pleaſed to let us ſee, that if it be truly a liberall, it is an honeſt action. Therefore the liberall man muſt give that which is his own; for els, the receiver is but a receiver of ſtollen goods; And the Curſe of the oppreſſed may follow the gift, not onely in his hands, through which it paſſed, but into his hands, where it remains. We have a convenient Embleme of Liberality in a Torch, that waſts it ſelfe to enlighten others; But for a Torch to ſet another mans houſe on fire, to enlighten me, were no good Embleme of Liberality. But Liberality being made up of the true body, and true ſoule, true matter, and true forme, that is, juſt poſſeſſion for having, and ſober diſcretion for giving, then enters the word of our Text, literally, The liberall man deviſeth liberall things; He deviſes, ſtudies, meditates, caſts about, where he may doe a noble action, where he may place a benefit; He ſeekes the man with as much earneſtneſſe, as another man ſeeks the money; And as God comes with an earneſtneſſe (as though he thought it nothing, to have wrought all the weeke) to his Faciamus hominem, Now let us make man; So comes the liberall man to make a man, and to redeeme him out of neceſſity and contempt; (the upper and lower Milſtone of poverty) And to returne to our former repreſentations of Liberality, Light, and Sight; As light comes thorough the glaſſe, but we know not how, and our ſight apprehends remote objects, but we know not how; ſo the liberall man looks into darke corners, even upon ſuch as are loath to be looked upon, loath to have their wants come into knowledge, and viſits them by his liberality, when ſometimes they know not from whence that ſhowre of refreſhing comes, no more then we know, how light comes thorough the glaſſe, or how our ſight apprehends remote objects. So the liberall man deviſeth liberall things; And then, (which is our third terme, and conſideration in this civill and morall acceptation of the words) By liberall things he ſhall ſtand. B C D

Shall ſtand. Some of our later Expoſitors admit this phraſe, (The liberall man ſhall ſtand) to reach no further, nor to ſignifie no more, but that The liberall man ſhall ſtand, that is, will ſtand, will continue his courſe, and proceed in liberall wayes. And this is truely a good ſenſe; for many times men do ſome ſmall actions, that have ſome ſhew and taſt of ſome vertue, for collaterall reſpects, and not out of a direct and true vertuous habit. But theſe Expoſitors (with whoſe narrowneſſe our former Tranſlators complied) will not let the Holy Ghoſt be as liberall as he would bee. His liberality here is, That the liberall man ſhall ſtand, that is, Proſper and Multiply, and be the better eſtabliſhed for his liberality; He ſhall ſowe ſilver, and reape gold; he ſhall ſowe gold, and reape Diamonds; ſowe benefits, and reape honour; not honour rooted in the opinion of men onely, but in the teſtimony of a cheerfull conſcience, that powres out Acclamations by thouſands; And that is a bleſſed and a loyall popularity, when I have a people in mine owne boſome, a thouſand voices in mine owne conſcience, that juſtifie and applaud a good action. Therefore that Tranſlation which we mentioned before, reads this clauſe thus, The liberall man imagineth honeſt things, and commeth up by honeſty; ſtill that which he calls Honeſty, is in the Originall Liberality, and he comes up, he proſpers, and thrives in the world, by thoſe noble, and vertuous actions. It is eaſie for a man of any largeneſſe in converſation, or in reading, E

A reading, to assigne examples of men, that have therefore lost all, because they were loath to part with any thing. When Nazianzen sayes, That man cannot be so like God in any thing, as in giving, he meanes that he shall be like him in this too, that he shall not bee the poorer for giving. But keeping the body, and soule of liberality, Giving his owne, and giving worthily, in soule and body too, (that is, in conscience and fortune both) By liberall things he shall stand, that is, prosper.

Now these three termes, (Liberality, the vertue it selfe, the studying of Liberality, this devising, and the advantage of this Liberality, this standing) (being yet in this first part, still upon the consideration of civill, and morall Liberality) wee are to consider, (according to their Exposition, that binde this Prophecy to an Hezekias, or a Iosias, in which Prophecy we finde mention of all those persons) we are, I say, to consider them, in the King, in his Officers, the Magistrate, and in his Subjects. For the King first, this Rex.

B vertue of our Text, is so radicall, so elementary, so essentiall to the King, as that the vulgat Edition in the Romane Church reads this very Text thus, Princeps verò ea quæ principe digna sunt, cogitabit, The King shall exercise himselfe in royall Meditations, and Actions; Him, whom we call a Liberall man, they call a King, and those actions that we call Liberall, they call Royall. A Translation herein excusable enough; for the very Originall word, which we translate, Liberall, is a Royall word, Nadib, and very often in the Scriptures hath so high, a Royall signification. The very word is in that place, where David prayes to God, to renew him spiritu Principali; And this, (spiritus Principalis) as many Translators call a Principall, a Princely, a Royall spirit, as a liberall, a free, a bountifull spirit; If it be Liberall, it is Royall. For, when David would have bought a threshing-floore, to erect an Altar upon, of Araunah, and Araunah offered so freely place, and sacrifice, and instruments, and all, the Holy Ghost expresses it so, All these things did Araunah, as a King, offer to the King; There was but this difference between the Liberall man, and David, A King, and The King. Higher then a King, for an example and comparison of Liberality, on this side of God, hee could not goe. The very forme of the Office of a King, is Liberality, that is Providence, and Protection, and Possession, and Peace, and Justice shed upon all. Psal. 51. 10. 2 Sam. 24. 23.

C And then, this Prophecy (considered still the first way, morally, civilly) carries this vertue, not onely upon the King, but upon the Princes too, upon those persons that are great, great in blood, great in power, great in place, and office, They must bee liberall of that, which is deposited in them. The Sunne does not enlighten the Starres of the Firmament, meerly for an Ornament to the Firmament, (though even the glory, which God receives from that Ornament, be one reason thereof) but that by the reflection of those Starres his beames might be cast into some places, to which, by a direct Emanation from himselfe, those beames would not have come. So doe Kings transmit some Principes.

D beames of power into their Officers, not onely to dignifie and illustrate a Court, (though that also be one just reason thereof, for outward dignity and splendor must be preserved) but that by those subordinate Instruments, the royall Liberality of the King, that is, Protection, and Justice might be transferred upon all. And therefore, S. Hierome speaking of Nebridius, who was so gracious with the Emperor, that he denied him nothing, assignes that for the reason of his largenesse towards him, Quòd sciebat, non uni, sed pluribus indulgeri, Because he knew, that in giving him, he gave to the Publique; Hee employed that which he received, for the Publique. Epistol. ad Salvian.

And lastly, our Prophecy places this Liberality upon the people. Now, still this Liberality is, that it be diffusive, that the object of our affections be the Publique. To depart with nothing which we call our owne, Nothing in our goods, nothing in our opinions, Populus.

E nothing in the present exercise of our liberty, is not to be liberall. To presse too farre the advancing of one part, to the depressing of another, (especially where that other is the Head) is not liberall dealing. Therefore said Christ to Iames, and Iohn, Non est meum dare vobis, It is not mine to give, to set you on my right, and on my left hand; Non vobis, quia singuli separatim ab aliis rogatis, not to you, because you consider but your selves, and petition for your selves, to the prejudice, and exclusion of others. Therefore Christ bad the Samaritan woman call her husband too, when shee desired the water of life, Ne sola gratiam acciperet, saith S. Chrysostome, That he might so doe good to her, as that others might have good by it too. For, Ad patriam quâ itur? Which way think you to goe home, to the heavenly Jerusalem? Per ipsum mare, sed in ligno, You must passe thorow Mat. 20. 23. August. Joh. 4. 16. Chrysost. August.

Seas

Seas of difficulties, and therefore by ſhip; and in a ſhip, you are not ſafe, except other A Cant. 1. 4. paſſengers in the ſame ſhip be ſafe too. The Spouſe ſaith, Trahe me poſt te, Draw me after thee. When it is but a Me, in the ſingular, but one part conſidered, there is a violence, a difficulty, a drawing; But preſently after, when there is an uniting in a plurall, there is an alacrity, a concurrence, a willingneſſe; Curremus poſt te, We, We will runne after thee; If we would joyne in publique conſiderations, we ſhould runne together. This is true Liberality in Gods people, to depart with ſome things of their owne, though in goods, though in opinions, though in preſent uſe of liberty, for the publique ſafety. Theſe Liberall things, theſe Liberall men, (King, Magiſtrate, and People) ſhall deviſe, and by Liberall things they ſhall ſtand.

Cogitabit Rex. The King ſhall deviſe Liberall things, that is, ſtudy, and propoſe Directions, and commit the execution thereof to perſons ſtudious of the glory of God, and the publique Magiſtratus. good; And that is his Deviſing of Liberall things. The Princes, Magiſtrates, Officers, B ſhall ſtudy to execute aright thoſe gracious Directions received from their royall Maſter, and not retard his holy alacrity in the wayes of Juſtice, by any ſlackneſſe of theirs, nor by caſting a dampe, or blaſting a good man, or a good cauſe, in the eyes, or eares of the King; And that is their Deviſing of Liberall things. The people ſhall deveſt all perſonall reſpects, and ill affections towards other men, and all private reſpects of their owne, and ſpend all their faculties of mind, of body, of fortune, upon the Publique; And that is their Deviſing of Liberall things.

Stabit Rex. And by theſe Liberall things, theſe Liberall men ſhall ſtand. The King ſhall ſtand; Magiſtratus. ſtand in ſafety at home, and ſtand in triumph abroad. The Magiſtrate ſhall ſtand; ſtand in a due reverence of his place from below, and in ſafe poſſeſſion of his place from above; neither be contemned by his Inferiours, nor ſuſpiciouſly, and guiltily inquired into by Populus. his Superiours; neither feare petitions againſt him, nor commiſſions upon him. And the C
People ſhall ſtand; ſtand upon their right Baſis, that is, an inward feeling, and an outward declaration, that they are ſafe onely in the Publique ſafety. And they ſhall all ſtand in the Sunſhine, and ſerenity of a cleere conſcience, which ſerenity of conſcience is one faire beame, even of the glory of God, and of the joy of heaven, upon that ſoule that enjoyes it.

This is Eſays Prophecie of the times of an Hezekias, of a Ioſias, the bleſſing of this civill and morall Liberality, in all theſe perſons. And it is time to paſſe to our other generall part, from the civill, to the ſpirituall, and from applying theſe words, to the good times of a good King, to that, (which is evidently the principall purpoſe of the Holy Ghoſt) That in the time of Chriſt Jeſus, and the reigne of his Goſpel, this, and all other vertues, ſhould bee in a higher exaltation, then any civill, or morall reſpect can carry them to.

2 Part. As an Hezekias, a Ioſias is a Type of Chriſt, but yet but a Type of Chriſt; ſo this civill D
Liberalitas. Liberality, which we have hitherto ſpoken of, is a Type, but yet but a Type of our ſpirituall Liberality. For, here we doe not onely change termes, the temporall, to ſpirituall, and to call that, which we called Liberality in the former part, Charity in this part; nor do we onely make the difference in the proportion & meaſure, that that which was a Benefit in the other part, ſhould be an Almes in this. But we inveſt the whole conſideration in a meere ſpirituall nature; and ſo that Liberality, which was, in the former acceptation, but a relieving, but a refreſhing, but a repairing of defects, and dilapidations in the body or fortune, is now, in this ſecond part, in this ſpirituall acceptation, the raiſing of a dejected ſpirit, the redintegration of a broken heart, the reſuſcitation of a buried ſoule, the re-conſolidation of a ſcattered conſcience, not with the glues, and cements of this world, mirth, and muſique, and comedies, and converſation, and wine, and women, E (miſerable comforters are they all) nor with that Meteor, that hangs betweene two worlds, that is, Philoſophy, and morall conſtancy, (which is ſomewhat above the carnall man, but yet far below the man truly Chriſtian and religious) But this is the Liberality, of which the Holy Ghoſt himſelfe is content to be the Steward, of the holy, bleſſed, and glorious Trinity, and to be notified, and qualified by that diſtinctive notion, and ſpecification, The Comforter.

To finde a languiſhing wretch in a ſordid corner, not onely in a penurious fortune, but in an oppreſſed conſcience, His eyes under a diverſe ſuffocation, ſmothered with ſmoake, and ſmothered with teares, His eares eſtranged from all ſalutations, and viſits, and

A and all ſounds, but his owne ſighes, and the ſtormes and thunders and earthquakes of his owne deſpaire, To enable this man to open his eyes, and ſee that Chriſt Jeſus ſtands before him, and ſayes, Behold and ſee, if ever there were any ſorrow, like my ſorrow, and my ſorrow is overcome, why is not thine? To open this mans eares, and make him heare that voyce that ſayes, I was dead, and am alive, and behold, I live for evermore, Amen; and Revel. 1. 18.
ſo mayeſt thou; To bow downe thoſe Heavens, and bring them into his ſad Chamber, To ſet Chriſt Jeſus before him, to out-ſigh him, out-weepe him, out-bleed him, out-dye him, To transferre all the faſts, all the ſcornes, all the ſcourges, all the nailes, all the ſpeares of Chriſt Jeſus upon him, and ſo, making him the Crucified man in the ſight of the Father, becauſe all the actions, and paſſions of the Son, are appropriated to him, and made his ſo intirely, as if there were never a ſoule created but his, To enrich this poore ſoule, to comfort this ſad ſoule ſo, as that he ſhall beleeve, and by beleeving finde all B Chriſt to be his, this is that Liberality which we ſpeake of now, in diſpenſing whereof, The liberall man deviſeth liberall things, and by liberall things ſhall ſtand.

Now you may be pleaſed to remember, that when wee conſidered this word, in our former part, (he ſhall Deviſe) we found this Deviſing Originally to ſignifie a ſtudying, a deliberation, a concluding upon premiſſes; upon which, we inferred pregnantly and juſtly, that as to ſupport a mans expenſe, he muſt Vivere de proprio, Live upon his owne; ſo to relieve others, he muſt Dare de ſuo, Be liberall of that which is his. Now, what is ours? Ours, that are Miniſters of the Goſpell? As wee are Chriſts, ſo Chriſt is ours. Puer datus nobis, filius natus nobis, There is a Child given unto us, a Son borne unto us; Even Eſay 9.
in that ſenſe, Chriſt is given to us, that we might give him to others. So that in this kind of ſpirituall liberality, we can be liberall of no more but our owne; we can give nothing but Chriſt; we can miniſter comfort to none, farther then he is capable, and willing to C receive and embrace Chriſt Jeſus.

When therefore ſome of the Fathers have ſaid, Ratio pro fide Gracis & Barbaris, Rectified reaſon was accepted at the hands of the Gentiles, as faith is of the Chriſtians; Philoſophia per ſe juſtificavit Gracos, Philoſophie alone (without faith) juſtified the Grecians; Satis fuit Gentibus abſtinuiſſe ab Idololatria, It was enough for the Gentiles, if they did not worſhip falſe Gods, though they knew not the true truly; when we heare Andradius in the Roman Church poure out ſalvation to all the Gentiles, that lived a good morall life, and no more; when we heare their Toſtatus ſweepe away, blow away Originall ſin ſo eaſily from all the Gentiles, In prima operatione bona in charitate, In the firſt good Morall worke that they doe, Originall ſin is as much extinguiſhed in them by that, as by Baptiſme in us; When we ſee ſome Authors in the Reformation afford Heaven to perſons that never profeſſed Chriſt, this is ſpirituall prodigality, and beyond that liberality which we conſider now; for, Chriſt is ours; and where we can apply him, we can D give all comforts in him; But none to others. Not that we manacle the hands of God, or ſay, God can ſave no man without the profeſſion of Chriſt, But, that God hath put nothing elſe into his Churches hands to ſave men by, but Chriſt delivered in his Scripture, applied in the preaching of the Goſpell, and ſealed in the Sacraments. And therefore, if we ſhould give this comfort, to any but thoſe that received him, and received him ſo, according to his Ordinance in his Church, we ſhould be over-liberall, for we ſhould give more then our owne. But to all that would be comforted in Chriſt, we deviſe liberall things, that is, wee ſpend our ſtudies, our lucubrations, our meditations, to bring Chriſt Jeſus home to their caſe, and their conſcience, And, by theſe liberall things we ſhall ſtand.

In our former part, in that Civill liberality, wee did not content our ſelves with that E narrow ſignification of the word, which ſome gave, That the liberall man would ſtand to it, abide by it, that is, continue liberall ſtill habitually, but that he ſhould ſtand by it, and proſper the better for it. If this Liberality which we conſider now in this ſecond Part, were but that branch of Charity, which is bodily reliefe by bountifull Almes, and no more, yet, wee might be ſo liberall in Gods behalfe, as to pronounce that the charitable man ſhould ſtand by it, proſper for it, and have a plentifull harveſt for any ſowing in that kinde. The Holy Ghoſt in the 112. Pſalme, and 9. verſe, hath taken a word, which may almoſt ſeeme to taſte of a little inconſideration in ſuch a charitable perſon, a little indiſcretion, in giving, in flinging, in caſting away; for it is, He hath diſperſed; Diſperſed; A word that implies a careleſſe ſcattering. But that which followes, juſtifies

Cogitabit.

Juſt. Mar. Clemens. Chryſoſt. Andrad. Toſtatus.

Stabit.

juſtifies it; He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poore. Let the manner, or the meaſure be how it will, ſo it be given to the poore, it will not be without excuſe, not without thanks. And therefore wee have this liberall charity expreſſed by S. Paul in the ſame word too, He hath diſperſed; but diſperſed as before, Diſperſed by giving to the poore. For there is more negligence, more inconſideration allowed us, in giving of Almes, then in any other expenſe; Neither are we bound to examine the condition, and worthineſſe of the perſon to whom we give too narrowly, too ſeverely. Hee that gives freely, ſhall ſtand by doing ſo; for, He that pitieth the poore, lendeth to the Lord; And the Lord is a good Debtor, and never puts Creditor to ſue. And, if that bee not comfort enough, S. Hierom gives more, in his tranſlation of that place, fœneratur Domino, he that pitieth the poore, puts his money to uſe to God, and ſhall receive the debt, and more. But, the liberality which we conſider here, in this part, is more then that, more then any charity, how large ſoever, that is determined, or converſant about bodily reliefe; for, (as you have heard) it is conſolation applied in Chriſt, to a diſtreſſed ſoule, to a diſconſolate ſpirit. And how a liberall man ſhall ſtand by this liberality, (by applying ſuch conſolation to ſuch a diſtreſſed ſoule) I better know in my ſelfe, then I can tell any other, that is not of mine owne profeſſion; for this knowledge lyes in the experience of it.

2 Cor. 9. 9.

Prov. 17. 19.

For the moſt part, men are of one of theſe three ſorts; Either inconſiderate men; (and they that conſider not themſelves, conſider not us, they aske not, they expect not this liberality from us) or elſe they are over-confident, and preſume too much upon God; or diffident, and diſtruſt him too much. And with theſe two wee meet often; but truly, with ſeven diffident, and dejected, for one preſuming ſoule. So that we have much exerciſe of this liberality, of raiſing dejected ſpirits: And by this liberality we ſtand. For, when I have given that man comfort, that man hath given me a Sacrament, hee hath given me a ſeale and evidence of Gods favour upon me; I have received from him, in his receiving from me; I leave him comforted in Chriſt Jeſus, and I goe away comforted in my ſelfe, that Chriſt Jeſus hath made me an inſtrument of the diſpenſation of his mercy; And I argue to my ſelfe, and ſay, Lord, when I went, I was ſure, that thou who hadſt received me to mercy, wouldſt alſo receive him, who could not be ſo great a ſinner as I; And now, when I come away, I am ſure, that thou who art returned to him, and haſt re-manifeſted thy ſelfe to him, who, in the diffidence of his ſad ſoule, thought thee gone for ever, wilt never depart from mee, nor hide thy ſelfe from me, who deſire to dwell in thy preſence. And ſo, by this liberality I ſtand; by giving I receive comfort.

Rex Chriſtus.

We follow our text, in the Context, our Prophet, as he places this liberality in the King, in the Magiſtrate, in the People. Here, the King is Chriſt, The Magiſtrate the Miniſter, The People the people, whether collectively, that is, the Congregation, or diſtributively, every particular ſoule. Afford your devotions a minute to each of theſe, and we have done. When we conſider the liberality of our King, the bounty of God, to man in Chriſt, it is Species ingratitudinis, It is a degree of ingratitude, nay, it is a degree of forgetfulneſſe, to pretend to remember his benefits ſo, as to reckon them, for they are innumerable. Sicut inviſibilibus eſt Sol, in intelligibilibus eſt Deus; As liberall as the Sun is in Nature, God is in grace. Bonitas Dei ad extra, liberalitas eſt; It is the expreſſing of the Schoole, and of much uſe; That God is Eſſentiall Goodneſſe, within doores, in himſelfe; But, Ad extra, when he comes abroad, when this interiour Goodneſſe is produced into action, then all Gods Goodneſſe is Liberality. Deus eſt voluntas Omnipotens, is excellently ſaid by S. Bernard; God is all Almightineſſe, all Power; but he might be ſo and we never the better. Therefore he is Voluntas omnipotens, A Power digeſted into a Will, as Willing, as Able to doe us all, all good. What good? Receive ſome drops of it in S. Bernards owne Manna, his owne honey; Creans mentes ad ſe participandum, So good, as that he hath firſt given us ſoules capable of him, and made us ſo, partakers of the Divine Nature; Vivificans ad ſentiendum, So good as that he hath quickned thoſe ſoules, and made them ſenſible of having received him; for, Grace is not grace to me, till it make me know that I have it Alliciens ad appetendum, So good as that he hath given that ſoule an appetite, and a holy hunger and thirſt to take in more of him; for I have no Grace, till I would have more; and then, Dilatans ad capiendum, So good, as that he hath dilated and enlarged that ſoule, to take in as much of God as he will. And leſt the ſoule ſhould loſe any of this by unthankfulneſſe, God is kind even to the unthankfull, ſayes God himſelfe; which Nazian.

Bernard.

Luke 6. 35.

A which is a degree of goodneſſe, in which God ſeldome is, nay, in which God ſcarce looks to be imitated, To be kinde to the unthankfull.

But if the whole ſpace to the Firmament were filled with ſand, and we had before us Clavius his number, how many thouſands would be; If all that ſpace were filled with water, and ſo joyned the waters above with the waters below the Firmament, and we had the number of all thoſe drops of water; And then had every ſingle ſand, and every ſingle drop multiplied by the whole number of both, we were ſtill ſhort of numbring the benefits of God, as God; But then, of God in Chriſt, infinitely, ſuper-infinitely ſhort. To have been once nothing, and to be now co-heire with the Son of God, is ſuch a Circle, ſuch a Compaſſe, as that no revolutions in this world, to riſe from the loweſt to the higheſt, or to fall from the higheſt to the loweſt, can be called or thought any Segment, any Arch, any Point in reſpect of this Circle; To have once been nothing, and now to
B be co-heires with the Son of God: That Son of God, who if there had been but one ſoule to have been ſaved, would have dyed for that; nay, if all ſoules had been to be ſaved, but one, and that that onely had ſinned, he would not have contented himſelfe with all the reſt, but would have dyed for that. And there is the goodneſſe, the liberality of our King, our God, our Chriſt, our Jeſus.

But we muſt looke upon this liberality, as our Prophet leads us, in the Magiſtrate too, that is, in this part, The Miniſter. As I have received mercy, I am one of them, as S. Paul ſpeaks. And why ſhould I deliver out this mercy to others, in a ſcanter meaſure, then I have received it my ſelfe from God? Why ſhould I deliver out his Talents in ſingle farthings? Or his Gomers in narrow and ſhallow thimbles? Why ſhould I defalke from his generall propoſitions, and againſt all Grammar, and all Dictionaries, call his Omnes, his All, a few? Why ſhould I lie to the Holy Ghoſt, (as S. Peter charges Ananias) Soldeſt thou the land for ſo much? Yea, for ſo much. Did God make heaven for ſo few? yes, for ſo few. Why ſhould I ſay ſo? If we will conſtitute a place for heaven above, and a place for hell below, even the capacity of the place will yeeld an argument, that God, (as we can conſider him in his firſt meaning) meant more ſhould be ſaved then caſt away. As oft as God tells us, of painfull wayes, and narrow gates, and of Camels, and needles, all that is done to ſharpen an induſtry in all, not to threaten an impoſſibility to any. If God would not have all, why tooke he me? And if he were ſorry he had taken me, or were wearied with the ſins of my youth, why did he not let me ſlide away, in the change of ſins in mine age, or in my ſinfull memory of old ſins, or in my ſinfull ſorrow that I could not continue in thoſe ſins, but ſtill make his mercies new to me every morning? My King, my God in Chriſt, is liberall to all; He bids us, his Officers, his Miniſters, to be ſo too; and I am; even thus far; If any man doubt his ſalvation, if any man
D thinke himſelfe too great a ſinner to attaine ſalvation, let him repent, and take mine for his; with any true repentant ſinner, I will change ſtates; for, God knowes his repentance, (whether it be true or no) better then I know mine.

Magiſtratus.

Acts 5.

Therefore doth the Prophet here, promiſe this liberality, as in the King, in Chriſt, and in the Magiſtrate, the Miniſter; ſo in the people too, in every particular ſoule. He cryes to us, his Miniſters, Conſolamini, Conſolamini, Comfort, O Comfort my people, and he cryes to every one of you, Miſerere animæ tuæ. Have mercy upon thine own ſoule, and I will commiſerate it too; Be liberall to thy ſelfe, and I will beare thee out in it. God asks, Quid potui, What could have been done more to my Vineyard? Doe but tell him, and he will doe that. Tell him, that he can remove this dampe from thy heart; Tell him, as though thou wouldeſt have it done, and he will doe it. Tell him, that he can bring teares into thine eyes, and then, wipe all teares from thine eyes; and he will doe both.
E Tell him, that he did as much for David, as thou needeſt; That he came later to the Thiefe upon the Croſſe, then thou putſt him to; And Davids Tranſtulit peccatum, ſhall be transferred upon thee, And that thiefs Hodie mecum eris, ſhall waft, and guard, and convey thy ſoule thither. Thinke not thy God a falſe God, that bids me call thee, and meanes not that thou heare; nor an impotent God, that would ſave thee, but that there is a Decree in the way; nor a cruell God, that made thee, to damne thee, that he might laugh at thy deſtruction. Thy King, thy Chriſt, is a liberall God; His Officers, his Miniſters, by his inſtructions, declare plentifull redemption; Be liberall to thy ſelfe, in the apprehenſion and application thereof, and by theſe liberall things, we ſhall all ſtand.

Populus.

Eſay 40. 1.

Eccluſ. 30. 24.

Eſay 5. 4.

The

Stabit Rex Christus. Minister.

The King himselfe stands by it, Christ himselfe. It destroys the nature, the office, the merit of Christ himselfe, to make his redemption so penurious, so illiberall. We, his officers, his Ministers stand by it. It overthrowes the credit, and evacuates the purpose of our employment, and our Ministery, if we must offer salvation to the whole Congregation, and must not be beleeved, that he that sends it, means it. The people, every particular soule stands by it. For, if he cannot beleeve God, to have been more liberall to him, then he hath been to any other man, he is in an ill case, becaus he knowes more ill by himselfe, then he can know by any other man. Beleeve therefore liberall purposes in thy God; Accept liberall propositions from his Ministers; And apply them liberally, and chearfully to thine own soule; for, The liberall man deviseth liberall things, and by liberall things he shall stand.

SERM. LXXVI.

Preached to the Earle of Carlile, and his Company, at Sion.

MARK. 16. 16.

He that beleeveth not, shall be damned.

THe first words that are recorded in the Scriptures, to have been spoken by our Saviour, are those which he spoke to his father and mother, then when they had lost him at Jerusalem, How is it that you sought me? knew yee not that I must be about my Fathers businesse? And the last words, which are in this Euangelist recorded to have been spoken by him, to his Apostles, are then also, when they were to lose him in Jerusalem, when he was to depart out of their presence, and set himselfe in the heavenly Jerusalem, at the right hand of his Father: of which last words of his, this Text is a part. In his first words, those to his father and mother, he doth not rebuke their care in seeking him, nor their tendernesse in seeking him, (as they told him they did) with heavy hearts: But he lets them know, that, if not the band of nature, nor the reverentiall respect due to parents, then no respect in the world should hold him from a diligent proceeding in that worke which he came for, the advancing the kingdome of God in the salvation of mankinde. In his last words to his Apostles, he doth not discomfort them by his absence, for he sayes, I am with you alwayes, even unto the end of the world: But he incourageth them to a chearfull undertaking of their great worke, the preaching of the Gospel to all Nations, by many arguments, many inducements, of which, one of the waightiest is, That their preaching of the Gospel was not like to be uneffectuall, becaus he had given them the sharpest spur, and the strongest bridle upon mankinde; Præmium & pœnam, Authority to reward the obedient, and authority to punish the rebellious and refractary man; he put into their hands the double key of Heaven, and of Hell; power to convey to the beleever Salvation, and upon him that beleeved not, to inflict eternall condemnation; He that beleeveth not, shall be damned.

Luk. 2. 49.

Mat. 28. 20.

Divisio.

That then which man was to beleeve upon paine of damnation, if he did not, being this Commission which Christ gave to his Apostles, we shall make it our first part of this Exercise, to consider the Commission it selfe, the subject of every mans necessary beliefe; And our second part shall be, The penalty, the inevitable, the irreparable, the intolerable, the inexpressible penalty, everlasting condemnation, He that beleeveth not, shall be damned. In the first of these parts, we shall first consider some circumstantiall, and then the substantiall parts of the Commission; (for though they be essentiall things, yet becaus they are not of the body of the Commission, we call them branches circumstantiall) First, An sit, whether there be such a Commission or no; secondly, the Vbi, where this Commission is; and then the Vnde, from whence this Commission proceeds; And lastly

A laſtly the Quò, how farre it extends, and reaches; And having paſſed thorow theſe, wee muſt looke back for the ſubſtance of the Commiſſion; for in the Text, He that beleeveth not, is implied this particle, this, this word this, Hee that beleeveth not this, that is, that which Chriſt hath ſaid to his Apoſtles immediatly before the Text, which is indeed the ſubſtance of the Commiſſion, conſiſting of three parts, Ite prædicate, goe and preach the Goſpel, Ite Baptizate, goe and baptize them, Ite docete, goe and teach them to doe, and to practiſe all that I have commanded; And after all theſe which doe but make up the firſt part, we ſhall deſcend to the ſecond, which is the penalty; and as farre as the narrowneſſe of the time, and the narrowneſſe of your patience, and the narrowneſſe of my comprehenſion can reach, wee ſhall ſhew you the horror, the terror of that fearefull intermination, Damnabitur, He that beleeveth not, ſhall be damned.

First then, it is within this Credererit, that is, It is matter of faith to beleeve, that ſuch 1 Part. An ſit.
B a Commiſſion there is, that God hath eſtabliſhed meanes of ſalvation, and propagation of his Goſpel here. If then this be matter of faith, where is the root of this faith? from whence ſprings it? Is there any ſuch thing writ in the heart of man, that God hath proceeded ſo? Certainly as it is in Agendis, in thoſe things which we are bound to do, which are all comprehended in the Decalogue, in the Ten Commandements, that there is nothing written there, in thoſe ſtone Tables, which was not written before in the heart of man, (exemplifie it in that Commandement which ſeemes moſt removed from naturall reaſon, which is the obſerving of the Sabbath, yet even for that, for a Sabbath, man naturally finds this holy impreſſion, and religious inſtinct in his heart, That there muſt bee an outward worſhip of that God, that hath made, and preſerved him, and that is the ſubſtance, and morall part of that Commandement of the Sabbath) And it is in Agendis, that all things, that all men are bound to doe, all men have means to know; And as it is
C in Sperandis, in Petendis, of thoſe things which man may hope for at Gods hand, or pray for, from him, there is a knowledge imprinted in mans heart too; (for the Lords Prayer is an abridgement of all thoſe, and exemplifie alſo this in that Petition of the Lords Prayer, which may ſeeme moſt removed from naturall reaſon, That we muſt forgive thoſe who have treſpaſſed againſt us, yet even in that, every naturall man may ſee, That there is no reaſon for him, to looke for forgiveneſſe from God, who can, and may juſtly come to an immediate execution of us, as ſoone as we have offended him, if we will not forgive another man, whom we cannot execute our ſelves, but muſt implore the Law, and the Magiſtrate to revenge our quarrell) As it is in Agendis, in all things which wee are bound to doe; As it is in Petendis, in all things which we may pray for, ſo it is in Credendis, all things that all men are bound to beleeve, all men have meanes to know.

This then, that God hath eſtabliſhed meanes of ſalvation, being Inter credenda, one
D of thoſe things which he is bound to beleeve, (for hee that beleeveth not this, ſhall be damned) Man hath thus much evidence of this in nature, that by naturall reaſon we know, that that God which muſt be worſhipped, hath ſurely declared how he will be worſhipped, and ſo we are led to ſeeke his revealed and manifeſted will, and that is no where to bee found but in his Scriptures. So that when all is done, the Ten Commandements, which is the ſum of all that we are to doe; The Lords Prayer, which is the ſumme of all that we are to ask; and the Apoſtles Creed, which is the ſumme of all that wee are to beleeve, are but declaratory, not introductory things; The ſame things are firſt written in mans heart, though dimly and ſub-obſcurely, and then the ſame things are extended, ſhed in a brighter beame, in every leafe of the Scripture; And the ſame things are recollected againe, into the Ten Commandements, into the Lords Prayer, and into the Apoſtles Creed, that we might ſee them al together, and ſo take better view and hold of them.
E The knowledge which wee have in nature, is the ſubſtance of all, as all matter, Heaven and earth were created at once, in the beginning; and then the further knowledge which we have in Scripture, is as that light which God created after; for as by that light, men diſtinguiſhed particular creatures, ſo by this light of the Scripture, wee diſcerne our particular duties. And after this, as in the Creation, all the light was gathered into the body of the Sunne, when that was made; ſo all that is written in our hearts radically, and diffuſed in the Scriptures more extenſively, is reamaſſed, and reduced to the Ten Commandements, the Lords Prayer, and to the Creed.

The heart of man is hortus, it is a garden, a Paradiſe, where all that is wholſome, and Cant. 4. 12.
all that is delightfull growes, but it is hortus concluſus, a garden that we our ſelves have walled in; It is fons, a fountaine, where all knowledge ſprings, bnt fons ſignatus, a fountaine that our corruption hath ſealed up. The heart is a booke, legible enough, and intelligible in it ſelfe; but we have ſo interlined that booke with impertinent knowledge, and ſo claſped up that booke, for feare of reading our owne hiſtory, our owne ſins, as that we are the greateſt ſtrangers, and the leaſt converſant with the examination of our owne hearts. There is then Myrrhe in this garden, but wee cannot ſmell it; and therefore, All thy garments ſmell of Myrrhe, ſaith David, that is, Gods garments; thoſe Scriptures in which God hath apparelled, and exhibited his will, they breathe the Balme of the Eaſt, the ſavour of life, more diſcernably unto us. But after that too, there is faſciculus Myrrhæ, a bundle of Myrrhe together, faſciculus Agendorum, a whole bundle of thoſe things which we are bound to doe, in the Ten Commandements; faſciculus Petendorum, a whole bundle of thoſe things, which wee are bound to pray for, in the Lords Prayer; and faſciculus Credendorum, a whole bundle of thoſe things, which we are bound to beleeve, in the Apoſtles Creed; And in that laſt bundle of Myrrhe, in that Creed, is this particular, Vt credamus hoc, That wee beleeve this, this, that God hath eſtabliſhed meanes of ſalvation here, and He that beleeveth not this, that ſuch a Commiſſion there is, ſhall be damned.

Pſal. 45. 8.

Cant. 1. 13.

Vbi.

In that bundle of Myrrhe then, where lies this that muſt neceſſarily bee beleeved, This Commiſſion? In that Article of that Creed, Credo Eccleſiam Catholicam, I beleeve the holy Catholique Church; For till I come to that graine of Myrrhe, to beleeve the Catholique Church, I have not the ſavour of life; Let me take in the firſt graine of this bundle of Myrrhe, the firſt Article, Credo in Deum Patrem, I beleeve in God the Father, by that I have a being, I am a creature, but ſo is a contemptible worme, and ſo is a venemous ſpider as well as I, ſo is a ſtinking weed, and ſo is a ſtinging nettle, as well as I; ſo is the earth it ſelfe, that we tread under our feet, and ſo is the ambitious ſpirit, which would have been as high as God, and is lower then the loweſt, the devill himſelf is a creature as well as I; I am but that, by the firſt Article, but a creature; and I were better, if I were not that, if I were no creature, (conſidering how I have uſed my creation) if there were no more Myrrhe in this bundle then that firſt graine, no more to be got by beleeving, but that I were a creature: But take a great deale of this Myrrhe together, conſider more Articles, That Chriſt is conceived, and borne, and crucified, and dead, and buried, and riſen, and aſcended, there is ſome ſavour in this; But yet, if when we ſhall come to Judgement, I muſt carry into his preſence, a menſtruous conſcience, and an ugly face, in which his Image, by which he ſhould know me, is utterly defaced, all this Myrrhe of his Merits, and his Mercies, is but a ſavour of death unto death unto me, ſince I, that knew the horror of my owne guiltineſſe, muſt know too, that whatſoever he be to others, he is a juſt Judge, and therefore a condemning Judge to me; If I get farther then this in the Creed, to the Credo in Spiritum Sanctum, I beleeve in the Holy Ghoſt, where ſhall I finde the Holy Ghoſt? I lock my doore to my ſelfe, and I throw my ſelfe downe in the preſence of my God, I deveſt my ſelfe of all worldly thoughts, and I bend all my powers, and faculties upon God, as I think, and ſuddenly I finde my ſelfe ſcattered, melted, fallen into vaine thoughts, into no thoughts; I am upon my knees, and I talke, and think nothing; I deprehend my ſelfe in it, and I goe about to mend it, I gather new forces, new purpoſes to try againe, and doe better, and I doe the ſame thing againe. I beleeve in the Holy Ghoſt, but doe not finde him, if I ſeeke him onely in private prayer; But in Eccleſia, when I goe to meet him in the Church, when I ſeeke him where hee hath promiſed to bee found, when I ſeeke him in the execution of that Commiſſion, which is propoſed to our faith in this Text, in his Ordinances, and meanes of ſalvation in his Church, inſtantly the ſavour of this Myrrhe is exalted, and multiplied to me; not a dew, but a ſhower is powred out upon me, and preſently followes Communio Sanctorum, The Communion of Saints, the aſſiſtance of Militant and Triumphant Church in my behalfe; And preſently followes Remiſſio peccatorum, The remiſſion of ſins, the purifying of my conſcience, in that water, which is his blood, Baptiſme, and in that wine, which is his blood, the other Sacrament; and preſently followes Carnis reſurrectio, A reſurrection of my body; My body becomes no burthen to me; my body is better now, then my ſoule was before; and even here I have Goſhen in my Egypt, incorruption in the midſt of my dunghill, ſpirit in the midſt of my fleſh, heaven upon earth; and preſently followes Vita æterna, Life everlaſting; this life of my body ſhall not laſt ever, nay the life of my ſoul in heaven is not

A B C D E

A not such as it is at the first. For that soule there, even in heaven, shall receive an addition, and accesse of Joy, and Glory in the resurrection of our bodies in the consummation.

When a winde brings the River to any low part of the banke, instantly it overflowes the whole Meadow; when that winde which blowes where he will, The Holy Ghost, leads an humble soule to the Article of the Church, to lay hold upon God, as God hath exhibited himselfe in his Ordinances, instantly he is surrounded under the blood of Christ Jesus, and all the benefits thereof; The communion of Saints, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting, are poured out upon him. And therefore of this great worke, which God hath done for man, in applying himselfe to man, in the Ordinances of his Church, S. Augustine sayes, Obscurius dixerunt Prophetæ de Christo, quàm de Ecclesia, The Prophets have not spoken so clearely of the person of Christ, as they have of the Church of Christ; for though S. Hierom interpret aright those words of Adam Hieron.
B and Eve, Erunt duo in carnem unam, They two shall be one flesh, to be applyable to the union which is betweene Christ and his Church, (for so S. Paul himselfe applies them) that Ephes. 5. Christ and his Church are all one, as man and wife are all one, yet the wife is (or at least, it had wont to be so) easilier found at home, then the husband; wee can come to Christs Church, but we cannot come to him; The Church is a Hill, and that is conspicuous naturally; but the Church is such a Hill, as may be seene every where. S. Augustine askes August. his Auditory in one of his Sermons, doe any of you know the Hill Olympus? and himselfe sayes in their behalfe, none of you know it; no more sayes he, do those that dwell at Olympus know Giddabam vestram, some Hill which was about them; trouble not thy selfe to know the formes and fashions of forraine particular Churches; neither of a Church in the lake, nor a Church upon seven hils; but since God hath planted thee in a Church, where all things necessary for salvation are administred to thee, and where no
C erronious doctrine (even in the confession of our Adversaries) is affirmed and held, that is the Hill, and that is the Catholique Church, and there is this Commission in this text, meanes of salvation sincerely executed; So then, such a Commission there is, and it is in the Article of the Creed, that is the ubi.

We are now come in our order, to the third circumstantiall branch, the Vnde, from Vnde. whence, and when this Commission issued, in which we consider, that since we receive a deepe impression from the words, which our friends spake at the time of their death, much more would it worke upon us, if they could come and speake to us after their death; You know what Dives said, Si quis ex mortuis, If one from the dead might goe to Luke 16. my Brethren, he might bring them to any thing. Now, Primitiæ mortuorum, The Lord of life, and yet the first borne of the dead, Christ Jesus, returnes againe after his death, to establish this Commission upon his Apostles; It hath therefore all the formalities of a D strong and valid Commission; Christ gives it, Ex mero motu, meerely out of his owne goodnesse; He foresaw no merit in us that moved him; neither was he moved by any mans solicitations; for could it ever have fallen into a mans heart, to have prayed to the Father, that his Son might take our Nature and dye, and rise again, and settle a course upon earth, for our salvation, if this had not first risen in the purpose of God himself? Would any man ever have solicited or prayed him to proceed thus? It was Ex mero motu, out of his owne goodnesse, and it was Ex certa scientia, He was not deceived in his grant, he knew what he did, he knew this Commission should be executed, in despight of all Heretiques, and Tyrans that should oppose it; And as it was out of his owne Will, and with his owne knowledge, so it was Ex plenitudine potestatis, He exceeded not his Power; for Christ made this Commission then, when (as it is expressed in the other Euange- Mat. 28. 18.
E list) he produced that evidence, Data est mihi, All power is given to me in Heaven and in earth; where Christ speakes not of that Power, which he had by his eternall generation, (though even that power were given him, for he was Deus de Deo, God of God) nor he speakes not of that Power which was given him as Man, which was great, but all that, he had in the first minute of his conception, in the first union of the two Natures, Divine and Humane together; but that Power, from which he derives this Commission, is that, which he had purchased by his blood, and came to by conquest; Ego vici mundum, sayes Christ, I have conquered the world, and comming in by conquest, I may establish what forme of Government I will; and my will is, to governe my Kingdome by this Commission; and by these Commissioners, to the Worlds end; to establish these meanes upon earth, for the salvation of the world.

And as it hath all theſe formalities of a due Commiſſion, made without ſuite, made without error, made without defect of power: ſo had it this alſo, that it was duely and authentically teſtified; for, though this Euangeliſt name but the eleven Apoſtles to have beene preſent, and they in this caſe might be thought Teſtes domeſtici, Witneſſes that witneſſe to their owne, or to their Maſters advantage; Yet, the opinion which is moſt imbraced is, That this appearing of Chriſt, which is intended here, is that appearing, 1 Cor. 15. 6. which is ſpoken of by S. Paul, when he appeared to more then five hundred at once; Chriſt reſts not in his Teſte meipſo, That himſelfe was his witneſſe, as Princes uſe to doe, (and as he might have done beſt of any, becauſe there were alwaies two more that teſtified with him, the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt) he reſts not in calling ſome of his Councell, and principall Officers, to witneſſe, as Princes have uſed too; but in a Parliament of all States, Upper and Common houſe, Spirituall and Temporall Apoſtles, Diſciples and five hundred Brethren, he teſtifies this Commiſſion. B

Who then can meaſure the infinite mercy of Chriſt Jeſus to us? which mercy became not when he began, by comming into this world; for we were elected in him before the foundations of the world; nor ended it when he ended, by going out of this world, for he returned to this world againe, where he had ſuffered ſo much contempt and torment, that he might eſtabliſh this object of our faith, this that wee are therefore bound to beleeve, a Commiſſion, a Church, an outward meanes of Salvation here; ſuch a Commiſſion there is, it is grounded in the Creed, and it was given after his Reſurrection.

Quo. In which Commiſſion (being now come to the laſt of the circumſtantiall Branches, the extent and reach of this Commiſſion) we finde, that it is Omni Creaturæ, before the Text, Preach to every Creature, that is, Meanes of ſalvation offered to every Creature; and that is large enough, without that wilde extent that their S. Francis gives it, in the C Roman Church, whom they magnifie ſo much for that religious ſimplicity, as they call it, who thought himſelfe bound literally by this Commiſſion, To preach to all Creatures, and ſo did, as we ſee in his brutiſh Homilies, Frater Aſine, and Frater Bos, Brother Oxe, and brother Aſſe, and the reſt of his ſpirituall kindred; But in this Commiſſion, Omnis Creatura, Every Creature, is every man; and to every man this Commiſſion extends; Gen. 3. 20. Man is called Omnis Creatura, Every creature, as Eve is called Mater omnium viventium, though ſhe were but the Mother of men, ſhe is called the Mother of all living, and yet all other creatures live, as well as Man; Man is called Every creature, as it is ſaid, Omnis caro, Gen. 6. 12. All fleſh had corrupted his wayes upon earth, though this corruption were but in man, and other creatures were fleſh as well as man; Man is every creature, ſayes Origen, Origen. becauſe in him, Tanquam in officina, omnes Creaturæ conflantur, Becauſe all creatures were as it were melted in one forge, and poured into one mold, when man was made. For, theſe D being all the diſtinctions which are in all creatures, firſt, a meere being which ſtones and other inanimate creatures have; and then life & growth, which trees and plants have; and after that, ſenſe and feeling, which beaſts have; and laſtly, reaſon and underſtanding, Gregor. which Angels have, Man hath them all; and ſo in that reſpect is every creature, ſayes Origen: He is ſo too, ſayes Gregory, Quia omnis creaturæ differentia in homine, Becauſe all the qualities and properties of all other creatures, how remote and diſtant, how contrary ſoever in themſelves, yet they all meet in man; In man, if he be a flatterer, you ſhall finde the groveling and crawling of a Snake; and in a man, if he be ambitious, you ſhall finde the high flight and piercing of the Eagle; in a voluptous ſenſual man, you ſhall finde earthlineſſe of the Hog; and in a licentious man, the intemperance, and diſtemper of the Goate; ever luſtfull, and ever in a fever; ever in ſickneſſes contracted by that ſin, and yet ever in a deſire to proceed in that ſin; and ſo man is every creature in that reſpect, ſayes E Auguſt. Gregory. But he is eſpecially ſo, ſayes S. Auguſtine, Quia omnis creatura propter hominem, All creatures were made for man, man is the end of all, and therefore man is all, ſayes Auguſtine. So that the two Euangeliſts have expreſſed one another well; for thoſe whom Eſay 49. 6. this Euangeliſt S. Marke cals all creatures, S. Matthew cals Omnes Gentes, All Nations; And ſo, that which is attributed to Chriſt by way of Prophecy, It is a ſmall matter, that thou ſhouldeſt be my ſervant, to raiſe up the tribe of Iacob, and to reſtore the preſerved of Iſrael, I will alſo give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou maieſt be my ſalvation unto the end of the earth; That which is attributed to Chriſt there, is fulfilled in this Commiſſion, given by Chriſt here; That he ſhould be preached to all men; In which, wee rather admire

then

A then goe about to expreſſe his unexpreſſible mercy, who had that tenderneſſe in his care, that he would provide man meanes of ſalvation in a Church, and then that largeneſſe in his care, as that he would in his time impart it to all men; for els, how had it ever come to us? And ſo we paſſe from the Circumſtances of the Commiſſion, That it is, And where it is, And whence it comes, And whither it goes, to the Subſtance it ſelfe.

This is expreſſed in three actions; firſt, Ite prædicate, Goe and preach the Goſpel; And then, Baptizate, Baptize in the Name of the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt; And Docete ſervare, Teach them to obſerve all thoſe things which I have commanded you; for that Hoc, Qui non crediderit hoc, He that beleeves not this, (which is implied in this Text) reaches to all that; as well, Qui non fecerit hoc, He that does not doe all this, as Qui non crediderit hoc, He that beleeves not this, is within the penalty of this Text, Damnabitur: The firſt of theſe three, is the ordinance and inſtitution of preaching the Goſpel; The ſecond is
B the adminiſtration of both Sacraments; (as we ſhall ſee anone) And the third is the provocation to a good life, which is in example as well as in preaching; firſt preach the Goſpel, that is, plant the roote, faith; then adminiſter the Sacraments, that is, water it, cheriſh it, faſten and ſettle it with that ſeale; and then procure good works, that is, produce the bleſſed fruit of this faith, and theſe Sacraments: Qui non crediderit hoc, He that does not beleeve all this, ſhall be damned.

Firſt then, Qui non crediderit, He that hath this Apoſtleſhip, this miniſtery of reconciliation, he that is a Commiſſioner for theſe new buildings, to erect the kingdome of God by the Goſpel, and does not beleeve, and ſhew by his practiſe that he does beleeve himſelfe to be bound to preach, he is under the penalty of this Text. When therefore the Jeſuit Maldonat pleaſes himſelfe ſo well, that, as he ſayes, he cannot chuſe but laugh, when the Calviniſts ſatisfie themſelves in doing that duty, that they doe preach; for,
C ſayes he, Docetis, ſed nemo miſit, You doe preach, but you have no calling; if it were not too ſerious a thing to laugh at, would he not allow us to be as merry, and to ſay too, Miſſi eſtis, ſed non docetis, Perchance you may have a calling, but I am ſure you do not preach? for if we conſider their practiſe, their ſecular Clergy, thoſe which have the care of ſoules in Pariſhes, they doe not preach; and if we conſider their Lawes, and Canons, their Regular Clergy, their Monks and Fryers ſhould not preach abroad, out of their own Cloyſters. And preaching was ſo far out of uſe amongſt them, as that in theſe later ages, under Innocentius the third, they inſtituted Ordinem prædicantium, An order of Preachers; as though there had been no order for preaching in the Church of God, till within theſe foure hundred yeares. And we ſee by their Patent for preaching, what the cauſe of their inſtitution was; It was becauſe thoſe who onely preached then, that is, the Humiliati, (which was another Order) were unlearned, and therefore they thought it not amiſſe,
D to appoint ſome learned men to preach: The Biſhops tooke this ill at that time, that any ſhould have leave to preach within their Dioceſſes; and therefore they had new Patents, to exempt them from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops; and they had liberty to preach every where; Modò non vellicent Papam, As long as they ſaid nothing againſt the Pope, they might preach. It is therefore but of late yeares, and indeed, eſpecially ſince the Reformation began, that the example of others hath brought them in the Roman Church to a more ordinary preaching; whereas the penalty of this Text lies upon all them who have that calling, and doe it not; and ſo it does upon them too, who doe not beleeve, that they are bound to ſeeke their ſalvation from preaching, from that ordinance and inſtitution.

I cannot remember that in any Hiſtory, for matter of fact, nor in the framing or inſtitution of any State, for matter of Law, there hath ever been ſuch a Law, or ſuch a pra-
E ctiſe, as that of Preaching. Every where amongſt the Gentils, (particularly amongſt the Romans, where there was a publique Office, to be Conditor Precum, according to emergent occaſions, to make Collects and Prayers for the publique uſe) we finde ſome reſemblance, ſome repreſentation of our common Prayer, our Liturgie; and in their ablutions, and expiations, we finde ſome reſemblance of our Sacraments; but no where any reſemblance of our Preaching. Certaine anniverſary Panegyriques they had in Rome, which were Coronation Sermons, or Adoption Sermons, or Triumph Sermons, but all thoſe, upon the matter, were but civill Commemorations. But this Inſtitution, of keeping the people in a continuall knowledge of their religious duty, by continuall preaching, was onely an ordinance of God himſelfe, for Gods own people; For, after that in the Predicate.

In Matth. 28.

Cheppinus de Jure Monaſt.

1 Cor. 1. 21. wisedome of God, the world by wisedome knew not God, It pleased God (saies the Apostle) by the foolishnesse of Preaching to save them that believe. A

What was this former wisedome of God, that that could not save man? it was twofold; First, God in his wisedome manifests a way to man, to know the Creator by the
Rom. 1. 20. creature, That the invisible things of him might be seene by the visible. And this gracious and wise purpose of God tooke not effect, because man being brought to the contemplation of the creature, rested and dwelt upon the beauty and dignity of that, and did not passe by the creature to the Creator; and then, Gods wisedome was farther expressed, in a second way, when God manifested himselfe to man by his Word, in the Law, and in the Prophets; and then, man resting in the letter of the Law, and going no farther, and resting in the outside of the Prophets, and going no farther, not discerning the Sacrifices of the Law to be Types of the death of Christ Jesus, nor the purpose of the Prophets to be, to direct us upon that Messias, that Redeemer, Ipsa, quæ per Prophetas locuta est, sapientia, saies Clement, the wisedome of God, in the mouth of the Prophets, could B
Clem. Alex. not save man; and then, when the wisedome of Nature, and the wisedome of the Law, the wisedome of the Philosophers, and the wisedome of the Scribes, became defective and insufficient, by mans perverseness, God repayred, and supplyed it by a new way, but a strange way, by the foolishnesse of preaching; for it is not onely to the subject, to the matter, to the doctrine, which they were to preach, that this foolishnesse is referred. To preach glory, by adhering to an inglorious person, lately executed for sedition and blasphemy; to preach salvation from a person, whom they saw unable to save himselfe from the Gallowes; to preach joy from a person whose soule was heavy unto death, this 1 Cor. 1. 23. was Scandalum Iudais, saies the Apostle, even to the Jewes, who were formerly acquainted by their Prophets, that some such things as these should befall their Messias, yet for all this preparation, it was Scandalum, the Jewes themselves were scandalized at it; it was C a stumbling blocke to the Iewes; but Græcis stultitia, saies the Apostle there, the Gentils thought this doctrine meere foolishnesse. But not onely the matter, but the manner, not onely the Gospel, but even preaching was a foolishnesse in the eyes of man; For if such persons as the Apostles were, heires to no reputation in the State, by being derived from great families, bred in no Universities, nor sought to for learning, persons not of the civilest education, Sea-men, Fishermen, not of the honestest professions, (Matthew but a Publican) if such persons should come into our streets, and porches, and preach, (I doe not say, such doctrine as theirs seemed then) but if they should preach at all, should not we thinke this a meere foolishnesse; did they not mock the Apostles, and say they were
Act. 2. 13. drunke, as early as it was in the morning? Did not those two sects of Philosophers, who were as farre distant in opinions, as any two could be, the Stoiques, and the Epicu-
Acts 17. 18. reans, concurre in defaming S. Paul for preaching, when they called him Seminiverbium, D a babling and prating fellow? But the foolishnesse of God is wiser then men, said that 1 Cor. 1. 25. Apostle; and out of that wisedome, God hath shut us all, under the penalty of this Text, If we that are preachers, and you that are hearers, doe not beleeve, that this preaching is the ordinance of God, for the salvation of soules.

Euangelium. This then is matter of faith, That preaching is the way, and this is matter of faith too, that that which is preached, must be matter of faith; for the Commission is, Prædicate Euangelium, Preach, but preach the Gospel; And that is, first, Euangelium solum, Preach the Gospel onely, adde nothing to the Gospel, and then Euangelium totum, Preach the Gospel intirely, defalke nothing, forbeare nothing of that; First then, we are to preach, you are to heare nothing but the Gospel; And we may neither postdate our Commission, nor interline it; nothing is Gospel now, which was not Gospel then, when Christ gave his Apostles their Commission; And no man can serve God and Mammon; no man E can preach those things, which belong to the filling of Angels roomes in heaven, and those things which belong to the filling of the Popes Coffers at Rome, with Angels upon earth: For that was not Gospel, when Christ gave this commission. And did Christ create his Apostles, as the Bishop of Rome creates his Cardinals, Cum clausura oris? He makes them Cardinalls, and shuts their mouths; they have mouths, but no tongues; tongues, but no voice; they are Judges, but must give no Judgement; Cardinalls, but have no interest in the passages of businesses, till by a new favour he open their mouths againe: Did Christ make his Apostles his Ambassadors, and promise to send their instructions after them? Did he give them a Commission, and presently a Supersedeas upon it,

that

A that they ſhould not execute it? Did he make a Teſtament, a will, and referre all to future Schedules and Codicills? Did he ſend them to preach the Goſpel, and tell them, You ſhall know the Goſpel in the Epiſtles of the Popes and their Decretals hereafter? You ſhall know the Goſpel of depoſing Princes, in the Councell of Lateran hereafter; and the Goſpel in deluding Heretiques, by ſafe conducts, in the Goſpel of Conſtance hereafter; and the Goſpel of creating new Articles of the Creed, in the Councell of Trent hereafter? If ſo, then was ſome reaſon for Chriſts Diſciples to thinke, when Chriſt ſaid, Verily, I ſay unto you, there are ſome here, who ſhall not taſte death, till they ſee the Sonne of man come in glory; that he ſpake and meant to be underſtood literally, that neither Iohn nor the reſt of the Apoſtles ſhould ever die, if they muſt live to preach the Goſpel, and the Goſpel could not be knowne by them, till the end of the world: And therefore it was wiſely done in the Romane Church, to give over preaching, ſince the B preaching of the Goſpel, that is, nothing but the Goſpel, would have done them no good to their ends: When all their preaching was come to be nothing, but declamations of the vertue of ſuch an Indulgence, and then a better Indulgence then that, to morrow, and every day a new market of fuller Indulgences, when all was but an extolling of the tenderneſſe, and the bowells of compaſſion in that mother Church, who was content to ſet a price, and a ſmall price upon every ſinne; So that if David were upon the earth againe, and then when the perſecuting Angel had drawne his ſword, would but ſend an appeale to Rome, at that price, he might have an inhibition againſt that Angel, and have leave to number his people, let God take it as he liſt; Nay, if Sodome were upon the earth againe, and the Angel ready to ſet fire to that Towne, if they could ſend to Rome, they might purchaſe a Charter even for that ſinne (though perchance they would be loath to let that ſinne paſſe over their hills:) But not to ſpeake any thing, which may favour of C jeaſt, or levity, in ſo ſerious a matter, and ſo deplorable a ſtate, as their preaching was come to, with humble thankes to God that we are delivered from it, and humble prayers to God, that we never returne to it, nor towards it, let us chearfully and conſtantly continue this duty of preaching and hearing the Goſpel; that is, firſt the Goſpel onely, and not Traditions of men; And the next is, of all the Goſpel, nothing but it, and yet all it, add nothing, defalke nothing; for as the Law is, ſo the Goſpel is, Res integra, a whole piece; and as S. Iames ſayes of the integrity of the Law, Whoſoever keeps the whole Law, and offends in one point, he is guilty of all; So he that is afraid to preach all, and he that is loath to heare all the Goſpel, he preaches none, he heares none. And therefore, if that imputation, which the Romane Church layes upon us, were true, That we preach no falſhood, but doe not teach all the truth, we did lacke one of the true marks of the true Church, that is, the preaching of the Goſpel; for it is not that, if it be not all that; take D therefore the Goſpel, as we take it from the Schoole, that it is hiſtoria, and uſus, (the Goſpel is the hiſtory of the Goſpel, the propoſing to your underſtanding all that Chriſt did, and it is the appropriation of the Goſpel, the propoſing to your faith, that all that he did he did for you) and then, if you hearken to them who will tell you, that Chriſt did that which he never did (that he came in, when the doores were ſhut, ſo that his body paſſed thorough the very body of the Tymber, thereby to advance their doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation) or that Chriſt did that which he did, to another end then he did it, (that when he whipt the buyers and ſellers out of the Temple, he exerciſed a ſecular power and ſoveraignty over the world, and thereby eſtabliſhed a ſoveraignty over Princes, in his Vicar the Pope) Theſe men doe not preach the Goſpel, becauſe the Goſpel is Hiſtoria & uſus, The truth of the Hiſtory, and of the application; and this is not the truth of the Hiſtory; So alſo if you hearken to them, who tell you, that though the blood of Chriſt be ſufficient in value for you, and for all, yet you have no meanes to be ſure, that he meant his E blood to you, but you muſt paſſe in this world, and paſſe out of this world in doubt, and that it is well if you come to Purgatory, and be ſure there of getting to heaven at laſt; theſe men preach not the Goſpel, becauſe the Goſpel is the hiſtory, and the uſe; and this is not the true uſe.

And thus it is, if wee take the Goſpell from the Schoole; but if we take it from the Schoolemaſter, from Chriſt himſelfe, the Goſpell is repentance, and remiſſion of ſinnes; For he came, That repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes ſhould be preached in his Name; If then they will tell you, that you need no ſuch repentance for a ſinne, as amounts to a contrition, to a ſorrow for having offended God, to a deteſtation of the ſinne, to a reſolution to commit commit it no more, but that it is enough to have an attrition, (as they will needs call it) a ſervill feare, and ſorrow, that you have incurred the torments of hell; or if they will tell you, that when you have had this attrition, that the clouds of ſadneſſe, and of dejection of ſpirit have met, and beat in your conſcience, and that the alliſion of thoſe clouds have brought forth a thunder, a fearefull apprehenſion of Gods Judgements upon you; And when you have had your contrition too, that you have purged your ſoule in an humble confeſſion, and have let your ſoule blood with a true and ſharpe remorſe, and compunction, for all ſinnes paſt, and put that bleeding ſoule into a bath of repentant teares, and into a bath of blood, the blood of Chriſt Jeſus in the Sacrament, and feele it faint and languiſh there, and receive no aſſurance of remiſſion of ſinnes, ſo as that it can levy no fine that can conclude God, but ſtill are afraid that God will ſtill incumber you with yeſterdayes ſinnes againe to morrow; If this be their way, they doe not preach the Goſpell, becauſe they doe not preach all the Goſpell; for the Goſpell is repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes; that is, the neceſſity of repentance, and then the aſſuredneſſe of remiſſion, goe together. A B

Mat. 16. ultim.

James 2. 10.

Luk. 24. 47.

Baptizate. Thus farre then the Crediderit is carried, wee muſt beleeve that there is a way upon earth to ſalvation, and that Preaching is that way, that is, the manner, and the matter is the Goſpell, onely the Goſpell, and all the Goſpell, and then the ſeale is the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, as we ſaid at firſt, of both Sacraments; of the Sacrament of Baptiſme there can be no queſtion, for that is literally and directly within the Commiſſion, Goe and Baptize; and then Qui non crediderit, Hee that beleeves not, not onely he that beleeves not, when it is done, but he that beleeves not that this ought to be done, ſhall bee damned; wee doe not joyne Baptiſme to faith, tanquam dimidiam ſolatii cauſam, as though Baptiſme were equall to faith, in the matter of ſalvation, for ſalvation may bee had in divers caſes by faith without Baptiſme, but in no caſe by Baptiſme without faith; neither doe wee ſay, that in this Commiſſion to the Apoſtles, the adminiſtration of Baptiſme is of equall obligation upon the Miniſter as preaching, that he may be as well excuſable if hee never preach, as if hee never Baptize; Wee know S. Peter commanded Cornelius and his family to be Baptized, wee doe not know if hee Baptized any of them with his owne hand; So S. Paul ſayes of himſelfe, that Baptizing was not his principall function; Chriſt ſent not me to Baptize, but to preach the Goſpell, ſaith he; In ſuch a ſenſe as God ſaid by Ieremy, I ſpake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them concerning burnt offerings, but I ſaid, obey my voyce, ſo S. Paul ſaith, hee was not ſent to Baptize; God commanded our fathers obedience rather then ſacrifice, but yet ſacrifice too; and hee commands us preaching rather then Baptizing, but yet Baptizing too; For as that is true, In adultis, in perſons which are come to yeares of diſcretion, which S. Hierome ſayes, Fieri non poteſt, It is impoſſible to receive the Sacrament of Baptiſme, except the ſoule have received Sacramentum fidei, the Sacrament of faith, that is the Word preached, except he have been inſtructed and chatechized before, ſo there is a neceſſity of Baptiſme after, for any other ordinary meanes of ſalvation, that God hath manifeſted to his Church; and therefore Quos Deus conjunxit, thoſe things which God hath joyned in this Commiſſion, let no man ſeparate; Except a man bee borne againe of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdome of heaven; Let no man reade that place disjunctively, Of Water or the Spirit, for there muſt bee both; S. Peter himſelfe knew not how to ſeparate them, Repent and bee baptized every one of you, ſaith he; for, for any one that might have beene, and was not Baptized, S. Peter had not that ſeale to plead for his ſalvation.

Acts 10. ult. 1 Cor. 1. 17. Jer. 7. 22. Hiero. Ioh. 3. 5. Acts 2. C D

Euchariſtia. The Sacrament of Baptiſme then, is within this Crediderit, it muſt neceſſarily be beleeved to be neceſſary for ſalvation: But is the other Sacrament of the Lords Supper ſo too? Is that within this Commiſſion? Certainly it is, or at leaſt within the equity, if not within the letter, pregnantly implyed, if not literally expreſſed: For thus it ſtands, they are commanded, To teach all things that Chriſt had commanded them; And then S. Paul ſayes, I have received of the Lord, that which alſo I delivered unto you, That the Lord Ieſus tooke bread, &c. (and ſo hee proceeds with the Inſtitution of the Sacrament) and then he addes, that Chriſt ſaid, Doe this in remembrance of mee; which is, not onely remember me when you doe it, but doe it that you may remember me; As well the receiving of the Sacrament, as the worthy receiving of it, is upon commandment.

Matt. 28. ult. 1 Cor. 11. 23. E

In the Primitive Church, there was an erronious opinion of ſuch an abſolute neceſ-

ſity

A sity in taking this Sacrament, as that they gave it to persons when they were dead; a custome which was growne so common, as that it needed a Canon of a Councell, to restraine it. But the giving of this Sacrament to children newly baptized was so generall, even in pure times, as that we see so great men as Cyprian and Augustine, scarce lesse then vehement for the use of it; and some learned men in the Reformed Church have not so far declined it, but that they call it, Catholicam consuetudinem, a Catholique, an universall custome of the Church. But there is a farre greater strength both of naturall and spirituall faculties required for the receiving of this Sacrament of the Lords Supper, then the other of Baptisme. But for those who have those faculties, that they are now, or now should be able, to discerne the Lords body, and their owne soules, besides that inestimable and inexpressible comfort, which a worthy receiver receives, as often as he receives that seale of his reconciliation to God, since as Baptisme is Tessera Christianorum, (I know a Christian from a Turke by that Sacrament) so this Sacrament is Tessera orthodoxorũ) I know a Protestant from a Papist by this Sacrament) it is a service to God, and to his Church to come frequently to this Communion; for truly (not to shake or afright any tender conscience) I scarce see, how any man can satisfie himselfe, that he hath said the Lords Prayer with a good conscience, if at the same time he were not in such a disposition as that he might have received the Sacrament too; for, if he be in charity, he might receive, and if he be not, he mocked Almighty God, and deluded the Congregation, in saying the Lords Prayer. Carthag. 3. c. 6. Musculus.

B

There remaines one branch of that part, Docete servare, Preach the Gospell, administer the Sacraments, and teach them to practise and doe all this: how comes matter of fact to be matter of faith? Thus; Qui non crediderit, he that does not beleeve, that he is bound to live aright, is within the penalty of this text. It is so with us, and it is so with you too; Amongst us, he that sayes well, presents a good text, but he that lives well, presents a good Comment upon that text. As the best texts that we can take, to make Sermons upon, are as this text is, some of the words of Christs owne Sermons: so the best arguments we can prove our Sermons by, is our owne life. The whole weekes conversation, is a good paraphrase upon the Sundayes Sermon; It is too soone to aske when the clocke stroke eleven, Is it a good Preacher? for I have but halfe his Sermon then, his owne life is the other halfe; and it is time enough to aske the Saterday after, whether the Sundayes Preacher preach well or no; for he preaches poorely that makes an end of his Sermon upon Sunday; He preaches on all the weeke, if he live well, to the edifying of others; If we say well, and doe ill, we are so far from the example of Gods children, which built with one hand, and fought with the other, as that, if we doe build with one hand, in our preaching, we pull down with the other in our example, and not only our own, but other mens buildings too; for the ill life of particular men reflects upon the function and ministery in generall. Docete servare.

C

D

And as it is with us, if we divorce our words and our works, so it is with you, if you doe divorce your faith and your workes. God hath given his Commission under seale, Preach and Baptize; God lookes for a returne of this Commission, under seale too; Believe, and bring forth fruits worthy of belief. The way that Iacob saw to Heaven, was a ladder; It was not a faire and an easie staire case, that a man might walke up without any holding. But manibus innitendum, sayes S. Augustine, in the way to salvation there is use of hands, of actions, of good works, of a holy life; Servate omnia, doe then all that is commanded, all that is within the Commission: If that seeme impossible, doe what you can, and you have done all; for then is all this done, Cum quod non fit ignoscitur, When God forgives that which is left undone; But God forgives none of that which is left undone, out of a wilfull and vincible ignorance. And therefore search thy conscience, and then Christs commandement enters, Scrutamini Scripturas, then search the Scriptures; for till then, as long as thy conscience is foule, it is but an illusion to apprehend any peace, or any comfort in any sentence of the Scripture, in any promise of the Gospell: search thy conscience, empty that, and then search the Scriptures, and thou shalt finde abundantly enough to fill it with peace and consolation; for this is the summe of all the Scriptures, Qui non crediderit hoc, He that believes not this, that he must be saved by hearing the word preached, by receiving the Sacraments, and by working according to both, is within the penalty of this text, Damnabitur, He shall be damned. Auguſt. Auguſt.

E

How know we that? many persons have power to condemne, which have not power 2 Part.

to

to pardon; but Gods word is evidence enough for our pardon and abſolution, whenſoever we repent we are pardoned, much more then for our condemnation; & here we have Gods word for that; if that were not enough we have his oath; for it is in another place, Heb. 4. 3. God hath ſworne, that there are ſome, which ſhall not enter into his reſt, and to whom did he ſweare that, ſayes S. Paul, but to them that beleeved not? God cannot lye, much leſſe be forſworne, and God hath ſaid and ſworne, Damnabitur, he that beleeveth not, ſhall be damned. He ſhall be; but when? does any man make haſt? though that be enough that S. Chryſoſtome ſayes, It is all one, when that begins, which ſhall never end, yet the tenſe is eaſily changed in this caſe, from damnabitur to damnatur; for he that beleeveth not, is condemned already. But why ſhould he be ſo? condemned for a negative? for a privative? here is no oppoſition, no affirming the contrary, no ſeducing or diſſwading other men that have a mind to beleeve, that is not enough; for, He that beleeveth not God, hath made God a lyar, becauſe he beleeveth not the record that God gave of his Son. Here is the condemnation we ſpeake of, as S. Iohn ſayes, Light was preſented, and they loved darkneſſe; ſo that howſoever God proceed in his unſearchable judgements with the Heathen, to whom the light and name of Chriſt Jeſus was never preſented, certainely we, to whom the Goſpell hath beene ſo freely, and ſo fully preached, fall under the penalty of this text, if we beleeve not, for we have made God a lyar in not beleeving the record he gives of his Son.

That then there is damnation, and why it is, and when it is, is cleare enough; but what this damnation is, neither the tongue of good Angels that know damnation by the contrary, by fruition of ſalvation, nor the tongue of bad Angels who know damnation by a lamentable experience, is able to expreſſe it; A man may ſaile ſo at ſea, as that he ſhall have laid the North Pole flat, that ſhall be fallen out of ſight, and yet he ſhall not have raiſed the South Pole, he ſhall not ſee that; So there are things, in which a man may goe beyond his reaſon, and yet not meet with faith neither: of ſuch a kinde are thoſe things which concerne the locality of hell, and the materiality of the torments thereof; for that hell is a certaine and limited place, beginning here and ending there, and extending no farther, or that the torments of hell be materiall, or elementary torments, which in naturall conſideration can have no proportion, no affection, nor appliableneſſe to the tormenting of a ſpirit, theſe things neither ſettle my reaſon, nor binde my faith; neither opinion, that it is, or is not ſo, doth command our reaſon ſo, but that probable reaſons may be brought on the other ſide; neither opinion doth ſo command our faith, but that a man may be ſaved, though hee thinke the contrary; for in ſuch points, it is alwaies lawfull to thinke ſo, as we finde does moſt advance and exalt our owne devotion, and Gods glory in our eſtimation; but when we ſhall have given to thoſe words, by which hell is expreſſed in the Scriptures, the heavieſt ſignifications, that either the nature of thoſe words can admit, or as they are types and repreſentations of hell, as fire, and brimſtone, & weeping, and gnaſhing, and darkneſſe, and the worme, and as they are laid together in Eſay 30. 33. the Prophet, Tophet, (that is, hell) is deepe and large, (there is the capacity & content, roome enough) It is a pile of fire and much wood, (there is the durableneſſe of it) and the breath of the Lord to kindle it, like a ſtreame of Brimſtone, (there is the vehemence of it:) when all is done, the hell of hels, the torment of torments is the everlaſting abſence of God, and the everlaſting impoſſibility of returning to his preſence; Heb. 10. 31. Horrendum eſt, ſayes the Apoſtle, It is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Yet there was a caſe, in which David found an eaſe, to fall into the hands of God, to ſcape the hands of men: Horrendum eſt, when Gods hand is bent to ſtrike, it is a fearefull thing, to fall into the hands of the living God; but to fall out of the hands of the living God, is a horror beyond our expreſſion, beyond our imagination.

That God ſhould let my ſoule fall out of his hand, into a bottomleſſe pit, and roll an unremoveable ſtone upon it, and leave it to that which it finds there, (and it ſhall finde that there, which it never imagined, till it came thither) and never thinke more of that ſoule, never have more to doe with it. That of that providence of God, that ſtudies the life of every weed, and worme, and ant, and ſpider, and toad, and viper, there ſhould never, never any beame flow out upon me; that that God, who looked upon me, when I was nothing, and called me when I was not, as though I had been, out of the womb and depth of darkneſſe, will not looke upon me now, when, though a miſerable, and a baniſhed, and a damned creature, yet I am his creature ſtill, and contribute ſomething to his glory, glory, even in my damnation; that that God, who hath often looked upon me in my fouleſt uncleanneſſe, and when I had ſhut out the eye of the day, the Sunne, and the eye of the night, the Taper, and the eyes of all the world, with curtaines and windowes and doores, did yet ſee me, and ſee me in mercy, by making me ſee that he ſaw me, and ſometimes brought me to a preſent remorſe, and (for that time) to a forbearing of that ſinne, ſhould ſo turne himſelfe from me, to his glorious Saints and Angels, as that no Saint nor Angel, nor Chriſt Jeſus himſelfe, ſhould ever pray him to looke towards me, never remember him, that ſuch a ſoule there is; that that God, who hath ſo often ſaid to my ſoule, Quare morieris? Why wilt thou die? and ſo often ſworne to my ſoule, Vivit Dominus, As the Lord liveth, I would not have thee dye, but live, will nether let me dye, nor let me live, but dye an everlaſting life, and live an everlaſting death; that that God, who, when he could not get into me, by ſtanding, and knocking, by his ordinary meanes of entring, by his Word, his mercies, hath applied his judgements, and hath ſhaked the houſe, this body, with agues and palſies, and ſet this houſe on fire, with fevers and calentures, and frighted the Maſter of the houſe, my ſoule, with horrors, and heavy apprehenſions, and ſo made an entrance into me; That that God ſhould fruſtrate all his owne purpoſes and practiſes upon me, and leave me, and caſt me away, as though I had coſt him nothing, that this God at laſt, ſhould let this ſoule goe away, as a ſmoake, as a vapour, as a bubble, and that then this ſoule cannot be a ſmoake, a vapour, nor a bubble, but muſt lie in darkneſſe, as long as the Lord of light is light it ſelfe, and never ſparke of that light reach to my ſoule; What Tophet is not Paradiſe, what Brimſtone is not Amber, what gnaſhing is not a comfort, what gnawing of the worme is not a tickling, what torment is not a marriage bed to this damnation, to be ſecluded eternally, eternally, eternally from the ſight of God? Eſpecially to us, for as the perpetuall loſſe of that is moſt heavy, with which we have been beſt acquainted, and to which wee have been moſt accuſtomed; ſo ſhall this damnation, which conſiſts in the loſſe of the ſight and preſence of God, be heavier to us then others, becauſe God hath ſo graciouſly, and ſo evidently, and ſo diverſly appeared to us, in his pillar of fire, in the light of proſperity, and in the pillar of the Cloud, in hiding himſelfe for a while from us; we that have ſeene him in all the parts of this Commiſſion, in his Word, in his Sacraments, and in good example, and not beleeved, ſhall be further removed from his ſight, in the next world, then they to whom he never appeared in this. But Vincenti & credenti, to him that beleeves aright, and overcomes all tentations to a wrong beliefe, God ſhall give the accompliſhment of fulneſſe, and fulneſſe of joy, and joy rooted in glory, and glory eſtabliſhed in eternity, and this eternity is God; To him that beleeves and overcomes, God ſhall give himſelfe in an everlaſting preſence and fruition, Amen.

SERM. LXXVII.

Preached at S. PAULS, May 21. 1626.

1 COR. 15. 29.

Elſe, what ſhall they doe which are baptized for the dead? if the dead riſe not at all, why are they then baptized for the dead?

ENtred into the handling of theſe words, upon Eaſter day; for, though the words have received divers Expoſitions, good and pervers, yet all agreed, that the words were an argument for the Reſurrection, and that invited me to apply them to that Day. At that Day I entred into them, with Origens proteſtation, Odit Dominus, qui feſtum ejus unum putat diem, God hates that man, that thinks any holy-day of his laſts but one day, that never thinks of the Reſurrection, but upon Eaſter day: And therefore I engaged my ſelfe willingly, according to the invitation, and almoſt the neceſſity of the words, which could not conveniently, (ſcarce (ſcarce poſſibly) be determined in one day, to returne againe and againe to the handling thereof. For, they are words of a great extent, a great compaſſe: The whole Circle of a Chriſtian is deſigned and accompliſhed in them; for, here is firſt the firſt point in that Circle, our Birth, our ſpirituall birth, that is, Baptiſme, Why are theſe men thus baptized? ſayes the Text; And then here is the point, directly and diametrally oppoſed to that firſt point, our Birth, that is, Death, Why are theſe men thus baptized for the dead? ſayes the Text; And then the Circle is carried up to the firſt point againe, to our Birth, in another Birth, in the Reſurrection, Why are theſe men thus baptized for the dead, if there be no Reſurrection? So that if we conſider the Militant and the Triumphant Church, to be (as they are) all one Houſe, and under one roofe, here is firſt Limen Eccleſiæ, (as S. Auguſtine calls Baptiſme) The Threſhold of the Church, we are put over the Threſhold, into the Body of the Church, by Baptiſme, and here we are remembred of Baptiſme, Why are theſe men thus baptized? And then here is Chorus Eccleſiæ, The Quire, the Chancell of the Church, in which all the ſervice of God is officiated and executed; for we are made not onely hearers, and ſpectators, but actors in the ſervice of God, when we come to beare a part in the Hymnes and Anthems of the Saints, by our Death, and here we are remembred of Death, Why are theſe men thus baptized for the Dead? And then, here is Sanctum Sanctorum, The innermoſt part of the Church, The Holy of Holyes, that is, the manifeſtation of all the myſterious ſalvation, belonging to ſoule and body, in the Reſurrection, Why are theſe men thus baptized for the dead, if there be no Reſurrection?

Our firſt dayes worke in handling theſe words, was to accept, and then to apply that, in which all agreed, that theſe words were an argument for the Reſurrection; And we did both thoſe offices; we did accept it, and ſo ſhew you, how the aſſurance of the Reſurrection accrues to us, and what is the office of Reaſon, and what is the office of Faith, in that affayre; And then we did apply it, and ſo ſhew you divers reſemblances, and conformities between naturall Death, and ſpirituall Death, and between the Reſurrection of the body to glory at laſt, and the Reſurrection of the ſoule by grace, in the way; and wherein they induced, and aſſiſted, and illuſtrated one another: And thoſe two miles made up that Sabbath dayes journey. When we ſhall returne to the handling of them, the next day, (which will be the laſt) we ſhall conſider how theſe words have been miſ-applyed by our Adverſaries of the Romane Church, and then the ſeverall Expoſitions which they have received from ſound and Orthodoxall men, that thence we may draw a concluſion, and determination for our ſelves; And in thoſe two miles, wee ſhall alſo make up that Sabbath Dayes journey, when God ſhall be pleaſed to bring us to it. This dayes Exerciſe ſhall be, to conſider that very point, for the eſtabliſhment whereof, they have ſo detorted, and miſ-applyed theſe words, which is their Purgatory, That this Baptiſme for the Dead muſt neceſſarily prove Purgatory, and their Purgatory.

So then this Dayes Exerciſe will bee meerely Polemicall, the handling of a Controverſie; which though it be not alwayes pertinent, yet neither is it alwayes unſeaſonable. There was a time but lately, when he who was in his deſire and intenſion, the Peace-maker of all the Chriſtian world, as he had a deſire to have ſlumbred all Field-drums, ſo had he alſo to have ſlumbred all Pulpit-drums, ſo far, as to paſſe over all impertinent handling of Controverſies, meerly and profeſſedly as Controverſies, though never by way of poſitive maintenance of Orthodoxall and fundamentall Truths; That ſo there might be no ſlackning in the defence of the truth of our Religion, and yet there might bee a diſcreet and temperate forbearing of perſonall, and eſpecially of Nationall exaſperations. And as this way had piety, and peace in the worke it ſelfe, ſo was it then occaſionally exalted, by a great neceſſity; He, who was then our hope, and is now the breath of our noſtrils, and the Anointed of the Lord, being then taken in their pits, and, in that great reſpect, ſuch exaſperations the fitter to be forborne, eſpecially ſince that courſe might well bee held, without any prevarication, or cooling the zeale of the poſitive maintenance of the religion of our Church. But things ſtanding now in another ſtate, and all peace, both Eccleſiaſticall and Civill, with theſe men, being by themſelves removed, and taken away, and hee whom we feared, returned in all kinde of ſafety, ſafe in body, and ſafe in ſoule too, whom though their Church could not, their Court hath chatechiſed in their religion, that is, brought him to a cleere underſtanding of their Ambition, (for Ambition is their

A their Religion, and S. Peters Ship muſt ſaile in their Fleets, and with their winds, or it muſt ſink, and the Catholique and Militant Church muſt march in their Armies, though thoſe Armies march againſt Rome it ſelfe, as heretofore they have done, to the ſacking of that Towne, to the holding of the Pope himſelfe in ſo ſordid a priſon, for ſixe moneths, as that ſome of his neareſt ſervants about him died of the plague, to the treading under foot Prieſts, and Biſhops, and Cardinals, to the diſhonouring of Matrons, and the raviſhing of profeſſed Virgins, and committing ſuch inſolencies, Catholiques upon Catholiques, as they would call us Heretiques for beleeving them, but that they are their owne Catholique Authors that have written them) Things being now, I ſay, in this ſtate, with theſe men, ſince wee heare that Drums beat in every field abroad, it becomes us alſo to returne to the braſing and beating of our Drums in the Pulpit too, that ſo, as Adam did not onely dreſſe Paradiſe, but keepe Paradiſe; and as the children of B God, did not onely build, but build with one hand, and fight with another; ſo wee alſo may employ ſome of our Meditations upon ſupplanting, and ſubverting of error, as well as upon the planting, and watering of the Truth. To which purpoſe I ſhall prepare this day, for the vindicating and redeeming of theſe words from the Adverſary, (which will bee the worke of the next day) by handling to day that point, for which they have miſapplied them, which is Purgatory, and the mother, and the off-ſpring of that; for what can that generation of vipers ſuck from this Text, which is not, If there be no ſuch Purgatory, but, If there be no ſuch Reſurrection, why then are theſe men baptized for the dead? Heaven and earth ſhall paſſe away, ſaith Chriſt, but my word ſhall not paſſe away. But rather Matt 24.35.
then Purgatory ſhall paſſe away, his word muſt admit ſuch an Interpretation, as ſhall paſſe away, and evacuate the intention and purpoſe of the Holy Ghoſt therein. How much of the earth is paſſed away from them, wee know, who acknowledge the mercy,
C and might, and miracle of Gods working, in withdrawing ſo many Kingdomes, ſo many Nations of the earth, in ſo ſhort time, from the obedience, and ſuperſtition of Rome, as that if Controverſies had been to have been tried by number, they would have found as many againſt them, as with them; ſo much of the earth is paſſed from them. How much of heaven is paſſed from them, that is, how much leſſe intereſt and claime to heaven they can have now, when God hath afforded them ſo much light, and they have reſiſted it, then when they were in ſo great a part, under invincible ignorance, God onely, who is the onely Judge in ſuch cauſes, knowes; and he, of his goodneſſe, enlarge their title to that place, by their converſion towards it. But how much ſoever of earth or heaven paſſe away, they will not loſe an acre, an inch of Purgatory; For, as men are moſt delighted with things of their owne making, their owne planting, their owne purchaſing, their owne building, ſo are theſe men therefore inamoured of Purgatory: Men
D that can make Articles of faith of their owne Traditions, (And as men to elude the law againſt new Buildings, firſt build ſheds, or ſtables, and after erect houſes there, as upon old foundations, ſo theſe men firſt put forth Traditions of their owne, and then erect thoſe Traditions into Articles of faith, as ancient foundations of Religion) Men that make God himſelfe of a piece of bread, may eaſily make Purgatory of a Dreame, and of Apparitions, and imaginary viſions of ſick or melancholike men.

It may then be of uſe to inſiſt upon the ſurvey of this building of theirs, in theſe three Diviſio.
conſiderations. Firſt, to looke upon the foundation, upon what they raiſe it, and that is Prayer for the Dead, and that is the Grand-mother Error; And then upon the Building it ſelfe, Purgatory it ſelfe, and that is the Mother; And laſtly upon the out-houſes, or the furniture of this Building, and that is Indulgences, which are the children, the iſſue of this mother, and not ſuch children as draw their parents dry, but ſupport and main-E taine their parents; for, but for theſe Indulgences, their prayer for the Dead, and their Purgatory would ſtarve; And ſtarve they muſt all, if they can draw their maintenance from no other place but this, Why are theſe men baptized for the dead?

Firſt then for the firſt of theſe three parts, The foundation, the Grand-mother, Prayer 1 Part.
for the Dead; The moſt tender Mother, the moſt officious Nurſe, cannot have a more Oratio pro mortuis.
particular care, how a new-borne child ſhall be waſhed, or ſwathed, or fed, when they conſider every drop of water, every clout, every pin that belongs to it, then God had of his Infant Church, when he delivered it over to her foſter-fathers, her nurſing-fathers, her god-fathers, Moſes and Aaron, and bound them by his inſtructions, in every particular, as he preſcribed them. How many directions he gave, what they ſhould eate, what they ſhould weare, how often they ſhould waſh, what they ſhould doe, in every religious, in every civill action, and yet never, never any mention, any intimation, never any approach, any inclination, never any light, no nor any ſhadow, never any colour, any colourableneſſe of any command of prayer for the Dead. In all the Law, no precept for it; And this might imply a weakneſſe in Gods government, in ſo particular a law no precept of ſo important a duty: In all the Hiſtory no example; And this might imply ill luck at leaſt, in ſo large a ſtory no Precedent of an Office ſo neceſſary: In all the Goſpell no promiſe annexed to it; And this doth not imply, but manifeſt a concluſion againſt it, an excluſion of it. There being then no precept, no precedent, no promiſe for it, how came it into uſe and practiſe amongſt the Jewes? A

Iudæi. After the Jewes had been a long time converſant amongſt the Gentiles, and that as freſh water approaching the Sea, contracts a ſaltiſh, a brackiſh taſt, ſo the Jewes received impreſſions of the cuſtomes of the Gentiles, who were ever naturally enclined to this miſ-devotion, and left-handed piety, of praying for the Dead, In the faintneſſe, and languiſhing of their Religion, when they were much declined from the exact obſervation thereof, then, in the time of the Maccabees entred that one example, which hath raiſed ſuch a duſt, and blinded ſo many eyes. We have mention of many funeralls before that, and after that of many too, even in the time when Chriſt was upon the earth, and yet never mention of prayer for the dead, but in this one place of this booke; I doe not ſay, in this one ſtory, (for in this ſtory reported by Ioſephus, there is no mention of it) but in this one booke. That is true that I have read, that after Chriſts time, the Rabbins laid hold upon it, and brought it into cuſtome; And that is true which I have ſeene, that the Jewes at this day continue it in practiſe; For when one dies, for ſome certaine time after, appointed by them, his ſonne or ſome other neere in blood or alliance, comes to the Altar, and there ſaith and doth ſome thing in the behalfe of his dead father, or grandfather reſpectively. But all this they have drawne into practiſe, from this one place, from this booke, from which booke the ſame Rabbins draw a juſtification of a mans killing himſelfe, becauſe in this booke they find an example of that in Razis: The Rabbins tooke no better a ground for their prayer for the dead, then for ſelfe-homicide, onely matter of fact, out of a Hiſtoricall booke, which themſelves did not beleeve to be Canonicall. But how took this hold of Chriſtians? B C

2 Macc. 14. 37.

Chriſtiani. That which wrought upon the Jewes, prevailed upon the new Chriſtians too; for the greateſt part of them, by much, being Gentiles, (for few amongſt the Jewes, in compariſon, were converted to the Chriſtian religion) they which came from Gentiliſme, retained ſtill many impreſſions of ſuch things as they had been formerly accuſtomed unto. And as the Fathers of the Church then, out of an indulgence to theſe new Convertits, did ſuffer and tolerate the practiſe of many things, which theſe Gentiles brought with them; (as indeed a great part of the ceremonies of the Chriſtian Church are of that nature, and of ſuch an admiſſion, Things, which rather then avert their new Convertits from comming to them, by an utter aboliſhing of all parts of their former religion, and worſhip of their gods, thoſe bleſſed Fathers thought fitter to retaine, and turne to ſome good uſe, then altogether to take them away) As in other things, ſo alſo in this prayer for the dead, to which they, as Gentiles, had been formerly accuſtomed, the Fathers did not oppoſe it with any peremptory earneſtneſſe, with any vehement diligence, partly becauſe the thing it ſelfe argued and teſtified a good, and tender, and pious affection; (and though God doe not ground his Decrees upon any diſpoſition in mans nature, yet in the execution of his Decrees, God as hee works in his Church, loves to work upon a good natur'd man) and partly alſo, becauſe this practiſe, being but a practiſe onely, and no Dogmaticall conſtitution, might be (as it was in the firſt practiſe thereof) without ſhaking any foundation, or wounding any Article of the Chriſtian Religion; And laſtly, (that wee may ſpeake truth, with that holy boldneſſe which belongs to the truth) becauſe it was a long time before the Fathers came to a cleere underſtanding of the ſtate of the ſoule, departed out of this life: for though they never doubted of the certaine performance of Gods promiſes, That all that die in him, do reſt in him, yet where, and how this reſt was communicated to them, admitted more clouds then they could at all times diſpell and ſcatter, ſome ariſing from Philoſophers, ſome from Heretiques, ſome from ignorance, ſome from heat of Diſputation. D E

Tertul. So then, at firſt it was a weed that grew wild in the open field, amongſt the Gentiles;

Then

A Then because it bore a pretty flower, the testimony of a good nature, it was transplanted into some Gardens, and so became a private opinion, or at least a practise amongst some Christians; And then it spred it selfe so far, as that Tertullian, and he first of any takes knowledge of it, as of a custome of the Church; And truly this of Tertullian is very early, within little more then two hundred years after Christ. But as Tertullian shews us an early birth of it, so he tells us enough, to shew us, that it should not have been long liv'd, when he acknowledges that it had no ground in Scripture, but was onely a custome popularly, and vulgarly taken up. But Tertullian speaks of more then Prayer; he speaks of oblations and sacrifices for the dead; It is true, he does so; but it is of oblations and sacrifices far from the propitiatory sacrifice of the Masse, for Tertullian makes a woman the Priest in his sacrifice: Offert uxor, sayes he, annuis diebus dormitionis mariti, The wife offers every yeare upon the day of her husbands death; that is, every yeare upon
B that day, she gives a dole and almes to the poore, as the custome was to doe in memory of dead friends.

This being then but such a custome, and but so induc'd, why did none oppose it? Aerius. Epiphanius.
Why it was not sufficiently opposed, I have intimated some reasons before: The affection of those that did it, who were (though mistaken in the way) piously affected in the action, And then the harmlesnesse in the thing it self at first, And then partly a loathnesse in the Fathers to deter the Gentiles from becomming Christians, And partly a cloud and darknesse of the state of the soule after death. Yet some did oppose it; But some not early enough, and some not earnestly enough; And some not with much successe, because they were not otherwise Integræ famæ, They were not thought sound in all things, and therefore they were beleeved in nothing; which was Aerius his case, who did oppose it; but because Aerius did not come home to all truths, he was not hearkned unto,
C in opposing any error. Otherwise at that time, Epiphanius had a faire occasion offered, to have opposed this growing custome, and to have rectified the Church in a good measure therein, about an hundred years after Tertullian: For then Aerius opposed it directly; but because he proceeded upon false grounds, That since it was come to that, That the most vicious man, the most enormous sinner, might be saved after his death, by the prayers and devotions of another man, there remained no more for a Christian to doe, but to provide such men in his life, to doe those offices for him after his death, and so he might deliver himselfe from all the disciplines, and mortifications, and from the anguishes, and remorses, and vexations of conscience which the Christian Religion induces and requires, Epiphanius discerning the advantage that Aerius had given, by imputing things not throughly true, he places his glory, and his triumph, onely in overthrowing Aerius his ill grounded arguments, and takes the question it selfe, and the dan-
D ger of the Church, no farther to heart then so. And therefore when Aerius asks, Can prayers for the dead be of any use? Epiphanius sayes, Yes, they may be of use, to awaken and exercise the piety and charity of the living; and never speaks to that which was principally intended, whether they could be of any use to the dead. So when Aerius asks, Is it not absurd to say, That all sins may be remitted after death? Epiphanius sayes, No man in the Church ever said, That all sins may be remitted after death, and never cleares the maine, whether any sin might. And yet with all advantages, and modifications, Epiphanius lodges it at last, but upon custome, Nec enim præceptum Patris, sed institutum matris habemus, sayes he, For this which we doe, we have no commandment from God our Father, but onely an Institution, implyed in this Custome, from the Church our Mother.

But then it grew to a farther height; from a wild flower in the field, and a garden Chrysost.
E flower in private grounds, to be more generally planted, and to be not onely suffered by many Fathers, but cherished and watered by some, and not above forty years after Epiphanius, to be so far advanced by S. Chrysostome, as that he assignes, though no Scripture for it, yet that which is neareſt to Scripture, That it was an Apostolicall Constitution. And truly, if it did clearly appeare to have been so, A thing practised, and prescribed to the Church, by the Apostles, the holy Ghost were as well to be beleeved in the Apostles mouthes, as in their pens; An Apostolicall Tradition, that is truly so, is good evidence. But because those things doe hardly lie in proofe, (for that which hath been given for a good Rule of Apostolicall Traditions, is very defective, that is, That whatsoever hath been generally in use in the Church, of which no Author is known, is to be accepted for an Apoſtolicall Tradition, for ſo that Ablutio pedum, The waſhing of one anothers feet after Chriſts example, was in ſo generall uſe, that it had almoſt gained the dignity of being a Sacrament; And ſo was alſo the giving of the Sacrament of the Body and Bloud to children newly baptized, and yet theſe, though in ſo generall uſe, and without any certaine Author, are not Apoſtolicall Traditions) Therefore we muſt apply S. Auguſtines words to S. Chryſoſtome, Lege ex Lege, ex Prophetis, ex Pſalmis, ex Euangelio, ex Apoſtolicis literis, & credemus, Read us any thing out of the Law, or Prophets, or Pſalmes, or Goſpel, or Epiſtles, and we will beleeve it. And we muſt have leave to return S. Auguſtines words upon S. Auguſtine himſelfe, who hath much aſſiſted this cuſtome of praying for the dead, Lege ex Lege, &c. Read it out of the Scriptures, and we will beleeve it; for S. Auguſtine does not pretend any other place of Scripture, then this of the Maccabees, and (not diſputing now what credit that Book had with S. Auguſtine) certainly it fell not within this enumeration of his, The Maccabees are neither Law, nor Prophets, nor Pſalms, nor Goſpel, nor Epiſtle. A B

Beloved, it is a wanton thing for any Church, in ſpirituall matters, to play with ſmall errors; to tolerate, or wink at ſmall abuſes, as though it ſhould be alwayes in her power to extinguiſh them when ſhe would. It is Chriſts counſell to his Spouſe, that is, the Church, Capite vulpes parvulas, Take us the little foxes, for they deſtroy the Vine; though they ſeeme but little, and able to doe little harme, yet they grow bigger and bigger every day; and therefore ſtop errors before they become hereſies, and erroneous men before they become formall heretiques. Capite, ſayes Chriſt, Take them, ſuffer them not to goe on; but then, it is Capite nobis, Take us thoſe foxes, Take them for us, The bargaine is betweene Chriſt and his Church. For it is not Capite vobis, Take them to your ſelves, and make your ſelves Judges of ſuch doctrinall matters, as appertaine not to your cognizance; Nor it is not Cape tibi, Take him to thy ſelfe, ſpy out a Recuſant, or a man otherwiſe not conformable, and take him for thy labour, beg him, and ſpoile him, and, for his Religion, leave him as you found him; Neither is it Cape ſibi, Take him for his eaſe, that is, compound with him eaſily, and continue him in his eſtate and errors, but Cape nobis, Take him for us, ſo detect him, as he may thereby be reduced to Chriſt and his Church. C

Neither onely this counſel of Chriſt to his Church, but that commandment of God in Levit. is alſo applyable to this, Non miſereberis pauperis in judicio, Thou ſhalt not countenance a poore man in his cauſe, Thou ſhalt not pity a poore man in judgement. Though a new opinion may ſeeme a poore opinion, able to doe little harme, though it may ſeem a pious and profitable opinion, and of good uſe, yet in judicio, if it ſtand in judgement, and pretend to be an article of faith, and of that holy obligation, matter neceſſary to ſalvation, Non miſereberis, Thou ſhalt not ſpare, thou ſhalt not countenance this opinion upon any collaterall reſpect, but bring it to the onely tryall of Doctrines, the Scriptures. In the beginning of the Reformation in Germany, there aroſe a ſect, whom they called Intermiſts, and Adiaphoriſts, who, upon a good pretence, were like to have done a great deale of miſchiefe: They ſaid, Since all the hope of a Reformation that we can promiſe our ſelves, muſt come from a generall Councell, and of ſuch a Councel we can have no hope but by the Pope, it were impertinent, and diſ-conducing to our owne ends, to vexe or exaſperate the Pope, in this Interim, till the Councel be ſetled, and ſo the Reformation put into a way; and in the Interim, for this ſhort time till the Councel, theſe Adiaphora, the indifferent things, (in which mild word they involved all the abuſes, and all the grievances that were complained of) may be well enough continued. But if they had continued ſo long, they had continued yet; If they had ſpared their little foxes then, they had deſtroyed their vines; If they had pitied the poore in judgement, the cauſe had been judged againſt them; If they had reprieved thoſe abuſes for a time, they had got a pardon for ever: And therefore bleſſed were they in taking thoſe children, and daſhing them againſt the ſtones, In taking thoſe new-born opinions, and bringing them to the true touch-ſtone of all Doctrines, An ab initio, whether they had been from the beginning, or could conſiſt with the Scriptures. D E

Exod. 23. 3. Lev. 19. 15.

Neither doth this counſel of Chriſts, Take us theſe little foxes, nor this commandment of God, Thou ſhalt not pity the poor in judgment, determine it ſelf in the Church, or in the publique only, but extends it ſelf (rather contracts it ſelf) to every particular ſoul and conſcience. Capite vulpeculas, Take your litle foxes, watch your firſt inclinatiõs to ſins, for if you give

A give them ſuck at firſt, if you feed them with the milke and hony of the mercy of God, it ſhall not be in your power to weane them when you would, but they will draw you from one to another extreme, from a former preſumption to a future deſperation in Gods mercy. So alſo Non miſereberis, Thou ſhalt not pity the poore in judgement; now that thou calleſt thy ſelfe to judgement, and thy conſcience to an examination, thou ſhalt not pity any ſin, becauſe it pretends to be a poore ſin, either poore ſo, that it cannot much endanger thee, not much encumber thee, or poore ſo, as that it threatens thee with poverty, with penury, with diſability to ſupport thy ſtate, or maintaine thy family, if thou entertaine it not. Many times I have ſeene a ſuitor that comes in forma pauperis, more trouble a Court, and more importune a Judge, then greater cauſes, or greater perſons: And ſo may ſuch ſins as come in forma pauperis, either way, That they plead poverty, That they can doe little harme, or threaten poverty if they be not entertained. Thoſe ſins are the
B moſt dangerous ſins, which pretend reaſon why they ſhould be entertained: for ſinnes which are done meerely out of infirmity, or out of the ſurpriſall of a tentation, are (in compariſon of others) done as ſins in our ſleep; but in ſins upon deliberation, upon counſell, upon pretence of reaſon, we doe ſee the wiſdome of God, but we ſet our wiſdome above his, we do ſee the law of God, but we inſert and interline non obſtantes of our own, into Gods Law.

If therefore thou wilt corruptly and vitiouſly, and ſinfully love another, out of pity, becauſe they love thee ſo; If thou wilt aſſiſt a poore man in a cauſe, out of pretence of pity, with thy countenance and the power of thy place, that that poore man may have ſomething, and thou the reſt that is recovered in his right; If thou wilt embrace any particular ſin out of pity, leſt thy Wife and Children ſhould be left unprovided; If thou have not taken theſe little foxes, that is, reſiſted theſe tentations at the beginning, yet Nunc in
C judicio, now that they appeare in judgement, in examination of thy conſcience, Non miſereberis, Thou ſhalt not pity them, but (as Moſes ſpeakes of falſe Prophets, and by a faire accommodation of all bewitching ſins, with pleaſure or profit) If a Dreamer of Dreames have given thee a ſigne, and that ſigne be come to paſſe; If a ſin have told thee, it would make thee rich, and it have made thee rich; yet if this Dreamer draw thee to another God, If this profit draw thee to an Idolatrous, that is, to an habituall love of that ſin, (for Tot habemus recentes Deos, quot vitia, ſayes S. Hierom, Every man hath ſo many Idols in him, as he hath habituall ſins) yet, Though this dreamer (as God proceeds there) be thy brother, or thy ſon, or thy friend which is as thine owne ſoule, How neare, how deare, how neceſſary ſoever this ſin be unto thee, Non miſereberis, ſayes Moſes, Thine eye ſhall not pity that Dreamer, thou ſhalt not keepe him ſecret, but thine owne hand ſhall be upon him to kill him; And ſo of this pleaſurable, or profitable ſin, Non miſereberis, Thou ſhalt not hide it, but
D poure it out in Confeſſion; Non miſereberis, Thou ſhalt not pardon it, no nor reprieve it, but deſtroy it, for the practiſe preſently; Non miſereberis, Thou ſhalt not turne out the Mother, and retaine the Daughter, not leave the ſin, and retaine that which was ſinfully got, but deveſt all, roote, and body, and fruits, by confeſſion to God, by contrition in thy ſelfe, by reſtitution to men damnified; Elſe, that will fall upon thee and thy ſoule, which fell upon the Church, That becauſe they did not take their little foxes, they endangered the whole vine; Becauſe they did pity the poore in judgement, that is, (as S. Auguſtine ſayes) they were loath to wraſtle with the people, or force them from dangerous cuſtomes, they came from that ſupine negligence, in tolerating prayer for the Dead, to eſtabliſh a doctrinall point of Purgatory; and for both, prayer for the Dead, and Purgatory, they detort this text, Elſe, that is, if no Purgatory, why then are theſe men baptized for the Dead?

E As in the Old Teſtament there is no precept, no precedent, no promiſe for prayer for the Dead, So in the Old Teſtament they confeſſe, there was no Purgatory; no ſuch place, as could purifie a ſoule to that cleanneſſe, as to deliver it up to Heaven; For thither, to Heaven, no ſoule, ſay they, had acceſſe, till after Chriſts aſcenſion. But as the firſt mention of prayer for the dead was in time of the Maccabees, ſo much about the ſame time was the firſt ſtone of Purgatory laid; and laid by the hands of Plato. For, Hæreticorum Patriarcha, Philoſophi, ſayes Tertullian, The Philoſophers were the Patriarchs of Heretiques, evermore they had recourſe to them. And then, Plato being the Author of Purgatory, we cannot deny, but that the Greeke Church did acknowledge Purgatory, that is, that Greeke Church, of which Plato is a Patriarch; for, for the Chriſtian Greeke Deut. 13.

Hieron.

2 Part.

Plato.
Tertul.

Church, that never acknowledged Purgatory, ſo as the Roman, that is, A place of torment, from which our prayers here, might deliver ſoules there. But yet Platoes invention, or his manner of expreſſing it, tooke ſuch roote and ſuch hold, as that Euſebius, when he comes to ſpeake of Purgatory, delivers it in the very words of Plato, and makes Platoes words his words, and Plato his Patriarch, for the Greeke Church. The Latin Church had Patriarchs too for this Doctrine; though not Philoſophers, yet Poets; for of that which Virgil ſayes of Purgatory, Lactantius ſayes, propemodum vera, Virgil was very neere the truth, Virgil was almoſt a Catholique, but then later men ſay, Hæc prorſus vera, This is abſolutely true that Virgil ſayes, and Virgil is a perfect, a downe-right Catholique; for an upright Catholique, in the point of Purgatory, were hard to finde.

Euſebius Anno 326.

Virgil. Lactantius Anno 290.

A

These then are the firſt Patriarchs of the Greek and Latin Church, Philoſophers, and Poets; And when it came farther, to Chriſtians, it gained not much at firſt; for the firſt mention of Purgatory amongſt Chriſtians hath this double ill lucke, that firſt it is in a Booke which no ſide beleeves, the Booke called Paſtor, whoſe Author is ſaid to bee Hermes, and he fancied to be S. Pauls Diſciple; And then that which is ſaid of Purgatory in that Booke, is put into an old womans mouth, and ſo made an old wives tale; ſhe tels that ſhe had a viſion, of ſtones fallen from a towre, and then mended after they were fallen, and laid in the building againe: And this Towre muſt be the Church, and theſe fallen ſtones muſt be ſoules in Purgatory, and then they muſt be made fit to be placed in the uppermoſt part of the building, in the Triumphant Church.

B

Hermes.

But to conſider this plant in better grounds, then Philoſophers, or Poets, or old wives tales, or ſuppoſititious books, amongſt men of more waight and gravity; Clement of Alexandria, within little more then two hundred yeares after Chriſt, ſpake doubtfully, uncertainly, ſuſpiciouſly, diſputably of Purgatory; And within twenty yeares after him, Origen, who was evermore tranſported beyond the letter, upon myſteries, ſomewhat directly. But yet when all is done, Origens Purgatory is a purgatory, that would do them no good; for it would bring them in no money, and they could be as well content that there were none, as that it were nothing worth; except they may have the letting and ſetting of Purgatory at their price, they care not though it were pulled downe. And Origens Purgatory is ſuch a purgatory as the beſt men muſt come into it, even Martyrs themſelves, that are re-baptized in their owne blood, (and will this purgatory ſerve their turnes? ) And it is ſuch a purgatory, as the worſt of all, even the Devill himſelfe may, and ſhall get out of it; And will this purgatory ſerve their turnes? Neither is this an error peculiar to Origen, That all ſoules muſt paſſe through Purgatory, but common with others of the Fathers too; Sive Paulus, ſive Petrus, ſayes Origen, whether it be S. Paul, or S. Peter, thither he muſt come, And ſive Petrus, ſive Iohannes, ſayes S. Ambroſe, whether it be the Diſciple that loved Chriſt, S. Peter, or the Diſciple whom Chriſt loved, S. Iohn, thither he muſt come; And S. Hilary extends it farther, he drawes in the bleſſed Virgin Mary her ſelfe into purgatory. And that we may ſee cleerely, that that Purgatory which the Fathers intended, is not the Purgatory now erected in the Roman Church, S. Ambroſe conſigns to his Purgatory, even the Patriarchs and Prophets of the Old Teſtament; Igne filii Levi, igne Ezekiel, igne Daniel, The holieſt generation, the Sons of Levi, and the greateſt of the Prophets muſt paſſe through this fire: And will ſuch a purgatory ſerve their turnes, as was kindled in the Old Teſtament?

C

Origen.

Ambroſe.

D

Well; They are very loath to be put to their ſpeciall plea, very loath to anſwer, what Purgatory of the Fathers they will ſtand to; They would not be put to anſwer; They chuſe rather to interrogate us; and they aſk us, Since the Fathers are ſo pregnant, ſo frequent in the name of Purgatory, one Purgatory or other, will you beleeve none? None, upon the ſtrength of that argument, that the Fathers mention Purgatory, except they will aſſigne us a Purgatory, in which thoſe Fathers agree, and agree it to be matter of faith, to beleeve it; for from how many things, which paſſe through the Fathers, by way of opinion, and of diſcourſe, are they in the Romane Church departed, onely upon that, That the Fathers ſaid it, but ſaid it not Dogmatically, but by way of diſcourſe, or opinion. But then they aſke us againe, Since it is cleare that they did uſe prayer for the dead, what could they meane by thoſe prayers, but a Purgatory, a place of torment, where thoſe ſoules needed helpe, and from whence thoſe prayers might helpe them? What could they meane els? Certainly, we cannot tell them, what they meant; If they ſhould aſke them, who made thoſe prayers, they could hardly tell them. If a man ſhould have

E

Interrogantes.

ſurprized

A furprized S. Ambroſe at his prayers, and ſtood behinde him, and heard him ſay, Non dubitamus, etiam Angelorum teſtimoniis credimus, Lord, I cannot doubt it, for thou by thine Angels haſt revealed it unto me, Fide ablutum, æterna voluptate perfrui, That my dead Maſter the Emperour, was baptized in his faith, and is now in poſſeſſion of all the joyes of heaven, and yet have heard S. Ambroſe ſay, ſometimes to God, ſometimes to his dead Maſter, Si quid preces, if my prayers may prevaile with thee O God, and then, Oblationibus vos frequentabo, I will waite upon you daily with my Oblations, I will accompany you daily with my Sacrifices; And for what? Vt des, Domine, requiem, That thou, O Lord, wouldeſt afford reſt, and peace, and ſalvation to that ſoule; And if this man after all this, ſhould have asked S. Ambroſe, What he meant to pray for him, of whoſe preſent beeing in heaven he was already aſſured? ſurely S. Ambroſe could have given no ſuch anſwer, as would have implied a confeſſion, or an argument for Purgatory; But S. Ambroſe is B likely to have ſaid to him, as he does ſay there, Eſt in piis affectibus quædam flendi voluptas, In tender hearts, and in good natures, there is a kinde of ſatisfaction, and more then that, a holy voluptuouſneſſe in weeping, in lamenting, in deploring the loſſe of a friend; In commemoratione amiſsi acquieſcimus, Let me alone, give me leave to thinke of my loſt Maſter ſome way, by ſpeaking with him, by ſpeaking of him, by ſpeaking for him, any way, I finde ſome eaſe, ſome ſatisfaction in commemorating and celebrating of him; But all this would not have amounted to an argument for Purgatory. So alſo if a man ſhould have found S. Auguſtine in his Meditations after his Mothers death, and heard him ſay, Pro peccatis Matris mea deprecor te, Lord, I am a ſuiter now for my Mothers ſinnes; Exaudi Domine, propter medicinam vulnerum tuorum, Heare me, O Lord, who acknowledge no other Balſamum, then that which drops out of thy wounds, Dimitte Domine, Domine obſecro, Pardon her, O Lord, O Lord pardon her all her ſinnes; And then ſhould C have heard S. Auguſtine, with the ſame breath, and the ſame ſigh, ſay, Credo quòd jam feceris, quæ rogo, Lord, I am faithfully aſſured, that all this is already done, which I pray for; and then ſhould have asked S. Auguſtine, What he meant to pray for that which was already done? S. Auguſtine could but have ſaid to him, as he does to God there, Voluntaria oris mei accipe Domine, Accept O Lord, this voluntary, though not neceſſary Devotion. But if a man would have preſſed either of them for a full reaſon of thoſe prayers, it would have been hard for him to have received it. They prayed for the Dead, and they meant no ill, in doing ſo; but what particular good they meant, they could hardly give any farther account, but that it was, if not an inordinate, yet an inconſiderate piety, and a Devotion, that did rather tranſport them, then direct them.

Ambroſe. Auguſt.

These then prayed for the dead, and yet confeſſed thoſe whom they prayed for, to be then in heaven; S. Chryſoſtome prayes for others, and yet beleeves them to be in Hell; D Poteſt infideles de Gehenna dimittere, ſayes he, ſed fortè non faciet, God can deliver an unbeleeving ſoule out of hell, perchance he will not, ſayes he, but I cannot tell, and therefore I will try. And yet S. Gregory abſolutely forbids all prayer for the dead, where they dyed in notorious ſinne; As generally their whole Schoole doth at this day, either for ſuch ſinners, as dying in impenitency, are preſumed to be already in Hell, or ſuch as dyed ſo well, that they are already preſumed to be in poſſeſſion of as much as can be asked in their behalfe.

Chryſoſt. Gregory.

If then they will ſtill preſſe and purſue us with that queſtion, What could thoſe Fathers meane by their prayer for the Dead, but Purgatory? We muſt ſend them to thoſe Fathers, (and I pray God they may get to them) to aske what they meant. So much as any of thoſe Fathers have told us, we can tell them; and amongſt thoſe Fathers, S. Dionyſe the Areopagite hath told us moſt; He hath told us the manner, and the Ceremonies E uſed at the funeralls of Chriſtians; and amongſt them the offices, and liturgies, and ſervices ſaid and read at ſuch funeralls; and expreſſed them ſo, as that we may eaſily ſee, That firſt the Congregation made a declaration of their religious and faithfull aſſurance, that they that die in the Lord, reſt in him; And then a proteſtation in the behalfe of that dead brother, that he did die in that faith, and that expectation, and therefore was then in poſſeſſion of that reſt, which was promiſed to them who dyed ſo. And this teſtimony for themſelves in generall, and this application thereof to that dead man, ſayes he, the Church then expreſſed in the forme of prayer, and ſo ſeemed to aske and beg at Gods hands, that which indeed they did but acknowledge to have received before; they gave that the forme of a prayer, as of a future thing, which was indeed but a recognition of that that which was preſent, and paſt, That they did then, and that that dead brother had before embraced that beliefe. A

Areopag.

This anſwer to their queſtion, (What could they meane but Purgatory, by thoſe prayers?) they may have from thoſe of thoſe ancient times; And thus much more from daily practiſe, That every man who proſtrates himſelfe in his chamber, and powres out his ſoule in prayer to God; though he have ſaid, O Lord, enter not into judgement with thy ſervant; forgive me the ſinnes of my youth, O Lord; O Lord blot out all mine iniquities out of thy remembrance, though his faith aſſure him, that God hath granted all that he asked upon the firſt petition of his prayer, yea before he made it, (for God put that petition into his heart and mouth, and moved him to aske it, that thereby he might be moved to grant it) yet as long as the Spirit enables him, he continues his prayer, and he ſolicits, and he importunes God for that which his conſcience aſſures him, God hath already granted: He hath it, and yet he asks it; and that ſecond asking it implies and amounts B but to a thankeſgiving for that mercy, in which he hath granted it. So thoſe Fathers prayed for that which they aſſured themſelves was done before, and therefore, though it had the forme of a prayer, it might be a commemoration of Gods former benefits, it might be a proteſtation of their preſent faith, or an atteſtation in the behalfe of their dead friend, whoſe firſt obſequies, or yearly anniverſary they did then celebrate. B

Add to this the generall diſpoſition in the nature of every man, to wiſh well to the dead, And the darkneſſe in which men were then, in what kinde of ſtate the dead were, and we ſhall the leſſe wonder, that they declined to this cuſtome in thoſe times, eſpecially if we conſider, that even in the Reformation of Religion, in theſe clearer times, Luther himſelfe, and after him, (if perchance Luther may be thought not to have been enough fined and drawn from his lees) The Apology for the Confeſſion of Auſpourg, which was written after all things were ſufficiently debated, and had ſiftings, and cribrations, and alterations enow, allowes of ſuch a forme of prayer for the dead, as that of the primitive Fathers may juſtly ſeeme to have been. All ends in this, that neither thoſe prayers of thoſe Fathers, nor theſe of theſe Lutherans, (though neither be in themſelves to be juſtified) did neceſſarily imply, or preſuppoſe any ſuch Purgatory, as the Romane Church hath gone about to evict or conclude out of them; Men might pray for the dead as thoſe Fathers did, and as the Lutherans doe, ſafely enough without aſſiſting the doctrine of Purgatory, if that were all that were to be ſaid againſt ſuch prayers. C

Chemnicius Exam. De purgator. fo 92. b.

Be then that thus ſettled, The Fathers did not intend any ſuch building upon that foundation, not a Purgatory, which ſhould be a place of torment, upon thoſe prayers for the dead; but then, what did they meane by that Purgatory, and that fire, which is ſo frequent amongſt them? In the confeſſion of our Adverſaries, the greateſt part of the Fathers that mention a Purgatory fire, intend it of the generall fire of conflagration at the laſt day: They thought the ſoules of the Dead to have beene kept in Abditis, and in Receptaculis till the day of Judgement, and that then that fire which was to take hold of all creatures to the purifying of them, ſhould alſo take hold of all ſoules, and burne out all that might be unacceptable to God in thoſe ſoules, and that this was their Purgatory. Others of the Fathers have called that ſevere judgement, and examination which every ſoule is to paſſe under, from the hand of God at that time, (becauſe it hath much of the nature of fire, and many of the properties and qualities of fire in it) a fire, a purging fire, and made that their Purgatory. If others of the Fathers have ſpoken of a purging fire after this life, ſo as it will not fall within theſe two acceptations, of the fire of conflagration, or of the fire of examination, we muſt ſay in their behalfe, as Sextus Senenſis does, That they are not the leſſe holy, nor the leſſe reverend, for having ſtraied into ſome of theſe miſtakings, becauſe it is a fire without light. D E

Sext. Senenſ.

In thoſe ſub-obſcure times, S. Auguſtine might be excuſable, though he proceeded doubtfully and ſaid, Non incredibile, It is not incredible that ſome ſuch thing there may be, and Quæri poteſt, It is not amiſſe to inquire, (where ſuch things are to be inquired after, that is, in the Scriptures) whether any ſuch thing be or no, and Vtrum latere, an inveniri, whether any ſuch thing will be found there, or no, I cannot tell: he may be excuſable in his proceeding farther in his doubt, Sive ibi tantum, whether all our Purgatory be reſerved for the next world, Sive hic & ibi, or whether God divide our Purgatory, ſome here, and ſome there, Sive hic ut non ibi, or whether God exalt and multiply our Purgatory here, that we may have none hereafter. Of theſe things, I ſay, howſoever S. Auguſtine

Auguſt.

A Auguſtine might be excuſable for doubting in thoſe darke times, we ſhould be inexcuſable, if we ſhould not deny them in theſe times, in which God hath afforded us ſo much light and cleareneſſe; And reſt in that acknowledgement, that we have in this life Purgationem, & purgatorium, A purging, and a Purgatory; A purging in this, That Chriſt Jeſus, Whom God hath made the heire of all things, by whom alſo he made the world, who was the brightneſſe of his glory, and the expreſſe image of his perſon; That he, by himſelfe hath purged our ſinnes: There is our purging; But then, becauſe after this generall purging, which is wrapped up in the generall nature, as Chriſt dyed for mankinde, for all men, and after that neerer application thereof, as it is wrapped up in the Covenant, as he dyed more effectually for all Chriſtians, ſtill our own clothes defile us, our own evill habits, our owne fleſh pollutes us, therefore God ſends us a Purgatory too in this life, Croſſes, Afflictions, and Tribulations, and to burne out theſe infectious ſtaines and impreſſions in our fleſh, B Ipſe ſedet tanquam ignis conflans, God ſits as a fire, and with fullers ſoape, to waſh us, and to burne us cleane with afflictions from his own hand.

Heb. 1. 3.

Iob

Malac. 3. 2.

Let no man think himſelfe ſufficiently purified, that hath not paſſed this Purgatory; Iraſcaris mihi Domine, ſaith S. Bernard, Lord let me ſee that thou art angry with me; I know I have given thee juſt cauſe of anger; and if thou ſmother that anger, and declare it not by corrections here, thou reſerveſt thine anger to undeterminable times, and to unſupportable proportions. Propitius fuiſti, ſayes David, Thou waſt a mercifull God to thy people; for, ſaith hee, Thou didſt puniſh all their Inventions; In this conſiſted his mercy, that he did puniſh; for if he had been more mercifull, he had been unmercifull; If he had begun with no Judgements, they had ended in Judgements without end; Affliction is a Chriſtians daily bread, and therefore in that petition, Da nobis hodie, Give us this day our daily bread, not onely patience in affliction, but affliction it ſelfe, ſo farre as it conduces to our mortification is asked at Gods hand. It is an over-preſumptuous confidence, for C which they glorifie one in the Romane Church, that he was put often to his Decede à me, Domine, O Lord, withdraw thy ſelf, and thy grace farther from me, for by mine own ſanctity, or diligence, I am able to wraſtle with, and to overcome all the tentations, and tribulations of this life, Decede à me, withdraw thy ſelfe, and thy grace, and put not thy ſelfe to this trouble, nor this coſt with me, but leave me to my ſelfe: This was too much confidence; but that was more, which wee find in another, That he begged of God, by prayer, that he might bee poſſeſſed with the Devill for ſome moneths, becauſe all the tentations of the fleſh, and all the groſſes of the world, were not enough for his victory, and his triumph. But it is an humble and a requiſite prayer, to ask ſuch a meaſure of affliction, as may ballaſt us, and carry us ſteddily, through all the ſtorms, and tempeſts of this life. As hee that hath had no rubbe in his fortune, in his temporall ſtate, is in moſt D danger to fall, (to fall into murmuring) at the firſt ſtumble he makes, As hee that hath had no ſickneſſe till his age, hardly recovers then; So hee that hath not borne his yoake in his youth, that hath not beene accuſtomed to croſſes and afflictions, hath a wanton ſoule all the way, and a froward and impatient ſoule towards the end.

Bernar.

This is our true Purgatory; And in this Purgatory, we doe need the prayers of others; and upon this Purgatory, we may build Indulgences, which are thoſe teſtimonies of the remiſſion of ſinnes, which God hath enabled his Church to imprint and conferre upon us, in the abſolution thereof; which are nothing of kinne to thoſe Indulgences of the Roman Church, which are the children of this mother of Purgatory, and to the maintenance of which, they have alſo detorted our Text, Elſe, If there be no ſuch Indulgences, If the works of Supererogation done by other men, may not be applied to the ſoules that are in Purgatory, If there be no ſuch uſe of Indulgences, why are then theſe men baptized for the dead? E

Indulgences.

Againſt the popular opinion of the Spheare, or Element of Fire, ſome new Philoſophers have made this an argument, that it is improbable, and impertinent, to admit an Element that produceth no Creatures; A matter more ſubtill then all the reſt, and yet work upon nothing in it; A region more ſpacious then all the reſt, and yet have nothing in it, to worke upon. All the other three Elements, Earth, and Water, and Ayre abound with inhabitants proper to each of them, onely the Fire produces nothing. Here is a fire that recompences that defect; The fire of the Roman Purgatory hath produced Indulgences, and Indulgences are multiplied to ſuch a number, as that no heards of Cattell upon earth can equall them, when they meet by millions at a Jubile, no ſhoales, no

ſpawne

ſpawne of fiſh at Sea, can equall them, when they are tranſported in whole Tuns to the A Weſt Indies, where of late yeares their beſt Market hath beene; No flocks, no flights of birds in the Ayre can equall them, when as they ſay of S. Francis, at every prayer that he made, a man might have ſeene the Ayre as full of ſoules flying out of Purgatory, as ſparkles from a Smiths Anvill, beating a hot Iron. The Apoſtle complains of them, that made Mercaturam animarum, Merchandiſe of mens ſoules; but theſe men make Ludibrium animarum, a Jeſt of mens ſoules: For, if that ſad and ſerious conſideration, that this doctrine concernes that part of man, which nothing but the incorruptible blood of the Sonne of God could redeeme, the ſoul, did not caſt a devout and a religious bridle upon it, it were impoſſible to ſpeake of theſe Indulgences, otherwiſe then merrily: They do make merchandiſe of ſoules, and yet they make a jeſt of them too.

Theſe then, theſe Indulgences, are the children, the generation of that Viper, the Sa-Pliny. lamanders of that fire, Purgatory; And then, Inter omnia venenata, ſayes Pliny, Of all B the venemous creatures in the world, the Salamander is Maximi ſceleris, the moſt miſchievous; for whereas others, ſingulos feriunt, (as the ſame Author ſayes) they ſting but one at once, the Salamander deſtroyes whole families, whole Cities together, for all that eat the fruit of any tree, that hee hath touched, periſh. We need not apply this;
Our fathers did, and our neighbours doe feele the manifold miſchiefes that theſe mercеnary Indulgences work in the world, and to what deſperate and bloody actions men are induced, and animated by them; what knives theſe Indulgences have whet in Courts, and what Armies they have payed in the open field; A cheape diſcharge, and eaſie Subſidy; we have ſeene Copper coyned, and we have read of leather coyned, but here they coyne paper, and in an Indulgence, which require but as much paper as a Ballad, they ſend a man more ſalvation, then the whole Bible can give them. Men that will not ſee light, or not watch by the light, will not ſee this; Men that delight to wallow ſtill in the C mire, can digeſt this; Etiam Salamandra à ſuibus manditur, ſayes Pliny, As venemous as a Salamander is, a Sow will eat a Salamander; As the citizens of the loweſt fire, of hell it ſelfe, entred into the heard of ſwine, ſo theſe children of this other fire, of Purgatory, theſe Indulgences, enter into ſwiniſh men, that conſider not their owne foulneſſe, but think themſelves cleane when they have eaten a Salamander, that is, bought an Indulgence. But though they have had a ſpurious generation, and yet have laſted longer then ſpurious generations uſe to doe, (for they have ſpread into three generations, Prayer for the dead begot Purgatory, and Purgatory Indulgences) yet they have had a viperous generation too, for they have eaten out the wombe of their owne Mother, and theſe Salamanders, theſe Indulgences retaine ſtill the nature of Plinies Salamanders, Non gignunt, They beget no more, they proceed no farther; For in this enormous exceſſe of Indulgences, the Roman Church tooke her deaths wound; from this extreme abuſe D of Indulgences, aroſe the occaſion of the Reformation, which God advanced and pro-ſpered ſo miraculouſly in the hands of Luther, upon the indignation that the world took upon theſe Indulgences.

How they roſe, how they grew, how they fell, is a hiſtoricall knowledge, and not much neceſſary to be inſiſted upon here: though indeed our danger be greater from theſe Indulgences, then either from prayer for the Dead, or from Purgatory; though all three be equally erronious in matter of doctrine, yet for matter of fact, and danger, Indulgences are the moſt pernicious, becauſe that opinion of an immediate paſſing to Heaven thereupon, animates men to any undertakings. But as the Chriſtians in aboliſhing the Idolatry of the Gentiles, in ſome places, ſometimes, left ſome of their Idols ſtanding, leſt the Gentiles ſhould come to deny, that ever they had worſhipped ſuch monſters: So it hath pleaſed the Holy Ghoſt to hover over the Authors and Writers in the Roman E Church, ſo as that they have left ſome impreſſions of the iniquity of theſe Indulgences in their bookes. From them we are able to declare, That Indulgencies in the Primitive Church were nothing but relaxations, moderations of thoſe ſevere penances, which the Canons, called Penitentiall, inflicted upon particular ſins, which Canons were for the moſt part the Rule of the whole Church, and which penances, enjoyned by thoſe Canons, every Biſhop in his owne Dioces, might according to his holy diſcretion moderate, according to the bodily infirmity, or the ſpirituall amendment of the penitent ſinner; That in time, the Biſhops of Rome drew into their hands all this power of remitting penances, reſerving to themſelves, and ſhedding upon other Biſhops, as much, and as little

A little as they were pleaſed; That after they had extended this overflowing power over this world, they enlarged it farther to the next world too, to Purgatory. And this, not long ſince, Poſtquam aliquandiu ad Purgatorium trepidatum eſt, cœpere indulgentia, ſayes a good Author of theirs, of our Nation, that Biſhop of Rocheſter, whoſe ſervice they recompenſed with a Cardinals Hat, (but ſomewhat late, for his head was off before his hat came) After the vapours of Purgatory had blinded mens eyes, after men had beene made afraid of thoſe fires, for a good while, ſayes that Biſhop, then they began to ſet on foote their Indulgencies; This beginning was not above three hundred yeares ſince, and within one hundred they came to that height, that though in their Schooles they make the paines of Purgatory to be ſo violent, that they ſay no ſoule is likely to remaine there above ten yeares, yet they give Indulgencies for infinite thouſands of yeares; They give one day Plenam, and the next pleniorem, and after pleniſſimam, They forgive all to day, B and to morrow the reſt, and then they finde ſomething beyond that, which was beyond all: So that as Seneca ſayes, of the exceſſe in Libraries in his time, That they had Bibliothecas pro Supellectile, No man thought his houſe well furniſhed, if he had not a Library, though he underſtood never an Author, So no man thought his houſe well furniſhed, if he had not Indulgencies for every ſeaſon, if he bought not all that came to market, if he had not Indulgence upon Indulgencies, preſent and ſucceſſive Indulgences, poſſeſſory and reverſionary Indulgences, totall and ſupernumerary, current and concurrent Indulgences, to delude the juſtice of God withall.

Roffenſ.

Well; to our true Purgatory which we ſpake of before, Thoſe croſſes which God is pleaſed to lay upon us, belong true Indulgencies, The conſtant promiſes of our faithfull God, that he will give us the iſſue with the tentation, and that as the Apoſtle ſayes, No tentation ſhall befall us, Si non humana, but that which appertaines to man: Now for this C Humana tentatio, tentation or affliction that appertaines to man, it is not onely affliction that appertaines to man ſo, as that other men doe inflict it, when wicked men revile and calumniate and oppreſſe the godly; it is not onely that, though ſo S. Chryſoſtome interprets it; Nor is this affliction appertaining to man, becauſe man himſelfe inflicts it upon himſelfe, our owne inherent corruption being become Spontaneus Dæmon, a Devill in our owne boſome; it is not onely that, though ſo S. Hierom interpret it; nor is this affliction appertaining to man, ſo called Humana, as humanum is oppoſed Dæmoniaco, That all torments falling upon the Devill, worke in him more and more obduration, but the corrections inflicted by God upon man, worke a reconciliation; it is not onely this, though ſo S. Gregory interpret it; But this affliction appertaines ſo to a Chriſtian man, as the ſoule it ſelfe, and as reaſon appertaines to a naturall man: He is not a man, that is without a reaſonable ſoule, he is not a Chriſtian that is without correction; It appertaines unto man D ſo, as that it is convenient, more, that it is expedient, more then that, that it is neceſſary, and more then all that, that it is eſſentiall to a Chriſtian: As when the ſpirit returnes to him that gave it, there is a diſſolution of the man, So when God withdrawes his viſitation, there is a diſſolution of a Chriſtian; for ſo God expreſſes the ſpirituall Death, and the height of his anger, in the Prophet, I will make my wrath towards thee to reſt, and my jealouſie ſhall depart from thee; That is, I will looke no more after thee, I will ſtudy thy recovery and thine amendment no farther.

1 Cor. 10. 13.

Chryſoſt.

Hieron.

Gregory.

Ezek. 15. 42.

Have ye forgot the Conſolation? ſayes the Apoſtle; what is that Conſolation? Is it that you ſhall have no affliction? No; This is the Conſolation, That whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth, and he ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth. It is generall to all ſons, for, If ye be without correction, whereof all are partakers, then are ye baſtards, and not ſons; And E then, to ſhew us how this Purgatory and theſe Indulgencies accompany on another, how Gods croſſes, and his deliverances doe ever concurre together, wee ſee the Holy Ghoſt hath ſo ordered and diſpoſed theſe two, Mercy and Correction, in this one verſe, as that we cannot ſay which is firſt, the Correction or the Mercy, the Purgatory or the Indulgence: For firſt the Indulgence is before the Purgatory, The Mercy before the Correction, in one place, Whom he loveth, he chaſteneth, firſt God loves, and then he chaſteneth; and then after, The Purgatory is before the Indulgence, the Correction is before Mercy, He ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth; firſt he ſcourges him, and then he receives him; They are ſo diſpoſed, as that both are made firſt, and both laſt, wee cannot tell whether precede, or ſucceed, they are alwayes both together, they are alwaies all one; As long as his love laſts, he corrects us, and as long as he corrects us, he loves us.

Heb. 12. 5. & 6.

Ver. 8.

Ver. 6.

And

And ſo we have a juſtifiable prayer for the Dead, that is, for our ſoules, dead in their ſins, Cor novum, O Lord create a new heart in me; And wee have a juſtifiable Purgatory, Purgabit aream, If we be Gods floore, he hath his fanne in his hand, and he will make us cleane; And we have juſtifiable Indulgences, Indulſiſti genti Domine, indulſiſti genti, Thou haſt been indulgent to thy people, O Lord, thou haſt been indulgent to us; Wee cannot complaine, as they begin, rather to murmur, then to complaine, Ah Lord God, ſurely thou haſt deceived thy people, ſaying, you ſhall have peace, and the ſword pierceth to the heart; For when this ſword of Gods corrections ſhall pierce to the heart, that very ſword ſhall be but as a Probe to ſearch the wound, nay that very wound ſhall be but as an iſſue to draine, and preſerve the whole body in health; for his mercies are ſo above all his works, as that the very works of his Juſtice are mercy.

Luke 4.17. Eſay 26.15. Ier. 4.10.

And ſo, not the Prayer for the Dead, not the Purgatory, not the Indulgences of the Roman Church, but we, who have them truely, doe truely receive a benefit from this Text, which Text is a proofe of the Reſurrection. Becauſe wee feele a Reſurrection by grace now, becauſe we beleeve a Reſurrection to glory hereafter, therefore we can give an account of this Baptiſme for the dead in our Text: The particular ſenſe of which words, will be the Exerciſe of another day. This day wee end, both with our humble thanks, for all Indulgences which God hath given us in our Purgatories, for former deliverances in former croſſes, and with humble prayer alſo, that hee ever afford us ſuch a proportion of his medicinall corrections, as may ever teſtifie his preſence and providence upon us in the way, and bring us in the end, to the Kingdome of his Son Chriſt Jeſus. Amen.

SERM. LXXVIII.

Preached at S. PAULS, June 21. 1626.

1 COR. 15. 29.

Elſe, what ſhall they doe which are baptized for the dead? if the dead riſe not at all, why are they then baptized for the dead?

Diviſio.

WEE are now come at laſt, to that which was firſt in our intention, How theſe words have beene detorted, and miſapplied by our Adverſaries of the Roman Church, for the eſtabliſhing of thoſe hereſies, which we have formerly oppoſed, And then, the divers wayes, which ſounder and more Orthodoxall Divines have held in the Expoſition thereof; that ſo from the firſt Part, wee may learne what to avoid and ſhun, and from the ſecond, what to embrace and follow.

Of all the places of Scripture which Bellarmine brings for the maintenance of Purgatory (excepting onely that one place of the Maccabees) (And of that place we muſt ſay, as it was ſaid of that jealous husband, which ſet a watch and ſpie upon his Wife, Quis cuſtodit cuſtodes? Who ſhall watch them that watch her? So when they prove matters of faith out of the Maccabees, we ſay Quis probat probantem, who ſhall prove that booke to be Scripture, by which they prove that doctrine to be true?) But of all other places, there is ſcarce one, to which Bellarmine himſelfe doth not, by way of objection againſt himſelfe, give ſome better ſenſe and interpretation then that, which himſelfe ſticks to; and ſuch a ſenſe, as when the matter of Purgatory is not in queſtion, his fellowes often times in their writings, and himſelfe ſometimes in his writings doth accept, and adhere to.

I offer it for a note of good uſe, and in the obſerving whereof, I have uſed a conſtant diligence in reading the Roman Writers, That thoſe Writers which write by way of Expoſition, and Commentaries upon the Scriptures, and are not engaged in the profeſſed handling of Controverſies, doe very often content themſelves with the true ſenſe of thoſe

A thoſe places which they handle, and hunt after no curious, nor forced, nor forraine, nor unnaturall ſenſes: But if the ſame Authors come to handle Controverſies, they depart from that ſingleneſſe of heart, and that holy ingenuity, and ſtray aſide, or ſoare up into other ſenſes of the ſame places. I looke no farther for a reaſon of this, then this, That almoſt all the Controverſies, between Rome, and the reſt of the Chriſtian world, are matters of profit to them, and rayſe money, and advance their Revenue: So that, as they are but Expoſitors, they may have leave to be good Divines, and then, and in that capacity, they may give the true ſenſe of that Scripture; But as they are Controverters, they muſt be good Subjects, good Stateſmen, good Exchequer men, and then, and in that capacity, they muſt give ſuch ſenſes as may eſtabliſh and advance their profit: As an Expoſitor, he may interpret this place of the Reſurrection, as it ſhould be; but as a Controverter, he muſt interpret it of Purgatory, for ſo it muſt be, when profit is their end: And as our
B Alchymiſts can finde their whole art and worke of Alchymy, not onely in Virgil and Ovid, but in Moſes and Solomon; ſo theſe men can finde ſuch a tranſmutation into gold, ſuch a foundation of profit, in extorting a ſenſe for Purgatory, or other profitable Doctrines, out of any Scripture.

So Bellarmine does upon this place, and upon this place principally he relyes, in this he triumphs, when he ſayes, Hic locus apertè convincit quod volumus, Here needs no wreſting, no diſguiſing, here Purgatory is clearly and manifeſtly diſcovered. Now certainly, if we take the words as they are, and as the Holy Ghoſt hath left them to us, we finde no ſuch manifeſtation of this Doctrine, no ſuch cleare light, no ſuch bonfire, no ſuch beacon, no beame at all, no ſpark of any ſuch fire of Purgatory: That becauſe S. Paul ſayes, That no man would be baptized Pro mortuis, for Dead, or, for the Dead, except he did aſſure himſelfe of a Reſurrection, that this ſhould be Aperta convictio, an evident
C Conviction of Purgatory, is, if it be not a new Divinity, certainly a new Logique. De purg. l. 1. c. 6.

But it is not the word, but the ſenſe that they ground their aſſurance upon. Now, the ſenſe which ſhould ground an aſſurance in Doctrinall things, ſhould be the literall ſenſe: And yet here, in ſo important a matter of faith as Purgatory, it muſt not be a literall, a proper, a naturall and genuine ſenſe, but figurative, and metaphoricall; for, in this place, Baptiſme muſt not ſignifie literally the Sacrament of Baptiſme, but it muſt ſignifie, in a figurative ſenſe, a Baptiſme of teares. And then that figure muſt be a pregnant figure, a figure with childe of another figure, for as this Baptiſme muſt ſignifie teares, ſo theſe teares muſt ſignifie all that they uſe to expreſſe by the name of Penance, and diſcipline, and mortification; Weeping, and faſting, and almes, and whipping, all muſt be comprehended in theſe teares; And then, as there was a mother figure, and a daughter figure, ſo there is a grand-child too; for here is a Proſopopœia, an imagining, a rayſing up of a D perſon that is not; That all this muſt be done by ſome man alive, with relation, and in the behalfe of a dead perſon, that theſe afflictions which he takes upon himſelfe in this world, may accrew, in the benefit thereof, to a man in another world. Now if any of this Evidence be defective, if it be not evident, that this is a figurative ſpeech, but that the literall ſenſe is very proper to the place, if it be not evident, that this figure of Baptiſme is meant for teares, and other penances; If it be not evident, that this penance is more then that man needed to have undergone for his own ſalvation, but that God became indebted to him for that penance ſo ſuſtained, and if it be not evident, that this penance and ſupererogation may be applied and communicated to a dead man, it is a little too forwardly, and too couragiouſly pronounced, Hic locus apertè convincit quod volumus, We deſire no more then this place, for the proofe of Purgatory.

Yet he purſues his triumph, Vera & genuina interpretatio, ſayes he; As though he might E waive the benefit, of making it a figurative ſenſe, and have his ends, by maintaining it to be the literall ſenſe; This is, ſayes he, the true and naturall ſenſe of the place. But it will be hard for him, to perſwade us, either that this is the literall ſenſe of the place, or that this place needs any other, then a literall ſenſe. Since he will not allow us a figurative ſenſe, in that great myſtery, in the Sacrament, in the Hoc eſt Corpus meum, but binde us punctually in the letter, without any figure, not onely in the thing, (for in the thing, in the matter, we require no figure, we beleeve the body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament as literally, as really as they doe) but even in the words, and phraſe of ſpeech, He ſhould not looke that we ſhould allow him a figurative ſenſe in that place, which muſt be Apertiſſimus locus, his moſt evident place for the proofe of ſo great an article of faith, as Purgatory is with them. We have a Rule, by which that ſenſe will be ſuſpicious to us, which is, Not to admit figurative ſenſes in interpretation of Scriptures, where the literall ſenſe may well ſtand; And he himſelfe hath a Rule, (if he remember the Councell of Trent) by which that ſenſe cannot be admitted by himſelfe, which is, That they muſt interpret Scriptures according to the unanime conſent of the Fathers; and he knowes in his conſcience, that he hath not done ſo, as we ſhall remember him anone. A

Not to founder by ſtanding long in this puddle, he makes no other argument, that Baptiſme muſt here be underſtood of afflictions voluntarily ſuſtained, but that that word Baptiſme is twice uſed, and accepted ſo in the Scriptures by Chriſt himſelfe; It is taken ſo there, therefore it muſt be taken ſo here. But not to ſpeake at all, of the weakneſſe of that Conſequence, (the word hath been taken figuratively, therefore it muſt never returne to a literall ſenſe) which will hold as well, that becauſe Chriſt is called Porta, A Gate, therefore when Samſon is ſaid to have carried a Gate, Samſon muſt be a Chriſtopher, and carry Chriſt; And becauſe Chriſt is a vine, and a way, and water, and bread, whereſoever any of theſe words are, they muſt be intended of Chriſt; not to ſtand upon the argument and inconſequence, I ſay, this word Baptiſme, hath not that ſignification, which he would have it have here, in any of thoſe other places of Scripture, which he cites to this purpoſe. B

They are but two, and may quickly be conſidered; The firſt is, when Chriſt askes the ambitious Apoſtles, Are yee able to drinke of the Cup, that I ſhall drinke of, and to be baptized with the baptiſme, that I ſhall be baptized with? The ſecond is in S. Luke, I muſt be baptized with a Baptiſme, and how am I grieved, till it be ended? In both which places, Chriſt doth underſtand by this word Baptiſme, his Paſſion; That is true: And ſo ordinarily in the Chriſtian Church, as the dayes of the death of the Martyrs were called Natalitia Martyrum, The Birth-dayes of the Martyrs; ſo Martyrdome it ſelfe, was called a Baptiſme, Baptiſma ſanguinis, The Baptiſme of Blood; That is alſo true; but what then? was the Paſſion of Chriſt himſelfe, ſuch an affliction, as Bellarmine ſpeakes of here, and argues from in this place, that is, an affliction ſo inflicted upon himſelfe, and undertaken by himſelfe, as that then when he did beare it, he might have forborne it, and refuſed to beare it? Though nothing were more voluntary then Chriſts ſubmitting himſelfe to that Decree of dying for man, yet when that Decree was paſſed, to which he had a privity, nothing was more neceſſary, nor unavoydable to any man, then the Death of the Croſſe was to Chriſt, neither could he not onely not have ſaved us, but not have been exalted in his humane nature himſelfe, if he had not dyed that death; for all that was wrapped up in the Decree, and from that grew out, the propterea exaltatus, and the oportuit pati, That all thoſe things Chriſt ought to ſuffer, And therefore, therefore becauſe he did ſuffer all that, he was exalted. And will Bellarmine ſay, that the Martyrdome of the Martyrs in the primitive Church was ſo voluntarily ſuſtained, as that they might have forſaken the cauſe of Chriſt, and refuſed Martyrdome, and yet have been ſaved, and ſatisfied the purpoſe, or the commandement of God upon them? C D

Mat. 20. 22. Luk. 12. 50.

If from us Bellarmine will not heare it, let him heare a man of his own profeſſion; not onely of his own Religion, but ſo narrowly of his own profeſſion, as to have been a publique Reader of Divinity in a great Univerſity as well as he; And he ſayes, Sunt aliqui recentiores, qui baptizari interpretantur affligi; There are ſome, ſayes he, not all, nor the moſt, and therefore it is not ſo manifeſt a place; Sunt aliqui recentiores, There are ſome of the later men, ſayes he, not of the Fathers, or Expoſitors in the primitive Church, and therefore it is not ſo reverend, and uncontrolable an opinion; But onely ſome few later men there are, ſayes he, that thinke that Baptiſme in this place is to be underſtood of Affliction. But, ſayes the ſame Doctor, It is an Interpretation valde figurata, & rara, wholly relying upon a figure, and a figure very rarely uſed; ſo rarely, ſayes he, Vt non ab alio, quam a Chriſto uſurpetur, That never any but Chriſt, in the Scriptures, called Affliction, Baptiſme. E

Eſtius.

So that it lacks thus much of being a manifeſt proofe for Purgatory, as Bellarmine pretends, That it is neither the common ſenſe, but of a few; nor the ancient ſenſe, but of a few later men; nor a ſenſe obvious, and ordinary, and literall, but figurative, and that figure not communicated to others, but onely applied by Chriſt, and appropriated to his Paſſion, which was not a paſſion ſo undergone, as that then when he ſuffered it, he might have refuſed it, which is neceſſary for that Doctrine, which Bellarmine would evict from it.

But

A But becauſe Bellarmine, in whom, perchance, the Spirit of a Cardinall hath not overcome the Spirit of a Jeſuit, will admit no competition, nor diverſity of opinion, except it be from one of his own Order, we have Iuſtinian, a man refined in that Order, a Jeſuit as well as he, an Italian, and ſo hath his naturall and nationall refining as well as he, and one, whoſe books are dedicated to the Pope as well as his, and ſo hath had an Oraculous refining, by an allowance Oraculo vivæ vocis, by the breath of life, the Oracle of truth, the Popes approbation, as well as he, and thus much better, That Iuſtinians never were, but Bellarmines books have been threatned by the Inquiſition, And Iuſtinian never was, but Bellarmine hath been put to his Retractations; And he ſayes onely this of this place, Aliqui referunt ad corporis vexationes, pro Mortuis, Some men refer theſe words to bodily afflictions, ſuſtained by men alive, for the Dead; Et hæc ſententia multis vehementer probatur, ſayes he, This interpretation hath much delighted, and ſatisfied many B men: Sed poteſt dici, ſayes he, By their leaves, this may be ſaid, If S. Paul aske, Why doe men afflict themſelves, in the behalfe of them that are dead? it may be anſwered, ſayes he, That if they doe ſo, they are fools in doing ſo. S. Paul intends certainly, to prove the Reſurrection by theſe words; neither, ſayes he, could the Reſurrection of the body be proved by all S. Pauls argument, if that were admitted to be the right ſenſe of the place; for what were all this to the Reſurrection of the body, which is S. Pauls ſcope, and purpoſe in the place, If men were baptized, that is, (as Bellarmine would have it) if they did ſuffer voluntarily, and unneceſſarily affliction for the Dead, that is, to deliver their ſoules out of Purgatory; what would all this conduce to the proofe of the Reſurrection of the body?

Iuſtinian.

But that we may have a witneſſe againſt him, in all his capacities, as wee have produced one, as he is a Jeſuit, and another equall to him, as he was publique Profeſſor, ſo to C conſider him as a Cardinall, (for, as a Cardinall, Bellarmine hath changed his opinion in ſome things that he held, before he was hood-wincked with his Hat) to conſider him therefore ſo, we have a witneſſe againſt him, in the Conſiſtory, Cardinall Cajetan, who finds no baptiſme of teares, nor penance in theſe words, no application of any affliction ſuſtained voluntarily by the living, in the behalfe and contemplation of the dead, but adhering to that, which is truly the purpoſe of the Apoſtle, to prove the reſurrection of the body, hee ſayes, In hoc quòd merguntur ſub aqua, mortuos gerunt, When in Baptiſme, they are, as it were, buried under the water, (as the forme of Baptizing was then by Immerſion of the whole body, and not onely by Aſperſion upon the face) they are, ſayes he, buried for dead, preſented by the Church, as dead in Chriſt; Et in hoc, quòd ad hoc merguntur, ut emergant, agunt mortuorum reſurrectionem; In this, that they are therefore buried under water, becauſe they may bee raiſed above water againe, in this they repreſent the reſurrection of the dead. So in the act of Baptiſme literally, and Sacramentally D taken, that Cardinall hath found an evident argument, and proofe of the Reſurrection. And then, in the next words, he hath found, that that which is done in this action, is done for him, that doth it, and not with relation to any other; In hoc quòd ſe profitentur mortuos mundo, agunt mortuos, In this, that in the act of Baptiſme, they profeſſe themſelves to bee dead to the world, they are baptized for dead, And in this, ſayes hee, that they profeſſe themſelves to bee dead to the world in Baptiſme, therefore that by that Baptiſme they may riſe to a newneſſe of life, Profitentur reſurrectionem mortuorum, They profeſſe the Reſurrection of the dead: And this deſtroys utterly the purpoſe of Bellarmine in theſe words, becauſe the Baptiſme ſpoken of here, be it a Sacramentall Baptiſme literally, or a Diſciplinary Baptiſme, metaphyſically, yet is a Baptiſme determined, for the benefit thereof, upon him that is baptized, and not extended to the dead in Purgatory.

Cajetan.

E Since then it is the Expoſition of a few onely, Alii dicunt, Aliqui dicunt, Others have ſaid ſo, Some few have ſaid ſo, and thoſe few are late men, new men, and of thoſe new men, Jeſuits, and Readers, and Cardinalls have differed from that opinion, this Jeſuit, and Reader, and Cardinall Bellarmine needed not to have made that victorious acclamation, Hic locus, we deſire no more then this place, for the evident proofe of Purgatory. Much leſſe did it become that leſſer man, that Minorite Frier, Feuardentius, who for names ſake, (it ſeemes, for his name is Burning fire) is ſo over-vehement for this place, in defence of Purgatory, to pronounce ſo peremptorily, for this interpretation of this Text, Qui huic ſententiæ concordat, Catholicus, qui diſcordat, Hæreticus eſt, He that interprets theſe words thus, is a Catholique, and he is an Heretike that interprets them otherwiſe.

wiſe. For thus, hee leaves out the Fathers themſelves out of the Arke, and makes them Heretiques; And howſoever they pretend peace amongſt themſelves, he proclaimes, at leaſt diſcovers a warre amongſt themſelves, for they are of themſelves, whom he calls Heretiques. Indeed, Quis reſtitit Domino, & pacem habuit? who ever reſiſted the truth of Gods word, and brought in Expoſitions to ſerve turns, and had peace amongſt themſelves? When they went about this building of Purgatory, they thought not of that counſell, When you build, ſit downe before, and count the coſt, leſt men mock you; They never conſidered how they were provided of Materialls, what they had from the Prophets, what from the Euangeliſts, what from the Apoſtles, for the building of this Purgatory: They had the diſeaſe of our times; If they might build, they thought it a profitable courſe; If they could raiſe a Purgatory, they were ſure they ſhould gaine by it; but neither had they leave to build, that is, to erect new Articles of faith, neither had they wherewithall; And therefore being deſtitute of the foundation of all, the Scriptures of God, and having raked together ſome ſtrawes, and ſticks, ends of Poetry, and Philoſophy, and ſome rubbiſh of the Manichees, they have made ſuch a worke under ground, as their Predeceſſors made above ground, in the Towre of Babell, in which they underſtand not one another, but are in a confuſion amongſt themſelves, Quia reſtiterunt Domino, And who ever reſiſted the Lord, and had peace?

Iob 9.4.

Luk. 14.28.

Patres. Thus farre we have proceeded in reſcuing theſe words, from their captivity, from the enemy, that enforced them to teſtifie for Purgatory. And, according to my underſtanding of S. Hieromes rule, who ſayes, That in interpreting of Scriptures, hee ever propoſed to himſelfe Neceſſitatem, & perſpicuitatem, The neceſſity being (as I take it) the redeeming of the words from the ill interpretation of Heretiques, which wee have now done; For the perſpicuity, and cleerneſſe, you ſhall ſee firſt, how the Ancients, before they ſuſpected any ill uſe of them for Purgatory, received them, and then how the later men, after they had been miſ-applied for Purgatory, interpret them: All which I ſhall propoſe with as much cleerneſſe as I can, as taking my ſelfe bound thereunto, by that other rule of the ſame Father, Qui per me intellecturus eſt Apoſtolum, nolo ut ad Interpretem cognoſcendum, alium quærat Interpretem, I would not have them, who come hither to underſtand the Apoſtle from me, be put to ſeek help from others, to underſtand me; when I muſt tell them what S. Paul meant, I would not have them put to aske what I meant; and therefore as farre as the matter will beare it, I would ſpeake plainly to every capacity.

Tertul. Firſt then, for Tertullian, he ſeemes to underſtand this Baptiſme for the dead, De vicario baptiſmate, of Baptiſme by an Atturney, by a Proxy, which ſhould not be ſuch a God-father, as ſhould be a witneſſe or ſurety for mee, when I am baptized alive, but ſuch a God-father, as ſhould be baptized for me when I am dead. For, that perverſe and hereticall cuſtome was then come into practiſe, that out of a falſe opinion, (though grounded, or coloured with a zeale of reverence to the Sacrament) that Baptiſme was ſo abſolutely neceſſary, as that none could poſſibly be ſaved, that were not actually baptized; When any man died without Baptiſme, his friends uſed to baptize another in his name; The dead body was laid under the bed, and another man that was laid in the bed, to repreſent him, anſwered to all thoſe queſtions which the Prieſt ſhould aske, concerning Baptiſme, in the behalfe of him that lay under the bed, (as the Sureties doe now in the Church for a childe, that perchance underſtands no more then that dead man did) and then that perſon in the bed, was baptized for him who lay under the bed. Now Tertullian thinks, that the Apoſtle argues out of that cuſtome, and diſputes thus, If there were no Reſurrection, why doe you thus provide for them that are dead, by baptizing others for them? To what purpoſe doe ye this, if they for whom you doe it have no Reſurrection? But, beſides that it is not much probable, that S. Paul would take an Hereticall action, and practiſe, for the ground of his Argument, to prove ſo great a myſtery of our faith, as the Reſurrection is, and beſides that, it doth not appeare that this Hereticall practiſe (which is attributed to the Marcionits) was entred into the Church in S. Pauls time, and therefore he could not take knowledge of it; Beſides all this, all this, if it were granted, did nothing at all conduce to S. Pauls ends, who had undertaken the proofe of the Reſurrection of the body, and the anſwer was eaſie, and obvious, We doe not baptize living men in the name, and in the behalfe of the dead, for any other reſpect, then for the ſalvation of their ſoules, and what is that to the reſurrection of the body? So that

A that this ſenſe of Tertullians, of Baptiſme by a Proxy, by an Atturney, ſeemes not to be the ſenſe of this place; and yet becauſe it ſavours of charity to the dead, though it were an heretical cuſtome, Bellarmine prefers this interpretation of Tertullian, before any other but his owne, which we handled before.

Theodoret interprets this Baptiſme for the dead to be a baptiſme of Repreſentation; That in baptiſme, by being put under the water, and raiſed up againe, we repreſent the death and reſurrection of Chriſt; for the dead, is for Chriſt, for the teſtimony of Chriſt: And therefore that baptizing by immerſion, by covering the party with water, was ſo exactly obſerved in thoſe times, as it came to be thought, that no man was well baptized, except he had received it ſo, by Immerſion, as by many Treatiſes, and many Conſultations amongſt the Fathers, by way of Letters, and the Acts of ſome Councels, we perceive. And of this repreſentation of the death of Chriſt, in our Baptiſme, adminiſtred in that manner, by Immerſion, S. Paul is thought by ſome to have ſpoken, when he ſayes, Know ye not that all we that have been baptized into Ieſus Chriſt, have been baptized into his death? That is, ſay they, by that repreſentation of his death, in Immerſion. Neither is any thing more evident, then that Theodoret was ſo far in the right, that our baptiſme (and the rather in that forme of Immerſion) is a repreſentation of the death, and buriall, and reſurrection of Chriſt; but yet to call this Baptiſme therefore, becauſe it was a repreſentation of Chriſt, who was dead, a Baptiſme for the dead, is a phraſe ſomewhat more hard and unuſuall, then may be eaſily admitted, in ſuch a matter of faith as this is. And beſides, that Baptiſme, which is this Repreſentation, is a Baptiſme common to all; all that are baptized, are baptized ſo; But the Apoſtle in this place makes his argument from a particular kind of Baptiſme, which ſome did, and ſome did not uſe, Quid de illis, ſayes he, what ſhall become of them? and Quid illi, what doe they meane that are baptized in this peculiar manner? So that, as not Tertullians baptiſme by an Atturney, ſo neither Theodorets baptiſme by Repreſentation, ſeems to be the ſenſe of this place.

Theodoret. B Rom. 6. 3. C

S. Chryſoſtome, much about the ſame time with Theodoret, and long after them both, (at leaſt ſix hundred yeares) Theophylact, meet in a third ſenſe; That becauſe at the taking of Baptiſme, they did uſually rehearſe the Creed, which Creed concluded with thoſe articles, The reſurrection of the body, and life everlaſting, therefore this baptiſme for the dead ſhould onely ſignifie a baptiſme for the hope of the Reſurrection. But ſince they rehearſed all the articles of the Chriſtian beliefe, as well as that, at Baptiſme, it might as properly be ſaid, that they were baptized for Chriſt; baptized for the holy Ghoſt, baptized for the deſcent into hell, as for the dead: And beſides that, this was alſo a baptiſme common to all, all rehearſed the Articles of the Creed; it was not ſuch a peculiar baptiſme, as the Apoſtle hath reſpect to here, in his Quid de illis, and Quid illi, what ſhall become of them, and what doe they meane by this their Baptiſme? And therefore this ſeems not to be the ſenſe. That this Baptiſme for the dead ſhould onely be a profeſſion of that article of the Reſurrection of the dead, though S. Chryſoſtome, and Theophylact concur in, or derive from, or upon one other that interpretation.

Chryſoſt. Theophylact. D

To come lower, and to a lower rank of witneſſes, from the Fathers to the Schoole, Aquinas hath another ſenſe; and certainly an uſefull, a devout, and an appliable interpretation; which is, That Mortui here are peccata, Thoſe that are called Dead here, are Dead works, ſins, and ſo to be baptized for the dead, is to be baptized for our ſins, for the waſhing away our ſins, in an acknowledgement, That although we did contract a leprous ſin, even in our conception, That we were ſubject to the wrath and indignation of God, before we were able to conceive that there was a God, That before our bones were hardned, the canker and ruſt of Adams ſin was in our bones, That before we were a minute old, we have a ſin in us that is ſix thouſand years old, That though we be as blind after we come out of our mothers bellies, as we were there, Though we paſſe over our time, without ever asking our owne conſciences, why we were ſent hither, Though our ſins have hardned us againſt God, and done a harder work then that, in hardning God againſt us, yet though we have turned God into a Rock, there is water in that rock, if we ſtrike it, if we ſolicite it, affect it with our repentance. As in the ſtone font in the Church, there is water of Baptiſme, ſo in the Corner ſtone of the Church, Chriſt Jeſus, whom we have hardned againſt us, there is a tenderneſſe, there is a Well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life. As we have changed this water into ſtone, petrified Gods

Aquinas. E Num. 20.

Psal.114.8. tendernesse towards us, so convertit petram in stagna aquarum, sayes David, He hath turned that rock into a standing water, (water, and water that stayes with us, in his Church) and the flint into a fountaine of waters; that is, sayes S. Augustine, seipsum, & suam quandam duritiam liquefecit, ad irrigandos fideles, At the beames of his owne mercy, God hath thawed that ice, and dissolved that stone, into which we had hardned him, and he hath let in a River of Jordan into his Church, the Sacrament of Baptisme, in the present act, and subsequent efficacy whereof, we are washed from originall, and from actuall sins. All these sins are the fruits of death, as they are opposed against the Lord of life, and pro hisce mortuis baptizamur, sayes Aquinas; for the dead, that is, for these dead workes, we are baptized. A

And certainly, for a second sense, to exalt our devotion by, I should prefer this before any other; But the principall and literall sense of this place, this cannot be, because it is a figurative sense; and though the figure be not in the word Baptisme, where Bellarmine places it, (for Aquinas speaks literally of a Sacramentall Baptisme) yet it is in the other word In mortuis, (Aquinas doth not speak literally, but metaphorically of the Dead) and that may as ill be admitted, in a matter of faith, of so great importance, as the other. And besides, this seems to conclude nothing necessarily for the resurrection of the body, that we are washed from our sins; And lastly, this is still a Baptisme common to all, all that are baptized, are baptized from their sins; And therefore this of Aquinas, not reaching to S. Pauls Quid de illis, and Quid illi, to these men thus baptized, is not that sense neither, which we seek. B

Moderni. But the time will not permit us to pursue the severall interpretations of those, whom directly, or comparatively we call Ancients; Neither truly, though there be many other Interpreters then we have named, are there many other interpretations then we have touched upon, or then may be reduced to them. And therefore to end here this consideration of the Fathers, and those whom they esteem Pillars of their Church, we are thus much at our liberty for all them, That first there is no unanime consent in the interpretation of this place, and that which they binde themselves to follow, is the unanime consent of the Fathers; And then though the Fathers had unanimely consented in one, and that one had been the exposition which Bellarmine pursues, yet we might, by their example, have departed from it; for in the Roman Church, Fathers, and Fathers Fathers, Popes themselves, (And howsoever the Fathers may be Fathers, in respect of us, yet in respect of the Pope, who is S. Peter himselfe, and alwayes sits in his person, the Fathers are but children, sayes Bellarmine) were of opinion, That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was absolutely necessary for children, to their salvation, and this opinion lasted in force and in use for divers hundreds of yeares, neither was it ever represt by Authority, till the other day, in the Councel of Trent, but wore out of it selfe long before, because it had no foundation; So the opinion of the Millenarians, That Christ with his Saints should have a thousand years of a temporall raign here upon earth, after his second comming, had possessed the Fathers, in a very great partie. The Fathers, in a great partie denied, that the soules of good men departed were to enjoy the sight of God, till the Resurrection. And the Fathers affirmed, That the cause of Gods election was the foresight of the faith and obedience of the Elect. These errors are so noted, even by the Authors of the Roman Church, (for I depart not herein from their own words, and observations) as that they still present them so, Omnes, plurimi, All the Fathers, Most of the Fathers, were of this and this opinion; And yet for all these Fathers, no man in the Roman Church is so childish now, as to give his child that Sacrament, or to accompany those Fathers in those other mistakings. C D

This hath been done in fact, they have departed from the Fathers; And then for a Rule, Cardinall Cajetan tels us, That if a new sense of any place of Scripture, agreeable to other places, and to the analogy of faith, arise to us, it is not to be refused, Quia torrens patrum, because the streame of the Fathers is against it. For they themselves have told us, why we may suspect the Fathers, and by what means the Fathers have falne into many mis-interpretations. First they say, Quia glaciem scinderunt, because the Fathers broke the Ice, and undertook the interpretation of many places, in which they had no light, no assistance from others, and so might easily turne into a sinister way: And then Rhetoricati sunt, say they, The Fathers often applyed themselves in figurative, and Hyberbolicall speeches, to exalt the devotions, and stir up the affections of their auditory, and therefore E must

A must not be called to too ſevere, and literall an account, for all that they uttered in that manner: And againe, Plebi indulſerunt, as S. Auguſtine ſayes of himſelfe, ſometimes out of a loathneſſe to offend the ignorant, and ſometimes the holy and devout, and that he might hold his auditory together, and avert none from comming to him, he was unwilling to come to ſuch an exact truth, in the explication and application of ſome places, as that for the ſharpneſſe and bitterneſſe thereof, weaker ſtomachs might forbeare. So alſo, they confeſſe too, that ex vehementia declinarunt, In heat of diſputation, and argument, and to make things ſtraight, they bent them too much on the other hand, and to oppoſe one Hereſie, they endangered the inducing of another, as in S. Auguſtines diſputations againſt the Pelagians, who over-advanced the free will of man, and the Manicheans, who by admitting Duo principia, two Cauſes, an extrinſique cauſe of our evill actions, as well as of our good, annihilated the free will of man, we ſhall find ſometimes
B occaſions to doubt whether S. Auguſtine were conſtant in his owne oplnion, and not tranſported ſometimes with vehemency againſt his preſent adverſary, whether Pelagian, or Manichean.

Which is a diſeaſe that even ſome great Councels in the Church, and Church-affaires have felt, that for collaterall and occaſionall, and perſonall reſpects, which were riſen after they were met, the maine doctrinall points, and ſuch as have principally concerned the glory of God, and the ſalvation of ſoules, and were indeed the principall and onely cauſe of their then meeting there, have beene neglected. Men that came thither with a fervent zeale to the glory of God, have taken in a new fire of diſpleaſure againſt particular Heretiques, or Schiſmatiques, and diſcontinued their holy zeale towards God, till their occaſionall diſpleaſure towards thoſe perſons might be ſatisfied, and ſo thoſe Hereſies, and Heretiques againſt whom they met, have got advantage by that paſſion,
C which hath overtaken and overſwayed them, after they were met. And whatſoever hath fallen into Councels of that kinde, Eccleſiaſticall Councels, may poſſibly be imagined, or juſtly be feared, or at leaſt, without offence be pre-diſſwaded, and deprecated, in all Civill Conſultations, and Councels of State, That Occaſionall things may not divert the Principall: for as in the Naturall body, the ſpleene may ſuffocate the heart, and yet the ſpleen is but the ſewar of the body, and the heart is the ſtrength and the Palais thereof; ſo in politique bodies, and Councels of State, an immature and indigeſted, an intempeſtive and unſeaſonable preſſing of preſent remedies againſt all inconveniencies, may ſuffocate the heart of the buſineſſe, and fruſtrate and evacuate the bleſſed and glorious purpoſe of the whole Councell. The Baſiliske is very ſharpe-ſighted, but he ſees therefore, and to that end, that he may kill: So is, ſo does paſſion. Who would wiſh to be ſharper ſighted then the Eagle? And his ſtrength of ſight is in this, that he lookes to D the Sun; To looke to things that are evident, The evident danger of the State and the Church, The evident malice and power of the enemy, The evident ſtorme upon our peace and Religion, To looke that God be not tempted by us, nor his Lieutenant and Vicegerent wearied, and hardened towards us, This is the object of the Eagles eye, and this is wiſdome high enough. Where men ſee a great foundation laid, they will thinke, that all that is not onely to raiſe a Spittle to cure, or a Church-yard to bury a few diſeaſed perſons. Great Councels are great foundations; and the ſuper-edifications fit for them, are the ſafety of the State, and the good of the Church: And, as in comming to ſuch Councels, every man puts off his owne perſon, and leaves himſelfe at home, ſo neither when he is there, ſhould he ſo ſeeke out, or hunt after any particular perſon, as that that ſhould retard publique buſineſſe. God forbid that my praying that things may not be ſo, ſhould be interpreted for a ſuſpicion in me, that things are ſo; God forbid, E that invocation upon God, ſhould imply a crimination upon men; The Spirit of God, in ſenſe of whom, and in whoſe preſence I ſpeake, knowes that my prayer is but a prayer, and not an Increpation, not an Inſimulation; And therefore may God bee pleaſed to heare, and good men be pleaſed to joyne in this prayer, That God will ſo be ſatisfied, with having laid his owne hand upon us, in the late peſtilence, as neither to make any forraine hand, nor one anothers hand, his inſtrument to deſtroy, or farther to puniſh us. And ſo, having beene invited by this Conſideration, that Fathers and Councels have deflected into error, to ſay ſo much of Civill Councels too, wee depart from this Point thus, that though the Fathers had conſented in Bellarmines Expoſition, that had laid no obligation upon us; how much leſſe, when we finde ſcarce any of them to agree with one another, another, nor any one of them to agree with him; and therefore we passe to the Consideration of the later men. A

And amongst the later men, we will give the first place to a Jesuit, because they love Primos accubitus, as our Saviour sayes of the Pharisees, To be placed highest, and they love to be called, if not Rabbi, Master, yet Abba, Father; (for that is a name which the youngest Jesuit will challenge to himselfe, to be called Father; and amongst us, I am afraid, they come to that name, the name of Father, a little too literally, they are fathers indeed, where they should not bee so) Next to the true Fathers, wee place then a imaginary Father, the Jesuit Maldonate, who interprets this place thus, That to be baptized for the dead, when the Apostle spake, was to suffer Martyrdome, or affliction for the testimony of the resurrection of the Dead: for we see, that the doctrine of the Resurrection especially was inquired upon, and given in charge, and made criminall and odious, by that which the Apostle sayes in the Acts, Of the hope, and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question. Now, I will not say of Maldonat, as Maldonat does of us, who, when sometimes he cites the interpretation of our Authors, will say, This is the likeliest and the probablest sense, and I should beleeve it to be the true sense, but that an Heretique said it; I will not say, I would admit Maldonats sense, but that a Jesuit sayes it; for, for all that, I would receive it, so far as it may stand, but yet not for the primary and principall sense; for so, we cannot receive it, because it is grounded upon a figure, for he takes not Baptisme, for the Sacrament of Baptisme, but for the Metaphoricall Baptisme, the Baptisme of blood. And then Bellarmine will not accept his sense, because though they agree in the figure, that Baptisme signifies affliction, yet they differ in these two important poynts, That first Bellarmin takes it for affliction voluntarily sustained, (for that only constitutes Supererogation, which is necessary to Bellarmines sense) and Maldonate takes it for affliction inflicted by a Persecutor, for a testimony of his faith, in which case to decline the penalty, were to deny the faith, and therefore is no more then, being so called by God, he is bound to suffer: And then Bellarmine takes it for affliction sustained in the behalfe, and for the benefit of another dead friend, and Maldonat determines it in him that does it, for an outward testimony of his constancy in the faith of the Resurrection. So that this Jesuit hath brought no stone to Bellarmines building from this place, he workes not in his harvest, he conduces not to his end, he goes not his way.

Maldonat.

Acts 23.6. B

C

But to contract our selves in this last Part, we finde amongst our owne men (Expositors since the Reformation) two senses of these words, of which either may be taken, for both come home to the purpose and intention of the Apostle, which is, to prove the Resurrection, and to all the other circumstances, in which we have observed the other Interpretations to be deficient. The first is, that this was a Baptisme of those men, Qui ad testandam certissimam spem de Resurrectione, which for a more especiall testimony of their faith in the Resurrection, did (according to the use of many, in those first times) administer, or receive Baptisme, upon the tombs and graves of other Christians, formerly departed this life, and thereby declared both their charitable opinion, that those who were there buried, should receive a resurrection, And that themselves were baptized into the same faith, and so made up the Communion of Saints. And in this sense is the Originall best preserved, which seemes not to be so properly translated, Pro mortuis, as Super mortuos, not for the Dead, but upon the Dead, upon the graves of the Dead: If there be no resurrection of the Dead, why do some of you chuse to be baptized upon the Dead, upon the graves of the Dead, rather then in other places?

D

Luther. Melancton.

And this is the Exposition of him, who is evermore powerfull in the Exposition of those Scriptures which he undertakes, Luther. And Melancton, a man of more learning and temperance then perchance have met in any one, in our perverse and froward times, followes the same Interpretation, and adds, That hee that was to be Baptized, was brought to the bones of them that were buried there, and that there he was asked, whether he did beleeve that that body which lay so scattered there, should be restored again, and made capable of a glorious Resurrection, and upon confession of that faith he received his Baptisme: And this, sayes Melancton (a man freest of any from contention) is Interpretatio simplex, nativa, & vera, The plaine, the naturall, and the true signification of the place. Neither is this Interpretation subject to that calumny, which our Adversaries use to object, that in any Interpretation of Luthers, or Melanctons, the rest who professe them their Disciples, follow as Sheepe, but others, though of the Reformation

E

A tion too, doe not ſo: for we have another, eſteemed in his Diviſion, a learned and narrow ſearcher into the literall ſenſe of Scripture, who though he be very far from communion (in opinion) with them, whom, for diſtinction, the world calls Lutherans, though he be none of thoſe ſheepe, which run after Luther, yet out of a holy ingenuity, and inclination to truth, he profeſſes this interpretation of the place, to be Omnium ſimpliciſſimam, the moſt ſincere and naturall interpretation, and that it doth not wound, nor violate the purpoſe and intention of the Apoſtle, as, ſayes he, all the other interpretations, which Beza produces, doe. And yet Beza himſelfe, as well as Piſcator, in their tranſlations, retaine the Super, which is in Luther, and make it ſo, a baptiſme upon the dead, and not for the dead. Piſcator.

To be baptized then for the dead, or upon the dead, is, in their underſtanding, an expectation of a Reſurrection for themſelves, together with them, in ſight of whoſe dead bo-B dies they were baptized. Here is no figurative ſpeech, but the words taken in their proper, and preſent, and firſt ſignification. And this is not of a generall baptiſme, common to all, but of a cuſtome taken up by ſome in the Church of Corinth, out of ſpeciall devotion, and teſtification of the Reſurrection. And laſtly, this had reference, not onely to the immortality of the ſoule, but to the reſurrection of the body alſo, which was then in their contemplation, in which Circumſtance, moſt of the former interpretations of the Ancients were defective, for ſtill it might have been anſwered to S. Pauls queſtion, Quid illi, Quid de illis? What meane they, and what becomes of them? We doe all this for the ſalvation of ſoules, though we doe not binde our ſelves to beleeve a reſurrection of bodies; So that all the particulars that S. Paul propoſed to himſelfe, meet fully, and ſtrongly, in this interpretation. Nothing can be oppoſed againſt it, if the hiſtory be true; if the matter of fact be cleare and evident, if it appeare fully, that this was a cuſtome in C the Apoſtles time, that thoſe Chriſtians did uſe to receive baptiſme upon the graves of the dead. I doubt not but Luther had ground for it; I doubt not but Melanction had Authors; for he ſayes, Aliqui ſcribunt, ſome have written it. They may have ſeene Authors, whom I have not; for my part, I confeſſe, I never found this Cuſtome in the Eccleſiaſtique Story, to my remembrance. And when the Centuriators, who gathered the Story of the Church, with ſome diligence, and who were of the perſwaſion whom the world calls Lutherans, when they ſay, Conſtat, It is manifeſt, that in the Church of Corinth, they did baptize in that manner, upon the graves of the dead, they never cite any teſtimony of Hiſtory for their Conſtat, nor for their evidence of this matter of fact, but onely this very place of Scripture, this text; and the directer and the fuller way had been, to have proved the text from the ſtory, then the ſtory from the text. The Expoſition is very faire, and very likely, if the matter of fact be proved; and the fact may be proved D by ſome, whom thoſe reverend perſons have read, and I have not. Cent. 1. l. 2. c. 6.

There is one Interpretation more, which is open to no imputation, ſpotted with no aſperſion, ſubject to no objection, and therefore fitteſt to be embraced, which is alſo grounded upon a Cuſtome, which came very early into the Church of God, (ſo early as that we can aſſigne no beginning) and of which Cuſtome for the matter of fact, wee are ſure it was in practiſe: which was, that upon an opinion, that at the time of Baptiſme, there was an abſolute waſhing away, and a deliverance from all ſinnes, men did ordinarily, or very often, defer their baptiſme till their death-bed, that ſo they might have their tranſmigration, and paſſage out of this world, in that purity, that baptiſme reſtored them to, without contracting any more ſinnes after baptiſme. This we are too ſure was in uſe; for we ſee the Eccleſiaſticall Story full of Examples of it, in great perſons; great in power and authority, for Conſtantine the Emperour deferred his baptiſme,
E long after his reſolution to be a Chriſtian; And great in eſtimation, and merit, and knowledge; for S. Auguſtine remembers it with much compunction, That in an extreame ſickneſſe, Flagitavi baptiſmum à Matre, he begged at his Mothers hands, that he might be baptized, and obtained it not, becauſe he was a perſon, (in her obſervation) like enough to fall into more ſinnes, after he had been delivered of thoſe by baptiſme. He notes the generall diſpoſition of his time, Sonat undique, It is every mans voyce, every mans ſaying, Sine eum, faciat quid vult, nondum baptizatus eſt, Let him alone yet, let him doe what he will yet, for yet he is not baptized: But, ſayes that bleſſed Father there, would they ſay to a man that lay wounded and weltring in his blood, Sine eum, vulneretur ampliùs, nondum enim ſanatus eſt, Let him lie, or give him two or three wounds more, for the Conf. l. 1. c. 11.

Surgeon

Surgeon is not come yet to cure him? And yet, ſayes he, his and my caſe is all one. A

Before his time, which was after foure hundred yeares, we may ſee, that this cuſtome of late baptizing, was not onely tolerated, but adviſed and counſelled in the Church, when Tertullian, two hundred yeares before S. Auguſtine, chides away young children, from comming to Baptiſme, ſo ſoone, before, ſayes he, they need it; Quid feſtinat innocens ætas ad remiſſionem peccatorum? Why are they brought to the waſhing away of ſinnes, which as yet have committed no ſinne? And he makes Baptiſme ſo occaſionall a thing, and ſubject to ſo many Circumſtances, that very many other occaſions might put off Baptiſme. Innuptis procraſtinandus baptiſmus, ſayes Tertullian, quia eis præparata tentatio; He would not have them baptized, that meant to marry ſoone after, becauſe they were to wraſtle with a great tentation, as long as their fancy and imagination was full of their future marriage. So ſoone, and ſo deeply was this opinion rooted, (that it was to little purpoſe to baptize till towards our death) that S. Baſil was faine to oppoſe it expreſly in the Eaſterne Church, And both the Gregories, Nazianzen and Nyſſen, and then S. Ambroſe, and others, in the Weſterne, all arguing againſt it, as a cuſtome long before in uſe, and none aſſigning any beginning of it. B

Upon this cuſtome then S. Paul argues; If men upon their death-bed, when they are eſteemed pro Mortuis, as good as dead, no better then dead, (for ſo the phraſe is ordinarily uſed, pro derelicto, pro perdito, when we eſteeme a man forſaken, or a thing loſt) If men deſire baptiſme, when they are held pro mortuis, no other then dead, given over for dead, and are to have no fellowſhip with the militant Church here in this life, doe they not in this care of this act to be done upon their bodies, imply a confeſſion of the Reſurrection? Theſe were they, whom thoſe times called Clinicos, Bed-baptiſts, Bed-Chriſtians, which either deferred their baptiſme, upon the reaſons mentioned before, that they might be ſure to have a pure tranſmigration, preſently after Baptiſme; Or els they were Catechumeni, ſuch Convertits to the Chriſtian faith, as the Church had undertaken to inſtruct and catechize, but did not baptize till a certaine time, (Eaſter, and Whitſontyde) except they were ſurprized with ſudden ſickneſſe, and then they were baptized in their death-bed: And both wayes the ſenſe ſtands well, That they were baptized pro Mortuis, that is, pro Derelictis, where they were given over for dead, when there was no hope of life, Or els pro Mortuis, that is, pro ſtatu Mortuorum, onely with reſpect to their ſtate after this life, becauſe they were going to the dead. And theſe be Divina Compendia, as S. Cyprian calls them, Gods Abridgements, who can give his grace in a minute; C

7. l. 4. ad Magnum. for, as he ſayes in the end of that Epiſtle, Clinici, an peripatetici, whether they be walking, or bed-rid Chriſtians, Sacramenti majeſtas & ſanctitas non derogetur, The Sacrament hath the ſame power, whether they be baptized for the living, or for the dead, that is, to remaine with us in this world, or to depart to them of the next. D

Hæreſ. 28. And this Expoſition is not ſo much the Expoſition of later men, as that it is deſtitute of the honour of Antiquity; for Epiphanius, the eldeſt whom we have named yet, but Tertullian, oppoſes this ſenſe and interpretation of theſe words, to that ſenſe which Tertullian laid hold of, De baptiſmate vicario, of his Baptiſme, by Proxy, and Attorney. It is ſo reaſonable, that we need no better approbation of it, but that, (though it be eſpecially Eſtius. purſued by Calvin) that great profeſſor, and reader in Divinity, whom we ſpake of before, hath given of it, that it is Senſus apertus, & ſimpliciſsimus, omnibus aliis anteponendus, & ad probandum id quod Apoſtolus inſtituit aptiſsimus, It is the directeſt ſenſe, and the plaineſt, a ſenſe to be preferred before all the reſt, as being fitteſt to eſtabliſh all that the Apoſtle propoſed in this place; To be baptized, ſayes he, jamjam morituris, when he is ready to die, is to be baptized pro mortuis, for the dead, with reſpect onely to the ſtate of the dead; and therefore in this interpretation which even the adverſary hath approved, E and juſtified for us, we may ſafely reſt our ſelves, and the rather, becauſe our tranſlations have relation to this ſenſe, either as it is in our firſt Edition, pro Mortuis, for Dead, that is, as good as dead, or as it is in the ſecond, pro Mortuis, for the Dead, for the ſtate of the dead, and the hope of the reſurrection.

Thus, beloved, S. Paul hath made an argument here, to prove the Reſurrection of the body; One of the hardeſt bones in the body, one of the darkeſt corners in the myſteries of our Religion, and yet all the Religions of the Heathens had ever ſome impreſſions of it: Seculum reſurrectionem mortuorum, nec cum errat, ignorat, ſayes Tertullian, The world knew that there was ſome reſurrection, though they were not come to know, what

it

A it was; For he remembers, that at their funeralls, they prepared great feasts upon the graves of the dead, and cried out to them, Resurgite, comedite, bibite, Arise, and come to us, and eat and drink with us, They imagined some bodily being, and some possibility of conversation with the living, in the Dead. You have understood S. Pauls Argument, and yet perchance, you have not understood S. Paul. Quocumque respexeris fulmina sunt, sayes S. Chrysostome. All S. Pauls words work as lightning, Et capit omne quod tetigerit, It affects, and it leaves some marke upon every thing that it touches; And if hee have touched thee now, his effect is not onely to make thee beleeve a future resurrection of thy body, but to feele a present resurrection in thy soule, and to make mee beleeve that thou feelest it, by expressing it in thy life and conversation: Ad intelligendum Paulum vita pura opus est; To understand S. Paul, a man must be an honest man; hee must mend his life, that will be beleeved to have comprehended S. Paul; For if he be onely the wiser, B and the learneder, and not the better, and the honester, he hath but halfe understood S. Paul. S. Paul condemnes Hymenæus, and Philetus for saying The Resurrection was past already; That is, as S. Augustine interprets it, that all the Resurrection which wee are to have, is nothing but a resurrection from sin. Chrysost. 2 Tim. 2. 17.

If S. Paul say so bitterly, that this doctrine doth fret as a canker, because it is not enough, what will he say, if thou beest not come so farre, as to a Resurrection from sin? We fall away into manifold, and miserable dejections, but Qui cadit, non resurget? Shall we fall, and not arise? shall we turne away, and not turne againe? Shall not God be able to multiply our resurrections as well as the Devill our falls from God? Wee are dejected when we see the wicked prosper; when God seemes to behave himselfe, as a Prince that were not well setled in his government, and durst not offend nor displease any party, nor take knowledge of their insolent and rebellious proceedings. When men that tempt C God, and never pray for any thing before hand, nor thank him for it, when they have it, and yet sweat in their abundances, when the children of God starve for their crummes, we are dejected. But David found a resurrection in this case, and a strange one, which was, that he could lie downe and sleepe in peace; his resurrection was, Dedisti lætitiam in corde, Thou hast put gladnesse into my heart, more then in the time that their corne, and their wine increased. If all Gods promises be not presently performed unto us, temporall supplies in all temporall wants, spirituall supplies in all spirituall distresses presently administred, wee are dejected. But Abraham had a resurrection in this case; when God had said to him, In Isaac vocabitur semen tuum, In Isaac shall all Nations be blessed, and then had commanded him to stop up that fountaine, to dig up that foundation, to pull up that root of all this universall blessing, to sacrifice that very Isaac, yet Abraham erected himselfe, onely with considering, That God was able to raise Isaac from the dead. Hee left God D to his owne will when hee would doe it, it was resurrection enough to him, to establish himselfe in the assurance that God could doe it. Jer. 8. 4. Psal. 4. 8. Heb. 11. 19.

If thou be dejected and depressed with the waight of thy sins, if the maledictions, and curses, and denunciations of Gods judgements against sinners lie heavy upon thee, make haste to thy resurrection, raise thy selfe from it as fast as thou canst, for it is a grave that putrifies, and corrupts, and molders away a soule apace. Lætetur cor quærentium Dominum, sayes David; Thou art not in the right way of finding the Lord, if thou doe not finde a joy in the seeking of him; Though thou canst not setle thy selfe in a sense that thou hast found him, yet thou hast, if thou canst find a holy melting, and joy in thy seeking of him. If the Angels bee come downe to destroy Sodome, If Ionas bee come to proclaime destruction to Nineveh, wilt thou make thy selfe beleeve that thou art a Citizen of Sodom, an inhabitant of Nineveh, and must necessarily be wrapped up in that E destruction? If David say, Non sic impii, non sic, The wicked shall not stand in judgement, wilt thou needs be one of them? As a wise, and a discreet man will never beleeve that he that writes a Satyr, meanes him, though he touch upon his vices, so whatsoever the Prophets say, of an aversion, and obduration in God, against sinners, yet they meane not thee, nor doe thou assume it, in an inevitablenesse upon thy selfe. The Angel of God, the Spirit of God shall deale with thee, as he did with Lot in Sodom; He told Lot overnight, that he would burne the City, and bad him prepare; God shall give thee some grudgings, before he exalt thy fever, and warne thee to consider thy state, and consult with thy spirituall Physitian; The Angel called him up in the morning, and then hastned him, and when he prolonged, sayes the Text, The Angel caught him, and carried him Psal. 105. 3. Gen. 19. 12.

him forth, and set him without the City. Becauſe, though there was no cooperation in Lot, yet there was no reſiſting neither, God was pleaſed to doe all; So in this death of diffidence, and ſenſe of Gods fearefull judgements, God opens thy grave now, and now he calls to thee, Lazare veni foras, Come forth Lazarus, and hee offers his hand to pull thee out now, Onely Comfortare & eſto robuſtus, as God ſaid to Ioſhuah, Bee ſtrong and have a good courage, and as God addes there, Comfortare & eſto robuſtus valde, Multiply thy courage, and God ſhall multiply thy ſtrength, in all dejections have a cheerefull apprehenſion of thy reſurrection, and thou ſhalt have it, nay thou haſt it. A

Ioſh. 1.6.

But this death of deſperation, or diffidence in Gods mercy, by Gods mercy hath ſwallowed none of us, but the death of ſinne hath ſwallowed us all, and for our owne cuſtomary ſinnes we all need a reſurrection: And what is that? Reſurrectio à peccato, & ceſſatio à peccato, non eſt idem; Every ceſſation from ſin, is not a reſurrection from ſinne. A man may diſcontinue a ſinne, intermit the practiſe of a ſin, by infirmity of the body, or by ſatiety in the ſinne, or by the abſence of that perſon, with whom he hath uſed to communicate in that ſin. But Reſurrectio, eſt ſecunda ejus, quod interiit, ſtatio. A Reſurrection is ſuch an abſtinence from the practiſe of the ſin, as is grounded upon a repentance, and a deteſtation of the ſin, and then it is a ſetling, and an eſtabliſhing of the ſoule in that ſtate, and diſpoſition: It is not a ſudden and tranſitory remorſe, nor onely a reparation of that which was ruined, and demoliſhed, but it is a building up of habits contrary to former habits, and cuſtomes, in actions contrary to that ſin, that we have been accuſtomed to. Elſe it is but an Intermiſſion, not a Reſurrection; but a ſtarting, not a waking; but an apparition, not a living body; but a ceſſation, not a peace of conſcience. B

Durand.

Damaſc.

Now this Reſurrection is begun, and well advanced in Baptiſmate lachrymarum, In the baptiſme of true and repentant teares. But, Beloved, as S. Paul in this place, hath a relation Ad baptiſmum clinicorum, to death-bed-baptiſts, death-bed-Chriſtians, to them that defer their Baptiſme to their death, but he gives no allowance of it; So this Baptiſma clinicorum, this repentance upon the death-bed, is a dangerous delay. Even of them, I will ſay with S. Paul here, If there were no Reſurrection, no need to riſe from ſin by repentance, why are they then thus baptized, pro mortuis? why doe they repent, when they are as good as dead, and have no more to ſuffer in this world? But if there be ſuch a reſurrection, a neceſſity of ſuch a Baptiſme by repentance, why come they no ſooner to it? For is any man ſure to have it, or ſure to have a deſire to it then? It is never impertinent to repeat S. Auguſtines words in this caſe, Etiam hac animadverſione percutitur peccator, ut moriens obliviſcatur ſui, qui dum viveret, oblitus eſt Dei; God begins a dying mans condemnation at this, That as he forgot God in his life, ſo he ſhall forget himſelfe at his death. Compare thy temporall, and thy ſpirituall ſtate together, and conſider how they may both ſtand well at that day. If thou have ſet thy ſtate in order, and made a Will before, and have nothing to doe at laſt, but to adde a Codicil, this is ſoone diſpatched at laſt; But if thou leave all till then, it may prove a heavy buſineſſe. So if thou have repented before, and ſetled thy ſelfe in a religious courſe before, and have nothing to doe then, but to wraſtle with the power of the diſeaſe, and the agonies of death, God ſhall fight for thee in that weake eſtate; God ſhall imprint in thee a Cupio diſſolvi, S. Pauls, not onely contentednеſſe, but deſire to be diſſolved; And God ſhall give thee a glorious Reſurrection, yea an Aſcenſion into Heaven before thy death, and thou ſhalt ſee thy ſelfe in poſſeſſion of his eternall Kingdome, before thy bodily eyes be ſhut. Be therefore S. Cyprians Peripatetique, and not his Clinique Chriſtian; A walking, and not a bed-rid Chriſtian; That when thou haſt walked with God, as Henoch did, thou maiſt be taken with God, as Henoch was, and ſo walke with the Lamb, as the Saints doe in Jeruſalem, and follow him whitherſoever hee goes; That even thy death-bed may bee as Elias Chariot, to carry thee to heaven; And as the bed of the Spouſe in the Canticles, which was Lectus floridus, a greene and flouriſhing bed, where thou maiſt find by a faithfull apprehenſion, that thy ſickneſſe hath crowned thee with a crowne of thornes, by participation of the ſufferings of thy Saviour, and that thy patience hath crowned thee with that crowne of glory, which the Lord the righteous Judge ſhall impart to thee that day. C D E

SERM.

SERM. LXXIX.

Preached at S. PAULS.

PSAL. 90. 14.

O satisfie us early with thy mercy, that we may rejoyce and be glad all our dayes.

THey have made a Rule in the Councel of Trent, that no Scripture ſhall be expounded, but according to the unanime conſent of the Fathers: But in this Book of the Pſalms, it would trouble them to give many examples of that Rule, that is, of an unanime conſent of the Fathers, in the interpretation thereof. In this Pſalme, Bellarmine in his Expoſition of the Pſalms, finds himſelfe perplexed; He ſayes (and ſayes truly) Hieronymus conſtanter affirmat, Auguſtinus conſtanter negat, S. Hierome doth confidently and conſtantly affirme, and S. Auguſtine with as much confidence, and conſtancy deny, that this Pſalme, and all that follow to the hundredth Pſalme, are Moſes Pſalms, and written by him. And this diverſe conſtancy in theſe two Fathers, S. Hierome and S. Auguſtine, ſhake the conſtancy of that Canon, which binds to a following of an unanime conſent, for that cannot be found.
C Bellarmine expedites himſelfe herein, that way, which is indeed their moſt ordinary way amongſt their Expoſitors, which is, where the Fathers differ, to adhere to S. Auguſtine. So he doth in this point; though moſt of the Ancients of the Chriſtian Church, moſt of the Rabbins of the Jews, moſt of the Writers in the Reformation, take it to be Moſes Pſalme, and that way runs the greateſt ſtreame, and neareſt to a concurrence. And thus far I have ſtopped upon this conſideration, Whether this be Moſes Pſalme or no, That when it appeares to be his Pſalme, and that we ſee, that in the tenth verſe of this Pſalm, mans life is limited to ſeventy years, or at moſt to eighty, and then remember, that Moſes himſelfe, then when he ſaid ſo, was above eighty, and in a good habitude long after that, we might hereby take occaſion to conſider, that God does not ſo limit, and meaſure himſelfe in his bleſſings to his ſervants, but that for their good and his glory he enlarges thoſe meaſures. God hath determined a day, from Sun to Sun, yet when God hath uſe
D of a longer day, for his glory, he commands the Sun to ſtand ſtill, till Ioſhua have purſued his victory. So God hath given the life of man, into the hand of ſickneſſe; and yet for all that deadly ſickneſſe, God enlarges Hezekiah's years: Moſes was more then foureſcore, when he told us, that our longeſt terme was foureſcore.

If we require exactly an unanime conſent, that all agree in the Author of this Pſalme, we can get no farther, then that the holy Ghoſt is the Author. All agree the words to be Canonicall Scripture, and ſo from the holy Ghoſt; and we ſeek no farther. The words are his, and they offer us theſe conſiderations; Firſt, That the whole Pſalme being in the Title thereof called a Prayer, A Prayer of Moſes the man of God, it puts us juſtly, and pertinently upon the conſideration of the many dignities and prerogatives of that part of our worſhip of God, Prayer; for there we ſhall ſee, That though the whole Pſalme be not a Prayer, yet becauſe there is a Prayer in the Pſalme, that denominates
E the whole Pſalme, the whole Pſalme is a Prayer. When the Pſalm grows formally to be a Prayer, our Text enters, O ſatisfie us early with thy mercy, that we may rejoyce and be glad all our dayes: And in that there will be two Parts more, The Prayer it ſelfe, O ſatisfie us early with thy mercy, And the effect thereof, That we may rejoyce and be glad all our dayes. So that our Parts are three; Firſt Prayer, Then this Prayer, And laſtly the benefit of all Prayer.

For the firſt, which is Prayer in generall, I will thruſt no farther then the Text leads me in, that is, That Prayer is ſo eſſentiall a part of Gods worſhip, as that all is called Prayer. S. Hierome upon this Pſalme ſayes, Difficillimum Pſalmum aggredior, I undertake the expoſition of a very hard Pſalme, and yet, ſayes he, I would proceed ſo in the 1 Part. Prayer.

expoſition thereof, ut interpretatio noſtra aliena non egeat interpretatione, That there ſhould not need another Comment upon my Comment, that when I pretend to interpret the Pſalme, they that heare me, ſhould not need another to interpret me: which is a frequent infirmity amongſt Expoſitors of Scriptures, by writing, or preaching, either when men will raiſe doubts in places of Scripture, which are plaine enough in themſelves, (for this creates a jealouſie, that if the Scriptures be every where ſo difficult, they cannot be our evidences, and guides to ſalvation) Or when men will inſiſt too vehemently, and curiouſly, and tediouſly in proving of ſuch things as no man denies; for this alſo induces a ſuſpition, that that is not ſo abſolutely, ſo undeniably true, that needs ſo much art, and curioſity, and vehemence to prove it. I ſhall therefore avoid theſe errors; and becauſe I preſume you are full of an acknowledgment of the duties, and dignities of Prayer, onely remember you of thus much of the method, or elements of Prayer, That whereas the whole Book of Pſalms is called Sepher Tehillim, that is, Liber Laudationum, The Book of Praiſe, yet this Pſalme, and all that follow to the hundredth Pſalme, and divers others beſides theſe, (which make up a faire limme of this body, and a conſiderable part of the Book) are called Prayers; The Book is Praiſe, the parts are Prayer. The name changes not the nature; Prayer and Praiſe is the ſame thing: The name ſcarce changes the name; Prayer and Praiſe is almoſt the ſame word; As the duties agree in the heart and mouth of a man, ſo the names agree in our eares; and not onely in the language of our Tranſlation, but in the language of the holy Ghoſt himſelfe, for that which with us differs but ſo, Prayer, and Praiſe, in the Originall differs no more then ſo, Tehillim, and Tephilloth.

And this concurrence of theſe two parts of our devotion, Prayer and Praiſe, that they accompany one another, nay this co-incidence, that they meet like two waters, and make the ſtreame of devotion the fuller; nay more then that, this identity, that they doe not onely conſiſt together, but conſtitute one another, is happily expreſſed in this part of the Prayer, which is our Text; for that which in the Originall language is expreſſed in the voice of Prayer, O ſatisfie us, &c. in the firſt Tranſlation, that of the Septuagint, is expreſſed in the voice of praiſe, Saturaſti, Thou haſt ſatisfied us; The Original makes it a Prayer, the Tranſlation a Praiſe. And not to compare Original with Tranſlation, but Tranſlation with Tranſlation, and both from one man, we have in S. Hieroms works two Tranſlations of the Pſalmes; one, in which he gives us the Pſalmes alone; another, in which he gives them illuſtrated with his notes and Commentaries. And in one of theſe Tranſlations he reads this as a Prayer, Replenos, O fill us early with thy mercie, and in the other he reads it as a Praiſe, Repleti ſumus, Thou haſt filled us, &c. Nay, not to compare Originall with Tranſlation, nor Tranſlation with Tranſlation, but Originall with Originall, the holy Ghoſt with himſelfe, In the Title of this Pſalme, (and the Titles of the Pſalms are Canonicall Scripture) the holy Ghoſt calls this Pſalme a Prayer, and yet enters the Pſalme, in the very firſt verſe thereof, with praiſe and thankſgiving, Lord, thou haſt been our dwelling place in all generations. And ſuch is the conſtitution and frame of that Prayer of Prayers, That which is the extraction of all prayers, and draws into a ſumme all that is in all others, That which is the infuſion into all others, ſheds and ſhowres whatſoever is acceptable to God, in any other prayer, That Prayer which our Saviour gave us, (for as he meant to give us all for asking, ſo he meant to give us the words by which we ſhould ask) As that Prayer conſiſts of ſeven petitions, and ſeven is infinite, ſo by being at firſt begun with glory and acknowledgement of his raigning in heaven, and then ſhut up in the ſame manner, with acclamations of power and glory, it is made a circle of praiſe, and a circle is infinite too, The Prayer, and the Praiſe is equally infinite. Infinitely poore and needy man, that ever needſt infinite things to pray for; Infinitely rich and abundant man, that ever haſt infinite bleſſings to praiſe God for.

Gods houſe in this world is called the houſe of Prayer; but in heaven it is the houſe of Praiſe: No ſurpriſall with any new neceſſities there, but one even, inceſſant, and everlaſting tenor of thankſgiving; And it is a bleſſed inchoation of that ſtate here, here to be continually exerciſed in the commemoration of Gods former goodneſſe towards us. Pſal. 5. 3. My voyce ſhalt thou heare in the morning, O Lord, ſayes David. What voice? the voice of his prayer; it is true; Pſal. 55. 17. In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, ſaies David there. And not only then, but at noone and at night he vowes that Sacrifice; Evening and morning, and at noone will I pray, and cry unto thee. But Davids devotion began not, when his prayers began;

A gan; one part of his devotion was before morning; At midnight will I riſe, to give thanks unto thee O Lord, ſayes he. Doubtleſſe when he lay downe and cloſed his eyes, he had made up his account with God, and had received his Quietus eſt then: And then the firſt thing that he does when he wakes againe, is not to importune God for more, but to bleſſe God for his former bleſſings. And as this part of his devotion, Praiſe, began all, ſo it paſſes through all, I will bleſſe the Lord at all times, and his praiſe ſhall be continually in my mouth. He extends it through all times, and all places, and would faine do ſo through all perſons too, as we ſee by that adprecation which is ſo frequent with him, O that men would therefore praiſe the Lord, and declare the wondrous workes that he doth for the children of men! Pſal. 119. 62. Pſal. 34. 11.

If we compare theſe two incomparable duties, Prayer, and Praiſe, it will ſtand thus, Our Prayers beſiege God, (as Tertullian ſpeakes, eſpecially of publique Prayer in the B Congregation, Agmine facto obſidemus Deum) but our praiſes preſcribe in God, we urge him, and preſſe him with his ancient mercies, his mercies of old: By Prayer we incline him, we bend him, but by Praiſe we bind him; our thanks for former benefits, is a producing of a ſpecialty, by which he hath contracted with us for more. In Prayer we ſue to him, but in our Praiſe we ſue him himſelfe; Prayer is as our petition, but Praiſe is as our Evidence; In that we beg, in this we plead. God hath no law upon himſelfe, but yet God himſelfe proceeds by precedent: And whenſoever we preſent to him with thankſgiving, what he hath done, he does the ſame, and more againe. Neither certainly can the Church inſtitute any prayers, more effectuall for the preſervation of Religion, or of the State, then the Collects for our deliverances, in the like caſes before: And when he heares them, though they have the nature of Praiſe onely, yet he tranſlates them into Prayers, and when we our ſelves know not, how much we ſtand in need of new delive-
C rances, he delivers us from dangers which we never ſuſpected, from Armies and Navies which we never knew were prepared, and from plots and machinations which we never knew were brought into Conſultation, and diverts their forces, and diſſipates their counſels with an untimely abortion. And farther I extend not this firſt part of Prayer in generall, in which, to that which you may have heard often, and uſefully of the duty and dignity of Prayer, I have only added this, of the method and elements thereof, that prayer conſiſts as much of praiſe for the paſt, as of ſupplication for the future.

We paſſe now to our ſecond Part, To this particular Prayer, and thoſe limmes that 2 Part. make up this body, thoſe pieces that conſtitute this Part. They are many; as many as words in it: Satisfie, and ſatisfie Vs, and doe that early, and doe that with that which is thine, and let that be mercy. So that firſt it is a prayer for fulneſſe and ſatisfaction, Satura, ſatisfie; And then it is a prayer not onely of appropriation to our ſelves, Satisfie me, But D of a charitable dilatation and extenſion to others, Satisfie us, all us, all thy ſervants, all thy Church; And then thirdly, it is a prayer of diſpatch and expedition, Satura nos mane, Satisfie us early; and after that, it is a prayer of evidence and manifeſtation, Satisfie us with that which is, and which we may diſcerne to be thine; And then laſtly, it is a prayer of limitation even upon God himſelfe, that God will take no other way herein, but the way of mercy, Satisfie us early with thy mercy.

And becauſe theſe are the land-markes that muſt guide you in this voyage, and the places to which you muſt reſort to aſſiſt your memory, be pleaſed to take another ſurvay and impreſſion of them. I may have an apprehenſion of a conditionall promiſe of God, and I may have ſome faire credulity and teſtimony of conſcience, of an endevour to performe thoſe conditions, and ſo ſome inchoations of thoſes promiſes, but yet this is not a fulneſſe, a ſatisfaction, and this is a prayer for that, Satura, ſatisfie: I may have a full mea-
E ſure in my ſelfe, finde no want of temporall conveniencies, or ſpirituall conſolation even in inconveniencies, and ſo hold up a holy alacrity and cheerefulneſſe for all concerning my ſelfe, and yet ſee God abandon greater perſons, and deſert ſome whole Churches, and States, upon whom his glory and Goſpel depends much more then upon me, but this is a prayer of charitable extenſion, Satura nos, not me, but us, all us that profeſſe thee aright: This alſo I may be ſure that God will doe at laſt, he will reſcue his owne honour in reſcuing or eſtabliſhing his Servants, he will bring Iſrael out of Egypt, and out of Babylon, but yet his Iſrael may lye long under the ſcourge and ſcorne of his and their enemies, 300. yeares before they get out of Egypt, ſeventy yeares before they get out of Babylon, and ſo fall into tentations of conceiving a jealouſie, and ſuſpition of Gods good purpoſe towards them, and this is a Prayer of Diſpatch and Expedition, Satura nos mane, Satisfie us early, O God make ſpeed to ſave us, O Lord make haſt to help us: But he may derive help upon us, by meanes that are not his, not avowed by him, He may quicken our Counſels by bringing in an Achitophell, he may ſtrengthen our Armies by calling in the Turke, he may eſtabliſh our peace and friendſhips, by remitting or departing with ſome parts of our Religion; at ſuch a deare price we may be helped, but theſe are not his helps, and this is a prayer of manifeſtation, that all the way to our end hee will bee pleaſed to let us ſee, that the meanes are from him, Satura nos tua, Satisfie us with that, which is thine, and comes from thee, and ſo directs us to thee: All this may be done too, and yet not that done which we pray for here; God may ſend that which is his, and yet without preſent comfort therein; God may multiply corrections, and judgements, and tribulations upon us, and intend to helpe us that way, by whipping and beating us into the way, and this is his way; but this is a Prayer of limitation even upon God himſelfe, That our way may be his, and that his way may be the way of mercy, Satisfie us early with thy mercy.

Satura. Firſt then, the firſt word Satura, implies a fulneſſe, and it implies a ſatisfaction, A quietneſſe, a contentedneſſe, an acquieſcence in that fulneſſe; Satisfie is, let us bee full, and let us feele it, and reſt in that fulneſſe. Theſe two make up all Heaven, all the joy, and all the glory of Heaven, fulneſſe and ſatisfaction in it. And therefore S. Hierom refers this Prayer of our Text, to the Reſurrection, and to that fulneſſe, and that ſatisfaction which we ſhall have then, and not till then. For though we ſhall have a fulneſſe in Heaven, as ſoone as we come thither, yet that is not fully a ſatisfaction, becauſe we ſhall deſire, and expect a fuller ſatisfaction in the reunion of body and ſoule. And when Heaven it ſelfe cannot give us this full ſatisfaction till then, in what can wee looke for it in this world, where there is no true fulneſſe, nor any ſatisfaction, in that kind of fulneſſe which wee ſeeme to have? Pleaſure and ſenſuality, and the giving to our ſelves all that we deſire, cannot give this; you heare God reproaches Iſrael ſo, You have multiplied your fornications, & yet are not ſatisfied. Ezck. 16. Labor for profit, or for preferment, cannot doe it; you ſee God reproaches Iſrael for that too, Ye have ſowne much, and bring in little, ye eat, but have not enough, ye drinke, but are not filled, ye cloath you, but are not warme, and he that earneth wages, putteth it into a broken bag; Hagg. 1. that is, it runs out as faſt as it comes in, he finds nothing at the yeares end, his Midſommer will ſcarce fetch up Michaelmas, and if he have brought about his yeare, and made up his Circle, yet he hath raiſed up nothing, nothing appeares in his circle. If theſe things could fill us, yet they could not ſatisfie us, becauſe they cannot ſtay with us, or not we with them: He hath devoured ſubſtance, and he ſhall vomit it. Iob 20. He devoured it by bribery, and he ſhall vomit it by a fine; He devoured it by extortion, and he ſhall vomit it by confiſcation; He devoured it in other Courts, and ſhall vomit it in a Star-chamber. If it ſtay ſome time, it ſhall be with an anguiſh and vexation; When he ſhall be filled with abundance, it ſhall be a paine to him, as it is in the ſame place. Still his riches ſhall have the nature of a vomit, hard to get downe, and hard to keep in the ſtomach when it is there; hardly got, hardly kept when they are got. If all theſe could be overcome, yet it is clogged with a heavy curſe, Wo be unto you that are full, for ye ſhall be hungry: Luke 6. Where, if the curſe were onely from them, who are poore by their owne ſloth, or waſtfulneſſe, who for the moſt part delight to curſe and maligne the rich, the curſe might be contemned by us, and would be throwne back by God into their owne boſomes; but Os Domini locutum, The mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it, Chriſt himſelfe hath denounced this curſe upon worldly men, That they ſhall be hungry, not onely ſuffer impairement and diminution, but be reduced to hunger.

There is a ſpirituall fulneſſe in this life, of which S. Hierom ſpeakes, Ebrietas fœlix, ſatietas ſalutaris, A happy exceſſe, and a wholeſome ſurfet; qua quanto copioſius ſumitur, majorem donat ſobrietatem, In which the more we eate, the more temperate we are, and the more we drinke, the more ſober. In which, (as S. Bernard alſo expreſſes it, in his mellifluence) Mutuâ, interminabili, inexplicabili generatione, By a mutuall and reciprocall, by an undeterminable and unexpreſſible generation of one another, Deſiderium generat ſatietatem, & ſatietas parit deſiderium, The deſire of ſpirituall graces begets a ſatiety, if I would be, I am full of them, And then this ſatiety begets a farther deſire, ſtill we have a new appetite to thoſe ſpirituall graces: This is a holy ambition, a ſacred covetouſneſſe, and a wholſome Dropſie. Napthalies bleſſing, O Napthali ſatisfied with Deut. 33. 23. favor,

A favour, and full with the bleſsing of the Lord; S. Stephens bleſſing, Full of faith and of the Holy Ghoſt; The bleſſed Virgins bleſſing, Full of Grace; Dorcas bleſſing, Full of good works, and of Almes-deeds; The bleſſing of him, who is bleſſed above all, and who bleſſeth all, Chriſt Jeſus, [a] Full of wiſedome, [b] Full of the Holy Ghoſt, [c] Full of grace and truth. But ſo far are all temporall things from giving this fulneſſe or ſatisfaction, as that even in ſpirituall things, there may be, there is often an error, or miſtaking.

Even in ſpirituall things, there may be a fulneſſe, and no ſatisfaction, And there may be a ſatisfaction, and no fulneſſe; I may have as much knowledge, as is preſently neceſſary for my ſalvation, and yet have a reſtleſſe and unſatisfied deſire, to ſearch into unprofitable curioſities, unrevealed myſteries, and inextricable perplexities: And, on the other ſide, a man may be ſatisfied, and thinke he knowes all, when, God knowes, he knowes nothing at all; for, I know nothing, if I know not Chriſt crucified, And I know not that,
B if I know not how to apply him to my ſelfe, Nor doe I know that, if I embrace him not in thoſe meanes, which he hath afforded me in his Church, in his Word, and Sacraments; If I neglect this meanes, this place, theſe exerciſes, howſoever I may ſatisfie my ſelfe, with an over-valuing mine own knowledge at home, I am ſo far from fulneſſe, as that vanity it ſelfe is not more empty. In the Wilderneſſe, every man had one and the ſame meaſure of Manna; The ſame Gomer went through all; for Manna was a Meat, that would melt in their mouths, and of eaſie digeſtion. But then for their Quailes, birds of a higher flight, meat of a ſtronger digeſtion, it is not ſaid, that every man had an equall number: ſome might have more, ſome leſſe, and yet all their fulneſſe. Catechiſticall divinity, and inſtructions in fundamentall things, is our Manna; Every man is bound to take in his Gomer, his explicite knowledge of Articles abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation; The ſimpleſt man, as well as the greateſt Doctor, is bound to know, that there
C is one God in three perſons, That the ſecond of thoſe, the Sonne of God, tooke our nature, and dyed for mankinde; And that there is a Holy Ghoſt, which in the Communion of Saints, the Church eſtabliſhed by Chriſt, applies to every particular ſoule the benefit of Chriſts univerſall redemption. But then for our Quails, birds of higher pitch, meat of a ſtronger digeſtion, which is the knowledge how to rectifie every ſtraying conſcience, how to extricate every entangled, and ſcrupulous, and perplexed ſoule, in all emergent doubts, how to defend our Church, and our Religion, from all the mines, and all the batteries of our Adverſaries, and to deliver her from all imputations of Hereſie, and Schiſme, which they impute to us, this knowledge is not equally neceſſary in all; In many caſes a Maſter of ſervants, and a Father of children is bound to know more, then thoſe children and ſervants, and the Paſtor of the pariſh more then pariſhioners: They may have their fulneſſe, though he have more, but he hath not his, except he be able to D give them ſatisfaction.

This fulneſſe then is not an equality in the meaſure; our fulneſſe in heaven ſhall not be ſo; Abraham dyed, ſayes the text, Plenus dierum, full of yeares; It is not ſaid ſo in the text of Methuſalem, that he dyed full of yeares, and yet he had another manner of Gomer, another meaſure of life then Abraham, for he lived almoſt eight hundred yeares more then he; But he that is beſt diſpoſed to die, is fulleſt of yeares; One man may be fuller at twenty, then another at ſeaventy. David lived not the tithe of Methuſalems yeares, not ten to his hundred, he lived leſſe then Abraham, and yet David is ſaid to have dyed Plenus dierum, full of yeares; he had made himſelfe agreeable to God, and ſo was ripe for him. So David is ſaid there to have dyed full of honor; God knowes David had caſt ſhrowd aſperſions upon his own, and others honor; but, as God ſayes of Iſrael, Becauſe I loved thee, thou waſt honorable in my ſight; ſo becauſe God loved David, and he perſevered in that love to the end, he dyed full of honor. So alſo it is ſaid of David, that he dyed full of Riches; for, though they were very great additions, which Solomon made, yet becauſe David intended that which he left, for Gods ſervice, and for pious uſes, he dyed full of Riches; fulneſſe of riches is in the good purpoſe, and the good employment, not in the poſſeſſion. In a word, the fulneſſe that is inquired after, and required by this prayer, carry it upon temporall, carry it upon ſpirituall things, is ſuch a proportion of either, as is fit for that calling, in which God hath put us; And then, the ſatisfaction in this fulneſſe is not to hunt and pant after more worldly poſſeſſions, by undue meanes, or by macerating labour, as though we could not be good, or could doe no good in the world, except all the goods of the world paſſed our hands, nor to hunt and pant after the know-

Act. 6. 5.
Act. 9. 37.
a Luk. 2. 4.
b Luk. 4. 1.
c Joh. 1. 14.
Gen. 25. 8.
1 Chro. 29. 28.

ledge of ſuch things, as God by his Scriptures hath not revealed to his Church, nor to wrangle contentiouſly and uncharitably about ſuch points, as doe rather ſhake others conſciences, then eſtabliſh our own, as though we could not poſſibly come to heaven, except we knew what God meant to doe with us, before he meant to make us. S. Paul Coloſ. 4. 12. expreſſes fully what this fulneſſe is, and ſatisfies us in this ſatisfaction, Vt ſitis pleni in omni voluntate Dei, That yee may be filled according to the will of God: What is the will of God? How ſhall I know the will of God upon me? God hath manifeſted his will in my Calling; and a proportion, competent to this Calling, is my fulneſſe, and ſhould be my Gen. 8. 21. ſatisfaction, that ſo God may have Odorem quietis, (as it is ſaid in Noahs ſacrifice, after he came out of the Arke, that God ſmelt a ſavour of reſt) a ſacrifice, in which he might reſt himſelfe; for God hath a Sabbath in the Sabbaths of his ſervants, a fulneſſe in their fulneſſe, a ſatisfaction when they are ſatisfied, and is well pleaſed when they are ſo.

Nos. So then this Prayer is for fulneſſe, and fulneſſe is a competency in our calling, And a prayer for ſatisfaction, and ſatisfaction is a contentment in that competency; And then this prayer is not onely a prayer of appropriation to our ſelves, but of a charitable extention to others too, Satura nos, Satisfie us, All us, all thy Church. Charity begins in our ſelves, but it does not end there, but dilates it ſelfe to others; The Saints in heaven are full, as full as they can hold, and yet they pray; Though they want nothing, they pray that God would powre down upon us graces neceſſary for our peregrination here, as he hath done upon them, in their ſtation there. We are full; full of the Goſpel; preſent peace and plenty in the preaching thereof, and faire apparances of a perpetuall ſucceſſion; we are full, and yet we pray; we pray that God would continue the Goſpel where it is, reſtore the Goſpel where it was, and transfer the Goſpel where it hath not yet been preached. Charity deſires not her own, ſayes the Apoſtle; but much leſſe doth charity deſire no more then her own, ſo as not to deſire the good of others too. True love and charity is to doe the moſt that we can, all that we can for the good of others; So God himſelfe proceeds, when he ſayes, What could I doe, that I have not done? And ſo he ſeems to have begun at firſt; when God beſtowed upon man, his firſt and greateſt benefit, his making, it is expreſſed ſo, Faciamus hominem, Let us, All us, make man; God ſeems to ſummon himſelfe, to aſſemble himſelfe, to muſter himſelfe, all himſelfe, all the perſons of the Trinity, to doe what he could in the favour of man. So alſo when he is drawne to a neceſſity of executing judgement, and for his own honor, and conſolidation of his ſervants, puts himſelfe upon a revenge, he proceeds ſo too; when man had rebelled, and began to fortifie in Babel, then God ſayes, Venite, Let us, All us come together, Gen. 11. 7. And Deſcendamus, & confundamus, Let us, all us, goe down, and confound their language, and their machinations, and fortifications. God does not give patterns, God does not accept from us acts of half-devotion, and half-charities; God does all that he can for us; And therefore when we ſee others in diſtreſſe, whether nationall, or perſonall calamities, whether Princes be diſpoſſeſt of their naturall patrimony, and inheritance, or private perſons afflicted with ſickneſſe, or penury, or baniſhment, let us goe Gods way, all the way; Firſt, Faciamus hominem ad imaginem noſtram, Let us make that Man according unto our image, let us conſider our ſelves in him, and make our caſe his, and remember how lately he was as well as we, and how ſoone we may be as ill as he, and then Deſcendamus & confundamus, Let us, us, with all the power we have, remove or ſlacken thoſe calamities that lie upon them.

This onely is charity, to doe all, all that we can. And ſomething there is which every man may doe; There are Armies, in the levying whereof, every man is an abſolute Prince, and needs no Commiſſion, there are Forces, in which every man is his owne Muſter-maſter, The force which we ſpoke of before, out of Tertullian, the force of prayer; In publique actions, we obey God, when we obey them to whom God hath committed the publique; In thoſe things which are in our own power, the ſubſidies and contributions of prayer, God looks that we ſhould ſecond his Faciamus, with our Dicamus, That ſince he muſt doe all, we would pray him that he would doe it, And his Deſcendamus, with our Aſcendamus, That if we would have him come down, and fight our battayls, or remove our calamities, we ſhould firſt goe up to him, in humble and fervent prayer, That he would continue the Goſpel where it is, and reſtore it where it was, and transfer it where it was never as yet heard; Charity is to doe all to all; and the pooreſt of us all can doe this to any.

I may

A I may then, I muſt pray for this fulneſſe, (and fulneſſe is ſufficiency) And for this ſatisfaction, (and ſatisfaction is contentment) And that God would extend this, and other his bleſſings, upon others too, And if God doe leave us in an Egypt, in a Babylon, without reliefe, for ſometime I may proceed to this holy importunity, which David intimates here, Satura nos mane, O Lord, make haſte to helpe us, Satisfie us early with thy mercy, and God will doe ſo. Weeping may endure for a night, ſayes David. David does not ſay, It muſt indure for a night, that God will by no meanes ſhorten the time; perchance God will wipe all teares from thine eyes, at midnight, if thou pray; Try him that way then. If he doe not, If weeping doe indure for a night, all night, yet joy commeth in the morning, ſaith David; And then he doth not ſay, Joy may come in the morning, but it commeth certainly, infallibly it comes, and comes in the morning. God is an early riſer; In the Morning-watch, God looked upon the hoſt of the Egyptians. Hee looked upon their B counſels to ſee what they would doe, and upon their forces to ſee what they could doe. He is not early up, and never the neater; His going forth is prepared as the Morning, (there is his generall Providence, in which he viſits every creature) And hee ſhall come to us, in the former, and latter raine upon the earth; Hee makes haſte to us in the former, and ſeconds his former mercies to us, in more mercies. And as he makes haſt to refreſh his ſervants, ſo goes he the ſame pace, to the ruine of his enemies, In matutino interficiam, I will early deſtroy all the wicked of the land: It is not a weakning of them, It is a deſtruction; It is not of a ſquadron or regiment, It is all; It is not onely upon the Land, but the wicked of any Land, he will deſtroy upon the Sea too. This is his promiſe, this is his practiſe, this is his pace. Thus he did in Sennacheribs Army, When they aroſe early in the Morning, behold they were all dead carcaſſes; They roſe early that ſaw it, but God had been up earlier, that had done it. And that ſtory, God ſeemes to have had care to have recorded almoſt in C all the diviſions of the Bible, for it is in the Hiſtoricall part, and it is in the Propheticall part too; and becauſe God foreſaw, that mens curioſities would carry them upon Apocryphal Books alſo, it is repeated almoſt in every Book of that kinde, in Eccleſiaſticus, in Tobit, in the Maccabees in both Books, That every where our eye might light upon that, and every ſoule might make that Syllogiſme, and produce that concluſion to it ſelfe, If God bee thus forward, thus early in the wayes of Judgement, much more is he ſo in the wayes of mercy; with that he will ſatisfie us Mane, early, and as Tremellius reads this very Text, unoquoque mane, betimes in the morning, and every morning.

Now if we looke for this early mercy from God, we muſt riſe betimes too, and meet God early. God hath promiſed to give Matutinam ſtellam, the Morning-ſtar; but they muſt be up betimes in the morning, that will take the Morning-ſtar. He himſelfe who is it, hath told us who is this Morning ſtar; I Jeſus am the bright and Morning ſtarre. God D will give us Jeſus; Him, and all his, all his teares, all his blood, all his merits; But to whom, and upon what conditions? That is expreſſed there, Vincenti dabo, To him that overcommeth I will give the Morning-ſtar. Our life is a warfare, our whole life; It is not onely with luſts in our youth, and ambitions in our middle yeares, and indevotions in our age, but with agonies in our body, and tentations in our ſpirit upon our death-bed, that we are to fight; and he cannot be ſaid to overcome, that fights not out the whole battell. If he enter not the field in the morning, that is, apply not himſelfe to Gods ſervice in his youth, If hee continue not to the Evening, If hee faint in the way, and grow remiſſe in Gods ſervice, for collaterall reſpects, God will overcome his cauſe, and his glory ſhall ſtand faſt, but that man can ſcarce be ſaid to have overcome.

It is the counſell of the Wiſe man, Prevent the Sunne to give thanks to God, and at the day-ſpring pray unto him. You ſee ſtill, how theſe two duties are marſhalled, and diſpoſed; Firſt Praiſe, and then Prayer, but both early: And it is placed in the Lamentations, as though it were a lamentable negligence to have omitted it, It is good for a man, that he beare his yoake in his youth. Riſe as early as you can, you cannot be up before God; no, nor before God raiſe you: Howſoever you prevent this Sunne, the Sunne of the Firmament, yet the Sonne of Heaven hath prevented you, for without his preventing Grace you could not ſtirre. Have any of you ſlept out their Morning, reſiſted his private motions to private Prayer at home, neglected his callings ſo? Though a man doe ſleepe out his forenoone, the Sunne goes on his courſe, and comes to his Meridionall ſplendor, though that man have not looked towards it. That Sonne which hath riſen to you at home, in thoſe private motions, hath gone on his courſe, and hath ſhined out here, in this houſe

Mane.

Pſal. 30. 5.

Exod. 14. 24.

Hoſ. 6. 3.

Pſal. 101. 8.

2 King. 19. 35.

Revel. 2. 28.

Revel. 22. 16.

Wiſd. 16. 28.

Lament. 3. 27.

houſe of God, upon Wedneſday, and upon Friday, and upon every day of holy Convocation; All this, at home, and here, yee have ſlept out and neglected. Now, upon the Sabbath, and in theſe holy Exerciſes, this Sonne ſhines out as at noone, the Grace of God is in the Exaltation, exhibited in the powerfulleſt and effectualleſt way of his Ordinance, and if you will but awake now, riſe now, meet God now, now at noone, God will call even this early. Have any of you ſlept out the whole day, and are come in that drowſineſſe to your evening, to the cloſing of your eyes, to the end of your dayes? Yet riſe now, and God ſhall call even this an early riſing; If you can make ſhift to deceive your owne ſoules and ſay, We never heard God call us; If you neglected your former callings ſo, as that you have forgot that you have been called; yet, is there one amongſt you, that denies that God calls him now? If he neglect this calling now, to morrow he may forget that he was called to day, or remember it with ſuch a terror, as ſhall blow a dampe, and a conſternation upon his ſoule, and a lethargy worſe then his former ſleepe; but if he will wake now, and riſe now, though this be late in his evening, in his age, yet God ſhall call this early. Bee but able to ſay with Eſay this night, My ſoule hath deſired thee in the night, and thou maiſt be bold to ſay with David to morrow morning, Satura nos mane, Satisfie us early with thy mercy, and he ſhall doe it.

Iſai. 26. 9.

But yet no prayer of ours, howſoever made in the beſt diſpoſition, in the beſt teſtimony of a rectified conſcience, muſt limit God his time, or appoint him, in what morning, or what houre in the morning, God ſhall come to our deliverance. The Sonne of man was not the leſſe the Sonne of God, nor the leſſe a beloved Sonne, though God hid from him the knowledge of the day of the generall Judgement. Thou art not the leſſe the ſervant of God, nor the leſſe rewarded by him, though he keepe from thee the knowledge of thy deliverance from any particular calamity. All Gods deliverances are in the morning, becauſe there is a perpetuall night, and an invincible darkneſſe upon us, till he deliver us. God is the God of that Climate, where the night is ſix Moneths long, as well as of this, where it is but halfe ſo many houres. The higheſt Hill hinders not the roundneſſe of the earth, the earth is round for all that hill; The loweſt vaults, and mines hinder not the ſolidneſſe of the earth, the earth is ſolid for all that; Much leſſe hath a yeare, or ten yeares, or all our threeſcore and ten, any proportion at all to eternity; And therefore God comes early in a ſort to me, though I loſe abundance of my reward by ſo long lingring, if he come not till hee open me the gate of heaven, by the key of death. There are Indies at my right hand, in the Eaſt; but there are Indies at my left hand too, in the Weſt. There are teſtimonies of Gods love to us, in our Eaſt, in our beginnings; but if God continue tribulation upon us to our Weſt, to our ends, and give us the light of his preſence then, if he appeare to us at our tranſmigration, certainly he was favourable to us all our peregrination, and though he ſhew himſelfe late, hee was our friend early. The Prayer is, that he would come early, but it is, if it be rightly formed, upon both theſe conditions; firſt, that I riſe early to meet him, and then that I magnifie his houre as early, whenſoever he ſhall be pleaſed to come.

Tua.

All this I ſhall doe the better, if I limit my prayer, and my practiſe, with the next circumſtance in Davids prayer, Tuâ, Satisfie us early with that which is thine, Thy mercy: For there are mercies, (in a faire extent and accommodation of the word, that is Refreſhings, Eaſes, Deliverances) that are not his mercies, nor his ſatisfactions. How many men are ſatisfied with Riches (I correct my ſelfe, few are ſatisfied; but how many have enough to ſatisfie many?) and yet have never a peny of his mony? Nothing is his, that comes not from him, that comes not by good meanes. How many are there, that are eaſie to admit ſcruples, and jealouſies, and ſuſpitions in matter of Religion: Eaſie to think, that that Religion, and that Church, in which they have lived ill, cannot bee a good Religion, nor a true Church; In a troubled, and diſtempered conſcience, they grow eaſie to admit ſcruples, and then as over-eaſie to admit falſe ſatisfactions, with a word whiſpered on one ſide in a Conventicle, or a word whiſpered on the other ſide in a Confeſſion, and yet have never a dram of ſatisfaction from his word, whoſe word is preached upon the houſe top, and avowed, and not in corners? How many men are anguiſhed with torturing Diſeaſes, racked with the conſcience of ill-ſpent eſtates, oppreſſed with inordinate melancholies, and irreligious dejections of ſpirit, and then repaire, and ſatisfie themſelves with wine, with women, with fooles, with comedies, with mirth, and muſique, and with all Iobs miſerable comforters, and all this while have no beames of his ſatisfaction,

A satisfaction, it is not Misericordia ejus, his mercy, his satisfaction? In losses of worldly goods, in sicknesses of children, or servants, or cattell, to receive light or ease from Witches, this is not his mercy. It is not his mercy, except we goe by good wayes to good ends; except our safety be established by allyance with his friends, except our peace may bee had with the perfect continuance of our Religion, there is no safety, there is no peace. But let mee feele the effect of this Prayer, as it is a Prayer of manifestation, Let mee discerne that, that that is done upon mee, is done by the hand of God, and I care not what it be: I had rather have Gods Vinegar, then mans Oyle, Gods Wormewood, then mans Manna, Gods Justice, then any mans Mercy; for, therefore did Gregory Nyssen call S. Basil in a holy sense, Ambidextrum, becaule he tooke every thing that came, by the right handle, and with the right hand, becaule he saw it to come from God. Even afflictions are welcome, when we see them to be his: Though the way
B that he would chuse, and the way that this Prayer intreats, be only mercy, Satisfie us early with thy mercy.

That rod and that staffe with which we are at any time corrected, is his. So God cals the Assyrians, The rod of his anger, and he sayes, That the staffe that is in their hand, is his Indignation. He comes to a sharper execution, from the rod, and the staffe to the sword, and that also is his, It is my sword, that is put into the hands of the King of Babylon, and he shall stretch out my sword upon the whole land; God will beat downe, and cut off, and blow up, and blow out at his pleasure; which is expressed in a phrase very remarkeable by David, He bringeth the winde out of his Treasuries; And then follow in that place, all the Plagues of Egypt: storms and tempests, ruines and devastations, are not onely in Gods Armories, but they are in his Treasuries; as hee is the Lord of Hosts, hee fetches his judgements from his Armories, and casts confusion upon his enemies, but as he is the
C God of mercy, and of plentifull redemption, he fetches these judgements, these corrections out of his treasuries, and they are the Money, the Jewels, by which he redeemes and buyes us againe; God does nothing, God can doe nothing, no not in the way of ruine and destruction, but there is mercy in it; he cannot open a doore in his Armory, but a window into his Treasury opens too, and he must looke into that.

Misericordia Esay 10.5. Ezek.30.24. Psal.135.7.

But then Gods corrections are his Acts, as the Physitian is his Creature, God created him for necessity. When God made man, his first intention was not that man should fall, and so need a Messias, nor that man should fall sick, and so need a Physitian, nor that man should fall into rebellion by sin, and so need his rod, his staffe, his scourge of afflictions, to whip him into the way againe. But yet sayes the Wiseman, Honour the Physitian for the use you may have of him; slight him not, because thou hast no need of him yet. So Eccles. 38.1.
D though Gods corrections were not from a primary, but a secondary intention, yet, when you see those corrections fall upon another, give a good interpretation of them, and beleeve Gods purpose to be not to destroy, but to recover that man: Do not thou make Gods Rheubarbe thy Ratsbane, and poyson thine owne soule with an uncharitable misinterpretation of that correction, which God hath sent to cure his. And then, in thine owne afflictions, flie evermore to this Prayer, Satisfie us with thy mercy; first, Satisfie us, make it appeare to us that thine intention is mercy, though thou enwrap it in temporall afflictions, in this darke cloud let us discerne thy Son, and though in an act of displeasure, see that thou art well pleased with us; Satisfie us, that there is mercy in thy judgements, and then satisfie us, that thy mercy is mercy; for such is the stupidity of sinfull man, That as in temporall blessings, we discerne them best by wanting them, so do we the mercies of God too; we call it not a mercy, to have the same blessings still: but, as every man conceives a greater degree of joy, in recovering from a sickneſſe, then in his former E established health; so without doubt, our Ancestors who indured many yeares Civill and forraine wars, were more affected with their first peace, then we are with our continuall enjoying thereof, And our Fathers more thankfull, for the beginning of Reformation of Religion, then we for so long enjoying the continuance thereof. Satisfie us with thy mercie, Let us still be able to see mercy in thy judgements, lest they deject us, and confound us; Satisfie us with thy mercie, let us be able to see, that our deliverance is a mercy, and not a naturall thing that might have hapned so, or a necessary thing that must have happened so, though there had beene no God in Heaven, nor providence upon earth. But especially since the way that thou chooseſt, is to goe all by mercy, and not to be put to this way of correction, so dispose, so compose our minds, and so transpose all our affections,

ons, that we may live upon thy food, and not put thee to thy phyſick, that we may embrace thee in the light, and not be put to ſeeke thee in the darke, that wee come to thee in thy Mercy, and not be whipped to thee by thy Corrections. And ſo we have done alſo with our ſecond Part, The pieces and petitions that conſtitute this Prayer, as it is a Prayer for Fulneſſe and Satisfaction, a Prayer of Extent and Dilatation, a Prayer of Diſpatch and Expedition, and then a Prayer of Evidence and Declaration, and laſtly, a Prayer of Limitation even upon God himſelfe, Satisfie, and ſatisfie us, and us early, with that which we may diſcerne to be thine, and let that way be mercy. A

3 Part. Gaudium. There remaines yet a third Part, what this Prayer produces, and it is joy, and continual joy, That we may rejoyce and be glad all our dayes. The words are the Parts, and we invert not, we trouble not the Order; the Holy Ghoſt hath laid them fitlieſt for our uſe, in the Text it ſelfe, and ſo we take them. Firſt then, the gaine is joy. Joy is Gods owne Seale, and his keeper is the Holy Ghoſt; wee have many ſudden ejaculations in the forme of Prayer, ſometimes inconſiderately made, and they vaniſh ſo; but if I can reflect upon my prayer, ruminate, and returne againe with joy to the ſame prayer, I have Gods Seale upon it. And therefore it is not ſo very an idle thing, as ſome have miſ-imagined it, to repeat often the ſame prayer in the ſame words; Our Saviour did ſo; he prayed a third time, and in the ſame words; This reflecting upon a former prayer, is that that ſets to this Seale, this joy, and if I have joy in my prayer, it is granted ſo far as concernes my good, and Gods glory. It hath beene diſputed by many, both of the Gentiles, with whom the Fathers diſputed, and of the Schoolemen, who diſpute with one another, An ſit gaudium in Deo, de ſemet, Whether God rejoyce in himſelfe, in contemplation of himſelfe, whether God be glad that he is God: But it is diſputed by them, onely to eſtabliſh it, and to illuſtrate it, for I doe not remember that any one of them denyes it. It is true, that Plato diſlikes, and juſtly, that ſalutation of Dionyſius the Tyran to God, Gaude, & ſervato vitam Tyranni jucundam; that he ſhould ſay to God, Live merrily, as merrily as a King, as merrily as I doe, and then you are God enough; to imagine ſuch a joy in God, as is onely a tranſitory delight in deceivable things, is an impious conceit. But when, as another Platonique ſayes, Deus eſt quod ipſe ſemper voluit, God is that which hee would be, If there be ſomething that God would be, and he be that, If Plato ſhould deny, that God joyed in himſelfe, we muſt ſay of Plato as Lactantius does, Deum potius ſomniaverat, quàm cognoverat, Plato had rather dreamed that there was a God, then underſtood what that God was. Bonum ſimplex, ſayes S. Auguſtine, To be ſincere Goodneſſe, Goodneſſe it ſelfe, Ipſa eſt delectatio Dei, This is the joy that God hath in himſelfe, of himſelfe; And therefore ſayes Philo Iudæus, Hoc neceſſarium Philoſophiæ ſodalibus, This is the tenent of all Philoſophers, (And by that title of Philoſophers, Philo alwaies meanes them that know and ſtudy God) Solum Deum verè feſtum agere, That only God can be truly ſaid to keepe holy day, and to rejoyce. B C D

Plotinus.

This joy we ſhall ſee, when we ſee him, who is ſo in it, as that he is this joy it ſelfe. But here in this world, ſo far as I can enter into my Maſters ſight, I can enter into my Maſters joy. I can ſee God in his Creatures, in his Church, in his Word and Sacraments, and Ordinances; Since I am not without this ſight, I am not without this joy. Here a man may Tranſilire mortalitatem, ſayes that Divine Morall man; I cannot put off mortality, but I can looke upon immortality; I cannot depart from this earth, but I can looke into Heaven. So I cannot poſſeſſe that finall and accompliſhed joy here, but as my body can lay downe a burden or a heavy garment, and joy in that eaſe, ſo my ſoule can put off my body ſo far, as that the concupiſcencies thereof, and the manifold and miſerable encumbrances of this world, cannot extinguiſh this holy joy. And this inchoative joy, David derives into two branches, To rejoyce, and to be glad. E

Seneca.

Exultatio. The Holy Ghoſt is an eloquent Author, a vehement, and an abundant Author, but yet not luxuriant; he is far from a penurious, but as far from a ſuperfluous ſtyle too. And therefore we doe not take theſe two words in the Text, To rejoyce, and to be glad, to ſignifie meerely one and the ſame thing, but to be two beames, two branches, two effects, two expreſſings of this joy. We take them therefore, as they offer themſelves in their roots, and firſt naturall propriety of the words. The firſt, which we tranſlate To rejoyce, is Ranan; and Ranan denotes the externall declaration of internall joy; for the word ſignifies Cantare, To ſing, and that with an extended and loud voyce, for it is the word, which is oftneſt uſed for the muſique of the Church, and the ſinging of Pſalmes; which was ſuch

A such a declaration of their zealous alacrity in the primitive Church, as that, when to avoyd discovery in the times of persecution, they were forced to make their meetings in the night, they were also forced to put out their Candles, because by that light in the windowes they were discovered; After that this meeting in the darke occasioned a scandall and ill report upon those Christians, that their meetings were not upon so holy purposes, as they pretended, they discontinued their vigils, and night-meetings, yet their singing of Psalmes, when they did meet, they never discontinued, though that, many times, exposed them to dangers, and to death it selfe, as some of the Authors of the secular story of the Romans have observed and testified unto us. And some ancient Decrees and Constitutions we have, in which such are forbidden to be made Priests, as were not perfect in the Psalmes. And though S. Hierome tell us this, with some admiration, and note of singularity, That Paula could say the whole book of Psalmes without
B booke, in Hebrew; yet he presents it as a thing well known to be their ordinary practise; In villula Christi Bethlem, extra psalmos silentium est, In the village where I dwell, sayes he, where Christ was borne, in Bethlem, if you cannot sing Psalmes, you must be silent, here you shall heare nothing but Psalmes; for, (as he pursues it) Arator stivam tenens, The husbandman that follows the plough, he that sowes, that reapes, that carries home, all begin and proceed in all their labours with singing of Psalmes. Therefore he calls them there, Cantiones amatorias, Those that make or entertaine love, that seeke in the holy and honorable way of marriage, to make themselves acceptable and agreeable to one another, by no other good parts, nor conversation, but by singing of Psalmes. So he calls them, Pastorum sibilum, and Arma culturæ, Our shepheards, sayes S. Hierome, here, have no other Eclogues, no other Pastoralls; Our labourers, our children, our servants no other songs, nor Ballads, to recreate themselves withall, then the Psalmes.

C And this universall use of the Psalmes, that they served all for all, gives occasion to one Author, in the title of the Booke of Psalmes, to depart from the ordinary reading, which is, Sepher Tehillim, The booke of Praise, and to reade it, Sepher Telim, which is Acervorum, The booke of Heapes, where all assistances to our salvation are heaped and treasured up. And our Countryman Bede found another Title, in some Copies of this booke, Liber Soliloquiorum de Christo, The Booke of Meditations upon Christ; Because this booke is (as Gregory Nyssen calls it) Clavis David, that key of David, which lets us in to all the mysteries of our Religion; which gave the ground to that which S. Basil sayes, that if all the other Books of Scripture could be lost, he would aske no more then the Booke of Psalmes, to catechize children, to edifie Congregations, to convert Gentils, and to convince Heretiques.

But we are launched into too large a Sea, the consideration of this Booke of Psalmes.
D I meane but this, in this, That if we take that way with God, The way of prayer, prayer so elementted and constituted, as we have said, that consists rather of praise and thankesgiving, then supplication for future benefits, God shall infuse into us, a zeale of expressing our consolation in him, by outward actions, to the establishing of others; we shall not disavow, nor grow slacke in our Religion, nor in any parts thereof; God shall neither take from us, The Candle and the Candlestick, The truth of the Gospel, which is the light, And the cheerfull, and authorized, and countenanced, and rewarded Preaching of the Gospel, which is the Candlestick that exalts the light; nor take from us our zeale to this outward service of God, that we come to an indifferency, whether the service of God be private or publique, fordid or glorious, allowed and suffered, by way of connivency, or commanded and enjoyned by way of authority. God shall give us this Ranan, this rejoycing, this externall joy, we shall have the publique preaching of the Gospel con-E tinued to us, and we shall shew that we rejoyce in it, by frequenting it, and by instituting our lives according unto it.

But yet this Ranan, this Rejoycing, this outward expressing of our inward zeale, may admit interruptions, receive interceptions, intermissions, and discontinuances; for, without doubt, in many places there live many persons, well affected to the truth of Religion, that dare not avow it, expresse it, declare it, especially where that fearfull Vulture, the Inquisition, hovers over them. And therefore the Holy Ghost hath added here another degree of joy, which no law, no severe execution of law, can take from us, in another word of lesse extent, Shamach, which is an inward joy, onely in the heart, which we translate here, to be Glad. How far we are bound to proceed in outward declarations of Religion,

Delectabimur.

Dan. 6. 10.

on, requires a ſerious and various conſideration of Circumſtances. You know how far Daniel proceeded; The Lords had extorted a Proclamation from the King, That no man ſhould pray to any other God, then the King, for certaine dayes; Daniel would not onely not be bound by this Proclamation, and ſo continue his ſet and ſtationary houres of private prayer in his chamber, but he would declare it to all the world; He would ſet open his chamber windows, that he might be ſeen to pray; for, though ſome determine that act of Daniel, in ſetting open his windows at prayer, in this, That becauſe the Jewes were bound by their law, whereſoever they were, in war, in captivity, upon the way, or in their ſick beds, to turne towards Jeruſalem, and ſo towards the Temple, whenſoever they prayed, according to that ſtipulation, which had paſſed between God and Solomon, at the Dedication of the Temple, When thy ſervants pray towards this houſe, heare them in it; Therefore as Hezekias, in his ſicke bed, when he turned towards the wall to pray, is juſtly thought, to have done ſo, therefore that he might pray towards the Temple, which ſtood that way; ſo Daniel is thought to have opened his windows to that purpoſe too, that he might have the more free proſpect towards Jeruſalem from Babylon; though ſome, I ſay, determine Daniels act in that, yet it is by more, and more uſefully extended, to an expreſſing of ſuch a zeale, as, in ſo apparant a diſhonor to his God, could not be ſuffocated nor extinguiſhed with a Proclamation. A B

In which act of his, which was a direct and evident oppoſing and affronting of the State, though I dare not joyne with them, who abſolutely and peremptorily condemne this act of Daniel, becauſe Gods ſubſequent act in a miraculous deliverance of Daniel ſeems to imply ſome former particular revelation from God to Daniel, that he ſhould proceed in that confident manner, yet dare I much leſſe draw this act of Daniels into conſequence, and propoſe it for an Example and precedent to private men, leaſt of all, to animate ſeditious men, who upon pretence of a neceſſity, that God muſt be ſerved in this, and this, and no other manner, provoke and exaſperate the Magiſtrate with their ſchiſmaticall conventicles and ſeparations. But howſoever that may ſtand, and howſoever there may be Circumſtances which may prevaile either upon humane infirmity, or upon a rectified Conſcience, or howſoever God in his Judgements, may caſt a cloud upon his own Sunne, and darken the glory of the Goſpel, in ſome place, for ſome time, yet, though we loſe our Ranan, our publique Rejoycing, we ſhall never loſe our Shamach, our inward gladneſſe, that God is our God, and we his ſervants for all this. God will never leave his ſervants without this internall joy, which ſhall preſerve them from ſuſpicions of Gods power, that he cannot maintaine, or not reſtore his cauſe, and from jealouſies, that he hath abandoned or deſerted them in particular. God ſhall never give them over to an indifferency, nor to a ſtupidity, nor to an abſence of tenderneſſe, and holy affections, that it ſhall become all one to them, how Gods cauſe proſpers, or ſuffers. But if I continue that way, prayer, and prayer ſo qualified, if I loſe my Ranan, my outward declarations of Rejoycing; If I be tyed to a death-bed in a Conſumption, and cannot rejoyce in comming to theſe publique Congregations, to participate of their prayers, and to impart to them my Meditations; If I be ruined in my fortune, and cannot rejoyce in an open diſtribution to the reliefe of the poore, and a preaching to others, in that way, by example of doing good works; If at my laſt minute, I be not able to edifie my friends, nor Catechize my children, with any thing that I can doe or ſay; if I be not able ſo much, as with hand or eye to make a ſigne, though I have loſt my Ranan, all the Eloquence of outward declaration, yet God ſhall never take from me, my Shamach, my internall gladneſſe and conſolation, in his undeceivable and undeceiving Spirit, that he is mine, and I am his; And this joy, this gladneſſe, in my way, and in my end, ſhall eſtabliſh me; for that is that which is intended in the next, and laſt word, Omnibus diebus, we ſhall Rejoyce and be Glad all our dayes. C D E

Omnibus diebus.

Nothing but this teſtimony, That the Spirit beares witneſſe with my ſpirit, that upon thy prayer, ſo conditioned, of praiſe, and prayer, I ſhall ſtill prevaile with God, could imprint in me, this joy, all my dayes. The ſeales of his favour, in outward bleſſings, fayle me in the dayes of ſhipwracke, in the dayes of fire, in the dayes of diſplacing my potent friends, or rayſing mine adverſaries; In ſuch dayes I cannot rejoyce, and be glad. The ſeales of his favour, in inward bleſſings, and holy cheerfulneſſe, fayle me in a preſent remorſe after a ſinne newly committed. But yet in the ſtrength of a Chriſtian hope, as I can pronounce out of the grounds of Nature, in an Eclipſe of the Sunne, that the

A the Sunne ſhall returne to his ſplendor againe, I can pronounce out of the grounds of Gods Word, (and Gods Word is much better aſſurance, then the grounds of Nature, for God can and does ſhake the grounds of Nature by Miracles, but no Jod of his Word ſhall ever periſh) that I ſhall returne againe on my hearty penitence, if I delay it not, and rejoyce and be glad all my dayes, that is, what kinde of day ſoever overtake me. In the dayes of our youth, when the joyes of this world take up all the roome, there ſhall be roome for this holy Joy, that my recreations were harmeleſſe, and my converſation innocent; and certainly to be able to ſay, that in my recreations, in my converſation, I neither miniſtred occaſion of tentation to another, nor expoſed my ſelfe to tentation from another, is a faire beame of this rejoycing in the dayes of my youth. In the dayes of our Age, when we become incapable, inſenſible of the joyes of this world, yet this holy joy ſhall ſeaſon us, not with a ſinfull delight in the memory of our former ſinnes, but with
B a re-juveniſcence, a new and a freſh youth, in being come ſo neere to another, to an immortall life. In the dayes of our mirth, and of laughter, this holy joy ſhall enter; And as the Sunne may ſay to the ſtarres at Noone, How frivoulous and impertinent a thing is your light now? So this joy ſhall ſay unto laughter, Thou art mad, and unto mirth, what doſt thou? And in the mid-night of ſadneſſe, and dejection of ſpirit, this joy ſhall ſhine out, and chide away that ſadneſſe, with Davids holy charme, My ſoule, why art thou caſt downe, why art thou diſquieted within me? In thoſe dayes, which Iob ſpeaks of, Prævenerunt me dies afflictionis meæ, Miſeries are come upon me before their time; My intemperances have haſtned age, my riotouſneſſe hath haſtned poverty, my neglecting of due officiouſneſſe and reſpect towards great perſons hath haſtned contempt upon me, Afflictions which I ſuſpected not, thought not of, have prevented my feares; and then in thoſe dayes, which Iob ſpeaks of againe, Poſſident me dies afflictionis, Studied and pre-
C meditated plots and practiſes ſwallowe mee, poſſeſſe me intirely, In all theſe dayes, I ſhall not onely have a Zoar to flie to, if I can get out of Sodom, joy, if I can overcome my ſorrow; There ſhall not be a Goſhen bordering upon my Egypt, joy, if I can paſſe beyond, or beſides my ſorrow, but I ſhall have a Goſhen in my Egypt, nay my very Egypt ſhall be my Goſhen, I ſhall not onely have joy, though I have ſorrow, but therefore; my very ſorrow ſhall be the occaſion of joy; I ſhall not onely have a Sabbath after my ſix dayes labor, but Omnibus diebus, a Sabbath ſhall enlighten every day, and inanimate every minute of every day: And as my ſoule is as well in my foot, as in my hand, though all the waight and oppreſſion lie upon the foot, and all action upon the hand, ſo theſe beames of joy ſhall appeare as well in my pillar of cloud, as in theirs of fire; in my adverſity, as well as in their proſperity; And when their Sun ſhall ſet at Noone, mine ſhall riſe at mid-night; they ſhall have damps in their glory, and I joyfull exaltions in my dejections.

D And to end with the end of all, In die mortis, In the day of my death, and that which is beyond the end of all, and without end in it ſelfe, The day of Judgement, If I have the teſtimony of a rectified conſcience, that I have accuſtomed my ſelfe to that acceſſe to God, by prayer, and ſuch prayer, as though it have had a body of ſupplication, and deſire of future things, yet the ſoule and ſpirit of that prayer, that is, my principall intention in that prayer, hath been praiſe and thankſgiving. If I be involved in S. Chryſoſtoms Patent, Orantes, non natura, ſed diſpenſatione Angeli fiunt, That thoſe who pray ſo, that is, pray by way of praiſe, (which is the moſt proper office of Angels) as they ſhall be better then Angels in the next world, (for they ſhall be glorifying ſpirits, as the Angels are, but they ſhall alſo be glorified bodies, which the Angels ſhall never bee) ſo in this world they they ſhall be as Angels, becauſe they are employed in the office of Angels, to pray by way of praiſe, If, as S. Baſil reads thoſe words of that Pſalme, not ſpiritus
E meus, but reſpiratio mea laudet Dominum, Not onely my ſpirit, but my very breath, not my heart onely, but my tongue, and my hands bee accuſtomed to glorifie God, In die mortis, in the day of my death, when a miſt of ſorrow, and of ſighes ſhall fill my chamber, and a cloude exhaled and condenſed from teares, ſhall bee the curtaines of my bed, when thoſe that love me, ſhall be ſorry to ſee mee die, and the devill himſelfe that hates me, ſorry to ſee me die ſo, in the favour of God; And In die Iudicii, In the day of Judgement, when as all Time ſhall ceaſe, ſo all meaſures ſhall ceaſe; The joy, and the ſorrow that ſhall be then, ſhall be eternall, no end, and infinite, no meaſure, no limitation, when every circumſtance of ſinne ſhall aggravate the condemnation of the unrepentant ſinner, and the very ſubſtance of my ſinne ſhall bee waſhed away, in the blood of my Saviour,

Ecclef. 2. 2.

Iob 30. 27.

Verſe 16.

when I ſhall ſee them, who ſinned for my ſake, periſh eternally, becauſe they proceeded in that ſinne, and I my ſelfe, who occaſioned their ſin received into glory, becauſe God upon my prayer, and repentance had ſatisfied me early with his mercy, early, that is, before my tranſmigration, In omnibus diebus, In all theſe dayes, the dayes of youth, and the wantonneſſes of that, the dayes of age, and the taſtleſneſſe of that, the dayes of mirth, and the ſportfulneſſe of that, and of inordinate melancholy, and the diſconſolateneſſe of that, the days of ſuch miſeries, as aſtoniſh us with their ſuddenneſſe, and of ſuch as aggravate their owne waight with a heavy expectation; In the day of Death, which pieces up that circle, and in that day which enters another circle that hath no pieces, but is one equall everlaſtingneſſe, the day of Judgement, Either I ſhall rejoyce, be able to declare my faith, and zeale to the aſſiſtance of others, or at leaſt be glad in mine owne heart, in a firme hope of mine owne ſalvation. A

And therefore, beloved, as they, whom lighter affections carry to Shewes, and Masks, and Comedies; As you your ſelves, whom better diſpoſitions bring to theſe Exerciſes, conceive ſome contentment, and ſome kinde of Joy, in that you are well and commodiouſly placed, they to ſee the Shew, you to heare the Sermon, when the time comes, though your greater Joy bee reſerved to the comming of that time; So though the fulneſſe of Joy be reſerved to the laſt times in heaven, yet rejoyce and be glad that you are well and commodiouſly placed in the meane time, and that you ſit but in expectation of the fulneſſe of thoſe future Joyes: Returne to God, with a joyfull thankfulneſſe that he hath placed you in a Church, which withholds nothing from you, that is neceſſary to ſalvation, whereas in another Church they lack a great part of the Word, and halfe the Sacrament; And which obtrudes nothing to you, that is not neceſſary to ſalvation, whereas in another Church, the Additionall things exceed the Fundamentall; the Occaſionall, the Originall; the Collaterall, the Direct; And the Traditions of men, the Commandements of God. Maintaine and hold up this holy alacrity, this religious cheerfulneſſe; For inordinate ſadneſſe is a great degree and evidence of unthankfulneſſe, and the departing from Joy in this world, is a departing with one piece of our Evidence, for the Joyes of the world to come. B C

SERM. LXXX.

Preached at the funerals of Sir William Cokayne Knight, Alderman of London, December 12. 1626. D

JOH. 11. 21.

Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died.

GOd made the firſt Marriage, and man made the firſt Divorce; God married the Body and Soule in the Creation, and man divorced the Body and Soule by death through ſinne, in his fall. God doth not admit, not juſtifie, not authorize ſuch Super-inductions upon ſuch Divorces, as ſome have imagined; That the ſoule departing from one body, ſhould become the ſoule of another body, in a perpetuall revolution and tranſmigration of ſoules through bodies, which hath been the giddineſſe of ſome Philoſophers to think; Or that the body of the dead ſhould become the body of an evill ſpirit, that that ſpirit might at his will, and to his purpoſes informe, and inanimate that dead body; God allowes no ſuch Super-inductions, no ſuch ſecond Marriages upon ſuch divorces by death, no ſuch diſpoſition of ſoule or body, after their diſſolution by death. But becauſe God hath made the band of Marriage indiſſoluble but by death, farther then man can die, this divorce cannot fall upon man; As farre as man is immortall, man is a married man ſtill, ſtill in poſſeſſion of a ſoule, and a body too; And man is for ever immortall in both; Immortall in his ſoule E by

A by Preſervation, and immortall in his body by Reparation in the Reſurrection. For, though they be ſeparated à Thoro & Menſa, from Bed and Board, they are not divorced; Though the ſoule be at the Table of the Lambe, in Glory, and the body but at the table of the Serpent, in duſt; Though the ſoule be in lecto floridо, in that bed which is alwayes Cant. 1. 16. green, in an everlaſting ſpring, in Abrahams Boſome; And the body but in that green-bed, whoſe covering is but a yard and a halfe of Turfe, and a Rugge of graſſe, and the ſheet but a winding ſheet, yet they are not divorced; they ſhall returne to one another againe, in an inſeparable re-union in the Reſurrection. To eſtabliſh this aſſurance of a Reſurrection in us, God does ſometimes in this life, that which he hath promiſed for the next; that is, he gives a Reſurrection to life, after a bodily death here. God hath made two Teſtaments, two Wills; And in both, he hath declared his Power, and his Will, to give this new life after death, in this world. To the Widows ſonne of Zarephtha, 1 King. 17.
B he bequeaths new life; and to the Shunamites ſonne, he gives the ſame legacy, in the 2 King. 4.
Old Teſtament. In the New Teſtament, to the widow of Naims ſonne, he bequeaths Luk. 7. 8.
new life; And to Iairus daughter he gives the ſame legacy: And out of the ſurpluſage of his inexhauſtible eſtate, out of the overflowing of his Power, he enables his Executors to doe as he did; for Peter gives Dorcas this Reſurrection too. Divers examples hath he Act. 9. 40.
given us, of the Reſurrection of every particular man, in particular Reſurrections; ſuch as we have named; And one of the generall Reſurrection, in the Reſurrection of Chriſt himſelfe; for, in him, we all roſe; for, he was All in All; Con-vivificavit, ſayes the A- Epheſ. 2. 5.
poſtle; and Conſidere nos fecit, God hath quickned us, (all us; not onely S. Paul, and his Epheſians, but all) and God hath raiſed us, and God hath made us to ſit together in heavenly places, in Chriſt Ieſus. They that are not faln yet by any actuall ſinne, (children newly baptized) are riſen already in him; And they that are not dead yet, nay, not alive yet,
C not yet borne, have a Reſurrection in him, who was not onely the Lambe ſlaine from the beginning, but from before all beginnings was riſen too; and all that ſhall ever have part in the ſecond Reſurrection, are riſen with him from that time. Now, next to that great Propheticall action, that type of the generall Reſurrection, in the Reſurrection of Chriſt, the moſt illuſtrious Evidence, of the Reſurrection of particular men, is this Reſuſcitation of Lazarus; whoſe ſiſter Martha, directed by faith, and yet tranſported by paſſion, ſeeks to entender and mollifie, and ſupple him to impreſſions of mercy and compaſſion, who was himſelfe the Mold, in which all mercy was caſt, nay, the ſubſtance, of which all mercy does conſiſt, Chriſt Jeſus, with this imperfect piece of Devotion, which hath a tincture of Faith, but is deeper dyed in Paſſion, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not dyed.

This Text which you Heare, Martha's ſingle words, complicated with this Text Diviſio.
D which you See, The dead body of this our Brother, makes up between them this body of Inſtruction for the ſoule; firſt, That there is nothing in this world perfect; And then, That ſuch as it is, there is nothing conſtant, nothing permanent. We conſider the firſt, That there is nothing perfect, in the beſt things, in ſpirituall things; Even Martha's devotion and faith hath imperfections in it; And we conſider the other, That nothing is permanent in temporall things; Riches proſperouſly multiplied, Children honorably beſtowed, Additions of Honor and Titles, fairly acquired, Places of Command and Government, juſtly received, and duly executed; All teſtimonies, all evidences of worldly happineſſe, have a Diſſolution, a Determination in the death of this, and of every ſuch Man: There is nothing, no ſpirituall thing, perfect in this world; Nothing, no temporall thing, permanent and durable; And theſe two Conſiderations ſhall be our two parts; And then, theſe the branches from theſe two roots; Firſt, in the firſt, we ſhall ſee in ge-E nerall, The weakneſſe of Mans beſt actions; And ſecondly, more particularly, The weakneſſes in Martha's Action; And yet, in a third place, the eaſineſſe, the propenſneſſe, the largeneſſe of Gods goodneſſe towards us, in the acceptation of our imperfect Sacrifices; for, Chriſt does not refuſe, nor diſcourage Martha, though her action have theſe imperfections; And in this largeneſſe of his Mercy, which is the end of all, we ſhall end this part. And in our ſecond, That as in ſpirituall things nothing is perfect, ſo in temporall things nothing is permanent, we ſhall, by the ſame three ſteps, as in the former, looke firſt upon the generall conſideration, the fluidneſſe, the tranſitorineſſe of all ſuch temporall things; And then, conſider it more particularly, in Gods Maſter-piece, amongſt mortall things, the body of man, That even that flowes into putrefaction; And then laſtly, returne to that, in which we determined the former part, The largeneſſe of Gods goodneſſe to us, in affording even to mans body, ſo diſſolved into putrefaction, an incorruptible and a glorious ſtate. So have you the frame ſet up, and the roomes divided; The two parts, and the three branches of each; And to the furniſhing of them, with meditations fit for this Occaſion, we paſſe now. A

1. Part. In ſpiritualibus, nihil perfectum. Scientia.

In entring upon the firſt branch of our firſt part, That in ſpirituall things nothing is perfect, we may well afford a kinde of ſpirituall nature to knowledge; And how imperfect is all our knowledge? What one thing doe we know perfectly? Whether wee conſider Arts, or Sciences, the ſervant knows but according to the proportion of his Maſters knowledge in that Art, and the Scholar knows but according to the proportion of his Maſters knowledge in that Science; Young men mend not their ſight by uſing old mens Spectacles; and yet we looke upon Nature, but with Ariſtotles Spectacles, and upon the body of man, but with Galens, and upon the frame of the world, but with Ptolomies Spectacles. Almoſt all knowledge is rather like a child that is embalmed to make Mummy, then that is nurſed to make a Man; rather conſerved in the ſtature of the firſt age, then growne to be greater; And if there be any addition to knowledge, it is rather a new knowledge, then a greater knowledge; rather a ſingularity in a deſire of propoſing ſomething that was not knowne at all before, then an emproving, an advancing, a multiplying of former inceptions; and by that meanes, no knowledge comes to be perfect. One Philoſopher thinks he is dived to the bottome, when he ſayes, he knows nothing but this, That he knows nothing; and yet another thinks, that he hath expreſſed more knowledge then he, in ſaying, That he knows not ſo much as that, That he knows nothing. S. Paul found that to be all knowledge, To know Chriſt; And Mahomet thinks himſelfe wiſe therefore, becauſe he knows not, acknowledges not Chriſt, as S. Paul does. Though a man knew not, that every ſin caſts another ſhovell of Brimſtone upon him in Hell, yet if he knew that every riotous feaſt cuts off a year, and every wanton night ſeaven years of his ſeventy in this world, it were ſome degree towards perfection in knowledge. He that purchaſes a Mannor, will thinke to have an exact Survey of the Land: But who thinks of taking ſo exact a ſurvey of his Conſcience, how that money was got, that purchaſed that Mannor? We call that a mans meanes, which he hath; But that is truly his meanes, what way he came by it. And yet how few are there, (when a ſtate comes to any great proportion) that know that; that know what they have, what they are worth? We have ſeen great Wills, dilated into glorious uſes, and into pious uſes, and then too narrow an eſtate to reach to it; And we have ſeen Wills, where the Teſtator thinks he hath bequeathed all, and he hath not knowne halfe his own worth. When thou knoweſt a wife, a ſonne, a ſervant, a friend no better, but that that wife betrayes thy bed, and that ſonne thine eſtate, and that ſervant thy credit, and that friend thy ſecret, what canſt thou ſay thou knoweſt? But we muſt not inſiſt upon this Conſideration of knowledge; for, though knowledge be of a ſpirituall nature, yet it is but as a terreſtriall Spirit, converſant upon Earth; Spirituall things, of a more rarified nature then knowledge, even faith it ſelfe, and all that grows from that in us, falls within this Rule, which we have in hand, That even in ſpirituall things, nothing is perfect. B C D

Fides.

We conſider this therefore in Credendis, In things that we are bound to Beleeve, there works our faith; And then, in Petendis, In things that we are bound to pray for, there works our hope; And laſtly, in Agendis, In things that we are bound to doe, and there works our charity; And there is nothing in any of theſe three perfect. When you remember who they were, that made that prayer, Domine adauge, That the Apoſtles themſelves prayed, that their faith might receive an encreaſe, Lord increaſe our faith, you muſt neceſſarily ſecond that conſideration with a confeſſion, That no mans faith is perfect. When you heare Chriſt ſo often upbraid, ſometimes whole Congregations, with that, Modicæ fidei, O yee of little faith; And ſometimes his Diſciples alone, with the ſame reproach, Modicæ fidei, O yee of little faith; when you may be perplexed with the variety of opinions amongſt the ancient Interpreters, whether Chriſt ſpoke but to the incredulous Jewes, or to his own Diſciples, when he ſaid, O faithleſſe and perverſe generation, how long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you? (for many Interpreters goe one way, and many the other) And when you may be cleared without any colour of perplexity, that to whom ſoever Chriſt ſpoke in that place, he ſpoke plainly to his owne Diſciples, when he ſaid, Becauſe of your unbelieſe you cannot doe this; In which Diſciples of E

Luk. 17. 5.

Mat. 6. 30.

Mat. 8. 26.

Mat. 17. 17.

Verſ. 20.

A of his, he denies alſo, that there is ſuch a proportion of faith, as a graine of Muſtard-ſeed, can ye place a perfectneſſe of faith in any? When the Apoſtle takes knowledge of the good eſtate and condition of the Theſſalonians, and gave God thanks for their Workes of faith, for their labours of love, for their patience of hope, in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: does he conclude them to be perfect? No; for after this he ſayes, Night and day we pray exceedingly, that we may perfect that which is lacking in your faith. And after this, he ſees the fruit of thoſe prayers, We are bound to thanke God always, becauſe your faith groweth exceedingly; ſtill, at the beſt, it is but a growing faith, and it may be better. There are men that are ſaid to be Rich in faith; men that are come from the weake and beggarly elements of Nature, or of the Law, to the knowledge of the precious and glorious Goſpell, and ſo are Rich in faith, enriched, emproved by faith. There are men that Abound in faith; that is, in compariſon of the emptineſſe of other men, or of their owne emptineſſe
B before they embraced the Goſpell, they abound now; But ſtill it is, As God hath given the meaſure of faith to every man; Not as of his Manna, a certaine meaſure, and an equall meaſure, and a full meaſure to every man; no man hath ſuch a meaſure of faith, as that he needs no more, or that he may not loſe at leaſt ſome of that. When Chriſt ſpeakes ſo doubtfully, When the Son of man commeth, ſhall he finde faith upon earth? Any faith in any man? If the Holy Ghoſt be come into this preſence, into this Congregation, does he find faith in any? A perfect faith he does not.

1 Theſ. 1.2. 3.10. 2 Theſ. 1.3. Iames 2.5. Galat. 4.9. 2 Cor. 8.7. Rom. 12.3. Luke 18.8.

Deceive not your ſelves then, with that new charme and flattery of the ſoule, That if once you can ſay to your ſelves you have faith, you need no more, or that you ſhall alwaies keepe that alive; The Apoſtle ſayes, All boaſting, that is, all confidence, is excluded; By what Law? ſayes he, by the Law of faith, Not by faith, but by the Law of faith; There is a Law of faith; a rule that ordinates, and regulates our faith; by which law and
C rule, the Apoſtle cals upon us, To examine our ſelves whether we be in the faith, or no; not onely by the internall motions, and private inſpirations of his bleſſed Spirit, but by the Law and the Rule, which he hath delivered to us in the Goſpell. The Kings pardon flowes from his meere grace, and from his breſt; but we muſt have the writing and the Seale, that we may plead it: So does faith from God; But we muſt ſee it our ſelves, and ſhew it to others, or elſe we doe not obſerve the Law of faith. Abraham received the Seale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, ſayes the Apoſtle; Hee had an outward teſtimony to proceed by; And then, Abraham became an outward teſtimony and Rule to the faithfull, Walke in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham, ſayes that Apoſtle in that place; Not a faith conceived onely, but a faith which you ſaw, The faith of Abraham; for, ſo the Apoſtle propoſing to us the example of other men ſayes, Their faith follow you, Not faith in generall, but their faith. So that it is not enough to ſay, I feele the inſpiration of the D Spirit of God, He infuſes faith, and faith infuſed cannot be withdrawne; but, as there is a Law of faith, and a practiſe of faith, a Rule of faith, and an example of faith, apply thy ſelfe to both, Regulate thy faith by the Rule, that is, the Word, and by Example, that is, Beleeve thoſe things which the Saints of God have conſtantly and unanimely beleeved to be neceſſary to ſalvation: The Word is the Law, and the Rule, The Church is the Practiſe, and the Precedent that regulates thy faith; And if thou make imaginary revelations, and inſpirations thy Law, or the practiſe of Sectaries thy Precedent, thou doeſt but call Fancie and Imagination, by the name of Reaſon and Underſtanding, and Opinion by the name of Faith, and Singularity, and Schiſme, by the name of Communion of Saints. The Law of thy faith is, That that that thou beleeveſt, be Univerſall, Catholique, beleeved by all; And then, that the Application be particular, To beleeve, that as Chriſt dyed ſufficiently for all, ſo he dyed effectually for thee. And of this effectuall
E dying for thee, there ariſes an evidence from thy ſelfe, in thy conformity to him; Thy conformity conſiſts in this, That thou art willing to live according to his Goſpell, and ready to dye for him, that dyed for thee. For, till a man have reſiſted unto blood, he cannot know experimentally what degrees towards perfection his faith hath: And though he may conceive in himſelfe a holy purpoſe to dye for Chriſt, yet till he have dyed for Chriſt, or dyed in Chriſt, that is, as long as we are in this valley of tentations, there is nothing, no not in ſpirituall things, not in faith it ſelfe, perfect.

Rom. 4.11. Ver. 12. Heb. 13.7.

It is not In credendis, in our embracing the object of faith; we doe not that perfectly; It is not In petendis, in our directing our prayers faithfully neither; we doe not that; our faith is not perfect, nor our hope is not perfect; for, ſo argues the Apoſtle, Ye aske, and Iames 4.3.

Spes.

receive not, becauſe ye aske amiſſe; you cannot hope conſtantly, becauſe you doe not pray aright: And to make a Prayer a right Prayer, there go ſo many eſſentiall circumſtances, as that the beſt man may juſtly ſuſpect his beſt Prayer: for, ſince Prayer muſt bee of faith, Prayer can be but ſo perfect, as the faith is perfect; and the imperfections of the beſt faith we have ſeene. Chriſt hath given us but a ſhort Prayer; and yet we are weary of that. Some of the old Heretiques of the Primitive Church abridged that Prayer, and ſome of our later Schiſmatiques have annihilated, evacuated that Prayer: The Cathari then, left out that one Petition, Dimitte nobis, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, for they thought themſelves ſo pure, as that they needed no forgiveneſſe, and our new men leave out the whole Prayer, becauſe the ſame Spirit that ſpake in Chriſt, ſpeakes in their extemporall prayers, and they can pray, as well as Chriſt could teach them. And (to leave thoſe, whom we are bound to leave, thoſe old Heretiques, thoſe new Schiſmatiques) which of us ever, ever ſayes over that ſhort Prayer, with a deliberate underſtanding of every Petition as we paſſe, or without deviations, and extravagancies of our thoughts, in that halfe-minute of our Devotion? We have not leaſure to ſpeake of the abuſe of prayer in the Roman Church; where they wil antidate and poſtdate their prayers; Say to morrows prayers to day, and to dayes prayers to morrow, if they have other uſes and employments of the due time betweene; where they will trade, and make merchandiſe of prayers by way of exchange, My man ſhall faſt for me, and I will pray for my man; or my Atturney, and Proxy ſhall pray for us both, at my charge; nay, where they will play for prayers, and the loſer muſt pray for both; To this there belongs but a holy ſcorne, and I would faine paſſe it over quickly. But when we conſider with a religious ſeriouſneſſe the manifold weakneſſes of the ſtrongeſt devotions in time of Prayer, it is a ſad conſideration. I throw my ſelfe downe in my Chamber, and I call in, and invite God, and his Angels thither, and when they are there, I neglect God and his Angels, for the noiſe of a Flie, for the ratling of a Coach, for the whining of a doore; I talke on, in the ſame poſture of praying; Eyes lifted up; knees bowed downe; as though I prayed to God; and, if God, or his Angels ſhould aske me, when I thought laſt of God in that prayer, I cannot tell: Sometimes I finde that I had forgot what I was about, but when I began to forget it, I cannot tell. A memory of yeſterdays pleaſures, a feare of to morrows dangers, a ſtraw under my knee, a noiſe in mine eare, a light in mine eye, an any thing, a nothing, a fancy, a Chimera in my braine, troubles me in my prayer. So certainely is there nothing, nothing in ſpirituall things, perfect in this world.

Charitas. Not In credendis, In things that belong to Faith; not In petendis, In things that belong to Hope; nor In agendis, In things that belong to Action, to Workes, to Charity, there is nothing perfect there neither. I would be loath to ſay, That every good work is a ſin; That were to ſay, That every deformed, or diſordered man were a beaſt, or that every corrupt meat were poyſon; It is not utterly ſo; not ſo altogether; But it is ſo much towards it, as that there is no worke of ours ſo good, as that wee can looke for thanks at Gods hand for that worke; no worke, that hath not ſo much ill mingled with it, as that wee need not cry God mercy for that worke. There was ſo much corruption in the getting, or ſo much vaine glory in the beſtowing, as that no man builds an Hoſpitall, but his ſoule lies, though not dead, yet lame in that Hoſpitall; no man mends a high-way, but he is, though not drowned, yet mired in that way; no man relieves the poore, but he needs reliefe for that reliefe. In all thoſe workes of Charity, the world that hath benefit by them, is bound to confeſſe and acknowledge a goodneſſe, and to call them good workes; but the man that does them, and knows the weakneſſes of them, knows they are not good works. It is poſſible to Art, to purge a peccant humour out of a ſick bodie; but not poſſible to raiſe a dead bodie to life. God, out of my Confeſſion of the impuritie of my beſt actions, ſhall vouchſafe to take off his eyes from that impurity, as though there were none; but no ſpirituall thing in us, not Faith, not Hope, not Charitie, have any puritie, any perfection in themſelves; which is the generall Doctrine wee propoſed at firſt; And our next Conſideration is, how this weakeneſſe appeares in the Action, and in the Words of Martha in our Text, Lord, if thou hadſt beene here, my brother had not dyed.

Martha fides Now leſt we ſhould attribute this weakeneſſe, onely to weake perſons, upon whom we had a prejudice, to Martha alone, we note to you firſt, that her ſiſter Mary, to whom in the whole Story very much is aſcribed, when ſhe comes to Chriſt, comes alſo in the ſame voice of infirmity, Lord, if thou hadſt beene here, my brother had not died. No perſon

Ver. 32.

ſo

A so perfect, that hath not of these imperfections; Both these holy Sisters, howsoever there might be differences of degrees in their holinesse, have imperfections in all three, in the consideration of their Faith, and their Hope, and their Charity; though in all three they had also, and had both, good degrees towards perfection. Looke first upon their Faith; they both say, Lord, if thou hadst beene here, our brother had not died. We cannot say so to any Consultation, to any Colledge of Physitians; not to a Chiron, to an Esculapius, to a God of Physicke, could any man say, If you had beene here, my friend had not died? though surely there be much assistance to be received from them, whom God hath endowed with knowledge to that purpose. And yet there was a weakenesse in these Sisters, in that they said but so, and no more to Christ. They thought Christ to be the best amongst good men; but yet they were not come to the knowledge that he was God. Martha saies, I know, that even now, whatsoever thou askest of God, God will give it Verse 22.
B thee; but she does not know him to be God himselfe. I doe not here institute a confutation, but here, and every where I lament the growth, and insinuation of that pestilent Heresie of Socinianisme; That Christ was a holy, a thrice-holy man, an unreproachable, an irreprehensible, an admirable, an incomparable man; A man, to whom, he that should equall any other man, were worse then a Devill; A man worthy to bee called God, in a farre higher sense then any Magistrate, any King, any Prophet; But yet hee was no God, say they, no Son of God; A Redeemer, by way of good example; but no Redeemer, by way of equivalent satisfaction, say those Heretiques. S. Paul sayes, He is Ephes. 2. 12.
an Atheist, that is without Christ; And he is as much an Atheist still, that pretends to receive Christ, and not as God; For if the receiving of Christ must redeeme him from being an Atheist, there can no other way be imagined, but by receiving him as God, for that onely, and no other good opinion of Christ, overcomes, and removes his Atheisme.
C After the last day, whatsoever is not Heaven, is Hell; Hee that then shall be where the Sunne is now, (if he be not then in heaven) shall be as farre from heaven, as if hee were where the Center of the earth is now; Hee that confesses not all Christ, confesses no Christ. Horribile dictu, dicam tamen, sayes S. Augustine in another case; There belongs a holy trembing to the saying of it, yet I must say it, If Christ were not God, hee was a devill that durst say he was God. This then was one weakenesse in these Sisters faith, that it carried them not up to the consideration of Christ as God; And then another rose out of that, That they insisted so much, relied so much, upon his corporall, and personall presence, and promised themselves more from that, then hee had ever given them ground for; which was that which Christ diverted Mary from, when after his Resurrection manifesting himselfe to her, and shee flying unto him with that impatient zeale, and that impetuous devotion, Rabboni, Master, My Master, Christ said to her, Touch mee Ioh. 20. 16.
D not, for I am not ascended to my Father; that is, Dwell not upon this passionate consideration of my bodily, and personall presence, but send thy thoughts, and thy reverence, and thy devotion, and thy holy amorousnesse up, whither I am going, to the right hand of my Father, and consider me, contemplate mee there. S. Peter had another holy distemper of another kinde, upon the personall presence of Christ; He was so astonished at his presence in the power of a Miracle, that he fell downe at his feet, and said, Depart Luke 5. 8.
from me, for I am a sinfull man, O Lord. These Sisters longed for him, and S. Peter longed as much to be delivered of him; both out of weakenesse and error. So is it an error, and a weakenesse to attribute too much, or too little to Christs presence in his Sacraments, or other Ordinances. To imprison Christ in Opere operato, to conclude him so, as that where that action is done, Christ must necessarily bee, and necessarily work, this is to say weakly with these Sisters, Lord, if thou hadst beene here, our brother had not died. As long E as we are present at thine Ordinance, thou art present with us. But to banish Christ from those holy actions, and to say, That he is no otherwise present, or works no otherwise in those actions, then in other times, and places, this is to say with Peter, in his astonishment, Exi à me Domine, O Lord depart from me; It is enough that thy Sacrament be a signe; I do not look that it should be a Seal, or a Conduit of Grace; This is the danger, this is the distemper, to ascribe too much, or too little to Gods visible Ordinances, and Institutions, either to say with those holy Sisters, Lord, if thou hadst been here, our brother had not died, If we have a Sacrament, if we have a Sermon all is well, we have enough; or else with Peter, Exi à me, Leave me to my selfe, to my private motions, to my bosome inspirations, and I need no Church-work, no Sermons, no Sacraments, no such assistances.

So

Martha ſpes.

Joh. 3. 1.
Mat. 8. 5.
Mark 5. 25, 33.

So there was weakneſſe in their Faith, there was ſo too in their Hope, in their confidence in Chriſt, and in their manner of expreſſing it. For, they did not goe to him, when their brother was ſick, but ſent. Nicodemus came in perſon for his ſick ſoule; And the Centurion in perſon, for his ſick ſervant; And Iairus in perſon, for his ſick daughter; And the woman with the bloody Iſſue in perſon, for her ſick-ſelfe. Theſe ſiſters did but ſend, but piouſly, and reverendly; Their Meſſenger was to ſay to Chriſt, not Lazarus, not Our Brother, but He whom thou loveſt, is ſick; And they left this intimation to work upon Chriſt; But that was not enough, we muſt bring Chriſt and our neceſſities neerer together then ſo. There is good inſtruction in the ſeverall expreſſings of Chriſts curings of

Mark 1. 29.

Peters mother in the Euangeliſts. S. Marke ſayes, They told him of her; And S. Luke ſayes, They brought him up to her; And S. Matthew ſayes, He ſaw her, and tooke her by the hand. I muſt not wrap up all my neceſſities in generall termes in my prayers, but deſcend to particulars; For this places my devotion upon particular conſiderations of God, to conſider him in every Attribute, what God hath done for me in Power, what in Wiſedome, what in Mercy; which is a great aſſiſtance, and eſtabliſhing, and propagation of devotion. As it is a degree of unthankfulneſſe, to thank God too generally, and not to delight to inſiſt upon the waight, and meaſure, and proportion, and the goodneſſe of every particular mercy: ſo is it an irreverent, and inconſiderate thing, not to take my particular wants into my thoughts, and into my prayers, that ſo I may take a holy knowledge, that I have nothing, nothing but from God, and by prayer. And as God is an acceſſible God, as he is his owne Maſter of Requeſts, and is ever open to receive thy Petions, in how ſmall a matter ſoever: ſo is he an inexhauſtible God, he can give infinitely, and an indefatigable God, he cannot be preſſed too much. Therefore hath Chriſt given us a Parable of getting Bread at midnight by Importunity, and not otherwiſe; And another of a Iudge that heard the widows cauſe by Importunity, and not otherwiſe; And, not a Parable, but a Hiſtory, and a Hiſtory of his own, of a woman of Canaan, that overcame him in the behalfe of her daughter, by Importunity; when, but by importunity, ſhe could not get ſo much as an anſwer, as a deniall at his hands. Pray perſonally, rely not upon dead nor living Saints; Thy Mother the Church prayes for thee, but pray for thy ſelfe too; Shee can open her boſome, and put the breaſt to thy mouth, but thou muſt draw, and ſuck for thy ſelfe. Pray perſonally, and pray frequently; David had may ſtationary times of the day, and night too, to pray in. Pray frequently, and pray fervently; God took it not ill, at Davids hands, to be awaked, and to be called up, as though hee were aſleepe at our prayers, and to be called upon, to pull his hand out of his boſome, as though he were ſlack in relieving our neceſſities. This was a weakneſſe in thoſe Siſters, that they ſolicited not Chriſt in perſon; ſtill get as neare God as you can; And that they declared not their caſe particularly; It is not enough to pray, nor to confeſſe in generall termes; And, that they purſued not their prayer earneſtly, thorowly; It is not enough to have prayed once; Chriſt does not onely excuſe, but enjoine Importunity.

Luke 11. 5.
18. 7.

Matt. 15. 21.

Martha charitas.

And then a weakneſſe there was in their Charity too, even towards their dead brother. To lament a dead friend is naturall, and civill; and he is the deader of the two, the verier carcaſſe, that does not ſo. But inordinate lamentation implies a ſuſpition of a worſe ſtate in him that is gone; And if I doe beleeve him to be in heaven, deliberately, adviſedly to wiſh him here, that is in heaven, is an uncharitable deſire. For, for me to ſay, He is preferred by being where he is, but I were better, if he were againe where I am, were ſuch an indiſpoſition, as if the Princes ſervant ſhould be loath to ſee his Maſter King, becauſe he ſhould not hold the ſame place with him, being King, as he did when he was Prince. Not to hope well of him that is gone, is uncharitableneſſe; and at the ſame time, when I beleeve him to be better, to wiſh him worſe, is uncharitableneſſe too. And ſuch weakneſſes were in thoſe holy and devout Siſters of Lazarus; which eſtabliſhes our Concluſion, There is nothing in this world, no not in ſpirituall things, not in knowledge, not in faith, not in hope, not in charity perfect. But yet, for all theſe imperfections, Chriſt doth not refuſe, nor chide, but cheriſh their piety, which is alſo another circumſtance in that Part.

Non reijcit Chriſtus.

There is no forme of Building ſtronger then an Arch, and yet an Arch hath declinations, which even a flat-roofe hath not; The flat-roofe lies equall in all parts; the Arch declines downwards in all parts, and yet the Arch is a firme ſupporter. Our Devotions doe not the leſſe beare us upright, in the ſight of God, becauſe they have ſome declinations

A tions towards natural affections: God doth eaſilier pardon ſome neglectings of his grace, when it proceeds out of a tenderneſſe, or may be excuſed out of good nature, then any preſuming upon his grace. If a man doe depart in ſome actions, from an exact obedience of Gods will, upon infirmity, or humane affections, and not a contempt, God paſſes it over often times. For, when our Saviour Chriſt ſayes, Be pure as your Father in heaven is pure, that is a rule for our purity, but not a meaſure of our purity; It is that we ſhould be pure ſo, not that we ſhould be ſo pure as our Father in heaven. When we conſider that weakneſſe, that went through the Apoſtles, even to Chriſts Aſcenſion, that they looked for a temporall Kingdome, and for preferment in that; when we conſider that weakneſſe in the chiefe of them, S. Peter, at the Transfiguration, when, as the Text ſayes, He knew not what to ſay; when we conſider the weakneſſe of his action, that for feare of death, he renounced the Lord of Life, and denied his Maſter; when in this very B ſtory, when Chriſt ſaid that Lazarus was aſleepe, and that he would goe to awake him, they could underſtand it ſo impertinently, as that Chriſt ſhould goe ſuch a journey, to come to the waking of a man, aſleep at that time when he ſpoke; All theſe infirmities of theirs, multiply this conſolation upon us, That though God look upon the Inſcription, he looks upon the metall too, Though he look that his Image ſhould be preſerved in us, he looks in what earthen veſſels this Image is put, and put by his own hand; and though he hate us in our rebellions, yet he pities us in our grievances; though he would have us better, he forſakes us not for every degree of illneſſe. There are three great dangers in this conſideration of perfectneſſe, and purity; Firſt to diſtruſt of Gods mercy, if thou finde not this purity in thy ſelfe, and this perfectneſſe; And then to preſume upon God, nay upon thine own right, in an overvaluing of thine own purity, and perfectneſſe; And againe, to condemne others, whom thou wilt needs thinke leſſe pure, or perfect then thy ſelfe. C Againſt this diffidence in God, to thinke our ſelves ſo deſperately impure, as that God will not look upon us; And this preſumption in God, to thinke our ſelves ſo pure, as that God is bound to look upon us; And this uncharitableneſſe towards others, to think none pure at all, that are not pure our way; Chriſt armes us by his Example, He receives theſe ſiſters of Lazarus, and accompliſhes as much as they deſired, though there were weakneſſes in their Faith, in their Hope, in their Charity, expreſſed in that unperfect ſpeech, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not dyed: for, there is nothing, not in ſpirituall things perfect. This we have ſeen out of the Text we have Heard; And now out of the Text, which we See, we ſhall ſee the reſt, That as in ſpirituall things, there is nothing Perfect, ſo in temporall, there is nothing Permanent.

Mat. 9. 6.

I need not call in new Philoſophy, that denies a ſettledneſſe, an acquieſcence in the very body of the Earth, but makes the Earth to move in that place, where we thought D the Sunne had moved; I need not that helpe, that the Earth it ſelfe is in Motion, to prove this, That nothing upon Earth is permanent; The Aſſertion will ſtand of it ſelfe, till ſome man aſſigne me ſome inſtance, ſomething that a man may relie upon, and find permanent. Conſider the greateſt Bodies upon Earth, The Monarchies; Objects, which one would thinke, Deſtiny might ſtand and ſtare at, but not ſhake; Conſider the ſmalleſt bodies upon Earth, The haires of our head, Objects, which one would thinke, Deſtiny would not obſerve, or could not diſcerne; And yet, Deſtiny, (to ſpeak to a naturall man) And God, (to ſpeake to a Chriſtian) is no more troubled to make a Monarchy ruinous, then to make a haire gray. Nay, nothing needs be done to either, by God, or Deſtiny; A Monarchy will ruine, as a haire will grow gray, of it ſelfe. In the Elements themſelves, of which all ſub-elementary things are compoſed, there is no acquieſcence, but a viciſſitudinary tranſmutation into one another; Ayre condenſed becomes water, a more E ſolid body, And Ayre rarified becomes fire, a body more diſputable, and in-apparant. It is ſo in the Conditions of men too; A Merchant condenſed, kneaded and packed up in a great eſtate, becomes a Lord; And a Merchant rarified, blown up by a perfidious Factor, or by a riotous Sonne, evaporates into ayre, into nothing, and is not ſeen. And if there were any thing permanent and durable in this world, yet we got nothing by it, becauſe howſoever that might laſt in it ſelfe, yet we could not laſt to enjoy it; If our goods were not amongſt Moveables, yet we our ſelves are; if they could ſtay with us, yet we cannot ſtay with them; which is another Conſideration in this part.

2. Part.

The world is a great Volume, and man the Index of that Booke; Even in the body of man, you may turne to the whole world; This body is an Illuſtration of all Nature; Gods

Corpus hominis.

Gods recapitulation of all that he had ſaid before, in his Fiat lux, and Fiat firmamentum, and in all the reſt, ſaid or done, in all the ſix dayes. Propoſe this body to thy conſideration in the higheſt exaltation thereof; as it is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt: Nay, not in a Metaphor, or compariſon of a Temple, or any other ſimilitudinary thing, but as it was really and truly the very body of God, in the perſon of Chriſt, and yet this body muſt wither, muſt decay, muſt languiſh, muſt periſh. When Goliah had armed and fortified this body, And Iezabel had painted and perfumed this body, And Dives had pampered and larded this body, As God ſaid to Ezekiel, when he brought him to the dry bones, Fili hominis, Sonne of Man, doeſt thou thinke theſe bones can live? They ſaid in their hearts to all the world, Can theſe bodies die? And they are dead. Iezabels duſt is not Ambar, nor Goliahs duſt Terra ſigillata, Medicinall; nor does the Serpent, whoſe meat they are both, finde any better relliſh in Dives duſt, then in Lazarus. But as in our former part, where our foundation was, That in nothing, no ſpirituall thing, there was any perfectneſſe, which we illuſtrated in the weakneſſes of Knowledge, and Faith, and Hope, and Charity, yet we concluded, that for all thoſe defects, God accepted thoſe their religious ſervices; So in this part, where our foundation is, That nothing in temporall things is permanent, as we have illuſtrated that, by the decay of that which is Gods nobleſt piece in Nature, The body of man; ſo we ſhall alſo conclude that, with this goodneſſe of God, that for all this diſſolution, and putrefaction, he affords this Body a Reſurrection.

Reſurrectio. The Gentils, and their Poets, deſcribe the ſad ſtate of Death ſo, Nox una obeunda, That it is one everlaſting Night; To them, a Night; But to a Chriſtian, it is Dies Mortis, and Dies Reſurrectionis, The day of Death, and The day of Reſurrection; We die in the light, in the ſight of Gods preſence, and we riſe in the light, in the ſight of his very Eſſence. Nay, Gods corrections, and judgements upon us in this life, are ſtill expreſſed ſo, Dies viſitationis, ſtill it is a Day, though a Day of viſitation; and ſtill we may diſcerne

Gen. 2. God to be in the action. The Lord of Life was the firſt that named Death; Morte morieris, ſayes God, Thou ſhalt die the Death. I doe the leſſe feare, or abhorre Death, becauſe I finde it in his mouth; Even a malediction hath a ſweetneſſe in his mouth; for there is a bleſſing wrapped up in it; a mercy in every correction, a Reſurrection upon every Death. When Iezabels beauty, exalted to that height which it had by art, or higher then that, to that height which it had in her own opinion, ſhall be infinitely multiplied upon every Body; And as God ſhall know no man from his own Sonne, ſo as not to ſee the very righteouſneſſe of his own Sonne upon that man; So the Angels ſhall know no man from Chriſt, ſo as not to deſire to looke upon that mans face, becauſe the moſt deformed wretch that is there, ſhall have the very beauty of Chriſt himſelfe; So ſhall Goliahs armour, and Dives fulneſſe, be doubled, and redoubled upon us, And every thing that we can call good, ſhall firſt be infinitely exalted in the goodneſſe, and then infinitely multiplied in the proportion, and againe infinitely extended in the duration. And ſince we are in an action of preparing this dead Brother of ours to that ſtate, (for the Funerall is the Eaſter-eve, The Buriall is the depoſiting of that man for the Reſurrection) As we have held you, with Doctrine of Mortification, by extending the Text, from Martha to this occaſion; ſo ſhall we diſmiſſe you with Conſolation, by a like occaſionall inverting the Text, from paſſion in Martha's mouth, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my Brother had not dyed, to joy in ours, Lord, becauſe thou waſt here, our Brother is not dead.

In vita. The Lord was with him in all theſe ſteps; with him in his life; with him in his death; He is with him in his funerals, and he ſhall be with him in his Reſurrection; and therefore, becauſe the Lord was with him, our Brother is not dead. He was with him in the beginning of his life, in this manifeſtation, That though he were of Parents of a good, of a great Eſtate, yet his poſſibility and his expectation from them, did not ſlacken his own induſtry; which is a Canker that eats into, nay that hath eat up many a family in this City, that relying wholly upon what the Father hath done, the Sonne does nothing for himſelfe. And truly, it falls out too often, that he that labours not for more, does not keepe his own. God imprinted in him an induſtrious diſpoſition, though ſuch hopes from ſuch parents might have excuſed ſome ſlackneſſe, and God proſpered his induſtry ſo, as that when his Fathers eſtate came to a diſtribution by death, he needed it not. God

Pſal. 81. 11. was with him, as with David in a Dilatation, and then in a Repletion; God enlarged him, and then he filled him; He gave him a large and a comprehenſive underſtanding, and with it, A publique heart; And ſuch as perchance in his way of education, and in our narrow

A narrow and contracted-times, in which every man determines himſelfe in himſelfe, and ſcarce looks farther, it would be hard to finde many Examples of ſuch largeneſſe. You have, I thinke, a phraſe of Driving a Trade; And you have, I know, a practiſe of Driving away Trade, by other uſe of money; And you have loſt a man, that drove a great Trade, the right way in making the beſt uſe of our home-commodity. To fetch in Wine, and Spice, and Silke, is but a drawing of Trade; The right driving of trade, is, to vent our owne outward; And yet, for the drawing in of that, which might juſtly ſeeme moſt behoofefull, that is, of Arts, and Manufactures, to be imployed upon our owne Commodity within the Kingdome, he did his part, diligently, at leaſt, if not vehemently, if not paſſionately. This City is a great Theater, and he Acted great and various parts in it; And all well; And when he went higher, (as he was often heard in Parliaments, at Councell tables, and in more private acceſſes to the late King of ever bleſſed memory) as, for
B that comprehenſion of thoſe buſineſſes, which he pretended to underſtand, no man doubts, for no man lacks arguments and evidences of his ability therein, So for his manner of expreſſing his intentions, and digeſting and uttering his purpoſes, I have ſometimes heard the greateſt Maſter of Language and Judgement, which theſe times, or any other did, or doe, or ſhall give, (that good and great King of ours) ſay of him, That he never heard any man of his breeding, handle buſineſſes more rationally, more pertinently, more elegantly, more perſwaſively; And when his purpoſe was, to do a grace to a Preacher, of very good abilities, and good note in his owne Chappell, I have heard him ſay, that his language, and accent, and manner of delivering himſelfe, was like this man. This man hath God accompanied all his life; and by performance thereof ſeemes to have made that Covenant with him, which he made to Abraham, Multiplicabote vehementer, I will multiply thee exceedingly. Gen. 17. 2.
C He multiplied his eſtate ſo, as was fit to endow many and great Children; and he multiplied his Children ſo, both in their number, and in their quality, as they were fit to receive a great Eſtate. God was with him all the way, In a Pillar of Fire, in the brightneſſe of proſperity, and in the Pillar of Clouds too, in many darke, and ſad, and heavy croſſes: So great a Ship, required a great Ballaſt, So many bleſſings, many croſſes; And he had them, and ſailed on his courſe the ſteadier for them; The Cloud as well as the Fire, was a Pillar to him; His croſſes, as well as his bleſſings eſtabliſhed his aſſurance in God; And ſo, in all the courſe of his life, The Lord was here, and therefore our Brother is not dead; not dead in the evidences and teſtimonies of life; for he, whom the world hath juſt cauſe to celebrate, for things done, when he was alive, is alive ſtill in their celebration.

In morte. The Lord was here, that is, with him at his death too. He was ſerved with the Proceſſe here in the City, but his cauſe was heard in the Country; Here he ſickned, There he D languiſhed, and dyed there. In his ſickneſſe there, thoſe that aſſiſted him, are witneſſes, of his many expreſſings, of a religious & a conſtant heart towards God, and of his pious joyning with them, even in the holy declaration of kneeling, then, when they, in favour of his weakeneſſe, would diſſwade him from kneeling. I muſt not defraud him of this teſtimony frō my ſelfe, that into this place where we are now met, I have obſerved him to enter with much reverence, & compoſe himſelfe in this place with much declaration of devotion. And truly it is that reverence, which thoſe perſons who are of the ſame ranke that he was in the City, that reverence that they uſe in this place, when they come hither, is that that makes us, who have now the adminiſtration of this Quire, glad, that our Predeceſſors, but a very few yeares before our time, (and not before all our times neither) admitted theſe Honourable and worſhipfull Perſons of this City, to ſit in this Quire, ſo, as they do upon Sundayes: The Church receives an honour in it; But the honour is more in their E reverence, then in their preſence; though in that too: And they receive an honour, and an eaſe in it; and therefore they do piouſly towards God, and prudently for themſelves, and gratefully towards us, in giving us, by their reverent comportment here, ſo juſt occaſion of continuing that honour, and that eaſe to them here, which to leſſe reverend, and unreſpective perſons, we ſhould be leſſe willing to doe. To returne to him in his ſickneſſe; He had but one dayes labour, and all the reſt were Sabbaths, one day in his ſickneſſe he converted to buſineſſe; Thus; He called his family, and friends together; Thankfully he acknowledged Gods manifold bleſſings, and his owne ſins as penitently: And then, to thoſe who were to have the diſpoſing of his eſtate, joyntly with his Children, he recommended his ſervants, and the poore, and the Hoſpitals, and the Priſons, which, according cording to his purpoſe, have beene all taken into conſideration; And after this (which was his Valediction to the world) he ſeemed alwaies loath to returne to any worldly buſineſſe, His laſt Commandement to Wife and Children was Chriſts laſt commandement to his Spouſe the Church, in the Apoſtles, To love one another. He bleſt them, and the Eſtate devolved upon them, unto them: And by Gods grace ſhall prove as true a Prophet to them in that bleſſing, as he was to himſelfe, when in entring his laſt bed, two dayes before his Death, he ſaid, Help me off with my earthly habit, & let me go to my laſt bed. Where, in the ſecond night after, he ſaid, Little know ye what paine I feele this night, yet I know, I ſhall have joy in the morning; And in that morning he dyed. The forme in which he implored his Saviour, was evermore, towards his end, this, Chriſt Ieſus, which dyed on the Croſſe, forgive me my ſins; He have mercy upon me: And his laſt and dying words were the repetition of the name of Jeſus; And when he had not ſtrength to utter that name diſtinctly and perfectly, they might heare it from within him, as from a man a far off; even then, when his hollow and remote naming of Jeſus, was rather a certifying of them, that he was with his Jeſus, then a prayer that he might come to him. And ſo The Lord was here, here with him in his Death; and becauſe the Lord was here, our Brother is not dead; not dead in the eyes and eares of God; for as the blood of Abel ſpeaks yet, ſo doth the zeale of Gods Saints; and their laſt prayers (though we heare them not) God continues ſtill; and they pray in Heaven, as the Martyrs under the Altar, even till the Reſurrection.

In funere. He is with him now too; Here in his Funerals. Buriall, and Chriſtian Buriall, and Solemne Buriall are all evidences, and teſtimonies of Gods preſence. God forbid we ſhould conclude, or argue an abſence of God, from the want of Solemne Buriall, or Chriſtian Buriall, or any Buriall; But neither muſt we deny it, to be an evidence of his favour and preſence, where he is pleaſed to afford theſe. So God makes that the ſeale of all his bleſſings to Abraham, That he ſhould be buried in a good age; God eſtabliſhed Iacob with that promiſe, That his Son Ioſeph ſhould have care of his Funerals: And Ioſeph does cauſe his ſervants, The Phyſitians, to embalme him, when he was dead. Of Chriſt it was Prophecied; That he ſhould have a glorious Buriall; And therefore Chriſt interprets well that profuſe, and prodigall piety of the Woman that poured out the Oyntment upon him, That ſhe did it to Bury him; And ſo ſhall Ioſeph of Arimathea be ever celebrated, for his care in celebrating Chriſts Funerals. If we were to ſend a Son, or a friend, to take poſſeſſion of any place in Court, or forraine parts, we would ſend him out in the beſt equipage: Let us not grudge to ſet downe our friends, in the Anti-chamber of Heaven, the Grave, in as good manner, as without vaine-glorioufneſſe, and waſtfulneſſe we may; And, in inclining them, to whom that care belongs, to expreſſe that care as they doe this day, The Lord is with him, even in this Funerall; And becauſe The Lord is here, our brother is not dead; Not dead in the memories and eſtimation of men.

Gen.15. Gen.46. Gen.50. Eſay 11.10. Matt.26.

In reſurrectione. And laſtly, that we may have God preſent in all his Manifeſtations, He that was, and is, and is to come, was with him, in his life and death, and is with him in this holy Solemnity, and ſhall bee with him againe in the Reſurrection. God ſayes to Iacob, I will goe downe with thee into Egypt, and I will alſo ſurely bring thee up againe. God goes downe with a good man into the Grave, and will ſurely bring him up againe. When? The Angel promiſed to returne to Abraham and Sarah, for the aſſurance of the birth of Iſaac, according to the time of life; that is, in ſuch time, as by nature a woman may have a childe. God will returne to us in the Grave, according to the time of life; that is, in ſuch time, as he, by his gracious Decree, hath fixed for the Reſurrection. And in the meane time, no more then the God-head departed from the dead body of our Saviour, in the grave, doth his power, and his preſence depart from our dead bodies in that darkneſſe; But that which Moſes ſaid to the whole Congregation, I ſay to you all, both to you that heare me, and to him that does not, All ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God, are alive, every one of you, this day; Even hee, whom wee call dead, is alive this day. In the preſence of God, we lay him downe; In the power of God, he ſhall riſe; In the perſon of Chriſt, he is riſen already. And ſo into the ſame hands that have received his ſoule, we commend his body; beſeeching his bleſſed Spirit, that as our charity enclines us to hope confidently of his good eſtate, our faith may aſſure us of the ſame happineſſe, in our owne behalfe; And that for all our ſakes, but eſpecially for his own glory, he will be pleaſed to haſten the conſummation of all, in that kingdome which that Son of God hath purchaſed for us, with the ineſtimable price of his incorruptible blood. Amen.

Gen.46.4. Gen.18.10. Deut.4.4.

FINIS.

The Table of ſuch places of SCRIPTURE, as are illuſtrated and expounded in this BOOKE.

GENESIS.

1. 16. Wo great lights, &c. 81.A.
2. 7. Man was a living ſoul 71.A.
18. 10. According to the time of life 826.D.
26. 18. Iſaac digged the wells of water, which 118.B.
29. 12. Iacob kiſſed Rachel 407.C.
41. 45. Pharaoh called Ioſephs name 529.A.
51. 20. You thought evill againſt me, 171.B.

EXODUS.

4. 22. Iſrael is his ſonne 56.E.
14. 14. The Lord ſhall fight for you 577.D.
23. 3. Thou ſhalt not countenance 782.C.
33. 13. Shew me now thy way 66.E.

DEUTERONOMY.

21. 23. He that is hanged is accurſed of God 8.A.
30. 15. See, I have ſet before thee life and death 70.A.
30. 19. I have ſet before you life and death 148.D.

IOSHUAH.

10. 12. Sunne, ſtand thou ſtill 700.A.

JUDGES.

2. 5. They wept, 539.B.

RUTH.

1. 19. Call me not Naomi 479.B.

2 SAMUEL.

14. 14. We muſt needs die, and are 311.A.
26. 12. The ſleepe of the Lord was upon him 257.D.

2 KINGS.

9. 3. None ſhall ſay, This is Iezebel 148.B.
11. 12. They put the crowne 336.D.
20. 7. Take a lump of figs 514.E.

JOB.

4. 18. His Angels he charged with folly 9.C.
5. 7. Man is borne unto travaile, as 538.B.
7. 1. Mans life is a warfare 142.A. & 603 E.
8. 16. Woe unto me poor ruſh, for &c. 141.B.
10. 20. Lord ſpare me a while 162.C.
19. 25. I know my Redeemer liveth, &c. 150.A.
19. 26. In my fleſh &c. 122.A.
20. 11. My bones are full of the ſins 519.B.

PSALMES.

2. 2. They imagine a vaine thing 433.D.
2. 8. Aske of me and I will give thee &c. 26.E. & 462.E.
2. ult. Kiſſe the Son leſt he be angry 541.D.
3. 7. Thou haſt broken the teeth 516.D.
6. 5. In death there is no remembrance of thee 533.E.
15. 2. Lord, who ſhall aſcend to thy Tabernacle 117.E.
19. 9. The judgements of the Lord juſtifie themſelves 366.D.
22. 6. I am a worme 18.A. 45.C. 65.A.
25. 15. Mine eyes are ever towards the Lord 618.A.
37. 5. Cõmit thy wayes unto the Lord 686.B.
37. 26. The righteous is merciſull 83.E.
45. 7. God hath anointed thee with the oyle of gladneſſe 396.C.
50. 12. If I were hungry 101.B
55. 19. Becauſe they have no changes, therefore they feare not God. 57.D.
65. 1. Praiſe waiteth for thee 64.A. 66.3.

66. 3. Through the greatneſſe of thy power, ſhall thine enemies ſubmit. 585.A.
72. 18. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, which 394.D.
78. 63. Their maidens were not given in marriage. 679.C.
82. 1. God ſtandeth in the 72.D.
90. 10. The dayes of our yeares &c. 83.B.
101. 1. I will ſing of thy mercy and 12.A.
101. 5. Him that hath a high looke 729.B.
102. 5. My bones cleave to my fleſh 519.B.
104. 29. They die, and they returne 255.D.
105. 15. Touch not mine anointed 55.B.
106. 20. They changed their glory 85.A.
111. 10. A good underſtanding have 612.C.
113. 5. He dwels in heaven 134.C.
119. 57. The Lord is my portion 14.B.
119. 136. Rivers of waters ran 161.E.
135. 7. He cauſeth the vapours 264.B.
136. 4. Facit mirabilia magna 215.C.
139. 21. Doe not I hate them 99.C.
145. 15. The eyes of all wait 684.D.
146. 3. Put not your truſt in Princes 483.A.

PROVERBS.

11. 13. The fruit of the righteous 84.A.
12. 23. A wiſe man concealeth 565.C.
13. 22. The wealth of the ſinner &c. 83.C.
14. 23. He ſhall have hope 83.D.
17. 6. The glory of children 84.A.
25. 16. Fill not thy ſelfe with honey 63.E.

ECCLES.

10. 10. If the iron be blunt, we muſt 356.C.
10. 20. Thoſe that have wings 92.D.
38. 9. My ſon, in thy ſickneſſe &c. 110.C.

CANTICLES.

1. 8. O thou faireſt among women 119.E.
2. 15. Take us the little Foxes, for they devoure the Vine 117.A. 782.B.
4. 12. My Siſter, my Spouſe is a garden enclоſed 515.C.
8. 6. Set me as a ſeal on thy heart, 456.D.

ESAY.

7. 13. Is it a ſmall thing to weary men, 15.A.
9. 6. A childe is given to us, a Son is borne to us 86.C.
9. 6. Counſellor, The mighty God. 6.B.
14. 12. How art thou faln from heaven 187.B.
18. 1. Wo to the land ſhadowing with wings 671.B.
27. 7. Hath he ſmitten him as he ſmote thoſe that ſmote him? 505.D.
36. 21. They held their peace, and 410.B.
38. 2. Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall, and prayed 251.D.
40. 15. As a drop upon the Bucket 64.D.
40. 31. They that waite upon the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength. 637.C.
53. 10. It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him, but 181.A.
55. 8. My thoughts are not your 25.B.
58. 11. Thou ſhalt be a ſpring of water 660.D.
60. 1. Ariſe, ſhine, for thy light is come 188.E.

JEREMIAH.

1. 10. Behold, I have this day 734.B.
5. 1. Run to and fro through the ſtreets of 422.A.
18. 2. Ariſe and goe downe 147.B.

LAMENTATIONS.

1. 2. She weepeth continually in the night. 540.A.
2. 19. Poure out thy heart like water 591.D.
2. 10. Women eat their children of a ſpan long 146.D.& 215.D.
4. 8. My skin cleaves to my bones 519.B.

EZECHIEL.

9. 4. Set a mark upon the foreheads 537.E.
16. 29. Thou haſt multiplied thy fornications, &c. 24.C.
44. 2. This gate ſhall be ſhut &c. 22.E.

HOSEA.

14. 2. Take unto you words, and turn 578.C.

MICAH.

2. 13. The breaker is gone up before, 181.B.

HABAKKUK.

2. 4. The juſt ſhall live &c. 79.C.
2. 18. What good can an Idol, or &c. 117.D.

HAGGAI.

2. 9. The glory of the later houſe &c. 30.D.

ECCLUS.

7. 36. Remember the end, and 371.B.
38. 1. Honour a Phyſitian with 187.B.
38. 15. He that ſinneth before his 187.B.

MAT-

MATTHEVV.

1. 25. Till she brought forth her Son 22.E.
5. 48. Be yee perfect as your Father in heaven is 823.A.
5. 23. If thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and 33.C.
7. 19. He taught them as one 690.E.
9. 2. My sonne be of good cheare, 343.C.
10. 39. He that finds his life 150.C.
16. 24. He that will follow me, let 732.C.
16. 28. There be some standing here, 259.A.
19. 28. In the regeneration 181.A.
20. 23. It is not mine to give 761.E.
21. 44. He that falls upon this stone 665.B.
24. 20. Pray that your flight be not in the Winter, 580.B.
28. 19. Goe and teach all Nations 47.B.

MARKE.

9. 24. Lord, I beleeve 669.C.

LUKE.

1. 28. Blessed art thou amongst women 18.C.
4. 23. Physitian, heale thy selfe 420.B.
4. 32. They were astonished at his 691.A.
7. 29. The Pharisees and Lawyers rejected. 366.D.
12. 32. Feare not little flock, for &c. 45.C. & 228.B.

JOHN.

1. 3, 4. All things were made by him 667.E.
1. 15. Grace for grace 310.E.
1. 9. He was that light &c. 78.B. & 345.C.
1. 16. Of his fulnesse have all we received and grace for grace 4.C.
2. 4. Woman, what have I to doe with thee 23.D.
5. 25. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the houre 150.E.
5. 17. My Father worketh 240.A.
5. 39. Search the Scriptures 339.B.
8. 11. Sin no more 110.A.
9. 10. I am the doore 752.D.
10. 3. His sheep heare his voice 66.D.
10. 11. The good shepheard giveth his life for the sheepe 63.A.
19. 29. They put it upon Hyssop. 646.A.
20. 16. Touch me not, for 821.D.

ACTS.

1. 22. There was a necessity of one 180.C.
17. 11. The Bereans searched the &c. 472.E.
20. 22. I goe bound in the Spirit 473.C.

ROMANS.

6. 21. What fruit had yee then 65.D
8. 15. Whereby we cry Abba, Father 27.D.
8. 21. The creature it selfe also shall be delivered from the bondage &c. 9.D.
8. 23. Our selves have the first fruits 293.B.

1 CORINTHIANS.

1. 20. God hath made the wisedome of this world, foolishnesse 180.B.
6. 3. We shall judge the Angels 235.A.
6. 20. Tee are bought with a price 26.D.
10. 13. No tentation shall befall us, but 789.B.
15. 8. As of one borne out of due 460.D.
15. 3. Christ dyed for our sins 397.B.
15. 28. God shall be all in all 231.B.
15. 29. For the dead 56.D.

2 CORINTHIANS.

7. 1. Let us cleanse our selves 118.A.
12. 7. A thorne in the flesh, the messenger of Satan 526.E. 527.A.
12. 9. My grace is sufficient for thee 527.D.

EPHESIANS.

1. 10. That God might gather in one 9.D.
2. 12. Without Christ, without God 71.C.
3. 19. That they are filled with all the 4.C.
5. 14. Awake thou that sleepest 188.E.
11. 6. Without faith it is impossible 105.A.

PHILIPPIANS.

4. 8. If there be any vertue. 681.A.

COLOSSIANS.

3. 5. Mortifie your members 151.B.

1 THESSALONIANS.

4. 7. God hath not called us to &c. 117.E.
5. 25. I pray God your spirit 335.E.

1 Tim.

2. 1. I exhort you that ſupplications and prayers &c. 510.D.

Titus.

2. 14. Chriſt gave himſelfe for us 77. C.

Hebrevves.

4. 12. The Word of God pierces &c. 335.D. & 517.B.
4. 12. A two edged ſword 139. B.
11. 35. Others were tortured &c. 150.C.
13. 22. I beſeech you brethren, ſuffer 610.D.

James.

1. 17. The Father of lights 385.B.
5. 3. Your gold and your ſilver &c. 81.B.
5. 11. You have ſeene the end &c. 399.A.

1 Peter.

2. 5. Built of lively ſtones 35.A.

2 Peter.

1. 19. We have alſo a more ſure word of prophecie, 59.E.

1 John.

3. 2. Now we are the ſonnes of God 120.C.
5. 16. There is a ſin unto death 348.E.

Revelation.

3. 14. Thus ſaith Amen 53.A.
12. 4. The Dragons taile drew the 240.E.
12. 7. Michael and his Angels fought againſt the Dragon 146.E.
17. 2. The great Whore ſitteth upon 310.B.
22. 11. He that is holy 594.D.

The

The Table of ſuch Authors, as are either cited, illuſtrated, or refelled in this BOOKE.

A

Abulenſis. 7. A. B. 50. A. 314. D. 763. C.
Aerius. 781. B.
Alcazar. 184. B.
Alvarez. 693. C.
Alexander Alenſis. 379. D. 603. C.
Alcoranum. 379. C. 744. C.
Ambroſius. 18. A. 24. A. 38. A. 88. A. 105. D. 106. A. 110. E. 262. D. 306. B. 322. A. 390. B. 392. B. 407. A. 410. B. 546. B. 586. D. 603. E. 617. B. 784. C. 785. A.
Andradius. 314. D. 763. C.
Anſelmus. 171. A.
Apologia Confeſſion: Auguſtan: 786. B.
Aquinas. 17. A. 51. E. 111. B. 156. A. 205. D. 216. B. C. 306. C. 344. A. 369. A. 527. A. 541. E. 795. D.
Ariſtoteles. 388. A. 562. D. 744. B. 818. A.
Arriba. 741. D.
Athanaſius. 180. D. 221. B. 235. E. 244. D. 251. E.
Athenagoras. 204. D.
Auguſtinus. 4. E. 9. B. E. 15. C. 16. C. 17. D. 23. B. 27. D. 31. A. 33. E. 37. B. 48. D. E. 51. E. 59. E. 61. C. 65. B. 66. E. 67. B. 68. A. E. 69. A. 70. A. E. 79. B. 81. A. E. 89. C. 97. B. 98. B. 100. A. 102. A. 105. E. 120. E. 121. C. 122. B. C. 133. B. 148. C. D. 153. B. 154. E. 161. C. 167. A. E. 169. D. 171. B. 180. C. 183. A. 188. A. D. 194. E. 197. B. 200. D. 229. E. 232. E. 295. E. 299. E. 304. C. D. 309. B. 313. E. 323. A. D. 330. D. 369. A. B. E. 386. D. 527. A. 546. B. De libro Enoch. 560. B. 563. D. 756. B. 785. B. 786. E. 802. C.
Auguſtin. Eugubinus. 50. A.
Auguſtinus de Roma. 171. C.
Aulus Gellius. 6. A. 17. A. 407. A.
Ayguanus. 506. B.
Azorius. 490. D.

B

Baldus. 168. E.
Baronius. 142. D. 236. E. 489. E. refellitur. 492. A.
Baſilius. 16. D. E. 17. E. 42. B. 160. D. 168. C. 269. C. 284. C. 306. B. 309. D. 318. E. 352. E. 455. A. 511. B. 514. B. 515. B. 553. A. 712. E. 815 E.
Bellarminus. 790. D. 545. E. notatus. 542. E. 578. E. 699. B. 740. D. 791. B. 803. B.
Berengarius. 37. C.
Bernardus. 5. E. 6. B. 7. A. 11. B. 23. A. 51. C. 75. A. 90. A. 91. C. 93. A. B. C. 94. A. B. C. &c. 118. E. 152. C. 153. B. 155. A. 162. B. 200. C. 204. C. 319. E. 340. A. 383. A. C. 389. C. 405. E. 426. A. 456. B. 510. D. 513. B. 550. B. 570. E. 680. B. 787. B. 806. F.
Beda. 813. C.
Beza. 220. D. 737. E. 799. A.
Benius. 740. A.
Biblia { Complutenſ. 712. D. / Vatican. 712. D.
Biel. 380. C.
Bodinus. 243. E.
Bolduccus. 131. E. 133. A. 234. A.
Boethius. 171. A.
Bonaventura. 687. D.
Brigittæ Revelationes. 43. A.
Bradwardinus. 171. A.
Brondus. 603. C.

C

Calvinus. 9. C. 14. E. 18. B. 32. D. 45. D. 49. E. 80. D. 217. E. 218. A. 220. D. 246. D. 271. C. 298. B. 347. B. 477. D. 800. D.
Cajetanus. 131. C. 221. A. 271. B. 490. C. 527. B. 586. D. 793. C.
Carbo. 741. B.
Catharinus. 4. E. 237. D. 271. B. 339. B.
Canones Pœnitentiales. 282. B. 402. A. 545. C. 691. D.
Cæſarius. 758. D.
Clemens Alexandrinus. 170. D. 187. D. 314. C. 710. D. 763. C. 772. B. 784. B.
Chryſologus. 161. D. 228. B. 246. D. 249. C. 490. D.
Chryſoſtomus. 24. A. 48. D. E. 58. B 93. A. 106. D. 152. C. 162. A. 210. E. 217. D. 263. C. 299. D. 314. C. 321. B. 322. C. 326. A. 362. C. 389. C. 401. E.

409.E. notatus. 426.B. 546.D. 712.E. 763. C. 785. C. 789. C. 795. C. 815. D.
Cantepratenſis. 81. D.
Chemnitius. 32. D. 786. B.
Chiffletius. 246. C.
Choppinus. 771. C.
Chryſippus. 484. B.
Clavius. 765. A.
Clemens Romanus. 758. C.
Collius. 262. E.
Concilium Nicenum. 216. D. 300. D. 415. A.
Concilium Trident. 234. C. D. 404. D. 471. E. 773. A.
Concilium Lateranenſe ſub Innocent. tertio. 252. B. 773. A.
Concilium Conſtantienſe. 773. A.
Concilium Senonenſe. 231. E.
Concilium Lateranenſe ſub Leone decimo. 237. B.
Concilium Neocæſarienſe. 216. D.
Concilium Carthaginenſe tertium. 775. A.
Concilium Eleberitanum. 80. C.
Concilium Antiochenum primum, 426. C.
Conſtitutiones Apoſtolicæ. 663. C.
Cornelius à Lapide. 50. A. 688. A.
Cornelius Mus. 489. D.
Corpus Juris Civilis. 711. C.
Cramerus. 18. B.
Cyprianus. 17. C. 36. B. 99. D. 269. E. Explicatus. 329. C. 330. D. 355. E. 414. E. 480 B. 800. C.
Cyrillus Alexandrinus. 20. E. 66. B. 67. A. 170. E. 188. C. 190. D. 194. A. 236. C. 302. B.
Cyrillus Hieroſolymitanus. 262. C.

D

Damaſcenus. 16. C. 27. C. 48. C. 49. A. 167. E. 168. B. 189. D. 236. C. 262. B. 309. D. 396. D. 425. E. 689. A. 802. B.
Demoſthenes. 387. E.
Didymus Alexandrinus. 333. C. 533. D.
Dionyſius Areopagita. 121. A. 168. A. 261. E. 382. E. 480. B. 620. A. 785. E.
Durandus. 802. A.

E

Epictetus. 315. A. 387. E. 667. E.
Epiphanius. 23. C. 159. B. 164. E. 176. C. 394. D. 781. B.
Ephrem Syrus. 538. D.
Epiſtola Lentuli. 153. D.
Eraſmus. 32. E.
Eſtius. 792. D. 800. D.
Euangelium Spiritus Sancti. 291. C.
Euangelium Syriacum, 525. A.
Euſebius. 42. D. 45. E. 493. C. 540. B. 562. D. 784. A.

F

Fauſtus Manichæus. 318. C.
Ferus. 50. C.
Feſtus. 713. D.
Feuardentius. 793. E.

G

Galenus. 818. B.
Galelinus. 31. D. 502. D.
Genebrardus. 17. A.
Gerhardus. 743. B.
Gerſon. 202. E. 251. C.
Gregorius Neocæſarienſis. 758. D.
Gregorius Magnus. 9. E. 35. A. 99. D. 100. A. 107. D. 128. C. 141. B. 161. C. 181. A. 186. E. 247. E. 248. B. 266. C. 274. A. 316. B. 339. E. 342. C. 343. A. 406. A. 408. B. 461. A. 547. B. 552. E. 569. E. 580. E. 724. B. C. 785. D. 789. C.
Gretſerus, 698. D.
Greg: Nazianzen. 71. C. 121. A. 171. C. 235. E. 385. B. 394. A. 396. C. 417. A. 480. D. 522. B. 539. B. 547. A. 552. C. 699. E. 761. A. 764. D.
Greg: Nyſſen. 16. C. 160. E. 249. A. 251. E. 517. C. 542. A. 555. D. 811. A. 813. C.
Guavantus. 485. E.

H

Harmon. Synod. Belg. 115. E.
Herodotus. 198. D.
Hermes, ſive Paſtor. 784. B.
Heſhuſius. 759. A.
Hieronymus. 15. C. 24. A. 26. D. 55. A. 72. E. 79. D. 99. B. 111. A. 121. B. 147. E. 164. E. 178. A. 182. D. 190. E. 200. C. 207. B. 217. A. 231. D. 236. C. 244. D. 248. A. 252. D. 272. C. 306. B. 309. D. 363. D. 368. E. 378. E. 405. C. hallucinatus. 430. E. 462. A. de prologo ejus Galeato. 670. C. 699. B. 789. C. 794. C. 806. E.
Hilarius. 16. C. 248. D. 378. E. 416. A. 539. A. 699. B. 784. D.

Holkot. 311. A. 412. A.
Horatius. 577. E.
Hugo de Sancto Victore, 157. A. 542. A.

I

Ignatius. 758. C.
Johannes Huſſ. 480. E.
Joſephus. 32. D. 397. E. 491. E. 687. E.
Irenæus. 16. C. 57. C. 151. D. 152. B. 415. E. 739. E.
Iſiodorus Hiſpalenſis. 410. E. 411. A. 656. D.
Iſiodorus Peluſiota. 596. E. 758. C.
Julianus Apoſt. 719. B.
Julianus Pelagianus. 490. B.
Juſtinianus. 793. A.
Juſtinus Martyr. 72. E. 156. A. 236. C. 269. B. 314. C. 401. E. 408. A. 425. E. 763. C.

L

Lactantius. 80. A. 306. C. 354. C. 396. A. 408. C. 739. E. 751. E. 784. A.
Lapide. 50. A.
Leo Magnus. 42. B. 48. C. D. 63. B. 221. E. 321. B. 431. B. 535. D. 604. A.
Leo Caſtrius. 695. D.
Lex XII. Tabularum. 445. D.
Lombardus. 237. B. notatus. 334. E.
Lorinus. 426. C. 574. C. 687. E. 695. D.
Lutherus. 18. D. 130. B. 205. A. 231. C. 232. D. 271. D. 301. D. 404. C. Apophthegma ejus. 405. C. 417. B. 426. A. 479. E. 501. A. 687. B. 786. B. 798. E.
Lyra. 50. B. 555. D.

M

Magdeburgenſes. 489. C. 799. C.
Maldonatus. 197. D. 356. E. 489. D. 739. D. 771. B. 798. A.
Mariana. 687. E.
Martialis. 550. B.
S. Martialis. 758. C.
P. Martyr. 271. B. 347. C.
Maſoritæ. 153. C.
Maximus. 63. A. 535. E.
Matchiavel. 744. B.
Melanchon. 92. C. 744. C. 798. E.
Melchior Canus. 42. A. 740. B.
Menander. 220. A.
Mendoza. 162. B. D.
Munſterus. 747. C.
Muſculus. 775. A.

N

Nicephorus. 31. D. dictum ejus de Chryſoſtomo. 490. C. 699. B.

O

Oecumenius. 66. A. 232. C. 527. A.
Oleaſter. 391. D.
Origenes. 99. D. 102. A. 118. C. 128. E. 170. E. 201. C. 262. D. 263. C. 299. B. 333. B. 362. C. 363. D. 386. B. 411. C. 546. C. 700. C. 710. E. primus concionator. 758. D. 770. D. 784. C.
Oſiander. 221. C. 298. B.

P

Palladius. 473. C.
Pamelius. 329. C.
Panigorolla. 166. A.
Papias. 739. E.
Paracelſus. 64. E.
Paraphraſtes Chaldæus. 134. A. 269. D. 404. B.
Pellicanus. 221. C. 404. C.
Peltanus. 97. E.
Peterius. 50. A. 740. A.
Philo Judæus. 170. B. 417. D. 420. C. 550. B. 561. C. 680. D. 812. C.
Picus. 531. D.
Pindarus. 442. D.
Piſcator. 46. C. 49. E. 131. E. 737. E. 799. A.
Plato. 46. D. 68. E. 168. D. 318. D. 442. D. 752. E. 783. E. 812. C.
Plinius. 17. A. 222. A. 385. C. 537. D. 617. B. 665. B. 713. A. 788. B.
Plotinus. 812. C.
Plutarchus. 665. C.
Polycarpus. 758. C.
Polybius. 482. D. 551. A.
Porphyrius. 207. B. 289. B.
Proſper. 240. D.
Prudentius. 262. E.
Pſalmi Arabicè. 582. A.
Ptolomæus. 818. B.

Q

Quintilianus. 289. B.

Rabbi

R

Rabbi Aben Ezra. 131. C.
Rabbi Moyſes. 63. E. 66. B. 608. B.
Rabbi Solomon. 50. B. 404. B.
Reuchlinus. 541. C.
Rhemigius. 4. B. 340. A.
Ribera. 184. C.
Roffenſis. 789. A.
Ruffinus. 270. E.
Rupertus. 51. B.

S

Salmeron. 489. D.
Sanctius. 151. E. 405. E.
Sandæus. 495. A. 690. D.
Scotus. 111. B.
Scribanius. 142. C.
Schonfeldius. 743. B.
Seneca. 147. E. 168. E. 362. B. 387. E. 388. A. 713. E. 789. B. 812. D.
Serarius. 406. B.
Septuaginta Interpretes. 404. B. 416. A. 528. B. 585. A.
Severianus. 249. C.
Sextus Senenſis. 786. E.
Sidonius Apollinaris. 33. B.
Sophronius. 490. C.
Stenartius. 605. E.
Strabo. 198. D.
Stunnica. 133. A.
Synodus Dordrecthana. 742. C.

T

Tacitus. 481. E.
Talmud. 379. C. 492. A.
Tannerus. 605. D.
Tertullianus. 17. C. 18. A. 33. E. 80. A. memoria lapſus. 101. B. 152. A. 168. C. 181. E. 207. E. 289. B. 290. D. 309. D. 312. B. 334. B. 337. B. C. 369. E. 370. E. 379. B. 388. A. 395. B. E. 397. E. 400. A. B. 408. A. 414. E. 504. B. 739. E. 783. E. 794. C. 800. E.
Teſtamentum Syriacum. 636. C. 737. E.
Theocritus. 478. A.
Theodoretus. 91. B. 232. A. 305. D. 462. A. 578. D. 795. A.
Theophylactus. 91. B. 181. B. 246. B. 527. A. 609. C. 795. C.
Tremellius. 131. E. 133. E. 510. A. 560. C. 585. A. 690. B. 737. E. 809. C.
Triſmegiſtus. 287. B. 295. B. 347. C. 379. C. 501. C.
Turrecremata. 603. C.

V

G. Valentia. 356. D. 605. D.
Vincentius Lyrinenſis. 47. A. 699. B. 722. D.
Virgilius. 744. C. 784. A.
Vita P. Nerei. 116. E.
Vega. 339. D.
Ulpianus. 194. E.
Voſſius. 740. A.
Uſpergenſis. 208. A.
Vulgata Editio. 146. D. 157. D. 162. C. 260. A. 288. D. 311. A. 505. C. 610. E. 711. D. 717. C. 743. C. 761. B.

W

Waldo. 291. D.

AN ALPHABETICALL TABLE OF THE PRINCIPALL CONTENTS IN THIS BOOK.

The number of the Figures referreth to the Page; the Letter to the like Letter in the Margin.

A

Absolute Decree; how dangerously man may be abused by it 693. E
There is no such in God, of punishing man, but as a sinner 675. C. D. E
Absolution of sinnes; the power of it 143. A. B
The cheerefulnesse of their spirits that have newly received it 264. A 596. B
The necessity of it 370. A. B
Active life, and Contemplative, both good 30. D
One, not to despise the other ibid.
Admiration and Wonder, how it stands between Knowledge and Faith 194. A Adoption, in civill use; the Lawes and Customes of it 27. B
Applyed to our spirituall Adoption ibid.
Adversity, not the best time to seeke the Lord in 139. C. D. 245. D. E
Whether Adversity or Prosperity be the cause of most sinnes 658. D
Adultery; God expresseth all carnall and spirituall sinne by the name of Adultery 632. E
Advice, to bee mixed with Love and Charitie 93. C
How many doe miscarry in it ibid. D
Afflictions, wherefore inflicted upon Men 109. C
Wherefore on godly men, 129. B. 480. A. B. C 664. E
They are not evill 170. D
Common as well to the good, as bad, 420. E
Age, the center of Reverence 31. D
Allelujah Psalmes, which they are, and how many 654. A
Almes to be done 94. B. 106. C
Cheerfully, and without delay 107. D
Against those that neglect them 414. B
Wee, not to consider the person too severely that is to receive them 764. A Against being Alone 51. E. 761. E. 762. A
Alphonso, King of Castell, his blasphemy 640. E
Amen, ever doubled by Saint John, and why 658. B
Anabaptists; their wicked opinions 23. C. 91. C 344. D
Anathema; the severall acceptations of it 401. E
Saint Andrew, the first Saint in the Calendar, and why 718. C. D
Angels, how reconciled by the death of Christ 9. B
Whether they understand thoughts 111. B
Or, see the Essence of God 120. E. 121. D. E
They pray for us 130. A
Whether they shall give account of their Stewardship over us, at the day of Judgement 234. E. 235. A Thought in the Greeke Church to be created before the World 235. E
Nothing in Scripture about their creation 235. D
Not in themselves Immortall 237. B. C.
Some men called by the ministry of Angels, even from the beginning of the world 261. E
They that fell, might have repented, according to the Schooles 262. B
They that fell, shall never be forgiven 346. B
Of tutelar Angels 422. B
Angels created with the Light 729. C
Anger in God; two errours about it, noted by Lactantius 408. D
Anointing in Scripture, not alwayes taken for reall Unction 44. E. 45. A &c Anointing, proper to Kings, as well as Priests 396. A
Ant and the Bee; the difference betweene their labour; and yet we are commanded to learne of both 712. E

Apatheia, against indolencie, and emptinesse of all Affections 156.A
Apochrypha Bookes; the good use that is made of them 220.D
Of their esteeme with the Ancient Fathers 221. A. B. C
Applause after Sermon, given to the Primitive Fathers 48.D
Applause of the people, or popularity, a dangerous and uncertaine thing, not to be affected by any men; especially, not by the Clergie, whom it usually deceiveth most. ib.
Approaches to Sinne, how soone and easily they become Sinne 557.E
Apostles; why chosen out of simple fisher-men 719.C
What things were called Apostles, before Christs Apostles were so called 758 C
Apostolicall Authority vainely claimed by the Pope 733.E
Apostolicall Tradition, what it is 781.E
Articles of Faith, how they are proved by Reason 178. A 611.D
Atheist, nothing so unnaturall as the Atheist, 486. B
Of the universall, particular, and practicall Atheist ibid. & 487. A. B. & vide 756. B
Authority of the Fathers, not baulked by the Reformed Churches 557.A Though at the beginning of the Reformation our men were a little startled at it B. C

B

Balsame; of the naturall Balsame in the body and in the soule. 514.A
Baptism of children, how necessary 309.E.425.B
The Remembrance of our Baptisme, a stop against sinne 310.A
Christ, why Baptised 425.A
The Anabaptists argument against Baptisme of Children, answered ibid.D
The Baptisme of John, whether the same with that of Christ 425.E
The custome of late Baptising, why tolerated in the Church 800.A
Bees; the manner of their working sub tecto 712.E
Commended for their sedulity, community, secrecy, and purity 713. A.B
Beggers; against ordinary Street-Beggers, and relieving them.
Benedictines, of their encrease and riches 602.E
Benefactours and Founders, their honorable commemoration and mention pleases God 85.D
The Straights, to which, some of the Reformed Churches have been put about it ibid.
The Benefits of this world seldom free 550.B
Bishops not necessarily resident at their Sea 470.D
Six thousand Bishops at one time in the Christian Church 471.A
The passage between Athanasius and Dracontius who refused to be made a Bishop 471.D
Bishop of Rome, against his tyranny, cruelty &c. 284.B
Against his Infallibility 698.C, 722.D
His Imprisoning of the Holy Ghost 292.A
His Universality 317.D
Against his usurping Apostolicall Authority, and not contenting himselfe with Episcopall 733.E
Blasphemy, not restrained to God alone; other persons and things may be blasphemed 343.E
No Blessing in this world without permanency and continuance 754.E
Blessings of this world, only Blessings in use 84.C
How God blesseth man, and man blesseth God 376.D
Blessednesse, what it is; and what the Philosophers have thought of it 119.C.D.752.A Whom Plato commanded the Poets and writers in his State, to call Blessed 562.D.E
That temporall Blessings doe not conduce at All to true Blessednesse 750.B
The danger of Temporall Blessings, without Spirituall 752.B
What Plato thought Blessednesse 752.E
Spirituall Blessednesse, how it is superinduced upon Temporall, as the reasonable soule upon that of sense 755.C.D
Blood; no Remission without it, and why 6.D
Christ shed it seven times 7.B
The will, the Blood of the Soule 7.A
Blood taken for sin, oftentimes in Holy Writ 132.A
Bodies; the Kingdome of heaven imperfect without them 145.A
The little power we have over our own Bodies ibid.D
Bodies glorified and their Dotes or Endowments 189.A.B
Gods love to our Bodies 194.B.C
Of sinning against our own Bodies by lust and licentiousnesse 195.D.E
Bones; what is meant by Bones in Scripture 516.C
Bribery; against it, or receiving of Rewards 389.E
Brothers; the first enmity began in them 108.A
Brownists; their opinion, that no particular Church may consist of more persons than may alwayes heare that man, to whose charge that Church is given, censured 471.C.D
Building; the Holy Ghost delights to use the name of Building and House 684.C
Against Busy-bodies with other folks matters 721.E.722.A
Burthen; how every thing, even the least, the Fly; even the best, as riches, beauty, comlinesse, is a Burthen to us 664.C.D

C

CArd. Cajetans reasons for not following the Judgement of the fathers in expounding Scripture 796.E. 79 A.

Calamities, not to be jested at 478.E
Not alwayes evidences of Gods displeasure ib.
Calling; the ordinary duties of our Calling not to be disputed, but executed 41. A
Such as are extraordinary, may 42.A
Against such as will take upon them no Calling 45. D. 411. B. 606. B
How acceptable to God that labour is, which is taken in an honest Calling 721. C
Against Intruders, and meddlers with other mens Callings ibid. E
Calvin, an approver of Ceremonies 80. D
Candles; the use of them in divine Service, ancient 80. B
Canonicall Houres; no inconvenience in observing them, so wee place no merit in them 596. D
Catechizing; the excellent use and benefit of it 250. A. 561. B. C. D. &c.
Cathedrall Churches; why so called 115. C
Censuring of Preachers, and comparing one with another, condemned 692. E Ceremonies; of their antiquity and use 80. C
They should differ from Mysteries ibid.
Not hastily to be condemned ibid. E
They are vehicula Religionis 300. B
Against the Opposers of them ibid.
How we are to love them 512. A
Not to be disputed of by private men 575. C
Changes of this world, how many 481. D
Of inconstancy, and changing of minde 483. C
Changes of sinne, how dangerous 543. A
Children; of their love and duty to Parents 387 E CHRIST; he came of women noted in Scripture for their incontinency 24. A
He came to save All 26. C. 70. C. 66. B
Learning at the height, when hee was borne 72. C
Whether hee was Man, whilst in the Grave 157. A CHRIST; his Death and Passion, how necessary, and how voluntary 7. D. 792. C
Three remarkable Conjunctions at his Birth 11 B
The world how full with expectation of it 21. D
CHRIST shed blood seven times here on earth 7. B
How effectually hee is present in the Sacrament 10. C
His Incarnation; no way so proper to deliver us, as it 16. C
His Humane Nature adunited to the Divine, whether Impeccable 169. B
The infinitnesse of his merits rather placed in Pacto, than in Persona, by the Schoole 179. B
The difference betweene his Dying, and other mens 272. E
The severall Heresies concerning CHRIST 316. D
CHRIST dyed for all men 741. E. 742. A. B
Church; the power of it, in applying Christ to every particular soule 60. A
The true Church, which 61 A
How soone multiplied and enriched 72. A. B
The ten Persecutions of it 184 B. C
The Church, the ordinary place for knowledge and illumination of a Christian 228. A
The Primitive Church; how the whole world was bent against it 602. C
The Church, a Pillar; and how 615. C
What a losse it is to bee kept from Gods Church 664. A
The care which God hath ever had of his Church 779. E
Circle; the proper Hieroglyphick of God; and why 13. E
Citation of Scripture; the words, much more the Chapter and verse, not alwayes observed in it 250. C. 325. D
Complements; of their abuse and use 176. A. B. C. 412. D
Comforts; how easily we mistake false Comforts for true 279. E. 382. D. 383. A. B 501. A
Of the true Comfort of the Holy Ghost, 353. D
Of that Comfort and consolation, which the Minister of the Gospell is to preach to all people 746. A. B C
Confession to the Priest, in some cases, usefull and necessary 558. A 568. A. 589. B. C
How necessary to Confesse 569. D. 586. E
Confidence; true Confidence proceeds onely from true goodnesse 171. E
Confirmation; whether a Sacrament 329. C
The use and benefit of it ibid. D. E
Continency; that trial not made as should be, whether young people can Containe from marriage 217. B C
Contrition, Confession, and Satisfaction, three parts of true Repentance 568. A Conventicles: against their private opinions 228. C
A[illegible] them 455. A
Th[illegible]re no Bodies 756. D
Consideration of our selves and our insufficiencies, how necessary 44. D. 45. A. &c.
Constitutions: No sins to be layd and fathered upon them 90. A Corporations: how they have no soules 99. A Covering of sinnes, what good, and what bad 569. E
It is good to cover them from giving other men examples 570. A
Counsell not to be given, unlesse we love those to whom we give it 93. C
How many miscarry in that poynt ibid. D
Craft: and that cunning and Craft which men affect in their severall Callings 411. D
Creatures: how farre we may love the Creatures, and how farre not 398. E
Curiosity: against the excesse of it in matter of Knowledge 63. E. 64. A. 411. E. 563. B. 701. A Conscience, obdurate, and over-tender; the effects of either 587. B. C. D
Curses and Imprecations; whether we may use them 401. C. D. 555. E

D

Damned: the consummation of their torment, wherein it consisteth in the opinion of the Schoole 344.B
More shall be saved than damned 765.C
Of the torments of the damned 776.B.C
The absence of God, the greatest torment of the damned *ibid.*D
Day of Judgement: the manner of proceeding in it 140.B
Fearefull, even to the best 200.B.C
The certainty and uncertainty of it 271.D
To be had ever in remembrance, and why 371.B.389.C.392.A
Death: how it may be desired of us, and how not 38.A.B.C.D.148.B.C.531.D.E
Against the ambition of it in the pseudomartyrs 142.C
The word Fortasse hath place in all things but Death 147.C.D
It is a law, a tribute, and a duty, and how 147.E.148.A
We not to grudge if we dy soon, or others live longer ibid. B
Death; how an enemy to mankinde, and how not ibid E
God made it not, but maketh use of it 188.B
Of undergoing Death for Christ 400.A,B
Not a banishment to good men, but a visitation of their friends 463.C
Death; why so terrible to the good men of former times 532.D
The often contemplation of Death takes much from the feare of it 473.E
Debts: of our Debts to God 87.C
To our neighbours 93.E
To our superiors 91.C
To our selves 94.D
Deceit and Deceiving: the mischiefe of it 742.B
The law will not suppose it either in a father or a master *ibid.*42.
Decrees of God, to be considered only by the Execution 330.C
None absolute, considering man, before a Sinner 675.C.D.E
Departing from sinne; to be generall 552.A
We are not to retaine any one 568.D
Deprecating of afflictions, whether or no lawfull 504.B.C.D.E
Desperation: the sin of it greater and worse than that of presumption 398.C
Severall sects there have been; but never any of Despayring men 346.A
Against it 360.D E
God brings his servants to humiliation, often, but never to Desperation 464.
Destroying; whether man may lawfully destroy any one hurtfull species in the world 527.B 620.C
De viâ, the name of such as were Christians in the former times; that is, men of that way, according to S. Chrysostome 426.B
Devils; capable of mercy, according to many of the Fathers 66.A
The Devils quoting of Scripture 238.C
Devotion; a serious, sedulous, and impatient thing 244.E
It is good to accompany our selves to a generall Devotion 522.D
It must be constant 586.B
And not taken up by chance ibid. C
Disciplining and mortifying Acts, after God hath forgiven us our sinnes, commended 546.E
They inferre neither Purgatory, nor Indulgences, nor Satisfaction 547.A
They are sharp arrows from a sweet hand ib.
The necessity of them, to make our Repentance entire 568.B
Discretion, the mother and nurse of all vertues 577.B
What Discretion is to be used in telling people of their sinnes ibid.
Division, the fore-runner of destruction 138.D.E
Not alwayes unlawfull to sow Division amongst men, when they agree too well to ill purposes 493.D
Doubting; the way to know the truth 322.D
Duels; the inhumanity and sinne of them 5.E
Duties of our calling not to be disputed, but executed 41.A
Of our generall weakenesse and impotency in spirituall Duties 513.C

E

Early seeking of God, what it is 245.C.D
God is an Early God 809.A.B
And we to seeke him Early ibid. D.E
Eloquence required in the delivery of Gods Word 47.D
Enemies; profit to be made of them 98.A
We come too soone to the name, and then carry it too farre 98.C
God and Religion, both, have Enemies 275.D 703.C
How we may, and how we may not hate our Enemies ibid. D.E
Our Enemies are Gods Enemies 704.A
Errours in the way, almost as dangerous as Errours in the end 639.A.D
Of the Errours of the Fathers of the Church 490.A
About administring the Sacrament to children; about the state of the soule after death, &c. 739.E
Not good for the Church to play with small Errours, and tolerate them, when shee may as easily redresse them 782.B
Esay, rather an Evangelist, than a Prophet 54.B
Evill; none from God 168.C.D
Nothing is naturally Evill 171.A
Example; in all our actions and purposes, wee to propose unto our selves some patterne or Example 667.D.
Examples; what power they have in matter of instruction 572.D.593.A

What

What care is to be taken in making the inordinate acts of some Holy men in Scripture our Examples 155.C.D.488.D.E.489.A.526.E
How farre Example works above precept or command 165.B
Of giving good Examples to others 420.C
God follows his own Examples 522.E
Of giving bad Examples unto other men 570.A.573.E
Excommunication; the use of it amongst the Druides and the Jewes 402.A Much tendernesse to be used in excommunicating any from the Church 667.A
How many men excommunicate themselves without any Church-censure *ib.*B.C.418.B.C
Expostulation with God, how without sin 44.B.
We may not excuse the inordinatenesse of all Expostulations of good men in the Scripture 132.C
Nor come neere that excesse which we finde in some of them 155.C
Of that in the widdow of Zareptha 218.A
Against Extortion 94.A
Against Extremities in matters of opinion 42.A.B.&c.
In Religion 326.D

F

Faith; against implicite Faith 178.C.411.C
Faith and Reason, how contiguous they are 178.B
Faith, how it is assisted by Reason 429.A.612.A
Of the imperfection that is in our Faith 818.D
Faith and Works 78.E.368.A.567.D.E
Our Workes more ours than our Faith 79.C.D.E.&c.
The Faith of others, how profitable to us 105.D
And how not 106.E
Men, not to deceive themselves with thinking, that if they have Faith once, they shall have it ever: or have enough 819.B.C
Fall; sinne is a fall; and how 186.D.187.B.C.462.D
Against impossibility, of falling from grace received 240.B.C
Of Fame and getting a good name; the necessity of it 680.A
Fathers; of the power of life and death which they had over their owne children 388.A
How Jesuites slight the authority of the Fathers of the Church 489.C
How they are to be followed 490.C
Feare; of the Feare of God 386.B
The difference between fearefullnesse and Feare 387.B
Servile and Filial Feare, both good 386.D
The Feare of God a blessed disease 466.B
It constitutes the best assurance 694.C
Not only a Feare, but even a terror of God may fall upon the best men 70.A
Festivalls: the reason of their Institution in the Church 298.B
Of applying particular Scriptures, to particular Festivalls 423.D
Filiation; the markes of our spirituall Filiation, lesse subject to errour, than of our Temporall 338.E
Fasting; but thrice mentioned by David; and he thrice derided for it 535.C
The commendation, and use of it *ibid.*D.E
Finding of God; the severall times of it 597.A
Of Finding that which was lost 711.E
The passage of the Usher in S. Augustine, that found a bag of money, and would not take so much as the tithe of it 712.A
Fishers of men; the Apostles why so called 734.E
Flatterers; how men may flatter the best men, the very Angels, yea, and God himselfe 332.B
Foliantes, an Order in the Roman Church, who only feed on roots and leaves 731.C
Following Christ; how we are to Follow, in beleeving, and in doing 731.E
Against Forespeaking the Counsels or Actions of the State 535.E
Foretelling of death; the passage of the Monks of S. Isidorus Monastery, about it 473.C
Forme of publike Prayer, used amongst the very Gentiles 89.A
And they had a particular Officer, who made Prayers and Collects for them, upon emergent occasions ibid.
Which were received every five years ibid.
Fortune and God; how they consist together 711.C
Freewill; the obliquities of it from whence 283.D
The power of it in our conversion 309.A.B
Funerals; of the duties belonging to them 196.A.198.B
Of the severall manner of them, among severall nations 198.D
Christian Funerals, an evidence of Gods presence 826.B
Fulnesse; how in Christ, and how in others of the Saints 3.C
Three Fulnesses in Christ, above others 4.A
How Full all of us are of originall sin 2.E
How Full God is of mercy 12.C
Of Fulnesse without satisfaction; and of satisfaction without Fulnesse 807.A
Abraham why Full of yeares, and yet not so old as Methusalem *ibid.*D Severall Fulnesses *ibid.*E

G

Gentiles, and their salvation; how prone the Fathers were in beleeving of it 261.D.763.C
Of the power of naturall reason in them; and what many of the Fathers thought of it 314.C
Of their multiplicity of Gods 378.B.484.D.502.E

They durſt not call their Tutelar Gods by their names 608. A
Gentleneſſe, meekneſſe and mildeneſſe; the power of it, both upon man and God 409.E. 410.A.B
Glad; God, whether he be Glad, that he is God 812.B
Glorified bodies; their Endowments applyed to the ſoule after her firſt reſurrection 189.A.B.C
Gloria Patri, after every Pſalme, how ancient 88.C
Glory; againſt our feare of giving God too much Glory 58.E
No Glory to God in deſtroying man only for his pleaſure 85.B
Glory, what it is 88.A
The light of Glory in heaven, what 231.A
All things we doe, muſt be to the Glory of God 636.E
Of the diſparity and degrees of Glory in the Kingdome of heaven 742.D.743.A.B.C
Gluttony: the effects and miſeries of it 579.D
God; not to be loved in conſideration of the Temporall Bleſſings he beſtoweth upon us, but for himſelfe 750.C.D
Foure wayes of knowing him 229.B
God, how preſent even in hell 226.D.E
Seeing of God before us, in our actions, how neceſſary 169.E
How we ſee him in a glaſſe 226.B
How we are enemies to God 65.B
All his wayes are goodneſſe 66.E
Severall poſitions, motions, and tranſitions aſcribed to him 67.C
How omnipreſent, with the Ubiquetary and the Stancariſt 67.E
Why he makes ſome poor, & others rich 84.E
Glories not in deſtroying man, till he finde cauſe 85.B
Propoſeth his glory to himſelfe, as the end of all his works 87. .D.E
All our wealth and honour to be aſcribed to him 95.B
Whether his Eſſence ſhall be ſeene in heaven 120.D.230.D
No evill from him 168.C
Not the Author of ſinne 368.E
To be reverenced as a Father 388.C
Of the reaſon of many Gods amongſt the Gentiles 484.D
God hates not any man, but as a ſinner 628.C.D
His mercy to all men 679.A.B
The numberleſſe number of Gods Benefits unto man 765.A
Our Goods; what care to be taken they be well gotten 83.A. 95.E
They are abuſively called Goods 168.D
Goodneſſe ſpeciall in God 167.E.168.A.B
Golden Crowns of the Saints, how forged in the Roman Church 743.D
Goſpell; whether yet preached over all the world 363.D
Why it is called in Scripture the Kingdome of God 472.A
How compared to a net 736.C
Grace; againſt irreſiſtible Grace 456.B
Grace and Nature how they cooperate 649.D
No conſummative Grace in this life 735.B
Graduall Pſalmes; which, and why they are ſo called 652.E
Great men not alwayes good; and why 166.A
But when good, the more acceptable; and their ill the more pardonable *ibid.*B.C
The true end of Greatneſſe 321.B.C.D
Great men; how dangerouſly obnoxious to their own ſervants 551.A
Gretzer the Jeſuite, how injurious to the power of Kings, in matters of Religion 698.D

H

AGainſt making too much Haſte, either in Temporall or Spirituall Riches 520.D
Hatred; how it may conſiſt with Charity 100.A
Health: Spirituall Health to be preferred before that of the Body 110.C.755.A
What a Bleſſing the Bodily Health is 754.A.B.
Hearing the Word; againſt the neglect of it 331.A.B
Againſt Hearing only 455.C
Heart: no inward part of man aſcribed unto God, beſide the Heart 64.B
Heaven: the joyes of it 73.C.D.223.A.B.C 266.A
The Glory 682.A
The Dotes or Endowments of the Saints of Heaven 266.B.189.A.B.&c. 824.C
Hereſie: of the ſeverall Hereſies againſt the perſon of Chriſt 316.D
Of that of the Photinians, and Nativitarians 344.C
Heretiques: of ſeverall wayes of dealing with them 355.C.D.356.B.C.D
Of Hiſtory, and returning the memory of man to things that are paſt and gone 290.B
The Holy Ghoſt; not ſo eaſily apprehended by the light of Reaſon, as the other perſons of the Trinity 318.C.D
In the Proceſſion eſpecially; *ibid.*E.327.A.B.C 335.B
The manner how he works upon man 322.C.D
Three branches of ſins againſt the Holy Ghoſt in the Schoole 349.E
Refuſing of lawfull Authority, is ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, in St. Bernards judgement 350.B
The power of the Holy Ghoſt, in blowing where he liſts 364.B.C
His operations in meere morall men 365.A
St. Paul beleeved of many to be the H. Ghoſt 461.E
Holy Ghoſt only Dogmaticall; the beſt men but Problematicall 658.A
Hope: how imperfect a Chriſtian mans Hope is 820.A

How; a hatefull and a damnable Monosyllable 301.D
Honour and Reputation, which so many stand upon, what it is 410. A
Honey; what is meant by it in Scripture 712. C
Hospitalite; the commendation and benefit of it 414. D. E. 415. A. B
Houses of Progresse, and standing Houses for God; Heaven and the Church 747. B
Humane learning; how necessary to the making of a good Divine 562. A Hypocrisie; the good use and benefit that may be made by it 297. E. 636. B Against the wicked practise of it 585. D

I

OF those Ideas which are in God 667. E
Against Idlenesse and lazinesse, and taking of no Calling 45. D. 411. B
Jehovah; the right pronouncing of that Name; the meanes whereby Christ did Miracles, according to the calumniating Jewes 502. C
Not pronounced till of late ibid. D
Jesuites; their uncharitablenesse, even to their owne Authors, in defaming and disgracing of them, though their betters 50. A
The pride of their Denomination from Jesus 687. D
How boldly they depart from the Fathers and their Authority 740. B. C. 796. C D
Their pride in taking upon them the name of Fathers 798. A
Jesus; of the name of Jesus 503. C
How S. Paul delights himselfe in that Name 503. D. 688. A
Jewes; not one of them in all the world a Souldier 5. D
Their opinion of Christs comming. 21. C
Their impious custome of anointing such as die, with the blood of a Christian Infant ibid.
Ignorance; the severall Divisions and subdivisions of it in the Schoole 287. B.
How full the most knowing men are of it ibid. C. D
A learned Ignorance, what 295. E
Of the severall Imperfections in our Faith, in our Hope, and in our Charity 819. 820. A. B. C. D
Imprecations, in Scripture, are often only Prophecies 401. C
Not allowed us D. but in some cases 555. E
Against Impossibility of Falling 240. B
Incarnation; the mystery of it 16. C. D. 395. E. 396. A. D E
Inconsideration: the miseries of it. 246. D. E. 247. A 296. E. 297. B. C. D
In case of Zeale, the more pardonable. ib. B
Indignation for sinne, how great it ought to be. 542. C
Of that Individuality wherein man is to bee considered. 710. D
Of that Infallibility with which the Holy Ghost proposeth his Dictates in the scripture, and how farre it is from that possibility, probability, and verisimilitude of the Church of Rome 657. C
Infidels: of their right unto the things of this world. 214. D
Indulgencies: the vanity the Church of Rome was growne to, in preaching and extolling of them 773. B. C
The multiplicity of them 788. A
The Reformation arose from them ibid. D
Indulgencies; what they were in the Primitive Church 788. E.
Against Ingratitude for mercies and Diliverances past 88. B. 577. E
Why so seldome condemned in the scripture. 550. A
Injuries: of patience in suffering them 410. A. B
Innovations: the difference between Innovations, and Renovations 735. A Inquisition: of torturing men in the Romish Inquisition: and the uncertainty of such kinde of Tryalls 194. 195. C. D
Intentions: the best mens best intentions, usually misconstrued 344. E
Instinct: the difference between the Reason of Man, and the instinct of Beast: what it is; and wherein it consisteth 227. B. C
Inward speculations, inward zeale, inward prayer, are not full performances of a Christian mans duty 700. B
Jordan: the River Jordan, why so called 718. E
Joyes of Heaven: of their eternity 73. C. D 223. A. B. C. 266. A. 340. D. 747. E
Heaven represented in Joy and Glory 672. A
Joy of the wicked, which they have in this world, counterfeit 635. C
Of the Joy of the godly, which they have in this world 671. E. 672. &c. 673. A. B
Cheerefulnesse and Joy commended 816. B
Judging of other men condemned 128. D. 479. A
In doubtfull cases we are ever to encline towards Charity 164. E
There may be sinne in a charitable Judging of some holy mens Actions 488. D
Judgement; of the day of Judgement, and the uncertainty thereof 271. D Gods Judgements have not exactly the name of Punishments. 544. C
How unwilling God is to speak of, or to come to Judgement 676. C
Justificare, to Justifie; taken three severall wayes 366. C Neither Works nor Faith the cause of our Justification 367. E

K

KIngs; the best forme of Government by Kings 51. B
Our duty and debt unto them 91. C
The Releiving of them, more necessary than giving of Almes 92. A
What Humility and Reverence in Subjects is due unto them ibid. D
And afforded in the very Scripture ibid.

Not only their substantiall, but their circumstantiall and ceremoniall wants, to be prevented by the Subjects Giving 100. E
Their Crowne of Thornes 137. B
Kings; a particular ordinance of God, and nothing resulting out of the tacite consent of the people 391. C
The King to institute and order matters in the publique service of God 698. A
He is Keeper of both the Tables D
Against those disloyall jealousies and suspicions, which the people have of the King, and of his affection to Religion 699. D
In matters of favour, the King is one of the people, saith the Law 754. C.D
Kisses; of their treacherous, carnall, and sacred uses 405. 406. A. B. C Used of Kinsfolkes 407. C
As a Recognition of Power D
In comming and going E
In religious reverence E
In signe of concord 408. A
Kneeling; the necessitie of it, in the time of prayer 72. E. 73. A
Of the Kneeling at the Sacrament 115. D. 116. A. B.
Knowledge of Fundamentals, every man is bound to have; but not of the superstructure and superedification 807. B
How Imperfect all our Knowledge is, in Arts and Sciences 818. A Knowledge; against over-much curiosity, in attaining to it 63. E. 308. C. 319. A. B
Whether wee shall Know one another in the next world 157. C
Of sobriety in Knowledge 270. C. 701. A
Knowing of our selves, how hard a thing it is 563. C
Knowing of God; foure ordinary wayes of it in the Schooles 229. B

L

Labour; three-fold Labour in the Scripture 538. B
Law and the Gospell; of the severall state of either 284. E. 285. A
Of the Law of Nature, under which every man is 362. C
How the Law is said to shew what is sinne 687. B
Lawes of Temporall Princes; whether or no they binde the conscience of the Subject; wherefore never stated by the Pope, or by any Councell 741. B
Liberality and Bounty; Civill and Spirituall, what 759. E
Liberality, a vertue that begets a vertue ibid.
The true body and true soule of Liberalitie, what it is 760. C
Life, the excellencie of it 69. D. E. 70. A
All that is good, included in it. 70. A
Light, the first creature 759. D
Literæ Formatæ, in the Primitive Church, their Institution and use 415. A
Lord; whether God could be called the Lord before there were any creatures, a disputable thing 757. A
The Judgement of Tertullian and S. Augustine, either way ibid. B
Love, the first Act of the Will 225. D
How we may love the creatures 398. E 598. B
Against the Love of the things of this world 187. C. 399. C
Against loving of God, for the Temporall blessings he bestowes upon us 750. C
Loving our enemies; six degrees observed in it 97. B
Lust and Licentiousnesse; the burdens that it makes men undergoe 623. D
Lying; whether it be lawfull before one that is no competent Judge 491. B

M

Maccabees; their torture and patience 221. E. 222. A. B. C. &c.
Man; what Man is 64. D. E. 65. A. &c.
The dignitie and honour of Man 655. C. D
Hee cannot deliberately wish himselfe an Angel; for, he should lose thereby ibid. E
Of those helps and assistances which Man affords to Man 656. D. E. &c.
Man is called every creature in Scripture, and why 770. C. D
Mary; the Crownes of England, Scotland, Denmark, and Hungary, much about one time, fell upon women, whose name was Mary 243. E
It is a noble and a comprehensive name, and why 244 A Marriage; of second Marriages 216. D. E. &c.
Masters; of that esteeme and regard is to bee had to such as have taught us, or have beene our Masters 288. E. 289. A why called Patres-familias 388. B
Mediocrity of Estate; the commendation of it 661. A. B. &c. 685. D Orders in the Church of Rome from both extremes; but not one from the Meane 661. B.
What is a Mediocrity to one, is not, nor ought to be to another 714. C
Memory; the Holy Ghosts pulpit oftner than the Understanding 290. B. C
Of the sinfull Memory of past sins, how dangerous it is 542. D
Mercie of God, how much above his judgements 12. B. 67. A. 71. A
How full God is of it. C
Occasionall Mercies, what, and how many D
The Devils capable of Mercy, in the judgement of many Fathers. 66. A. 262. D
The proper difference betweene Mercy and Truth 530. D Against those that abridge the great volume of Gods Mercies 568. E

Of

Of severall Mercies and refreshments, which are none of Gods 810.E.811.A
God can doe nothing but in Mercy 811.C
Merits foreseene; no cause of Graces in us 5.A
Millenarii; their errour, what, and how generall: almost all the Fathers tainted with it 261.C
Miracles; against multiplying of them in the Roman Chuch 36.D
Mirabilis, or, the man that workes Miracles; the first of those great names given to Christ, by the Prophet Esay 58.C
Nothing dearer to God, than a Miracle 215.A
They are his owne Prerogative *ibid.*B
It is more to change Nature by Miracles, than to make Nature 394.E
No man to ground his Faith upon a Miracle, as it seemes to him. 429.A
How to judge of Miracles, whether they bee true or false 429.B
Dangerous putting of God to a Miracle in saving us 456.B
What is properly a Miracle 683.D
The Creation it selfe, none ibid.
Monuments; not in Churches, in the Primitive times 730 D
Mortification; outward Mortification and austerity, a specious thing 492.E
Mortification, to be generall, of all the parts, and not of one onely 541.B
Mosselim; a kind of Doctors amongst the Jewes, that taught the people by parables and obscure sayings 690.E
The Multitude; of their levity, judgement, and changing of opinions 482.B.D
Against Murmuring at Gods blessings, if they be not as great as we desire 576.C
Mute; against standing Mute, at examinations 491.C
Mysteries; of two kinds in the Schooles 203.D
Every Religion under heaven, hath had her Mysteries, and some things in-intelligible of all sorts of men 690.D

N

Names and Titles; nothing puffeth men up more 734.D
The Heathen never called their Tutelar Gods by their Names, and why 608.A
Of getting a good Name amongst men, and against those that neglect it 680.A.E
Of mens retaining those Names that are most acceptable 285.B
Of the Name of Christian, and when it was given, and how 426.B
Adam named all creatures but himselfe, and why 563.B
Natalitia Martyrum; their dayes of suffering so called, and why 268.C.461.C
Nativities; three Nativities to every Christian, and which they are 424.E
Nature; of that sight, which wee have of God, even by the light of Nature 227.B.686.E
Of that power which some of the Fathers attribute to Nature, without Grace 314.C
Men doe not halfe so much against sin, as even by the power of Nature they are able to doe 315.B.C
Of the testimony which a Naturall soule gives unto it selfe of it selfe 337.B
Nature not equivalent to Grace 649A
Nature not our owne. ibid.
Nature and Grace how they co-operate *ibid.*D
Neighbour-hood, and evill Neighbour-hood, and communicating with evill men 420. C
Noctambulones; men that walk in their sleep, wake if they be called by their Names 467.A
Nothing; there is nothing more contrary to God, than to be, to doe, or to thinke Nothing 265.B
The Devill himselfe, cannot wish himselfe deliberately to be nothing C
An Order of Friars in the Roman Church; that, in humilitie, called themselves Nullanos or Nothings 731.C
Of the Numberlesse number of Gods benefits to Man. 765.A

O

Occasionall instruments of Gods glory; what cold affections they meet with in the world amongst men disaffected to Gods cause 154.E
Occasionall, mercies offered; what, and how many 12.D
Occasionall Convertites; who 461.C
God, no Occasionall God, and why 586.B
Devotion no Occasionall thing, and why 244.E
A great disease both in Church and State, that Occasionall things have diverted the principall, and hindered them from being done 797.C
Often contemplation of death takes much from the feare of it 473.E
Old; against growing old in sinne 543.C
Opinion; in a middle station between ignorance and knowledge 354.C
Foolish and fantasticall Opinions should not so much as be disputed against *ibid.*D
Of gayning a good Opinion amongst men 481.E
Oppression; against Oppression and Extortion 94.A
Originall sin; how full we are of it 2.E
It is a Naturall poyson in us; and how it workes 313.D
The Gentiles, how purged of Originall sin; in the judgement of some Romanists 314.D
How Originall sin is voluntarie in us 363.A
Ostracisme amongst the Athenians what 479.C

P

Painting and adorning of themselves; how used, how abused of men and women 196.B.C.541.C.714.A

The

The limits of it, not so narrow as some conceive them 643.C
Parents, the honour due unto them 217.D
Patience; in suffering of injuries; the power and benefit of it 410.B
Peace; the consideration and the benefit of it 145.E.146.A.B
The lovelinesse and amiableness of it considered 753.B.C
Of Peace and plenty ibid.
Penance; different Penances upon different sinnes; yet practised in our Church 402.B
Publick Penances in the Primitive Church, and why 545.D
No satisfaction to Gods justice in them 544 B.C.D
How to understand the Fathers, enclining that way 545.E
Perplexities; of the severall kinds of them 606.C
Persecution of the Primitive Church described 185.B.C
Perfect; there is nothing in the world perfect; no, not in spirituall things 817.D.818.A
Of Persevering; and not trusting to our former goodnes 165.C.D. 303.A.B. 331.A. 547.D.E
Petalisme amongst the Syracusians, what it was 479.C
S. Peters being at Rome; how believed, and how not 404.E. 733.E. 744.D
S. Peter and S. Paul, how magnified by S. Chrysostome. 462.B.C
Philosophers; what knowledge many of them had of Christ 68.E
Pilgrimages; how they begun, and grew on in the Church of Rome 252.B
The abuses of them, taxed by the Romanists themselves *ibid.*C
And by sundry Fathers *ibid.*D
Places Consecrated; of their honour & use 251.D
Against being over-homely, and over-fellowly with God and them 691.C
Place and Precedency; the fond contentions about it 730.E
Especially amongst the severall Orders of Friars, who all pretend to the most humble Names that can be 731.D
Against the sinne of night-Pollutions; 129.C.D
Popularity; the sinne and danger of it 482.C
The vanitie of it 660.A
Poverty and Riches; which occasioneth most sinnes 658.D.659.D
What kind of Poverty is a blessing 728.D.E
Power; of that Power that is in us to discerne our owne Actions and assist our selves in our own Salvation 118.B.C.D
Prayer for the dead; no precept, no example of it in the Law, or Gospel 780.A
First used of the Gentiles: and of them taken up by the Jewes *ibid.*B.C
Then of the Christians; and how *ibid.*D.E
Why the Fathers did not oppose the practise of it. 780.D.E. 781.B
Tertullian the first that tooke knowledge of it. 781.A
Aerius did oppose it: but not harkened to, and why 781.C
How farre allowed by Epiphanius. *ibid.*D.
What the Fathers meant by Praying for the dead, out of Dennis the Arcopagite 735.E which is allowed by the Apologie for the Confession of Auspourg 786.B
Prayer: A set forme of Prayer used of the Gentiles 689.A
The Office of Conditor precum, what it was ib.
Their Prayers received every five yeares ibid. A. 772.E
Prayer; how wee may Pray earnestly, and yet wait the Lords leisure 34.D
Of Prayer at home, and at Church 35.C.&c. 90.B. 264.E. 330.B. 688.E
Unseasonable Prayers not accepted of God 50.E. 521.B
Prayers to be said kneeling 72.E
Prayer and Preaching 89.E
Against ex tempore Prayers 90.C. 130.C. 668.B.C.
And Praying to severall Saints, for severall things 90.D
What Prayer is properly called Ours, 130.A
The condition of pure Prayer 131.A
Not alwayes heard of God, and why 133. B.C. 553.C.
Against fashionall and customary Prayer. 512.E
Of the importunity, impudency, and violence of Prayer 522.B
Against incogitancy in Prayer 555.B
Against irreverence in Gods House, in the time of Prayer 692.A
Of the severall errours that are easily committed, and doe all frustrate our Prayers 692.D
The duties and dignities of Prayer 804.B
Repeating the same Prayer often, no idle thing 812.B
Of those distractions which the best of us have in Prayer 820.B.C.
Of the abuses of Prayer in the Church of Rome ibid.
We are to descend to particulars in our Prayers 822.A
Of that fervency and importunity which is required in our Prayers *ibid.*B.C
Praise and thanksgiving; all our Religion is nothing else 88.C
The necessity and benefit of it *ibid.*D
Of such Praise as is due to the good actions of men 167.A.B.C.&c.
Praise, what it is 679.D
That it may be sought of good men ibid.
Praise to be directed upon three Objects 680.C
We may Praise, and yet not flatter D.E
Of Praying and Praising 804.C. 805.B
Preaching and Praying; the benefit and use of either 689.B.C.D
Preaching, more frequent in the Primitive Times than now; and good reason why 324.C
Preaching often ex tempore; and Preaching of other mens Sermons, ordinary *ibid.*D Against the sodaine extemporall Preaching of this time 325.A

Some

Some points of Divinity not fit to bee Preached 561. D. E
In what sense it is good for a man to Preach himselfe 574. B. C. D Against popular Preaching 660. B
Of Abuses offered to Preaching 693. A
The severall Names of Preaching 758. D
No resemblance of Preaching amongst the Gentiles 771. E
Preisthood; the honour and dignitie of it 32. D 391. D. E
That, the particular way of ennobling men amongst the Jewes ibid. 32. E
The Priest to be sent for before the Physitian 110. C
In extraordinary cases, above the King; but not otherwise 396. B
The Egyptian Kings killed themselves, when the Priest bid them 485. C
Of the Pretences and coverings, and excuses which we find out for our sinnes 570. B
Against Pride 65. A
Pride the first sin of the Angels 622. C
All Pride is not forbidden Man ibid. D
What is not Pride 623. B. 727. D
How early a sin Pride is 726. D
Nothing so contrary to God as Pride is 727. E. 728. A
Against Prodigalitie 94. C
Of that Progresse which a man is to make, be he never so learned or religious 427. B. C. D. 616. D
Promises; the difference betweene the Promises of the Messias, and the Performance of them, by Christs comming in the Flesh 68. B. 406. E
Prophet; no visible calling to the Office of a Prophet 54. D.
The promises of God in the Prophets, how different from those in the Gospel 40. E. A
This a seditious inference; the Prophets did thus and thus in the Law: therefore the Ministers of the Gospel should doe so likewise; and why 734. A
Psalmes; The Booke of Psalmes; the dignity and vertue of it 653. D. E
They are the Manna of the Church 663. B
Such forbid to bee made Priests, that were not perfect in the Psalmes 813. B Singing of the Psalmes; how generall and commendable in S. Hieromes times ibid. B. C
Purgatorie; none in the old Testament, and why, 783. E
How derived from Poets and Philosophers, to Fathers 784. A. B. C How suspitiously and doubtfully the Fathers speak of it ibid.
specially, S Augustine 786. E
Bellarmine refuted about it 792. 793

Q

Questions arising, taken away by Silencing of both parties 42. D Against curiosity in seeking after them 57. D
There is alwaies Divinity enough to save a soule that was never called into Question 745. A
How peevish some Romish Authors doe detort the Scripture, when they fall upon any Question, or Controversie; though otherwise they content themselves with the true meaning and sense of the same words 790. E. 791. A
Quomodo; to Question how God doth this or that, dangerous 301. E. 367. C

R

Reason, not to be enquired after, in all points of Faith 23. B
Reasons not convincing, never to be proffered for to prove Articles of Faith 205. D
God useth to accompany those Duties which hee commands, with Reasons to enduce us to the performance of them 593. A
Reconciliation, how little amongst the Papists 10. D
All Nations under heaven, have acknowledged some meanes of Reconciliation to their offended gods, in the remission of their sinnes 564. C
Religion: against such as damnifie Religion by their outward profession, more, than if they did forsake it 757. D
Every Religion had her mysteries, her Reservations and in-intelligibleness, which were not easily understood of all men 690. D
And therefore Religion not to be made too homely and course a thing ibid. C
Christian Religion, an easie yoke; a short and contracted burden 71. D
All points of Religion not to bee divulged to the people 87. D Defects in Religion, safer than superfluities 291. A
Of peaceable conversation with men of divers Religions 310. C
Wee, charged to have but a negative Religion 636. A Religion; how farre we may proceed in the outward declaration of our Religion 814. A Resurrection; of three sorts 149. E
Of that from persecution 185. B. C. D
Of that from Sinne 186. D. E. &c
Of that from Death 189. D
How, a Resurrection of the soule; being the soule cannot die 189. D
Christ; how the First Resurrection 191. B
Our Resurrection, a mystery 204. C
Resurrection; All Religions amongst the Heathens, had some Impressions of it 800. E
Retrospection or looking upon time past, the best rule to judge of the future 668. D
Reverence; how much due to men of old Age 31. D
What Required in Gods House 43. D
Revelations; wee are not to hearken after them 238 E Nor yet, to binde God from them 239. A
Rewards; against bribery, or receiving of Rewards 389. E
God first proposes to himselfe persons to be Rewarded or condemned, before he thinks of their condemnation or their Reward 674. B. 675. B. C
Riches; the cause of lesse sinne than poverty 658. D

Especially, considered in the highest degree, and in the lowest; that is, abundant Riches, and extreme beggerly poverty 659.D
Against the perverse desire of Riches. 728.C
Riches, S. Chrysostome calls the parents of absurdities; and why 729.A
The Romane Church, a true Church; as the Pest house, is a house 606.A.621.C
Rome; the Church of Rome, the better for reformation 621.B.
They doe charge us that we have but a negative Religion 636.A
Why they so much under-value the Scripture; and yet endevour to bring bookes of other Authors into that ranke, as the Macchabees and such like 738.E
Rome it selfe, how it hath beene handled ever by Catholikes in their bloody warres 779.A
Almost all the Controversies between Rome and the Christian world, are matters of profit 791.A
Rule and Example; the two onely wayes of Teaching 571.E.668.B
The onely Rule of doctrine, the Scripture and Word of God 738.E

S

THe Sabbath; a Ceremoniall Law 92.C
Sacrament; how effectually Christ is present in it 19.C
Of preparing our selves to the worthy receiving of it 32.A.&c.33.A.&c.
Against Superstition and Prophanesse too, in the comming to it 34.A
Of Christs reall presence in it 36.D.37.B.C
That which we receive in the Sacrament, to bee Adored 693.B
Against unworthy receiving of it 693.D.E
Of both extremes about Christs presence in the Sacrament 821.E
Saints; against praying to them 90.D.378.D. 595.A.744.A.757.B
The Saints in heaven pray for us 106.B
Why they must not pray to Saints in the Church of Rome, upon good Friday, Easter, and Whitsunday 485.D
Whether they enjoy degrees of Glory in heaven 742.E
Salvation; of the generall possibility of Salvation for all men 66.B.330.A.B.742.B.C.D.
Not to be ascribed to our Workes 107.D
Nor to our Faith *ibid.*E
More that are Saved, than that are damned 241.A.259.C
The impossibility of Salvation to any man before hee was a man, a discomfortable doctrine 278.B
Of that certaintie of Salvation, which is taught of some in the Roman Church; and how farre we are from it 339.D.E.340.A.608.C
Salvation offered to all men, and in earnest 742.A.B
Saviour; the name of Saviour attributed to others beside Christ 528.D
Scriptures; the most eloquent Books that are 47.E 556.E.557.C
foure Elements of the right exposition and sense of Scripture 505.B
Moderation in reading of them 323.C
Scripures the only rule of Doctrine 738.E
Secrecy in Confession, commended; but in case of disloyaltie 92.E.575.E
Seeing of God in our Actions, how necessary 169.E Against Selfe-Subsistence, or standing of our selves 240.A.B
Against Selfe-Love 156.A
Sermons; how loth the Fathers were to lacke company at them 48.C
Of preaching the same Sermons twice 114.C 250.C
The danger of hearing Sermons without practising 455.C.D
Sighing for sinne; the benefit of it 537.D
Sight; the noblest of the sences; and all the sences 225.B
Signe of the Crosse; wherefore used in the Primative times 538.A
And why by us, in baptisme ibid.
Signes, how they may be sought after, and how not 15.B.C.D
Shame for sinne; a good signe 557.D
To be voice-proote, not afraid nor Ashamed of what the World sayes of a Man, an ill signe of a Spirituall obduration in sinne 589.A
Silence; the severall sorts of it; Silence of Reverence 575.C
Silence of subjection *ibid.*D
Silence which is good 576.B.C
Silence which is bad 577.D
Good to be Silent sometimes, even in good things; and when 576.E
Simple-men of this world; why chosen for Christs Apostles 719.C
Singular; Gods speakes of things of grace in the Singular: but of heavie things in the plurall number, ever 711.A
Single instances; no safe concluding from them 460.E
Neither in the case of the Thiefe on the Crosse, nor S. Paul 461.B
Singularity; not ground enough to condemne every opinion 234.C
Against Singularity 51.D.177.C.573.D.722.B
Of a Single testimony 234.B
Sinne; the cause of all sicknesses 109.C
Little light and customarie Sinnes, how dangerous 117.B.164.C.D.585.E
All Sin is from our selves: not from any thing in God 118.A.330.D
The Sin of the Heart, the greatest of all Sin, and why 140.D
How well some Men husband their Sin 147.A
That it is good for men to fall into some Sinnes 171.B.C
Sinne is a fall, and how 186.D.187.C
Whether it have rationem demeriti, and may properly offend God 342.C
Sinne, not meerly nothing 342.E

Not

Not so much of any thing as of Sinne 347.C
How soone Sinne is followed of Repentance 542.C
How Sinne rises by little and little, in us 585.C
Against sitting in the time of Divine Service 72.D
Socinians; their monstrous opinions 317.C
And nicknaming of Athanasius Sathanasius 654.D
Against the growth of that pestilent Heresie of Socinianisme 821.B
Sorrow for the dead; how lawfull 157.C.D.E. 822.D
Of the endlesse Sorrow of the wicked 632.B
No communication of their Sorrow 634.D
The Soule; of the miseries of it in the body 190.A
Of the lazinesse of the Soule in the disquisition of any Divine Truths 190.B.C
Of her excellency of knowledge in the next world *ibid.*C.D
Of bending the Soule up to her proper height, and putting of her home 483.D
Soule and Spirit; what the Fathers understand by them in Scripture 517.C
Subjects, how to looke upon the faults and errors of their Governors 13.C
How reverent to be towards their Princes 92.D
Supererogation; against Workes of Supererogation: and of the fondnesse of them 390.C 494.E.495.A.547.C.732.E
Superstition better than Prophanesse, and why 69.A
The danger of it to be prevented, but how 485.E
Supplications; how they differ from Petitions or Prayers 553.E
Synedrion; the Originall and power of the Synedrion, or Sanhedrim, amongst the Jewes 491.E
Herod called before it; but not when hee was King 492.A

T

Teares; against their inordinatenesse 155.A
Never ascribed to God 156.D
Well employed for the dead, though they be at rest 157.A
Of those whose constitution will afford no Teares 160.D
Foure considerations that will enforce Teares 160.E.161.A
Of Teares shed for worldly losses *ib.*C.D.162.A
For sinne 539.B
Of the effect of Teares 162.B
How God is said in Scripture to heare Teares that make no sound 552.E
Teares the humidum-radicale of the Soule 577.E
Temporall blessings; how seldome prayed for in Antiquitie 750.D.E
They are blessings; but blessings of the left hand 751.D
Nothing permanent in them 823.D
Tentations; all men not alike enabled against them 310.E
Whether it be lawfull to pray against all kind of Tentations 527.C
One of the Divels greatest Tentations it is to make us think our selves above Tentations, or Tentation-proofe, that they cannot hurt us 603.E
The use and necessity of them 789.C
Thanksgiving; the duty of thanksgiving, better than that of Prayer 549.D
How small it is, if proportioned to the love of God unto us 552.B
Thoughts; of the greatnesse of sinnes of thought 140.D.543.D
Titles and bare empty Names; how men are puffed up with them 734.D
Torturing; whether or no to be admitted, in case of Religion 194.D
Tongue; how many it hath damned 344.B
Tradition; against the making of Traditions articles of Faith 779.D
Transubstantiation; the riddles, and contradictions of it. 26.E
What true Transubstantiation in the Sacrament may be admitted. 693.C
Tribulations; the benefit of them 562.B 604.A.B
Spirituall Tribulations and afflictions, heavier than Temporall 665.B.D.E
Tribulation and affliction, part of our daily bread which wee ought to pray for, and how 787.B
Tribute; God never wrought miracle in the matter of money, but onely for Tribute to Cæsar 91.E
Trinitie; the knowledge of it not by naturall reason attained 301.B
Not one of a thousand knows what himselfe meanes, when he speakes of the Trinity. 307.E
Some obumbrations of the Trinity, even in nature 379
What, are illustrations of it, to us Christians, are no Arguments unto the Jewes 417.B
Foure severall trinities 417.E.418.A
It is the onely rule of our Faith, the Trinitie 426.E
To be believed first of all, but not last of all to be understood 423.C.D
The opinions of severall Hereticks, concerning it 429.D
The severall wayes of expressing it by figures and letters 429.E
Troubles; five severall sorts of Troubles 518.D
The universality and inevitablenesse of them 664.B
Truth; not alwaies to be spoken 575.E
Turning; of Gods Turning to us, and of our Turning to God 524.B.C.D.525.A.B.526.A.B

V

Vagabonds and incorrigible rogues; against receiving or harbouring of them 415.B.C
Vaine things in themselves, may be brought to a religious use 226.E
Ubiquetaries; 67.E
Confuted by the Angels Argument 248.C

Of

Of that Viciſsitude which is in all temporall things; 823.D

Vigils; why diſcontinued in the Primitive Church 813.A

Virginitie; The dignity and prayſe of it 17.C.D

Three Hereſies impeaching the Virginity of the bleſſed Lady 17.D

Againſt vowed Virginitie 30.D

Virgin Mary; The errour of Tertullian about her 18.A

Of the Manichees and Anabaptiſts 23.D

Againſt appeales to her in heaven 46.A

Borne in Originall ſinne 314.A

Called of the Fathers Deipara, but not Chriſtipara; and why 400.D

Threatned at a ſiege of Conſtantinople to bee drowned, if ſhee did not drowne the enemy 418.E

The Church onely in the Virgin Mary, according to the Schoole 603.C

Againſt Vncharitable objecting of repented ſinnes 499.D

Vnitie; the Devils way to breake it 138.D

The Vnſatiableneſſe of ſinne 709 C

Vprightneſſe; what Vprightneſſe is required of man in this world 677 B.C

What it is to bee Vpright in heart ibid. 678. A.B.C

Againſt Vſury 753.E.754.A.

Vulgate Edition; of the Antiquity and Authority of it 542.E

Not to be preferred before the originall ibid.

W

Warre; the miſeries and incommodities of it 146.C.D

Waters; thoſe of Baptiſme, ſinne, tribulation, and death 309.C.&c.

What is meant by Waters in Scripture 598.D

Waiting upon Gods time; how it conſiſts with fervent Prayer 34.D

Wings; the ſeverall acceptations of the Word in Scripture 671.B

Winning upon God by prayer, how well God likes it 513.E

Wiſdome; of ſinnes againſt it, eſpecially ignorance, and curioſity 411.B

Witneſſe; the credit of the Teſtimony, dependeth much upon his credit that is the Witneſſe 238.B

Women; our Saviour came from ſuch as were dangerouſly ſuſpected and noted in Scripture, for their incontinence. 24.A

Never any good Angell appeared in the likeneſſe of a Woman 242.D

Whether Women were created after Gods Image; a queſtion in S. Ambroſe his Commentaries upon the Epiſtles; that hath called thoſe Commentaries in doubt 242.E

Of Womens able in State affaires and matters of Government ibid.

Powerfull in matters of Religion, both on the right hand, and on the left 243.A

Wonder; the difference between the Philoſophers and the Fathers about wondering 194.A

Word of God; the very Angels of heaven referre themſelves unto it 249.E

Stronger than any reaſon to a Chriſtian 394.B 815.A

The onely rule of Doctrine 738.E

The World is a ſea, and in how many reſpects, 735.C

Workes; wee no enemies to good workes, as the Adverſarie doth traduce us 82.A.&c.

No Faith without them 136.A

We are to continue in them 554.B

Workes, good, when to a good end 82.E

To be done, of what 83.A

How they may be ſeene of men 141.B

Sometimes there is good uſe in concealing our Workes of mortification 538.E

Of thoſe imperfections which are in the beſt of our Good Works 820 D.E

Wounds of love; how God doth ſo wound us, that we kiſſe that hand that ſtrikes us 463.A

Z

Zeale to be reconciled to diſcretion 10.A

How the devill makes it his Inſtrument 42.B

Of the Zeale we ought to have to Gods ſervice 72.D

Zeale diſtempered, what it will doe 237.A

Zeale and uncharitableneſſe, are two incompatible things 480.E

Of Daniels Zeale in praying againſt the expreſſe Proclamation of the King 814.A.B.C

Zoroaſtes, he only laughed when he was born 21.A

FINIS.

Errata.

| Pag. | line | reade |
|---|---|---|
| 22 | 39, 40, 50 | waives |
| 110 | 52 | when he |
| 116 | 40 | may come |
| 142 | 31 | the Cato's |
| 164 | 39 | Manours |
| 196 | 15 | in indignifying |
| 410 | 32 | man |
| 426 | 45 | blown |
| 534 | 35 | Topicks |
| 710 | 46 | exorciſed |
| 751 | 43 | or any people |
| 782 | 63 | Interimiſts |

In the life.

Pag. 15 line 12 for merit, reade mercy

Pag. 16. line 40. for friends, reade friend

C 7038 Fol.51
19791

REPRODUCED FROM THE COPY IN THE

HENRY E. HUNTINGTON LIBRARY

FOR REFERENCE ONLY. NOT FOR REPRODUCTION